nally appointed as republicans seem to have been confronted by the alternative of going over to Tammany or of resigning to make way for Tammany men. Four men who now belong to Tammany Hall remained in enjoyment of their salaries; the rest, who are still republicans, were discharged. One of the four was John J. Phillips, who was at first dismissed, having failed apparently to perceive unaided what he must do to be saved. With his notice of dismissal in his hand, he went to ex-Coroner John R. Nugent, whom he had been accustomed to look up to as his republican district leader. The coroner opened Phillip's eyes. "Join Tammany Hall at once, as I have done," advised the ex-coroner. So did Phillips with all expedition. Then came a summons from John F. Carroll, clerk of the court. "Have you your notice of dismissal?" said Carroll. "Yes," said Phillips. "Give it me," said Carroll. In a moment it was torn in bits. "You are reinstated because you are a veteran," said Carroll. Never before had Phillips suspected how valuable it was to be veteran. Among the attendants appointed by Judge Cowing to fill the vacancies he had created was Michael Quinn, keeper of a lodging-house and barroom in Pell street, and William T. Devlin, a henchman of John C. Sheehan, and keeper of a saloon in West Twenty-fourth street, connecting with the Grand Opera House.

When the main facts of this story were related to Judge Cowing, he said: "It is utterly untrue that there was any agreement or understanding between Tammany Hall and myself. What I did I did voluntarily." It was then attempted to ask Judge Cowing to specify the things he had done voluntarily, but he refused to listen to any further questions.

The story was told to Phillips. He said some of it was true and some false, but refused to separate the accurate from the inaccurate explicitly and in detail. He admitted, however, that he had been dismissed after Judge Cowing's re-election, without any reason being assigned to him; that he presumed the dismissal was at the request of Judge Cowing, as he was on that Judge's list; that he did consult with some of his friends about his discharge, and that he was reinstated because he was a veteran. He declined to say whether or not he joined Tammany Hall in the interval between his discharge and reinstatement; "a man's politics," he said, "is like his religion; he has a right to keep it to himself, and to refuse to answer questions about it."

It is well known that ex-Coroner John R. Nugent, after having been republican leader in his district, joined Tammany Hall and served under his old antagonist, John Riley, the Tammany leader.

After obtaining the above statements, the following letter was received this morning:

To the Editor of the Evening Post:

SIR: Judge Cowing, in his charge to the grand jury, stated that "for the first time politics has invaded the citadel of justice." Let me state how politics invaded the citadel of justice when Judge Cowing sought and received the nomination of Tammany Hall for his second term, and at the dictation of Tammany Hall turned out court officers who had served for years and whose only offense was that they were members of the republican party.

I was appointed court attendant of the court of general sessions by Judge Cowing, on the first day of February, 1882, and such appointment was given to me on the recommendation of the republican organization of my assembly district. I am a veteran of the late war, and past commander of Adam Goss post, G. A. R. For nearly eleven years I served as such court attendant, and during that period of time, with the knowledge and approbation of Judge Cowing, I was an active member of the republican party. Frequently I served as a member of the county committee, and also as a delegate or alternate to conventions. On all of those occasions, when I desired leave of absence, Judge Cowing always permitted me to go, because he knew of and was interested in the object of my absence. During this period of years I served on election day, at every congressional election, as chief deputy marshal in the fourth assembly district. The fact that I was appointed and served as such was well known to Judge Cowing, and no objection was made by him.

In the month of July, 1892, ex-Coroner John Nugent, in conversation with me at the barge office, told me that it was all arranged that Judge Cowing was to get the Tammany Hall nomination that fall, and that he had agreed to turn the republicans out of his court, and give the places to Tammany Hall. In the early part of October of the same year, Judge Cowing called me up to the bench one day, and told me he had been on the outing of a democratic association on the east side the preceding day, and that he had met many friends there who told him how hard I was working for him. He said, "Pat, keep up the good work for my election, and if Tammany Hall does not nominate me I will man every district in the city."

Judge Cowing received the Tammany Hall nomination, and in the republican county convention, of which I was a member, there was a bitter opposition to Judge Cowing receiving the republican nomination, on the ground that he was in league with Tammany Hall.

On the 31st of October, 1892, John F. Carroll, the then newly appointed clerk of the court from Tammany Hall, sent for me and asked me if I was a United States deputy marshal. I told him yes; he said, "I can not certify this pay-roll with your name on it." I asked him why, saying that I had served as such every year since I had been a court officer, and that Judge Cowing knew it. He said he would not certify to it any way.

On November 2, 1892, I received the following letter:

NEW YORK, November 2, 1892.

To P. J. O'Brien:

DEAR SIR—If convenient, will you come to the Tammany Club Room, No. 218 East Broadway, on Friday evening, November 4, 1892, at nine o'clock? I desire to see you relative to election district matters. Do not fail to call.

Respectfully yours,

E. T. FITZPATRICK,
Chairman of General Committee.

I did not call at the Tammany club rooms, and took no notice of the letter. On election day I served, as usual, as chief deputy United States marshal. Election day being a holiday, no court was held, consequently I lost no time from court.

I continued to serve as court officer until the 21st of November, when I called upon Judge Cowing in his chambers. I said to him, "What is there about Mr. Carroll sending for me?" He said: "O'Brien, I think the corporation counsel has got you technically." I said: "In what respect?" He said: "In reference to being a deputy marshal." I said to him: "Why, you knew that I was a deputy marshal ever since I have been a court officer, every alternate year, when the republican party desired my services, and you never objected to it." He replied: "I am very sorry." He also said: "My wife said to me this morning that it was better to be born lucky than rich. If I did not get the Tammany Hall nomination, you see I would have gone down with the ship." I said: "Is that all the notification I get?" He said: "I don't know of any other," and I bade him good day.

On the next day I receive the following notice:

NEW YORK, Nov. 21, 1892.

To Mr. Patrick J. O'Brien:

You are hereby notified that your services as an officer or attendant of the court of general sessions of the peace will not be further required on and after the 1st day of December, 1892.

(Signed) JAMES FITZGERALD,
Judge General Sessions.
RUFUS B. COWING, City Judge.
FREDERICK SMYTH, Recorder.

The judges who signed this notice were the judges who were understood by all the court officers as the judicial combine that ran the court.

My salary was refused for the month of November, and I had to sue for it. In that suit in the supreme court, the question was raised, that because I had acted as a United States deputy marshal, I had forfeited my right to the salary, and the judge threw the defense out of court, and directed a verdict in my favor. That case was appealed to the general term, and the general term has affirmed the judgment.

I was not the only republican discharged by Judge Cowing on account of his nomination by Tammany Hall, and to make places for Tammany Hall men. There were six others. I was discharged to make room for Pat Diver's man, Michael Quinn, who kept a five-cent lodging house, at the corner of Pell and Mott streets, and who now keeps a liquor-saloon at the same place, and who boasts that he sells a glass of beer as large as a plug hat.

This is the man who assaulted a good government club delegate at the polling-place of his district, on one of the registration days at last election, and charges were preferred against him to the grand jury, but by some means an indictment was prevented.

John Miller, a veteran, and a thirteenth assembly district republican, was discharged by Judge Cowing, to make room for Billy Devlin, a protege of Police Commissioner Sheehan, and keeper of the bar in the grand opera-house.

Pete Seaman, another appointee of Judge Cowing's, kept a liquor-store right opposite the court, and within a few days was told by Judge Cowing that he would have to get out of it or resign his place in the court, as things were getting too hot.

One of the republicans discharged by Judge Cowing about the time I was discharged was named John Phillips. He had been originally appointed by Judge Cowing on the recommendation of the republican district organization of which ex-Coroner Nugent was the leader. When Phillips received his notice of dismissal, he ran to John Nugent with it. John Nugent, in the meantime, had jumped into Tammany Hall, and he told Phillips to do the same. Phillips did join the Tammany Association in John Reilly's district, and in a week or so Mr. Carroll, the chief clerk, sent for him and asked him if he had his notice of removal in his pocket. Phillips produced it, and Carroll told him he was reinstated because he was a veteran. Up to that time no question had been raised about his being a veteran; he simply had joined Tammany Hall. Had I complied with the notification to join Tammany Hall I would also have been reinstated.

This transaction will show the extent of Judge Cowing's truth and honesty when he said to the grand jury, "I believe you will find that in this court politics has never had any sway." As a matter of fact, every appointment that was made during my time was based on politics, and it is a notorious fact that the politicians who are seeking favors for their friends under indictment, accused of crime, thronged the court-rooms and corridors and even the judge's rooms.

Since Mr. Carroll has been there it has been a rendezvous for Tammany Hall politicians. There never was a morning that district leader Jimmy Boyle was not flitting between the clerk's office, the judge's rooms, and the district attorney's office. When Judge Cowing says that politics never had any sway he flies in the teeth of his own acts and what has taken place under his eye for years.

A word as to the attendants: there never has been either order or discipline among them; every man is boss, comes and goes when he pleases, and the work has always fallen upon a few men who had not as much pull or were not favorites. PATRICK J. O'BRIEN.

224 Madison Street, New York.

—From the New York Evening Post, February, 1895.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

The spoils system inevitably leads to public corruption, treacherous and unsafe administration, and the ultimate foundering of the ship of state.—From Archbishop Ireland's address: The Duty and Value of Patriotism, before the Loyal Legion April, 1894.

VOL. II, No. 25.

INDIANAPOLIS, MARCH, 1895.

TERMS: { One dollar per annum.
10 cents per copy.

Published monthly. Publication office, No. 23 N. Meridian St., Indianapolis, Ind. Address,

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

THE republican majority in the late Indiana general assembly came into office on the great reform wave which swept the country in 1894. On coming up to Indianapolis they found the one pressing work before them to be the removal of politics from the state service and the placing it upon a purely business basis. The methods were at hand in the shape of the merit system and the labor service system. There were hundreds of great examples where these methods had been proved with brilliant success. None but fools or knaves would think of trying any other methods. A bill embodying the results of these wide experiences was prepared and introduced. It never got out of the committee. The party promise, years old and repeated in every form, was not forgotten, because it was constantly held before the face of every member of the general assembly. With stolid indifference they broke the promise. They were wild with a wolfish desire to get at the places in the insane hospitals, the institution for feeble-minded children, the prisons, and so on. And yet they were afraid of the public vengeance. For the benevolent institutions they finally passed a bill providing that the members of the six boards should be divided in politics. Of all the humbugs with which knavish politicians dodge reform, this is the greatest. When they came to the penal institutions their wolfishness got beyond control and they enacted that those be seized as spoils, pure and simple.

THE republican majority in the general assembly thoroughly rounded out its worthless career, and it disgraced the state as it has not been disgraced in this generation. It turned its mighty mind to the custodian of the state house, and the twenty employes under him, all of whom have satisfactorily performed their duties, which consist principally in cleaning the tobacco juice of the members of the general assembly from the tiled floors. A bill was passed to legislate these employes out of office, and to turn the state house over to a republican superintendent. Thrifty Mike Cain, the engineer, had kept a jug of whisky in the basement, and he seems to have bought enough members with enough drinks, for he was expressly exempted from the operations of the bill. The measure went to the governor, who, under the constitution, might keep it until three minutes before the general assembly expired by law. If then returned with his veto, the two houses could not pass it in three minutes. The governor decided to so return it, and at about ten minutes before midnight his private secretary started with it to the lower house on the next floor. The republicans had been watching for him. They had nailed up all of the doors of the gallery, and they now waylaid him and attempted to keep him in the elevator, where a desperate struggle took place, in which in its mad flight up and down a woman was nearly crushed and a rib of the private secretary broken, and a man hanging on the side of the elevator just escaped being cut in two. The private secretary says: "The elevator still continued running, and while I was on my knees I reached out and touched the spring on one of the gates as we passed it. I got the door open, and the next time we came to it I made a jump and got out. I was six feet from the floor and fell to the ground with a crash."

A riot followed, in which the spittoons of the members of the general assembly and other missiles were thrown. The private secretary, with help which had come, forced his way to the door of the house, and through the door, and announced the message from the governor within the time. The speaker had, however, declared the house adjourned. The republican leader was a member named Adams, an ex-school teacher, a sort of Scholar in Politics. So redoubtable is he that when he used to play foot-ball, four men were always detailed to tackle him. The republican majority now say that the bill removing the scrubbers and spittoon-cleaners of the state house became a law because the governor failed to return it within the prescribed time.

THE CHRONICLE especially recommends the story of Mr. Warfield, the reform postmaster of Baltimore, to its spoils readers—it trusts that it has a goodly number. It is only just that spoilsmen should have this merry reading showing that civil service reformers are no better than they should be when put to the actual test. This paper can not resent the large list of unpleasant epithets expressive of the contempt that spoilsmen bestow upon civil service reformers, for the reason that there is a considerable truth at bottom of them. It is the weakness, vacillation, and the taint of spoils politics shown by civil service reformers themselves that have been a shame upon a great cause. It was reformers who condoned the breaking down and evasion of the civil service law in the Indianapolis post-office in 1884 on the ground that we must expect only democrats to apply for examination under a democratic administration, and so on. It has been reformers who have succumbed to the pride of controlling patronage. It has been reformers who have justified the sale of offices to secure legislation. We must admit that we all have lost clearness of moral vision from long contact with a vicious system. And while all reformers must speak out plainly about poor Mr. Warfield, who tried to be a cunning politician for reform purposes, and left thereby the straight and narrow road, it may be frankly admitted that the last ten years have put him into a notable company of like sinners.

THE Baltimore postmaster recommended the removal of seven employes, and the appointment of seven political followers who had been his election assistants. Before the recommendation was approved, the President put the places under the civil service rules. Then the post-office department declined to approve the postmaster's changes. Of course, legally, this ended the matter. The authority of the department is absolute; if it declines to approve a removal, the removal is not made, and that is all there is of it. The postmaster gave it up, and appointed his seven men as watchmen, and immediately promoted them to the positions sought. Then he backed out of this swindle, and decided to regard the original appointments good. He probably knew his man. Attorney-General Olney comes briskly forward, and says that the men may legally hold their first appointments. It takes a great man to be the attorney of sixty-five millions of people and of a great railroad corporation at the same time. Only some such man would be equal to Olney's civil service opinions. Mr. Bissell's incurable weakness is illustrated in this silly reference to Olney for decision. What with Olney and the Carlises and Quincy, Mr. Cleveland's second administration will not lack for offensive notoriety.

THE great struggle now going on between Platt and the people of New York is one of the most important that has ever occurred as regards wholesome politics. The people defeated Tammany Hall by a tremendous majority, with the sole object of getting rid of bossism, and the worst kind of corruption. Now comes Tom Platt and declares that the object of defeating Tammany shall not be gained, but that the only result shall be that he shall be substituted in Tammany's place. This does not seem to be mere brag, for it is not certain that Platt does not have the power to accomplish his object. Depending on the uncontradicted statements of such papers as the New York Tribune, it may be said that Platt has been in the habit of collecting large amounts of money from corporations and individuals, and this money he has sent out to candidates throughout the state as aid to them in their campaigns. The result is that the leading men in the legislature, including the heads of the important committees, are Platt henchmen rendering absolute obedience to him. The result is that bills for reorganizing the corruption out of the government of the city of New York are held up because they give no power to Platt, while bills which make him virtually the dictator of New York are threatened. This is a development of American practical politics no less dangerous than the Tammany Hall development. It ought to be studied and understood by everybody, and especially by that large class of excellent citizens who regard it as the highest political duty to stick by the party machine, right or wrong.

GOVERNOR MORTON committed the blunder of leaving on the civil service commission Mr. McKinstry, who had helped to make the law the laughing-stock of Tammany. He then appointed Editor Cobb, of whose appointment a republican paper said:

"We are gratified at the appointment of Willard A. Cobb, editor of the Lockport Journal, as a member of the civil service commission. Mr. Cobb is a practical politician, not a snivel service man, and so long as this un-American law is in force it can best be administered by those who are opposed to its execution in detail."

As a corrective of the deliberate blow at the reform law in the appointment of Cobb he put on the commission one true and tried friend of the merit system, Silas W. Burt, and after a painful struggle, the Platt legislature saw fit to confirm the nomination. We may be sure that if Mr. Burt can do no more, secret evasions of the law will end,

It is not difficult to 'size up' Postmaster-General Bissell. He has capacity and executive ability. But, as Good Government says, he lacks aggressive courage on broad lines. He has in a general way sound ideas of administrative reform but he founders upon the rock which has prevented Mr. Cleveland from being a great President—he believes that the offices must be so distributed as not to disrupt the party. No man practicing this belief will in our time reach greatness in office. Mr. Bissell has done a good many things for reform and he is entitled to the thanks of the country. Indeed, when we see a man of so much ability and with full comprehension of reform ideas, and with all the party wreck and ruin of the Cleveland and Harrison distribution of spoils before him, we are filled with astonishment that he should have missed the opportunity of stolid, unyielding refusal to divide the fourth-class post-offices as party plunder. He missed his object; as Harper's Weekly says, the spoils politicians of his own party were incensed at him for doing so much for civil service reform, and the civil service reformers are dissatisfied because he failed to come up to the standard which was entirely feasible. His party is effectually disrupted. Nevertheless we regret that he has resigned, because it makes the future uncertain. Mr. Wilson may be better and he may be worse. His professions are satisfactory, but we hope he will not be that worst pest in office—the new incumbent with no exact knowledge, and no practical experience who thinks he knows short cuts which will put in practice reform ideas, and satisfy and unite the reformers and the politicians. He should understand that there is an impassable gulf between spoils politicians and reform methods.

THE CHRONICLE has elsewhere compiled, mostly from the New York Evening Post, a month of the efforts being made by a large number of citizens to restore to New York city free government. It must not be forgotten that for years past a small group of patriotic people and papers have, in season and out of season, warned their fellow-citizens of the chains being forged by the united efforts of the Platt-Tammany combination. It must not be forgotten that a minister's dogged will finally fired the inert mass of apathetic citizenship with a moral purpose to probe to the very bottom of the corruption. Then came those shocking revelations of the poor and weak blackmailed, honest men corrupted, and criminals acting upon the knowledge that there were only dishonesty, injustice and foulness in the administration of the government of the city, and that all this dishonesty, injustice and foulness, were known and tacitly acquiesced in by large numbers of men notable for their fair names. When this was realized the conscience of the American people awoke and Tammany was apparently engulfed. Reform work was not abandoned. The keenest and busiest men of New York laid aside private duties and united to prepare legislation absolutely necessary for any real reform or for any permanent abolition of Tammany, or kindred bossism. Then that other boss—the nether Tammany, Tom Platt, began his work. Sometimes sly as when he sends lying statements for his henchmen editors throughout the state to print as their own; again bold as when for nine weeks a legislature at his beck holds up all reform legislation; but whether sly or bold, this boss is unwearied. He trusts to his large experience, that in these movements people get selfish and lose courage, and finally the high-spirited leaders yield to material interests and become cravens.

The Chicago Record says that six ministers of the gospel appear in the roster of the West Virginia legislature, and they all voted to send Stephen B. Elkins to the United States senate. Such mental or moral strabismus at first thought seems to support the theory of those who claim that the clergy should never enter political life, nor be drawn into any movements for political reform, because they are sure to disgrace themselves or the reform before they get through.

At Cornell University, the Curtis debating clubs observed the birthday anniversary of George William Curtis.

Addresses were made on "Curtis's Connection with Cornell," by Prof. B. G. Wilder, and on "Curtis and Civil Service Reform," by Prof. B. I. Wheeler. Papers were also presented giving a "Sketch of Curtis's Life," by N. Lyon, '97; on "Curtis as an Orator," by F. P. Ufford, '96, and on "Curtis as a Writer," by A. J. Sperry, '96. On account of Curtis's intimate connection with the university in its early days, an attempt will be made to secure for Cornell a share in the Curtis memorial lectureship, which is soon to be established, providing for courses of lectures on citizenship to be given in several colleges.

It is reported that the committee in charge of the fund has decided to establish a revolving lectureship, the incumbent of which shall deliver lectures in Yale, Harvard, Columbia, and perhaps Amherst and Brown colleges. Certainly, Chicago University and Michigan University should ask to be included. In this connection, we refer all of our readers to the excellent life of Mr. Curtis by Edward Cary, with the further suggestion that there is no better subject for commencement than the facts and lessons of Mr. Curtis's biography.

Cincinnati is to be congratulated because Theodore Roosevelt has roused the civil service reformers of that city to revive their association formed in 1881, but we respectfully extend condolences that it has a press so apathetic and behind the times that it attracts attention because the Tribune gives a little over a column to an account of the address. Indiana civil service reformers owe much to a few enlightened and liberal papers. Judge William H. Taft, of the United States Circuit Court, was elected President of the Cincinnati association, and made a vigorous address.

The South West, a civil service reform paper says:

Mr. Roosevelt began by a reference to a little editorial remark in the Commercial Gazette, that contained, as far as we are able to judge, rather the thoughts of George B. Cox, translated into polite English, than any independent editorial opinion. Later on, referring again to the same paper, he said:

"I saw to-day in another column of the same friendly paper (Laughter), a statement that they were quite confident I would not go into any wicked scheme to include a large number of democrats now in office under the classified service, and the republicans would not probably get in. They can just bet that I will go in for any scheme of that kind. (Laughter.) I shall do my best to get the classified service put over every branch of the public service that it is capable of being put over. (Applause.) And I shall do it, anyhow, without any regard to party, merely because I claim to be an American citizen, and wish well to the commonwealth. (Applause.) And if I were sure that my party was to get in to-morrow, I would try to have it done to-night, because I know that nothing weakens a party more than the division of patronage. That there is absolutely no form of a faction fight quite so damaging and quite so degrading as a quarrel over the spoils. (Laughter.)

"If the party to which I belong can not win except upon a basis of paying the captains of tens and the captains of hundreds with fourth-class post-offices and jobs here and there, I don't wish it to win. (Laughter and applause.) * * *

"People are afraid, they say, of having a governing class in this country. There again it is a little bit difficult to argue seriously. Do they really think that a country of 75,000,000 people is in danger of being tyrannized over by 8,000 government clerks? Have they ever seen government clerks? I wish they would walk through the post-office to-morrow and look at your letter-carrier when he comes around, and see if you see anything sinister about him, and if you really think that the fact that that carrier has probably staid there in the service five or six years, and will probably stay there six more, if he behaves himself, if you really think that that in some hidden way jeopardizes your liberty—think of that seriously, and ask yourself if you have to give an answer to that question. * * *

"The governing class that is a danger is the class that is after public patronage; is the class who is the heeler, the ward boss, the ward rough, the man who is present at the polls, to cheat; the bully, to lie, to carry the election somehow, because he is to be paid for it. He is the danger, and he is not the man to be in the classified service." (Applause.)

Mr. Roosevelt says that Postmaster Zumstein's administration of the office has been most satisfactory. Eighty-two per cent. of the carriers who were employed when Mr. Zumstein took charge of the office are still there, and there has been but eighteen per cent. of changes, and these were by reason of bona fide resignations, deaths, and removals. The workings of the examining board at the post-office is also highly satisfactory, and he regards it as one of the model boards.

And yet this postmaster, who has obeyed the law and has begun to learn his business, is to be removed and a green hand appointed. We quote the following from the South West as illustrative of the barbarous practice in vogue:

The Commercial-Gazette mentions J. Marshall Smedes and Wm. J. O'Neil instead of J. W. Harper and A. W. Houston, and gives its five candidates handsome editorial send-offs, each of which concludes with the stereotyped assertion that the respective applicant "would make a fine postmaster, with Muller in the outside room." There is a great, deep truth in this bit of pleasant sarcasm. It tells nearly the whole story of the utter unreasonableness of our civil service system, as it was and it now is. Before the enactment of the civil service reform law of 1883 there were really two postmasters needed in Cincinnati and all other larger cities. One had to give his time and energy to the business of collecting, forwarding and distributing the mails, and so forth. His duties and services were clearly defined, and his salary was therefore moderate. He was the real postmaster with the title and salary of first assistant. The other man, who had the title of postmaster, was not expected to meddle with the mails, but to see to it that his county and district conventions were properly packed in the interest of the man who retained him as his personal political servant at the expense of the United States treasury. His services were of a very uncertain nature, and hence his salary rather large. It is easy enough to understand that under the old system there was really need for two men for each office, but since the patronage has been taken away from the heads of such offices there is no longer any need for two postmasters in Cincinnati. There was but little need for Mr. Riley when Mr. Muller was his co-postmaster; there was less need for Mr. Zumstein, who has been Mr. Muller's co-postmaster, as was his predecessor, Mr. Whitfield.

Why could not Mr. Bissell have realized how he would have added to his own good name and to his party's to insist that if men like Zumstein were to be removed because they were recently political appointments, faithful subordinates like Muller should be promoted.

BALTIMORE'S REFORM POSTMASTER.

Mr. S. Davies Warfield is the postmaster at Baltimore. Mr. Warfield has been for years an independent democrat. His father, Henry M. Warfield, was the independent candidate in 1875 against Mayor Latrobe, the present incumbent. It has never been questioned, that in that contest Mr. Latrobe was really defeated, but was counted in.

It was in connection with the state election, which took place a few days after this municipal election of 1875, that Eugene Higgins entered the court-house by night and burned the ballots.

Mr. Warfield, in 1889, was the chairman of the independent democratic city committee, and as such he labored hard to elect the fusion ticket, headed by Major Alexander Shaw, the republican nominee for mayor.

In 1891 Mr. Warfield was himself the fusion candidate for mayor against Mr. Latrobe, but was badly beaten.

In all these campaigns, civil service reform was a prominent issue, and the party with which Mr. Warfield acted laid special emphasis upon it.

Mr. Warfield has always been a devoted follower and personal friend of Mr. John K. Cowen, the general counsel of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, a vice-president of the civil service reform association, and for a number of years the fighting leader of the independent democrats of Baltimore.

In 1893 some sort of an arrangement was made between I. Freeman Rasin, the Baltimore city "boss," and Mr. Cowen. Mr. Cowen had repeatedly and fiercely attacked Rasin from the stump, and in the columns of the press; saying nothing about him, however, which was not admittedly true, but which, if true, proved him a person with whom it is difficult to understand how any clear-headed man, anxious for honest government, could have any alliances.

It was stated in the Baltimore Sun at the time, and has been since repeated by Mr. Rasin and his friends, that the arrangements referred to was entered into by Mr. Rasin at the special personal request of President Cleveland.

The terms of the plan as then announced were, that Mr. Cleveland would appoint Mr. Warfield postmaster, and Mr. William L. Marbury district attorney. Mr. Marbury is a very able young lawyer, who had taken an active part in all reform campaigns in Maryland, for a number of years past. He accompanied Mr. Cowen into the republican state convention, in 1887, and there followed Mr. Cowen's example in pledging his support to the republican state ticket, on the ground that the defeat of the democratic machine in this state was necessary if the state was to be honestly governed.

Mr. Rasin agreed that, as his contribution to harmony, he would place upon the regular legislative ticket, in the second legislative district, four independents, namely: Mr. W. Cabell Bruce, who had long been an especially earnest advocate of civil service reform; Mr. Thomas S. Baer, secretary of the Baltimore reform league; Mr. John Helmsley Johnson, for a number of years editor of the Civil Service Reformer, and Mr. Archibald H. Taylor. These gentlemen, it is understood, were not asked to make any pledges, and in point of fact are said not to have made any. These gentlemen and Mr. Cowen had, however, in past campaigns, opposed Mr. Latrobe bitterly. He was in 1893 again a candidate, but they were necessarily silent.

The late Mr. S. Teakle Wallis, however, than whom no more disinterested reformer ever lived, thought that these gentlemen could consistently take the nomination, and ought to.

It is believed, however, that a large number of reformers, who in national politics were democrats, disapproved of the whole business, as did the republicans. There was no question, of course, that these independents were nominated simply and solely because Mr. Rasin said they should be, and that their nomination was in itself the clearest evidence of the thoroughness of Mr. Rasin's power over the machinery of the democratic party.

It was claimed by some who defended the scheme that, as a result of this alliance, practical measures of reform could and would be gotten through the legislature, and that in particular a civil service reform law would be enacted.

Senator Bruce, when he got to Annapolis, introduced such a bill, and for awhile it was given out that it would pass. Of course it did not, nor did any other reform measure in the line of those long demanded by the reform organizations in Baltimore. Not a single improvement was made in the election laws, nor did the reformers elected apparently make any special effort to secure the enactment of any of the bills which the Reform League prepared and sent to them.

Such was the situation when upon the expiration of the four years' term of Postmaster Johnson, President Cleveland nominated Mr. Warfield as postmaster of Baltimore. Mr. Gorman hung this nomination up in the senate for some time, but it was finally confirmed.

When Mr. Warfield took office, he made a little speech to the employes, in which he told them that he purposed to enforce the civil service reform law rigidly in the classified service. He also declared in substance that Mr. Cleveland was the greatest civil service reformer who had ever lived. The pledge then made, in so far as it related to the positions within the classified service at the time Mr. Warfield took charge of the office, has been faithfully fulfilled. The number of removals among the several hundred classified clerks and carriers has been very small; probably not exceeding three or four, and those all for cause.

Mr. Warfield never said, or intimated, that he would treat the unclassified places as included within the spirit of the civil service regulations. For some months after he came in, however, he made very few changes. He allowed a number of the republican ward politicians, with whom Postmaster Johnson had filled the non-classified places, to retain their offices, although he would have been amply justified in removing them promptly.

During these first few months in office the only indication that there might be trouble to come was found in the political biographies of every new appointee in the unclassified service regularly given out by somebody. These people were always described as Cleveland democrats. The candidates for whom they had voted in the last three or four municipal campaigns were, as a rule, also stated. It appeared from these biographical notices that they had almost without exception in those campaigns supported the tickets the election of which had been advocated by Mr. Warfield.

There were not many such appointments made, however, and things moved along very smoothly until towards fall, when Mr. Warfield conceived the plan of having Mr. Cowen nominated in the fourth congressional district to succeed Mr. Rayner, who had declined to be a candidate for renomination. Mr. Cowen did not live in the fourth district, but did live in the second, of which Mr. Talbot was the representative.

According to Maryland political traditions this non-residence in the district was a more important matter than it would seem to be to any one not familiar with them. Mr. Cowen is very able, has long been an avowed free trader, and an aggressive anti-Gorman man. He is a warm friend of Postmaster-General Wilson, and it is believed of Mr. Cleveland as well.

Mr. Rasin's friends say that the President himself requested Mr. Rasin to have Mr. Cowen nominated. Mr. Rasin agreed, and then Mr. Warfield had a paper circulated among the leading democrats of independent proclivities in Baltimore, asking Mr. Cowen to run. This paper was extensively signed by many gentlemen who had not approved of the legislative alliance of the year before, but who were warmly interested in the tariff controversy, and who believed that Mr. Cowen would be an exceedingly valuable supporter of the President's policy.

This letter, so signed, was put in the newspapers simultaneously, or nearly so, with the announcement that Mr. Cowen would be the regular democratic nominee. Many of the regular democrats, including a number of those who regarded themselves as closer to Mr. Gorman than to Mr. Rasin, publicly expressed their opposition. It is very probable that a large majority of the rank and file of the democratic party in the fourth district, either because they could not get over the prejudices which had been instilled into them by their leaders and newspapers during the series of campaigns in which Mr. Cowen so bitterly fought the democratic machine, or because they were opposed to the nomination for congress of a railroad attorney, or because they did not like electing a man who did not live in the district, would very much have preferred not to have Mr. Cowen the nominee. So strict is the discipline, so absolute the control of Mr. Rasin over the democratic party machinery here, that Mr. Cowen was unanimously nominated.

During the succeeding campaign he made an exceedingly vigorous and able canvass, arguing the tariff question from the administration standpoint in a series of speeches of great power. Mr. Warfield was intensely interested in this campaign. It appears probable that he had before this time promised appointments in the unclassified service to a number of persons who had been known as independent democrats. He knew there was a great deal of dissatisfaction with the Cowen nomination in the ranks of the regulars, and that in spite of the apparent unanimity with which the convention acted, there was considerable danger that the ticket would be badly cut at the polls. Under these circumstances he feared to appoint any more independents to post-office places. He accordingly made up his mind to let the republican incumbents remain in place until after the election.

He was a practical minded man, however, and was anxious to make use of the men whom he proposed to appoint to office, as well as of some of those already in the government service. He did not altogether trust the loyalty of the regular democratic organizations, and thought it just as well to have a little outside organization of his own. He accordingly set up a more or less secret election bureau, under the charge of one Harley, a clerk in the mailing division of the post-office and a member of the local post-office civil service examining board. This bureau was largely if not exclusively manned by applicants for places in the post-office. It has been alleged in the newspapers that some part of the stationery used in this office was paid for by the government and brought from the post-office.

On the 2d of November, Mr. Cleveland, without warning Mr. Warfield, amended the civil service rules so as to include within the classified service a large number of hitherto exempted places in the postal service, including most of the offices which Mr. Warfield had promised to his campaign clerks. Mr. Warfield was naturally considerably embarrassed. Just what he did, if anything, in the matter before election, it is hard to gather from the fragmentary and somewhat contradictory statements which have been given out. It appears, probably, that Mr. Warfield had some sort of a conversation with some of the assistants of the postmaster general, or with the chief clerk of the post-office department, in the course of which he gave them more or less definite information that he proposed to make some changes, and what the changes were, and perhaps the names of the persons whom he proposed to appoint.

These conversations or statements Mr. Warfield claims were made on or before November the 1st; that is to say, one or more days prior to the inclusion of the places within the classified service. He wrote a letter to the post-office department, dated November 1st, but which the newspapers say the department alleges it did not receive until November the 8th, formally and officially notifying the department of the appointment of his election assistants to the places he had promised them. He seems then to have been informed by the department that these places were now within the classified service and could not be filled except from the eligible registries. Whereupon he went to the civil service commission and had an interview with Messrs. Proctor and Lyman, Mr. Roosevelt not being at the office the day he called. Just what occurred there the public does not know. Mr. Warfield says, or Mr. Warfield's confidential friends say for him, that he explained to the commission the circumstances and asked them if he could not appoint his political followers watchmen, detail them to clerical duties, have the watchmen places classified, and then, having the men within the classified service, promote them to other positions in it, and that the commission advised him he could do so. On the other hand, it is understood that the commission says that all Mr. Warfield asked them was two hypothetical questions; first, whether he could classify persons who, while nominally filling positions as watchmen, were actually performing clerical duties, and second, whether a person holding one position in the classified service in the post-office could be promoted without a new examination to any other place in the classified service in the same office, and that the commission answered both questions in the affirmative.

Mr. Warfield went back to Baltimore, appointed the men watchmen, and had the watchmen's places classified, and thereupon immediately promoted the men to the positions for which he had intended them. They never served a day as watchmen. When the facts came to the attention of the commission, as they very speedily did, it of course set aside this whole performance. Mr. Warfield thereupon fell back upon his original contention, claiming that these appointments had been validly made prior to the President's extension of the rules. He relied upon various prior rulings of the department, especially that made under the advice of Attorney-General Miller in connection with the appointments made in the spring of 1889 by the Harrison administration to the positions in the railway mail service then classified, and on various decisions of the courts. One of the difficulties of sustaining this contention under the circumstances of this case is, that at the time the so-called appointments were made, there were no vacancies to which the persons could be appointed.

It is not denied that the first notice the former republican incumbents had of their removal was from one to two weeks subsequent to the President's extension of the rules. Postmaster Warfield then asked them for their resignations, which they declined to give. In so asking, the postmaster himself was apparently guilty of a violation of the postal regulation promulgated some time since by Postmaster-General Bissell, which forbids the postmaster to ask for the resignation of any person in the classified postal service.

All these things took place last November. Nothing has yet been apparently decided in the case. The civil service commission has notified the postmaster-general that, in its judgment, Mr. Warfield's new appointments are illegal, and has asked, it is understood, for the decision of the postmaster-general upon the question.

Having been unable to obtain such decision, it has been reported in the papers that the commission has requested the treasury department to refuse to pay the salaries of Mr.

Warfield's new appointees. It is understood that the postmaster-general has finally referred the whole matter to Attorney-General Olney for his decision and the matter there rests.

Meanwhile public opinion is practically unanimous in its conclusions. The democratic spoilsmen and the republican spoilsmen are laughing at the postmaster, and sarcastically commenting upon the performances of reformers in office.

The general amusement is increased by the fact that Warfield was indiscreet enough to explain to the republican officials whom he removed, that he would have removed them before, but that he did not dare to make his new appointments prior to the election for fear the regular democrats would cut Cowen to pieces.

The civil service reformers feel that Mr. Warfield apparently does not understand what civil service reform means, that he has not grasped the idea that it is not his place as postmaster to manage politics, and that he believes that he has the right to use all the positions in the office, not included in the classified service, in the furtherance of his political ends. So feeling, he promised men places in return for political services rendered, and when a change in the regulations rendered it impracticable for him to carry out his bargains without resorting to tricks and evasions, to tricks and evasions he resorted.

Meanwhile the civil service commission has, as it would seem, concluded that Mr. Warfield is a man who will be none the worse for some watching. It has accordingly removed the old local civil service board of examiners, including Mr. Harley, who was the head of the post-office election bureau during the Cowen campaign, and has constituted a new board; two of whose members are not in the postal service at all, one of them being an experienced official of the United States sub-treasury, and one of the oldest members of the Maryland civil service reform association, and the other a clerk in the office of the United States engineers here.

THE GRAPPLE OF REFORM WITH PLATTISM.

A MONTH'S RECORD.

It is an open secret in this town that in several election campaigns—we will not undertake to say how many—republican committees, national, state, and county, when they have asked for contributions to campaign funds from wealthy individuals connected with great corporations, have been met in many instances with the answer that while these individuals were willing, and expected to make subscriptions for the purpose named, they would prefer to make payment to that well-known and trusted leader, Mr. Thomas C. Platt. It is an open secret, that this condition has been assented to in a majority of cases, if not all. It is an open secret that the money so paid to Mr. Platt has been disbursed by means of his own checks as his personal contributions to the campaign expenses of republican candidates for the senate and assembly, and other official positions throughout the state. It is an open secret that Mr. Platt has not considered it worth his while to make any accounting to the committees named of his disbursements. It is an open secret that many of the corporations contributing in this indirect way to campaign funds to be used—legitimately, of course—for the election of senators and assemblymen have large interests at stake, which may be depended upon securing or defeating legislation at Albany. It is an open secret that in some instances legislation at Albany affecting corporations in this city has been held in committee, or otherwise delayed, until Mr. Platt was assured of a contribution to the republican campaign fund.—New York Tribune, March 13.

THREE GREAT REFORMS.

There are now awaiting action by the legislature three measures which may be said to embody the wishes of the people of this city as expressed in the anti-Tammany victory at the polls last November. These are:

The Public School Bill.

The City Magistrates' Bill.

The Police Reorganization Bill or Bills.

* * *

FEBRUARY 20—ALBANY.

Ex-Senator Platt left for New York city early this afternoon. Some of his friends urged him to stay over for the legislative reception at the executive mansion to-night, but he begged to be excused on the plea of business engagements. When he left he professed to be well satisfied with the results of his visit.

*All the more prominent republican machine legislators have been summoned before him to give an accounting of the situation, and the republican heads of the state departments also have had to contribute their quota of information and support. Gov. Morton had Mr. Platt with him for several hours early last evening at the executive mansion. * * **

It may be stated that Mr. Platt started down the river this afternoon with the belief that there are at least eighty-five men in the assembly who may be relied upon by him to view men and measures from his standpoint. These figures are those of men who knew Mr. Platt's mind after he had received and talked last night with the many who called upon and advised him.

* * *

FEBRUARY 21—ALBANY.

While no one may speak authoritatively for Governor Morton, it may be stated that yesterday's tide of Platt's political influences did not wash him away from his anchorage. He did not assure Mr. Platt that any New York bills in any form passed by the legislature would receive executive approval.

* * *

FEBRUARY 21—NEW YORK.

Platt assured the three republican police justices, who are on the bench with twelve Tammany justices, when he returned to the city yesterday, that they would not be disturbed, since the bill abolishing that bench and creating a city magistrates' bench would never become a law.

FEBRUARY 22—NEW YORK.

Only a small portion of the usual crowd of Platt legislators came down from Albany to-day to spend the last days of the week in receiving orders from the boss. Among these were the faithful O'Connor of Binghamton and Lexow of Nyack. They were at the Fifth Avenue Hotel early this morning, and after looking about vainly for some of their associates, they started for the headquarters in the United States Express building. Neither they nor the few local Platt men who were at the hotel had anything to say about the war programme which was prepared last Sunday. Harmony has become their watchword since it became apparent that Mayor Strong could not be frightened by threats of annoying legislation.

* * *

FEBRUARY 23—NEW YORK.

Governor Morton was in town to-day, and the politicians surmised that he had come to help to bring about harmony in local republican circles. The governor arrived at the Hotel Renaissance in West Forty-third street last night and had a conference with Platt almost immediately after his arrival.

The Platt men have entirely abandoned their threatening attitude. Just a week ago they were filling the air with threats about what they would do if the mayor failed to come to terms. Now they are begging for peace on almost any terms. The governor, it is well known, refused to join in a war against Mayor Strong, but it is said that he promised to do all he could to induce the mayor to give some patronage to the Platt men, and it appears that he is not in town for the purpose of carrying out his promise. Most of Platt's lieutenant's are in the city, anxiously awaiting the result of the governor's efforts.

* * *

FEBRUARY 25—NEW YORK.

The corridor outside the mayor's office was crowded with politicians before eleven o'clock. When they were told that they would have to wait another hour, some of them said that they had brought their lunches along and were prepared for a siege. Then they resumed discussion of the probable effect of Gov. Morton's conference with Mayor Strong last Saturday. The Platt men professed to be confident that Police Commissioners Kerwin and Murray would be retained, and that Platt would get recognition in the dock and fire boards, anyhow. At noon there were about 200 politicians in the anteroom and in the corridor. A dozen of them were in a crush against the door of the Mayor's office, and had the door been opened suddenly they would probably have fallen in a heap in the office. At 12:05 o'clock the door was still locked, and a loud growl went up. Three minutes later, the mayor's big messenger, Daniel, came out through a side door and shouted: "The mayor won't let anybody in till one o'clock. He has important business on hand. Now you might as well take a walk around the block and cool off." * * *

No reform expectation is greeted by the police with more scepticism than that of a non-political administration of the police department. Among the men particularly there is a fixed faith in the ultimate triumph of politics. They admit that changes are imminent; they believe there will be a reorganization which will affect many of them, even in the lower ranks, and they concede the honesty of Mayor Strong's purposes. But in the end they say the politicians will reach and influence the force and the individual fortunes of every policeman. This is all patent to those who hear the men talk among themselves at police headquarters, and to reporter they show their minds freely, if what they say is not for publication. * * * It is clearly the purpose of Platt to get even with Mayor Strong and the reformers, by defeating all reform measures for this city through delay in the senate. He has a very strong grip upon that body because of its narrow republican majority, the balance of power resting in the hands of the two or three senators who have no other object in public life than to do his bidding. These senators have made little concealment of their purpose to prevent the passage of any bill thoroughly reforming either the police department, or the police justice bench, or the department of education. They have, from the first (we speak now especially of Lexow and O'Connor), declared that the Platt police board bills, which perpetuate the "bi-partisan evil, are the only measures of the kind which shall be allowed to pass the senate. They have had these made caucus measures, and say that this approval bars out all change in their character. They are "holding up" the police justice abolition bill, and mean to defeat it unless they can get assurances from Mayor Strong as to the men whom he will appoint under its provisions. They are less open in their opposition to the public school bill, but their purpose is to kill that also unless they can get terms.

* * *

FEBRUARY 26—ALBANY.

Viewed from the standpoint of the followers of Thomas C. Platt, the legislative situation is growing continually more exasperating. Governor Morton in his statement yesterday placed himself on record as heartily in accord with the policy of Mayor Strong.

* * *

FEBRUARY 27—NEW YORK.

In accordance with previous announcement, a special meeting of the chamber of commerce was held to-day at 12:30 o'clock for the purpose, as stated in the call, of "petitioning the legislature to pass without further delay a bill for the removal of the police justices of this city, and the reorganization of that branch of our criminal procedure."

["It is a question not of politics, not even of business, but of morality, of humanity, even of religion. These are the present police justices: William H. Burke, Joseph M. Deuel, Patrick Divver, Thomas L. Feitner, Thomas F. Grady, Edward Hogan, Joseph Koch, Bernard F. Martin, Clarence W. Meade, Daniel F. McMahon, John J. Ryan, Charles E.

Simms, Jr., Charles N. Taintor, John R. Voorhis, Charles Welde. What they are can be best understood by a brief comment on some of them taken from a publication of the Evening Post, which appeared many years since, and which statements have not been challenged:

"Bernard F. Martin was in business as liquor-dealer, in partnership with 'Red Leary' and Kate, his wife. 'Red Leary' was one of the most notorious burglars in the country, and Kate probably one of the most famous pickpockets in the world. His saloon was the resort of the most disreputable and criminal classes in the community. As order of arrest clerk, he was indicted for accepting bribes on March 17, 1890, and escaped trial only on a technicality in the law. As the result of his efforts to roll up a big vote as a Tammany leader in the Maynard campaign, eight of his lieutenants were indicted for violation of the election laws, found guilty, and sent to prison.

"Patrick Divver at the time of his appointment was the proprietor of or had interests in several liquor-saloons. He is an ex-member of the board of aldermen, a race-track frequenter, and a friend and companion of gamblers. His activity for Maynard got him into even greater trouble. When the returns came in it was discovered that one election district had 363 votes for Maynard to none for any opposition candidate. Another showed 371 for Maynard to none for any other, and the third showed 267 to none for any other. There had been such obvious fraud that evidence was collected and presented to the grand jury, upon which indictments were found against many of Divver's workers, eighteen of whom were tried, found guilty, and either suffered fine or imprisonment or fled from justice. It has been shown that Divver has had among his intimates for many years not less than forty men who were among the most disreputable in New York city. The Lexow committee brought out the fact that at one time the Divver saloon was the headquarters of a gang of bunco steerers.

"Thomas F. Grady. His conduct on the bench has been so bad that a presentment was made against him by the grand jury in March, 1893, as follows: On November 14, 1892, Justice Taintor, sitting in the Yorkville Police Court, sentenced to the workhouse for six months each, eight disorderly women, and on the following day Justice Grady at the Tombs Police Court, signed a requisition for the discharge of these eight vagrants, and their discharge was secured on this recommendation, he acting on the recommendation made to him by Conrad Smyth, clerk of the Yorkville Court. The grand jury feels that while Justice Grady has violated no law in the discharge of the offenders, his action on November 15 defeated the ends of justice.

"Joseph Koch. His record as excise commissioner was summed up as follows: Together with Commissioner Fitzpatrick he voted for licensing saloons near schools and churches, and in purely residential neighborhoods, without regard to the protests of school trustees, clergymen, and property-owners. He was indicted for willful neglect of duty as excise commissioner, and finally escaped only by a special act which was passed by the legislature repealing the law under which he had been indicted. Concerning this law, Judge Ingraham said, 'I regret to see that the legislature has thus provided a new avenue of escape of punishment for crime.'

"John J. Ryan. About whom it is said that he came prominently into notice about two years ago by taking part in a row in McKeever's saloon, Fourteenth street and Sixth avenue.

"Edward Hogan. About whom it is said that ever since he has been on the bench he has been known as the friend and protector of saloon-keepers."]

* * *

MARCH 1—NEW YORK.

The advance guard of the Platt faction in the legislature is already in this city, preparing for the regular weekly conference with the "boss." Senator O'Connor arrived last night, and other members of the legislature followed to day.

One of the closest personal and political friends of Commissioner Brookfield said of the gathering:

"It will be a disappointed crowd. Lauterbach will have to report failure, for yesterday he asked the commissioner for a share of the spoils and has been denied. Mr. Brookfield says he is for peace and harmony, but he has no use for the Platt crowd."

* * *

MARCH 4—NEW YORK.

The members of the committee of seventy, to whom has been given the special charge of watching the course adopted by the Platt legislators at Albany, are following their work with interest, prepared to order demonstrations the moment they believe the people's interests are to be put aside for partisan gain. R. Fulton Cutting, chairman of the committee appointed to continue the work begun at the recent anti-Platt mass-meeting, said to-day:

"The action of the committee will depend wholly on the developments of this week at Albany. As soon as we are convinced that the legislators do not intend to pass the bills of the committee of seventy in the form in which they were introduced, we shall have a demonstration of some sort."

* * *

MARCH 5—ALBANY.

The situation of the New York police reorganization bills was more problematical than ever this morning. The meeting of the Lexow committee, which was to have been held to-day, has been postponed.

The republican senators are in conference this afternoon, to determine whether they would agree among themselves to be bound by caucus rule. The anti-Platt senators finally consented to abide by such a rule. This is construed by outsiders to mean that, if Platt so wills it, the independent senators will have no alternative but to vote for his schemes, inasmuch as he controls a majority of the republican senators.

* * *

MARCH 8—ALBANY.

Most of the Platt senators and assemblymen will be in New York city to-night, to confer with their boss about the existing political situation. They are in an ugly mood, and are chafing over the delay in setting in motion retaliatory legislation against Mayor Strong and "the gangs of reformers." This delay is due to Mr. Platt, who would like to begin to "get square" with the mayor in this way, but is afraid the conditions are not auspicious yet.

The animosity of the Platt faction towards the supporters of Mayor Strong is exemplified well in the case of Assemblyman Pavey (rep., New York), who was largely instrumental in drafting and having signed by eleven of the nineteen New York city republican assemblymen the testimonial upholding the mayor's course in the matter of appointments. In consequence of his attitude on this subject, Mr. Pavey's important bills are "held up" by the Platt committees.

* * *

MARCH 8—ALBANY.

It is a very moving spectacle to see Timothy Dry-Dollar Sullivan and O'Connor, of Binghamton, joining hands in the state senate for an assault upon Col. Waring, on the ground that he is an extravagant and incompetent official. The real trouble is not stated in Sullivan's resolutions, but is given freely to the reporters, and is that Col. Waring "not only refuses to grant favors to the senators, but is churlish in dealing with them." One of these offended statesmen, whether O'Connor or not is concealed, says that "Col. Waring is doing more to bring discredit upon Mayor Strong's administration than all the other appointments the mayor has made."

* * *

MARCH 9—NEW YORK.

The usual crowd of Platt legislators came to this city last night and to-day to talk with the boss before beginning next week's work in Albany. All of them who were seen this morning were agreed upon one point, namely, that the police-reorganization commission would be eliminated from the Lexow bill, and that the work of reorganizing the police force would be intrusted to a bi-partisan police commission to be appointed by the mayor.

The combination of Jimmy Martin with Charley Murray and Mike Kerwin, in the police board against the reformatory resolutions of the third commissioner, Mr. Andrews, ought to cause no surprise. It is the familiar union of Platt and Tammany which has been in operation at Albany for nine weeks, and which is always ready to spring into existence when an assault is made upon a corrupt political system. The excuses which the two Platt commissioners and the Tammany commissioner make for their conduct are not worth considering. The real reason of their action is the same one which is so powerful at Albany, namely, Platt's orders to "hold up" all reforms until he can get terms from Mayor Strong.

* * *

MARCH 11—NEW YORK.

The committee of seventy's bill proposes a scientific system of school administration which, if made law, will, during the three years of Mayor Strong's administration put our schools upon a basis so far removed from political influences that they can never be brought back to their present level. From the moment this bill appeared, the corrupt influences which, under the present system, are centered in the trustees, have been moving heaven and earth to "beat it." They tried to do this with the Bell bill, but did not succeed. Now they have concocted a third bill, which is to be put forward as a compromise, and which, among various plausible and some desirable features, retains the trustees with their pestilential powers practically undiminished. This is a deadly blow at the seventy's bill, which deprives the trustees of all powers save those of visitation and inspection. If the trustees be allowed to retain the power of selecting or nominating teachers, the whole scientific system proposed in the seventy's bill will be nullified, the present political "pulls" will be perpetuated, and reform will degenerate into a farce.

* * *

MARCH 14—ALBANY.

It is possible for the boss to form an alliance with the Tammany legislators to fix the magistrates bill to suit his own views. While it is doubtful whether he would enter into such a compact in the face of existing public sentiment toward the magistrates bill, it is still just as well for the anti-machine members to resist being lulled into security by the pacific talk of the Platt men.

* * *

MARCH 16.

The obstructing members of the police board (Platt's men) refused yesterday at the board meeting to take any action toward filling the 281 vacancies that exist in the police force, and strove to throw the responsibility for their action on Mayor Strong.

[Commissioner Andrews desired to carry into effect new civil service rules that would result in appointments upon merit and competition instead of the former rules that were no bar to the appointment of Tammany henchmen.]

* * *

MARCH 18—ALBANY.

Senator Cuthbert W. Pound appears of late to have surrendered his prerogatives as a senator to Thomas C. Platt. Mr. Pound must believe that his only road to a renomination is to obey whatever orders Mr. Platt may choose to issue, for that is the only explanation which can be given of his recent actions in the senate in behalf of Platt and Platt's followers. He signed to-day the report of the Lexow investigating committee in favor of these New York police bills. Moreover, as chairman of the committee on prisons he reported favorably bills which have been introduced to give William Barnes, Jr., the Platt boss of Albany county, the patronage of the Albany penitentiary.

* * *

MARCH 18—NEW YORK.

This state within the last few days has been flooded with a pamphlet, evidently sent out with the intention of annoying the Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, and, if possible, turning the country people and politicians from supporting him. It contains, without any comment whatever, a printed copy of the testimony which Dr. Parkhurst gave before Judge Fitzgerald and a jury, in the trial of Hattie Adams. It starts with the story which made such a sensation when published in the newspapers of Dr. Parkhurst's visit, with two of his agents, to Hattie Adams's disorderly house, and its first pages contain his direct testimony as to the scenes he witnessed there. A copy of this pamphlet was shown to a reporter for The New York Times, yesterday, by a man who said it was given to him in Albany. It was said that a copy had been received by nearly every member of the legislature, during the last two or three days, and that they had been mailed to the editors of many country newspapers.

It was also said that its typographical appearance was such as to indicate that it had come from the same publication office as had another pamphlet, which is made up of newspaper comments on the good work of ex-Senator Thomas C. Platt. It looked as if it were a part of the literature of the Platt literary bureau.

CURRENT FACTS.

The Boston chamber of commerce has adopted the following resolution: "That the President of the United States be earnestly requested to extend the civil service rules to the consular service, and request congress to adopt without delay such legislation as will improve this important branch of our national service, and place the interests of this country, as they are represented abroad in our consular service, on a sound business basis, and that there shall be thoroughly eliminated from appointments to the consular service the consideration of reward for political services."

At the meeting of the state board of trade at Norwich, Conn., upon motion of Gen. Aiken the efforts of Henry Cabot Lodge to improve the diplomatic service were approved of.

The New York chamber of commerce on February 7 adopted the following:

Whereas, This chamber has recorded its opinion that appointees to the consular service of the United States should be selected by an adequate civil service examination, and that the efficiency of this service demands permanency of tenure and promotion from the less to the more desirable places; and,

Whereas, There are now pending in the senate of the United States two bills, introduced by Senators Morgan and Lodge, to provide for the reorganization of the consular and diplomatic service, which fulfill the essential conditions considered by this chamber necessary to secure efficient and creditable service;

Resolved, That the chamber of commerce of the state of New York heartily approves of the essential features of said bills, and recommends the early passage by both houses of congress of a consular reform bill.

On February 4, at the regular monthly meeting of the Indianapolis board of trade governors, the recommendation supporting the Lodge consular bill was passed.

Governor Morton has appointed Col. Richard G. Lay superintendent of the western division of the Erie canal. Colonel Lay is not a canal man but he was the brother of Governor Morton's first wife.

A New York carrier named Janicke was run over by a delivery wagon on Park Row about two weeks ago and narrowly escaped death. He refused to be taken to the Hudson Street Hospital until his bag and mail had been safely delivered to another carrier. And yet have we not heard that under the competitive system we could never secure faithful employees?

Collector Kilbreth has promoted two republican employes because of long and satisfactory performance of their duties in the New York custom house. This is a considerable reform step in Tammany-Platt New York.

The federal grand jury at Louisville, Ky., has indicted A. R. Carothers, the assistant custodian at the custom house, and Isaac F. Middleton, one of his subordinates, charging them with being unlawfully concerned in soliciting money for political purposes from the employes of the government. The amounts collected, as charged by the indictments, range from $5 to $15, the money being used to aid in the campaign of Montgomery, in the fourth District.

Congressman Taylor has been having a merry whirl with the officers of the supervising architect of the treasury department. In accordance with the protest of the union laborers of Evansville against the importation of non-union men from Ft. Wayne to do the necessary painting and repairing on the custom house and post office he saw the supervising architect and had a long conference with him. Of course the conservatism of all the government departments is against any interference whatever between union and non-union workmen, and the supervising architect was loth to break precedents by making a rule in this case. However, Mr. Taylor persevered and has come off with laurels. He has not obtained a pledge that union labor and home labor in Evansville shall obtain a preference, but it is promised that a special inspector shall be sent out and judgments on the bids will be deferred until he makes his report. Mr. Taylor thinks that once he can have the inspector safe in Evansville the rest of the journey will be plain sailing.—Washington dispatch, Indianapolis Sentinel, February 18.

The appointment, Wednesday, of George Cotton as postmaster at Elmira, N. Y., is a complete surprise to the politicians. The sentiment at Elmira is, that this recognition of Senator Hill's lieutenant is the first overt act of friendship between President Cleveland and Senator Hill. Cotton has been a bitter enemy of President Cleveland.—February 28.

Democrats of Bayonne want a successor to Postmaster Frederick Boorman. Mr. Boorman is a republican and a veteran. His term expired Jan. 9, last. There are several applicants for the position, some of whom have good backing, and have worked faithfully for the interests of their party. The term of John T. Dunn, of Elizabeth, has expired as a member of Congress, and Senator James Smith, Jr., is now considering the situation. * * * Editor Harry C. Page, publisher of The Bayonne Herald, entered the race at a late day as a compromise candidate, and is not worrying about the outcome.—Bayonne, N. J., dispatch, New York Times, March 9.

The nomination by the President, to-day, of James E. Conley, to be postmaster at Brockport, N. Y., marks the close of one of the keenest post-office contests that have come to the notice of the administration. In Mr. Cleveland's first term John C. Collins was chosen postmaster, and he made a most acceptable official. As soon as Mr. Cleveland returned to the White House, Mr. Collins filed his papers for reappointment. He has been seeking the office ever since. In his first struggle for appointment, Collins was backed by John Owens, a prominent Monroe county democrat, but in 1893 Owens transferred his influence to Mr. Conley, and has since worked in his interest. Valentine Fleckenstein, collector of internal revenue for the Rochester and Buffalo district, in which Brockport is situated, originally supported Collins, but a few months ago he went over to Conley.

The Brockport post-office in the last three years has had two postmasters, both of whom have been removed because of defalcations. The New York senators have not decided whether they will delay the confirmation of Conley, who is known to them as a Cleveland democrat.—Washington dispatch, New York Times, February 26.

By the appointment to-day of John B. Patterson to be postmaster at Corry, the postmaster-general settled an amusing contest. There were originally thirteen candidates for the place, and all were hustling to secure the support of Representative Sibley. But after Mr. Sibley made his speech in the house attacking the President, none of the candidates cared to have it known that they had ever spoken to Honest Joe. Mr. Sibley, of course, realized that by his speech he was persona non grata to Mr. Bissell, and he declined, therefore, to recommend anyone for this appointment, unless Mr. Bissell requested him to do so.—Washington dispatch, Buffalo Express, March 3.

It is hard to understand what purpose moved the President after his experience with Gen. Armstrong as assistant commissioner of Indian affairs, to allow Armstrong practically to name his successor. Thomas P. Smith, of New York, nominated for assistant commissioner yesterday, was an inspector in the field when Armstrong announced his intention to retire, but came to Washington at Armstrong's instance, and has been, apparently, busy with his own canvass ever since. From all that can be learned about Mr. Smith, he is as extreme a political partisan as Armstrong was. As an inspector, common report credits him with going about from agency to agency and school to school, looking for republicans in "unprotected" places, who could be put out of the way to make room for democrats. If this is the fact, Secretary Smith appears to have broken faith with the friends of the Indian to whom he promised that Armstrong's successor should be as good a civil service reformer as he could find, and a man thoroughly abreast of the progress of the day on the Indian question.—Washington dispatch, New York Evening Post, January 15.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

The spoils system inevitably leads to public corruption, treacherous and unsafe administration, and the ultimate foundering of the ship of state.—From Archbishop Ireland's address: The Duty and Value of Patriotism, before the Loyal Legion April, 1894.

VOL. II, No. 26.

INDIANAPOLIS, APRIL, 1895.

TERMS: { One dollar per annum.
10 cents per copy.

Published monthly. Publication office, No. 23 N. Meridian St., Indianapolis, Ind. Address,

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

Indianapolis, Ind.

THE civil service reformers and the republican leaders, and the citizens generally, of Illinois, are deserving of the warmest congratulations; the civil service reformers because, after years of patient work, they have now a splendid success as their reward, the republican leaders for their astuteness in understanding that the day has gone by for spoils to be anything but a hindrance to party success, and the citizens of Illinois, that they have taken the one greatest step toward the realization of an actually free and democratic government. The Illinois legislature recently passed, by an overwhelming majority, the measure giving to cities the power to put the several departments of the governments under civil service rules, to be administered by a commission. Governor Altgeld promptly signed the bill. The civic federation of Chicago originated the bill. It would bring, if adopted in Chicago, the 15,000 employes of the city under the merit system, and remove from the mayor this immense patronage. The local political leaders commended the measure. The republican leaders had the political foresight to do this, in the face of the fact that they knew that their success at the coming city election was almost certain, that the democratic mayor had packed the offices with democrats, and that the law, if passed, would, from the start, take all this immense patronage from the hands of a republican mayor.

Whether the law as passed by the Illinois legislature should apply to the city of Chicago was subjected to a popular vote on April 2. The republican mayor, Swift, was elected by a plurality of 41,110, but the civil service law was carried by the majority of 45,570. Twice now a civil service law has been subjected to a vote of the people at the polls, in New York and in Illinois, and twice the people have shown how sick and disgusted they are with the whole spoils business, and that whenever given the chance, they will lay rough hands on it. And yet, probably, petty bosses will continue to write the papers that "civil service" is unpopular among the people, un-American and aristocratic, and only advocated by a little group of canting holier-than-thou hypocrites.

AND in this connection how do the Indiana republican leaders regard their late fulfillment of party pledges to end the spoils treatment of public places? There has been in Indiana a more active warfare against spoils than in Illinois. The plain people of the state, who pay their taxes and vote without expecting to be paid for it, are quite as anxious to benefit, by the economy, efficiency and justice of the merit system as were the people of Illinois. An excellent bill was introduced, and it was buried because the republican leaders were true to the bourbon political reputation of the state. Its republican leaders have forgotten nothing and learned nothing. They are bigoted, hide-bound and moss backed, and the aspirants among the young men for leadership, if anything, surpass their elders in these particulars. It has been a republican custom to make merry over these qualities manifested by the Hoosier democracy. But that party had a leader, Mr. Jewett, bold enough and astute enough, to announce at a Jackson dinner, last January, that while his heart beat as true as ever to spoils, it simply wouldn't work, and hadn't worked in practice, and meant the destruction of the political party adhering to it. But the republican legislature forgot all the bitter lessons of experience, and regarded the welfare of their party as they smelled the spoil, and almost felt the crunching of it between their teeth, about as the bulldog regards the kitten in its jaws. Their party organ protested against such a betrayal of party pledges. General Harrison protested. We used to search the papers for the protest of candidate-elect for the senate, Fairbanks, but never found it.

The CHRONICLE has preferred to take the view that the republican leaders sacrificed their party from stupidity. Among politicians, stupidity is the deadliest sin, and unpardonable.

IN the city there has been the same incapacity to understand the trend of the times. Mayor Denny realized that the time had come when aside from all other reasons, considered purely as a wise party move, merit should rule in all city appointments. But unfortunately for himself and for the city, he also felt that P. C. Trusler must be given something good, and he gave him the place of controller. And Trusler and his small fry followers have ever since been hostile to the mayor's efforts to reform the civil service of the city. The excellent and thorough rules submitted to the mayor and considered by him and his "cabinet," had when adopted some large gaps where reform had been, and the consequence was Trusler's successful assessment of city employes, discreditable to those concerned in it and short-sighted and stupid on the part of professedly clever politicians and which the party will have to pay dearly for.

WHAT is called party government still affords an astonishing spectacle in New York. The great victory of the people at the election against the worst corruption ever known in this country gave the republicans a great majority. The legislature met, it was supposed, to take steps to rid the people of the corrupt officials, and to so legislate as to prevent, so far as legislative ingenuity could, the recurrence of the evils. But a man, in the express business on Broadway, named Tom Platt, who had been all along assigning places and campaign money to republican heelers, determined that nothing should be done which would interfere with his party perquisites. At a sign from him matters came to a standstill. He talks with Mayor Strong and Strong with him. He talks with Governor Morton and Morton with him. These are instances of the dignified and honest officials who hesitate and falter in the presence of this ill-favored expressman. Tammany police justices remain in office, and the rascally bi-partisan board system seems likely to share the same fortune. As an illustration of what Platt can do, take the request of Mayor Strong, that an amendment be made to a pending bill. "His wishes, in that respect," says Lauterbeck, a Platt henchman, "having been communicated by Mr. Platt to the republican members of the senate, the amendment was promptly made."

ATTORNEY-GENERAL OLNEY (whose Pennsylvania railroad pass the papers report as having been picked up in the White House grounds a few days since), has made a characteristic decision in the case of Postmaster Warfield of Baltimore. The case was fully gone into in the CHRONICLE of last month. The postmaster failed to work in some new men before the President's order including new places in the classified service. First he tried to get them in as watchmen, then classify them and then slip them in where he wanted them. The civil service commission declined thus to beat the law. Then the postmaster claimed that he had in fact made the new appointments on November 1, the day before the President's order although the post-office department did not receive official notice of the removals until November 7, nor of the appointments until November 8. Attorney-General Olney held the appointments to have been legal, and cited the decision of Attorney-General Miller in the case of the railway mail clerks claimed to have been appointed prior to May 1, 1889, the date of the classification of the railway mail service. That opinion was denounced by the democratic press as aiding and abetting the attempt to beat the law. What did Attorney-General Olney say of it at the time?

THE congressional boodle character is well illustrated by the case of Bartlett versus Coffeen in a Wyoming court. Coffeen was a congressman and Bartlett was his private secretary. After both were out of office Bartlett sued Coffeen, alleging that the latter held back $20 to $30 per month of the secretary's salary which the congressman turned over to his daughter and nephew for alleged services but who were in fact attending school. Bartlett further alleged that Coffeen compelled him to contribute five to ten dollars a month to office rent and the hire of a typewriter machine. The ex-secretary was given by the jury $202.50. This is the latest demonstration of the principle, illustrated by a long line of notorious precedents, that public office is a family snap.

READERS of the CHRONICLE may remember that in the December number, considerable space was given to accounts of the furious onslaught of the incoming republican state officers, on the public treasury especially, in the way of working in relatives. At the same time it was shown that several were simply trying to recoup themselves for the large assessments levied on them by their party machine. There was Geologist Blatchley with three important appointments, one of which he gave to his uncle, who had, it was stated, got his nomination for him and steered his campaign. Then there was Coroner Castor, whose greediness was such that his own party had to check it; he turned out two employes to give his sister their job. Then there was Supreme Clerk Hess, whose naïve plans, as reported, filled the newspapers with delight. His place cost him more than $3,500, and he gave jobs to several of his family. It was to be expected that he should regard a public office as a family perquisite. But there was considerable public clamor over the want of reserve and decency, in the onslaught of relatives; and for this or some other reason, one of Hess's daughters was not provided for. We are now glad to chronicle that in March, he turned off the woman stenographer, because he wanted the place for this heretofore unprovided for daughter. Although we all have to pay for it, we hope that the supreme clerk and family, by this thrift, can recover the assessment.

EX-CONGRESSMAN BYNUM before retirement had his son appointed to West Point or the naval academy at Annapolis, we do not recall which. Mr. Henry, his successor, has thrown these appointments within his gift open to competition. This means that lads of republican or democratic parentage, Catholic, or Baptist, or Presbyterian; German, or Irish, or English, or Puritan, rich or poor, populist, union or non-union, free silver or gold monometalist, may compete, and the lad standing the best test for physical and mental qualifications will win. Is not this plan just and respectable and democratic?

THE Indianapolis Journal speaks of Miss Ahern, the state librarian just displaced by the republican legislature after six years of service, as "courteous" and "efficient," having "developed a fitness for the work which makes her retirement a matter for regret." Of the new incumbent it adds that she "will doubtless be equally efficient should she serve an equal length of time." One of the interesting features of the candidacy of the successful candidate was the promise to farm out the several subordinate places in order to get certain votes and the reproaches and criminations that after the votes were got the pledges were broken. Senator Boyd, however, secured a place for his daughter. The legislature finally took a short step towards reform, placing the appointment hereafter with the state board of education.

ONE of the encouraging signs of the times is, that when a post-office employe is removed apparently without cause, it is made public by a home newspaper, and whether or not he gets a fair hearing in Washington, he gets one in his own community. There is no way by which the spoils system can be trampled down sooner. The Evening Herald, of Huntington, Indiana, in its issue of March 18, gives two columns to the case of Wilson S. Bell, a veteran soldier, where, in spite of the appearance of fairness in naming the reason for dismissal and the names of the complainants, there are all the ear-marks of the same old trick of trumped-up charges to get an employe out of the service. County Recorder Nave complained in Washington that Bell had failed to deliver his mail properly; but Bell states that Nave had never mentioned the matter to him. Attorney Kaufman said he saw Bell on December 28 stop while on his route, and in response to an inquiry as to whether there was any mail for the person, search through his "pouch two or three times to find the mail for this person, occupying in the conversation and search eleven minutes." Bell denies this charge, and gives the names of fifty-four people on his route who desired his retention, as a satisfactory carrier. Then last March the postmaster increased Bell's territory, and he writes to Washington that substitutes have lowered Bell's record twenty to twenty five minutes. We can not undertake to judge Postmaster Fulton's conduct on this point, but the "substitute trick" has been very popular, and, we are bound to add, very successful in Indiana, since the offices were put under the civil service rules. One plan is for the substitute to hire an assistant until he has made the needed record for the charges. In this case we suppose he made a "spurt" for the occasion, and he may have been aided by an especially light mail. The post-office inspector, also, plays the rôle he has played before in Indiana. Bell, in his letter of dismissal, is told that he has been given a hearing by the post-office inspector during his investigation of the case, thus complying with the postmaster-general's order; but Bell says he was never notified of Inspector Leatherman's presence, nor was he given any hearing.

Whether or not Bell was a fit subject for dismissal, the Herald has performed a public service in giving him a hearing.

JUDGE HENRY H. BATES and Rufus S. B. Clarke, chief examiners in the patent office, have resigned by request. Judge Bates received his appointment in 1868. It is not worth while to go into the details of his great fitness for the place, because Commissioner Seymour assured him that his record was clear, but he wanted his place. A minor brutality of the event was the request for his resignation as he lay on a sick bed. All the particulars of these removals were given in the Washington dispatches of at least one New York paper. Patent lawyers protested, but President Cleveland never corrects an unjust removal nor resents the basest meanness of his own subordinates in effecting these removals. The hardships and ingratitude connected with such cases appear never to awaken an emotion of sympathy in him. He has always seemed to have an attitude of pitiless stolidity. We all have enough brutishness that familiarity with suffering breeds callousness. Von Moltke, at the first spectacle of a bull fight, turned sick as the gored horse was forced along in the ring after it had stumbled, caught in its own entrails, but the habituated ladies and gentlemen of the audience fluttered and chatted and smiled and saw nothing unseemly. An American President and the ladies and gentlemen who can see unmoved these wanton removals of efficient and devoted employes, after years of public service, show the coarse brutality and indifference of those other ladies and gentlemen.

BOGUS REFORMS.

Mayor Strong's blunder, which now has the appearance of a fatal blunder, has been in his belief that his pledge to give New York city a non-partisan administration was to divide the places among the different organizations that supported him. This belief has resulted in some appointments, where fitness was the sole test as in the appointment of Colonel Waring, as street commissioner, and in other appointments where the unfitness was as glaring. Mayor Strong appointed three excise commissioners for New York. The responsibilities, the temptations and the difficulties of those positions need no comment. He should have selected men whose characters had been subjected to as great tests as these positions will bring and who had come out of the ordeal unblemished. Mayor Strong did this in other instances, and he is not to be excused when he failed here. One position was given to Julius Harburger, as due the Steckler organization for their services in the campaign for municipal reform. Harburger's training for his present position has been—

Clerk in passementerie store.....	4 years
Proprietor of tailors' trimmings store.....	20 years
Clerk of fourth district court.....	10 years

Another appointment was to Joseph Murray, whose business career has been—

Ship-calker	1 year
Drummer-boy (18 years old).....	1 year
Boat-hirer and builder	18 years
Post-office clerk.....	5 years
"Contractor"	1 year
Appraiser's clerk	1 year
Keeper of Castle Garden lunch-counter	4½ years
Builder and building superintendent	2 years
Custom-house custodian	1 year
Superintendent of Chaucey property.....	2 years
"Real estate".....	1 year

To thrust men whose careers have been in such petty lines into the enormous responsibilities, and to stand up against the enormous pressure of their new positions, was not reform, and it was unpardonable. The third appointment to Mr. Woodman was generally commended.

It is interesting to follow the course of the new officers. Harburger and Murray, as a first step, made thirty-five arbitrary removals, giving the impression that their colleague, Mr. Woodman, sanctioned them. Mr. Woodman protested against such precipitate wholesale changes, which would cripple the department. When Murray was asked whether he believed in appointing as many new men as possible, he said: "Don't you think that any man would want to get as much patronage as possible? I guess you would if you were in my place."

The second suggestive episode is the stand of the different commissioners on the attempt to put the appointments under an open competitive test. Mr. Woodman was earnestly in favor of it. In a public interview he calls attention to the kind of men secured by the old system of favoritism, under the ridiculous farce of a pass examination. But his fellow-commissioners united against him. Mayor Strong has shown himself entirely clear-headed; did he know that Mr. Woodman would be from the start the one reform member of the board perfectly helpless as a minority member?

It is such an admirable object-lesson in the way spoilsmen work that we give below the grave and frank scruples against the dangers of the competitive system as expressed by Harburger and Murray, and following that, extracts showing the sort of men, when left to themselves, they choose for the "confidential position" of excise inspector:

I am directed by the board to say that they consider such a step [open competitive examinations] detrimental to the most efficient service. The position of excise inspector is largely a confidential position to the heads of the board, as the commissioners depend upon the reports made by the inspectors for the information to guide their judgment in the granting or refusing licenses and renewals thereof. It is absolutely necessary that there should be on the one side a feeling of confidence in the integrity and fidelity of the inspector, and on the other, loyalty and a personal interest in, and responsibility for, a successful administration of the department. These feelings can not be fostered and the confidential relations established, were the inspectors chosen by your commission solely on the ground of the ability of the candidates to successfully answer the questions contained in the examination papers. The present system [pass examination; i. e., favoritism] allowing this board to select the candidate in the first instance and your commission to ascertain his qualification by an examination, will produce the best possible results, and lead, we believe, to a better administration of the department than could be obtained by selection of inspectors in the manner you suggest.

THE RESULTS.

No. 1 was Baker, real estate, on the bond of Commissioner Murray.

He was reasonably incorruptible, modestly admitting that every man had his price, but he omitted to state his. He did not need to accept a bribe, being, as he said, "well fixed" himself, and as a cigar manufacturer occupied one of his houses, he could get all the cigars he wanted. So he was almost absolutely unapproachable. He took the place, he said, though not asked why, because Mr. Murray wanted him to do so. Of his duties as inspector he had no definite knowledge.—From report of pass examination.

No. 2 was Evers, expressman, in 1879 proprietor of an oyster saloon, taking out a license, later porter for republican collector of the port; in 1894 had a clerkship with republican reorganization committee.

He smokes, chews and drinks, but whether he ever gets drunk or not "depends on your definition of 'drunk.'" He is never "helpless or unconscious," though sometimes he "feels good and sociable."

Beer is his beverage; liquor is only medicine to him. He considers himself beyond temptation. That a bribe of money might ever be offered him never occurred to him till after a severe cross-examination. Cigars, drinks, or presents of cases of wine, etc., he will refuse indignantly. The mere suggestion offended him. Of his duties as inspector he had no definite idea.—From report of pass examination.

No. 3, Callaghan described himself as clerk, messenger, man of all work, and confidential man for the Jesse Hoyt estate. His employers liked him so well they have kept him always by them, hating to discharge him, though, as he said, he had been a kind of a burden to them for three years.

He has known excise inspectors, and from their talk he obtained a very definite notion of the work they had to do, how they go about it, and something of the temptations they have to resist. But he will face all without fear. He smokes and drinks, but does not chew. Sometimes he goes without touching a drop for weeks; then again he takes half a dozen drinks a day. Beer is his preference, but he accepts liquor when the company is such that the influence of good-fellowship is irresistible. At such times he gets to feeling good, "what you would say was havin' a little aboard," but never did he lose an hour from business on account of drink, and only once was he spoken to about his condition. That was last April, two years ago, when he drank two glasses of English ale. Despite this inclination to moderate self-indulgence, he was sure he could stand off temptation. He would not refuse a saloon-keeper's invitation to smoke or drink; he never refused to take a drink or cigar "off any one." This was his first answer. Under cross-examination he decided that he would take nothing whatever from any liquor dealer. It would be better not to be "under a compliment" to any of them, was his reflection. He had a fight once. It was not due to liquor, though. He was a deputy United States marshal at an election. The poll clerk ordered him out, but was unable to put him out, and a policeman was called. The policeman was carried out himself, but he arrested Callaghan, who was not released until after the count.—From report of pass examination.

No. 4 was Smith. After learning his trade he worked at it for the Ingersoll Rock-Drill Company (Wm. R. Grace, he mentioned twice, is the president of that company). After seven or eight years there was a—well, a kind of a strike; it wasn't exactly a strike. The company increased the hours and reduced the pay. Smith was a "shining light" in a little—er—strike. They won that strike, anyhow, and Smith was idle for a few months. He went into the milk business then, but sold out to his partner. (His partner married a rich girl afterwards and hasn't been to see Smith since.) Smith has a blank space in his biography along here, but he remembers getting employment with the Ball Electric Light Company, which has kept him steady for eight years. He is considered a good practical machinist, constructing, running, stationary, dynamos—"most anything in the trade, you know."

Of excise inspecting? Well, he knew an inspector once, but "as him and Smith differed" (in something not specified), Smith did not like to ask about the business. He got some idea from the Lexow investigations and such. Of course, he knew what sort of temptations he would have to resist, and was ready to meet them. He drinks now and then, and might have thought himself under the influence at times, but he wasn't; he never lost consciousness. So he will be all right on that score. He will not drink at all in his own district (excise, not political). If he were "asked to have a glass of beer," he would resent it as an attempt to dictate what he should drink.—From report of pass examination.

No. 5, Graham, made a creditable appearance, showed an appreciation of the duties of inspector and expressed himself in correct language, although he has been self-supporting since he was ten years old.

No. 6, Clayton, has been seven years in the civil service, as consul at Callao, Peru. When he was removed by a change of administration, he returned to Washington, where he "laid around" again for a year, having a good time with plenty of money. Then followed seven years more in the civil service, as consul at Para, Brazil, and another season of "laying around," etc. His appointments were made from Georgia, where he had political influence, though he lived here. Anyway, they were accredited to that state and pegged out. * * * He drinks when he wants to, but is not a hard drinker. He likes a glass of beer at night, now and then, sometimes takes whisky, when he has a cold, for instance. Other things he has drunk at "parties," and though he never was what you would call intoxicated, he has had "a jag on," you know. When a fellow (at a party) gets to drinking champagne, claret, and all that, a "mixture up," most anyone would be knocked out of course. Yes, he has lived pretty high at times, but there are no more temptations in the excise business than in any other walk of life, and he thinks the low salary, $1,200 a year, would not lay him open to those temptations. He didn't know what they were. They were nothing to him, but for other inspectors, he could imagine where they might be and described them pretty well. He would drink with saloon-keepers, if he knew them; otherwise, he would pay for his drinks. He might take a drink from Mr. Stokes, for instance, if he knew him.

He wanted the position for the salary. His long service in the prime of his life at the consulates had left him unfitted for any business, and while he had many friends among business men, they could not very well employ him themselves. He is out of employment now, and does really desire very much to be passed.—From report of pass examination.

No. 7, Steinberger, a traveling salesman, was voluble and quite indescribable in the space we can give. He thinks that having talked and criticised, and found fault as a reformer with the city government as heretofore administered, he should now take an active part in the reform administration.

No. 8, Franklin, a barber, has maintained a shop for fourteen years, and unless a man who thinks of buying him out comes down with his price, he will keep the shop going under his eye, even when an inspector.

Nobody ever seen him under the influence [of liquor]; nobody can claim he ever was. So there are no dangers or temptations in the business "that he supposes of." A man who would take a bribe is unfit, in his opinion, to be an excise inspector, and an offer of even a cigar, manifestly intended "to make him feel good to the saloon-keeper," would be refused by Franklin, who at first could not imagine why bribes should be offered a man in the position he aspires to.—From report of pass examination.

No. 9, Commissioner Murray sent to the local examining board of the state civil service commission, yesterday, a man who had to be refused an examination under the rule excluding all persons connected with the liquor business within two years. The candidate told the reporter that he had talked his case over with Mr. Murray, and that they had agreed he might get through.

No. 10, Schulz, a brickmason, twelve years with one firm.

Of the excise he knew almost nothing, only what he had picked up, such as a liquor-dealer can't sell to minors and children under age or to drunkards who have too much aboard. He himself doesn't drink only a glass of beer now and then, never anything stronger, because of sickness. He was never under the influence or had too much. So the temptations of the excise business can't tempt him in any shape, manner, or form. He is not aware of there being any temptations in the business particular except what he has read in the papers. He has read of bribe-taking by bribe-takers, but he will refuse anything but a cigar and he won't take a cigar either. Why anything should be offered him he couldn't see.—From report of pass examination.

No. 11, Dryer, Commissioner Harburger's candidate made such voluble disclosures as must have given the commissioner an irritating half hour, as he read the summary of the evidence. * * * Is now in the United States weigher's office. More light came, however, from a statement he began without invitation and was not permitted to finish; it was to the effect that he had worked hard in the late election in his district for ———. Besides that, he is a laborer in the weigher's office at customs and acts as tally-keeper, keeps tab on things, you know. He can make a living there at $2.50 a day when he works, but he wants to have a rainy day some time, you see. So Mr. Harburger thought this (inspectorship) was just the thing—yes, sirree. Mr. Harburger told him about the duties; Dryer wasn't agoing to go it blind—no, sirree. And he got a little book, too, so he was prepared for the examination, though if you put it another way he had not prepared or consulted anybody, except that he didn't want to go it blind—no, sirree, no, sir. He got some points from a saloon keeper friend of his—an acquaintance, that is, you know. But really as for that he didn't need to ask. He is pretty quick to see a thing; he can tell a man when he is lying to him, for instance, pretty near every time. Yes, sirree, he is well posted; well, in fact, he has looked up the majority of subjects. Say, he had a stationery store uptown, and do you know, he read so much in his own books he failed? that is—well, yes, he failed. But it was partly because he hadn't enough capital and went out a good deal. Judgments? One from that time, nine years ago. That was a wrong; he had some ink in the store down in the basement and it froze, and you know what frozen ink is—well, it froze and was no good anyhow, all water, and Dryer offered to compromise on it. Drink? No, sirree. It don't agree with him—no, sirree. If he drunk a glass of whisky, he would think that he was the king of Germany or something. Once he did; but he wasn't drunk, he was sick; that was at a wedding. Of beer he drinks a pint, about, a night. It's the same as whisky, with pea soup; he can't go pea soup, neither—never could; his daddy is the same way. A cigar he enjoys at all stages, you bet. Temptations? Well, there may be some for a jackass, but for him? No, sirree, sure. Could he get any other work? His daddy would give him a job at this minute, but in his business there is too much work.—From report of pass examination.

No. 12, Rinn, a street car conductor, another candidate of Commissioner Harburger:

* * * That companion to him got him to leave there and they both went to work for the New York Elevated Road. (Here he gave some history of elevated railroads.) He was store-keeper and operator for the road, till the consolidation, when he lost his place. The companion to him went with M. H. King, who was (all about Mr. King), to the south to work on the Gulf and something road. (Here a short history about the road.) Well, that companion is a manager down there, and he wanted Rinn to go when they started off. No, he didn't, that's so. He became a ticket-seller and operator for the "L," four or five years, and then got a hankering for to be telegraphing again, as the saying is. You see, when a man has done a thing once, he—well, he—as the saying is—. To tell the truth, yes, he was discharged just once. It was at the time he got to hankering for the, as the saying is—the time when he left the "L." He was discharged on the grounds of sticking to a man. It was this way: One night after being quite wild, there (on the station) the gateman come on intoxicated. Rinn, who was ticket-seller (this was after the roads was consolidated), thinks, thinks he, he could do the man a kindly act, and so he helped him along. The gateman, drunk, as the saying is, was laying on the bench, when he (Rinn) seen the inspector coming. Rinn attempted to warn the gateman and to get him up off'n the bench, but him and Rinn had a little scuffle, and the inspector seen it, and asked Rinn if the man was drunk, and Rinn said, "No." It was a lie, but it was said in kindness. Anyhow, Colonel Hain asked the gateman if he wasn't drunk, and he said yes; and then Rinn was asked, and, not knowing what the gateman had said, he told the Colonel no, and he fired him. That was the story of Rinn's life, and he told it all frankly after he was started on it.—From report of pass examination.

No. 13. Not reported.

No. 14, Levine, a law clerk: He had no knowledge whatever of his duties as an excise inspector, expecting to find out afterwards. * * * There are no temptations for him in the excise business accordingly, not even money or cigars. He was positive because he would not run the risk of being caught. He would not like to run the risk of dismissal, or be under a saloon-keeper's obligations, because the saloon-keeper could report him to the commissioner.—From report of pass examination.

No. 15, Feldman, born in Roumania, a real estate broker:

He don't prepare for this examination; why should he? Humph! it is a non-competitive examination, isn't it? Why should he prepare for? He has been studying up the law good, being closely attached to his brother-in-law, who is a lawyer with a law office and a law business for some time. Um, hum. He has a good memory, but he relies chiefly on his great good sense and his good sound judgment. No, he don't remember what judge naturalized him, but it was in 1887. He came here in 1879, seventeen years after he was born in 1860. Isn't it more than seventeen years? What? What did the examiners mean? Humph, he told them once it was seventeen years, and that's right. But if he was born in 1860 and arrived here in 1879, wouldn't he have been nineteen years old when—? Ach! No, sir; why? He told them how it was the right way, his way was right, humph! * * *

When he resumes the office of inspector will be time enough to know anything about the duties. Why should he inquire about them now? He won't have to be told much. He educated a man already once in business, and has during the course of his education learned to rely on his own dictations, his own senses, and his good, sound judgment, which knows what the duties will be. His duty as an inspector is to fulfill his duties so as to make a good official. He understands the excise department has been run at a disreputable name, run very corrupt. Blackmail is outrageous; in fact, it is very bad, very, very, very bad to take bribes. They would knock him out from fulfilling his duties in his good judgment. Yet he spoke only as to his own personality to whom it would be no enticement. There may be temptations for others, may be, may be so. He don't drink never. He has been out with high merchants who drank, but he did not drink. If anybody offered him a cigar it would be because he would reciprocate, and he wouldn't. He has treated a man when he has sold him a line of goods what will do him a benefit to buy. But not in this business, if he passes to it, no, sir.—
From report of pass examination.

No. 16, Maddox, a book-keeper, furnished nothing in his examination upon which a fair judgment of his qualifications could be based.

No. 17, Gibney, as described, was a healthy, clear-eyed and modest, and honest appearing, trackman, but his illiteracy was such as should bar him from the position.

No. 18, 19, 20 and 21 are stated to have been interesting, but the New York Evening Post was unable to report them.

No. 22, Glover, a floor-walker, "could think of no temptations in the excise business." Whence he came and why he sought the position the examiners did not ask.

No. 20, H. B. McAllister, one of the applicants for an inspectorship under the new excise board, whose original examination was not reported in the Evening Post, was recalled by the local examining board to answer a few supplementary questions. The opportunity was favorable for a glimpse at another man whom Commissioner Murray has traveled much between here and Albany to have saved from competitive examinations. They certainly would work a hardship to such men as No. 20. He "never had no perticklar trouble with spelling in letters," but at school he did. He was always nervous and couldn't spell words he knew. That was probably the reason he made some peculiar blunders in his recent examination. Being reassured and given another chance, he spelled adjutant, which he had written "edjerton," a-j-, no, a-d-j-t-n-t. Yes, he had been in the army, with the Ninetieth Pennsylvania Volunteers and knew what an adjutant was. Curiosity he lettered curisty, or to try again, q-u-r-i-s-t-y, no, c-u-r-i-o-s-t-y. Eligible he made with more assurance e-l-i-d-g-a-b-l-e, but he was given the word in syllables and corrected it to e-l-i-g-a-b-l-e. Gallery, according to McAllister, is either g-a-l-a-r-y, or g-a-l-e-r-r-y. He is nervous about definitions, too; indictment means untouched, corrected, and asked for indict, he said it meant a person guilty of a crime.

The candidate was born at Philadelphia, December 21, 1839, but is only fifty-four years, in his written statement, unless there is some misspelling somewhere. His address is No. 354 East One Hundred and Twenty-first street, and he is a salesman by occupation. They cut down commissions in his business here lately, so it don't pay, so he wants a change.

THE RECENT MAYORALTY ELECTION IN PHILADELPHIA.

No great city in the United States opens to the student of the cognate problems of civil service reform and good city government, a richer field for research than Philadelphia. Such students should make our city of Brotherly Love, at least a temporary resting place, as the scientist would the coast of Zanzibar, if that distant and desolate region furnished peculiar or unique advantages for observing a planetary transit, or a total eclipse of the sun. Philadelphia has just experienced what to a superficial observer might be considered a total eclipse of these principles which reformers hold to be "generally necessary" to "political salvation." The results of the recent election have been such that some of us ruefully rub our heads and ask "where are we at?" But our keen scientific spirit can not be blinded to the fact that the collision, whatever harm we have suffered by it, has strewn the ground with the richest kind of specimens. These we propose to pick up and analyze for our own future enlightenment, and for the present edification of reformers whose educational opportunities are less liberal than ours.

It has been a running fight for reform all winter, and a careful examination of its various phases during the whole season will, I believe, show more gain than might at first appear to one who stares simply at the 61,000 machine majority which the official returns have announced as the result of the mayoralty election.

The republican machine, which has so long controlled Pennsylvania and Philadelphia, is a very perfect machine after its kind, and one which has steadily increased its power of late years, owing to the practical belief of many of our "best citizens" that the Ten Commandments and the Golden Rule should not be allowed to interfere seriously with personal financial gains, and that municipal should be rendered subservient to national interests. Consequently an appeal to moral standards has been answered at the polls, especially those in the city of Philadelphia, with a distinct negative. Senator Quay, with his moral conviction of speculation with state treasury funds, Charles A. Porter, whose great fortune has dated from the time he began to monopolize city contracts, and David Martin, whose skill as a defrauder of the ballot and as a corporation lobbyist has made him in his sphere pre eminent, are the most powerful and conspicuous machine leaders. The financial disasters that have been felt all over the country, and most severely in this manufacturing community, have had immense influence in tightening the grip of the machine. Morals must go by the board if the slightest yielding to them means lee-way for the wicked democrats. The bosses were not slow to see and to seize their opportunity—the tidal wave majority of 80,000 at the autumnal elections promised all needed margin. Quay had his own candidate for mayor to whom he had promised Philadelphia—Mr. Boies Penrose, a young and able man, a graduate with high honors of Harvard, but schooled wholly in Quay methods, and whose personal course was reputed to be contrary to good morals. The bosses, Porter and Martin, were opposed to his nomination, for his backer, Magistrate Durham, was a rising star who presaged their decline. Quay, Penrose and Durham believed that they could carry their point without serious trouble, as they almost wholly controlled by one influence or another the newspaper press with the exception of the Philadelphia Ledger and the Call. The municipal league openly opposed Penrose on his public record, which they showed to be that of a Quay lieutenant. But this fact would have had small weight in all probability, as the community's conscience does not seriously trouble it on that score of Quay politics. But a very serious undercurrent of opposition that grew swiftly lava-hot began running on the personal morality question. Whether this really burnt into the quick of our Philadelphia conscience, it is hard to say—so non-reverberant has that monitor become when it fears an unwary palpitation may reduce the bank account—probably it did, but under any circumstances it alarmed the rival bosses, or they cunningly affected to be alarmed, so that they dropped the slated candidate, taking at the last moment on the eve of the convention Mr. Charles F. Warwick, the city solicitor. And hereby hangs a tale, or a trap. Mr. Warwick's name was among a dozen others published on yellow posters by a few reformers when the Penrose opposition was at its height, as good names to substitute for the objectionable candidate. Many reformers signed this circular, and many did not. Most of the proposed candidates' names on the circular were very strong; some were thought by the knowing ones to be very weak. Warwick was among the latter. His selection as the mayoralty candidate by Porter and Martin, and his imposition upon a convention which the night before stood ready to give Penrose a large majority, produced intense irritation among the Quay-Penrose faction of the machine. Quay publicly denounced Martin for his treachery on the floor of the United States Senate, as the lobbyist of a great corporation, who had defended his action on the ground that his masters had forced him to it. It was intimated that Warwick would be knifed at the polls—a threat that was not fulfilled—and that an investigation of corruptions in Philadelphia which would destroy his political sponsors—Porter and Martin, would be instituted by the state senate—mere play of summer lightning which brightened the political horizon for an hour and made it ominous with distant thunder mutterings; but no real electric flashes followed since, as the rival bosses pertinently explained, bolts of that kind might run zigzag back and forth tearing uncontrollably other reputations than those aimed at. The reformers were divided: some were in a strait between the steep rock of the yellow poster, to which in haste they had given their names, on the one side, and the steep rock of the tariff on the other. But what was the real objection to Warwick, if any could be alleged? The other wing of the reformers, some of whom were in sincere doubt for a time what course to pursue, took the ground that while they brought no specific charges against Mr. Warwick personally, he was too closely associated personally and politically with two dangerous men—Porter and Martin—to be capable of destroying their power and of exposing the ramifications of corruption which were known to exist throughout the city government. He belonged to that class of candidates who are especially to be feared, whose freedom from too obviously objectionable points, accompanied by a virtual acquiescence in machine rule makes them a safe screen for the bosses to work behind. The most apparent public need of the city at this juncture was investigation, exposure, the complete destruction of that life-centre of bossdom which creates and more or less completely controls the entire machinery of the city, from the ward-heeler in the most obscure corner of a division, to some judges upon the bench.

The democratic party offered Philadelphia a candidate who, individually considered, is the strongest man in political life to be found in the state—ex-Governor Pattison—the strongest in purity of public and personal character in the measure of service he has rendered both the city and the commonwealth, and in his grasp of public questions. He served Philadelphia twice as controller, instituting reforms of which the benefits still linger; the state twice as governor, protecting the treasury and other public interests man-fully against the surreptitious or open attacks of spoilsmen, who, emboldened by the almost unbroken and unlimited power of the majority party which spawned them, needed the restraint of a strong hand. Governor Pattison's letter of acceptance upon receiving the mayoralty nomination, was perhaps the boldest and most satisfactory civil service and municipal reform utterance that any candidate has offered any American city. The sincerity of his promises was generally believed by his enemies as by his friends, for his character and record were their guarantee. It was this very belief that he would do what he said, and give a non-partisan administration—rewarding every man according to his work that made the opposition to him so bitter. The democratic leaders, however, were clearly warned by some of the reformers most favorable to Governor Pattison, that in their belief republican party feeling was so intense, owing to business depression, that he could not be elected. It was suggested that either an independent republican must be nominated on a non-partisan basis, or at least a democratic business man. The advice was not acted upon. Possibly the result would have been the same had it been. What were the causes of the overwhelming defeat which the reform cause received? Many causes conspired to produce it, but the essential one, to the minds of thoughtful and experienced men, were not far to seek. The campaign was fought with spirit and along the lines of legitimate argument and appeal to public policy by the Pattison camp. The corruption of the city councils—a claim admitted by all—the domination of the department of public works by corrupt contractors (the stench of the great scandals of the Queen Lane reservoir was at the time poisoning the air); the enormous increase in the city's expenditure with continuance of inefficient city work; the police and fire departments used as political machines—these and similar matters were dwelt upon as evidences of the need of a complete change. The republican machine attempted practically nothing in rebuttal, but appealed constantly to party prejudice and passion. Their argument in substance was, elect Pattison mayor of Philadelphia, and all over the country will go the disastrous news, "The democratic party has carried the stronghold of protection!" In vain was it urged, on the other hand, national and city affairs must be divided if you would purge your city of the thieves that are devouring it, and if you would free your national party of the corruptions that weaken it. In vain were citizens urged to follow the example of New York. The party passions and fears were too strong to be resisted. The ring controlled nearly all the newspapers of the city, whose columns joined in attack upon Mr. Pattison and his associates, which in mendacity and indecency went beyond any thing which the city has witnessed for years. But the evidences of interest manifested in the reform cause during the campaign were so great, the attendance of meetings was so large and of so thoughtful a character, that, as the campaign drew to a close, the reformers thought their chances of winning were fair, and many well-informed regular republicans admitted that the election would be a close one. The announcement that the machine ticket had won by 61,000 was a profound surprise to both sides in the contest.

There is one very significant point which should be noted: David Martin, the republican boss who managed the campaign for Warwick, boasted on the morning of election, that he would give his candidate 60,000 majority. His prophecy was fulfilled almost to the letter. Under some circumstances prophecy is easy. There can be no doubt that fraud played a large part in the result. Martin's methods are known to be wholly unscrupulous. The Philadelphia Ledger accredits him with having raised $60,000 from assessments upon employees of the city departments. The election machine was largely in his hands; the lower order of regular democrats are extremely venal; among the negroes and foreigners in the lower part of the city repeating is known to have been rampant and unchecked all day long. The indifference of our "best citizens," in such dangerous abuses when they aid their side in a contest is a discouraging though natural feature of the situation. But some of these are a little nervous over the unwieldy bulk of their success. They wish their victory had not been so decisive. All the worst councilmen from whose hands the stains of corruption will "not out," were triumphantly elected. One of them, whose personal life had been so shamelessly indecent that clergymen and good women made a special effort to defeat him, found his desk loaded with lilies of the valley and maiden-hair fern, a floral tribute which his admirers bestowed upon him, apparently oblivious of the keen satire upon his feelings which its delicate purity suggested! Then, too, our immense unused and unusable Queen Lane reservoir—a suggestive monument to corruption, for which the city has paid $1,000,000, and in the construction of which, it is claimed, she will lose at the least $250,000—remains. It is our Philadelphia Sphinx, which, if interrogated rightly, may reveal much that is of public interest.

The civil service provisions contained in the city charter here have been rendered almost wholly nugatory by the manipulations of the politicians. This they have not found it hard to do, since the rules formulated by the authorities charged with the execution of the laws have been contrary to the spirit and intention of the act.

But notwithstanding the overwhelming reform defeat, which in our opinion was mainly due to the belief of our people that national interests rendered it unsafe to give the slightest aid and comfort to the democratic party, "the end is not yet."

Since the election the Civil Service Reform Association has taken vigorous steps toward the prosecution of cases involving the political assessment of office-holders. Two of the defendants in these cases are republicans and one a democrat—a fortunate defense to the association against the charge of partisan bias, which would doubtless have been made had all the accused belonged to the dominant party. The defendants in the hearing before the magistrate were bound over to appear before the higher court. The evidence is considered to be strong against them.

If the reformers' view of the real situation in Philadelphia is proved by events to be the true one, the great victory of the machine will prove its calamity in the end. The present moment is not wholly encouraging for reformers, but, as was suggested in the beginning, it is a fruitful time for research and observation. Let us possess our souls in patience.

SPECTATOR.

HOW THE SPOILS SYSTEM DEFEATS THE WILL OF THE PEOPLE.

BY REV. W. H. KAUFMAN, HULL, IOWA.

Probably the greatest bar to "a government of the people, by the people and for the people," is the present system of the distribution of offices as rewards for party services.

The first thought is apt to be that this system affects only, or at least mainly, the appointive offices. A moment's consideration, however, will show that the blasting effects of the spoils system fall chiefly on the people through the elective officer. The primaries are the vital organs of the body politic. Let us see how they fare under the spoils system.

A preliminary canvass for nomination is going on. The people pay very little attention to this. The candidates for nomination and their personal friends are the sole movers. To secure a nomination at a congressional or state legislative convention, a candidate must have his friends out at all the primaries and secure the right "delegation." The really honest man, who will neither take nor give a bribe, who will get nothing from the office but the bare salary, can afford to spend very little in "fixing" the primaries. Not so with the spoilsman. Being corrupt, he is willing to spend, if need be, in hope of a bountiful harvest from the corporations which he will pluck once he goes to the legislature. But really, he needs to spend very little, except his traveling expenses. He comes to our city, "sees" the editor and says, "Now, of course, I don't expect you to work for me for nothing; but when we elect our president, I will see that you are appointed postmaster." He "sees" another influential worker and says, "If you will help me out, when I get to Washington I will see that you are appointed collector of internal revenue for this district." To another he promises his support for a consulship, etc. I have known a specially unscrupulous candidate to promise the same office to several persons—"After us the deluge." In this way he visits every city and town of his district, "fixing all the faithful." All the papers that are corruptible are suddenly filled with the praises of Candidate Spoilsmonger, and the "boom" is "on." The people are indeed somewhat surprised that so great and good a man should have lived so long in the district without being better known. His virtues (many and great, as all the papers aver) do seem to have the marks of the tailor's goose, as though they were fresh from the shop, and not marred by long usage; but is there not a worker or two in every neighborhood, interested, unknown to the people, in securing the nomination of Candidate Spoilsmonger, more especially, this also unknown to the people, in securing thereby the appointment of Uncle John or Brother Will or Cousin Joe, as postmaster or consul or bank examiner.

Now how much on an average does a congressman have to distribute in this way? There are over 250,000 offices in the national civil service. About 47,000 are filled by competitive examination, leaving some 200,000 as "spoils" for defeating the popular will. If each office draws on an average $750 salary, we have $150,000,000 annually as a corruption fund wrung from the people but used in defeating the will of the very persons who pay it out of their hard and scant earnings. Setting aside $50,000,000 per annum as the perquisites of the President and senators we have $100,000,000 for the 356 congressmen. Of course it is not divided equally, for the party that wins the presidency gets all. This party may or may not have a majority in the house. Last fall there were elected 244 republicans, 104 democrats and 8 populists. Of the 356 congressmen, therefore, only 104 will be distributors of spoils. Of even these there are quite a goodly number who are at "outs" with the President over his financial policy and so get no patronage. Probably not to exceed 80 congressmen distribute the $100,000,000 annual corruption fund. This is an exceptional case. Perhaps 150 congressmen will be about the average. This will give each congressman of the dominant party $666,666.66 official salaries to be given at his will each year. The uncertainty amounts to very little, for every one who has had anything to do with fighting the lottery vice knows that the average man's decision is governed vastly more by the size of the prize than by a calculation of his chance of winning it. For instance, the Louisiana Lottery Company advertises "$1,000,000 in tickets will draw (specifying the various prizes) a total of $535,000." Yet otherwise sensible men do, by the thousand, put up their money knowing by the very advertisement before their eyes that the chances are two to one against them. So that to win this prize of $666,666.66 the partisans put up vast sums out of their own private property. Many men will take an office as reward for personal service who would be above taking cash, and as a men will work for a $2,000 office as hard as for $2,000 cash we have Candidate Spoilsmonger going about our district with (for his two years) $1,333,333.33 of public money in his pocket to divert the course of public opinion to his own advantage.

Is it any wonder that the corrupt man is usually elected? Would it not be a wonder if the more corrupt should fail of election? Is it any wonder that Candidate Bribe-giver is suddenly transformed into Congressman Bribe-taker? Is it any wonder that congressmen get suddenly rich on a salary of $5,000 a year? Is it any wonder that the third house, the lobby, is really stronger than either of those elected by the people?

"What is the remedy?" "It is nigh thee, even in thy mouth and in thy heart; that is the word of faith which we preach." Take all these offices out of the hands of the spoilsman and fill them by open, competitive examination.

We have done this with reference to some 47,000 offices. We must finish the work so well begun. There is no other nation in Christendom which spends such vast sums in enslaving itself. Till 1853 England was as bad or even worse, but to-day only some twenty appointive offices are dependent on legislative elections.

Not only are our congressional elections corrupted by this vicious spoils system, but our state elections at well.

This may be made perfectly plain in a very few words.

At each presidential election there are put up, as grand prizes, offices whose salaries amount during the four years to $600,000,000. Some idea of the vastness of this sum may be had from the fact that it is $100,000,000 more than the total assessed value of the personal and real property of the state of Iowa in 1887! To secure this vast sum but one thing is needful—the election of our "candidate" as President of the United States. With so vast a stake the campaign never ceases. "The king is dead. Long live the king," is antiquated. Now the cry is, "the republicans will carry the next election; but we must carry the one six years hence." What means the constant change from one party to the other and back again, only that the people feel that neither one truly represents them? To carry the presidential election there must be complete organization. Not only the states, but every county, city, ward and precinct, must be thoroughly organized, and kept organized. Eight hundred men voting "wrong" in New York state a few years ago, turned the $600,000,000 from one set of vampires to another. "Patriotism?" Pshaw! Spoils.

Now this perfect organization can be had only by carrying all the local elections possible. The spoils system feeds on offices as the jackal feeds on offal. Tammany could not live a month without several thousands offices, and half as many million dollars in salaries. Besides there are the United States senatorships, and all the state offices. These of themselves would not suffice to keep up the organization, but they help along the campaign, which needs to be kept up in order to win the $600,000,000 national offices. So we find that in the pettiest local issues of road-master, pound-keeper, and pig-driver, we have to fight this horrible contagion of bribery and official corruption. For must not these little men be kept in line, and "helped out" between-whiles if they are to fight for their over-lords at the quadrennial elections? No feudal lord could hold his retainers faithful if he deserted them in their little quarrels after they had fought hard for him in his great battles. So the "machine" grows till it "fills the earth." "To the victors belong the spoils"—among brigands and American politicians!

That we have not drawn the picture too dark, hear Senator Ingalls, late president of the United States senate: "The purification of politics is an iridescent dream. Government is force. Politics is a battle for supremacy. Parties are the armies. The decalogue and the golden rule have no place in a political campaign. The object is success. To defeat the antagonist and expel the party in power, is the purpose. This modern cant about the corruption of politics is fatiguing in the extreme. There are men in Kansas who would get up at midnight and ride forty miles to do me a favor, and I want to give them some of the good things we have won."

A free and independent press is to day a necessity in a republic. Daniel Webster said that, in destroying a free press, golden chains were as potent as shackles of iron. Yet I have a list of 450 editors who were appointed to office as postmasters by President Harrison. Besides these, a large number of editors were given lucrative and hitherto honorable positions as ministers and consuls. I have not kept a record of this administration.

It is idle for members of the reform parties to hope that their candidate will do better. The fault is in the system. Under this system, more and more, the worst man will be elected. We have simply the choice of either destroying the system, root and branch, or else having two immense Tammanies under whose tyrannies we will eke out a miserable existence. It places a premium on corruption. The candidate who makes most profuse use of offices will be nominated and elected.

No man, not even our multiple-millionaires, can afford to put $600,000,000 into a campaign. Yet we, the people, do, every presidential election, put up this vast, almost inconceivable sum, and practically offer it to the most unscrupulous candidate for our own enslavement. How, then, can we pretend to be surprised that American politics is such a dirty pool that the man in the moon holds his nose as he passes over it.

Is it any wonder that American politics is a by-word and a hissing among the nations of the earth? Our local and state governments spend about $500,000,000 annually, and they are all drawn into line and used by the omnipresent "machine." Reformers and independents may carry an election here and there, but the bulk of the salaries of all local offices goes to one or the other of the great machines. This is the tap-root of the intense partisan feeling which every reformer has to fight.

To get "our man" in as President, and "me" in to help him distribute spoils, seem the highest ambition of the "practical politician."

UNITED STATES SENATOR MURPHY'S MACHINE.

It is the exemplified work of a desperate and hitherto resistless political machine, so adjusted, organized, and run as to enable individuals in the name of the democratic party and in defiance of law to overthrow government and thwart the rights of suffrage. This machine is an organization composed of professional politicians, having a recognized, acknowledged and responsible head, and operates through democratic election officers and other outlaws supported by a police department and a police force obedient to its dictation. This organization known as the "Murphy machine," approves, rewards, and protects its tools, and thus perpetuates its power.

The process known as "repeating" is accomplished by persons not entitled to vote, going through the city singly, or in bands, voting in the various districts on the names of legally registered voters. A sergeant of police, an ex-president of the common council, a member of the detective force, are samples of the official positions held by those who escorted and guarded those criminals in the commission of their crimes. In rare instances those aiding the repeaters claimed to be republicans, but they are what is known as "Murphy republicans," a class as much distrusted in Troy as the Murphy democrats themselves. They are on the board of police commissioners, on the police force, and in other states, an abject submission to Murphy is the apparent price of their appointment. Their chief value lies in their pretended affiliation with the republican party, for democrats can be found in abundance to commit crimes; the need is to find men who will do vile service, and at the same time, by professing republicanism, place part of the odium upon the republican party.

The cause of this revolting condition in Troy is what is known as Murphyism. Decency in politics seems not to have been known in recent years in that city. Under this machine a system so degraded and rotten has been created and fostered that no person who has not actually heard the testimony could believe that a condition so appalling and corrupt could exist in a civilized and decent community. The republican party is in no way responsible for this condition, but some individual members of that party are responsible. Year after year Murphyism has gained strength. One republican has surrendered himself for office, another for business advantage, another through fear of cajollery, until scores of prominent republicans who were willing to trade their principles for personal advantage are now serving as Murphy republicans.—From majority report special senate committee to investigate Troy elections, March 6 1895.

The most appalling danger threatening the church, the community, and the individual is that of the permanent division of religion, patriotism, and morality.—Bishop Potter.

POLITICAL REMOVALS.

The appointment of John Desmond to be collector of customs for the port of Fall River caused some surprise when the news came to-day, though it had been given out that the President would appoint by April 1.

Mr. Desmond was visited by a number of friends who offered him congratulations.

Mr. Desmond succeeds Capt. James Brady, Jr., who, if he had served until July 31 next, would have held the office 30 years.

Capt. Brady was first appointed by President Andrew Johnson on July 31, 1865. Capt. Brady is 64 years of age. He served as lieutenant and captain in the late war and at Winchester lost a leg. A few years ago he was removed from the custodianship of the custom house, which office was given to ex-Postmaster Whitehead, and when Daniel D. Sullivan succeeded Mr. Whitehead, the custodianship was added to the postmastership. A year ago, Secretary Carlisle called for Capt. Brady's resignation. The captain's term of office expired Sept. 10, 1894.

Mr. Desmond was backed by ex-Mayor Coughlin and Postmaster Sullivan and Hon. John W. Cummings and his application was indorsed by Josiah Quincy.

When asked about his appointment to-day Mr. Desmond said:

"I have been feeling indifferent about the matter. I knew that Capt. Brady's resignation had been called for and that an appointment would have to be made and permitted my name to be used as a candidate for the place."

Capt. Brady learned the first news of his successor's appointment from The Boston Herald correspondent. He had nothing to say for publication.

Mr. Desmond will have the appointment of a deputy collector, with a salary of $1,600, an inspector at $1,200 and a boatman at $300. The collector's salary ranges from $2,500 to $3,000.—Fall River dispatch, Boston Herald, March 21, 1895.

The fight over the appointment of postmaster at Elizabethtown, Ky., was settled to-day by the President appointing F. M. Joplin to succeed Mrs. Emily Todd Helm. The retiring postmistress is a sister of Mrs. Abraham Lincoln and was appointed by President Arthur twelve years ago. Congressman Montgomery has been active in the fight, and before congress adjourned succeeded in securing the appointment of Mr. Joplin, but the senate refused to confirm the nomination. Since then efforts to remove Mrs. Helm have been made and charges of misappropriating fuel and other things intended for the use of the post-office to the amount of $100 have been made against her, and a post-office inspector named Arrington visited Elizabethtown and made an investigation. He reported to the department, but the officials having charge of the matter refused to divulge the contents of his report.—Washington dispatch, New York Times, April 8.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

The spoils system inevitably leads to public corruption, treacherous and unsafe administration, and the ultimate foundering of the ship of state.—From Archbishop Ireland's address: The Duty and Value of Patriotism, before the Loyal Legion April, 1894.

VOL. II, No. 27.

INDIANAPOLIS, MAY, 1895.

TERMS: { One dollar per annum.
10 cents per copy.

Published monthly. Publication office, No. 23 N. Meridian St., Indianapolis, Ind. Address,

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND has made another important transfer of places to the classified service. This order embraces the eighteen chiefs of division of the department of agriculture, the employes of the bureau of animal industry, except temporary laborers, and it also embraces statistical agents and messengers in the weather bureau outside of Washington. The extension includes over five hundred places.

THE reform system in the federal service may be regarded as thoroughly established; it can not be overthrown, and with the labor service system and the fourth-class postmaster system, will finally embrace all the subordinate places. Contention had practically been reduced to fighting Carlisle and Olney who, although with present powers of harm, are rather small beer. In view of the great opportunity and great need of Mr Roosevelt in New York, it was time for him to leave the commission. In New York he is hampered as no man ever was by Platt-Tammany laws. The country is watching to see what he will accomplish.

THE reorganized civil service commission now consists of Mr. Proctor, of the late commission, and two new appointees. It is well known that Mr. Roosevelt gave unstinted praise to his colleague, Mr. Proctor, and Good Government in a position to know the workings of the commission thoroughly, says he is of unflinching courage, and has Mr. Roosevelt's own frankness and is as pronounced and sound in his views. The other members are Colonel William G. Rice, of Albany, N. Y., who was once private secretary to David B. Hill, and who is reported to have said:

"President Cleveland has always had my support in his determined efforts to improve the government service. In common with every thoughtful citizen I recognized the importance of the work, and I am in heartiest accord with all intelligent endeavors to promote a just, courteous and skillful transaction of public business."

We shall very soon have opportunity to discover what Commissioner Rice means by "intelligent endeavors to promote a just, courteous and skillful transaction of public business." The third appointee is a republican, Major John M. Harlow. He has been connected with the postal service for thirty years, beginning as a postal clerk. He was promoted to be the postmaster at St. Louis by President Harrison and stood at the top as an admirable and efficient officer. President Cleveland, in spite of his fine record and fitness, did not retain him. The selection can hardly fail to be excellent.

The Washington correspondent of the New York Evening Post says:

One of the best tributes that could be paid to a retired postmaster was once paid to Major Harlow by a prominent democratic officer of the post-office department, in the hearing of the present writer. Said he: "Not only did Postmaster Harlow do more with the money given him than any other postmaster who served simultaneously with him—as the books of the department will show—but when he recommended a carrier for dismissal, every one knew that the man must go, for Harlow would not have marked him for discharge unless there had been the best of reasons. Of course, when the present democratic administration came in, every act of his in this line was most rigidly scrutinized. But it was found that, no matter what were the politics of the accused employe, Harlow was absolutely fair and knew just what he was doing. If proofs were wanted, they were always forthcoming on demand, and perfectly sustained each other. Several attempts were made to procure the reinstatement of men whom Harlow had turned out for drunkenness, disobedience, dishonesty, or something of that sort; but so invariably did the cases prove Harlow's justice and good sense, that it was not deemed necessary to examine the papers in such cases any more—they were simply dismissed as not worth wasting time upon."

THE reference elsewhere in this paper to a Massachusetts bill making it obligatory to give soldiers places regardless of fitness brings up the question which most people ask themselves, but do not dare to ask publicly, how much further this soldier demagoguery is to be carried? Were the services rendered in the war which ended thirty years ago a matter of patriotism sold and not paid for? If so, when will the payment be complete? We venture to say from actual knowledge that it was not a sale of patriotism. Commencing years after the war, a scheme of bribery and corruption has been worked out which originated with political demagogues and a class of soldiers known everywhere in the army as "dead beats." Sound and healthy principles in the granting of pensions have been departed from and disregarded until the fact of drawing a pension is in the public mind no evidence of disability or even of faithful service. In the same manner all sound principles of preference for public employment are constantly sought to be disregarded. A preference after competition showing a standard of merit is the utmost admissible extent. But such preference as is now proposed in Massachusetts is degrading to the soldiers and is corrupting and demoralizing to the last degree.

PLATT'S best thoughts: "Strong I know very little about; he was president of a bank; he has broken promises all around. If he were to run for mayor this fall he would have a big defeat. Morton has not satisfied me. Quigg was almost mutually brought up by me and by the Tribune newspaper. President Harrison, like many men I have had an understanding with, did not keep his word. My luck in sustaining public men has often been adverse. I expect to control the next state convention."

THE CHRONICLE continues to give much space to New York. This is because that place is just now the center of the fight against the spoils system. Nowhere else at present can such useful lessons be learned, whether of the insolent impudence of the boss or of the pitiable weakness of the respectable citizen elected to office, or of the irresistible march of reform, though hampered on every side, when in the hands of a capable officer, who knows only the law and the public interest.

MRS. DAVIDSON, the state librarian, elected by the late general assembly by a combination in which votes were given for promises of under places, is about to make another move. She has notified the janitor, Michael O'Brien, who has held the place since the new capitol was finished, to leave June 1. She will give the place, which pays $60 a month, to her son. Truly, when we look at the doings of the chosen, who came into office in Indiana on the great republican reform wave of 1894, it seems that public office is a family snap.

THE late Congressman Bynum at the end of his term nominated a young man for the naval academy. His candidate failed in the physical examination. Mr. Bynum, however, although out of office, has induced the naval authorities to override the report of the physical-examining board and the disqualification has been waived. It would be difficult to find a more vicious exercise of a pull. It saps the very foundation of army and navy discipline. Words can hardly be found to fitly condemn a secretary of the navy who permits such a cheat upon the public service. He should understand that this district got rid of this unspeakable demagogue for just such work as this. In sharp and healthy contrast with this is the action of Congressman Henry, of this district, and Congressman Johnson, of the Richmond district, in opening all such places to competition.

CARRIER AMBROSE HAMLYN, of this city, was arrested for larceny, and was held on his own recognizance, giving a bond for one thousand dollars, which he has forfeited. Hamlyn's case is an interesting illustration of "politics" in the administration of the civil service law. He came in under the civil service rules, six years ago. Postmaster Wallace found him a substitute, and promoted him to be a regular carrier, ignorant, he stated, of his bad character. But after this was made known to the postmaster Hamlyn was not dismissed. His pull was that he was the son of the most active republican leader and manager in his township. His case was mentioned in the CHRONICLE of June and July, 1889.

It is stated that an employe of the public printing office at Washington has been dismissed for writing and publishing in an Arkansas paper, over his own name, an article advocating free silver in which he called the President "a grand old rascal," and said "he is as full of perfidy as a snowball is of water."

The Administration has doggedly for years now been appointing such fellows as these to public office through favoritism, in spite of protest because they were the men of certain congressmen. Since it has followed this course, it would naturally be expected to bear as much from them as their fellow-citizens have had to bear in such appointments.

MAYOR SWIFT, of Chicago, said at the dinner to celebrate their great civil service reform victory, that "Eminent citizens of the city of Chicago importune me daily to take care of their father-in-law or a brother-in-law or a son-in-law who is not worth a dash or something else. Every day since I was sworn in I have had from 700 to 800 and perhaps 900 people at my office on one errand—patronage."

There is nothing more unaccountable and disgusting in the whole shameless spoils business than the notorious fact that rich people and distinguished people become as common and vulgar as the begging tramp at your back door in their quest for places for needy relatives. They haunt the offices, write letters, they beg the influence of their friends, and they are not ashamed as they pass their hat for alms. It would not be strange if those whose hard struggle to live had coarsened them should bring themselves to the mortifying necessity of asking the public to assist them in the support of their needy and helpless relatives; but when well-to-do people do so it is a sure sign of loss of personal dignity and of patriotism.

PHILADELPHIA is to have an unmuzzled paper, City and State, published weekly, by Mr. Herbert Welsh. A modest weekly, even with a moderate circulation, but which, without fail, week after week, prints the facts concerning the bosses, their henchmen, their jobs and their secret respectable backers, will finally leaven the great lump of boss-ridden, conscience-ridden Pennsylvania.

THE printer's employed in the postoffice branch of the Government printing office have petitioned the national civil service commission to place them under the rules. There is no question more vital to working men than the one of the merit system. It means not only honorable employment honorably obtained for a large number of them; but it means even more to their children.

THE Buffalo Express, in reciting why the superintendent of the New York state prisons should be removed, says Danemora was given to a henchman of Boss Murphy, whose incompetence was notorious, and cites the scandal connected with the escape of Bunco-Steerer Tom O'Brien; the warden at Sing Sing was a Hill politician whose drunkenness became such a scandal that he was forced to resign. Warden Durston, of Auburn, later of Sing Sing, had a record of taking the prison guards from their duties to attend Hill caucuses, which they ruled by brute force, throwing out bodily the anti-Hill democrats who sought to vote. While Durston was engaged in this political work, a revolt occurred among the convicts, who had been left insufficiently guarded, and several escaped. The superintendent of prisons took no notice of this conduct, except to promote soon afterward the warden who had been guilty of it.

The above is an illustration of spoils politics. It would seem no manifestation of mental crankiness to say that such a system was to be abolished in any honorable way; and that to clever-minded convicts reasoning upon their condition the irony of being under such influences must be considerable.

But hear now the shallow pates in high places. Ex-Postmaster General James, whose son-in-law, Postmaster Pearson, of New York, was killed by the cabals and tricks of spoilsmen, is reported in an interview in the Cincinnati Tribune of May 17, as saying that Robert Lincoln should be the next republican candidate for president. He goes on to say:

"I saw Bob Lincoln in London, and suggested the presidency to him, but he smiled and said he was not a candidate, but, of course, that was modesty, and he would accept. I remember that, as he said farewell, as we were starting for home, he put his hand on the carriage, shook hands all around, and then exclaimed: 'Good-bye, God bless you all, and d—n a mugwump.' That was a sentiment, roughly expressed, which alone ought to elect Bob Lincoln."

A civil service reform mugwump, the only sort in the province of THE CHRONICLE, is a man who says, for one thing, that prisons maintained as roosting places for the henchmen of bosses is so indecent that his immediate duty is to do what he can to stop it, and in his opinion his best way is to so vote or not vote as to make the tenure of bosses of whatever party name unstable. When Robert Lincoln damns this sort of man, however courteously, he indicates his own unfitness for any important part in these times. If we remember correctly it was Minister Lincoln who, in response to the orders of the boss as an humble party man, wrote at a critical time a letter for Boss Quay's candidate for governor, Delemater, whose defeat hastened his financial collapse with the blemish on his reputation.

LAST month THE CHRONICLE gave a long description of the sort of men, as shown by themselves, the excise commissioners selected for their pass examinations for inspectorships. The commissioners were very solicitous and fearful of the harm to the public service should these places be left open to competition. Mayor Strong appointed a working majority of Platt commissioners, and Platt inspectors followed. The state civil service commission, which also has two good Platt men on it, waited till the positions were filled and then applied the rules.

A republican comptroller in Brooklyn, N.Y., said, not long ago, at a public dinner: "As a partisan in my office said, I say now: To the victors belong the chestnuts, and if they do not take them they are — fools." He was defiant and jocular, but he has already come to grief and anger and there are many interested spectators of the comptroller whose chestnuts have become too warm to handle comfortably. He no sooner got into his office than he removed twenty old clerks, most of them experts; five had been in office fourteen years, two for seven and six years respectively; for these places he took twenty-three green men. In another class he removed eight out of eleven men who had obtained their places through competition. Then he dismissed the clerks of the board of audit; of these four were veteran firemen. He was as busy at Albany in trying to obstruct the civil service law as he was at home. He ran his course for four months. Judge Herrick has now decided that a long list of his appointments since January 1 have been irregular. He will now have a busy period trying to collect salaries for his irregular appointees.

THE Newton Civil Service Reform Association of 310 members has held its annual meeting, and in the course of its summary says that Secretary Carlisle alone, in the cabinet, seems to willfully trample upon the rights of the people by the frequent appointment of notoriously unfit persons to positions of high responsibility in recognition of party work. This is a mild statement of the situation.

AT the recent meeting of the Washington Civil Service Reform Association, Comptroller Eckels in his speech heartily indorsed the civil service reform idea, and characterized it as the enforcement in public business of the rules that govern in private affairs. The old idea was that public office was public plunder, and a man who obtained a position believed that he was to forget the tenets of common honesty. Civil service reform had made its way into the affections of the people, and was now a definite principle in practical politics. Mr. Eckels instanced the recent election results in New York and Chicago, where cleanliness in politics as applied to the candidates was the chief consideration. The people of the former city, he declared, had been disappointed, the man whom they elected to preside over municipal affairs having officially approved a measure which the men who elected him did not believe should prevail. Mr. Eckels said he personally had known senators and representatives to recommend lately for important positions men whom they would not intrust with their own financial affairs.

AS FURTHER illustrating the point stated in THE CHRONICLE last month that the far-sighted politicians everywhere were demanding civil service reform as of paramount necessity for the preservation of their party, a recent protest from Buffalo to the New York legislature against a bill introduced to cripple and kill the civil service law, contained the following officials and heads of departments of that city:

commissioner; W. S. Bull, superintendent police; G. F. Zeller, fire commissioner; William N. Smith, fire commissioner; Jacob Davis, fire commissioner; George S. Gatchell, commissioner public works; James Mooney, commissioner public works; Charles G. Pankow, commissioner public works; Mark S. Hubble, city clerk; S. J. Fields, chief engineer, bureau of engineering; Ernest Wende, health commissioner; Frank C. Laughlin, corporation counsel; Philip G. Meyers, superintendent of building; Peter Drexelius, water superintendent; Erastus C. Knight, comptroller; Thomas F. Crowley, city assessor; A. H. Beyer, city assessor; E. P. Murphy, assistant chief of fire department; Adam Rehm, superintendent of poor; John S. O'Shea, superintendent of streets; Charles B. Wheeler, chairman civil service commission. I concur in the representations made in the above original. Charles F. Bishop, ex-mayor.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

IN these later times it has fallen to the lot of few men to render their country such important services as those rendered by Mr. Roosevelt as a federal civil service commissioner, which place he has recently vacated. His entrance into the commission marks the turning point between doubt and certainty as to whether the great modern methods of administrative reform were to endure for this generation, or were to be broken down and left for the indefinite future to revive. Public morals had become so thoroughly corrupt that it was taken on every hand as proper to expect the most flagrant and stupendous perversion of the public service to personal and party profit. The original reformers planned well. The federal civil service act of 1883 will always be a monument of statesmanlike sureness and simplicity of remedy for one of the greatest evils that ever existed in any government. But when the remedy came to be applied, grave mistakes were made. Part of the early commissioners were small politicians, while the reformers on the commission committed the fatal blunder of standing hat in hand and with obsequious attitude in the presence of insolent Gormanism and blustering Voorheesism. The critical moment came with the first election of Mr. Cleveland, when the law was shaken to its foundations in the determination to wreck it. The long struggle which followed is well remembered. The reformers of Indiana and Maryland seemed to stand alone in sounding the alarm; and it may be said without boasting that in the four years of steady defeats, without a single victory, they never once lowered their arm. In the election which followed, treachery to the law had its weight. Then came Theodore Roosevelt, a man who knew the value of a blow between the eyes. Order began to appear out of chaos. The commission was no longer afraid. Publicity took the place of secrecy. Fair play to competitors, regardless of politics, was made the first principle. Senators and representatives went staggering from a contact with the commission, and the tricks of heads of offices to cheat the law were dragged into the daylight. The people like a man who is not afraid. They watched the brave contention and the merits of the cause appeared to them, and an educational process spread over the country, the result of which is seen in the present general desire among the people for the reform system in all public business, national, state and municipal. This is what Theodore Roosevelt has done for his country. He is the only man of the Harrison administration who has won permanent national fame and the value of his work will grow in estimation the further we get away from the system of transacting public business upon the principle of "addition, division and silence," which prevailed for generations.

LATE NEW YORK HISTORY.

It has been the purpose of this paper to use the facts scattered here and there of boss government, to mass them, to arrange them so as to convince as far as facts will convince, what a degrading bondage it is, and of what infinite variety are the fetters manipulated by these bosses to suit the particular weaknesses of the people whose help they need. Nobody who has skimmed the facts can doubt that the partisan bigotry of the men who call themselves good citizens is the main bulwark of the boss.

New York city is an object lesson on an immense scale of every phase of the bondage of a band of bosses. As was happily said, for their purposes they wear nommes de guerre. Croker and his band are called Tammany, and Platt and his band call themselves republicans. In respect to booty they are rivals, sometimes outwardly foes, but always ready for private understandings and deals. If the existence of either is menaced, for each is essential to the other, they combine in their underground work, and so far they have been invincible. Any amount of space is worth while to chronicle what they do, how they work and the efforts put forth from time to time to get from under their yoke.

Since the last issue of the CHRONICLE a turning point in the last and greatest struggle was met, and nothing can be gained by concealing that the elements for good government suffered a Bull Run.

The struggle centered in Mayor Strong. He met the critical moment of his career and of the city's, and succumbed. He had a great opportunity to redeem a city that had made a noble effort to free itself, and he betrayed the trust. It is an imputation upon his capacity to believe that he did not fully understand his action. It was the old story of sacrificing the municipality on the plea of the necessities of national politics.

As has been stated in this paper, on the authority of a leading republican organ not only of New York but of the country, the New York Tribune, Platt owns the legislature. They went down to New York weekly and received their orders from this czar masquerading in plain clothes and in a humble express business. The governor of the state met him in an effort to gain his consent for legislation. The following is a specimen news item:

"Edgar B. Jewett, mayor; James E. Curtiss, police commissioner; Charles A. Rupp, police

The next caller was Warner Miller. He spent a half-hour with the governor. Afterwards he said: "I don't know what the prospects for harmony are, but I hope they are brighter."

No one doubts for an instant that Platt never intended that Tammany should be crushed; their fundamental objects are identical. The reform legislation mapped out as vital in any plan to free New York from democratic Tammany would also free New York from republican Tammany or Platt. This legislation Platt at the very start said they should not have. He had to meet and break down a foe formidable from numbers, character and professional, business and social distinction, and behind them a public sentiment united and enthusiastic. The Committee of Seventy prepared the needed bills. They advocated them at great mass meetings. They had as champions a large part of the press. Bosses like Platt always work under cover. The work is stealthy, unwearying and dirty. Platt began by using his subsidized state press; covert attacks on Dr. Parkhurst, to discredit him in the state and weaken the sympathy for his work; appeals to local prejudice that the efforts of the Committee of Seventy in New York were factional fights to split the republican party; criticisms of the reform bills and the cunning introduction of substitute and utterly inadequate bills to divert and divide public opinion; endless sly tricks of Platt dummies in the legislature; delays, threats, punishments of any member who gave signs of breaking loose; a perfect understanding with Tammany members always in reserve to vote under Platt's directions in an emergency. This has been Platt's fight for four months. His vital point was a bi-partisan police bill to undermine the reform bill, which repudiated the bi-partisan features. Platt's bill was recently passed by his legislature, signed by Mayor Strong and Governor Morton. It only tightens the fetters already on the city. It makes the bi-partisan feature compulsory. Of it, one fearless and unfettered member of the assembly, Pavey, said:

A bi-partisan board means, of necessity a government by deals and mutual concessions between the men who compose the board. It has always been so, and must always be so. Every appointment, promotion, trial, or discharge will have some political complexion. Every man on the force knows that he is on the force, and will be kept on it and promoted only if he has "influence," or "pull," or "backing"; or, in other words, if he is an unscrupulous and serviceable partisan tool of some small politician. From the time of his appointment to the end of his term of service he has continual notice that he must serve the political power which appointed him or incur its displeasure and be punished and degraded therefor.

And of the flimsy excuse which Mayor Strong gave as his reason for signing the bill, that the bi-partisan feature is necessary to prevent fraud at elections, he said:

It has been charged, with good reason, that elections have been dishonest in the city of New York. But the fault has not been in the control of the police department. We have had, for years, at least one republican member upon that board, and it is a matter of common knowledge and public record that his career was as bad as that of any of his Tammany colleagues, and that he was no more to be trusted with the task of securing honest elections for the republicans of the city and county of New York than the worst representative of Tammany Hall on that board. There can be no explanation of this except that he had found it to his personal or political advantage to make a deal with the Tammany police commissioners and carry out their plans. But attention should not be diverted from another situation, and that is this: No man doubts that if in a given election district there was one honest, conscientious, and courageous republican inspector of elections, that the election could and would be conducted honestly and the result correctly counted.

The method of appointing inspectors of election has been and is as follows: The republican leader of an election district sends to the republican county committee the names of men proposed as republican inspectors, ballot clerks, and poll clerks for that election district. These names are submitted to the board of police commissioners by the republican county committee, and the men thus named are appointed by the police commissioners as such election officers. The men thus named and appointed have qualified and served, and the illegal registration, the illegal voting, and the false counting have gone on under their eyes, have met with their approval, and the returns have received their signatures.

This has been so from the simple reason that in certain districts the leaders of the republican party who were in command of the machinery of the party in those districts, and who proposed the names to the county committee, and through the county committee to the board of police commissioners, had made their bargains and deals with Tammany Hall and nominated only men whom they knew they could rely upon to carry out those deals; and yet it is these very leaders with whom Mr. Platt has chosen to ally himself to control the party machinery of New York city. These are the leaders who unite with him in the cry to the republican voters of the state that their majorities can only be protected by the preservation of bi-partisanship in the police department. There is where the responsibility has rested in the past, and will rest in the future if the proposed Lexow bills are passed.

Public opinion beat vainly against Platt's legislature as against a mountain of rock. Up to the last Mayor Strong was looked to to save the results of a contest so desperate that it had finally touched the best of American citizenship. Public opinion then beat upon him. At the hearing before him required before he should sign or veto the measure, Joseph Laroque spoke for the Committee of Seventy; Seth Low, president of Columbia College, spoke for the Civil Service Reform Association; Dr. Parkhurst, for the Society for the Prevention of Crime; J. H. C. Nevius, for the Confederated Good Government Clubs; Geo. L. Rives, for the City Club; Theodore Sutro, for the German-American Reform Union; L. J. Callamen, for Good Government Clubs. Civil Service Commissioner Watson, said the bill under consideration violated the pledges of the Committee of Seventy and its candidates with reference to civil service reform. Mr. Hallett spoke on behalf of the religious press.

"Mr. Low reminded the mayor of the meeting of the citizens of New York to protest against the proposed legislation. Three issues were presented. The question of good faith was first. They demanded that all positions in the city should be under the civil service. That was the demand of 154,000 voters last November, who placed the present mayor in the chair. The pending bill as it affected the police department in taking away true civil service reform was in absolute opposition to the platform of the committee of seventy which these 154,000 people voted for. The second question was that of good local government. No law could be for the benefit of good government the opponents of which had twice filled Cooper Union. Any bill which pretended to give good government to the city of New York could scarcely be effective in that direction unless it had the support of the citizens.

"The other question was the message from the city of New York to all over the country. Was it bi-partisanship? That was no new thing. The message should be that New York was willing to return to the first principles of the national government, when the fathers of the republic decided to place one man at the head of every department and thus place the responsibility upon him.

"Mr. Low then went into the history of bi-partisanship, and declared that good government could not be maintained unless politics was absolutely divorced from the police department.

"In conclusion President Low said that so long as the bi-partisan board existed Tammany easily had control, but just as soon as Tammany had absolute control of the city then came the overturn, and not because of, but in spite of, a bi-partisan police board."

Dr. Parkhurst said:

"When it comes, however, to the matter of the principles that are involved, we do not consider that you are free. I say it as courteously as emphatically, that the matter of deciding upon the principles which shall determine your action does not lie within the jurisdiction of your own choice. I am not here to burden your attention, or complicate the question by the discussion of technicalities; but there are certain governing considerations that stand forth very conspicuously in the public mind, and that worked with great potency in the animated months of last autumn.

"You can neither make nor repeal those considerations; those considerations made you—that is, they made you mayor. I am not obliged to theorize upon the matter. It is not presumption in me to say that I know what was in the minds of the voting citizens on the 6th of last November. I know what motives and expectations constrained them to give you their suffrage. I am speaking now of the people. I don't know what the politicians thought. We didn't hear anything from them until the votes had been cast. Nothing but plunder in sight can reach the springs of their eloquence. But the people were borne upon a tide of intense and intelligent opinion. They wanted you to be mayor, and they knew why they wanted you to be mayor. We were all tired of partisan politics. The city had been politics-ridden. The city was wearied and nauseated with it, and had risen up in revolt against it. The evils which the society for the prevention of crime had been unearthing, and which the investigating committee from Albany had brought out still further into the light, had had their roots in partisan politics, bi-partisan politics, just such bi-partisan politics as a non-partisan mayor is now asked to indorse, and add the dignity and authority of his official name to; just such bi-partisan politics as whole halls full of native Americans, Germans, Hebrews, Bohemians, Italians and Poles were concertedly scorning six months ago.

"All that was needed to arouse such audiences to tumultuous applause was to tell them that what we needed in New York was a city government that would wash its hands clean of republicanism and democracy, and that you, sir, was the man that would do it. That was the argument that we used in your behalf. That was the plea that we trumpeted from the Battery and the Hook to Harlem. That was the conspicuous plank in the platform you were elected upon. * * *

"When they voted for you they believed they were voting for a man that would lead them out of the wilderness of political complications and partisan bargaining, and who would show toward that whole nefarious business a face of flinty uncompromise.

"For you to approve the bill in question would so far forth be a recognition and an acceptance of the principle which your election disowns, and which your constituency dissents from and abhors. * * * But when the people elected you they meant by it that you were going to stem as with giant hand the tide of dickering politics with which for so many years we have been inundated, and that your own administration was going to be an unflinching protest against the intrusion of national issues into municipal concerns. * *

"Bi-partisan means partisan twice over. If you set one republican partisan over against one democratic partisan you do not rub partisanship out, you rub it in. And that is why the advocates of this measure want it.

"The object of this peculiar kink in the bill is not to get rid of partisanship, but to furnish soil for as big a crop of it as possible. That is why they have put the bi-partisanship into the police commission, instead of separating the election bureau from the police department and putting the bi-partisanship into that. They dodge the issue and attempt to disguise their small trick by dressing it up in the millinery of fair play. * * *

"But, furthermore, any action of yours looking to the establishment of national issues as a fixed and necessary ingredient in our municipal life is not only out of joint with the platform upon which our campaign last autumn was conducted, and in seeming discord with the spirit of your October letter and of subsequent spoken utterances of yours, but it would be just as plainly out of place with the present movement of the popular mind.

"There is, not only in this city, but throughout our American cities generally, a strengthening appreciation of the fact that the intrusion of national issues and party discriminations into municipal administration is a nuisance and an impertinence. That feeling is coming well to the front. Our own city has been making a tremendous contribution to that result. Men of national reputation in both parties, and who are as distinctly partisan in national interests as they are the reverse in municipal ones, have by their recent pronounced utterances in this city, exerted a pressure in the direction of municipal emancipation that we should be disappointed and pained to have you do anything to neutralize."

Against all this the only speaker for the bill was Platt's man, Lauterbach—Lauterbach, who on April 4th issued a manifesto for Platt in which he accused Mayor Strong of having broken pledges to Platt. We quote a small portion of that very remarkable document, which admits among other things Platt's ownership of the legislature, to show the fetters that Platt says he riveted upon Mr. Strong before allowing the republican county committee to support him. Mayor Strong has always declared that he was a free man, only pledged by his public utterances and by the platform which he has since betrayed:

At the conclusion of the interview [with Platt emissaries] one of the gentlemen remarked: "Col. Strong, you are a gentleman, an honorable man, and would accept no favors at the hands of any one without realizing the obligation you are under, and we will trust you as a man of honor to treat us fairly and honorably after you are elected." He said: "That is correct; you can trust me; I will not forget my obligations."

It was then agreed that, if his name was presented by the Committee of Seventy, the republican county committee would accept and recommend it to the county convention.

These interviews, which, in their detail, go to even a greater extent in their expressions of loyalty and their promises of co-operation than are here indicated, were immediately reduced to writing by Messrs. Murray and Patterson, and their correctness certified to by Mr. Phillips who was present.

Upon the strength of these assurances and pledges, Messrs. Murray and Patterson, with their associates, at once went to work to put the organization in line for his nomination, which could not have been accomplished under any other circumstances.

Everybody in New York except Mayor Strong recognizes his surrender. The most lenient supposition is that Platt, through his subsidized press and bought legislature, finally convinced the mayor that the republican party of the state demanded that the sacrifice of the city of New York was necessary for national purposes. It is an old story, but it is, all the same, worth hearing again in all its particulars.

We will briefly allude to the fate of two more bills. From time to time this paper has collated facts regarding the more notorious biographies of the police magistrates of New York, with specimens of the justice dispensed by them. All who have kept at all informed of the facts revealed by the investigations and the newspapers, must have realized that to put the helpless poor and criminal under such judges was to inflict shocking injustice. One of the reform bills introduced into the legislature was to give the mayor the power to remove these men. There were fifteen, and of these twelve were Tammany men. Mayor Gilroy's last important appointment was that of Deuel, a Platt republican, and it was generally believed to be the result of a deal with Platt. The criminal records of several of these justices had been printed in daily papers; several were the associates of thieves and green goods men; more were ex-saloon keepers with shady associations. Platt and his legislature delayed and maneuvered to kill this bill unless Mayor Strong should pledge himself to Platt as to the vacancies. Not until Governor Morton's special message to the legislature, saying if they failed to pass the bill they would violate the pledges upon which they were elected, did they weaken. Then these Platt henchmen, not disguising their disgust and chagrin, and reviling the bill, passed it.

There was another reform bill to purify the school system of New York. Assemblyman Pavey, whose plain speech against the bi-partisan police bill is elsewhere quoted in part, was the champion of this bill. Tammany gathered itself together for defense. It mustered its Tammany teachers, who hooted and yelled down the speakers attempting to explain the reform bill. In the legislature Platt's men gleefully punished Pavey for daring to oppose their boss. On Tuesday he denounced Boss Platt's bi-partisan bill; on Wednesday Platt's man, Lauterbach, put the knife into the bill by having enough republicans unite with the Tammany members to kill it.

No one can be indifferent to this spectacle in New York. Its condition is only the perfect flower of the spoils system under perfect conditions for its development. The effort to free itself through a struggle on so large a scale as to be set down as a great historical event, is like other struggles to be freed of bosses. The rise and fall of its mayor, though deplorable for its paralyzing influence on the fight, is the rise and fall of many a man who has seemed the one to lead a people out of the wilderness. The one question now is, will the Committee of Seventy be able to maintain its lofty purpose, to hold fast the enthusiasm and patriotism and carry on the struggle for another two years?

PAYN—LOBBYIST AND PLATT HENCHMAN.

Mr. Louis F. Payn, in a snuff-colored sack suit, a silk hat and with a clean-shaven face, save for a white chin whisker, walked in the senate chamber at 10 minutes to 8 o'clock. His hands were shoved down in his coat pockets, his cigar tilted up an angle of 40 degrees, and his patent-leather shoes finished a conspicuous make-up.

Then he sat down in a corner, and very soon Senators Coggeshall and Mullin were in close conversation with him. When Chairman O'Connor came in, he walked up, shook hands with Payn and said, "How are you, Lou?" * * *

Mr. Payn, with his cigar still lighted, and with a grim smile on his face, next took the stand. He was asked if he knew of the firemen's bill and the exempt firemen's bill. He said in response: "The bills came to my notice through Captain Burns, who said he represented Chief Bonner and wanted the pension bill defeated. After the bill was defeated, Capt. Burns offered me $1,500 or $2,000 for my services and expenses; but I refused it." * * *

"What has been your business for the last 25 years?" was asked by Mr. Raines.

"Paper making, brick making and tin making, and I regret to say I own a newspaper."

"Did you ever take any interest in politics and in legislation?"

"Oh, yes; I have been interested in elections for 25 years, and in election of speakers, senators and that sort of thing." (Laughter).

"Have you been interested in political machines?"

"Yes; if you call them that now." (Renewed laughter).

"You were interested in a machine in your own district?"

"Well, ——— I have been charged with it." (Laughter).

Mr. Raines then went into the charges made against Mr. Payn in 1869, and Payn declared that one Van Valkenberg had retracted his statements made then and hostile to Mr. Payn, and on his affidavit the committee that convicted him had retracted their decision of conviction for bribery and that he was, therefore, exonerated.

These papers were filed at Washington when he had applied for the position of United States Marshal, and he had been after them for several days to present them at this investigation. They would be filed with the committee. The then President, U. S. Grant, had considered the affidavits, and he had been appointed United States Marshal at the instance of such men as Roscoe Conkling, Gov. Fenton and others.

"Every prominent republican in New York," he said, "that I thought worth having, indorsed me. There were no mugwumps or goo-goos in those day." There was a roar of laughter at this, but Payn never smiled, though Mr. Quigg and Mr. Root laughed heartily.

He detailed his friendly relations with Conkling from the day Conkling had him appointed and confirmed, until the day Conkling died.

Asked if he ever belonged to the Platt wing of the party, he said: "The charge has been made, and I never denied it."

"How has Mr. Quigg been known?"

"Until recently he was with the same side as I am on, but lately he has tried to break down the party."

Explaining his presence at Albany, he said that at no time or place did he have any money transactions connected with legislation. But he was employed by corporations and others, and had also watched political legislation closely.

Then, during the rustle of anticipation in the audience, Mr. Root took the witness in hand, and the first question he asked was:

"Do you have a house here?"

"Yes, at No. 228 State street. I have lived there since the Delavan burned."

Witness said he had been coming to the legislature more or less for 20 years. He stated that he was present at the legislature during 1868 in the interest of Jay Gould.

"What corporations do you serve here?" asked Mr. Root, sharply.

"I decline to answer," he said quietly.

"What sums of money do you receive from these corporations?"

"I decline to answer."

"How much money do you get for a retainer?" questioned Mr. Root.

"I refuse to answer," said Mr. Payn once more.

"I appeal to the committee to compel the witness to answer," said Mr. Root.

"The committee," said Senator O'Connor, after a pause, "thinks Mr. Payn must answer."

"With all respect," said Mr. Payn, "I refuse to answer."

"The stenographer will note this refusal, and the committee will report Mr. Payn's attitude to the senate," said Chairman O'Connor.

Mr. Payn was next asked about his bank account, but he showed great ignorance, and did not know whether his firm had a bank account or not.

Witness said he owned about $60,000 of stock in the Hudson River Broken Stone Company, but he never saw their checks and did not know about their bank account. He had not received any dividends from any of the enterprises he was in.

"How have you lived, then?" asked Mr. Root sharply.

"Oh, I have my income from corporations," answered Mr. Payn with a smile.

"Did you ever get $10,000 from one corporation?" asked Mr. Root.

"Yes; from Mr. Gould," replied Mr. Payn.

Witness said that of the $10,000 he got $5,000 from Mr. Thompson in New York and $5,000 from Mr. Gould at Albany.

Mr. Root then read from testimony before the senate committee that inquired into the relations of Mr. Payn with the passage of the so-called Erie bill in 1868. In this connection Mr. Root said: "What was your business then?"

"I was harbor-master in New York and my salary was about $350 a month."

"What other business had you?"

"Well," drawled Mr. Payn, "I was playing the street pretty high, if you call that a business," and there was great laughter.

Asked how he served his clients, he said that he talked with senators or assemblymen on pending measures from his view-point, pointing out the merits or demerits of the bills.

Payn finally said that he received eight or ten regular annual salaries, but declined to say from whom.

In answer to questions about politics, he said: "I am engaged in politics in my own county and in Mr. Root's also."

"What part do you take in New York politics?"

"Well, I advised against the nomination of Strong." (Laughter).

When the cross-examination was over, Mr. Payn volunteered the statement that Mr. Gould came to him after the investigation was over and apologized for his testimony and gave him an additional check of $10,000, and ever afterward was his personal friend. "In 1881 he told me to buy Western Union stock," said Mr. Payn, "and it netted me quite a sum of money."—Albany dispatch Buffalo Express, May 9.

EDITOR GRENELL'S CIVIL SERVICE EXAMINATION.

IN the May issue of Good Government may be read in detail a modern instance of one of Mr. Roosevelt's neatest flayings. Editor Grenell, of the Detroit Evening News, thought he would take a civil service examination and then "expose" the commission, the questions and the system generally. He unfortunately chose to compete for the position of assistant statistician for the department of agriculture, and his standing was a fraction less than forty-four, which was really a very excellent record for a newspaper man to attain in a technical service entirely dissimilar from his own work.

Mr. Grenell was satisfied with his marking, but for the purposes we have indicated he wanted the markings of the other candidates. The civil service commission supposing he was a bona fide candidate under their rules declined at first to give the other standings, and in the course of the correspondence Editor Grenell rushes wildly into rash statements, in answer to which Mr. Roosevelt has many times before demolished the loud and ignorant foes of the merit system.

A part of Mr. Roosevelt's reply to Mr. Grenell, which so far as we know the latter has not yet printed, entertaining as it is, in his paper, is as follows:

You say that "a glance at the papers prepared for the examination proved the impossibility of my (your) attaining a sufficiently high average to pass. Indeed, I (you) feel sure the civil service commissioners themselves could not pass, and I (you) know that two thirds of the present members of the President's cabinet would 'fall down' in the attempt." Evidently you do not understand the purpose of holding special examinations for special places. When we hold an examination for assistant statistician our aim is to get a man who is an assistant statistician, not one who is a civil service commissioner or a cabinet officer. It would be a proof of the incompetency of the commission if it framed an examination for assistant statistician with a view of having cabinet officers and civil service commissioners pass it. The commission holds examinations for all kinds of positions. For instance, we hold them for the position of assistant astronomer. Do you mean seriously to imply that when we hold an examination for astronomer we should make that examination one which the average cabinet officer could pass? It would be a mere chance if any member of any cabinet was fit to be an astronomer, or, for that matter, an assistant statistician. I do not suppose that any member of the present cabinet, or of the cabinet of Mr. Harrison, would be fit for either of these positions. I know that no member of either cabinet would be as fit for statistician as the man who was appointed under the assistant statistician examination. In your own case, as you bring the matter up, your examination showed that you were entirely unfit to hold the office you sought. Doubtless you are an admirable newspaper editor, and you may be fit for much higher work than that of an assistant statistician, but you are not fit for that particular work, and the commission would have been to blame if it had framed an examination which would not have emphasized the difference between the man who was competent to be an assistant statistician and one who was not competent, no matter how good this latter individual might be in some other line of work.

You say the questions are not practical, and instance one of the questions in reference to a geometrical problem as having no relation to the subject-matter in hand. This shows that you do not understand what the work of an assistant statistician really is. As a matter of fact, many statistics are illustrated by geometrical figures and problems. This is the case with the work now actually performed by the assistant statistician in the department of agriculture. So you see that the question was all right. It was your lack of understanding of the subject which was to blame.

You say that a boy fresh from a high school could get 80 to 90 to his credit, and that any one could cram him up so as to pass after a fortnight's work. Again you are completely in error. The average age of those passing our examination is 27 years. Instead of being fresh from the high schools, the men have been out of them at least ten years on the average. The man who stood at the head of the list in the examination you took, and who received the appointment, was 43 years old and was already a computer in the United States coast survey. Remember that you are only theorizing on the subject, while I am speaking from a thorough acquaintance with the facts of the case. As a matter of fact the persons who get office under us stand higher in every way than those appointed under the old methods, and form an exceptionally intelligent, honest and able class of employes. In our own bureau we have more than fifty men employed. They all came in under our own examinations, standing at the head of the lists, and it would be impossible to get, in public or private employment, a better corps of men than they are.

None of the men who were coached for this [assistant statistician] examination passed. I have given you the particulars about the man who stood highest. The man who stood second was 38 years old, and had been a statistician in the census bureau. The man who stood third was 26 years old, a post-graduate student of Cornell University, and afterwards private secretary to a member of congress. The man who stood fourth was 24 years old, and was a Fellow in Political Economy and Sociology of the Chicago University. The man who stood fifth was 29, and was an accountant in New York. He had formerly been an instructor in statistics in the University of Chicago. * * *

It may interest you to know that the secretary of agriculture chose the highest man on the list, and informs us that he is the most satisfactory man in statistical work that he ever had, and that after the appointment had been made he received a letter from Mr. Edward Atkinson vouching for the remarkable capacity of the man in the very lines upon which we tested him, and for the very business in which he was to be employed. The secretary of agriculture said he thought he was the best man in the United States for the position. You thus see that in this very examination of which you complain, the man who passed the highest was the best man that could have been found anywhere for the position. The examination was eminently practical in character, and no man who failed to pass it could be considered competent for the position.

The next time Editor Grenell tackles Theodore Roosevelt he should spend more time in preparation and he should not elect to compete for the place of assistant statistician in the agricultural department.

DETROIT has for years been conspicuously lethargic in any apparent understanding of the evils of the spoils system or any feeling that it should be crushed. It has had no reform spirit in its press nor amongst its citizens. This is the more singular, as it would naturally be influenced by the proximity of the great state university. We take it for granted that the professors of Michigan University are as alive to the dangers threatening American institutions and American character through the spoils system as are those of Harvard and Yale. The course of their opposition to the corrupt and degrading influences of patronage may be widely traced in and out of those institutions. Not so, in Detroit, well filled with Michigan University alumni. We have been told by a person who has a wide social acquaintance among the intelligent people of that city that to bring up the question of civil service reform is to introduce a topic that has vague and abstract interest only, quite foreign to their usual topics and productive only of languor. We believe that they have in the last year or so organized a civic federation, and it is a fact that Rev. Donald MacLaurin, at the coming meeting of the Municipal League at Cleveland, will discuss Detroit's municipal condition. Possibly his paper will throw light on this question.

QUAY'S PENNSYLVANIA.

MATT QUAY has just furnished the state of Pennsylvania as striking an illustration of the ownership of a legislature by an outside boss as Tom Platt has repeatedly given the people of this state in the case of the New York legislature during the last four months. Platt sits in an office on lower Broadway, and issues his orders to his tools in the capitol at Albany through legislative errand boys, or, when time presses, by the long-distance telephone. Quay has been spending the last few weeks in Washington, where he has made up his mind at his leisure what policy should be pursued by his tools at Harrisburg. A proposition for an investigation of the city government of Philadelphia was recently introduced in the legislature. Powerful interests had strong reasons for desiring its defeat. Theoretically the way for them to secure that end would have been to bring influence to bear upon the senators and representatives at the state capital. Practically their only hope was to appeal to the man in Washington who controlled the dummies at Harrisburg. What occurred is thus described by a republican organ, the Philadelphia Inquirer:

"When Senator Quay arrived in Washington from Florida to find that Penrose had introduced the resolution, he was besieged. It would surprise the people of Philadelphia to learn of the men who have made pilgrimages to Washington. Some of them pass for millionaires and stand high in the community, and yet most of them have had interests in one or more of the companies that have benefited through ordinances passed by councils. It was very well understood that should Senator Quay declare against the policy of adopting the resolution it would fail."

The boss at Washington took time to make up his mind, and the state of Pennsylvania awaited his decision. At last he decided to permit the investigation, and the resolution was immediately adopted by an overwhelming majority. The incident merits attention for the perfect frankness with which the city of Philadelphia recognized the ownership of the Pennsylvania legislature by an outside boss.—New York Evening Post, May 13.

We described yesterday the manner in which Matt Quay has been governing the state of Pennsylvania from Washington, receiving there delegations of prominent Philadelphians who went to ask him to prevent a threatened investigation of the city government, because, as the Philadelphia Inquirer, a republican organ, put it, "it was very well understood that should Senator Quay declare against the policy of adopting the resolution it would fail." Now that the end of the session is approaching, the boss has concluded that it will be more convenient to go to the state capitol and issue his orders on the spot. "Senator Quay is expected here Tuesday night or Wednesday morning," says the Harrisburg correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger, independent republican, "and it is believed his presence will determine the fate of several measures which are hanging up in both houses awaiting his approval or disapproval." One important measure, which has been much discussed in the legislature and by the press, is a bill providing for the retirement of judges upon a pension at the age of seventy. It has passed one branch, and strong arguments upon public grounds have been urged for its passage by the other. "The fate of the judicial-retirement bill rests with Senator Quay," says the Ledger's correspondent. Another bill now pending proposes the establishment of an appellate court, which is favored by the supreme court as a needed means of relief for that tribunal. "The appellate-court bill will also be a subject for Senator Quay's consideration when he arrives," says the authority from whom we quote. There is no question of partisan prejudice in these frank confessions of Quay's absolute control of legislation in Pennsylvania, as he is a republican, and both the Inquirer and Ledger are republican newspapers. The fact is so notorious that nobody longer affects to disparage the power of the boss.—New York Evening Post, May 14.

The ruler of the state of Pennsylvania has changed his plans. For some weeks Matt Quay has governed from the national capital, enjoying the delights of the Washington spring and receiving there delegations of citizens who wished him to order passed or defeated various bills which had been introduced in the legislature. On Monday it was announced that he would go to Harrisburg this week, to "determine the fate of several measures which are hanging up in both houses awaiting his approval or disapproval." Yesterday, however, it was given out that he had gone to his home in Beaver, would not be seen at the capital this week, and might not visit Harrisburg at all. The reason is a regard for the personal convenience of the dictator. It is thus explained in a dispatch to the Philadelphia Ledger from its Harrisburg correspondent:

"It is believed that the senator desires to escape the importunities of friends who would seek his influence for certain legislation of an unimportant character which he has no wish to interfere in, and that that legislation he wants he can secure from a distance just as well as if he was on the ground. It is therefore thought that he is absenting himself to avoid becoming involved in the success or defeat of measures which result in making him enemies."—New York Evening Post, May 15.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT ON ASSESSMENT BLACKMAILING IN PHILADELPHIA.

"Nevertheless, the condition of the force at this office (Philadelphia) is by no means as satisfactory as in the other offices of the same size. The political tone of the community is largely to blame for this. (Italics ours). Under Postmaster Field it appears that only Republicans received appointments, and under Postmaster Carr only Democrats. This was largely because the men of the opposite party would not enter the examinations, but undoubtedly the custom of keeping letters of recommendation for eligibles from politicians and other persons on file, both by Postmaster Carr and by his predecessor, has been partly instrumental in bringing about this undesirable result."

Mr. Roosevelt condemns this practice as tending to introduce political influences in making appointments. He admits that he found no proof that the law forbidding political assessments had been violated, and that he found that the postmaster has placarded the office and sub-stations with copies of the Postmaster-General's proclamation, in which he informed the carriers that they need not contribute unless they wished, and that they would not be jeopardized by refusing to contribute. "In the great majority of cases the employes unquestionably contributed without being solicited by any person in the government service." (Italics ours).

Now here comes the kernel of Mr. Roosevelt's report:

"But although there has been little actual violation of the law, there has been what is virtually a very heavy assessment of the postal employes. Before the congressional election last fall, and before the municipal election this spring, they were all repeatedly solicited by letter for political contributions by the democratic campaign committees. A few of them did not respond, but most all paid three per cent. last fall and two per cent. this spring. The republicans were not assessed. This heavy assessment amounted to fifty dollars out of every one thousand dollar salary, and was by most of the employes regarded as a great burden, and was paid merely because they feared ill consequences if they did not pay. A few might have contributed as much unasked, but the great majority, as many of them testified to me, paid the money simply as an insurance against trouble. One of them stated that he would not have paid it if the civil service commission had been located in Philadelphia, and he could go to somebody for protection in case he got into a scrape." Mr. Roosevelt gives as another reason why this assessment blackmail—for it is nothing short of that—is imposed on federal office-holders here is to be found in the fact that "the habit seems to be universal in Philadelphia, so much so that the office-holder has come to regard it as the natural order of things."

Mr. Roosevelt asserts that plenty of evidence was offered to him concerning the assessments which was said had been levied by the republican campaign committees among the city and state officials, and certain of the circulars were shown him: "One of these circulars was written with unconscious humor. It requested from the recipient a 'voluntary' contribution of one day's pay, and explained that if the 'voluntary' contribution was not made the name of the refractory man would be forwarded to the head of his office with a request for his dismissal."—From City and State, May 9.

VETERANS' OFFICE-HOLDING PRIVILEGES.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted at the annual meeting of the Cambridge (Mass.) Civil Service Reform Association:

Resolved, That the Cambridge Civil Service Reform Association heartily approves of the action of the executive committee in protesting against the passage of the Soldiers' Exemption Bill (being House Bill No. 1040).

Resolved, That the members of this association desire to make a still stronger remonstrance against any extension of the principle on which this bill is based, namely, that one class in the community should have greater privileges than others.

Resolved, That while the association is heartily in favor of every legitimate recognition of the services of the genuine veterans of the late war, they call upon these veterans themselves to show their intelligence, independence and patriotism, by opposing every measure which may tend to degrade the civil service of the nation, the state, or the city, by promoting the appointment of any person to public office without due regard to his qualifications for the discharge of public duty.

The passage of the proposed veteran exemption bill in its present form is a severe blow at civil service reform. By the existing conditions of the civil service act veterans are given a very absolute preference over all other applicants for public office, a pass examination being all that is obligatory for veterans, and even that is not required where they are applied for by appointing officers. But under the new bill, which went booming through the house, the appointment of a veteran is obligatory, upon his own oath that he considers himself competent to the duties of the desired office, accompanied by the vouchers of two friends. We have failed, as yet, to find a veteran of any repute who does not think that this is going too far in the creation of a privileged class. And, speaking as a veteran, we honestly believe the passage of the proposed bill will be a serious injury to the cause of the G. A. R., in giving color to the accusations which are just now being made that it is an organization maintained for the purpose of obtaining pensions and offices for worthy or unworthy members alike. Those who have the honor of the veterans nearest at heart seem to be unanimously opposed to this new bill.—Cambridge, Mass., Exchange.

The following was unanimously passed at the regular meeting of Post 30, May 16:

Resolved, That W. H. Smart Post 30, G. A. R., heartily indorses the bill which has passed the house of representatives, and which gives to veterans preference in employment in the public service of the commonwealth and the cities thereof, and that we earnestly request our senators to assist in the passage of the bill through the state senate. We regret to find that the Civil Service Reform Club of Cambridge has been doing everything in its power to defeat the bill, and we condemn its action in the matter as unwarrantable and unpatriotic.

—Speaking of the adoption of civil service reform in Chicago, the St. Paul Pioneer Press (Rep.) says: "There is not a particle of doubt that a similar law applied to state employments in Minnesota, if submitted to the people, would receive an overwhelming majority of the popular vote."—May 8.

* * *

—The Minneapolis Journal scores Governor Clough, of Minnesota, for vetoing a bill providing for the application of the civil service rules in appointments and promotions in the department of grain inspection. The bill passed both houses of the legislature without a dissenting vote.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

VOL. II, No. 28.

INDIANAPOLIS, JUNE, 1895.

TERMS: { One dollar per annum.
10 cents per copy.

Published monthly. Publication office, No. 23 N. Meridian St., Indianapolis, Ind. Address,

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

THE formation of the national municipal league and of the good government clubs which held their annual conference at Cleveland, May 29, 30 and 31, has brought a great number of new and earnest men and women into the field of governmental improvement. The rapidity with which all classes of citizens have thronged into these organizations is an unerring indication that there is in the public mind a deep-seated determination that there must be an improvement. The meeting at Cleveland was a conference at which was heard for two days and a half the story of the government of the cities of this country. No formal resolutions or statement of principles were adopted, but with practical unanimity the enemies of good government were recognized to be the boss, the boodler, the trimming party leader, and the indifferent or blindly partisan good citizen. There was the same unanimous opinion that complete success will never be reached until municipal government is divorced from party considerations of every kind and nature. There was a wide difference as to remedies. With one it was sufficient to arouse the activities of good citizens, with another to make better laws, with another to elect good men to office, and so on. Later on the members of these organizations will recognize that there is no one specific for bad city government; nor is there any order in which remedies must be tried. Whatever can be got first, whether good laws or good officers or the activity of good citizens must be taken as it can be had, and all must be carried on together. Later on also it will be more fully recognized that the pirates who prey upon municipal government will disappear when there is no booty to be captured; and that the greatest remedies discovered in modern times for the removal of governmental booty are the merit and labor service systems. In this respect a good many members are groping in the dark. The conference was of great value.

IN making Mr. Olney secretary of state the President has bestowed upon him a very marked promotion. This act has been generally praised by the public press, the leading papers of both parties heartily joining therein. The CHRONICLE has often differed in such matters and it differs now. Mr. Olney is undoubtedly a good lawyer, but he is not a great lawyer. He has probably performed the routine duties of the attorney-general's office well enough; it does not take a great lawyer to do that. Whether he has looked after the highest duties of his office with commendable zeal and fidelity, the people do not and can not yet know. He certainly has not made a mark for such zeal and fidelity, and he committed the gross impropriety of retaining his position as counsel of a great railroad corporation. Viewed as a political leader, his opinions, with a single exception, are unknown to the country, and in the excepted case they are known by his being viciously negative. On every hand, in the city, the county, the state, the nation, there is a great struggle for better government—for freedom from the grip of bosses and bummers and thieves. It is the one great cause in which a man may render his country a permanent service. No man should occupy a position in the cabinet who is not in active sympathy with this cause, and Mr. Olney's attitude towards it has been one of cynical indifference, to put the matter very mildly.

THE Civil Service Reform Association of Maryland has just performed one of those unpleasant duties from which civil service reformers have too frequently flinched. It has been obliged to censure a professor of civil service reform and a member of its own association for practicing the spoils methods of spoilsmen. When Mr. Bissell was postmaster-general he complained of the importunities of a prominent professor of civil service reform for patronage as the worst he had to bear with the exception of a single congressman. Some of President Cleveland's most fatal deviations from the principles of civil service reform he has stated were upon the counsel of apostles of reform. Josiah Quincy was a reformer of this sort. Gorman and Quay are less dangerous. Their acts brace up reformers but to condone Quincy and Postmaster Warfield strikes at the very life of reform. Mr. Bonaparte put it finely, when he said:

In a professed reformer, "practical politics" are not "practical." When a man's end is to advance his own interest, without regard to that of the public, the practices of our professional politicians are judicious means to that end, just as the artifices of a "bunco steerer" or a "green goods man" are well devised to effect his purposes; but a preacher of the gospel who used these artifices to awaken souls to righteousness would gain little for either the kingdom of heaven or his own consideration among God-fearing folk; and it is no less futile for any one appealing to the people's conscience against wrong-doing by public men to vary the monotony of his exhortations by intimate association with the men he denounces and apparent imitation of their ways of life. Nothing is so certainly fatal to one who would guide public opinion as the appearance of duplicity. To attempt to reform politics by a "tactful" distribution of patronage, or even by arousing unfounded hopes of future "spoils" is, after all, like trying to lift one's self from the ground by one's own boot-straps, or to inclose a space between two parallel lines. It is giving great effort of mind to make two and two equal to five.

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, in a recent address at Vanderbilt University, deplored rings and bosses and put forward this stirring war-cry for all good citizens:

Protection and free trade can wait; they have waited and wavered for a century. All other questions can wait as they have waited and wavered for a generation. Thieves are in possession of the state house, robbers are intrenched in the city hall. Unite, discard party, disregard cries, shibboleths, and phrases, and so rescue the state and the city.

To prove the resistless power of a combination of independent voters he cited the triumph of the committee of seventy in New York and the committee of one hundred in Brooklyn and of civil service reform in Chicago. Mr. Depew did not explain how a man holding such sentiments could entertain Tom Platt at dinner.

WHEN Governor Morton, of New York, appointed Platt's man, George W. Aldridge, commissioner of public works, he followed a long line of precedents, in which respectable appointing officers have for political reasons put the merest machine politicians into places of trust. Aldridge started out with the declaration consistent with his well-known character that the canals would be republican from the lock-tenders up. He briskly proceeded to make this declaration good, and in the course thereof he appointed a certain fifty-one Platt republicans to important positions. There was no effective way of preventing these Plattites from occupying the places, but when they came to draw their pay that was another matter. The state civil service commission overhauled Aldridge and reported to the governor that these fifty-one persons had been appointed in violation of the civil service law, and the governor promptly approved the report. Aldridge squirmed and counselled with Platt, and had himself interviewed, and argued that the places were not within the law, but all to no purpose. The fifty-one Plattites will have to step out, and Aldridge will have to take fifty-one men from the despised eligible list, to the great diminution of his value to Platt, and to his own personal mortification. To have to make fifty-one appointments upon the canals by a system of open competition and with the probability that there is not a single Platt man among them, will certainly fill Aldridge's cup of bitterness to the full.

IN minor matters few of the universities have so much reason for congratulation as Cornell has, from the fact that it is rid of Charles A. Collin, who has held a position in its law school. Collin, while holding this position, was the "counsel" of Dave Hill and Flower, and Cornell had to see him writing legal apologies for those worthies; as, for instance, when Hill wanted to defeat ballot reform, and Flower wanted to defeat the appropriation for the Lexow investigation. The scholar in machine politics always cuts a humiliating figure, and few have had a sorrier appearance than Collin. In his partnership formed with Blue-Eyed Billy Sheehan, with whom he is about to open a law office, in New York, things have followed in their natural sequence. Collin is spoken of as a "practical," as opposed to a "theoretical," or "bookish" lawyer. This may or may not be a virtue. Wherever the name of Sheehan is concerned, there is such a suggestion of all sorts of pulls, that a bookish lawyer might be the more wholesome spectacle, although his practice might be less profitable. Sheehan is advertised as a democrat, and Collin as a republican; but there is a singular brotherhood among this stripe of New York politicians, no matter what the party name, and they pull together in a very "practical" manner.

It is fair, however, to give both sides a hearing. Mr. James. P. Harrold has written to the New York Evening Post, saying that Professor Collin is an "invaluable instructor, a profound scholar, an able teacher and a man of the highest integrity." To take the last word we repeat that he is the apologist of Dave Hill and Flower and the partner of Blue-eyed Billy Sheehan, the brother and supporter of John C. Sheehan, formerly of Buffalo and late police commissioner of New York. It is unfortunate that any one at Cornell can think that Mr. Harrold's eulogy and these facts can possibly go together. Mr. Harrold declines to defend Collin's "political ideas." Are we to understand that integrity is to be put in one pocket and political ideas in another?

THIS is a good time to study the old lesson of "issues." Some years ago we were told that we ought to keep quiet about civil service reform until the tariff question was settled. We pointed out that the tariff question did not differ from the same question in the forties, nor was it likely to differ from the same question in the hundred and twenties. A tariff reform bill has been passed and yet somehow the question is not settled. Another question also has become acute—the currency question, and we notice that the Reform Club of New York is bending all its energies to that subject. Is civil service reform to wait until it is settled whether or not we are to have free coinage of silver? Some other question will at once follow the silver question and if the proposal were agreed to for a moment there would never be an end to waiting. The tariff and the currency questions are the happy hunting grounds of the bosses and the heelers; if the people's attention can be confined to those questions the game can be bagged. The cool calculation with which issues are chosen for a campaign was never more patent than now. Quay, who is in serious danger of being upset as the boss of Pennsylvania, says that the issue next year should be upon the tariff. He can excite Pennsylvania by shouting danger to protection, and it will submit to him for another term. The people of Pennsylvania will follow any kind of a criminal if he leads on to protection. On the other hand a large body of the republican bosses think that free coinage should be the issue, not with any view whatever to the welfare of the country, but solely because they believe that the party can succeed. The object of all these deliberations is to find some way by which Platt can again divide the federal offices in New York, and Quay the federal offices in Pennsylvania, and all the other party bosses all the other federal offices. Civil service reform has not in the past waited the pleasure of the likes of these and it will not in the future.

It is probable that a century from now there will be a tariff question and a currency question and other routine questions, whose discussion will ebb and flow with financial changes. What President Cleveland did in those matters will not attract greater attention than is now attracted to what President Polk did fifty years ago in kindred matters. But there will be no spoils question. Undoubtedly the next twenty-five years will complete the change now going on to such an extent that public business, including the contract system and the employment and discharge of employes and the manner in which they perform their duties, will be devoid of the corruption and of the party considerations which now so heavily weigh it down. The wholesomeness of this change will always attract to the process the closest attention of history. The great strides, therefore, which President Cleveland is repeatedly taking in this direction will more than all else he does give him a place in history. The transfer of the government printing office to the classified service is one of the greatest blows which has ever been struck for the reform and indicates the headway it has gained, as well as what a President can do if he will. This office has been a national disgrace. On account of "politics," this, the most powerful nation in the world, has been afraid to introduce labor-saving machinery into its printing office. The place has been regularly looted by the scalawag politicians whom we send to congress. Over all this organized labor has attempted to keep a supervision. Such a place was a curse to laboring men, for it is a place where thousands sought but only one obtained good pay without rendering adequate service. All this will be changed. Skill will have its reward. Politics will disappear, and a fair day's pay will be given for a fair day's work. It is one of the greatest triumphs of the merit system that laboring men themselves both in and out of this office asked to have it applied there. Perhaps the greatest sufferer will be Senator Arthur Pue Gorman, for whose Maryland rounders the government printing office was a sure and never exhausted refuge; and this was true, whether the times were republican or democratic.

WE have received the eleventh report of the federal civil service commission covering the ground to June 30, 1894. It is the most valuable report yet issued and its chief virtue is that it is not afraid to name names and publish the facts of its investigations. The stories of the attempts to trick the civil service law are retold with great effect, and nothing so well indicates the thorough understanding of its duties. The plain statement concerning the Indiana post-offices and that, with the single exception of those of Mississippi, they are the most deeply branded with marks of trickery, points out another disgrace inflicted upon this state by politics. It is all the worse that the postmasters concerned were left unpunished. It should be remembered that these things happened more than a year ago, since which time the repeated triumphs of civil service reform have had a sobering influence even upon Voorheesism.

THERE is no question but that the thorough venality which pervades American state legislatures is a grave public calamity. The late reform, rib-breaking, prison looting general assembly of Indiana, the Pennsylvania legislature, under the absolute control of a notorious thief, the New York body under the control of Platt, and the Massachusetts legislature passing over the governor's veto, with but two dissenting votes, a law to debauch the soldiers of the rebellion, are instances of this all but universal legislative corruption. The cause is the character of the members. Clerks as a class will not cheat or defraud, or try to cheat or defraud, their employers; they believe it to be wrong and would listen to no plan which contemplated such action. This is true of all classes of private employes. But it is not true of the members of state legislatures; they readily cheat and defraud their employers, and call it "politics." They vote for any kind of a law which will help the party machine, they legislate so as to loot a public institution solely to pay party-healers, and a large proportion of them sell their votes for money. There is no permanent cure except to get men into the legislatures who are at least ordinarily honest, and who look upon public business as they do private business. This will be a slow process, but it is a part of the great movement now going on for better government. The next generation will look upon us as we now look upon Walpole's time.

THE meeting of the national republican league at Cleveland this month was unusually well attended in the matter of delegates, which is a sure indication that the prospects of party success next year are considered good. This league is a delegate meeting of republican clubs, and the republican clubs, like all other party clubs, are kept alive and controlled by party workers. When the promise of success is good they turn out in great numbers and "whoop 'er up" at every meeting. When asked what they stand for, they have only one reply: "The principles of the party." If asked to state these principles they become wary and in fact feel entirely sure of only one which is, to quote Mr. Robert Lincoln, "Damn a mugwump." The Cleveland meeting was no exception. After a long struggle it plainly admitted that it did not know what republican principles are, whether upon the tariff or the currency or anything else. This meeting was composed of the younger men of the party. Among them, if anywhere, one would expect to find some appreciation of the great reform in civil affairs which is being worked out in the United States, and there would also be expected a strong sympathy with this revolution of the benefit of which there can not be two opinions, and a desire to help it along. Yet to this Cleveland meeting and to its individual members this whole matter was a sealed book. For the representatives of "the party of progress" and "the God and morality party," this has a strange look.

INSPECTOR McLAUGHLIN, convicted of extortion, was sentenced to two and one-half years imprisonment in Sing Sing prison. He is forty nine years old, and for twenty-five years has been in the police department of New York city. In sentencing this officer of high rank, and in many respects honorable record, the judge said he had nothing in his heart but regret for a wrecked life. With the court, we may all feel pity for McLaughlin, and yet he was guilty and should be punished. But others, more responsible, unfortunately will not be punished, too. The New York Times states well where the responsibility for McLaughlin's wrecked life lies:

Extortion of money as the price of immunity for illegal acts, or of exemption from the enforcement of the law, or of freedom from annoyance and expense, was general in the police department, and was in complete harmony with the views and practices of the politicians who controlled the city government. These men, mostly Tammany leaders, but some of them republican leaders who were in deals with the others, regarded all public trusts as opportunities for more or less private gain. It was an accepted principle with them, which many of them never even questioned, that the possessors of official authority should be paid for using or refraining from using it by those to whom either the use or its neglect would be advantageous. * * * Undoubtedly in this sense and to the degree indicated McLaughlin was the victim of the system of which he was a part and in which he knew that admission and promotion must be paid for. * * * It is a great pity that the men immediately responsible for this system can not join the convicted inspector in prison. But the final responsibility is not with them. It is with the respectable citizens who, blinded by partisanship or indifference to the demands of principle in the performance of political duties, have allowed themselves to be driven as cattle are driven. The absolute dependence of every corrupt political leader in any party is on the unthinking support of the honest men of that party. Platt has commanded it from republicans as Tammany has commanded it from democrats. When it is withdrawn and citizens intelligent enough to know what is right in politics have the courage and sense to do it, the system that rests on the sale of public trusts will come to an end.

Harper's Weekly has perhaps been the most outspoken of all independent papers as to the responsibility of Mayor Strong in his failure to keep his pledges. It could not excuse his interpretation of his pledge for non-partisan appointments into multi-partisan appointments, and especially it condemned his approval of Platt's bi-partisan police board, however excellent the mayor's appointments. Mayor Strong's policy, as outlined by himself for publication in the New York World, indicates that Harper's Weekly has only erred on the side of leniency. The mayor says that no consideration should outweigh the one great question of fitness, but then proceeds to show how he made his appointments, which have not borne the test of conspicuous fitness. It would be physically impossible to have fitness the prominent test and then require the offices to be fairly apportioned according to further religious and factional tests, as the mayor reports himself as doing. He says:

"I discussed the question of appointments with myself and asked myself, 'What is my duty?' After mature reflection I decided that I would give one-third of the offices to the democratic organizations that had supported the reform movement and helped to elect me, and two-thirds of the offices to the republicans. I have adhered to this. I calculated the vote as well as I could, and decided that I had got about 100,000 votes from the republicans and about 50,000 votes from the democrats, and therefore the apportionment of offices at the rate of one for democrats and two for republicans seemed fair and just."

The mayor, according to the interview, then told in detail how he had carried out his plan of dividing the offices. He said he had appointed some men because they were Roman Catholics and others because they were Hebrews, so as to give all denominations a show.

Mayor Strong also says that he has but two mugwumps in his administration and that it is right to reward political services with offices. In this painfully humiliating interview the mayor admits everything of which he has been charged or suspected. He shows himself to be a calculating traitor to the trust which was confided to him. His declaration that fitness first and party next should control in appointments has been the declaration of every rascally boss since Aaron Burr.

City and State is on the right road for genuine reform when it gives such facts and details as it does regarding an offer of a land company to sell the city of Philadelphia 82½ acres of wild land a mile from the nearest street railway for $250,000, assessed for taxation at $78,000, for a municipal hospital. One of the most prominent spirits of this land company is one Powers, a professional office-holder, the recognized republican leader of the twenty-fifth ward, and a member of the republican city committee. As deputy coroner under Coroner Ashbridge, naval officer under Collector Cooper, and assistant highway commissioner under Chief Bullock, he has long fed at the public crib. His present position gives him a salary of $1,800 per year.

A coroner, an assistant highway commissioner, a police captain, two councilmen and four politicians of local note, are mentioned as owning stock. This is one way of being in politics for what there is in it.

SECRETARY HOKE SMITH has recently re-appointed two faithful and efficient Indian agents who were republicans, but in no sense politicians, J. George Wright, at Rosebud, and George Steele, at the Blackfoot agency. The secretary of the interior has only performed a simple and obvious duty to the Indians and to two worthy officers; but the failure to do these obvious duties has been so glaring for so many years that performance finally becomes an act of great merit.

THIS city has its next election in October, the time being distinct from all other elections. The process of evolving candidates for mayor is interesting. Under our charter with a dishonest mayor or with a respectable but weak one under the control of bosses, a pretty general slaughter may be made of the city business without any adequate means of prevention. The party workers all know this and so far they seem to be the only ones taking part in finding candidates for mayor. They will undoubtedly control the nominations and will do their best to Tammanyize the city. The only candidates they talk of so far are men who are in politics for what there is in it, and who would treat the boys accordingly. There is not the least suggestion of choosing a man who will exclude party politics and will transact the city business upon business principles. As the time for nominations draws near, fear will begin to get in its work. The boys do not want to be defeated, and they will remember that there is an unusually large independent vote here which has no partisan bowels of compassion. Then will follow the process of trimming to secure a respectable candidate who will be a figurehead, and this is for the welfare of Indianapolis, the most dangerous part of the business.

THERE is a republican club in the south part of the city, which by summons or otherwise is bringing before it various candidates for the party nominations to the city offices and is examining them. The examination is very simple, and consists of the one question, "How do you stand on civil service?" It should be explained that the southern part of the city is heavily democratic, and it is claimed that to encourage one to be a republican down there requires something more than mere principle. How can there be anything more, says this club, if this — — — civil service is to prevail? We frankly answer that we do not know; but we are very sure that "civil service" is going to prevail everywhere, and even in Indianapolis. The truth is these are sad times for the enemies of "civil service." Here is our old friend, the Brookville American, exclaiming in sack-cloth, "The government printing office at Washington has been placed under snivil-service rules, adopted and administered by the mugwumps of this country. What does this mean?" The meaning is plain. The rising tide of civil service reform is overwhelming the heelers, the bosses and the entire multitude who have for years tried to eke out an existence in politics by preying upon the public business.

AMONG other interesting civic phenomena, may be counted the fact that this city pays a dollar and forty cents for eight hours of common labor, while all private business in the city pays a dollar and twenty-five cents for ten hours of the same kind of labor. On this basis the city pays seventeen and a half cents an hour for the same kind of labor that costs private employers but twelve and a half cents an hour. This is more interesting when coupled with the fact that within a month the board of public works has called the street commissioner before them and notified him that the time of traveling to and from the job must not be counted as part of the eight hours, but that the men must actually work the eight hours, with nothing out for going and coming time. We decline to regard this as a question whether laborers shall receive high or low wages. The question is whether this city is a charitable institution or a business corporation which is entitled to have its streets and sidewalks built and kept clean on the same terms obtainable by the transactors of any other kind of business. The city is not a charitable institution. The price it should pay for anything should be the market price and no more. We are aware that politics and all kinds of vengeance interfere with the application or advocacy of this perfectly just principle. The knaves and demagogues, however, who oppose this application, must sooner or later be fought down and it is time to begin. The commercial club and the board of trade should lead off.

POSTMASTER WARFIELD.

IN the CHRONICLE for March we gave a long account of the doings of Postmaster Warfield of Baltimore. The executive committee of the Maryland civil service reform association, after going over the ground, made a report censuring Mr. Warfield. His friends in the association itself contested the report, but after debating the matter many hours for two evenings, and after hearing Mr. Warfield's statement, the association sustained the executive committee. Mr. Warfield has sent us his statement with various editorial comments and a note calling attention to the injustice done him.

The question is whether Mr. Warfield has acted improperly as postmaster of Baltimore. November 2, last, the President transferred certain positions in the Baltimore post-office to the classified service. These positions were not then vacant but were occupied by appointees of Mr. Warfield's predecessor. These appointees continued to hold the places and draw the pay for more than a week after November 2, and then they were asked to resign, and having properly refused to do so they were removed. Mr. Warfield then tried an old and very disgraceful trick to beat the civil service law. He put in certain men as watchmen and then, without their having served an hour as watchmen, he promoted them to the above places. This action was blocked by the civil service commission and the Warfield men went out. Mr. Warfield then claimed that he had appointed the same men to the same positions before November 2. The failure of this excuse is that the postmaster appoints nobody; that is done by the department, and the department never appointed these men before November 2. It is true that Attorney-General Olney decided that the men were legally appointed before the classification; but that as we have often pointed out only classifies Mr. Olney with Mr. Warfield. Mr. Warfield has been very careful not to assist the investigators to a sight at the record in the department, although a simple request from him would have been sufficient. What that record shows nobody knows. He repeatedly falls back upon the statement that the matter was decided in his favor by the highest authority. We can tell him plainly that such a decision is worth nothing any more than it was in the Aquilla Jones case, or in the Eugene Higgins case, or in the Rockhill case, or in the dozens of cases where political pulls have beaten honesty and fairness. The decision in his case was simply politics and Olney. Mere naming of men by a postmaster who has no appointing power is not of the slightest legal force. It is no part of an appointment, because the postmaster is no part of the appointing power. These places were not vacated and these appointments were not made until after the law had provided a different method of making them. The department simply overrode the law, and Mr. Warfield was a party to it. He admits that he withheld action in vacating and filling these places for political reasons affecting the election of his friend John K. Cowen to congress. Nothing could be more improper in a postmaster.

QUAY AND HIS PROVINCE.

Quay's under boss, Martin, became ambitious, insolent and rebellious when Quay was in some straits in his last mayoralty campaign, and Quay was stung into saying in the United States Senate that a certain "republican national committeeman" had given as a reason why he "could not preserve plighted faith," and "do what ought to be done," in regard to an important nomination, "that he had been under a heavy salary from a great corporation for the last three years," and "that he was compelled to do what the corporation wished him to do." This referred to Dave Martin who, as the readers of the CHRONICLE already know, has been Quay's useful creature for his peculiar work at home and has even been sent to aid Boss Platt in New York. The Public Ledger recently gave a circumstantial account of some $100,000 worth of real estate acquired in the last few years by Martin. Altogether, as the Ledger said, "Mr. Martin can now afford to accept revolution." An "investigation" has always been the favorite thumbscrew of bosses. Platt has used it to discipline Tammany and bring it to terms for deals and so Quay concluded to allow the Penrose committee to look over Philadelphia's municipal affairs and incidentally put the screws on Martin and bring his insubordinate henchman to terms. Magee, the Pittsburgh boss and Quay's formidable rival, and Martin fought the appropriation for the investigations. In the house they were in the supremacy and after a bitter contest the senate surrendered. Meanwhile those respectable people of Philadelphia of whom there seems to be so many, allied by the cords of business interests with the things to be investigated, journeyed up to Quay to intercede against any municipal probing. But Quay decided that the investigation should begin. At what point it will end will be his future pleasure. But an investigation, whatever its motive, is what Philadelphia should have and the executive committee of the Citizens' Municipal Association of Philadelphia has decided to raise $20,000 to defray the expenses. Before undertaking to raise the money, however, the committee desires to have a letter from the investigating committee confirming private assurances "that the broad interests of the public would be held solely in view throughout the proceedings." The Municipal Association also desires to be represented at the hearing of the committee by counsel, with power to produce evidence and to examine and cross-examine witnesses.

How Quay will profit by an investigation was indicated by a Quay retainer when he said:

"If Dave doesn't look out he may not be in a position to make a fight when the time comes to choose the state delegates. He may have his hands full with other matters if the senatorial committee should happen to be in session about that time."

How interesting would an investigation be that should reveal all the people that have directly and indirectly realized substantial profits out of the worthless reservoirs that cost $2,000,000, and for which an appropriation of $250,000 more has just been made.

A bill is before the Philadelphia council for a subway under any of the streets of that city. It renders possible an absolute monopoly. Yet nobody professes to know about the company that asks these privileges. The councilman who introduced the measure declared that he knew nothing about the ordinance nor about the company. One Front street wool merchant handed him the bill. The wool merchant received it from "a man with iron-gray hair," who thrust it into his hand and asked him to hand it to the councilman. Such men as Martin engineer such franchises as these, attend to the stealthy and dirty work of getting them, and then they let in those respectable citizens seeking lucrative investments on the ground floor. In the network of the intrigue by which these corporate bodies have come into being and live, the good citizens become fatally compromised and thus it happens that though Quay has been a defaulter, and though no one would claim that he has not dragged the republican party of Pennsylvania through the mud, yet says the Philadelphia Ledger:

"One of the most distinguished members of the general assembly recently stated, when requested to use his influence to secure the passage of an important public measure, wholly unpartisan in character, that he could do nothing in the premises, as Senator Quay was opposed to its passage, and he added that no bill to which Mr. Quay was antagonistic, or the passage of which he did not approve, could be passed by the present general assembly."

And this power of Quay's has been unbroken because the lips of those who should have fought him to the bitter end have been sealed by business interests. And though his power to-day is menaced, his danger lies in the struggle of rivals for the bossship.

STORIES OF INDIAN SERVICE SPOIL.*

HARNESS-MAKER CONNELL.

It is only with shame that one can see changes made every few years in offices which have no more to do with politics than with the price of stocks or the eclipses of the moon. If the whole miserable business were not so vicious in principle, it would sometimes be positively comical. Take, for example, the case of a man named Connell, who was appointed a harness-maker under McGillicuddy, although personally a democrat—the explanation being, without doubt, that he was so good at his trade, and so useful that McGillicuddy ignored all secondary considerations. It so happened that among the papers recommending Connell's appointment the only letter bearing a well-known signature was one from a very prominent republican, who was then in congress and has since been given a scat on the bench. When the democratic commissioner of Indian affairs took hold in 1885, Connell's papers were scrutinized in the office at Washington, and he was promptly removed. He could not understand why this was done, and visited the commissioner to inquire about it. He was informed that there were no charges or complaints against him, but that he was removed because he was a republican. It then turned out that the only reason the commissioner supposed him to belong to the obnoxious party was because of the letter of recommendation from the conspicuous republican already mentioned. Connell at once proceeded to summon witnesses from his old home, who testified to the commissioner's satisfaction, not that their friend was a good harness-maker, or that he had a faculty for training young Indians at a trade, or that he was especially useful and efficient as a helper about the agency, but that he was never guilty of the crime of voting a republican ticket! Upon the strength of these assurances the commissioner re-instated him.

*[From an address of Francis E. Leupp at Philadelphia.]

ROTATING PROSECUTORS.

The execution of an enlightened Indian policy demands, however, the application of the same principles to other branches of the public service. Indeed, in a general way, it may be said that the various parts of the great organism which we call our national government are so intertwined and correlated that there are very few important principles applicable to one which are not applicable in equal measure to all the rest—the only points of essential difference being matters of detail.

I do not know how I can better illustrate my proposition than by citing an actual case which has recently come under the notice of some of those present here this evening, and which has impressed me, more than anything else I have encountered in a long time, with the importance to the Indian service, and to a progressive Indian administration, of extending the merit system to the civil service generally.

In the spring of 1893, a squaw-man named Fielder, living near the Cheyenne river agency in South Dakota, and known to be a drunkard and of violent temper, beat his Indian wife into a state of insensibility. Her only offense was a refusal to give him some money which she owned in her own right, but which he wanted to buy drink or pay his debts. She dragged herself, bleeding and miserable, to the agency, and the agent, Mr. Lillibridge, sent some of his Indian police with a message to Fielder, and tried to induce him to come in peaceably and submit to be locked in the guard house till he could be turned over to the judicial authorities on a charge of assault. Fielder at first seemed disposed to surrender himself, but changed his mind; and when at last it was obvious that he intended to keep out of the agent's way altogether, the latter sent a small squad of the police, picking out the most obedient and trustworthy men in the force, with instructions to arrest the culprit and bring him in. Fielder not only shut himself in his cabin and refused to let the police in, but, when they attempted to force an entrance, ran out at them with an ax, and would have killed one or more of them if they had not used their pistols in self-defense. Fielder was killed in the struggle, though there was nothing to indicate that unnecessary violence had been used. When the agent reported the facts to the Indian bureau in Washington the bureau referred his communication to the department of justice, under whose instructions the district attorney for South Dakota had the Indians arrested and brought before a grand jury at Pierre. The grand jury sifted the case thoroughly, having the advantage of sitting near the spot where the homicide occurred, which enabled them to summon witnesses promptly and at little expense. After a careful investigation they reported that there was no ground for indicting the Indians, and the latter were set at liberty. Nothing more was heard or thought of the matter for nearly two years. Meanwhile, the agent at Cheyenne river had been changed and a new district attorney appointed. Suddenly the new district attorney, a local politician, discovered that it was his duty to re-open the Fielder homicide case; and with a half breed witness of bad or doubtful character, he went before a grand jury sitting at Deadwood—the most distant point in the state where a United States court is held—and procured an indictment of seven of the Indian policemen; he then had them arrested and dragged all the way across the state, of course to the profit of the deputy marshals who handled the job, and who will have fat bills for mileage, living expenses, and per diem compensation to turn in to the government. A sensational trial of a batch of Indians was a godsend, moreover, to the jaded appetites of those Deadwood hoodlums who were ready to accept as a foregone conclusion that to try an Indian for his life meant to hang him. Undoubtedly the whole operation is good for a big double-handful of votes whenever this enterprising district attorney becomes a candidate for any elective office.

The commissioner of Indian affairs, Judge Browning, was naturally very much exercised over this turn of affairs. He wrote to the new agent at Cheyenne river, Mr. Couchman, for a detailed report of the case in its later phases. This he referred, through the secretary of the interior, in a most respectful and courteous manner, to the attorney-general, asking that instructions might be sent to the district attorney to enter a nolle prosequi. He took pains to represent, not only the inherent injustice of the proposed prosecution, but the inexpediency of giving the Indian police and the Indians generally an impression that, when they were acting under orders of an agent and it became necessary to use force with a white man, they were liable to be put in jeopardy of their lives as a reward for doing their duty.

The attorney-general, instead of accepting this in the spirit in which it was offered as a suggestion which might save him from making a serious mistake, resented it as an interference with his prerogative. All he was willing to do was to write to the district attorney and ask for his side of the case. The district attorney responded with a report which showed that he either did not know anything about the facts or was willing to distort them, and on the strength of this the attorney-general telegraphed him to "go ahead."

The sequel may be briefly told. There was a tedious and expensive trial, which cost the prisoners every penny they had in the world, and in which the counsel fees for their defense had to be guaranteed by the Indian Rights Association as the only apparent means of preventing the poor fellows from being convicted by default, for the Indian bureau was powerless under the law to contribute anything. Five of the prisoners were acquitted outright. The remaining two were found guilty of "assault with intent to do great bodily harm," an offense for which there seems to be no definition in the laws of South Dakota, and for which it will therefore be impracticable to hold them.

This may seem a long way around to the very direct point which I wish to make; but you will see the application when I call your attention to a few condensed propositions.

First. The trial proved that there was no ground whatever for prosecuting the Indians.

Second. If this unrighteous prosecution had gone against the prisoners through lack of a proper defense, discipline on the Indian reservations in the northwest would not have been worth a rush from that day forward, and the fruits of a quarter century of humane effort would have been scattered to the winds.

Third. The re-opening of the case would never have occurred if the district attorney who first investigated it had remained in office.

Fourth. That district-attorney was retired to private life, not because he was an unsatisfactory officer, but because he was a republican; and another man who did not know his business, or was willing to subordinate his duty to considerations of personal advantage, was put into his place, merely because he was a democrat.

To sum up: An obviously useless prosecution was pressed, which involved a large expense to the government; which impoverished seven worthy and deserving Indians; which might have ended in taking several human lives; and which in that event would undoubtedly have been followed by another bloody Indian war and given a backset of twenty years to frontier civilization. And all this is traceable directly to the fact that district attorneyships, like Indian agencies, are still treated as spoils.

Can there be any doubt that all hope of the future for the reform of our Indian administration is bound up with the prospects of civil service reform, not only in the Indian service, but in every one of the co-related and interdependent branches of our governmental organization?

BOSS RULE IN CINCINNATI.

In the police department under the law of 1886 the mayor makes all appointments, subject to the approval of the commissioners, who alone may make vacancies upon finding good cause after full investigation at which the accused has a right to be heard.

Not having the power of appointment, the police board has not been tempted to make vacancies without sufficient reason, and though the appointments made by the mayor are undoubtedly dictated by his superior, who rules Cincinnati from behind the throne, still as the mayor has no chance to make vacancies, he is only able to make the few appointments which are the result of death and resignation.

The law provides that all positions of higher grades in the force shall be filled by promotion from the ranks, and as a basis for these promotions written and oral examinations are held. These, together with the physical and other examinations which have been established by the board for ascertaining the fitness of candidates for appointment before confirming them, have had the effect of improving the character of the force until it is probably in its rank and file one of the best in the country.

To sum it up, the administration of the government of Cincinnati by the system of bi-partisan boards, to which, with the mayor, are entrusted its municipal powers, has been primarily satisfactory in most particulars. The evil of this system, however, consists in the fact that it puts the city, more completely than is possible under any other system, into the power of its unofficial ruler. By means of the patronage of the bi-partisan boards, whose members from both parties are appointed by his servant, the mayor, he is able to control the nominees of both parties.

If the nominees on his own party ticket are very bad, he can make the others worse if necessary. Having a well established majority under normal conditions, he is able to thwart the designs of municipal reformers by this trust which he has formed with the hungry manager of the minority party through the aid of the municipal spoils and the bi-partisan system, the result being that the offices are filled, except in rare instances, by men much below the proper standard.

One of the latest appointments to this board excites apprehension among those who wish to see our police force retain its present high standard, because of the indications that his appointment was dictated by that power to which I have referred, which absolutely controls all appointments made in Hamilton county. Should it ever happen that the same influence should dominate both the mayor and the police board so as to cause them to make vacancies and appointments to suit their mutual political needs, then the end of the efficiency of the system will be near.

[From the paper of Charles B. Wilby, at the National Municipal League, at Cleveland, May 30, 1895.]

THE VULTURES AT THE CARCASS OF COLUMBUS—OHIO.

"There is a law in force in the state which requires the managers of the penitentiary to apportion the one hundred or more guards of that institution among the several counties of the state in proportion to the population, including Indians not taxed, or something of that kind. The enforcement of this law results in bringing to the capital city a new force of guards whenever there is a change in the state administration. The old force hangs around for two or three years hunting for jobs in the police or fire departments of the city, or as campaign hustlers pensioned upon the political executive committees. They wait patiently about, hoping that the whirligig of politics will speedily restore their party to power and themselves to position. This law should have been entitled "An act to increase the number of politicians in cities of the first grade of the second class."

The state officers, members of the legislature their clerks and employes, after living for a short time among our people, gradually come to know what life really is. They have their eyes opened to its beauties, its pleasures. They stop singing, "I'm But a Pilgrim Here." They grow more cheerful and soon begin to look around for a home where they can enjoy for the rest of their lives their suddenly acquired wealth. Life in the remote counties of the state loses its charm. They love to be near the throne, the seat of government. It used to be a serious question with the people of Columbus what disposition should be made of the ex-convict when discharged from the Ohio penitentiary. Repeatedly bills were introduced in the legislature, at the earnest solicitations of our people, requiring the convicts, upon expiration of their terms, to be sent back to the counties from which they hailed, which they had the honor to represent.

The members of the legislature from the distant counties of the state, fearing competition for their seats in the next general assembly, would almost unanimously oppose the measure. Those of them who were afraid to face their constituents and had determined to live in the capital, would vote against the measure possibly for the reason that they desired congenial society in their new home. Notwithstanding this opposition the measure did finally pass, and now a detective is always at hand when a convict is discharged to see that the law is enforced and the county entitled to an increase of the population gets it.

It has been suggested that the foregoing were not the real reasons why this measure was opposed so vigorously by the average member of the legislature. It is intimated that they look upon it simply as an entering wedge to be followed by another law that would require members of their own body, state officers and employes, to be sent back to face their constituents upon the expiration of their terms of service. This reform lies in the immediate future. This turning loose upon our city every year of a large body of state officials and employes, members of the legislature, clerks and penitentiary guards, with no provision for sending them back to their counties from whence they came will have to be changed. In the earlier reform the obstacles were not insurmountable. The ex-convicts were reasonably sure of a welcome home. They were at least not afraid to go home. The impending reform may not be so easily accomplished. A compromise might be effected by which the ex-official would not be required to go back to his constituents provided he would leave the state.

Until some provision is made our city will continue to be a city of office-holders and ex-office-holders, of statesmen and retired statesmen, of citizens who are liable at any moment to break out with their old disease of itch for office. It will continue to be infested with an excess of professional politicians, who go about seeking for something political to devour, such as state, county or municipal office. Being in the habit of attending to the business of the public, it is difficult for them to attend to matters of private concern. They naturally and instinctively turn their attention to matters of state. They are ready and willing at all times to render public service for a consideration.

We do not wish to be understood as saying that there are not some very respectable, law-abiding ex-convicts residing in the city of Columbus, men who have reformed and become good citizens. We can say as much also for some ex-state officials, ex-members of the legislature, and ex-employes of state institutions. Some of these have reformed and are actually received in so-called good society. They are even trusted and employed by well-meaning citizens of a philanthropic disposition. The removal of some of them from our city would be a serious and irreparable loss.

The foregoing facts would lead one to infer that the death rate of our city is low. Vital statistics show that it is the most healthy city of its size in the entire country. The fact that very few office-holders die has probably as much to do with its good showing in this matter of mortality as cleanliness of the streets. There being no demand for politicians and office holders in either of the other worlds, they are permitted to remain and become standing advertisements of the state capital as a health resort."

[From the paper of D. E. Williams at the Cleveland meeting of the National Municipal League.]

On one pay roll of Chicago, under the Altgeld administration, 212 names of men appeared, some of whom could not be found at the streets and numbers given, while those who were found swore that they were not in the employ of the city during the period covered, and did not receive the money set against their names.

THE MARYLAND ANNUAL MEETING.

From Mr. Bonaparte's address.

It is now some five years since Mr. John S. Clarkson, then a prominent politician, in a speech widely published, predicted that if what he called "the claim of the mugwump," namely, that the people favored civil service reform, could be submitted to the people themselves, "it would be rejected by ten millions of votes." The year which has elapsed since our last meeting has seen this experiment tried. The people of the state of New York, the people of the city of Chicago have had submitted to them "the claim of the mugwump," and have indorsed it, the former by more than one hundred thousand, the latter by nearly fifty thousand, majority. What Mr. Clarkson thinks of these facts I do not know, nor is it a matter of much consequence, but they are fraught with great moment to all those who believe, as I do, that a self-governing community will always, sooner or later, have as good a government as it deserves, but no better. If the people of the United States really were what this man supposed, he and his like would be our fit rulers. The result when his "claim" was tested, as he wished that it might be, shows that his and their days of power and prosperity, if not ended, are numbered.

I believe that these days are numbered; but, unfortunately, their number is probably large. The work which we undertook when this association was formed will undoubtedly last our time. If any among our members fear lest we may run short of wrongs to be righted, I can safely bid them dismiss such fears. The supply of abuses and scandals in the conduct of our public business promises to be ample, and their quality shows little sign of deterioration. * *

At the last meeting of this association I said that, whilst I well knew, and was fully prepared to say, what I thought of the appointments of Mr. Murray Vandiver, Mr. Barnes Compton, Mr. Hammond and others then recently chosen by Mr. Cleveland as federal officers in Maryland, I did not yet know what to think of his simultaneous choice of Mr. S. Davies Warfield as postmaster, and must wait until I did before commenting either upon this selection or the incumbent's administration of his office. The time for such comment has now come.

Mr. Warfield is the fifth postmaster of Baltimore since the enactment of the Pendleton bill. He is the first whose action has indicated, to my mind, at least, that he regarded the faithful enforcement of the statute according to its true and obvious intentment, as a part of his official duty, or as covered by his official oath. He has never, so far as I am informed, or have any reason to believe, discriminated for or against any one among those certified as eligible for employment in the classified service for any reason which he could not avow publicly and justify under the law, and he has not countenanced the infamous, but very common, practice of trumping up false or frivolous charges of misconduct against classified clerks or carriers merely to make vacancies. Moreover, he has recently introduced a system of examinations and marking to determine relative rank, and compensation in the classified service which may, perhaps, hereafter admit of improvement as the fruit of practical experience, but serves, meantime, as a protest against an odious and paltry abuse, namely, diminishing the salary or reducing the grade of public servants whom their chief officer wishes, but can find no pretext, to deprive of their means of subsistence that he may gratify his political or personal prejudices—an abuse which has been particularly prevalent in the treasury department under its present family management. Had the entire force of the Baltimore post-office been included in the classified service when Mr. Warfield became postmaster, there is every reason to believe that I might justly close what I have to say of him, with a compliment to President Cleveland, fairly earned in the opinion of some who have found much to criticize in the Maryland appointments made during both his terms of office, for having, at least in one, and a conspicuous instance, put the right man in the right place, and one to himself, which ought not not be much of a compliment, but has been, unfortunately, deserved by a small minority of those in like positions of public trust during the past twelve years, for having honestly obeyed the law. But, I am sorry to say, there is another side to the shield.

The unclassified service of the post-office was made up, when Mr. Warfield was appointed, of republican politicians, as it had been when Col. Adreon had retired, and for the same reasons which had caused it to be made up of democratic politicians under Messrs. Veazey and Brown. I am quite ready to believe that among them were many fit candidates for prompt removal, and I fully recognize the sufficiency of "offensive partisanship," and "pernicious political activity," as grounds of removal for these as for any other ministerial public officers. Indeed, it should be remembered that the principles of civil service reform require no less imperatively and emphatically the immediate dismissal of an unfaithful or an unprofitable servant than his retention while competent, honest and zealous. It is, therefore, no fair ground of censure for me that the postmaster made many removals. I should have been as well satisfied had he made more, and much better satisfied had he made those he did make with less delay; but if he asks that reformers should assume that his removals were made for the good of the service only, it is pertinent to inquire how he has filled the vacancies. It is the doctrine of this association, and it should be that of all right-thinking men, that every American citizen of creditable antecedents, fair reputation and regular life, who desires public employment, is entitled to a fair consideration by the appointing power of his qualifications for the post to be filled, and that, whenever political opinions or party affiliations have no legiti-mate connection with its duties, to discriminate against him because he is a republican or a democrat is no less unjust, both to him and the government, than it would be to hold him disqualified because he were a protestant, or a catholic, or a Hebrew. When, therefore, the public perceived that the postmaster chose his new appointees exclusively, or nearly so, from his own party, and exclusively, or nearly so, from one, and numerically a weak, faction of that party, it became hard for even the most charitable to believe that the desire to find employment for the more needy adherents of that faction had nothing to do with the dismissals he had made; and although, on the whole, I think it is but fair to say that these appointees, so far as I have been able to learn, compare rather favorably than otherwise with those of his immediate predecessors, some among them were such men as not to render this belief the easier.

I have said that, in my opinion, there would be less ground for legitimate criticism of Mr. Warfield if he had made his removals more promptly; in fact, there was something more than mere delay to awaken suspicion in this connection. In common with many of our own number, and with others among our best citizens, he very earnestly and notoriously desired the nomination and election of Mr. John K. Cowen to congress. Mr. Cowen has been for many years vice-president of this association, a position to which you have just re-elected him. He has always been an outspoken advocate of civil service reform, and he made, when nominated, a declaration which would have been satisfactory to his friends under any circumstances, and was more particularly satisfactory in view of the circumstances under which it was made. No one could possibly think the worse of Mr. Warfield for wishing well to his candidacy, but a rumor soon became widely current that the patronage of the post-office would be surrendered to a boss who was said to have secured Mr. Cowen's nomination, and that the consummation of this edifying arrangement was postponed until after the election only to make sure that the statesman in question might not forget to deliver the goods after receiving the agreed price. The denouement showed that this rumor did Mr. Warfield injustice, but it did not relieve him of the imputation that he had, at least, so timed his official action that selfish and unscrupulous political intriguers might entertain and act upon hopes of his complicity in their own corruption. I need not dwell upon his singularly inconsistent action, and the humiliating and ludicrous position he occupied, in consequence of the President's unexpected extension of the classified service on the eve of the election.

TWO OPINIONS.

BEFORE.

William Brookfield, commissioner of public works, declared to-day that he was going to take care of the old district leaders who supported the committee of thirty element of the republican party, no matter how much he might be criticised for so doing.

"John Simpson, John Collins, Martin Healey and William Henkel adhered to us through thick and thin," said Mr. Brookfield, "and I am not going back on them now. I have appointed Henkel superintendent of the bureau of encumbrances, and I am going to give places to Simpson, Collins and Healey. I don't know what places yet, but I am going to appoint them to some offices in my department.

"I know I shall be criticised, but I don't care. If it had not been for the loyalty of these men, Colonel Strong would not be mayor and I would not be commissioner of public works. When our county convention was held last fall, a large element of it wanted a straight republican ticket. My friends were in favor of a combination, and we would have been beaten if Simpson, Collins, Henkel and Healey had not stood by us. They stood by us, too, when it looked as if we would lose. They defied Platt, and their action resulted in the nomination of Mr. Strong. They deserve well of their party, and I am not going to forget them now."—New York Times, March 12.

AFTER.

"I have been in office long enough to be convinced that civil service is a vital necessity of our form of government. I believe in it as I believe in religion, and so long as I am in office, I shall adhere to it strictly. I don't say that the present civil service system is perfect, but I do say that the theory is right. I believe that the question of patronage should, to a large extent, be eliminated from politics. It will be better for both parties. The only way to do that is through the civil service. The sooner such patronage is out of the hands of both parties the better. I believe that the present civil service commissioners are sincere, faithful and honest men. They believe in the theory they work on, and they shall get all possible aid from the department of public works.

"Office-getting and office-filling is not the underlying principle of republicanism. If it was, if that is all that the republican party stood for, I should leave it to-morrow.

"All the troubles of the administration have arisen out of the question of patronage. The way to solve that problem, in my opinion, is to turn all the offices, or nearly all of them, over to the civil service commission. That commission is now made up of men who can be thoroughly trusted—men who believe in their own theories and practice their belief—and if they had the disposal of the offices, the best available men would be selected, and the mayor and the heads of departments would be relieved of this trouble.

"There are 100,000 republican voters in this city. Perhaps five or six thousand want offices, and when they don't get them they raise a cry against the administration. But what do the other 95,000 republicans care who get the offices so long as they go to good men? The great mass of republicans do not want offices."—New York Times, June 21.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

VOL. II, No. 29.

INDIANAPOLIS, JULY, 1895.

TERMS : { One dollar per annum.
10 cents per copy.

Published monthly. Publication office, No. 23 N. Meridian St., Indianapolis, Ind. Address,

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

Indianapolis, Ind

THE CHRONICLE gives space this month to the current history of Police Commissioner Roosevelt and his colleagues' efforts to enforce the excise law. The cursory reader of the late Lexow investigation knows that that law was used by Tammany for astounding blackmail and corruption. Any attempt to bring New York city out of the pit of corruption into which it has sunk, any effort to purify the police force, any hope of a clean and upright police judiciary would fail miserably and disgracefully if Mr. Roosevelt and his colleagues violated their oaths of office. They have found the law and they are to execute the law. The legislature of New York is to decide whether or not it will change the law. This fight of the police commissioners is such a lesson in courageous statemanship; it is being conducted with such wit and cleverness and uprightness; public sentiment has so promptly endorsed the utterances of men who declare they will not violate their oaths of office, let the consequences be what they may, that the CHRONICLE hopes that its collection of facts may be an inspiration in the future to some of the younger men who enter political life. The nineteenth century in the United States has no use for the crafty, evasive, compromise style of statemanship. In his career as civil service commissioner and thus far in New York, Theodore Roosevelt may be said to embody the ideal of the American people.

THE monthly record of the doings of bosses is more than usually stirring. In Maryland, there was a great fight against Gorman, but as usual he came off victorious. This is likely to continue so long as the people of Maryland lack the spirit to defeat Gorman's party at the polls for having such a boss, or for that matter, any boss. It is idle to say that the republicans would be just as bad. There is nothing like a succession of alternate defeats to bring parties to their senses; and nothing could be worse than to let a fellow like Gorman have the reward of constant victory. In Pennsylvania, Quay seems to have been defeated by a combination of smaller bosses. Any kind of a defeat for him is a victory for the people; but the smaller bosses will have to be dealt with in turn. In the Quay contest there were many illustrations of the practice to which we have often referred of utterly ignoring the real qualities and purposes of a boss by raising a cry about danger to cherished tenets and each cry is adapted to the prejudices of the particular community. In this line one of Quay's counties adopted the following :

Whereas, In view of the coming presidential contest in 1896, it is to the best interests of the republican citizens of this commonwealth that the helm of the party should be in the hands of one whose record shows that he is in favor of full and adequate protection to American labor and industries, and whose superior skill as a statesman, brilliant organizing ability and acknowledged capacity in directing campaign work place him at the head of the party leaders of the union, and enabled him to marshal the republican party to victory in 1888.

Resolved, That the Delaware County Republican Executive Committee heartily indorse the candidacy of Hon. Matthew Stanley Quay for chairman of the state republican executive committee.

THE postoffice department has instituted the practice of sending its men to different cities to find out how the letter carriers are performing their duties, and this is done without consultation with or the knowledge of the postmaster. This is a wide departure from the method which was followed for years and even into the early part of the present administration when matters relating to the civil service law were to be looked into. Then the postmaster was the first man consulted and his word was usually taken in the face of any amount of overwhelming evidence. The two above methods mark the difference between wanting to find the facts and not wanting to find them. The civil service commission is expressly excepted from this criticism both as to motive and practice since the beginning of Harrison's term. Under the present method with the carriers, a good many delinquencies have been found such as creep into any force not closely inspected. The carriers complain but there is no good ground for it. The government is extremely liberal with the carriers. The pay is good and is above what is paid in private business for the same amount of intelligence and physical effort. The work is only eight hours a day. The position is during good behavior and the pay is the same through good times and bad which is an immense advantage over private employment. The government therefore is not asking too much when it insists that a carrier shall give his undivided attention and incessant effort to his duties during the eight hours which constitute his day's work. The postmasters concerned are inclined to criticize the department and this does not tend to good discipline; they should rather increase their own vigilance.

THE hundreds of thousands of dollars which the government has been obliged to pay for overtime work has not increased the esteem of the people for the employes who insisted upon it. Those claims were not morally due; and the spectacle of the government having to protect itself against similar claims in the future by forbidding employes to enter their place of employment until the actual beginning of the eight hours is not pleasant. One of the tendencies which will have to be guarded against in the future is the disposition of classes of employes to band together and get more advantages. When we see the rascally acts which congressmen of all parties do in the pension department for the sake of votes, it is clear that they would not hesitate for the same reason to debauch classes of civil service employes. An instance of the demands which may be possible is that of the national association of letter carriers, for some sort of a trial before dismissal. After consideration we are fully of the opinion that no such law should ever be passed. The discipline of any civil service force requires that the power of prompt dismissal shall rest somewhere. Every day gives indication that within the classified service this power in the face of public opinion can not be abused with impunity. We are in favor of trusting public opinion.

SECRETARY HERBERT has "settled" another crew who looked upon the civil service rules as a joke. It will be remembered that Secretary Tracy introduced the labor service system into the navy yards, but it seems that in Brooklyn, under the present administration, the rules have not been taken earnestly. This came to the ears of Secretary Herbert who transferred the two officers who were at fault and gave the whole yard a wholesome lecture. He has made it understood that the labor service rules are to be observed the same as any other law. It takes a good while to convince some people that you can not build modern ships with the Mikes and Jakes of the New York and Brooklyn ward associations.

THE march of civil service reform has become so steady that it no longer attracts unusual attention. Nor has there appeared any evidence whatever of that sleeping hostility to the reform which the politicians have always declared the people had. Under former administrations the transfer of the railway mail service and the free delivery post-offices and so on to the classified service did not awaken that hostility. Under the present administration the internal revenue service, the bureau of engraving and printing, the government printing office, the whole agricultural department and other great additions were made and yet the hostility slept on. Now follow within the month the geological survey with 125 places and the employees of pension agencies amounting to some five hundred. In all these years every transfer has met with unqualified public approval and the claim of hostility on the part of the people was a myth desperately clung to by a class of men who wanted to live off of the public treasury without deserving to do so. The transfer of the pension agencies removes one of the greatest scandals in the public service where the places were literally bargained and sold as political rewards. The present agent at Indianapolis publicly stated that he promised the places in this office to the legislators who got him his own appointment. In addition to these promises he has managed to give some relatives some good pickings out of the contingent fund and otherwise.

GOVERNOR ALTGELD has announced no new discovery in his statement that certain members of the Illinois general assembly sold their votes for or against proposed measures. The evidence is practically conclusive that this is done in nearly every state legislature in the country. It is a part of the spoils system. Mediocre but sharp men procure themselves to be elected to the legislature because they are "on the make." Taking bribes for votes in such a place is not looked upon as any other crime is. The late Indiana general assembly in effect brazenly declared that it would have railroad passes and it got them; yet the public is not greatly shocked. Many a legislator who is known well enough to have feathered his nest with hard cash is not socially ostracized when he returns home, but his entertainments paid for with the same cash are gladly partaken of by the "best people."

CHICAGO has lately afforded a curious spectacle. The new civil service rules have just gone into effect, but ever since Mayor Swift went into office there has been going on a division of booty as open and bare faced as that ever made by any band of pirates after a rich capture. The city being republican the division there was to republican looters; while the county being democratic there was a rapid re-division there for the benefit of the more powerful democratic looters. Both machines worked with all their might up to the last minute and the division was made not from business principles but solely with regard to partisan or personal services, the object being to settle into good places as many workers as possible. Any honest desire to benefit the public service would have caused a delay of all removals until the rules went into effect, when the vacancies could have been filled by open competition.

It is said that Mr. James W. French will be appointed warden of the federal prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. The prospective appointment is praised on every hand, the republican papers especially declaring that "the appointment will vindicate itself." We believe this to be true. Mr. French was for five years warden of the Indiana state prison at Michigan City and in the course of his service made great progress in the line of his duties and became an efficient warden, grasping and knowing how to put into use the best ideas of prison management, and he was respected and liked by the prisoners. He had become a valuable officer to the state and to outsiders it might seem strange that the state should willingly lose his services. Yet the state does so, acting through its late rib-breaking, railroad-pass-grabbing, prison-looting general assembly. That august body, with the design of having Mr. French removed, made a new prison board and Mr. French was accordingly dismissed and the wardenship given to a new and inexperienced man named Harley. The sole reason was that Mr. French was a democrat. For the forty places as guards seven hundred party heelers are now scrambling. Harley's view of public business is indicated in his remark, "I shall not remove men until the new men learn their business." That is, for the accommodation of political bosses who want to pay some henchmen for personal services by quartering them upon the state, a school is to be kept by the state until these raw henchmen learn something and then the efficient and experienced employees who as Harley says have been in the service "from two to twenty-five years," are to be turned out. This whole operation is a heartless outrage inflicted upon defenseless prisoners by callous minded party bosses for the sake of personal benefit.

CIVIL SERVICE REFORM AND ITS BEARINGS UPON THE INTERESTS OF LABOR.

[From the lecture of Herbert Welsh at the Plymouth School of Ethics, July 12, 1895.]

The question which civil service reform presents to the people of the United States is pre-eminently one of morals. It is not fundamentally a question of examining boards and of averages, of appointment and dismissal, but whether the executive branch of the government shall be conducted honestly or dishonestly; whether the immense patronage at our disposal comprised in our civil service shall be used directly in the public interest, or dishonestly and fraudulently for the increase of party power for securing private ends, or the amassing of private plunder. This is the vital question at issue and none other. It is unfortunate that we should be obliged to use so dry and technical a name as "civil service reform" for a thing so charged with more than national well-being, for a principle which is as necessary to the preservation of American institutions as was the extinction of negro slavery. The American republic contemplates a government the controlling thought of which can not be better expressed than by Lincoln's famous Gettysburg definition, "A government of the people, by the people, for the people." The foundations of this ideal were laid by the fathers, but they can only have suitable and enduring superstructure built upon them by our jealous and exacting care. That we have been to a high degree negligent of our duty in this respect would seem to be only too evident from a glance at the present workings of any department of our government. Whether we look at our great cities in their executive or legislative functions, at our state legislatures or even at that once august body, the senate of the United States, we find the same general conditions. Everywhere is to be found an amount of mismanagement, of inefficiency, and in many instances of glaring fraud and of dishonesty which are not truly representative of us as a people of average intelligence and of our average moral standards. We may claim unhesitatingly that at the close of the first century of American independence, notwithstanding the splendid achievements, of our people in the sphere of material well-being and advancement, their great progress in the line of popular education, their growing distinction in the world of letters and of the fine arts, that in their political institutions they have failed to develop fruit which should have been their natural product and which the world had a right to expect. If the causes of disturbances be not accurately ascertained and promptly removed, they present a serious menace for the future. No one, who has studied with care the developments of American politics within the last twenty-five years, will claim that this indictment is too severe. The words of a distinguished senator from Massachusetts furnish a weighty testimony to support it. Said Mr. Hoar, during the trial of William K. Belknap:

My own public life has been a very brief and insignificant one, extending little beyond the duration of a single term of senatorial office. But in that brief period I have seen five judges of a high court of the United States driven from office by threats of impeachment for corruption or maladministration. I have heard the taunt from friendliest lips that when the United States presented herself in the East to take part with the civilized world in generous competition in the arts of life, the only product of her institutions in which she surpassed all others beyond question was her corruption. I have seen in the state of the union foremost in power and wealth four judges of her courts impeached for corruption, and the political condition of her chief city become a disgrace and byword throughout the world. I have seen the chairman of the committee on military affairs, now a distinguished member of this court, arise in his place and demand the expulsion of four of his associates for making sale of their official privilege of selecting youths to be educated in our great military school. When the greatest railroad of the world * * * was finished, I have seen our national triumph and exultation turned to bitterness and shame by the unanimous report of three committees of congress * * * that every step of that enterprise had been taken in fraud. I have heard in highest places the shameless doctrine, avowed by men grown old in public office, that the true way by which power should be gained in the republic is to bribe the people with the offices created for their service, and the true end for which it should be used, when gained, is the promotion of selfish ambition and the gratification of personal revenge. * * * These things have passed into history.

I am well aware that these terrible words were spoken nearly twenty years ago, and that, thanks to the heroic labors of that most distinguished and unselfish American patriot, George William Curtis, and the little band of devoted reformers who supported his efforts, in many directions great and substantial advances have been made in the cause of reform. By the well directed attacks of these men, the spoils system, the most conspicuous source of the corruption depicted so powerfully by Senator Hoar, has been driven from its strongest intrenchments in the federal service. For a long while the reform advanced by slow, and to the popular eye, scarcely perceptible steps; but within the past year the President of the United States has, by executive order, added no less than eight thousand places to the classified service; places taken from the bribery chest of the politician and restored to the honest service of the people. This number is almost equal to that included by the original Pendleton act. Chicago, also, and the state of Illinois are to be congratulated, and through them the country, upon having enacted during the past winter the admirable civil service statute. Once aroused to a sense of danger from the riotous outbreaks of last summer, and the necessity for fundamental reform as a remedy, the most vigorous city of the continent leaped fully armed into the conflict, and by one astonishing effort put herself at the head of the reform ranks. Let an exigent public sentiment now demand the thorough enforcement of this law.

Why is it that American politics have by universal acknowledgment in moral tone and dignity sunk to a level far below the standards of the American people? It would be a mistake to assign any single cause, in a reply to so large a question. But there are two causes which may be assigned, of vital importance, which we as a nation, and especially at this moment, should seriously consider: First, a certain buoyant, careless optimism, characteristic of us as a nation, which lies at the root of many of our most troublesome national shortcomings. The time has come for us to be reminded that we are no longer boy but man. We must now know or be prepared to suffer still more keenly for our ignorance of the simple truth that institutions, no matter how admirably contrived they may be, have no breath of life; they are so much iron or brass, unless guided by the hand of wise and patient men; without a clear national mind and pure national morality to direct them, they will become dangerous or dead things, and it is the nation, not a few men only, that must know and act upon this. We must look for our safety in the future to a widely diffused sense of responsibility, based on a more exact and highly trained political knowledge among our people.

Second—Nothing would seem to be more pertinent to this growing popular consciousness of the necessity of a clear understanding of what are the necessary features of good government than a knowledge of civil service reform and an uncompromising application of its spirit to our entire political system. Politics have become alarmingly debauched, and in their turn have debauched the nation by allowing the spoils system to gain control of them. What seemed at the outset a trivial lapse in public virtue—a use of the civil service which was not strictly honest—has developed a system of politics which is inconceivably removed from that which the founders of the republic designed, in which the free and intelligent voter finds himself powerless in the clutch of the machine, where the honorable leader is displaced by the unscrupulous boss, and where a public career becomes less and less a possibility for men of character and of independent convictions.

One of the most striking symptoms of the disordered condition of our politics is manifest in our great cities. It is the alliance formed between the corrupt political machine, which regards public affairs only as a money-making concern, and unscrupulous capital, which finds in the machine a convenient tool for the advancement of its financial schemes. Such attempts as railroads, street railways, electric lighting, and other corporations are now making upon the executive and legislative branches of our great cities, would be harmless had not the whole fabric of our politics been so weakened by the dry rot of spoils as to be unable to bear the strain.

Far more alarming than the hideous union of Tammany with crime of the vulgar sort, which the recent political revolution in New York city brought so vividly to public view, is this alliance between the machine and great corporations, which have at least the appearance of respectability. The startling anomaly is presented of the management of great corporations, including men of the greatest religious and financial prominence, with those who form part of the machine, and are known to control political action by corrupt means. Perhaps in no city of the country is this alliance more conspicuous and more perfected, and more lamentable in its outcome, than in the city of Philadelphia—though by no means is it confined to Philadelphia.

While such a union between corrupt elements of the community is a burden and a loss to all, that burden and loss must ultimately be felt especially by wage-earners and their families. The great corporations in Philadelphia have been the great corrupters of our city councils, where for many years they have maintained a working majority in both branches entirely subservient to their wishes. Their lobbyists, who at the same time hold prominent positions in local politics, openly appear on the floor of both chambers controlling legislation in the interests of their respective companies. Franchises of enormous value, which, if properly managed, would yield a revenue of millions of dollars to the city annually are in this way lost to the public, and yield great fortunes to those who secure them. One of the most prominent and influential of our politicians was during the past winter publicly denounced on the floor of the United States Senate by the most powerful politician of the state, for being in the pay of a great corporation, under whose orders his accuser alleged he had been obliged to break his promise to support in the convention the slated mayoralty nominee. This charge was never denied, and the public did not doubt its correctness. But what was the gravamen of this charge? That the local boss referred to was a lobbyist, paid to corrupt the councils of the city, and thereby to secure legislation which the corporation desired; that the candidate whom he had promised to support was one distasteful to the corporation, and that it had power to control the lobbyist's actions. This same local boss was shown by a leading newspaper of the city to have purchased during the last year more than $100,000 worth of real estate, although engaged in no ostensible business. Philadelphia has recently built by contract a great reservoir, which cost her $1,500,000, and which, when finished, it was discovered, would not hold water. The city is now called upon to pay $250,000 additional to put it in condition to serve its purpose. It is even likely that a much larger sum will be required. The city is in urgent need of a purer and larger water supply than she now has. No help in this important matter can be obtained from official sources, and so a committee of public-spirited citizens comes forward with a donation of many months of unpaid toil. They propose to erect a filtering plant which shall bring us the boon of pure water. And why were there no public funds? Because every kind of abuse and corruption, the result of half a century of the spoils system and of blind unreasoning partisanship, which has obliged loyal party adherents to accept the leadership of even known thieves and tricksters, have squandered the ample revenues of the city.

The story of New York and of Philadelphia is in substance the story of Baltimore, of Cincinnati, of Chicago, of San Francisco, of New Orleans, of nearly all the great cities of the country. It presents to us the twin problems of civil service reform and of municipal reform, and not only as local necessities but as national needs—problems which are the personal concern of every tax-payer who must bear their weight financially, but more especially, I prefer to think, of every citizen and patriot who must bear before the world the deep disgrace of failure to solve them. But if there be any one part of our whole people above another who have a vital interest in driving the spoils system from American politics and corruption from American cities, it is those whom we call, for want of a better title, laboring men and wage-earners.

THE STRUGGLE FOR REFORM IN NEW YORK.

First and foremost, that question is one of police reform. If the commissioners are not bound in honor and by their oaths to effect that reform, then they have no bounden duty whatever. Remember that an opportunity to reorganize the force by a general law passed for that purpose was wickedly denied them by a combination of the powers of darkness in control of the legislature. Remember that the partial, the blackmailing, the terrorizing enforcement of the excise law was one of the chief engines of police corruption and demoralization. Remember that the old force is to-day practically intact. A few intriguers-in-chief have been put off it, but the mass of the old men are still there. Have they lost their itching palms? Have they forgotten how to threaten, to intimidate? Are they not still acquainted with the devious ways that connect the Sunday saloon with the headquarters of political power and favoritism, and with wholesale bribery and extortion? Being what they are, knowing what they do, no more sure and deadly device could be thought of to prevent a change of spirit and of method in the police force than a relapse into the old haphazard, iniquitous way of enforcing, or failing to enforce, the excise law. Simply as executive officers, charged with the solemn duty of making the New York police a body of honest and trusty men, the police commissioners could do no other than they have done. Have the people of New York so soon forgot the pit of shame whence they were digged last November? Do they no longer remember those horrible disclosures of crime by the guardians of the city against crime, which made the metropolis a hissing and a by-word? No part of those revelations, which were so pitiless and pelting that they brought a blush even to the brazen face of the Sun, and set it to mumbling hypocritically for one day about the need of reform—no part of those revelations was more complete and crushing than the showing up of the intimate connection of the Sun's precious excise law with police corruption. A "dead-letter" law, indeed! It was rather a Tammanyized lettre de cachet, the ready and purchased instrument of the greed, the lust, the revenge of the harpies who made the law their sport and tool. It was the very symbol and embodiment of arbitrary discrimination between man and man, between class and class, of oppression and exaction, of chicane and treachery, of bought immunity and of blood-money.—New York Evening Post, July 15.

That the existing excise laws are to be rigorously enforced was made evident by Mayor Strong and President Roosevelt in the mayor's office yesterday, when the delegation of the United Societies for Liberal Sunday Laws called to urge a less stringent course.

Internal Revenue Collector Edward Grosse and Ex-Assemblyman Otto Kempner did most of the talking for the liberal Sunday laws men.

In the crowd that was in the mayor's office were delegates from the German-American Reform Union. The substance of what the mayor's visitors wanted was a disregard of the excise laws on Sunday.

"If I had it in my power," said Mayor Strong to the delegates, "I would allow the sale of beer on Sunday. I am ready to co-operate with you at the next session of the legislature in securing more liberal legislation on that point. I shall be criticised for this, but I can't help it.

"But I want to say that so long as the present law exists it must be enforced. It is the only way."

That was the only placatory statement of the mayor.

In the course of Kempner's tirade, he threatened President Roosevelt with political annihilation. Mr. Roosevelt, with clenched fist, declared that he was not working for office. He was only doing his duty, he added.

Not since Mayor Strong took office has there been such a stormy gathering of citizens in his office to vent their views. The mayor received his visitors graciously and everything went smoothly until Otto Kempner, Internal Revenue Collector Edward Grosse, and Sheriff Tamsen began to say hard things about reform and the present administration. Then the mayor looked angry. He did not mince words, but told those present he did not fear a political death, and that he would close every saloon.

The feature of the meeting, however, was an altercation between President Roosevelt and Internal Revenue Collector Grosse. Mr. Grosse began by asking the mayor quietly if he could not have the law enforced less severely. The mayor leaned against his desk, and replied:

"I tell you, boys, as long as the law is on the statute books, it has to be enforced. There is no getting over that fact. Now you know the best way to get rid of an obnoxious law is to enforce it, and when the legislature meets, why it can be repealed. I believe in a quiet drinking resort, where a man can take his family, but it is beyond me to say, 'You must close this place and leave that one open,' which is what you practically ask me to do. Then, again, even saloon-keepers want Sunday for rest."

Then Sheriff Tamsen made this novel proposition:

"Mr. Mayor, while you are about it, you should stop the street cars and close the stores. That is what the law means."

Mr. Grosse interrupted and said that the present administration was becoming despotic, and using drastic measures, and that its course was impolitic. He prophesied that at the next election the people would rise up and sweep the party that the commissioner and the mayor belonged to from power. He said that if the people had known how strictly the law was going to be enforced, President Roosevelt would not be commissioner of police, and that Mayor Strong would not be in the mayor's chair. He said that President Roosevelt was running the risk of being consigned to political oblivion.

President Roosevelt stepped forward and said:

"Just let me answer that argument. He has defined the issues, and I will meet them squarely, and face to face."

"Hold on," said Otto Kempner, who also had been interrupting Mr. Grosse, "I want a chance to speak."

"We'll hear you later," said the mayor.

"No, I want to be heard now," said Mr. Kempner. "I want President Roosevelt to answer my arguments."

"With pleasure," said President Roosevelt.

"Mr. Chairman," began Otto Kempner; "excuse me—Mr. Mayor—are we to understand that the law is to be enforced? Are the people to be deprived of their rights? Do you know that you are playing into the hands of Tammany Hall?" Mr. Kempner said this with a grand rhetorical flourish, and looked at his honor as if it would be unwise to say no, but that is just what his honor did.

"Mr. Kempner, I mean to enforce the laws. I have sworn to do so," replied the mayor. "I will do so. You might as well understand it. I will, I will," repeated the mayor emphatically.

Mr. Kempner was not prepared for such a decided answer, but he went on:

"Then, Mr. Mayor, Tammany Hall, that we thought we had crushed to the ground, will rise again, and the people will put it in power. Why, the citizens that voted for you thought that they would not be deprived of Sunday beer, and—"

"Hold on!" said the mayor. "The people who voted for me made the mistake of their lives, if they thought that I would not enforce the laws."

Then Mr. Kempner said something that made the mayor very angry.

"It's an asinine exercise of official authority. It's puritanical. Only bigots would enforce such laws," was the remark.

"What occasion is there for suddenly enforcing this law? Has crime become rampant? No! Then why, oh! why, have you deprived us of our rights?" asked Kempner.

"This is the first time that I knew that I was responsible for the last legislature," said the mayor, sarcastically.

"This is a democratic republic," broke in Grosse, "and when the laws are not upheld by popular sentiment, they should not be enforced."

"Indeed!" said the mayor. "Well, as long as I am at the city hall they will be enforced, and enforced to the letter, too."

President Roosevelt then took the floor, and directed his remarks to Collector Grosse and Otto Kempner.

"You have threatened that it means political disaster to me," he said. "Now listen If it meant a hundred political deaths for me to do my duty, I would do it. I would not budge an inch. Nothing can swerve me. I may never be heard of again, but I will have kept my oath of office. You, Mr. Grosse and Mr. Kempner, stand here as the champions of a vicious and corrupt system of the lax enforcement of the law—"

"I object to such statements. It is not true," interrupted Mr. Grosse.

"No, no, it's not so. He does not," chorused part of those present.

President Roosevelt tried to raise his voice above the tumult, but could not, and became angry at the failure to show him the courtesy that he had exhibited toward them when they attacked him and the mayor.

Finally the noise subsided, and President Roosevelt continued. He said that while Mr. Grosse and Mr. Kempler might be sincere personally they represented a vicious system nevertheless; at which repetition of the statement the tumult broke forth afresh.

President Roosevelt said that to enforce the law laxly was to favor the big man with a pull, and be harsh on the small one without a pull. He said that he would betray his trust if he attempted to discriminate.—New York Times, June 30.

* * *

"Gen." James S. Clarkson has been in this city off and on the last few days. He is staying at Long Branch, and runs up to town almost every day. Mr. Clarkson is the republican national committeeman from Iowa. He believes this fact qualifies him to criticize the action of New York republicans, especially Mayor Strong and President Roosevelt of the police department. Mr. Clarkson, of Iowa, objects to the way President Roosevelt is enforcing the excise laws, which he says at least eighty or ninety per cent. of the people are opposed to, and which for a number of years have been a dead letter. He also objects because he hears many young men who voted the republican ticket saying they can not get their beer on Sunday, and that for that reason they do not want to vote the republican ticket again. He hears these things on the boat coming up from Long Branch.

* * *

The excise law they did not dig up out of a refuse heap. They found it dating only from 1892, a law passed by the men who now shriek loudest against its enforcement, a law accepted by the chosen representatives of this city, a law corruptly used for the basest personal and political ends, and they said: "That law we will enforce without fear or favor. No man shall escape from its sweep by bribery or favoritism; no policeman shall profit by winking at its disregard, either in place or pocket. Our highest duty is to make the police a body above reproach or suspicion. To that end we will strike utterly down this part of the system which has been synonymous with connivance and fraud and oppression."

There is a fine and high moral note about this to which it is discouraging to find the press and the public so little responsive. We are so used to shuffling in office that we seem not to know clear straightforwardness and courage when we see them. When we got our present police board, we were congratulating ourselves on having such fine-fibered public servants. Yet when their fine fiber shows itself, we are astonished, almost alarmed. Why do men like Mr. Roosevelt take office except to show the trimmers and the trucklers what an honest gentleman will do in their place? We mention him only because he is the official head of the board, only because he peculiarly represents the scholar and the gentleman in politics. Happily, the board is a unit with him on this question. All the members we are glad to believe, are as ready as he to put the clamor of the politicians aside, to swear to their own hurt and change not, to do what they conceive to be their simple duty and let the consequences take care of themselves. Whatever may be the outcome of the agitation—and that it will lead to an immense change for the better in our present intolerable condition we can not doubt—the display of high-mindedness and convinced courage which our police commissioners have given us will not be lost to the city. It means a higher standard of civic duty, which it will not be easy to forget even if others lapse from it, and it will long serve to rebuke and reassure us when we are tempted to say that public officials of fearless and unflinching integrity are no more.—New York Evening Post.

* * *

The board of managers of the United Societies for Liberal Sunday Laws met last night at Terrace Garden, and decided, in view of the determination of Mayor Strong and President Roosevelt of the police department to enforce the excise laws, that relief must be obtained from the legislature. Many prominent German societies were represented. John B. Pannes presided, and it was decided to attempt to secure more liberal Sunday excise laws by legislative action, preceded by agitation throughout the state, as shown by the following resolutions:

The undersigned citizens of New York are of the opinion that the mitigation of the so-called Sunday law is in a high degree desirable, and in the interest of public harmony and of popular respect for the laws, even necessary. But we are also convinced that this mitigation depends upon the legislative power and not upon the arbitrary pleasure of the executive officers of municipalities; that such officers are bound by their official oath to enforce to the full extent of their power the laws as they find them, irrespective of persons or of their own opinions concerning the desirability of those laws, and that even if any laws should in the long run prove incapable of enforcement, the officers are constrained by their duty at least to make an honest effort to enforce them.

We consider it, therefore, a great wrong to make the conscientious execution of the laws on the part of these officers a matter of reproach, no matter whether the law in question be ever so unpopular, for it does not lie in their discretion to determine which law is to be enforced and which is not to be.

On the contrary, all good citizens have reason to rejoice, that after a period of shameful corruption, oppressive tyranny, and robbery, which was made possible only by an arbitrary disregard of the laws, the government of law, the foundation of public order and honest administration, has been restored, and that we have once more officers who take their duties seriously; for, did they not do that, did they permit themselves now to be induced to leave any laws at pleasure unexecuted, this would lead to a restoration of the old corrupt and lawless condition.

When the people suffer under the effect of improper laws, the remedy is to be sought in the abrogation or amendment of such laws by the legislature, and not in the demoralization of municipal officers through efforts to seduce them from the performance of their sworn duties. In the present case, all those who, with regard to the Sunday law, are of the same mind with us, should, without distinction of party, unite their efforts in an endeavor to obtain from the legislature to be elected next fall the submission of this question of the local option of the municipalities concerned.

C. SCHURZ,
A. V. BRIESEN,
GUSTAV H. SCHWAB,
JACOB H. SCHIFF,
PERCIVAL KNAUTH,
N. CILLIS,
JOHN B. PANNES.

* * *

ROOSEVELT BEFORE GOOD GOVERNMENT CLUB G, JULY 11.

First—As police commissioners we propose to act, not as republicans or democrats, protectionists or free-traders, but simply as custodians of the law in the interests of all decent citizens. And we have ignored every question except the question of enforcing the law and standing by the men who have acted rightly.

The other day we recognized a policeman who had been on the force only two months and who did his duty. A noted fellow citizen, the Hon Michael Callahan, had a big saloon. (Michael J. Callahan (Tam.).—Keeps two saloons; is known as a "tough;" one of his assaults was committed two weeks ago upon a respectable citizen; his "pull" with Police Justice Divver saved him from punishment.—N. Y. Evening Post's Voters' Directory, 1893.) He was a big man. We could not touch him, it was said, for he had a "pull." But we did touch him. This policeman arrested him and took him to the police station, and on the way Callahan's compatriots knocked the policeman down and stamped on him. And some of them got arrested to.

The next morning we saw arrayed in court against one another, the simple policeman, without a "pull," and the big man, the local politician, who had brought to court with him one congressman, one state senator, and one alderman—a sample of each kind—and others, whose word supplanted the law twelve months ago in this city. Twelve months ago there would have been no doubt of the issue of this case. The policeman would have been rebuked, and would have learned that we had in this city an aristocracy that could not be touched. And there is no doubt now, except that now it is dead certain to go the other way.

It will help every man on the force when he disregards the "pull" and stands up for his duty as he sees it.

We have to make certain promotions. Under the old methods the least objectionable way was through the "ward boss" and "ward heeler;" the most objectionable way was by purchase outright.

The last three promotions were made without a knowledge on my part of the men's politics or religion, and I do not care what they are. One rescued a woman from drowning, and on looking up his record, we found he had saved twenty-five lives, without receiving recognition from his superiors. But congress twice recognized his services. We promoted him on probation. If he has no executive ability, no amount of heroism will keep him there; if he has, he will stick.

The second man ran down two burglars one day and the next week he jumped into the railroad tunnel and captured another. We've put him up. He will keep his position on his merits, because we think it the decent thing to do.

The third was a patrolman who killed a man in self-defense. A laborer ran amuck with a knife and tried to murder his "boss," a contractor, and then he turned upon the policeman, who had to shoot him. The contractor sent the policeman $100 for saving his life, but the policeman returned it, and asked the contractor to send it to the widow of the man he killed.

We have established the rule in the force that corrupt or inefficient men, no matter what friends they have, or what influence, must go. On the other hand, he who shows himself to be efficient and capable of those higher deeds which are grouped as heroism, is going to receive the recognition his merits demand. And we feel sure that in this way we can bring the force up to the highest standard and make it an object of rightful pride to the whole city.

The one thing more corrupting and debasing than anything else is the political "pull."

* * *

Government by blackmail is the kind of government that Tammany Hall provided for us, for how long a time there is no means of knowing. The facts were notorious for many years, but were not distinctly proven until the Lexow investigation took place. Then came a perfect flood of testimony, and it is still flowing. That of the editor of the Wine and Spirit Gazette is not the least interesting. He says that the police levied blackmail on the saloon-keepers, using the Sunday laws as the instrument of extortion. The blackmail was paid until the amount became excessive. Then

"A committee of the central association of liquor-dealers took up the matter and called upon Police Commissioner Martin. An agreement was then made between the leaders of Tammany Hall and the liquor-dealers, according to which the monetary blackmail paid to the police should be discontinued in return for political support. In other words, the retail dealers should bind themselves to solidly support the Tammany ticket in consideration of the discontinuance of the monetary blackmail by the police. This agreement was carried out. Now, what was the consequence? If the liquor-dealer, after the monetary blackmail ceased, showed any signs of independence, the Tammany Hall district leader would give the tip to the police captain, and that man would be 'pulled,' and arrested on the following Sunday."—New York Evening Post.

* * *

A police surgeon of many years' experience assures us that the morale of the police force has been remarkably improved by the course pursued by the police board. He says that the men have discovered that the "pull" has ceased to be the controlling power in the department, and that merit is now the only basis for good standing or advancement. The conduct of the commissioners in not only sustaining members of the force who do their duty fearlessly, without regard to political or other considerations, but in commending them publicly is having an excellent effect. The best members of the force are rejoiced at the new order of things, for all that they have ever desired is to be judged according to their deserts, and the poorer members are conscious that the only way by which they can be certain of remaining upon the force is by mending their conduct. Every one who takes the trouble to sound public opinion on the present vigorous effort to enforce the Sunday excise laws must be struck with the growing sentiment in support of the police board's action. There are plenty of people to be found who speak contemptuously of the law, but few of these take the ground that in enforcing the law the police board is to be censured. There is a growing opinion also that if the city were to vote on the question of Sunday selling, under a local option law, it is by no means certain that a majority would be found in the affirmative. It is to be borne in mind that the Catholic and Protestant churches would be united against Sunday selling, which would be a very powerful combination. Then, too, any one who has sounded sentiment among the poorer classes is aware of the fact that thousands of them would be glad to vote to have the saloons closed and kept closed on Sunday. Finally, there is nothing so popular in this community as pluck and courage and fearless performance of duty by police officials, and the police commissioners are winning that kind of support now, and are making converts to the cause of law and order.—New York Evening Post, July 5.

* * *

Talk of Tammany reorganization is not half so significant of the reviving spirit of the enemy of honest government as is the current misrepresentation of the efforts of the police to maintain law and order. It is a mode of attack too characteristic to be mistaken. Last Sunday 138 arrests were made for selling liquor. On Sunday, January 14, 1894, when Jimmy Martin and John C. Sheehan were the master spirits of the police force, the record was 150 arrests for the same offense, while under the Platt-Tammany Commissioners, Murray and Kerwin, the returns were 291 arrests for Sunday, January 20, 1895. Yet we are told that President Roosevelt and his colleagues are arrogantly enforcing a law which public sentiment made a dead letter. When did it die? Certainly not in Tammany times. What was the Pantata? A high police officer under Tammany commissioners, to whom an association of Bohemian saloon-keepers paid $125 a month for being allowed to evade the law by selling liquor on Sunday, while their less shrewd or more honest fellows kept their bars closed or suffered arrest. Was it a dead law that filled the pigeon-holes of the Tammany district-attorney's office with thousands of indictments against liquor-dealers who did not pay tax to Tammany and were caught doing business on Sunday? Now because there is no one to collect blackmail for immunity from the law there is an outcry against "Puritan despotism."

The hue and cry against the action of the police commissioners finds its most practical explanation in such sentences as these: "How the brewers are affected; loss each Sunday over $165,000."—New York Evening Post, July 18.

* * *

"Commissioner Faure, of the department of charities and corrections, for instance, yesterday simply acted as a good citizen," said Mr. Roosevelt. "He brought to our attention a flagrant violation of the law in a certain precinct by a wealthy and influential saloon keeper. The circumstances, as he detailed them, show that the policeman on the beat must have known of this violation of the law, and that the acting captain of the precinct either did know or ought to have known. We shall reduce the acting captain, try the patrolman and see that the saloon is closed."

From the impressive manner in which Mr. Roosevelt uttered this statement there is no doubt that severe punishment will be meted out to these negligent members of the police force.

"Where men will assist the police as effectually as Commissioner Faure," continued Mr. Roosevelt, "they can be of the utmost service, but a mere general statement that the law is not being observed, or that half of the saloons are not shut, does not amount to anything. It is presumably untrue and always useless. The persons, moreover, who send anonymous communications are wasting their time ninety-nine times out of a hundred. On the other hand, the work by a responsible individual who gives us dates, facts and figures is invaluable."

"One or two of the branches of the city vigilance league, for instance, have already excellently prepared statistics of violations, or seeming violations, of the law in certain precincts, which form the basis of investigations which I am at this moment carrying on."—New York Times, July 24.

* * *

ROOSEVELT BEFORE GOOD GOVERNMENT CLUB I (GERMAN).

Mr. Roosevelt began his speech by saying: "I care nothing for the birthplace of those whom I address, because I speak as an American to fellow-Americans." Taking up the allegation that crime has increased under the new administration of the police department, he said:

The last few days certain statements have appeared in some of the papers to the effect that under the new administration of the police department crimes in this city have increased. These statements are absolutely false. I hold in my hand the official figures giving the total number of felonies reported at the station-houses and the total number of arrests for felonies during the first three months of the present year, when the old organization of the department was still undisturbed, as compared with the last six weeks, during which time the force has been absolutely under the new direction. The total number of felonies reported during January, February and March was 759. During the month of June and the first half of July the total number was 313, an average of less than seven a day, as against an average of eight and a half for the first three months of the year.

The arrests for felonies cover a large number of felonies not reported at the station-houses. When an officer sees a felony committed he makes an arrest and reports it as an arrest and not a felony. For the first three months of the year the total arrests for felonies was 912, while for the past six weeks the total has been 481. In other words, under the old regime arrests averaged a trifle over ten per day but in the last six weeks, owing to greater activity and zeal on the part of the police, the arrests for felony have averaged nearly eleven a day.

Replying to Senator Hill's letters on the enforcement of the excise laws, Mr. Roosevelt said:

Senator Hill has done me the honor to take me as the antitype of his political methods and political views, and has singled me out for attack in connection with the excise law. Senator Hill's complaint is that I honestly enforce the law, which he and Tammany put upon the statute book, with the full belief and intention that it would not be honestly enforced. I do not usually ascribe motives, and I would ordinarily hesitate, in speaking of a United States senator, to say that his governor and his legislature (for he controlled them both absolutely) deliberately enacted a law which they deliberately intended to be dishonestly executed; but I do not have to ascribe motives in this case, for Senator Hill's letter is in effect a frank avowal that these were the motives which actuated the Tammany legislature that passed the present law.

This law is being honestly enforced, and Senator Hill's assault upon that honest enforcement is tantamount to the admission, in the first place, that it never has been honestly enforced before, and in the next place that he had never expected it to be honestly enforced. He kept silent while the law which the people had put in the statute books was contemptuously violated in the interest of corruption. He clamors now that it is administered by officers who pay no heed to money or political influence, and who deal equal justice to the poor and rich alike.

A more humiliating position was never taken by a public man than this position which has been taken by Senator Hill. It is but natural that he and Tammany should grow wild with anger at the honest enforcement of the law, for it was a law which was intended to be the most potent weapon in keeping the saloons subservient allies of Mr. Hill's machine.

This Sunday excise law has never been a dead letter. It has always been enforced against the man without money and without political influence. It was passed with the deliberate purpose of keeping a sword over the neck of every saloon-keeper who did not render abjectly faithful service to Tammany Hall, and to the state machine which Tammany Hall served.

I do not wonder that Senator Hill raises an outcry against its enforcement. It was not meant to be honestly enforced. It was meant to be used to blackmail and browbeat the saloon-keepers who were not the slaves of Tammany Hall; while the big Tammany Hall bosses who owned saloons were allowed to violate the law with impunity and to corrupt the police force at will. With a law such as this enforced only against the poor or the honest man, and violated with impunity by every rich scoundrel and every corrupt politician, the machine did indeed seem to have its yoke on the neck of the people. But we threw off that yoke; and no special pleading of Senator Hill can avail to make us put it on.

But it is a shame and disgrace to the state that one of its United States senators should venture openly to appear as a champion of the dishonest enforcement of law; for that is all that is meant by this outcry in favor of enforcing the laws liberally, exactly as Tammany Hall enforced them. Remember, this law was no dead letter. It was always enforced against some people. During the year before I came into office something like 5,000 arrests were made for violation of the Sunday excise law. Think of that—5,000 arrests! Our arrests have only been a little more numerous proportionately. But, whereas in the old days men with a "pull" went scot free, we, on the contrary, have taken particular pains to see that it was the man with a "pull" whose store was closed. Every honest liquor-dealer owes a debt of gratitude for rescuing him from bondage. Under the old system, he either had to keep open by bribery of some sort, or else he had to be closed and see his less honest rival gather in his trade. Under the new system we treat all alike, and the honest man no longer sees the premium paid for dishonesty.

In the true spirit of the demagogue, Senator Hill, with utter disregard of the facts, asserts that this is a discrimination against the poor man and in favor of the rich, and draws a contrast between me taking a champagne dinner on Sunday at the Union League Club and the poor man, to whom I deny his Sunday beer. As to me, his statement is false, and is made out of the whole cloth. This is so unimportant that I merely allude to it in passing as offering a fair gauge by which to test the truthfulness of a man who, in talking to an antagonist, is content to make assertions based on the idlest and most vapid newspaper chatter, but it is important to point out the falsity of Senator Hill's main charge that we discriminate against the poor.

On the contrary, the discrimination against the poor was under the old system of corruption. Where justice is bought, where favor is the price of money or political influence, the rich man had his own and the poor man went to the wall. Now all are treated exactly alike. As a matter of fact, we, members of the police board, have attacked the richest organization in New York. The brewers and liquor-sellers represent more combined capital, and capital which is more often lavished in controlling elections, than is the case with any other organization.

The honest brewer and the honest liquor-seller have no cause of quarrel with us; but the dishonest, the men who approved of corruption and thrived under it, they see their dishonest gains taken away. They see the hold which they have had over the police force removed, and as that police force is made honest, their wrath is naturally as bitter as it is unscrupulous. I do not wonder at the ferocity, I do not wonder at the venom of their higher allies in the newspaper press; I do not wonder that Senator Hill has come promptly to their support.

But if I do not wonder, still less do I care. It is a matter of absolute indifference to me what they say. The laws will be enforced by the police exactly as we are enforcing them now. All honest and law-abiding citizens are in honor bound to give us their support; but whether they do or do not give it we shall not refrain from doing our duty.

United States Senator Hill speaks euphemistically, and carefully avoids saying in so many words that he wishes us to violate the law; but one of his supporters, State Senator Cantor, is less mealy-mouthed and comes out boldly, insisting that the officers appointed to enforce all laws should connive at the violation of this law. Yet this same Mr. Cantor, who openly advocates having the executive officers connive at the violation of the laws they have sworn to enforce, is actually talked about for a high judicial position. It would surely be a strange spectacle to see in New York elected to a judicial office a man capable of defending so shameful a prostitution of justice.

The question is merely, Are the laws to be honestly enforced? This question is to me so simple, so easily answered, that I can hardly understand how any man who is both honest and intelligent can fail to give us his support. There are, of course, plenty of scoundrels to raise a hue and cry against us; and I am sorry to say they are backed by some weak men who do not understand the situation, by some honest men of muddled minds, and by some who are contented to announce, in the language of the Scripture, "that their god is their belly," and that they would much rather see dishonesty crowned king and corruption flourish than obey the law when they think it interferes with their appetites.

Nothing is worse for a community than to have on the statute-books laws which are but partially enforced, and to encourage the law-makers to enact legislation which shall remain a dead letter. Every honest officer ought to enforce the law, and I earnestly hope that one result of the enforcement of the law by the police will be to show our legislators, both at Albany and in the board of aldermen, that they must not put or leave on the statute-books a single law which they do not think ought to be enforced.

The demagogue has dared to complain that we were favoring the rich against the poor. The fact is that these demagogues know well that it is they themselves who are champions of a powerful and, until our advent, an illegal, favored class—the class of rich brewers and the rich liquor-sellers who made money with greater ease than any others in the community, and who are furious because their illegal gains have at last been stopped by officers who can neither be threatened nor bought into connivance at wrongdoing.

The illegal sale of liquor, especially on Sunday, has been in the past a source of corruption. It is something we are bound to root out. In the interests of decency and morality we shall enforce all laws so far as we have the physical power. That is what we are here for.

We are not a legislative body, and, as I said, I think one effect of our action will be to prevent the legislature from passing laws which are not meant to be enforced, and to persuade it hereafter to exercise care in the laws it leaves on the statute-books.

* * *

"As long," continued the victim of police proscription [Harry Hill], "as the present law exists, and it is not heartily and impartially enforced, just so long will it be used by politicians to attain their ends, and by the police to levy tribute or gratify revenge—I speak 'by the card.'"

"Because I would not submit to be classified and booked for so much a week for police tribute, the order was given that I was not to be allowed to live in New York, and the order was carried out. They tried to harm me even after they had convinced me that I was a marked man; but to their credit, be it said, the Brooklyn police were not influenced by what my enemies on the other side of the East river said about me.

"In speaking of Mr. Roosevelt's dealing with the excise question, I speak admiringly but regretfully. I am, as a publican, in hearty sympathy with the saloon-keepers who suffer, while I know of the evils that come of not enforcing a law properly, but of using it as a club against men obnoxious to politicians or grasping police officials.

"And I won't bar any political party either, republican though I am. There were times when both the democratic and republican parties could have changed the law, but it was too valuable a factor in their schemes."

You say you do not expect any remedy from the legislature; I deem it by no means impossible under existing circumstances. You predict only that the Germans of New York will at any price drive out the present municipal administration, and put in its place one favorable to Sunday liberty, of whatever elements it may otherwise be composed. I have a better opinion of the Germans of New York. If your agitation, as at present conducted, were to be successful, it would inevitably lead to the restoration of Tammany rule. I assume, of course, that this is not your purpose, although your prediction might have had more the character of a warning than of an incitement. In any event, I am convinced that a large majority of the Germans of New York will at no price consent to lend a helping hand to such a betrayal of the common weal as the restoration of Tammany rule would be.

* * *

During nearly forty years I have been more or less active in public life, and I have always had the honor of the German name in America at heart. Often have I had to repel the aspersion that, good people as Germans may be, they are apt to forget everything else soon as their beer is touched. I have always treated this as a revolting calumny. A comparatively small number of reckless and noisy shouters may sometimes have given color to this accusation, but the overwhelming majority of the Germans looked at the rights and duties of American citizenship from a much higher standpoint.

The Germans of New York are no exception to the rule. They will, in this emergency, surely do what is right and worthy of the German name. While ever as much in favor of a more liberal Sunday law, they will remember that this is neither the only nor the most valuable object of their endeavors. Although the recent struggle for good municipal government may not have yielded all the fruit they desired, yet, as good citizens, they recognize it as their duty to preserve and develop all the good results it did yield.

The corruption of the police was the most dangerous evil afflicting the community. Whoever furnishes the city an efficient, incorruptible and dutiful police will confer upon it an inestimable benefaction and deserve the gratitude of every decent citizen. The men now at the head of the department are honestly endeavoring to do this, and the Germans will not imperil the success of that endeavor by demanding that the old demoralizing business of selling permission for violating the Sunday law be continued. They wish to attain the desired Sunday liberty, not by a demoralizing circumvention of the law, but by an orderly change of the law.

If this change does not come as quickly as they would have it, they will certainly not raise the alternative, "Either Sunday beer or Tammany." They will not forget that the accomplishment of reforms in a democratic community usually requires patience, and that he who means to be a good citizen of a republic must cultivate that patience. They will remember that the liberal current which has given us of late years public Sunday concerts and open museums, promises soon to loosen other unreasonable restraints. They will, with calm perseverance and in a lawful manner, continue their efforts until the Sunday question is submitted in the spirit of home rule to the local option of the people of New York city. And thus they will reach their aim, remaining true to the cause of good government and preserving the respect and confidence of their fellow-citizens.—Carl Schurz, in the Staats Zeitung.

* * *

GUSTAV H. SCHWAB.

My position is like that taken by Mr. Schurz. He spoke the sentiment prevailing among our German citizens. The Germans are an order-loving people. They believe in the observance of law. Laws on the statute books should be enforced. Mr. Roosevelt's action is entirely right. If laws are obnoxious, a remedy for them should be sought in the proper way—by legislative repeal or by local option provisions, so that the city authorities might deal with the matter. There can be not only no possible sense or justification in the evasion of existing laws, but it is the sworn duty of public officers to enforce them. The public should commend officers who perform this duty.

* * *

Everett P. Wheeler, when asked what he thought about the policy of the police board, said: "It is one of those delicate questions upon which I do not care to express an opinion. I can not without giving the matter more thought than I have at present, nor can I say whether I approve or disapprove of Mr. Roosevelt's course."

* * *

Simon Sterne said: "Every enforcement of the law, of course, benefits the community; but if you ask me whether we are not likely to pay a fearful penalty for any very rigid enforcement of the excise law, I should be tempted to say that in all probability we will have to pay that penalty."

"In what way?" asked the reporter.

"By the reinstatement of Tammany," replied Mr. Sterne. "The law was passed to keep the liquor element in the city of New York in terror of the powers that be. Any man can complain of the commissioners, who are simply carrying out the law from a sense of duty, very much like the sheriff who has got an execution against a runaway locomotive. It is dangerous work for the sheriff and his posse to serve such an execution. They are doing their duty, but the locomotive may hurt them."

* * *

The New York Staats-Zeitung, a German newspaper of high character, sees fit to indulge in lamentations because the New York Germans—meaning American citizens of the metropolis of German birth or extraction—are not a unit in condemning the zeal with which the reform administration is trying to enforce the excise laws, especially that provision which forbids the sale of stimulating drinks on Sunday.

* * *

All laws are to be enforced, but in the order of their importance; all crimes will be punished, but in the order of their seriousness; and those who think they can divert the labors of the board of police from putting out the conflagration by pointing to bonfires are foes of good government, allies of the lawless, and are clamoring in vain.

This is the gist of a statement made by President Roosevelt to-day. He did not want to say anything. The board of police wanted to act without a word of explanation. But the president could not resist the temptation to be plainly understood. So he spoke. He said:

"No effort, direct or indirect, to distract our attention from important crimes and law-breakers to unimportant crimes and law-breakers will succeed. The excise law is going to be enforced right up to the handle, and all the allies of corruption in the department who are desirous of seeing that corruption remain, by trying to befog the main essay, may just as well abandon their efforts. The course of the police commission won't deviate one hand's breadth from the path it has hitherto pursued. We shall enforce all the laws so far as our force will enable us to enforce them. Ultimately we will have them all obeyed, and meanwhile, it is a waste of time for the criminal classes and their allies to try to prevent us from enforcing the vital laws by raising a clamor that we are not enforcing others of less importance.

"I would not allow a policeman to neglect to arrest a burglar on the plea that he was preventing a violation of the Sunday excise law, and so I will not allow a policeman to have a chance to allow the saloon of some man with a pull to violate the law, on the plea that he is looking after a soda-water fountain.

"We will enforce all the laws, however, and I hope that one effect of our efforts will be to make the legislature and the board of aldermen understand that when the police force is both honest and efficient they do not want to put or leave on the statute books any laws which they do not expect to see enforced. The most corrupting and demoralizing thing for the whole community, as well as for the police force, is to have laws on the statute books that are only partially enforced—that are only enforced against the man without a pull. And in the end all decent citizens will see this, no matter how loud, for the minute, may be the clamor of the champions of corruption and disorder."—New York Evening Post, July 15.

* * *

—Says the Atlanta Journal (Dem.): "Only a few years ago civil service reform was generally regarded in this country only as the hobby of a few Arcadian politicians. Hardly anybody expected to see it become more than a theory. Now it is an accomplished fact. It has come to stay. Its scope and its hold on the popular mind are constantly increasing." May 15.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

VOL. II, No. 30.

INDIANAPOLIS, AUGUST, 1895.

TERMS: { One dollar per annum.
10 cents per copy.

Published monthly. Publication office, No. 23 N. Meridian St., Indianapolis, Ind. Address,

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE for August has a characteristic article from Theodore Roosevelt, entitled "Six Years of Civil Service Reform." The article treats of a new phase of the struggle, by going behind the curtain and showing the obstacles met every day by those who have in hand the actual operation of the law. The spite, hatred and disappointed rage at the law, leading fellows like Vilas and Bynum to a constant guerrilla warfare upon it, and how their movements are checkmated by men like Henry Cabot Lodge, are described in a manner entirely interesting. The fight against the spoils system is the history-making struggle of this period, and every man should have the honor or disgrace to which his acts in that struggle entitle him.

PRESIDENT POLK in his own handwriting has clinched the evidence of his own lack of manliness and statesmanship. In his diary brought out in the August Atlantic he says, March 4, 1846:

"A year gone and the pressure for office has not abated. Will this pressure never cease? I most sincerely wish I had no offices to bestow. If I had not it would add much to the happiness and comfort of my position. As it is, I have no offices to bestow without turning out better men than a large majority of those who seek their places."

In May of the following year he writes:

"Almost the whole of my embarrassment in administering the government grows out of the public patronage which it is my duty to dispense."

He had the whole matter in his own hands. The pressure was, as now, applied through congressmen. The constitution and his oath of office required Polk, as they require the President now, to beat off and utterly disregard the men making the assault. There have been many cowardly failures since Polk, but none has been more cowardly or more helpless than his. He was a mere puppet in the hands of his party machine.

IN the line of the CHRONICLE'S apprehension, last month, the report comes from Washington that congressmen will inquire into the recent "spying" of the post-office department upon the conduct of its carriers. This is altogether probable. A congressman will do most anything to get control of votes, no matter how much harm it may do to the public service or to the public welfare generally. Many congressmen take to such work naturally. It is this corrupt tendency of congressmen which makes us doubt the wisdom of allowing classes of public employes to band together in any kind of an association. Their dependence must not be upon congressmen, but upon their superiors in the executive department, and the people must be trusted to deal with those superiors for any misuse of power. There have been too many examples for it to be any longer doubted that the people will overthrow any administration which debauches or abuses the public service. In such a case as the one in hand congressmen have no legitimate power whatever. All they can do when their favorites are made uncomfortable is to vote to cut down the appropriation. This stand-and-deliver practice has made a coward of many a cabinet officer, but we hope it will not do so much longer.

THE restiveness of the carriers at being watched is not a good sign. It would be better for them to mend their ways. The carrier reported from this city as not taking a paper from the outside of the letter-box was guilty of a species of disobligingness not uncommon. It is the spirit of doing no more than the law literally requires, added to a disposition to display independence and have it understood that one who works for the government is not to be dictated to. This is all a mistake. Public servants do not work for the government but for the people, and the people do not and will not feel timid toward their employes. It is true that an employe may for a time cause single persons discomfort and annoyance by being disobliging but his ways will find him out and the same public opinion that protects him against injustice will force him to the wall. Carriers and all others would do well to adopt the rule of doing more—much more—than the law or their superiors require. It will be bread scattered upon the waters. In the meantime it is the duty of the people to uphold the department in its efforts to secure a full eight hours' work for the liberal eight hours' pay.

TAMMANY has been going through the process of registering the decrees of its bosses as to what committeemen and leaders it shall have next year. The signs are universal that it is "the same old Tammany." Of course, in the interest of good government and of honesty and of everything else that is decent and respectable, this organization ought to be broken up. For fifty years it has been a public breeder of blackmail and law-breaking and all manner of immorality. The welfare of the entire country demands the destruction of this organization. Every good citizen should work to this end, but all good citizens do not. We can understand in a measure why ex-Governor Campbell of Ohio should strike hands with Tammany and be glad of a chance to show his sympathy with it, but why President Cleveland should write this public enemy a letter and thus join in its "celebration" of the day of the Declaration of Independence, is beyond our comprehension. The character of the letter had nothing to do with the matter.

EXASPERATION with that form of organized dishonesty, called municipal government, continues to break out in different forms on every hand. In Kansas City a civic federation has been organized, with the determination "to separate municipal and state affairs, and place competent and trustworthy men in office without respect to party lines." In Omaha, politicians and members of the city government were systematically looting the city treasury by having a pull with the treasurer, and borrowing upon their I. O. U's. Threatened with discovery, the treasurer fled, leaving a note saying that he had gone to commit suicide. He got, however, no further than a road-house, and he had such a pull that not only would the council not remove him, but he was not arrested, and held on a week before he resigned. At this home thrust into their pockets, the scales fell from the eyes of Omaha citizens, and one thousand of them, "regardless of party feelings," issued a proclamation calling for the organization of a movement for "the introduction of business methods in the city government." In Denver, the water company, as usual, had a pull. Lower rates or an independent water service was an issue of the election last spring, and was supposed to have been gained. When, however, the ordinance came up, the pull of the water company was found all-sufficient. Citizens with a rope as the emblem of the hangman, confronted the board of aldermen for eight hours, with fifty policemen between them. But it did not avail; the average alderman will face considerable danger rather than not yield to his pull, and the ordinance was passed. Meanwhile, by a vote of seventeen to one, the common council of West Superior, Wis., have impeached the mayor of that city on a charge of extorting money from firemen and policemen.

THE CHRONICLE has endeavored, without malice or fear or prejudice, to show the spoils acts and opinions of a number of prominent reformers, and while the task is ungracious and the assault of reformers themselves is often bitter, it means to go on because the work is necessary.

WHEN the Indianapolis charter was passed, the CHRONICLE pointed out that a Tammany mayor could and would give us Tammany government. Both party machines have at last fully grasped this fact, and they seem disposed to risk the attempt to Tammanyize the city. The charter should have provided an iron-clad labor-service and merit-system, to the end that a Tammany mayor would have been without power to loot the city service. It is not that there are no civil service provisions in the charter which an honest mayor would observe, for there are some broad general provisions; but if a mayor is dishonest and ignores them, there is no adequate remedy. Then we have the fool provision that in the police and fire forces the places shall be "equally divided politically." Be that as it may, the devil seems more determined than ever to play fast and loose with the affairs of Indianapolis. The time has come to form a good government club, whose sole object shall be to take the government of this city out of politics.

IN view of the great advances which this national administration has been making, a recent occurrence at Wabash in this state seems a survival of a past age. For some delinquency the department determined to remove Postmaster Hoover of that place. If a bank or a railroad, or any private enterprise had been going to displace an important official, the business principles upon which it would have selected his successor are well known; and politics would have been unheard of and unthought of in the matter. But the greatest government on earth, with unlimited means of investigation, for a purely business position of high importance calls upon the chairman of the democratic county committee to "name" the man. This brings back the abject administrative weakness and incompetency under which we have struggled for so many years. But the "call" became public, and the Hoover democratic faction at Wabash gathered themselves up and made an onslaught upon the department and swore that Hoover should be kept, right or wrong, competent or incompetent, honest or dishonest. And the department in abject humiliation backed down. Perhaps the people of Wabash can worry along with a postmaster whom the department thought ought to be removed; but that "the trouble has caused considerable bitterness in local democratic ranks," can not be endured, and for that the department must be severely censured.

OUR NEXT MAYOR.

The republicans have nominated our old friend Pres. Trusler, the present city comptroller, as their candidate for mayor. It can not be said that the honor was unsought as Trusler for months has pursued it like a small Quay or Platt. It is true also that not one-tenth of the party went to the primaries, but the party must and should feel responsible for him and will enjoy all the glory which he may cast upon it.

Trusler is in some respects an interesting man. He came up here from Connersville and had a place in the post-office. Off and on he was in the city council, where, if our recollection serves us right, his conservative nature hesitated at departing from the old and safe method of lighting the city by gas, to the new fangled notion of electricity. We think there is a remark of his somewhere on record, made not many years ago, to the effect that it had not been shown that a town could be lighted by electricity. He has been earnest in politics even to the point of physical risk; for, if our recollection again serves us right, he once had a personal encounter, or fight, with one Browder, a fellow-partisan, but of the merits of that controversy or on which side victory perched, we do not pretend to decide.

As a member of the council he took an active interest in the fire department and among other things required the chief, Mr. Webster, to turn out the dozen democrats among the eighty-two firemen. Being refused he led the movement which resulted in the displacement of the chief. True, that transaction caused a great scandal and shook insurance circles from center to circumference, and had much to do with the overwhelming defeat of the republicans which followed and Chief Webster had to be re-instated; but that has all blown over. Trusler has stood by his guns, and the boys have no reason to suppose that if he is elected, Mr. Webster will not again go instanter, and that the police and fire departments will not have a shaking up such as has not been seen in many a day, and "republicans" will find there that pleasant and profitable quartering upon the city treasury which their efforts in heeling, shouting, setting up primaries, and fixing things for Trusler, merit. Possibly this may raise the rate of insurance, but is a small matter like that to stand in the way of putting down monarchical tendencies such as "civil service?"

We can not notice at this time all of Trusler's principles, but there is one which will give eminent satisfaction to the men who bear the heat and burden of the day. Trusler believes in the sinews of war, and that there shall be no shilly-shallying about raising them. We all remember the brilliant boldness with which from his comptroller's office lately he notified policemen and firemen to call and come down with a fixed per cent. of their pay. And when some milksop taxed him about it he laid down this immortal principle: "All appointive offices are political offices and should be paid for by those who get them." There is no gainsaying this and no part of his administration will be more edifying than the thorough and business-like manner in which that principle will be carried out.

As to "civil service," while there is some little squinting in its favor in the platform, Trusler was not present when it was read and no one need hesitate to vote for him fearing that he might feel bound. The fragments of the very considerable system which Mayor Denny has inaugurated can already in the mind's eye be seen flying in all directions. No one need fear that there will be any civil service nonsense about Trusler. The boys in the trenches are going to be taken care of.

We do not feel that any exhortation is necessary, for there is a good deal of enthusiasm. The Indianapolis Journal is already treating us to the thousand phases of Trusler's exploit in refunding some bonds when every money-lender was hunting high and low for a good investment. It has not yet noted how he saved the city money by refusing to allow $8 for tree planting at the city hospital. Cal Darnell, who, when in the council, had thirty henchmen quartered upon the city, is hoping for happy times again when Trusler comes in. All the boys are for Trusler. Every heeler, every striker, every shouter, every political dead beat and every political scalawag is happy and hopeful and full of enthusiasm. To be sure, progress in directions exactly opposite to Truslerism has been almost a tidal-wave in municipal affairs in this country the past year; but Indianapolis wants none of that; she wants to writhe in the grip of bosses and ward heelers.

To this end one can not doubt that the man and the hour have arrived. At one fire station there was once a single democrat. Trusler demanded his dismissal on the ground that he was a "disturbing element." At another time Trusler demanded the dismissal of a captain who had been twenty-two years in the fire department;

"Isn't he a good republican?" was asked.

"Yes."

"Isn't he a good fireman?"

"Yes."

"Well, why should he be dismissed?"

"Because," said Trusler, "he is no friend of mine."

No one can fail to be impressed with the promptness and vigor of this administrator as well as with the cogent reasoning which directs his movements in reducing the affairs of the city of Indianapolis to a business basis. It is only some Miss Nancy who will say that a boss shouldn't own a town, and drive men out of employment whenever his feelings happen to be ruffled.

THE INTEREST OF WAGE EARNERS IN CIVIL SERVICE REFORM.

BY HERBERT WELSH.

Those with few resources standing between them and want are the first to feel the evils of bad government, are the first to feel the weight of increased taxation, and are the most helpless sufferers from it. The machine, the boss, and all other poisonous fruit of the spoils system, have their hands in the pockets of us all, but deepest and most ruinously in those of the workingman. Legislation for the betterment of the condition of the working-man or working-woman, for the protection of life and limb of themselves and their children in workshop and factory, can only be expected to have just treatment from members of state or city legislatures who are really representative of the people. What can be expected of those who hold their seat as paid representatives of unscrupulous capital, nominated and elected to their offices by boss leaders, who, as Senator Quay said of David Martin, are in receipt of a corporation salary large enough to support themselves and their families? What sort of workingmen's friends will such men as they are prove to be?

For a typical spoils system legislature, look at that of Pennsylvania during the last session. Refused to grant money for needed harbor improvements in the Delaware river, resulting already in the transfer of two large steamships to another port; no money for a system of forest management which would have resulted in saving ultimately millions to the state, but large numbers of new places, with large salaries attached, created for the benefit of spoils camp followers; an educational bill killed, which would have brought Philadelphia's school system from the village to the municipal epoch, and have placed it on a level with the progressive educational systems of the country. An oil pipe line bill, framed wholly in the interest of the monopoly, and confessedly deadly to public interests. This, and much more legislation of the same sort, is the direct fruit of spoils and machine politics, and these are the outgrowth, natural and inevitable, of the spoils system. The spoils system can only be destroyed by the rigid and widespread application of civil-service reform. The boss's strength lies in his ability to bribe with office. The application of the merit system alone can deprive him of his bribery fund. Take that from him and his whole fabric of power topples and falls to ruin, and with it venal legislatures and city councils, or boards of aldermen. The rich soil that the corporation lobbyist works to such abundant fruit has become, for capital without conscience, a sterile field. Can not all sincere, intelligent labor leaders see this truth plainly, and can they not see that it is the very first step along the path to better things? Let them be assured that among the so-called capitalistic class there are thousands of earnest men and women who are willing and anxious to join hands with them in redressing whatever real grievances they suffer, and in aiding them to attain a fuller participation in the varied fruits of this rich American land, and of this teeming modern civilization. It is quite certain that there is much strong ground as yet unoccupied which may be jointly held by the laboring man and this class of his friends with manifest advantage to both parties. It is also clear that the direct road leading to this common territory is the reform of the civil service, which will bring honesty, if not wholly honest, politics and the reform of great cities—after all but a branch of civil service reform—which will at once furnish a better, more economical, more commodious, and in every way more fitting home for all of us, but more especially for the laboring man. In this latter great problem, not only must there be eliminated what direct losses he suffers through dishonest or inefficient management of city affairs, but also those which he suffers through failure to receive the fruits of wisely expended revenues, a thousand privileges and opportunities of nobler and richer living which might be his were the coming higher ideals of municipal life and municipal functions realized, and were the now squandered city resources wisely husbanded to obtain them.

HOW THE MERIT SYSTEM IS MOVING ON.

Col. Silas W. Burt, who established his loyalty to civil service reform when naval officer of the port of New York, and is now one of New York state's civil service commissioners, sums up the late advances as follows:

Civil service reform is making more rapid strides than ever. It is winning victories and gaining ground in nearly every direction. Look at Secretary Herbert's action, confirming Secretary Tracy's courageous order extending the system in the navy yards. He has transferred an officer who failed properly to enforce the regulations, and has put another in his place who will enforce them. Look at the action of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, voluntarily seeking the extension of the reform in their department. Look at the action of Public Printer Benedict, joining with his subordinates in asking that his office be brought under the rules of the civil service board. Look at Secretary Carlisle, at last manifesting an interest in the reform, and permitting the internal revenue department to come under its influence. Look at Secretary Morton putting the agricultural department in close touch with the civil service system. Look at the rapid extension of the scope of examinations in this state and city. Witness the remarkable conversion of Public Works Commissioner Brookfield, who wants all the offices put under the civil service rules. Only in Massachusetts has the cause met with a defeat. There the legislature has passed over the governor's veto a bill practically giving every veteran an office who brings a certificate of good character from two citizens, an act absolutely subversive of civil service reform and productive of bad government. Everywhere else the reform is growing. There has been no reaction against it, and there is no prospect of any. I believe that by the end of his term President Cleveland will have put under civil service rules every office which it is possible with the present law to subject to the system.

THE BATTLE OF THE BOSSES.

"I am a candidate for the chairmanship of the republican state committee, and I will feel greatly obliged to you if you will aid in sending friendly delegates from your county to the approaching state convention. If your delegates are elected, please do me the favor personally to see them and request them to co-operate with me in the convention. Any assistance you may render in this matter will be fully appreciated. I trust I may see you in Harrisburg a day or two prior to August 28, when I will have the opportunity to meet you personally."

"Thine very truly,

"M. S. QUAY."

Quay has challenged the republican party of Pennsylvania to an open contest as to whether he shall be recognized as its absolute dictator. Having bossed the legislature, he now announces his candidacy for chairman of the state committee. The present incumbent has made an excellent record, and is entitled to re-election. But he is a member of Gov. Hastings's administration, and as Quay has quarrelled with the executive, the boss insists that the governor's supporter must be "turned down." The issue is made as sharply and clearly as possible. It is simply whether Quay shall be invested with supreme control of the organization. The opponents of the boss show more readiness to fight than usual, and they seem stronger than ever before. Indeed, the surface indications at the start are most unfavorable to Quay. But he has wonderful resources for such a struggle, and he has won more than once when public sentiment in his party was strongly against him. Hitherto, however, he has usually kept more or less under cover, and he loses certain advantages when he makes the contest in an open field. If he does succeed, in the face of all the disadvantages that confront him, his victory will mark the lowest depth that Pennsylvania politics has reached.—New York Evening Post.

"One of the most striking and suggestive features of the present contest in this state," says the Philadelphia Press (rep.), "is the extraordinary zeal with which the democratic papers have espoused the case of Senator Quay. They are unanimous, earnest and untiring on his behalf. They are his ablest and most eager champions, and both their editorial and news columns are devoted every day to promoting his success."

Unexpected opposition has developed at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., against Senator Quay. The two leading republican dailies—the Record and Times—came out in strong articles yesterday against him.

The meekness with which so intelligent a constituency as the republicans of Pennsylvania have long submitted to the dictatorship of men like Cameron and Quay has been a mystery to the country at large. That they retain their power is due to the strength of the party machine which has long existed in Pennsylvania. Describing the operations of this machine, the Philadelphia Evening Telegraph says:

"In Pennsylvania the system of practical politics has been established in every county and in every election district. The humblest political worker at each point knows what is expected of him. Every atom of official spoil is kept for distribution where it will do the most good. A laborer can not secure the whitewashing of a school-house fence without giving allegiance to the local representative of a higher political power. Men can not be elected to the smallest office until they have signed away their liberty and given solemn pledges that they will support those who assume to direct in all such matters. School directors, poor directors, and township, county and borough officers are all thus kept in line. No man thinks of making a successful effort to reach the legislature until he has received indorsement as a candidate. So it is all the way through, the people meanwhile going through the performance of their duties at the primary and general elections in a perfunctory way."

Quay's system of politics has been founded on a purely commercial basis. He deals in a wholesale way with men who can control large numbers of men or large sections of territory. He introduced the principles of the trust or combine into politics. He did not, like the Camerons, build up a personal following. He purchased the support of the leaders or bosses of cities and counties, and as long as the funds of spoils, patronage, and privileges held out his leadership was never seriously disputed.

* * *

Senator Quay had undisputed control in the recently adjourned legislature, and he used it to increase salaries and offices to an extent unparalleled in our history, little thinking that he was thereby placing powerful weapons in the hands of those who would use them for his undoing. When these plans on the state treasury were being put through, the senator and governor were on good terms. Some of the more flagrant instances of this extravagant and uncalled increase are to be found in the creation of a superior court with seven justices at $7,500 per annum each; the new department of public grounds, with a superintendent at $3,000 a year, and a number of new assistants, taking the place of a small body of men who had efficiently looked after the capitol grounds for a comparatively small outlay. Now we have a new department of agriculture, which will take $98,000 to run for two years. The Auditor-general had to have a new deputy at $3,000 not because he required more help, but because a place was needed for a politically useful man. The secretary of internal affairs secured a new deputy at $3,000 a year. Contrary to the constitution (which is said not to count between friends "on the hill"), the adjutant-general's salary was increased from $2,500 to $4,000 a year. And so we could go down the list until an increase of a million dollars in appropriations for two years could be accounted for.

Among the beneficiaries of this prodigality was B. F. Gilkeson, who had been state chairman for several years, and was generally regarded as a loyal Quay man, inasmuch as he had been a persistent office-holder by the grace of Quay. Now we find him pitted against his benefactor, who has become a candidate for his position as state chairman. All the men placed in office by the governor under the authority of these various bills, all of which received his executive approval, have with few exceptions come out on the governor's side, he having just entered on his his four years' term, and having that many years of power and favors before him. The governor has been making the most of his exalted position and extensive powers, and, guided by the adroit Magee of Pittsburgh and Martin of Philadelphia, has opened a warfare upon Quay and his control that bids fair to be successful.

Philadelphia and Pittsburgh will send practically unanimous administration or anti-Quay delegates to the convention. Bank-Examiner Gilkeson is expected to deliver Bucks county; Adjutant-General Stewart, Montgomery county; Adjutant-General McCormick, Lycoming county and some of the neighboring counties. Superior Court Justices (just appointed) Rice, Willard, Orlady and Reeder mean Luzerne, Lackawanna, Huntingdon, and Northampton counties in the administration column, and so we could go on down the list and show how every gubernatorial appointee has been brought into line and received orders for the delivery of the needed delegates.

Quay is handicapped in that he has no federal, state or municipal patronage at his disposal. He has only his great experience, prestige, and undoubted power as an organizer to rely upon, and his strength among the protected manufacturers.—Philadelphia dispatch New York Evening Post, July 4.

Boss Quay's telegram concerning the conduct of an ex-state senator, who had long followed in the Quay procession, is an apt expression of his sense of what is due to a boss. This state senator, having decided to support certain candidates before the next republican convention who are not supported by Quay, wrote a very friendly note to the latter announcing the fact. On receiving it, Quay was so shocked at this exhibition of human depravity that he immediately telegraphed: "This is the coldest-blooded mercenary stab I have encountered in this campaign of assassination." According to Quay's ideas this man was disloyal. It is rank disloyalty to disobey a superior to whom allegiance is due. Quay considers himself the superior, and all other Pennsylvanians who are not democrats his vassals.

When Mayor Warwick declared that he was with Governor Hastings in the contest against Senator Quay he evidently meant that he would give the anti-Quay people more than mere passive support. The mayor has been active in politics for nearly a score of years, and he knows if a leader in a fight does not use all the influence at his command his opponents will, and he will run the risk of defeat.

In summing up the standing of the various wards in the contest between Quay and his opponents the twenty-third and thirty-fifth wards, which form the twenty-third district, have by some been placed in the doubtful column. Yesterday Select Councilman Byram, of the twenty-third ward, said he met David Martin and Mayor Warwick in the latter's office by appointment. According to his story, he told them that if they expected the delegates from that district to the state convention to oppose Quay he would have to be recognized as the leader of the twenty-third district, and his ward committee recognized by the city committee, and he should hereafter distribute the patronage.

He said Mr. Martin, speaking for the organization, promised him the first two demands, and Mayor Warwick assured him that no appointments would be made from the twenty-third ward without his approval. This was satisfactory to Mr. Byram, who named as delegates from the twenty-third himself and Dr. Samuel Bolton, and he said that George A. Castor, of the thirty-fifth ward, could name the third delegate, who will be Select Councilman Joseph H. Brown. Shortly afterward the mayor approved the appointments of Assistant Foreman John Duffield as foreman of engine No. 14, and Thomas Dyson, hoseman, to succeed Duffield as assistant foreman. "I have been trying to get these appointments since January," said Mr. Byram after they were announced, "but I have them now. I would not deal with any one else but the mayor."—City and State, July 4.

Quay is looking to the national convention and that is why he is so anxious to get control of the party machinery. Hastings and those back of him also have an eye on the next presidential race, and that's the milk in the cocoanut. Each is playing for higher stakes than the petty chairmanship of a state committee.

There has been a great deal said during the present struggle about the ingratitude of Governor Hastings toward Senator Quay. This sort of talk emanates from sources ignorant of the political history of the last decade, or so blinded by zeal in the Quay cause as to be unable to see the facts as they stand out on the record of the times. No man in politics in Pennsylvania is less indebted to Quay than the governor. Previous to the Delamater disaster (which thousands of republicans have a habit of recalling) Quay played fast and loose with Hastings, and gave him to understand that he (Quay) had no preference, and that Delamater had no more claim to the nomination than Hastings. Thus encouraged, the Bellefonte man went vigorously into the canvass, and secured the popular indorsement for the high and honorable office which he now fills. In the meantime, however, Quay was planning to "own a governor," and the forced nomination of Delamater was the result. Subsequent history is too recent to need recounting. Last year the nomination and election of Hastings could not have been prevented by a hundred Quays, but the followers of the Beaver man would have the thoughtless citizen believe that it was all due to the favor of their political idol. As soon as Hastings was elected the fawning of his enemies commenced that thrift might follow. In the bigness of his heart he overlooked their transgressions and permitted them to enter the land which their deeds should have forever excluded them from. They were given of the fat of the land, but the Quayites were not content. They wanted the earth. In their minds Hastings was not worthy to be mentioned in the same breath as the great man from Beaver, and so they plotted to dethrone the governor who was placed over them by the largest popular vote in the history of the state. For several weeks and months they conspired together to bring odium upon the official head of the party, and neither day nor night did they cease their plotting. Finally they became bold in their scheming, and the investigation of the alleged wrongs of Philadelphia was agreed upon as a clever way to attack the administration through its supporters in the metropolis.

Frank Willing Leach's resignation of a six-thousand-dollar position in order that he might be free to help Senator Quay is commendable. His example is not being emulated with that alacrity that one might expect to see by the Quay appointees of the governor at the capitol. On the contrary, the Quay politicians who owe their political jobs to the governor are holding on and secretly doing all they can to discredit the administration. Of course, there is no ingratitude in this! It has been suggested here that Mr. Leach's anxiety to engage in the fight against the governor comes from his failure to land in the position now filled by Secretary Reeder.—City and State, July 18.

Reviewing the Quay-Hastings conflict, the Philadelphia Press (rep.) says: "The results up to date are decisive. The campaign has gone overwhelmingly for Governor Hastings. Since the announcement of Senator Quay's candidacy for chairman every delegate elected has been against him."

District-Attorney Graham is a much overworked man, according to his own account, for whenever he is criticised for delaying the prosecution of criminals who have influential political friends, he excuses his remissness by pleading the pressure of work in the district-attorney's office. But he is never too busy about public business to prevent his undertaking any private practice that offers profit. While he may not have time to discover long-suspended indictments in the capacious pigeon-holes of his office, he has had abundant time to attend to the receivership of the Iron Hall, an office whose fees are greater than many leading lawyers can earn, and within the past ten days he has not found his official duties too onerous to prevent him from giving very influential assistance to the Pennsylvania Steam Heat, Light, and Power Company in obtaining exceedingly valuable franchises from the city without cost. Perhaps it was this addition to the demands upon his time that prevented him from finding time to take up the De Camp matter until he found himself forced to it by citizens who felt that they had some rights as well as the politicians. District-Attorney Graham is a man of singularly diversified abilities. He is equally able to address a Sunday-school or nominate a ring candidate in a political convention; he can prosecute an obscure criminal as skillfully as he can pigeon-hole the indictments against those whose political friends are known to him, and he can make a rousing speech against corrupt municipal government as effectively as he can lobby for a franchise-grabbing corporation. Lest the people of Philadelphia should fear the loss of such an accomplished public official, it is well to mention that Mr. Graham has already announced himself as a candidate for re-election upon the expiration of his present term in January next.—City and State June 27.

Philadelphia's experience in lighting its streets by electricity has been thoroughly typical of current American methods of dealing with important municipal problems. From time to time, important and valuable franchises have been granted to various local electric lighting companies and extensive contracts given to them for public lighting. Then these companies have since combined and formed a trust for their mutual aid and protection, which trust controls all the electric lighting in the city and charges Philadelphia a higher price for its electric lights than is paid in any other city in the country.

While nominally and ostensibly these companies are independent of each other, actually they have reached an agreement or understanding by which no one company will bid in the territory of any other company, its territory in turn not being invaded by any of the others.

It may be interesting to the readers of City and State to study the personnel of these companies and see to what extent bosses and beneficiaries control them. The following facts are from the last volume of Pennsylvania Securities, a standard work published from year to year, giving such detailed information regarding the various corporations doing business in the state of Pennsylvania as can be obtained.

The principal electric lighting corporations of the city are The Manufacturers', The Southern, The Powelton, The Diamond, The Northern, The West End, The Suburban, The Columbia, The German-town and The Wissahickon.

The president of the Manufacturers' Company, according to our authority, is James Work, assistant commissioner of highways. The secretary is William J. Roney, receiver of taxes. The board of directors is composed of James Work, William Emsley, David Martin, Charles A. Porter, James Richie, Jr., William Bardsley and James McCormick.

The personnel of the officers and directors of the Diamond Electric Company is interesting. It has for its president Hon. Charles A. Porter, state senator and contractor-in-chief of the city of Philadelphia and, until recently, chairman of the republican city campaign committee. Mr. Porter enjoys with David Martin the distinction of being a potent influence, if not the most potent influence at present in Philadelphia politics, and during the past few years he has been so successful in bidding for public contracts that nearly $5,000,000 of work has been awarded him within that time. Associated with Mr. Porter on the board of directors of this company are William J. Latta, the Pennsylvania Railroad legislative agent, and in whose offices the conferences about the Pennsylvania Steam Heat and Power Company ordinances were held; George A. Castor, the thirty-fifth ward political leader, and aspirant for congressional honors, and David Martin, who during the last five or six years, without any known occupation other than politics, has had transferred to him $150,000 worth of real estate. How much personalty he has acquired within this period we are not informed and have no means of ascertaining. Henry J. McCarthy, just appointed to the superior court bench by Governor Hastings, is also a director in this company.

The Powelton Electric Company is officered by William J. Latta as president and John B. Stauffer as secretary and treasurer, Mr. Stauffer holding a similar position with the Diamond Electric Company. Among the other directors of this company Senator Porter, State Representative Samuel Crothers, William S. Kimball, C. H. Clark, Jr.

Select Councilman Henry Clay, who is also a leading member of the Electrical Committee of Councils, is president of the Northern Electric Light and Power Company, and Charles O. Kruger, who is the treasurer of the Electric Trust, is the transfer agent of this company. This company's forces in addition to these officers is managed by a board composed of Henry Lewis, Peter A. B. Widener, A. J. DeCamp, John Lowber Welsh and S. Y. Hotchkiss.

About the Germantown and Wissahickon companies our authority, The Pennsylvania Securities, gives us no information and but very little about the Southern Electric Light Company, further than its president is James Mack, the well-known contractor.

After giving the name of Thomas Dolan as its president, and A. J. DeCamp as general manager of the Brush Electric Light Company, our authority says:

"The board of directors in 1881 was as follows: Henry Lewis, William Wood, J. N. Williamson, J. B. Altamus, John Lowber Welsh, John Wanamaker, Thomas Dolan, A. J. Juillard, A. G. Payne and William Arrott, the names of the later boards having been refused."

The president of the West End Electric Company is Albert Baltz, and its secretary ex-Councilman John Q. Taxis. Senator Porter is a member of the board of directors of this company.

Common Councilman Peter E. Costello is president of the Suburban Electric Company. Associated with him on the board of directors we find Magistrate T. W. South, Editor Hugh A. Mullen, of the Sunday World, Hamilton Disston, Senator Porter and William J. Latta.

A. J. DeCamp's office, at the southwest corner of Tenth and Chestnut streets, is the headquarters of the electric lighting interests of the city, for we find located here the offices of the following companies: The United States Electric Light and Power Company, The Penn Electric Light Company, The Brush Electric Light Company, The Philadelphia Electric Light Company, The Underground Electric Conduit Company and The Underground Electric Light and Power Company.

Concerning the first-named, our authority says: "Its capital is $1,000,000, with $100,000 paid in," and that "A. J. DeCamp is general manager," all other information being refused. It is generally believed that the Penn Electric Light Company, of which A. J. DeCamp is president, is controlled by the Electric Trust. On its board of directors are Select Councilman Henry Clay, Common Councilman A. J. DeCamp, twentieth ward leader, and traction agent, David H. Lane, James McManes, William D. Marks, president of the Edison Electric Light Company, and Amos R. Little. This company owns the electric conduits used by the Electric Trust. The statement for June 29, 1892, shows a deficit of $34,934 after the deduction of all available assets.

All we can learn about the Philadelphia Electric Light Company is that its capital is $200,000, all paid in, and that its president is W. S. Pettit; its treasurer, Clement Newbold, and its general manager A. J. DeCamp. Concerning the Underground Electric Company and the Underground Electric Light and Power Company, all information is refused.

In looking over the boards of these various companies we find that Senator Charles A. Porter is president of the Diamond Electric Company, and a director in the Suburban, Powelton, Manufacturers' and West End Electric Companies. William J. Latta is president of the Powelton Electric Light Company, and a director in the Diamond and Suburban Companies. David Martin is a director in the Diamond and Manufacturers' Electric Companies.

Councilman A. J. DeCamp is general manager of the Brush Electric Light Company, general manager of the United States Electric Light and Power Company, director in the Northern Electric Light and Power Company, president and director of the Penn Electric Light Company, general manager of the Philadelphia Electric Light Company.—City and State, July 11.

PLATT'S MACHINE.

According to the announcements of appointments made recently by the capitol commission, two architects, two time-keepers, and one clerk have been given office in violation of the civil service law.—Albany Dispatch, N. Y. Evening Post, June 24.

* * *

With a brief intermission for luncheon, the capitol commission held a session lasting from 9:30 o'clock this morning until 7 o'clock this evening. The time was given up to scrutinizing the names of persons urged for appointment on the capitol construction, under the $400,000 which the Aldridge republican machine has to expend before the contract work goes into effect. Never have the reins been drawn so tightly, even laborers and tool-boys being required to have strong political indorsement of the right stamp. As a result of to-day's labors, 175 men were appointed, swelling the total to 600.

Action was also taken to divest ex-Commissioner Perry of every bit of power. Under the law he is to continue as superintendent. Nothing is said of a deputy, so, to get around the law,

Harry Stevens, one of Superintendent Aldridge's Syracuse workers, was appointed general foreman. To further hamper Mr. Perry, Col. L. V. S. Matteson, of Oswego, was made foreman of laborers. It was Col. Matteson who proved to be so valuable a witness against Mr. Perry at the investigations by the republican legislature last winter.

The state canals, the capitol construction, and the capitol maintenance departments are all now in complete control of the Platt machine.—Albany Dispatch, New York Times, July 18.

* * *

The first hand-to-hand tussle between the Platt and anti-Platt forces inside the republican party, which has come off in the preliminary campaign for the control of the next republican state convention, resulted in a Platt defeat. It occurred in Washington county a few days ago. Both sides fought nobly, the Platt forces having the assistance of a special force of deputy sheriffs sworn in for the occasion. Several leaders on both sides, one weighing 265 pounds, were tumbled off the platform in the convention hall during the opening exercises, in the eagerness of the two sides to obtain possession of the chair; and when the table which was to serve as the chairman's desk was smashed, the deputy sheriffs promptly seized the legs thereof and wielded them vigorously on the heads of the anti-Platt forces as symbols of their office. One man's hair and whiskers were plucked freely from him, and one leader who "lit on his head" from the platform was taken out for medical aid. This opening scrimmage was brought on by the conduct of the leader of the Platt forces who was holding the hat in which the ballots for chairman were to be deposited. He attempted to keep the hat behind him when an anti-Platt delegate sought to deposit a ballot, and to hold it in front of him when a Platt delegate approached. This method of "regulating the count" was not allowed to succeed. After a struggle of many hours a vote was finally recorded, when it appeared that the anti-Platt faction had a majority of 6 votes in a total of 120. An anti-Platt delegation was chosen to the state convention, and with tattered clothing and bandaged heads the convention adjourned. The Platt forces fought nobly, and the boss ought to reward them for their pluck and ingenuity in holding high the banner against numerical odds.—New York Evening Post, June 22.

* * *

One of the politicians who called on Ex-Senator Platt at the Oriental Hotel yesterday was State Committeeman William Barnes, of Albany. Mr. Barnes had encouraging news for the Tioga man, for he thinks the republican factional troubles in Albany have been settled, and settled in such a way as to leave the Platt men in control of the political situation there. In bringing about this situation, it became necessary to give the superintendency of the Albany penitentiary to a man who had formerly been opposed to the Barnes element, but this was done on a compromise basis, by which the Platt men get the patronage—about 200 places.—New York Times, July 15.

* * *

Supreme Court Judge Herrick to-day denied the motion of John W. McClelland for a mandamus compelling the comptroller to pay his salary as clerk in the canal collector's office. McClelland was an appointee of Superintendent of Public Works Aldridge. When he applied for his first month's pay Controller Roberts refused it upon the ground that he had not complied with civil service rules and had failed to pass an examination. The mandamus was then applied for. Justice Herrick holds that the employees in the department of public works, the state prison department, and also clerks of the prisons, who are appointed by the state controller, come within the provisions of the civil service laws.—New York Times, July 13.

FAMILY REVELATIONS.

MILHOLLAND.—"Who is Jake Patterson, this so-called republican? Jake's record is closely allied to that of Tammany. Why, I could specify things in his career which every one who knows anything about politics would recognize as familiar. His name is a sufficient by-word not to descend to sickening details. In this matter of fighting the major, Jake has shown his characteristic cunning and effrontery. As I said, his record stands out boldly and conjointly with Tammany's."

* * *

The Buffalo Express (republican) of the Platt Fassett contest in Chemung county:

It will show to what extent Platt's democratic allies are able to help him in his efforts to disrupt the republican party. Help from these Hill-Tammany sources is the direct result of Platt's course last winter in aiding the Tammany democrats in an unsuccessful attempt to prevent the confirmation of Silas W. Burt, an anti-Tammany democrat, as state civil-service commissioner. It explains why Platt brought discredit upon the republican legislature in order to defeat the police-magistrates bill, because his Tammany friends didn't want it. It explains why he tried to have a new election in the Greater New York next fall, so that Mayor Strong would be legislated out of office, and Tammany would have a chance to get control again two years sooner. It explains why Platt's puppets in the senate helped the Tammany men to kill the bill which took from the Tammany surrogate of New York some important appointments which properly belonged with the state controller. It explains why police reorganization was prevented by a combination of Platt and Tammany senators. It explains why the Tammany district attorney, John R. Fellows, was given the appointment of two more assistants, at $7,500 a year each, so Colonel Fellows would have more time to repair Tammany fences.

* * *

CORNELIUS N. BLISS, Chairman Republican

State Committee.—The present methods of government of the party in the Empire State practically prohibit any voice to the great body of republicans in party councils. The private party man is expected to contribute to campaign funds, to vote for candidates assigned for his support by prearranged conventions, and otherwise to hold his peace. There is no mistaking the sentiment which now prevails, i. e., that republicans demand fair and open discussion within party lines; the election of representative conventions; and the nomination of proper candidates, who shall be free from the control of individual bosses. The indefensible action of certain members of the state senate, who are known to have been under such control during the last session of the legislature, has given emphasis to the demand of the masses.

* * *

From Address to Republicans by State Republican Club, July 31.—Party control confined to a few individuals creates an oligarchy. When that control is reduced still further to the will of a single person, it is simply an autocracy. Neither of these has any place in our system and form of government, and both are in deadly hostility to the spirit and purpose of the republican party. Under the restrictions imposed by such leadership and control patriotic enthusiasm dies away in indifference, and, instead of healthy growth and a widening area of influence, the party falls into corruption and decay.

It is because this tendency to the centralization and concentration of power in a few hands is a constant factor in all political organizations; because in the republican party it grows and develops only as the voting masses are indifferent to the details of party management, and because it can be checked and repressed only by the awakening of the voters from such indifference, that the Republican State Club of the state of New York has been organized upon a permanent foundation with the single view of enlisting the interest of the great body of voters in everything that concerns the welfare of the party or the administration of its affairs.

With the whole party so interested, with a common cause and a common meeting-ground for republicans from all parts of the state, there will be neither oligarchy nor autocracy; no deals nor dickers with the enemy for corrupt purposes or personal aggrandizement; no usurpation of the party's prestige nor prostitution of its power.

* * *

Commissioner of Public Works Brookfield.—A single incident during the closing days of the canvass indicated to me the tremendous enthusiasm the state organization, as represented at the Fifth Avenue hotel, had for the success of the county ticket. It occurred when, in my capacity as president of the county committee, I called upon the chairman of the state committee and asked for assistance. His reply was: "Oh, Grace has control of this whole situation."

"That is the situation of affairs, is it?" I asked. "Then you have no money for us?"

"Not a cent," said he.

I then said: "Hackett, we will elect this county ticket and give the candidate for governor the largest vote ever polled for a republican in this county, and we will not owe anything to the state committee, either, will we?"

From this view he did not dissent, and my visit ended.

I have also read several times that Mr. Platt "consented" to the nomination of Mayor Strong. This would be ridiculous if it were not impudent. I was president of the republican county committee at the time, and feel that I know something about the circumstances that led up to the union movement and the nomination of Col. Strong. In my judgment there was no time when Mr. Platt and his followers could have defeated the nomination of any one recommended by the committee of seventy. At the first general conference an effort was made by those allied with Mr. Platt to break up the conference. It did not succeed. This fact can be testified to by at least twenty-five men who were present.

* * *

Although no caucuses have yet been held in Monroe county the politicians of both parties have been on the alert for weeks, and midsummer sensations have not been lacking.

The coming contest will be of state as well as of local interest, because it will be the first serious effort of the opponents of Superintendent of Public Works Aldridge to wrest from him the leadership of the republicans of Monroe, over whom he held an almost undisputed sway for half a dozen years before Mr. Platt promoted him to be dispenser of canal patronage at Albany.

It is worth noting that this fight against Boss Aldridge is not confined to the republican ranks. This issue will be largely the same in the democratic caucuses, where the younger members of the party, united in the Flower City democracy, are preparing to make another effort to gain control of the party organization, which has too often been used as an aid to Mr. Aldridge's own machine. * * With this state of affairs, the interesting rumor is gaining circulation that Mr. Aldridge expects his democratic friends to win their caucus battle and nominate J. Miller Kelly for mayor. In this event it is believed by many that Aldridge might secretly throw his strength to Kelly, who has always been an Aldridge democrat, receiving in return for his treachery to Lewis continued control of the executive board, to which two out of three members are to be elected. Both Aldermen Tracy and Kelly represent democratic wards, and their wards gave Aldridge handsome majorities for mayor over Col. Greenleaf at the spring election of 1894. This betrayal of Greenleaf was abundantly rewarded when Superintendent Aldridge appointed the Rochester bridge tenders and other canal employes this spring, for a dozen of the democratic henchmen of Tracy and Kelly were re-appointed in preference to republicans who were clamoring for jobs.—Rochester Dispatch, New York Times, July 28.

The warfare in the republican ranks in New York county is growing more bitter as the time for the selection of delegates to the state convention approaches.

The machinery for calling the primaries, for selecting election day officers, and for doing the great bulk of the other work of the county committee is in the hands of the Platt men.—New York Times, July 14.

* * *

It is evident that Platt and his followers are now devoting themselves to controlling nominations, and are paying no attention to the mass of voters, who will be called upon to support candidates. They are assuming that if the candidates are theirs, they can command the party vote, which will be sufficient for their purpose. There seems to be no hope of a defeat of Platt's bossism through opposition in his own party. That opposition is vigorous only in spots; elsewhere it is timid and time-serving. In sentiment it probably includes a majority of the party, but it is the inactive majority, while the active and aggressive minority runs the organization and makes nominations, and when these are made the majority is expected to lapse into "loyal" acquiescence.—New York Times, July 30.

TWEED AND HIS RING.

The history of the bold and unscrupulous municipal robber and Tammany ringmaster who died in disgrace in Ludlow Street jail, this city, about twenty years ago, is reverted to by Mr. E. J. Edwards in an article, in McClure's for July, on "The Rise and Overthrow of the Tweed Ring." Mr. Edwards has grouped in this sketch all the scoundrels and all the appalling incidents of that villainous reign of corruption with dramatic effect, tracing the life of the execrably famous "boss" from the early fifties, when he was a loafer in the engine-house of one of the old volunteer fire companies, where he first learned the tricks of the primary and came to know what could be accomplished with a gang of roughs in what was called "politics," until, a fugitive from justice, he was captured in Spain and brought back to his prison cell.

Tweed made office "pay" from the very start. In 1863 he was a poor man. In 1868 he was a millionaire; and this was before the formation of the Tweed ring. He was then a member of the board of supervisors, which had the power of auditing accounts, and he was thus able to secure privileges which were frauds upon the city. Mr. Edwards thus recounts some of his acts:

"He got control of a little newspaper, and he secured the passage of a bill by the legislature making this obscure sheet the official organ of the city government, and it received over a million dollars a year for simply printing the proceedings of the common council. He established a printing company, whose main business was the printing of blank forms and vouchers, for which in one year two million eight hundred thousand dollars was charged. Another item was a stationer's company, which furnished all the stationery used in the public institutions and departments, and this company alone received some three millions a year. On an order for six reams of cap paper, the same amount of letter paper, two reams of note paper, two dozen pen-holders, four small ink-bottles, and a few other articles, all worth not more than fifty dollars, a bill of ten thousand dollars was rendered and paid. Tweed employed certain persons as the executive heads of these companies who were also upon the city pay-rolls, some receiving money for work never done."

The Tweed ring was formed in 1869, and that it immediately began operations was made evident by the subsequent celebrated investigation. The earliest in the list of county warrants bearing indication of fraud bore date January 11, 1869; and of eleven million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars of fraudulent warrants afterward discovered, three million eight hundred thousand dollars were issued in the year 1869.

Under the sub-heading of "the Americus club," Mr. Edwards writes as follows:

"Tweed and his associates were now living, with vulgar display, in the most princely fashion. Tweed himself maintained two costly houses in Fifth avenue, and kept expensive stables. He had organized within Tammany hall, for social purposes, what was called the Americus club. A summer home for the club was established on Long Island sound, at Greenwich, Conn., and money was spent like water in building and furnishing. Tweed ordered from Belgium a great carpet, all woven in one piece, of exquisite design and workmanship, so perfectly made, that after twenty years, and under the tread of thousands of feet, it is scarcely worn. For it was paid the highest price the Belgian manufacturers ever received for a single product of their looms. One of Tweed's followers, a man who a few years earlier had been a laborer upon the streets, said, as he walked upon it, 'Why, it is as thick as a beefsteak.' In this clubhouse feasts, costing thousands of dollars, were held, the wines, the most necessary item, being the choicest to be found in the markets of the world. * * *

"In another part of the town of Greenwich, Tweed discovered what he regarded as a perfect place for a summer home for his family. But the owner had no disposition to sell. A fair price for the property would have been five thousand dollars. Tweed offered three times that, and still was refused. Tweed said to his friends that he proposed to have the place even if it became necessary for him to buy up the whole Connecticut legislature, a body in which his influence was already felt. One day he met the owner and said to him, 'Why do you object to selling me that place?' 'Because it seems like selling myself out of house and home.' 'But if I give you enough for it, you can buy yourself another home.' 'But you won't give me enough for me to do that.' 'How much do you call enough?' 'I'll name a figure so big that it will scare you away, and that will be the end of it.' 'Name your figure, and let's see whether it will,' said Tweed. 'Well, suppose I say sixty thousand dollars?' 'Would you take sixty thousand for it?' demanded Tweed. 'Nobody would be crazy enough to give it.' 'Well, we'll see about that,' said Tweed. He took out a pencil and made a memorandum, setting forth that the man agreed, within thirty days, to give a title to that property upon the payment of sixty thousand dollars; and then, handing the paper to the man, said, 'I'll give you a dollar if you sign that.' It was an easy way of getting a dollar, the owner thought. He signed, and took the money, and within the month Tweed compelled him to live up to the memorandum, and thus became the owner of the place."

It is said to be impossible to make an accurate estimate of the total amount of money stolen by the ring. Fourteen million dollars is believed to be an under estimate. The fraudulent accounts published footed up eleven and a quarter millions, and Mr. Tilden became satisfied during the investigation that the ring had in near prospect some eighteen millions more. The frauds upon which the conviction of Tweed was obtained consisted in the payment of enormously increased bills to mechanics, architects, furniture makers, and, in some instances, to unknown persons for supplies and services. It was the expectation that an honest bill would be raised all the way from sixty to ninety per cent. in the first months of the ring's stealing the increase was about sixty per cent. Some of the bills were increased by as much as ninety per cent., but the average increase was such as to make it possible to give sixty-seven per cent. to the ring, the confederates being allowed to keep thirty-three per cent., and of that thirty-three per cent. probably at least one-half was a fraudulent increase.

After Tweed was brought back from Spain and returned to jail, he never went forth again alive except on one occasion, when he was taken to court as a witness in a case in which testimony as to the ring frauds was necessary. For six days he was examined in great detail Mr. Edwards says:

"It was evident at this hearing that Tweed's health was shattered, and that he had probably but a short time to live. He failed rapidly after the hearing, and a few months later died in prison. He had been in power less than six years. He had enjoyed wealth less than ten. In his last days, when reviewing his career, he said that he was satisfied of one thing: that until the officers of the city of New York, meaning the great body of subordinate employes, were protected by some sort of civil service system, so that they would not be the creatures of political favor, there would be corruption in the administration of the city government. 'Human nature,' said he 'can not resist such temptations as are offered to men who are in power here, so long as they have the disposition of the offices of the city at their command.'"—Literary Digest, July 13.

LATER DAY TWEEDISM IN CHICAGO.

Thirteen alleged members of the city hall payroll stuffing crowd were indicted by the grand jury to-day, for defrauding the city of $100,000. Their indictment was secured on the testimony of detectives, and of persons whose names appeared on the pay-roll who never worked for the city, and who were not aware that their names had been used in the conspiracy until after the recent investigation had been started. The men under indictment were employed as foremen and timekeepers in the water pipe extension and streets and alleys departments of the city.

MR. TILDEN AS A REFORMER.

The story of Mr. Tilden's career in the field of reform is admirably told and of thrilling interest. He grasped the whole problem of reform, municipal, legislative and judicial, while the sagacity and energy he had displayed as a lawyer were here brought into full play. With a view to the accomplishment of his great work he accepted the chairmanship of the state democratic committee in 1866 and was elected to the constitutional convention the year following. In 1869 he took the lead in organizing the bar association of New York, which became a formidable auxiliary in the great cause, and in 1871 he was elected to the legislature. In speaking of the action of the state convention that year Mr. Tilden said:

"It is but fair to admit that what I asked the convention to do was more than any party was ever found able to venture upon. It was to totally cut off and cast out from party association a local organization which held the influence growing out of the employment of twelve thousand persons and the disbursement of $30,000,000 yearly, which had possession of all the machinery of local government, dominated the judiciary and police and swayed the officers of election. I still think that, on such an occasion, the greatest audacity in the right would have been the highest wisdom, and, in the long run, the most consummate prudence. If the convention could not reach that breadth and elevation of action, it nevertheless did help to break the prestige by which the organization expected to enthrall the local masses. For myself, I at no time hesitated to avow as my conviction of duty and my rule of action that a million of people were not to be given over to pillage to serve any party expediency, or to advance any views of state or national politics."

This was the spirit in which Mr. Tilden waged his warfare against the Tweed ring. He rose above party and directed his blows at the rogues of the state without the slightest discrimination as to their political affiliations. The result was the arrest, imprisonment or flight of the thieves who only a few years before seemed to hold the wealth and power of the state in the hollow of their hands. His fight against the canal ring a few years later when governor, was equally unsparing and vigorous. The odds seemed to be hopelessly against him, but he never faltered in the conflict, because he had thoroughly studied the character and methods of his enemies and believed in the power of his ideas and the honesty of the people. For sixteen months he surrendered his private business, gave his days and nights to the most exhausting labors and expended considerable sums of his own money; and it is not strange that his magnificent triumph made him the leader and the hero of people.—From the review of Bigelow's Tilden by George W. Julian, Indianapolis Sentinel, June 19.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

VOL. II, No. 31.

INDIANAPOLIS, SEPTEMBER, 1895.

TERMS: { One dollar per annum.
10 cents per copy.

Published monthly. Publication office, No. 23 N. Meridian St., Indianapolis, Ind. Address,

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

IN this city the street commissioner's clerk examined the list of registered laborers in the office of the clerk of the civil service board and he picked out certain names not in the regular order and wanted those certified for employment. Being promptly refused, no requisition was made for laborers. Mayor Denny can not afford to let this transaction go by without investigation. If the street department is in the hands of sharpers who are trying to beat the law, it is time it was got out of such hands. The clerk who tried to get a dishonest certification should be dismissed from the city service, and if the street commissioner knew of the transaction he should be dealt with in the same manner. The board of public works should check-up the street commissioner by requiring proof that every laborer has been duly appointed under the rules before approving the pay-roll.

THERE has since been an investigation of the street commissioner, one Fisher, of this city. Some months ago he was overhauled and given a warning. Later, as is noted in the CHRONICLE, his clerk went to the secretary of the civil service board and tried to get particular names certified for employment, which was refused. Fisher evidently feels that he is a "bigger man" than the mayor, for he went ahead and employed men without regard to the rules. When recently brought up for this he brazenly confessed it. If Mayor Denny wants to have any reputation left, it is about time that he began to display some executive back-bone. He should have punished Trusler by dismissing him for sending that assessment circular, but he was afraid of Trusler. Ever since the civil service rules have been adopted they have been honey-combed with violations, but no one has been punished. Mayor Denny does not seem to understand that in an administrative reform there is no room for conciliation. An officer who undertakes it must do so with all his might, and without asking or giving quarter. He will then be obeyed, and he will be respected by the community, and in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred his reform will be successful. The mayor can do something toward showing his sincerity by now removing Fisher. We ought not to omit to state that the labor service system, which has been found in practice to be perhaps the greatest single administrative improvement of this generation, has been discovered by Fisher to be a nuisance. It is a nuisance to men of the Fisher stripe, and this and other reforms will happily drive them out of public place.

FROM present appearances the approaching election in this city will afford no indication of the temper of the people upon any leading public question. Although the republicans had plenty of good men, yet they nominated a man who as comptroller of the city openly opposed the adoption of the present civil service rules, and whenever he has declared himself since it has been along the same line. The inference is irresistible that if elected he will ignore these rules. From his comptroller's office he sent out an assessment circular to policemen and firemen demanding a certain percentage of their pay to be used in a state campaign. Men getting $1,200 were asked to pay $24, a most inordinate and outrageous demand in any view. In this connection he declared that all appointive offices should be paid for by those who get them. There is every reason to suppose that in case of his election the assessment evil, in its worst form, would flourish openly. As comptroller he has had the appearance of harrying offices held by democrats with an appearance of vindictiveness, and his own repeated declarations make it clear that instead of working the city business out of politics he would do his utmost to work it in. It is undoubted that he was the chief mover, some years ago, in securing the dismissal of a most efficient chief of the fire department, and that the real reason was that the chief had refused to dismiss the dozen or so democrats left in the department. The dismissed officer, in answer to a public demand, was afterward restored by the democrats, and is now in that position. It seems certain that if the republican candidate is successful there will be a repetition of the decapitation, with all of its attendant dangers and evils and under decapitations. The only thing which the republicans claim for their man is that he has been an extraordinary comptroller. His technical record as comptroller in that office is only fair, and his accompanying conduct has been most reprehensible. It is impossible to tell what such a man will do, in any given case, as mayor. If we turn to his record as councilman, only discouragement is added. If a man can be judged by his acts, he was there the tool of a gas corporation.

TURNING to the democrats, they have nominated the chairman of their state committee, a man who has held office until the emoluments have made him, for Indianapolis, rich. He is an exceeding good fellow, and very popular. We do not believe that he has any serious political convictions. He does not claim to know anything of administrative reform, and with all the great influence which he has had in this state, in patronage matters, he has never been known to do an act to help that reform forward. He believes in assessing office holders for campaign expenses. It seems probable that he would, if elected, ignore the civil service rules. His party, for a long time, debated whether, in convention, it would declare for civil service reform; and it even considered trying to have a non-political judge, but it concluded that it could get control without making any such display of virtue.

In view of these considerations, as matters now stand, the coming election will be neither a sanction nor a condemnation of the present city administration. The struggle is simply that of two party machines grasping for the extensive patronage which they believe that the city offices will afford, and where it is hoped to quarter favorites and henchmen. There is no enthusiasm, whatever, nor is there likely to be. City government is universally admitted to be the worst government in this country, and in common with other cities the people of Indianapolis would like to share in administrative reform. The root of the evil is partyism, and these nominations give us partyism in its worst form. How can voters be enthusiastic when either case offers only retrogradation? To vote for either candidate is to vote into the mud.

THE misfortune of being what a disgusted letter-writer in the Indianapolis Sentinel recently called THE CHRONICLE, "a little 8 by 10 paper," is the reason why its space is not equal to the demands upon it in the recent battles of the bosses. The boss of bosses, Quay, has been crowded out. There has been nothing more illuminating for years than the revelations of the processes of his boss-ship—the bribery, the thugs, the knavery which Quay and his former henchman, Martin, let out in their brief lifting of the lid of their strong box of political history. Now it is again closed, the late warring braves both holding it down, the queer Philadelphia press again muzzled and likewise the queer Philadelphia conscience.

WILL the good citizen who despises the mugwump and who always "reforms within the party" and between elections compel himself to read the records of the ways these bosses, named for convenience democratic and republican, have been working? Will they particularly note that a cornered republican boss has democratic assistance in his primary and vice versa? That a defeated little boss "bolts" and "knives" and later can return to the party and to his old post, even as a favorite son. It is otherwise when a man leaves party for conscience's sake. Only the other day a good minister was turning over the leaves of Lowell's Letters in an Indianapolis bookstore and his pitying comment was, "I can not understand how a man like Lowell could have been a turncoat." Think of it, American citizens, Lowell called by a presumably moral minister of the gospel, a turncoat, and Mike Dady, a patriot still, returns to the Brooklyn republican bosom as the late reform waves recede. How to penetrate the rhinoceros hide of stupidity that encases the besotted partisan good citizen the CHRONICLE confesses itself entirely at sea. If it had riches it would offer prizes for suggestions as to ways and means to compel the reading of the facts of the brotherhood of bosses. It would begin with the clergymen of the Methodist church.

WHAT politics and pulls will do for the public is again illustrated by the discoveries now being made in New York. Some two thousand indictments and one thousand police court complaints have been found snugly stowed away in the attic of the court house. Enough is known of the way business was done in New York to make it certain that every one of these papers was hidden for a consideration proportioned to the crime. The story seems well authenticated that under a former chief clerk of the district attorney's office there was a regular price for the "loss" of each paper, the average rate being $300. When that clerk died a number of his friends went to his house and there burned up some five thousand lost indictments and complaints.

IN the New York democratic state convention just held, the committee on credentials, whose action was later approved by the convention, adopted the following:

"Tammany Hall is entitled to recognition in all future conventions as the regular organization, and its delegates are to be placed upon the preliminary and other rolls thereof, and in the appointment of inspectors of elections, the use of the party emblems, and in every other way in which the question of party organization may arise, said Tammany hall organization shall be recognized as the regular organization of the party in New York county, but in the interest of harmony, at this time, the committee recommends, subject to the aforesaid conditions, that the sitting delegates, as well as the delegates known as the state democracy, be admitted to the convention, with one-fifth of a vote to each state democracy delegate and four-fifth of a vote to each Tammany hall delegation."

The party which thus exalts Tammany Hall knows that it is largely an organization of thieves and plunderers, and that it has protected robbers, blackmailers, counterfeiters, and all sorts and conditions of criminals, in carrying on their operations for years in New York. This is not mere assertion, but it is a statement known to the whole world to have been conclusively proved. The organization should be ostracized and unrecognized, and hounded to destruction by every democrat and democratic paper. Yet it is made the corner-stone of democracy.

THE President has just made a curious order relating to the consular service. Under this order all offices in that service where the compensation ranges from $1,000 to $2,500 shall hereafter in case of vacancy be filled in one of the three following methods:

(a) By a transfer or promotion from some other position under the department of state of a character tending to qualify the incumbent for the position to be filled; or (b) by appointment of a person not under the department of state, but having previously served thereunder to its satisfaction in a capacity tending to qualify him for the position to be filled; or (c) by the appointment of a person who, having furnished the customary evidence of character, responsibility and capacity, and being thereupon selected by the President for examination, is found upon such examination to be qualified for the position.

Under the first rule the appointing power may select at will any one in the state department, under the second any one who has ever been in the state department, and under the third the appointing power may name the persons who shall be examined. Any place may be filled under any one of the rules which the appointing power desires to make use of. If these rules in any manner hinder the Gormans and Quays and Josiah Quincys from getting in their work, we should like to have some one point it out. We were dumbfounded that the President, after a succession of orders which stamp his name permanently on a great and lasting reform, should make such an order as this until we learned that it was Secretary Olney's plan. Olney's reasons for this plan are "that the President may protect the service to some extent from the dangers sure to follow absolute reliance upon purely academic tests." This is the sum of Olney's knowledge. It is the same talk that went on among Cleveland mugwumps in the early part of Mr. Cleveland's first administration. Everybody but Mr. Olney has grown out of it. He knew nothing about administrative reform, but, like other new officeholders, he thought he could teach upon that subject. He came upon an old and exploded rule of 1873, and puts that forward as the sum of experience in this reform. It failed utterly twenty years ago and will fail again now. There is now known but one good way of filling consular places, and that is by open competition to the lowest places, succeeded by competition within the service step by step to the top, allowing in the highest places more latitude for the discretion of the appointing power. Olney's method will put in democratic favorites when the democrats are in power, and republican favorites when republicans are in power, and that is all there is of it. The Springfield Republican's candidate for the Presidency makes a sorry appearance.

THAT there should be talk of the feasibility of removing the fourth-class post-offices from politics without an act of congress shows how easy it is for a public officer to find a way when he desires to do so. We are not familiar with the proposed plan, but the administration seems to have no doubt but that it would work. Mr. Cleveland hesitates, it is said, lest he should be criticised for removing these offices from politics after they have been filled with his partisans. There is no question about that. It will seem very unfair; and it does not help the matter that this condition of affairs is utterly inexcusable. That the fourth-class post-offices so late as the beginning of the present administration should have been allowed to be looted by congressmen is irrefutable testimony to the statesmanic shortness of both Mr. Cleveland and Mr. Bissell; and no fair man can view their action without just anger. If a definite plan for removing these places from politics had been matured, a rough preliminary equalization of them among parties would have commended itself as fair, even if done on the spoils plan. Mr. Cleveland ought to be statesman enough to make that equalization now, but he will probably not do it.

It becomes a question then whether this last great work in the reform of the federal service shall be left undone because the offices are filled mostly with democrats. Because Mr. Cleveland did a bad act in this respect is no reason why he should not do a good act now. It is true that his order by the exasperation it would cause would put the hardest possible strain upon the reform. But the reform has always had to bear that strain. No president has seemed to think that he could place an office under the civil service rules until he has filled that office with his partisans. Much trickery, dishonesty and law breaking have resulted when the opposite party came in, but the reform has withstood them all and it can and will withstand them in the fourth class post-offices.

UPON this phase of the question the Indianapolis News says:

The fact that the men now holding these positions are partisans, appointed for partisan reasons, is not a valid argument against the reform. This will always be the case. The only question is whether democratic or republican partisans shall be protected. If the old system continues, the next president, if he be a republican, will doubtless fill the offices with men of his own political faith, and there will then be the same argument against his making the change as there is now against Mr. Cleveland's making it. In a word, it is impossible to redeem any branch of the public service from the spoilsmen without benefiting the men who happen to be in office at the time. If we are to wait until the fourth-class post-masterships are filled with non-partisans before we extend the civil service rules to them, we shall wait forever. The present officers are, of course, entitled to no consideration. But they cut a very small figure in the case. The main party in interest is the general public.

It is said that the republicans will oppose the proposed change, and that their national convention will adopt a plank pledging their candidates to the revocation of all civil service proclamations placing under that service officers who have been put there while holding offices solely as a reward for political services. We do not believe that any president whom the republicans are likely to elect would consent to be bound by such a pledge. There are hardly any places now under civil service rules which were not put there while filled by men "holding offices solely as a reward for political services." The railway mail service is a notable illustration of this truth. When Mr. Cleveland went into office in 1885 he found the railway mail service filled with republicans. By the close of his administration the service had been almost totally recast, whereupon he extended the civil service rules to cover the new men. Mr. Harrison postponed the date for the taking effect of Mr. Cleveland's order, so as to give ample time to replace the democratic clerks with republicans. If, therefore, the republicans propose to revoke all orders which have had the effect of protecting partisans in their places, they will have to turn the railway mail service over to the spoilsmen, for it was placed under the civil service law when it was filled with partisans.

TAKEN all together Chicago probably has the best and most advanced civil service rules in the country. The revolution in the manner of obtaining public employment is complete. It was not to be expected that such an improvement would be let to pass without assaults from the leeches who see themselves cut off from the public treasury. These assaults have begun. The county attorney has decided that more than half of the county service is not within the civil service law, which opinion is understood when it is remembered that any kind of an opinion can be obtained from a political attorney. Another assault has been made in the shape of a unanimous vote of the common council, declaring that it alone may decide how the offices shall be filled and appointing a committee to inquire "what is necessary to enable all citizens of Chicago to apply for and receive appointments." To the ordinary mind the answer is that nothing in the world could be better than the present competitive system. This suggestion, however, drives the average councilman wild. What is to become of "pulls" or "influence," or the thousand other councilmanic resorts to grease the wheels? Chicago reformers are now called upon to show what they are made of.

In the course of an article published in the Grand Army Record of Boston, intending to appeal to the self-respect of the soldiers of the rebellion in relation to the exemption bill recently passed by the Massachusetts legislature, Mr. Richard H. Dana, says:

The veterans' exemption bill passed by the last legislature puts the great bulk of appointments under the "spoils" system. When several veterans apply for the same place there are no established means of making impartial selections. It is all left as a matter of political favoritism and the veteran must be subservient to the political boss to get the position.

Besides this main objection there is another, which to my mind however, though important, is quite secondary to the one I have named. It is that the veteran has not to show his fitness by any tests or even by satisfying the appointing officer. He has only to take his own affidavit of fitness and file the certificate of three reputable citizens that he is capable of performing the duties of the position sought. Any one acquainted with practical politics, knows that under the "spoils" system very incompetent and unfit persons have been able to get endless recommendations from influential politicians, and in the ordinary affairs of life experience shows the more unfit a man is the less he appreciates his want of ability to do any important work. Who would think of compelling railroads to employ as an engineer any man who thought he was fit without any proof of experience, and yet there are positions covered by this new law which are quite as important to the health and lives of our fellow-citizens, as that of locomotive engineers.

We should say that the place to appeal to the self-respect of ex-soldiers is not in the papers usually published in their name and we do not think the Record is an exception. In its rather flippant, not to say vulgar, comment upon Mr. Dana's letter, it says:

What patriotic citizens in Massachusetts desire to have practically crystallized into the statutes of Massachusetts is this: That if an honorably discharged soldier or sailor of the great rebellion is both mentally and morally capable of performing the required duties of any civil office in the commonwealth, then he shall be appointed to that office on his application therefor. The Union soldiers and their surviving friends only ask that.

There ought to be some way of disgracing the writer of such sentiments in his position as an ex-soldier. When the war began the pay was $11 a month; but if it had been $5 a month not a man less would have gone. The pay was soon raised to $13 a month, but it was done without any request whatever from the soldiers, and they would have viewed a reduction of $2 a month with the utmost indifference. The reason was that it was a man's duty to serve his country without any regard to reward, and the soldiers of that time so understood it. They did their simple duty and they neither asked, nor expected, nor thought to be made a specially privileged class. They have been all the time more than liberally dealt with. Beyond that liberal dealing we shall never believe that the ex-soldiers have become so debauched that they now claim that the patriotism of 1861 must be paid for and that too at the risk of wrecking the public business.

THE TRIUMPH OF THE BOSSES.

We have given much space this month to the remarkable triumphs of the bosses. We mean to do them full justice and to omit nothing which will add to the glory of their victories. In these curious phenomena, the most marked characteristic is the absence of what are known as political principles. There has been no manner of question whether certain policies should be pursued or certain principles advocated. The one question has been whether Platt and Quay, and Gorman and Brice and all the lesser bosses should dictate the platform and name the nominees and appoint the official members of the party machine. Without exception we believe the decision has been in favor of the boss. It will seem to many that very much had to be sacrificed in aid of the successful end. Considering Brice and the Wilson tariff bill, the sacrifice in Ohio was ridiculous and contemptible. The like applies to Gorman and Maryland, but to this is to be added all the years during which he has already deprived Maryland of free government. For years in New York Platt has had a system of collecting money from corporations and others and binding politicians and party workers to him by dividing it among them. In Pennsylvania Quay has been repeatedly charged by great newspapers of undoubted financial responsibility with robbing the public treasury, and his conduct under this charge leaves no reasonable doubt of its truth; and Pennsylvania also for years has had no free government, Quay having been her absolute dictator.

All this is not hard to understand, nor when it is understood is this wave of bossism invincible. Term after term brought about a clean sweep in the federal service. People deprecated this but shook their heads and said it would always be so; it was politics. Yet the clean sweep in the federal service is to-day on its last legs. Wherever these bosses have triumphed there has long prevailed a system of rewards, and the recipients have made up the party machines in their respective localities. They largely compose and absolutely control the primaries and conventions. Most of them have faith that the Quays and Platts can continue the system of rewards, and those who have doubts, work on the rule or ruin plan; they want no party success which is not to be followed by addition, division and silence. Under such circumstances it is easy for a boss to control delegates. This will be so while a system of rewards is possible. When that is broken up part of the heelers will turn into decent citizens and the rest will take no interest in politics. It will be broken up, and more surprising things have happened than that this overwhelming victory of mere buccaneers should be but the darkness before the daylight.

THE BATTLES OF THE BOSSES AND THEIR TRIUMPHS.

"Well, I tell you, the crowd whooped it up for Quay and Platt in a way that shook the rafters. The applause their names received made that which was given the names of Lincoln, Grant, and Blaine seem like a period of comparative silence."—Interview of Otto Irving Wise regarding National League Convention of Republican Clubs at Cleveland, June 24, 1895, New York Times.

We shall not be safe, whether the authorities are in Tammany or out of Tammany, until the entire system of boss-rule is torn up. In order that that may be done we must conscientiously avoid the elevation to position of official trust of any man of whatever political complexion who will consent to serve a boss. The existence of tools as well as of bosses is a disgrace to American citizenship.—Dr. Parkhurst, Sept. 19.

BEFORE BOSS PLATT'S VICTORY.—Mr. Warner Miller has never done a better service to his party than in his outspoken letter protesting against the renomination of Senator Coggeshall. Of that legislator's character and record he writes with refreshing directness and offensive particularity and personality.—New York Evening Post.

AFTER BOSS PLATT'S VICTORY.—As everybody anticipated, Warner Miller's trumpet-blast for reform within the party and rebellion against Platt dies away into a pitiful squeak about harmony. "One man claims to be a Platt man," he says, "and another says he is anti-Platt, but they all support the ticket once it is nominated." That is the true way to fling defiance at an odious boss.—New York Evening Post.

Platt Punishes His Disobedient Henchman.

Whoever is elected to succeed Henry J. Coggeshall as senator from the Oneida district, the party at large has a right to expect a full investigation into the bribery charges so much heard last week. If any representative of Senator Coggeshall, authorized or not, attempted to bribe a delegate to the senate convention, he should be exposed and prosecuted.—Buffalo Express.

Coggeshall was supported by "Tom" Wheeler, and every one of the canal employes. It was not until the last two or three days that they have come out openly for him, and it was expected yesterday that they had succeeded in stampeding the county in Coggeshall's interest.—Utica dispatch, August 10.

Senator Coggeshall to-day bolted the regular republican convention. Platt is said to have directed that no compromise be considered and that Coggeshall be killed off effectually and forever.—Rome dispatch, August 17.

The trouble is likely to remain in Oneida county, and be a serious thing for the party, because of the notoriety into which Coggeshall came last winter. The fact that he was made to figure prominently in the scandal in connection with the New York firemen's bill will be kept before the public just so long as he stays in the race. His general record, as a senator, for the last ten years is being overhauled by the supporters of Mr. Weaver in their attempts to defeat him.

Weaver's friends apparently forget that Coggeshall, whatever may have been his record, was the republican representative of that senatorial district term after term, that it was well known and thoroughly understood that he was one of Thomas C. Platt's lieutenants, and that however unscrupulous he may have been, his course was indorsed by them time and again.—New York Times, September 17.

Platt's Subservient Henchman Wins.

It is a tooth and nail fight that Senator Raines has on for renomination. As for Wayne, the Raines people claim that they have an understanding with Dunwell of Lyons, candidate for the republican nomination for supreme court judge, by which Wayne receiving that nomination the Ontario delegates are to be allowed to name the candidate for senator. It looks, therefore, as if Raines will carry the day.—Canandaigua dispatch, August 9.

As foreshadowed in the New York Times two weeks ago, the contest in this senatorial district has ended in a victory for John Raines. In spite of his high-sounding fulminations against Raines, Lieutenant-Governor Saxten absented himself from the convention, and allowed three Raines men to be substituted as delegates from his own town of Galen.

For his subserviency in the last few days of the canvass, the lieutenant-governor is permitted to head the Wayne delegation to Saratoga, composed exclusively of Platt's supporters.

In Little Seneca the old Platt-Mongin crowd is now in full control, the Patterson faction having laid down its arms after many years of unsuccessful fighting in party conventions and the courts.—Geneva dispatch, Aug. 19.

As it was, the machine held the caucuses five weeks before the state convention, and at a time when many republican voters were unable to participate because of the harvests. Their places were taken in many instances by machine democrats, who were glad of an opportunity to help out fellow machinists in distress.

Over in Phelps the other day a couple of local democrats met in a store. "Did you stand by Raines in the caucus?" No. 1 asked.

"Yes," said democrat No. 2.

Before the caucuses last month Senator Raines was very liberal in his promises of office to those who would support him. As one man said to day: "Raines promised offices for the next twenty-five years to some of those who stood by him, and he seems to have promised each office to at least twenty-five men."—Buffalo Express, Sept. 4.

Platt Uses Canal Patronage.

"Jake" Snell bargained to deliver enough votes to nominate Platt's man. He is the superintendent of Section 3 of the canal.—Amsterdam dispatch, Sept. 10.

Tom Platt's whipper-in, Frank Seeley (canal), came up from Albany yesterday carrying a long lash in his pocket. Superintendent Seeley had learned that there were wars and rumors of war in Albion, and he came up to straighten things out to the satisfaction of his master.—Albion dispatch, Sept. 10.

Congressman Rowland B. Mahany, the leader of the Platt forces, failed by sixty votes to carry his own ward. The only ward which went for Platt was the Thirteenth, where John Kraft, deputy superintendent of canals, was elected without opposition.—Buffalo dispatch, Sept. 9.

Mr. Mahany is said to have received $1,000 from the Platt machine last fall, when he was making his canvass for congress, and he proceeded to even up the account by talking.—Buffalo Express, Sept. 15.

Commenting on the reported dismissal of William Carberry, committeeman from the fifth ward of this city, from his place on the canal by Capt. Kraft because he refused to join the Mahany crusade, the Albany Argus observes. "Yet Gov. Morton was elected upon a platform which expressly condemned politics on the canals in hypocritical but high-sounding terms, and Gov. Morton's near relative is assistant superintendent for the Buffalo division.

The first ward will have three delegates in the first assembly district convention, and ex-Ald. John White, Jeremiah J. Donovan and Thomas Delehanty have been selected to make the race for the regulars. They are opposed by the district committeemen, James Burk, John Devine, James F. Loftus and Michael Hughes. It seems that in the first ward the canal machine has secured a family annex to its outfit, the family annex being supplied by the four district committeemen.

Going into the details of the opposition to the regular organization in his ward, the ex-alderman said that Committeemen Devine, Loftus, Burke and Hughes went to the general committee two months ago and asked the privilege of naming the caucus inspectors, the election inspectors, the registrars and the places for the district caucuses. The general committee decided that Messrs. Devine, Loftus, Burke and Hughes already had received their share of favors from the party, and agreed with ex-Ald. White that it would be better to retain the old inspectors, who were experienced and had proved trustworthy. Mr. White said that four of the Devine and four of the Burke family are provided with places through the party, and that the Hughes family is indebted to it for three places, and the Loftus family, which still has one place left, until recently had three. When the general committee declined to allow them everything in sight, according to the ex-alderman, they went over to the enemy, and that is why they are now trying to deliver the first ward into the hands of the Plattites.

It is in the fifth ward that William Quirk (canal) of the Aldridge brigade has undertaken the contract of bossing things. Quirk has been walking the ward, threatening all sorts of things. Quirk already has discharged one man employed on canal work because he attended a republican gathering on Seneca street last week and refused to turn against the organization. The Plattites had a spotter at that meeting, and other canal employes are being threatened with loss of their jobs if they do not step quickly to the music of the machine and help to down the organization.—Buffalo Express.

Platt's Henchman, Aldridge, Superintendent of Public Works.

Commenting upon a proposal to conduct the city government of Rochester on business principles, the Rochester Herald (Dem.), says: "Two things must be done before that commendable project can be carried out. One is the overthrow of Mr. Aldridge. As is well known, he is the uncrowned ruler of this city. Although he has become superintendent of public works, he has a grip on us as unrelenting and merciless as when chairman of the executive board or the occupant of the mayor's chair. Nothing is done without consulting him. He dictates all appointments; he controls the action of the common council."

On a current of water and rum "Boss" Aldridge has floated to the republican citadel in this county and captured it. The water is in the canals, which the ex-mayor as superintendent of public works has "worked" for all they are worth. The rum is sold by saloon keepers, who, to keep in the good graces of Mr. Aldridge when he was mayor, gave support to him politically.—Rochester dispatch, September 7.

"To fully understand the situation there it must be remembered that Aldridge built up his power by the aid of his control of the executive board. This board of three members has long had more power than the mayor or any other county or municipal officer. It had full control of the appointment of employes of streets, gas, sewers, fire department, and water. The mayor's powers and prerogatives alongside of this aggregation are insignificant. One of its three members must be of opposite politics to the majority, but he has long been a creature of Aldridge and simply did his bidding.

Yesterday The Express told an interesting story of the way in which George W. Aldridge, the Platt boss of Rochester, bolsters his waning power by making deals with Hill democrats. Yesterday also the Courier had a special dispatch from New York giving an interview with ex-Representative Van Voorhis, one of the Rochester republicans who are trying to overthrow Boss Aldridge. Mr. Van Voorhis made these startling charges as to the way in which the Aldridge men carried a primary recently:

It is well known just how much money was paid for votes, and there is no secret about it whatever. The caucus was held in the town of Perrinton, and it was disgraceful and shameful the way Aldridge carried it by 80 majority. He did it in grand style, I must admit. His superintendent in that section, James K. Burlingham, had all the barges, floats, boats, mud-scoops and all manner of craft landed at Fairport, which is a part of Perrinton, and all this was done for effect. Then the shameless vote-buying commenced on the present Aldridge crowd. The price of votes ranged from $3 to $5 apiece, and the buying went on almost openly. It has been established that $1,500 were spent to carry the caucus. One other caucus has been held, and the boss lost it. These caucuses are to name delegates to the state convention, and the assembly and senatorial district conventions. Aldridge is now holding back the caucuses through the ward men whom he controls. These ward men can be and have been bought for $100 each and some have demanded in bulk $500. These are the men that Boss Aldridge controls.—Buffalo Express, August 22.

Aldridge Uses Democrats

The attempt of Martin J. Calihan, chairman of the republican committee and "king" of the second ward, to capture the democratic county committee, proved a singularly fortunate thing for the democracy. So evenly were the factions divided that the balance of power was held by two men known to be friendly to Calihan and Aldridge. One of these men holds his place as the representative of Calihan's own ward through the active interference of Calihan, whose democratic followers captured the second ward caucus from both the regular factions. The other Calihan democrat was Felix O'Hara, a bar-keeper in an Exchange street saloon, who demanded the chairmanship of the committee as the price of his support. Through the refusal of both Frederick W. Smith and William C. Page, leaders of rival factions, to dicker with O'Hara, the Hinkley sub-committee of the state committee was able to defeat this outrageous deal and the chairmanship was given to an outsider, Henry D. McNaughton.—Rochester dispatch, Aug. 31.

The republican caucuses for Monroe county were held on Saturday, and George W. Aldridge, Platt's local agent, won out. He carried every assembly district, and will succeed himself as state committeeman.—Sept. 2.

The Rochester papers, for reasons not difficult to guess, have been very wary in telling of last week's caucuses. It was to Boss Aldridge's interest that the facts be suppressed. In the twentieth ward the friends of ex-Mayor Curran won the preliminary fight against the machine by electing J. J. Hayes as chairman of the caucus. This defeat so angered the Aldridge men that they resolved to carry the ward by hook or crook. The republican voters showed so decided a preference for Curran ballots that the machine gang finally took Chairman Hayes and threw him out of the window. Hayes, desiring to act as chairman inside rather than from a distance, returned to his post, only to be again put out through the window by the Aldridge men. Schwing is also suspected of having had a part in the theft of the ballot-box, which followed soon after the regular chairman had been thrown out.—Rochester dispatch, Sept. 2.

Jimmy Laird, who gets $4 a day from the state through a job Superintendent Aldridge gave him, was chairman of the caucus in the fourth ward. Among his other accomplishments, Laird is so versatile in politics that he is said to have voted at the recent democratic caucuses here, besides bossing the republican affairs in his ward. Laird is charged with deliberately tearing up Curran ballots and seeing that but few machine tickets got into the box. The machine here had formed a long line of adherents, among them being numerous democrats. Whenever an Aldridge republican appeared he would be shoved into some democrat's place in the fore part of the line, while anti-Aldridge voters were compelled to fall in at the rear and stand in lines so long that many were thus kept from the ballot box until the hour for closing the caucus came.—Rochester dispatch, Sept. 3.

Platt Selects His Judges.

There is no more interesting political contest now going on in Western New York than that in the eighth judicial district. Unfortunately the republican party has fallen of late into the bad habit of awarding places on the bench to men who have acquired more reputation as manipulators of caucuses than as students of the law. The fruits of such a policy are already evident in the fifth, seventh and eighth districts, in which are, respectively, the important cities of Syracuse, Rochester and Buffalo. The use of money in large sums in the canvasses for delegates to the republican judicial conventions of these districts is an admitted evil, and one that is severely condemned by right-minded lawyers of Central and Western New York.—Albion dispatch, Aug. 26.

The people of the Seventh judicial district are about to be given an instructive object lesson in the way judges are made by Thomas C. Platt. The republican judicial convention is called to meet in this city to-morrow to nominate two justices of the supreme court. Time was when such a convention was composed of the best lawyers of the district, intent upon securing capable men for the supreme bench, but all this is changed now, and the rural counties will simply send wire-pullers to Rochester, men selected by Platt's local lieutenants to make the selections desired by him.—Rochester dispatch, Sept. 6.

There has been a scurrying all day among the friends of four or five men, each of whom wants to be the candidate for the place on the court of appeals bench. This has been the only place for which any canvass has been made. Mr. Platt's candidate, Judge Martin, has a big staff of workers. They are headed by State Committeeman George W. Dunn, of Binghamton, and the list includes a squad of Broome county politicians who are expert at the business and are all strong Platt men.—Saratoga dispatch, Sept. 16.

Platt's Primaries in New York.

Thomas C. Platt walked leisurely up Broadway about 8:30 last night in a full dress suit. He looked as cool as any man on Broadway. At the same hour, in various assembly districts in the city, Platt followers were sweltering in cellars and small halls, struggling and fighting in the ugliest, liveliest, and altogether most exciting assembly district conventions ever held.

The conventions were held in all the thirty-five assembly districts for the purpose of electing delegates to the republican state convention and to the republican county convention. As was indicated by the primaries of Tuesday night Platt won a decisive victory last night.

Perhaps the hottest fight of all was that in the twenty-fifth assembly district, where the friends of the mayor's secretary, Job E. Hedges, tried to secure control against the Platt forces, headed by Thurlow Weed Barnes and James W. Auten. This convention was held in the basement of the "Chimney Corner," at Twenty-fifth street and Sixth avenue. The meeting room was at about the temperature of a Turkish bath.

Delegates were hauled and mauled from side to side, until they scarcely knew where they stood. This was all before the convention met, and so when it did meet the excitement was at the highest pitch.

In the over-heated basement the delegates gathered about 8 o'clock, and were at first, apparently, peaceful and quiet. Nothing unusual happened until Delegate Ludwig suddenly jumped to the table, rapped upon it with his cane, and tried to call the meeting to order. Immediately John C. O'Connor, representing the anti-Platt forces, and Michael J. McCann, the Platt forces, made for the table. Their adherents tried to push them on top of the board. The language used is not printable. A Tammany primary was never so indecent in its use of expletives.

Ludwig was thrown about from right to left. Now and then his body seemed to be passing through the air over the heads of the crowd. McCann gained the top of the table and tried to make a speech.

"Come down out of that!" yelled an anti-Platt man.

"Let him speak! Let him speak!" yelled the Platt men.

McCann was hauled down. All was then confusion. It was just like a college rush, only more bad language was used. There was apparently no striking of blows, but the feeling ran about as high as if there had been.

"Clear the room! Clear the room!"

There was only four policemen present at the beginning of the row. Sergt. Corry, who was in charge, telephoned for the reserves to the Thirtieth street station. They came. Capt. Pickett in citizen's clothes came with them. They quickly cleared the hall of all but the reporters. Then the delegates were allowed to return, and when the place was pretty well filled again Mr. McCann wrapped for order, and said he was authorized as a member of the county committee to call the meeting to order. Then came another hubbub.—New York Times, Sept. 13.

Nearly all the old district leaders who now follow Platt won in their districts, however. The methods they employed were the same as those that prevailed at the Tammany primaries. According to the statements of the Brookfield men, the Platt leaders voted dead men, democrats, and republicans who lived outside of the districts in which they voted. It is alleged, too, that Tammany men, in considerable numbers, helped their old allies at the polls. In the old days the Tammany leaders used to send batches of men regularly to the republican primaries to assist republican leaders, who in return helped Tammany on election day, and now, it appears, the old days have come again. A Brookfield leader said to-day that some men might go to jail in consequence of their voting last night. The primaries were held under the primary election law, and offenses against this law are punishable in the same way as offenses against the election laws. The greatest frauds, it is alleged, were perpetrated in the Twenty-fifth district, where the Platt men made a mighty effort to defeat Mr. Hedges. He says that in the thirty-seventh election district 105 men were enrolled, and that of this number two are dead, and forty-eight do not live in the district.—New York Evening Post, Sept. 14.

Platt Tries to Punish a Former Lieutenant, Fassett.

J. Sloat Fassett, in his fight against Platt in Chemung county, is hampered somewhat as Coggeshall was hampered in Oneida, by the selfish personal element in the contest. Fassett has by no means the unsavory record of Coggeshall, but he employed what are known as "machine methods," and was subservient to the bossism of Platt so long as it served his own ends. He was the Platt candidate for governor in 1891, and his fierce antipathy to the "boss" springs from his failure to retain his support for the nomination last year.—New York Times.

Tom Platt, boss, showed his full hand in his game against ex-Senator J. Sloat Fassett in Chemung county at the meeting of the appellate committee this morning. The names of men known to be favorable to Fassett have not been allowed upon the enrollment books. And where, after the day of registry, it was suspected that the name of a Fassett man had been placed upon the books, it was stricken off and a card sent notifying him of the fact and referring him to the appellate committee of the county committee. This morning the appellate committee met in star chamber session. The committee organized in secret and went into secret session. Had not the straight republicans of Chemung county got onto the fact on time, the committee would have adjourned without listening to a single case on appeal. However, when it was made known that the committee was in session, the Fassett republicans whose names had been stricken from the enrollment books flocked to the committee room in great numbers.

No case was settled. The story of the maneuvering of Platt's men in stuffing the enrollment books discloses one of the most high-handed pieces of rascality in the political history of the state.—Elmira dispatch Buffalo Express, Sept. 6.

Fassett Lets Out Some Facts About the Boss.

Who has been since 1881 the greatest "mischief maker" in the republican party? Who resigned from the United States senate the fatal year Garfield was shot? Who precipitated upon the party for merely personal ends the bitterest factional fight this state has ever known? Who was identified with forged proxy scandals and the awful Folger campaign? Who stood in the pathway of long-promised reform legislation at Albany all last winter? And lastly, who has imperiled republican success in the state and made democratic success in New York City inevitable this fall by his vicious assaults upon Mayor Strong for attempting to honestly carry out his ante-election promises?

To ask these questions is to answer them. There is but one name which comes at once to the lips of every intelligent republican, and that name is Thomas C. Platt.—From the Elmira Daily Advertiser.

Caucuses are to be held Thursday night in many parts of the city, and it would cause no surprise if broken heads were one of the results. It is charged by the anti-Platt men that the republican machine is spending money with lavish hands, and they say the only question now in the fight is, "How much is to be sent here?"

"If they make it $20,000 they will win. If the figure is $15,000 the chances are even. If it is limited to $10,000 they are defeated," said one of the most prominent republicans in the county to a correspondent of the New York Times. "All decency has been abandoned by the machine. It is a question of dollars and cents with them."

Mr. Fassett is devoting his entire time to the canvass.—Elmira dispatch, Sept. 9.

The republicans of the city of Elmira and the county of Chemung achieved a notable victory to-night. Despite all the powers the Platt-Flood-Tammany alliance could bring to bear against the solid, honest-minded republicans of the county, the party, as represented by ex-Senator J. Sloat Fassett, won a decisive and significant victory.—Elmira dispatch, Sept. 12.

The Brotherhood of Boss Platt, Republican, and Boss Murphy, Democrat.

The regular organization is being fought in Troy bitterly as it was here. The chairman of the county committee is Frank S. Black, who was a leader in the committee of safety, organized after the Ross murder, and who was elected to congress last fall. The delectable method of attack upon him by the republican allies of Murphyism and Bat-Sheatism may be judged by the following from the Troy Telegram, Platt organ: "Why, this Black was nominated as a joke. There was not a republican in the whole district who believed that he could be elected; he would never have come within ten miles of a nomination if success had been thought possible. In the words of Lou Payn, a yellow dog could have been elected last fall. But whether yellow or Black, this district did elect a dog, a sneaking, worthless, ungrateful cur."

* * *

Mike Dady, one of the old-time republican "boys" in Brooklyn, who deserted his party when it nominated a reformer for mayor two years ago, is back again, now that the machine element is on top, and, as one of Jake Worth's lieutenants (Platt's man), is once more installed as boss of his ward.

* * *

Mr. Lauterbach, like his master, Platt, makes his political influence serve his business interest. He has just secured the adoption by the New York board of aldermen of a resolution giving a street railroad in which he is interested a valuable extension of route. He did it with the aid of the Tammany members, too.

* * *

The Sham Convention.

Few men of importance came to the city today. Trains were infrequent. Those who came last night, however, were a busy lot. Mr. Platt's rooms were occupied all day by men prominent in the party, who came to wind up what he wanted done. Every one, almost, who had had a little difference with him went over to his quarters and took a bit of an olive branch which hung over his door.—Saratoga dispatch, September 15.

* * *

At 12:20 o'clock Mr. Platt entered the hall and there was an uproar that was astonishing, men standing on the seats and cheering vociferously while the band played "Hail to the Chief."

* * *

Mr. Platt is not working covertly or through emissaries this year. The only question in regard to delegates in the preliminary canvass was whether they were Platt or anti-Platt men, and he promptly claimed his own as fast as they were chosen. He has gone to Saratoga with the distinct understanding on the part of everybody that to-morrow's convention is his and will do his bidding, and he takes no pains to conceal his own assurance of the fact.—New York Times.

BOSS SHEEHAN.

Wm. H. Cuddeback, the new chairman of the democratic general committee of Erie county, is a Sheehan man. Charles N. Brayton, the new treasurer, was a Sheehan man in the last days of his term as county clerk. Frank T. Reynolds, the "new" secretary, is the same old Reynolds, the reputed author of the infamous Reynolds rules, Mr. Sheehan's most willing tool and one of his principal beneficiaries. A majority of the members of the advisory committee are Sheehanites. This is the old gang under new names.

BOSS BRICE.

Cuyahoga county is entitled to 59 votes in the democratic state convention at Springfield. Twice that number will apply for admission on Tuesday as a result of the exciting convention held here to-day at which the Brice men revolted against the action of their opponents, and set up a convention of their own. The contest between the two factions began early in the session, when Alfred Whittaker, a pronounced free silver man, was elected chairman over ex-Attorney-General Lawrence, a Brice leader, by 227 to 189. This victory on the part of the anti-Brice leaders led to the appointment of a committee of three to select delegates to the state convention. The Brice men opposed this motion, and a stormy scene followed. Personal collisions were frequent, and all manner of epithets were applied to the chairman. Chairman Whittaker was struck in the face with a hard ball manufactured by an enemy out of a newspaper.

J. J. Greaves mounted a chair and shouted: "All in favor of an honest convention come this way!" He led the way, followed by the Brice delegates. A procession was formed, and the Brice people marched out to hold a convention by themselves.—Cleveland dispatch New York Times, August 17.

Col. Kilbourne received a letter from Senator Brice yesterday, urging him to be a candidate and assuring him that he could be nominated by acclamation and unanimously. There is no doubt that the senator will control the convention. The Chicago coinage plank will be indorsed with some opposition. The anti-Brice element is likely to make a fight upon him, but no resolution hostile to him can be adopted.

L. P. Ohliger, revenue collector at Cleveland and a friend of Senator Brice, is here to-night, on his way to Springfield. He says the Brice delegates from Cuyahoga will be seated in the state convention.—New York Times, Aug. 19.

* * *

Warner Miller: "Senator Brice has again shown that he has control of the Ohio democracy. I'm glad of it, very glad." And the ex-senator rubbed his hands as though he wished there were Brices all over the land.

* * *

It seems that Senator Brice has won a great victory in the struggle for the control of the democratic convention of Ohio. He has control of the organization and of all the important committees as well as a majority of the delegates. This means an indorsement of the administration and of Brice, and the adoption of a sound money platform. It is not often that the Ohio senator succeeds in getting his name identified with a good cause, and if he must win, it is some comfort to know that his triumph involves something more than his own personal fortunes. But after all is said, we think the country could have stood a free silver convention better than it can stand another six years of Calvin S. Brice in the United States senate.—Indianapolis News.

* * *

Seldom, if ever, has the convention of a great party been more completely owned by a single man than was the democratic convention in Ohio, which adjourned yesterday. And the most remarkable thing about it all is that the sole force which this man represents in politics is money. Calvin S. Brice entered politics as a millionaire who had plenty of money and was willing to spend it. He was and is a New York business man, having only a nominal residence in Ohio. Yet the Ohio democrats not only have honored him with one of the highest offices in the gift of the people of any state, but have finally placed themselves completely at his disposal, allowing him both to write their platform and pick out their candidate. It is true Brice has done all this by the active aid of the administration at Washington and in its name. In congress he was considered a very lukewarm administration man. During the pendency of the Wilson bill he made a speech reflecting severely on the President, charging him, among other things, with being responsible for the infamous sugar schedule.—Buffalo Express, August 22.

BOSS GORMAN.

The fact that Gorman retains the whip hand in Maryland democratic politics is ascribed largely to his success in weaning Boss Rasin away from his alliance with Governor Brown and the independents under the leadership of Representative-elect J. K. Cowen. The independents a short time ago were working openly together to overturn Gorman and capture the state convention. They were operating in every part of the state, and actually had succeeded in carrying the counties of Garrett, Alleghany and Dorchester, and were in a fair way to win in other strongholds of Gormanism when the return of Mr. Rasin to his former alliance with the senator put a new face on matters, and the fight practically was given up.—New York Times, July 30.

* * *

Frauds are alleged in balloting at the primaries in the Sixth district, St. Mary's county, Md., last Saturday. One ballot was challenged and a pin was stuck through the paper as a marker. When the box was opened three Gorman ballots were found folded in one. Other similar evidence of fraud was found, and the number of ballots cast exceeded the number of names on the check-list.

There is lively anxiety to know what Senator Gorman will do at the democratic state convention on Wednesday next. Nobody knows, and many even doubt whether the senator has yet made up his mind, although the majority of the newspapers insist that he will nominate State Senator Thomas G. Hayes for governor and will make an unequivocal declaration in favor of reassessment.

It is one of the tightest places he has been in during his political career. He controls "the machine," but the people and the papers are against him.

But, uncertain as everything is, the senator is calm and unruffled. He came to Baltimore this week and dictated the delegates to be voted for at the primaries, but the vote was a keen disappointment to his supporters, for of the 55,000 democratic voters of the city only 8,567 took the trouble to go to the polls. In no convention have the senator's friends attempted to offer a resolution indorsing his course, and it is announced that no effort of that kind will be made at the state convention. The fear, of course, is that it would be rejected. On the other hand, resolutions indorsing President Cleveland are passed at all the conventions, and they never fail to bring forth earnest enthusiasm.

It may be that at the last moment Senator Gorman may do as he has done in other tight places—turn around and nominate an anti Gorman man, so as to placate his enemies.—Baltimore dispatch New York Times, July 27.

* * *

In trying to avoid Scylla, Boss Gorman of Maryland seems to have plunged into Charybdis. He turned down the candidate with whom he had won the primaries, Senator Thomas Hayes, and took up a dark horse, in the hope of mollifying the Cleveland men.

* * *

It was a Gorman-Rasin victory.

These two men agreed upon the candidates and then they issued orders to their followers in the city and counties to fall in line.

Many personal pledges had to be broken, but, like a thoroughly disciplined army, most of the delegates obeyed the commands and carried them out with such machine-like precision that even the old-timers had to smile.

Here is the way the nomination for governor came about:

Senator Gorman had said in effect to Mr. Rasin: "I will not accept as a candidate Governor Brown, Judge Robinson or Judge Fisher."

Mr. Rasin had said in effect to Senator Gorman: "I will not accept as a candidate Thomas G. Hayes, Spencer C. Jones or John Walter Smith."

Then came the question: "On whom can we unite?"

Several gentlemen were considered and finally Mr. Hurst was decided upon. Friends of Mr. Rasin and friends of Senator Gorman were sent to Mr. Hurst separately, so as to make the offer of the governorship look like a spontaneous movement. Mr. Hurst consented. Gorman and Rasin did the rest.

At a gathering of State Senator Hayes's friends at the Carrollton hotel there was apparent the bitterest feeling against Senator Gorman for his treatment of Senator Hayes. The presence of Mr. Gorman would no doubt have precipitated a scene which would have been not very pleasant to him.

One of Senator Hayes's friends, in speaking of his candidacy, said that "Senator Hayes was induced to enter the contest at Mr. Gorman's suggestion. The reason assigned by him was that he was the only available candidate, because re-assessment was the only issue which could unite the party and that a provision in the platform without Senator Hayes's candidacy would be mistrusted by the people."

Continuing, he said: "There is no baser treachery on record than Gorman's to Hayes. Mr. Gorman led Senator Hayes and his friends up to two hours before the convention met to believe that he was to be nominated. The delegates to the convention were elected in many counties without opposition, because they were told they were to vote for Hayes."

The discussion then led to the famous interview at 10 o'clock yesterday morning between Gorman and Hayes, and one of the gentlemen present from southern Maryland said he had tried to get the facts from Senator Hayes but failed, as Mr. Hayes declined to discuss the scene. Another said he had a version of the interview from a member of the city delegation who was in an adjoining room and overheard it. As given by this delegate the interview was opened by Senator Hayes saying to Senator Gorman: "I now discover your baseness. What the people of this state believe of you is all true. You have posed as in favor of re-assessment and have used me for your base purposes. If you had given me a few more hours to expose your nefarious schemes I should have let the people of Maryland know of your deception. I despise your methods and do not fear you or your henchmen. I am determined that if I can prevent it that your grip on the democratic party shall end with your nomination of Hurst."

Senator Hayes then, taking up his hat, left, saying as he opened the door: "We this day part forever and my life's work shall be to help dethrone you from the dictatorship now held by you over the party." It is said Mr. Hayes shook his fist in Mr. Gorman's face.

Throughout the interview Gorman remained silent. He did not say a word.—Baltimore Sun, August 1.

* * *

The Revolt.

The republican state convention at Cambridge yesterday nominated probably the strongest ticket that it could have put in the field. Personally the nominees are above criticism. They are all gentlemen of high standing and of undoubted character and worth. Mr. Lowndes, the nominee for governor, is a man of fine business ability and varied practical experience, thoroughly conversant with the needs and resources of the state.

There is another point upon which the republican party has the right to congratulate itself in connection with the ticket nominated at Cambridge yesterday, and that is that it was nominated by the republican voters of the state, and not by bosses or machines. There was a spirited and earnest rivalry between the friends of the aspirants for the gubernatorial nomination, but it was a contest of the people and among the people. The primaries were fair, free and unfettered, and the will of the people as recorded at them was expressed in the convention. No boss undertook to step in and override the popular will, or to force the convention to drop the candidates the people wanted and nominate those he had determined upon.

Besides pledging itself to re-assessment, the platform pronounces in favor of annual registration in Baltimore, of giving places on the official ballot to independent nominees as well as to those of regular party organizations; of making the supervisory powers of courts over registers effective. * * *

Another plank in the platform is one which is especially worthy of commendation. It is as follows: "That all public offices exist for the good of the people only, and it is the right of the people to have them administered with an eye single to the public interests; and we therefore pledge ourselves to the enactment of such legislation as shall permit the people of the several counties and municipalities of the state to decide for themselves by popular vote whether appointments to the police, fire and all other departments of public service shall be in accordance with the principles of the merit system."

The Sun has advocated the application of the civil service system to state and municipal administration for many years, and it is glad to see that it has at last secured the indorsement of two political parties in this state—the republicans and the prohibitionists.—Baltimore Sun, Aug. 16.

* * *

Mr. Lowndes, republican candidate for governor:

"I have read with interest the platform adopted. It is clear enough for everyone to understand, and broad enough, not only for republican but for independent voters to stand upon. It speaks in no uncertain terms as to re-assessment, registration, fair elections and public schools. It comes out boldly for the merit system, and civil service, by the way, is here to stay.

"Wherever it has been honestly tried the people have sustained it. Chicago adopted it by an overwhelming popular vote, and I believe it has given satisfaction to everyone except those who seek office for the spoils.

"I believe that when my party comes into power it will fulfill the pledges made at Cambridge yesterday."

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

VOL. II, No. 32.

INDIANAPOLIS, OCTOBER, 1895.

TERMS: { One dollar per annum.
10 cents per copy.

Published monthly. Publication office, No. 23 N. Meridian St., Indianapolis, Ind. Address,

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

THE methods of Boss Gorman in the desperate fight he is making to retain his supremacy are indicated by the following from a correspondent exceptionally well-informed and dispassionate:

"We are in the midst of an extraordinarily active and interesting campaign, and are doing all that we can to prevent our senator and his satellites from simply stealing the state again, as they did in 1875, and as they stole the city in 1885, such being, beyond all question, their present intention.

THE republican party of Indianapolis is entitled to the great weight of the congratulations upon the result of the city election of October 8. Its candidate, Trusler, as we have often stated, had an unsatisfactory record in the city council, which he capped by being the leader in the movement forcing the fire chief out of his place, because the latter would not dismiss a few democrats. As comptroller, he levied an assessment upon policemen and firemen and boldly declared that all appointive offices were political offices and should be paid for by those who received them. On his motion the rule forbidding assessments was stricken out of the civil service rules and he was openly opposed to adopting any civil service rules whatever, although the charter plainly requires it. He went about securing the nomination in the most approved boss style, having his captains of tens and captains of hundreds. His nomination was forced by his party machine avowedly because he was the kind of man he was and particularly because he was opposed to "civil service." That such a man can not command the votes of the republican party of this city, but, on the other hand, that he should go headlong to defeat must redound to the credit of that party. It is the stronger and better to-day because of this defeat. It had any number of men who would make good mayors of this city and and if it had nominated one such, there would have been no difficulty in electing him. There is a great movement throughout the country for better municipal government and the republican party of Indianapolis will have to join in that movement if it wants to govern this city.

THE democrats now have all the rope there is and it is for them to decide whether they will, as usual, hang themselves. They were beaten by 3,000 two years ago; they have gained by 3,700 now and can just as easily be beaten by any number of thousands two years from now. Happily that is the way the voters of this town are constituted. The demand of the times is to exclude party politics from city affairs, and to this end the merit and labor service systems are the first indispensable steps. The democrats will find already in force a set of rules covering both of these systems and in the main good. A rule forbidding assessments should be added and there should be some further slight modification in the way of excluding favoritism. These rules have been adopted under the charter and are a part of the law of this city. The people want them strictly enforced. The pensioners upon the democratic party will be violently opposed to them and there will be presented the most important problem with which the new mayor will have to deal. It will be very bad for his party should he decide that Indianapolis can go without municipal reform.

IN his final report which Mayor Denny made a few days ago, while he congratulates himself upon having secured the adoption of civil service rules for this city and takes it for granted that they are permanent additions to our methods of city government, he nevertheless says that their working has not been entirely satisfactory. Of course not. When a mayor permits a rule forbidding assessments to be struck out on the suggestion of his comptroller and then permits the comptroller to make a bold, barefaced assessment upon policemen and firemen, and when he sees all through his administration repeated violations of the rules and punishes nobody because he is afraid, he can not expect such working of rules to be satisfactory nor can he expect to enhance the good opinion of himself in the public mind. Mayor Denny made the fatal mistake of wanting to be a reformer without having the nerve to carry his reform to a complete victory. He has fallen between two stools.

EVEN SECRETARY CARLISLE is beginning to reap his reward. Congressman Maguire, of California, is in Washington pressing complaints against Superintendent Daggett of the San Francisco mint. Maguire charges that Daggett has used the patronage of the mint for his own private ends, namely, to help his election to the United States Senate. That he has boasted of having used the patronage to control the last democratic state convention. That he has been absent from his post twelve months out of the last eighteen. That he has, while in office, organized a mining company and sold the stock at a dollar a share, to to the employes of the mint, and admits that he has collected thereby $2,400. This Carlislean office holder is best understood when his own words are quoted, as is shown by the following from the San Francisco Call, of April 8th, in which he is referring to his senatorial candidacy:

"Senators Biggey, Fay, and Gessford, came to me and made a strong plea for the laundry work in the mint for Biggey's brother, and in return for this favor Biggey promised to vote for me. Gessford promised the same, and I gave his sister a place in the mint. She is out of it now. Senator Fay secured his brother's appointment through promises of doing the same thing. Well, he did not do it. Of course, I am going to discharge Biggey's brother, and Fay's brother, too. I do this in justice to the democratic party, which I consider has been buncoed out of patronage."

THE entire misunderstanding which the country has obtained concerning the new consular rules is proved by the fact that applicants, believing the opportunity to be competitive, have swarmed forward, asking a chance to compete in such numbers that the state department has been obliged to notify the public in effect that there is no open competition, but that the new system is still the rankest kind of a spoils system, with a few by-laws. Even Josiah Quincy's explanation before the Massachusetts state democratic convention the other day leaves the system as lame as ever. Quincy is evidently very sore over the universal public reprobation of his disgraceful loot of the consular service and he has good reason to be. It is useless for him to try to explain—just as useless as it would be to try to explain his connection with that bureau of engraving and printing contract.

IT is gratifying to see that the good sense and honor of the post-office employes at large have recognized that the recent secret investigation of them could do no injury to those who were conscientious and capable. At the late national association of letter carriers, Postmaster-General Wilson carefully explained what had been done and how and why it had been done, and there was a general expression of approval. In Philadelphia where the civil service law was for years tricked and where pulls and politics have dominated, one hundred men have been dismissed. One instance given by the Washington correspondent of the New York Evening Post, illustrates what this paper has claimed, that while every employe should be certain of his tenure if he is competent and faithful, he must be held to the most exacting standard:

"One of the best-backed men who has been brought to book and discharged from the service is a veteran soldier who has been in the government employ twenty-six years. When the first report came in about him, it seemed too bad to be true, and his route-card was turned over to another pair of agents, who were strangers to the whole matter. The first report had described him as loitering so many minutes in so many saloons, in each of which he drank a glass of beer or spirits. The second described him as not only repeating this round of visits and drinks, but of stopping in the street, throwing his bag of letters on the sidewalk, and watching a circus procession for nineteen minutes. When called to account, the man admitted that he had taken one drink as a remedy for an attack of the cramps, but denied all the rest of the indictment, and produced affidavits from various barkeepers on his route that they had not served him with anything. Then the Grand Army of the Republic took up his fight; but when minutely detailed evidence produced by the secret agents had been not only carefully sifted but solemnly sworn to by the agents themselves, the defense had to surrender at discretion, and the carrier went out."

As an indication of the way the investigation was carried on, the same paper gives the following instance:

"A generally efficient carrier was threatened with suspension for remaining ten minutes in one office where he went to deliver mail, seven minutes in another, and so on. He came forward at once and met the charge with an admission that it was entirely true. But he then produced his registered-letter book to show that in one office he had had to wait for something like 100 signatures by the clerk whose duty it was to receive the registered mail, and in another for sixty-odd signatures, and so on. The date and hour agreed precisely in every instance with the report of the secret agents, and the carrier was exonerated on the spot. The department derived much satisfaction from the fact that the very evidence which cleared the record of the carrier proved also the correctness of the secret agents' statements."

In the October North American Review, Dr. Henry Smith Williams has an article on "Politics and the Insane," which goes straight to the mark. He points out that from Kansas to New York the almost universal rule of treating the insane is to turn them over to the tender mercies of politicians and heelers. It is one of the most disgraceful facts of American civilization. New York city is a typical instance. The state cares for its insane and cares for them well. It was proposed to bring under the state care the six thousand insane patients of the city, now housed in accommodations for about four thousand, a large share being very unfit accommodations. To this end the State would tax the city $750,000 a year in addition to the present tax. But the plan, if carried out, would have taken the spoil of the institutions from Tammany. Therefore Tammany compromised with the legislature by letting the city be taxed the extra $750,000, which all goes into the state treasury, and in return the city kept its insane, to be continued to be spoiled by the spoiler. It seems incredible that Americans will submit to such a barbarous travesty of government; but they do submit to it. In Kansas, the populist reformers displayed their entirely mercenary character by looting the Topeka hospital for the insane, from cellar to garret, in which Dr. Williams says they were headed by a woman. Then this band of freebooters fell to quarreling among themselves, until at the end of the year they had such a pandemonium that they were obliged to re-call the old superintendent.

City and State is a paper forced into publication because Philadelphia reformers found themselves unable to get facts before the people through the regular press. While it calls a spade a spade, it performs this office in what may be called a very gentlemanly manner, too gentlemanly the CHRONICLE thinks for the ruffianism it has to deal with. It has been for some months giving its readers facts concerning Boss Quay's "Fight for His Life." But since the boss's victory it has evidently been taken to task by a lot of reformer apologists for its attack on Quay, and for not taking seriously Quay's reform platform at which his henchmen in convention openly laughed. This peculiar condition of Pennsylvania reformers themselves infected with Quayism is what outside of that state is a marvel to the country. Some years ago in one of the revolts against Quay, several men from other states were invited to address a great audience of reformers in Philadelphia. New York papers of financial responsibility had been boldly printing the facts of Quay's infamous career, and in particular the instance of his embezzlement and of his rescue from a felon's penalty by Cameron, who replaced the stolen money out of his own pocket. Quay had been silent under these repeated charges. Surely a reformer addressing reformers might mention such facts in plain English and expect a ringing response. When one speaker thus spoke of Quay that evening, he instantly felt in the anti-Quay audience a chill of disapproval. His speech fell on disapproving reformers' ears. It seemed curious to him then that over such a career, and such a man, one must tread softly. He did not then know of those silken fetters, of intricate business interests, that have so many times laid curious meshes around and about the reformers of that great, historic, rich, and boss-ridden state.

It is the duty of City and State at whatever cost of disapproval to continue to print names and facts; it is its duty to expose to public view all Quayized reformers. It is entirely possible that as City and State has no financial interests to be stabbed, certain reformers may decline to read its facts. It must then speak the truth for the rest, and surely the regeneration of Pennsylvania will finally come from its humiliating and degraded position before the bar of an inexorable public opinion, outside the state. Free government must be restored to Pennsylvania. How abject its condition is indicated by the following:

"To-night Senator Quay is the hero, as well as the idol of Pennsylvania politicians of all degrees of prominence. His rooms at the Lochiel Hotel have been constantly besieged since the convention ended, by men anxious to pay homage to his matchless leadership. The senator takes all of the praise and congratulations that are being showered upon him with his usual stoicism, and so far as outward appearances go, his demeanor is just the same as when the fight seemed to be going against him."

The signal success of Senator Quay in the political field this year has suggested to the people of Dillsburg, this county, where he was born in a log cabin, sixty-two years ago, that they ought to celebrate the anniversary of that event on the 30th of this month.

And most astounding of all is this obeisance of the highly respectable Public Ledger that had opposed Quay. Referring to Quay's chairmanship, it says:

"No exception can properly be taken to this, even by those who do not like Senator Quay nor his methods; there is something gained in having the real and nominal leader one and the same man."

TWO VIEWS OF THE CONSULAR REFORM RULES.

President Cleveland is certainly deserving of great credit for the steady advance which he has made in the inclusion under the classified service of federal offices, which have hitherto been within the grasp of spoilsmen; but all the newspapers, even of the republican party, seem to have been misled as to the praise due the administration for the recent executive order intended to reform the consular service. Mr. Olney's plan, for it is peculiarly his—instead of requiring a free competitive examination open to all applicants, and, as naturally would have been the case, to be conducted under the civil service commission, is only the long-discarded, pass-examination system in disguise. This never has succeeded and never will succeed in getting the sound practical results aimed at by civil service reform, as has been abundantly proved in England and in this country. Under Mr. Olney's plans, the secretary of state, who is the appointing officer, first chooses his man and then examines him, not on a basis of competition, which insures fairness to all and opens appointment to the best man, but by a standard which he fixes, which, if disposed to favoritism and partisanship, he can arrange to suit the capabilities of persons whom he has determined upon for appointment. In a word, Mr. Olney's plan of pass-examinations puts no real restraints upon the bad purposes of a partisan appointing officer, and does not afford free competition, two things which it is the primary purpose of genuine reform to secure. It leaves the whole machinery of examination in the hands of the appointing officer who is the very man from whom they should be completely removed. Sooner or later the inadequacy of Mr. Olney's plan will be demonstrated to the public, as it is now to every civil service reformer who has examined it. Mr. Olney, like all other wise men, who refuse to avail themselves of the garnered wisdom of experience, might readily have avoided the error into which he has fallen. But he wanted to have a reform which was of his own peculiar manufacture, and so has repeated an old mistake. We must look for any real relief from the grave abuses under which our consular service has long suffered to the passage through congress of the Lodge or Morgan bill. — City and State, September 26.

The above is the moderate expression of what every moderately informed civil service reformer would be supposed to think of Mr. Olney's consular reform. On the face it lacks every fundamental principle of reform, because it leaves untouched the key-stone of the arch of the present spoils system—favoritism. It is still favoritism that may and will guide Secretary Olney and his commission made up of his own subordinates. The regular civil service commission is ignored. Secretary Olney's plan will be of material assistance in relieving himself from undesirable democratic pressure. That is all. Otherwise it is really worse than no reform, because it is in fact a bogus reform that will act as a deterrent to the real reform that was covered by the Lodge or Morgan bills. Congress seeking excuses to retain spoil will inquire why interfere with the measures adopted by the Massachusetts reformer, the secretary of state?

In the first administration of Mr. Cleveland, civil service reformers in certain parts of the country were for a time uncertain whether or not they had gone mad. They saw what seemed as gross acts of spoils vandals as had ever occurred. But there arose among distinguished Massachusetts reformers such curious apologies and explanations, such paralysis of eyes and ears, that for a time it was pertinent to inquire who were the sane, and who had the normal organs of sight and hearing. Those were days when the reform ship was perilously near the rocks, and driven there by its own pilots. Later, in the present administration we had the spectacle of the barter of offices to secure certain legislation. Nothing seemed plainer than that such a course attacked the foundations of free government, and that it was in all respects as immoral as to sell the offices for money which might be devoted to the best of purposes. Again from Massachusetts arose distinguished defense. The CHRONICLE has never doubted the moral sincerity of those who have taken what has seemed these most preposterous reform positions. Now comes the latest instances of this interesting reform strabismus in the Springfield Republican's view of Olney's consular reform. The CHRON-ICLE desires to emphasize its belief that the Springfield Republican has always been a hater of all spoil in public life, an unremitting worker to break down that system, that no paper knows better what constitutes real reform, and that it conscientiously believes its course in lauding Olney will in some devious, mysterious way, assist reform. We print the following extract from its comments as a most interesting study in modern casuistry:

"The administration of the United States consular service on the spoils basis has long been a scandal and a serious detriment to the nation. It is difficult, therefore, to overrate the importance of the step just taken by President Cleveland in lifting more than one-half of these offices out of the mire of politics. It will be seen by the President's order that hereafter persons are to be selected for the specified posts from among those occupying or who have occupied places in the state department calculated to qualify them for consulate service, and others whose qualifications have been determined by non-competitive examinations conducted by a special board of the state department.

"This step has been taken under the general laws of the United States, without a special act of congress. Congress has fiddled over the question for some time without making any progress or giving sign of doing much of anything. The last congress took up the matter, and the senate committee on foreign relations made a report strongly criticising the present system of appointment to the service as a reward for party work, but nothing more came of it. Now the President has gone ahead without congress, finding its laws previously enacted and in precedents established under Grant's administration, abundant authority for the departure. * *

"And now we are to have some measure of this reform. It is primarily Secretary of State Olney's work. He is the one who has studied out the way of meeting the demands of the situation without a special act of congress, and to the sympathy of the President with civil service reform and his courage in giving it practical expression is due to the promulgation of Mr. Olney's plan. We have further proof in this of the existence of a man in the democratic party fitted to succeed Mr. Cleveland if the party and the country want such a man."

HAPPILY we have a distinguished example of a reformer who follows a diametrically opposite plan. It is the plan of pursuing reform by a perfectly direct and simple course and courageously trusting the future consequences to the common sense and moral sense of the American people. Since Theodore Roosevelt became a civil service commissioner down to the present time he has not deviated from this apparently simple course. He has attained his ends always by direct, uncompromising, straightforward means. To see straight first and then to possess the courage to go as he sees, never to shift and wobble, or be smitten with panic, constitute his political greatness. For Theodore Roosevelt has been so tried and tested that even the skeptical must feel sure not only of his absolute sincerity and courage, but of his statesmanship. His plan of reform by the direct method is suited to the American people and to the age we live in. Since the war we have had no man in public life so like the Charles Sumner type. His directness, his courage and his candor ought to be an inspiration to other young men entering public life. There is nothing better to be said of it than that it has noticeably affected the standard of manliness in a police force besotted with Tammanyism.

EX-BOSS MAHONE.

Recollections of his methods as a political boss are recounted at every gathering of politicians in this city. He used to swing party patronage with a long arm in the early eighties. He used to leave lying on his table, as a means of impressing the casual visitor of the sense of his power, in his palmy days, a printed blank reading in this way:

[Form No. 5.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., — —, 188—.

GENERAL: Please appoint — — postmaster at — —, in the county of — —, Virginia.

This is at the request of those interested in the office, and for the good of the service, as I am advised and believe. Yours truly,

WILLIAM MAHONE.

To the first assistant postmaster-general, post-office department.

This document was indorsed, also in print, in this way:

Senator Mahone, — —, 188—, recommends the appointment of — — for postmaster at — — in — — county, Virginia.

Mahone worked diligently in conjunction with Jay Hubbell, assessing all the federal office-holders within reach. Once in a while his mechanical methods brought him to grief. The story is told of a democrat who had deserted his party and done a great deal of work for Gen. Mahone in one of the southwestern counties of Virginia, and had received a country post-office in return. The neighborhood was not thickly settled, or the people very much given to letter-writing; and the result was that during the first month of his office-holding the postmaster took in only four cents in cash—the price of one three-cent postage stamp and one postal-card. A campaign was just coming on, and the postmaster had hardly time to figure up his profits from his office when a circular arrived from Hubbell demanding 5 per cent. of his official income for campaign purposes. This was quickly followed by one from Mahone calling on him for 10 per cent. of the same income. The postmaster concluded that, after handing over 5 per cent. and then 10, the remainder of the four cents was not likely to lay the foundations of a fortune, so he threw up the post-office and his membership in the readjuster party at the same time, and went back to his old love among the democrats.

Mahone could be very small in certain ways when he had vengeance to gratify. An old negro, who had been a servant in President Madison's family, had received an appointment as an employe of the United States Senate at the instance of Ben Hill, of Georgia. The place was worth only a few hundred dollars a year, and the old man was abundantly able to perform its duties in spite of his advanced age. He was a favorite with all the senators who came in contact with him. Mahone wanted a place for one of his bankrupt heelers, and, learning that the negro had been appointed through the influence of Hill, who had recently given him a terrible drubbing in a speech in the senate, he went to the sergeant-at-arms and said:

"I want that nigger's place!"

"Why," remonstrated the sergeant-at-arms, "that is Robert Steward. He was one of President Madison's servants. He has been here—"

"Yes, yes, I know; but you might as well make him out one of Washington's servants while you are about it. Perhaps that would help him to get another position. I want his place!"

As the senator insisted, the sergeant-at-arms complied, for that was the period when the readjuster chief held the balance of power in the senate.

In 1884 a commander who had been in the navy twenty-three years was superintendent of the fifth lighthouse district. He dismissed a notoriously incompetent negro who had been appointed by order of Mahone. The senator ordered his henchman back again. The commander refused to obey. The senator went to Washington and demanded that the commander be disciplined. It took the secretary of the navy four weeks to bring himself around to the point of carrying out this behest, and then the officer was put on waiting orders with the reduced pay incidental to that condition. —From the New York Evening Post.

ANOTHER REPUBLICAN EX-BOSS— STEVE DORSEY.

"I remember," said a territory official, "that one time when court was in session at South Las Vegas, Senator Dorsey invited us out to his place to stay over Sunday. Naturally, we all accepted, and in the party was Judge Vincent, whom President Cleveland summarily, and, as we all thought, unjustly, removed for appointing Dorsey one of the jury commissioners of the county.

"The senator received us in the dining-room. I will never forget that banquet. There wasn't a drop of whisky on the place. Not a glass of beer was to be had. But champagne of the costliest brands was pressed upon us. Champagne was good enough for Washington, but it wasn't the right thing for a New-Mexican crowd, and one after the other of us slipped away from the table and got out of doors. I can remember to this day how thirsty we were and how we longed for a little of the whisky to which we were accustomed. And all of the time the fresh bottles of champagne were coming on the table to mock us. The senator was prodigal. He wouldn't let the bottles stay to be emptied. A single glass, perhaps, would be poured out. In a few moments the senator would waive the open bottles away and order fresh, saying the wine was flat. I wouldn't pretend to say how many bottles came on that night. As soon as we could we got out of doors, all of us but one of our party, and the senator. They remained at the table engaged in a political argument. The senator was suave. His opponent was emphatic. I slipped back to the door and listened.

"Now let us consider this question calmly," I would hear the senator say. And then he would add, 'by the way, my friend, your wine is flat. Waiter, here, bring us a fresh bottle.'

"And so it went on until our representative suddenly lurched and slid off his chair literally under the table. He didn't arise. I saw Dorsey look steadily toward the vacant chair and heard him say to himself:

"Where is my adversary? He seems to have fallen early in the combat." From Santa Fe (N. M.) Letter to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

THE CINCINNATI REPUBLICAN BOSS—COX.

Without condemning him for adversities of fortune or disadvantages arising from his circumstances, it has been shown that his schooling was limited; that his business career was brief and not at all brilliant; that when he entered politics he was comparatively poor; that he is now worth over $400,000; that his alleged successful "speculations" did not begin until he became a power in ward politics; that he has stock interests in the chief concerns which ask rights, franchises and favors of the boards he appoints by proxy, and that all "his" companies get what they want without trouble or friction.

His public record is public history. His control of primaries and conventions; his defeat of good men because they would not blindly bind themselves to obey his orders; his wasteful administration, through officials elected by him, of the affairs of the city and county; the inauguration of a constant espionage of each other by his lieutenants; the removal of the real seat of city and county government to an over-the-Rhine resort; the necessity of "seeing Cox" before attempting to secure any office, be it that of garbage-wagon tender or congressman; the creation of new, high-salaried and unnecessary offices to satisfy the demands of his hungry henchmen, and the constant cry for "more"—more money to spend—more power—more patronage; these things have been freely published in the news columns of the Post. —From the Cincinnati Post.

*

The county convention was held last week, and the Tribune, a republican newspaper, says that Cox "dictated every nomination that was made, controlled the vote of every delegation present, and the convention itself simply ratified the ticket which the supreme dictator of the party carried in his pocket when he entered the hall where his servants were assembled." The Cincinnati boss does not keep in the background, as is the habit of McLaughlin of Brooklyn, but attends conventions himself, and the Tribune says that in last week's gathering "from his usual place upon the floor at the right of the platform, where he could command the eyes of every delegate, this man, whom not a precinct in Hamilton county would have elected a member of the convention, dominated the entire proceedings and awed into silence every protest against the slate." —New York Evening Post, Sept. 30.

"QUAY TAUGHT THOSE PENNSYLVANIA POLITICIANS ALL THEY KNOW ABOUT POLITICS, BUT IT IS QUITE EVIDENT THAT HE HAS NOT YET TAUGHT THEM ALL HE KNOWS."

—Boss Gorman.

WHAT HE TAUGHT HIS FORMER HENCHMEN.

"I have been hearing instances of attempted bribery of delegates friendly to me all day. As the facts come to light they fully justify my warning to my friends, telling them everything is over, except explanations. The combine is making a last desperate charge all along the line. They are offering sums ranging from $7 to $3,000, for delegate votes. This is not true of any particular local territory, but appears in all parts of the state. A careful watch is being maintained in every county by my friends, and I am promptly advised of whatever occurs of this nature. No bribery can be successfully consummated without my full knowledge immediately, and I shall make a full investigation into each case and lay the facts before the public. Delegates have been met with offers of money in some instances and positions in others. These are not idle rumors, but are fully substantiated by facts." —Quay at Harrisburg, September 25.

The Hastings-Quay contest has done more to debauch the politics of the state than any campaign in its history. It is estimated that not less than a million dollars was spent in the primary elections and in the corruption of delegates. Both sides were well supplied with money, and it was expended liberally wherever it was thought its use would accomplish results. One of the stories since the convention is that, as soon as the fight was declared on, a prominent Western Pennsylvania steel company contributed a check of $25,000 as a nucleus for the campaign fund which the manufacturers of the state rolled up for the man from Beaver. —City and State, September 12.

Brief extracts of an account in the Pennsylvania Methodist, given by its editor, the Rev. Dr. Swallow, who is also pastor of a prominent Harrisburg church, of the recent Quay-anti-Quay convention which met in that city, are herewith given:

"The first advantage was gained by the Hastings faction buying out an opera company, billed for a show at the opera house on the night preceding the convention, and placing therein—nearly twenty-four hours in advance of the convention—over a hundred thugs, most of whom weighed from one hundred and eighty to two hundred and fifty pounds each. They certainly had the appearance of 'hard hitters.' Soon beer by the keg and whisky by the demijohn began to be carried in to supply their thirst, and better equip them for the work they were expected to do. They garrisoned the building from that time until the meeting of the convention next day, and could now admit if they chose only the 'rounders and heelers' of those who had employed them, and so it seemed as if Quay stood a poor chance of dominating the convention by the force of numbers.

"Property-owners near the opera house spent a sleepless night, some of them being on watch till the morning of Wednesday dawned, not knowing at what moment deeds of violence might lead to the destruction of their property. Nearly all night the places where liquor was sold were crowded with a drunken, smoking, swearing, vulgar crowd, who staggered from one saloon to another, making the night hideous with their yells and curses mingled with street dancing and snatches of lewd songs. This continued most of Wednesday. For two days it was considered unsafe for a decent woman to attempt to make her way alone for single square in the vicinity of either Third, Fourth, or Market streets. Many who did so were openly insulted in broad daylight by drunken strangers. * * * All the stores except those dealing in food and drink and tobacco were nearly abandoned. The popular shopping places reported the smallest sales in their knowledge and accounted for it by saying 'women are afraid to venture from their homes, and we fear to go to ours, even for our meals.'

"Wednesday morning found the situation relieved by the reports of the compromise having taken place during the night, which was simply a surrender of the Hastings faction and a yielding of everything that had been at any time seriously demanded by Quay * * * These men were ready and willing to do the bidding of the men who had hired them to do their slugging, and a riot would probably have given them more satisfaction than the announcement that a truce had been declared. But ready as they were for a fight, they were not aware that over their heads, ready to drop on them at any moment, were the heelers of the Quay people, who had been smuggled into the building by a secret roof entrance and who had a great advantage by reason of their position. City and State, September 19.

As an echo of the hotly contested republican primaries of Tuesday night Wade Auday, William Ware and Frank McDermott were arraigned before Magistrate South to-day on the charge of intimidating voters. The accused and henchmen in the first ward of Magistrate Fulmer, one of Senator Quay's lieutenants, and, in addition to the alleged intimidation, McDermott was also charged with assaulting Edward Lutz, a judge of election. The accused were held in $500 bail each for court. Magistrate Fulmer became their surety.—Philadelphia dispatch, New York Times, August 22.

The latest news from Harrisburg is tinged with prospective riot. Whether blood will flow or not is uncertain, but some of the coolest-headed observers say it may, and the mayor of the city, expecting a fight, is swearing in extra policemen. Congressman Robinson says he shall not be surprised to see the "worst kind of a row on the floor," when the convention meets to-morrow; that "both sets of delegates will insist upon going upon the preliminary roll, and somebody is going to get hurt." The war fever grew steadily all day yesterday, and both Quay and anti-Quay factions slept on their arms last night. When the record of developments closed on the previous night, Quay was resolved to bring the Gilkeson faction to terms by "having the law" on Gilkeson. He was going to apply for a mandamus compelling Gilkeson, as chairman of the state committee, to produce his accounts and show what he had done with $90,000 said to have been contributed to party funds last fall. As a means of arousing interest in this mandamus proceeding Quay had a lot of orange-colored badges prepared, with the inscription, in bold, plain text, "What Did He Do With It?" These were swung out on the breasts of the Quay delegates yesterday morning, and the effect upon the Gilkeson faction was naturally irritating.—New York Evening Post, August 27.

In Philadelphia in each election division the registration is made by a single election officer, called an assessor, who is always of the party dominant in his district and generally an active local politician. Personal registration is not required, and the assessor makes up his voting list six months before the election, the day for "correction" being two months before the election. The same officer who does the original registering adds or removes names. Then if any one appears at the polls who is not registered, he is allowed to vote on swearing to his qualifications.

That such a system is open to almost unchecked fraud is evident. Suppose a single Tammany officer, or a single representative of any political organization in this city, had the making up of the voting list in each election district, without the personal appearance of the voters being necessary, what would be the chance of an honest registration? What we know of Dave Martin and his methods does not lead one to believe that local politicians can be any more trusted in the conduct of elections in Philadelphia than in New York. There is a hint of the grotesqueness of the Philadelphia system in the statement that in a "correction" of the registration lists last fall, 3,000 names were struck off, "merely as a matter of agreement between party leaders. One of the names registered happened to be that of a pug dog." How many were those of non-residents or deceased persons, and how many such remained on the lists, there was no means of knowing.—New York Times, August 19.

BOSS GORMAN.

A Trying Ordeal.

Mr. Bernard Carter nominated Mr. Hurst, and his position from the time he began to speak until the close of his remarks was a most unenviable one. He was constantly interrupted by the democrats in the galleries, and all sorts of terminations were put upon his sentences.

"I present to you," said Mr. Carter, "the name of one who, by his unimpeachable integrity, by his excellent business capacity, by his untiring patience, by the firmness and decision of his character and by his honorable and kindly bearing toward all men, has won the highest respect and the warmest esteem of all who know him. ['Particularly Gorman,' cried a voice.] Those qualities have placed him at the head of a commercial house which, for its success and for the extent of its business relations with all those parts of this great country with which Baltimore has business relations, stands second to none in this city."

"OH, MY! OH! OH!"

"The same qualities which have made Mr. Hurst what he is and what those who know him know him to be eminently qualify him for the high position of the chief executive of this state, and while bearing friendly and honorable relations to all the eminent public men of this state, with hostility in his heart to none, under no obligations of any kind to any one"——

"But Gorman," yelled the crowd, putting a termination upon Mr. Carter's sentence that he had not intended and creating a great deal of laughter. And then the crowd broke loose again, and cries of "Come off, come off," "Oh, my!" "Oh! Oh!! Oh!!!" The hubbub continued for some time.

"Now, gentlemen of the galleries," resumed Mr. Carter as soon as he could be heard, "no matter what you may think of Mr. Gorman, you ought to be gentlemen in this assembly and not interrupt the speaker on the floor. [Applause.]

"I repeat it, bearing friendly and honorable relations to all the public men of this state, under no obligations to any man"——

"But Gorman," broke in the same voices again, and the cries of "Gorman's man," "Gorman's man," were resumed, together with groans and hisses.

Mr. Preston, the acting chairman, rapped vigorously for order and threatened to have the police clear the galleries. This announcement was greeted with cries of derision and of "Sit down, Preston."

Mr. Carter, resuming, said: "I say without fear of contradiction that if he is elected chief magistrate of this state, he will be in the fullest import of the word"——

"Gorman's man," sung out a voice.

"The governor of the state himself," continued Mr. Carter, not heeding the interruption. More applause and more groans followed this statement, and cries of "He can't be, for he can't be elected."

"And while, like all other sensible people," continued Mr. Carter, "he will at all times be ready to listen and weigh the views presented to him"——["By Gorman," shouted his tormentors again.] "When they have presented conclusion Mr. Evans says: 'The traditional policy of the democratic party is for Washington to keep hands off and let people manage their own affairs, whether at the polls or in their conventions. I believe in your integrity, Mr. President, and that you earnestly desire civil service reform; that you will not and weighed he will then be"—

"Gorman's man, Gorman's man, Arthur P. Gorman's man," sung out several voices in the galleries, while others cried, "He stabbed the administration."

Mr. Preston again declared that he would have the galleries cleared if the interruptions did not cease, but it had no effect.

"I repeat," resumed Mr. Carter, "that while, like all sensible people, he will listen to and weigh the views of others, when he has listened to them and weighed them he will exercise his own untrammelled and independent judgment with manly courage and fidelity to"—

"Gorman, Gorman, Gorman!" cried the men in the gallery.—Baltimore Sun, August 1.

* * *

The chief objective point of our fight against bossism has been to get Baltimore's government permanently established on a business basis. The News has kept a watchful eye on the city hall, as well as other departments of government, and its exposures of abuses as they were practiced have done much to arouse public sentiment and make it effective in the affairs of Baltimore.

It is a notorious fact that the present election machinery was framed to perpetuate the Gorman-Rasining and to prevent a free expression of the public will. The republicans pledge themselves to the enactment of a fair election law, and they say that registration shall be "annual in Baltimore city, and quadrennial, with annual revision, in the counties; the supervisory powers of the courts over the action of the registers made effective and not illusory, and the right to places on the official ballots secured to the nominees of independent citizens as well as to those of the regular party organizations."

The civil service reform plank, we believe, will prove the strongest in the platform.—Baltimore News, Aug. 11.

The Brotherhood of Bosses.

A characteristic story of Gorman, illustrating the methods of this consummate politician, is told here. When Harrison was President, Gorman walked one day into the office of the first assistant postmaster-general. "Clarkson," said he, "I want to ask a favor of you. I want to control the appointment of postmaster in my town of Laurel, Md." The audacity of this request, coming from a democrat, astonished Clarkson, but one thoroughbred likes another, and he looked his visitor in the face a moment or two and replied: "You shall do it."

Of course, Clarkson kept his word, and, of course, there was an awful row about it. The republicans of Maryland discovered their democratic enemy was controlling the appointment of an important office, and they descended on the capital by train-loads. They appealed to Wanamaker and soon had that gentleman crazy. Then they went to Harrison. Clarkson was called to the White House.

"Is it possible, Mr. Clarkson, you have promised Senator Gorman this office?"

"Yes, it is his home town. He is a United States senator, and some courtesy is due him. Besides, Mr. President, an administration can well afford to have a friendly senator in the opposition."

But Harrison was not appeased. He said it would not do to permit Gorman to control the appointment. "Then you will have to get a new postmaster-general," said Clarkson quietly.

"Do you mean to say you will resign because of a little postmastership?" asked Harrison.

"No, but I will resign rather than break my word," said Clarkson.

Gorman's man was appointed.

It is strange how one thing leads to another in this world. So it proved in this case. Some time later President Harrison was in distress about the collectorship at New Orleans. He wanted Warmoth to take it, and that gentleman demurred. Harrison asked Clarkson to help him out. Clarkson telegraphed for Warmoth and succeeded in coaxing him into acceptance. His name was sent to the senate. That business appeared to be nicely settled. But it was not. They had forgotten John Sherman, the big man with many little revenges to wreak.

THOUGHT HE WAS RUINED.

Late one night Warmoth rushed to Clarkson's house. His eyes were ablaze and his tongue thick.

"I'm ruined," he exclaimed. "They are going to defeat my confirmation. John Sherman is after me to settle an old score. Defeat will ruin me, disgrace me. It will cost me my home. I will never dare live in Louisiana again. What in God's name shall I do?"

Clarkson calmed Warmoth's fears. "Go to bed and sleep. I promise you you shall be confirmed."

Early next morning a messenger from Clarkson was on his way to West Virginia, where Senator Gorman was on business of great importance. The messenger told the senator he was needed back in Washington the next day, when the judiciary committee was to meet. Sherman, Hoar and their friends had all arrangements made for rejecting Warmoth.

"But it is impossible for me to go," Gorman declared. "If I leave here now I will have to sacrifice $50,000 or $60,000, and I can't afford it."

"Well, Mr. Clarkson will be much disappointed if you don't help him out," said the messenger, sadly.

"Did Mr. Clarkson send you to me?" asked Gorman of the messenger.

"Yes."

"Why did you not say so in the first place? That makes quite a difference. You go back and tell Clarkson I'll be at the committee meeting to-morrow. You tell him for every vote John Sherman gets against Warmoth I'll get two democratic votes for him, and, if necessary, will throw the whole democratic strength in executive session."

Gorman kept his word. He saved the administration from defeat at the hands of revengeful John Sherman, averted the humiliation which Warmoth had bitterly declared would cost him his home, and paid a political debt at very great financial sacrifice to himself.—Washington cor. Chicago Times-Herald.

OFFENSIVE PARTISANSHIP OF OFFICEHOLDERS.

DEMOCRATS.

Office-holders at the democratic convention at Syracuse, September 24: Valentine Fleckenstein, collector of internal revenue for the Buffalo-Rochester district. Assistant District Attorney John F. McIntyre, one of the Tammany delegates, said he was against admitting the state democracy to the convention. Following him closely was George W. Meeks, the natty superintendent-in-general of the post-office delivery, coatless and vestless, wearing a high silk hat, his trousers turned up at the bottom. Then came Dr. Senner, the commissioner of immigration, and after him was Internal Revenue Collector Edward Grosse. The Erie county delegates professed, at a late hour, to be as hopeful as ever regarding Mr. Scheu's chances. Gen. Peter C. Doyle, collector of the port of Buffalo, reached the city this afternoon, and to-night he is doing his best to advance Scheu's candidacy.

* * *

The Wayne county democratic county convention held here this afternoon was one of the most turbulent political assemblages ever convened in this county. The democratic party here has been all split up into factions.

The convention reached such a stage at one time that Postmaster Delaney Stow of Clyde took the floor in the interest, as he said, of decency and harmony and demanded, "Are we men or are we lice?"

A prominent Hill delegate, when approached by Postmaster Daniel V. Teller of Lyons, jumped upon a seat as a woman would when a mouse is near, and shouted out: "Go away, you are too dirty to associate with; I repudiate men of your caliber morally and politically."—Lyons dispatch Buffalo Express, September 20.

* * *

At the conclusion of the reading of the address postmaster Dayton said: "The republican party has always seemed to be a party of hypocrisy, and it is well to show plainly and distinctly what its late actions have been. The power that the republican party now has will be taken from it at its polls this fall if the people are properly informed of the manner in which it has legislated for its own interests, and not for those of the people."

Collector John A. Sullivan seconded Mr. Dayton's remarks.—New York Times, Aug. 1.

* * *

Strictly speaking, it is no longer a Cleveland-Hill fight, but rather a battle in which the "old war horses" are nearly all arrayed on one side against the robust young Flower

City democracy, which they can not control. Thus men like George Raines and William Purcell, Thomas Brown, jr., and William H. Tracy, J. Miller Kelly and Collector of Customs George H. Houck, some of whom have been bitter enemies in years past, are banded together to defeat the men who have supported the Cleveland administration and fought Aldridge through thick and thin. Against them, however, is a well-drilled and coherent body of energetic workers, led by Collector of Internal Revenue Valentine Fleckenstein, Frederick W. Smith, James S. Havens, George P. Decker, George F. Slocum, Postmaster George H. Perkins, Editor John B. Howe, and L. M. Antisdale, of The Herald, and other well-known democrats.—Factional fight in Rochester (N. Y.) Dispatch, July 28.

* * *

S. B. Evans, President Cleveland's postmaster here in his first term, and who was appointed by Mr. Cleveland consul to Nicaragua, is out in an open letter to the President, saying that "over 100 of these Federal officers, including revenue collectors, United States attorneys, marshals and postmasters," were in attendance as delegates in the convention, and were most perniciously active in securing the defeat of the free silver men. He reminds the President of his former orders in regard to the participation of officeholders in political meetings, and asks him to make a public expression of his disapproval of such actions. In approve of the indecency of the men who, at Marshalltown, armed with your commissions, took advantage of their places, triumphed over their fellow democrats, and then, in stinging words, taunted them with the humiliation of defeat. This letter is made public because the subject is of public concern, and with the hope that your disapproval of such methods will be so expressed as to prove a lesson to those who, temporarily clothed in authority, would make your administration rules a farce and democracy a sham in the sight of decent men."—Ottumwa, Iowa, dispatch, Aug. 12.

* * *

"Will Tom Taggart be nominated?" said Mail Clerk Tom Hedian, yesterday, in speaking of the democratic candidates for mayor. "Well, I should say. He's as good as nominated now. Nothing too good for Tom."

Mr. Hedian is the chief of the Taggart "push," and is working for him with all his powers. He has a supreme disregard for the rules governing the civil service. When asked about the matter he said:

"If I haven't influence enough to hold my job at the depot, why the government can have it. But maybe I will hear from Cleveland about it yet."—Indianapolis Journal, June 26.

They Did Not Gore the Right Ox.

W. T. Lyon, presidential postmaster at Selma, Cal., was removed yesterday because he recently published in his paper, the Irrigator, an article reflecting on President Cleveland. Lyon was a democrat, and was appointed about a year ago.—Washington dispatch, Aug. 21.

* * *

Leonard B. Plumlee, national bank examiner for Tennessee, has been asked to resign by the treasury department by order of the President, because he dared to have currency views differing from those of Mr. Cleveland.—Buffalo Express, September 21.

* * *

John L. Parker, deputy internal revenue collector for the district of Marblehead, was dismissed, last week, from his position, and the reason assigned was "offensive partisanship." He is the publisher of a Lynn daily paper, which recently criticised the administration.—Adams Freeman.

Bosses, Platt and Anti-Platt, Bully New York Officeholders.

The republican caucuses to elect delegates to the eight assembly and judicial conventions will be held to-night, in the city from 6 to 8:30 o'clock, and in the towns from 7:30 to 9 o'clock. Despite the activity of the canal ring, an anti-Platt victory all along the line is likely.—Buffalo Express, Sept. 9.

* * *

Abraham Gruber, a Platt republican and one of the first lieutenants of the Tioga chieftain, has a "rod in pickle" for the department of public works, as it is conducted by Commissioner Brookfield.

Mr. Gruber said that he had a story about the department of public works that might interest the reporters. He said that a great corporation had been obliged to permit an official in the department to distribute its labor tickets before it could get any permits to open the streets.

"Why," said Mr. Gruber, "Tammany, when in control of the department, never did anything as bad as that."

"What company do you refer to?" Mr. Gruber was asked.

"It is the subway company—the Metropolitan Telephone and Telegraph company. Gen. C. H. T. Collis, the deputy commissioner of public works, is giving out the company's labor tickets through his friends."—New York Times, June 25.

* * *

Edward Grosse, collector of internal revenue for the Third District, actively opposing the enforcement of the laws by Mr. Roosevelt and his colleagues, is thus set off in a letter from Dr. Parkhurst, in Switzerland, to A. W. Abbott, secretary of the City Vigilance League:

He is said to have declared before the members of the Columbia Club: "For my part, I don't consider the selling of a glass of beer behind a curtain and behind a closed door a crime, although the law says it is a crime." If this "Grosse" orator understands the words he uses, he knows that a crime is a crime because the law makes it such and determines it to be such. What Grosse thinks, or any other man like him, has no bearing on the question. He says, in effect, that his opinion is above law. In other words, he spits upon the law, grinds his heel into the statute, and gives the Columbia Club and the New York public to understand that to respect the ordinances of the state indicates a stage of puerility that he, Grosse, has outgrown.

And he is a federal officer! Some of the pressure of the dignity of our country rests upon Grosse's shoulders. Some of the hope of the perpetuity of American institutions is staked in this ranting, treason-spitting Grosse. The federal government would honor itself by promptly removing him to the ranks.

* * *

Complaint is made in this week's Wine and Spirit Gazette that the liquor dealers in the old eleventh assembly district were forced to buy tickets for the picnic of the Blaine Club, which occurred last Wednesday. Job E. Hedges, the chief man of this club, is Mayor Strong's private secretary, and the treasurer of the club, William H. Coyle, is secretary of the excise board.

* * And now the republican section of the board is imitating the old Tammany methods. The excise department is a pest hole of corruption. Its total abolition is the first step in the direction of taking the saloon out of politics and a most important move in the interest of true reform.

* * *

The jolliest row in the republican ranks in this city is in the old eleventh district, where Mayor Strong's private secretary, Job E. Hedges, is accused of working his position to establish himself as a "petty boss."

The letter which was sent to the mayor reads as follows:

The Hon. William L. Strong, Mayor of the City of New York:

DEAR SIR—We, the undersigned, republicans and voters in the eleventh assembly district (new twenty-fifth), New York City, beg to call your attention to the partisan activity of your private secretary, Mr. Job E. Hedges, who has made himself obnoxious in that he has interfered in the distribution of patronage, rewarding his particular political friends with places, and making promises himself, or through his agents, and in many ways using his position of private secretary as a means of controlling and distributing patronage in this assembly district in a manner that is thoroughly partisan. In his machine methods and practice he far exceeds the old machine in its palmy days, evidently with the purpose of trying to establish himself as a petty boss. We believe that his undivided attention to the duties of his office, which the taxpayers of this city pay him for, would be more conducive to better government for all, and would be in strict accordance with your professedly non-partisan administration.

Yours respectfully,

JAMES W. AUTEN,
122 West Thirty-fourth street.
J. J. SPIES,
102 West Thirty-fourth street.
EDWARD S. FLOW,
129 West Twenty-seventh street.
GEORGE C. LAGRANGE,
128 West Thirty-fourth street.

* * *

Several members of the Phoenix Club charged Gen. Collis yesterday with threatening to dismiss from the service of the city members of the club who are office holders in the public works department if they did not cast their votes in club matters in accordance with his instructions. * *

"Why did you and Gen. Collis fall out?" was asked.

"Well," said one of the members, who had not previously spoken, "we expected some patronage, and we did not get it." The General thought he carried the club in his waistcoat pocket and did not find out his mistake until he wanted us for the primaries. All he succeeded in doing was to lose a member on the county committee.

* * *

"It used to be three Platt men against two Brookfield men. Now he has only his own son to keep up his end on the county committee. He lost the Hell Gate Club about a month ago, and he is sure to lose the Yorkville Club. When you promise patronage it is a good thing to be a man of your word."—New York Times, August 7.

THE COMPLAINT.

The life tenure of office under the civil service law is not the end of the outrage along this line upon the people of the country. The office-holding class, once secure in their positions, will soon be clamoring for pensions, and the people who are debarred from any choice or participation in the government will be subjected to additional taxation to pay these pensions. Already the letter carriers have agreed upon a pension bill, which is to be presented to the approaching session of congress. Government of the people, by the people and for the people will soon be at an end in this country if this thing keeps on, and government by a mugwump board substituted. Are the people willing that the principles of this government shall thus be subverted?—Brookville (Ind.) American, September 12.

The Answer.

The Kokomo Tribune charges Center township assessor, Alvin Coffin, with extorting from his thirteen assistants 25 per cent. of their legal salary of $2 per day. It is said that Coffin hired his deputies on the express condition that they give him a "royalty" of 50 cents a day, and that after the county commissioners allowed the men the full legal compensation, the latter gave the assessor a "rake off" of 50 cents a day each, for the sixty days' service, a totalsqueeze of $261 out of an allowance of $1,044. Besides the grab of $261, Coffin received his regular salary of $120 for the sixty days' work, making him a salary of $6.33 per day, while the assistants received but $1.50, whereas the statute provides that the assessor and helpers shall receive the same pay—2 per day. Coffin, whose term expired today, admits that the charges against him are true, but pleads "customs of the country," alleging that his predecessors did the same thing.—Kokomo dispatch, Indianapolis News, August 5.

* * *

Mrs. Fisher was murdered by spoils politics. She had given eighteen years of faithful, devoted and able service to the Oakland public schools. In all that time she had never missed a day. She loved her work and identified herself so completely with the schools that she could not think of herself as separated from them. One day the board of education dropped her from the roll. Nobody pretended that there was any cause for complaint in her work, but her place was wanted for a friend of one of the members of the board. Paralysis followed the shock, and now she is dead. * *

The corruption of the spoils system is generally understood, but the people who amiably tolerate that feature of it do not realize its heartlessness. Every stroke of the "guillotine" means the wanton infliction of unhappiness on some family, without any corresponding benefit to anybody else. Even the winner of a place under the spoils system gets little satisfaction from it, because he knows that he may be compelled at a moment's warning and without any fault of his own to give it up. Under any civilized government the tenure of a subordinate public employe ought to depend entirely upon merit. Once in the service he ought to have an assurance of remaining as long as his duties were faithfully performed. With such an understanding the public would get the work for which it pays, but which is now more profitably given to the politicians who control the distribution of "patronage."—San Francisco Examiner.

* * *

Mr. Stroup, of Arkansas, has unwittingly made a "ten-strike" for the cause of civil service reform in his discourses concerning Mr. Spofford's management. Our honorable legislators are very jealous of their rights of supervision of the great stack of books, and as a result no attempt has been made to put the assistant librarians into the classified service. Mr. Stroup, of Arkansas, had been delegated by officials in that commonwealth to convey a certain convict to Sing Sing. On his way back he decided to get off at Washington "to see the town," and like all tourists was captivated with its beautiful avenues and urban attractions, and was loath to go back to Arkansas "any more." Stroup discovered that an appropriation had gone through for additional help in the library, and he accordingly persuaded Senator Jones of his state to secure for him an appointment there. This it was not difficult to do. What better preparation for library work could be desired than experience in transporting convicts?

* * *

One hundred library workers in the great national library must then be employed and the argument seems useless to show that these places should be filled through examinations and not to please congressmen, who are willing in return to "help along" library appropriations. The work of cataloguing and arranging books has in recent years become a good deal of a science, and the latest librarian employed in the departmental service, fresh from a training school of library workers, was selected through a competitive examination with very satisfactory results. So badly have some of the branch libraries been run that in one department a recent investigation showed in certain instances five or six copies of a single book, the result of sending outside to buy whenever the librarian could find no trace of the desired volume.

After fifty years of valuable scientific service for the national government, Prof. Davidson, at the age of 70 years, has been ignominiously dismissed, without cause and with no recognition of his able services.—July 5.

* * *

The undersigned astronomers of the Lick observatory respectfully call your attention to an act of great injustice done to one of the most active and efficient of our government employes, Prof. George Davidson, for many years connected with the United States coast survey, who has been removed from his position. Recently published scientific records demonstrate that he is still one of the most active workers in the survey. It would be an act of simple justice to re-instate him. We earnestly request you to cause this to be done.

The telegram is signed by E. S. Holden, J. M. Schaeberle, E. E. Barnard and W. W. Campbell.

* * *

The chamber of commerce yesterday passed resolutions requesting the senators and representatives from the Pacific coast states to exert their influence and best endeavors with the President and secretary of the treasury of the United States for the re-instatement of Prof. George Davidson, late of the United States coast and geodetic survey, believing that such re-instatement would best serve and protect the public welfare and shipping interests of this coast.

* * *

A sensation was created in Greene county (Ohio) democratic convention last Saturday, when a resolution was introduced calling upon the post-office department at Washington to investigate the alleged purchase of the Xenia post-office by L. H. Whiteman. It was charged that Postmaster Whiteman had paid $500 for securing Senator Brice's influence, but rumor was not so definite in saying who got the money.

It is now declared that an insurance firm of this city—Frank Raymond and W. Clifton Long—got the $500. Long came originally from Xenia. When the appointment of a postmaster for that place was under consideration, he, being an intimate friend of Senator Brice's secretary, was questioned as to the qualifications of the several candidates. It is alleged that Long, when he learned that Senator Brice was going to name a candidate, informed Whiteman that he could secure the place for him for a money consideration. Subsequently a contract was made between the two and it was stipulated that Long should receive $500.

Whiteman was appointed postmaster. Last February, six months after the appointment of Whiteman, a complaint was made to Senator Brice that he or his secretary had sold the office for $500. An investigation was made and Whiteman denied emphatically that he had entered into any contract. At the same time he was advised that if it were true that he had made a payment and had given his note for a balance, he had better cancel the deal, for it was a fraudulent one. Upon that advice, Whiteman declined to make further payments. Long placed the account in the hands of a lawyer of Xenia, who induced Whiteman to pay the balance of the claim, $400, a day or two before the Greene county convention was called.

Clifford Long admitted to-day that Whiteman had paid him the money according to contract, on account of services rendered as an agent during the post-office fight. He exonerates Senator Brice and his secretary from any knowledge of the transaction prior to the appointment.—Washington Dispatch, Aug. 12.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

VOL. II, No. 33.

INDIANAPOLIS, NOVEMBER, 1895.

TERMS: { One dollar per annum.
10 cents per copy.

Published monthly. Publication office, No. 23 N. Meridian St., Indianapolis, Ind. Address,
THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

WE give elsewhere in full the report made by a committee of the Indiana Civil Service Reform Association of their investigation of the present management of the civil service of Indianapolis. There is not a chance for a doubt but that the charter of this city directs the introduction of the merit and labor service system. Although it provides no penalties for disobedience of this command, yet no honorable office-holder would for a moment think of disregarding it. As a matter of fact it was disregarded through the entire first administration, under the charter, and through some months of the second when Mayor Denny caused a fairly good set of rules to be adopted. These rules were not always followed, but neither that nor the lateness of their adoption affords the least excuse for the conduct of the present administration. Mayor Taggart attempts to lean upon those props. On the same principle, if Mayor Denny had robbed the city treasury it would be a justification for him to do the same. Mayor Taggart's action has been brazen in the extreme. When he came into office he found a set of rules adopted under the plain direction of the charter, and because adopted under that direction they were absolutely the law of the city. He has completely disregarded them and has vacated and filled a large number of places upon the purely spoils plan of using the public offices for personal and partisan purposes. This is a very grave offense which he attempts to carry off in an airy, happy-go-lucky manner. Possibly he may succeed, but he would do well to remember that many a greater spoilsman than he is has been rolled in the dust. If the offense were not so grave, if there had been no rules, his course would still deserve everybody's contempt. These are not the times of distributing offices as personal and party rewards. All over the country there is a movement to rid the public service of the heeler and the striker. It seems that Indianapolis is not to remain in that advance because Tom Taggart wants to use her public offices for personal and party rewards. If there had been no rules, and if he were not a gross violator of law, his course will still mark him, not as a progressive citizen having in mind the welfare of his own city, but as the cheap politician which he is. He has now in the city service a long list of men who are not there legally, and to whom no city officer has a right to pay wages. It is the duty of the tax-payers to stop this misuse of the public funds.

A COMMITTEE of ladies representing one of the charitable organizations have inspected our city hospital and found it an abomination. The high standing of the ladies and the reliability of their report are beyond question, and, indeed, are admitted by the superintendent of the hospital. The only explanation given or attempted to be given by the committee or by the authorities is "politics." The superintendent must be a democratic doctor or a republican doctor according to the party in control, and the welfare of the hospital must bend to that. The superintendents are changed about once in two years, a practice which would wreck any hospital. Receiving their places as a reward for partisan politics, they are not free agents, and they do not dare to inform the public of the true condition of affairs. The party leaders begrudge money to the hospital, because money there buys fewer voters than money spent anywhere else; it is therefore a good place to display a niggardly economy and keep the tax rate down. This has been the practice in Indianapolis under all administrations. People have known nothing of the real condition of affairs. It was the duty of the superintendents, if they found that their reports to the health board were of no avail, to appeal to the people through the medical societies or the public prints. The first step is to get rid of politics, but the prospect is not favorable. The preceding superintendent who had become most efficient was displaced for politics. The president of the health board, Dr. F. A. Morrison, highly praises the present superintendent, who is, nevertheless, to be succeeded January 1st, on account of politics. Dr. Morrison's stripe is indicated by the fact that, having discharged all but one of the sanitary officers without any right to do so, he went to work, on discovering his blunder, and hunted up excuses upon which to attempt legal dismissals, and such excuses are now called "morrison's." The health board expressed the highest appreciation of the sanitarian, Dr. Wynn, and the following circumstances are interesting:

Dr. Wynn submitted a letter of resignation, leaving the board free to re-appoint him or another as it chose. He said, in addition, that he would hold the members in just as much esteem whether they appointed him or not. Dr. Morrison remarked that the resignation was made wholly without suggestion from the new members of the board, and Dr. Wynn assented to this. Dr. Morrison remarked that it would be well to make the appointment date from the beginning of a new term, and to last for two years, so that there could be no necessity for forcing a man to resign at the time of a change of administration. The board decided to accept the resignation, and consider the question of re-appointment or the selection of a new man at another meeting within twenty-four hours.

After going through the pretense of pondering the problem, a new man was appointed.

FOR more than a year it has been apparent that the battle of civil service reform has been won. It has been a long struggle since Charles Sumner, in 1864, began it by the introduction into the senate of a bill embodying the main principles of the system which was destined by its very honesty and practicability and its commercial and moral superiority to overthrow the modern feudal system under which we had lived for generations. For thirty years the merit system, by its own inherent good qualities, has conquered its way against a vicious and utterly unprincipled opposition which seemed unconquerable. Every day the completeness of the victory becomes plainer. It is now a question of detail, and of the substitution of new and improved machinery in place of old. There will still be opposition. Many an expiring pirate has tried to kill some one out of revenge. There are many states, cities and counties in whose local service the field is comparatively untouched, but it is only a question of time. Personal and party favoritism are to become unknown in the distribution of public employment. Those desiring places in the public service are to obtain their end not by setting up primaries and conventions, but by fair and open competition against all others.

THE greatest single step taken since the enactment of the civil service law, January 16, 1883, was taken quietly November 8,

1895, by President Cleveland in the following order:

Section 2 of postal rule 1 is hereby amended by inserting after the word "thereto" in line 6, the following: "And whenever by order of the postmaster-general any post-office shall be consolidated with and made a part of another post-office where free delivery is established, all the employes of the office thus consolidated whose names appear on the roster of said office approved by the post-office department and including the postmaster thereof, shall from the date of said order be employes of said free delivery office, and the person holding on the date of said order the position of postmaster at the office thus consolidated with said free delivery office may be assigned to any position therein, and given any appropriate designation under the classification act which the postmaster-general may direct."

The law gives the postmaster-general power to consolidate post offices, and every free delivery office is within the civil service rules. Any consolidation therefore, of even the smallest fourth-class post-office with a free delivery office, now takes the former out of the reach of spoilsmen by bringing it within the rules. The fourth-class post-office problem, which was the one difficult question left in the fight against the spoils system, seems to have been solved by a single stroke of the President's pen. It is but another instance that where a great reform is in charge of its friends there is no difficulty in finding ways to carry it out. The plan devised indicates real statesmanship. It is not proposed to carry it into abrupt execution, but to proceed in a thorough and business-like manner until the entire readjustment is completed. The effect of the order when completely carried out will be to throw the post-office system of the country into divisions, with heads much nearer and easier to reach than the department at Washington. At present the department deals directly with the 60,000 fourth-class postmasters, and the mails are burdened with errors and attempted corrections of errors and car-loads of irascible correspondence. A ruder and more expensive system of conducting public business could hardly be devised. Under the new system the fourth-class postmaster will disappear as the watch dog of his congressman. The fourth-class post-offices will be supplanted by stations, and the employes will be under the direction of a division superintendent, probably the head of a post-office in a large city. The possibilities of free delivery to farmers and in small villages are greatly increased, especially when the bicycle is remembered. The country is to be congratulated upon this great change. Inevitably there will come with it soon the disappearance of the practice of turning out trained postmasters in our large cities, who will be the heads of divisions, to make room for local politicians.

We do not know who the immediate mover of this change was, but we take it that the civil service commission, Postmaster-General Wilson and the President jointly put their shoulders to the wheel, and we thank them accordingly. The system will have a struggle, but all the steps ever taken in civil service reform have been violently resisted, and this will succeed as they succeeded.

In this connection the current Harper's Weekly says:

"In our opinion this is the most important forward step in civil service reform since the first introduction of the merit system in the national service. It boldly goes beyond the mere clerical positions and strikes at spoils politics in the largest sense. The postoffice in the small town or village has been the omnipresent embodiment of the spoils idea. It has been pre-eminently the prize fought for by the local politicians. It has done more than anything else to give party contests the character of scrambles for plunder. It has been the gathering-place of the party hacks and wire-pullers. It has more than anything else accustomed the popular mind to the notion that a change of party in power necessarily means a partisan change in the minor offices. A measure of reform tending to take a large majority of the post-offices out of politics by putting them under the merit system thus strikes at the strongest bulwark of the spoils evil. We, therefore, most earnestly call upon friends of civil service reform all over the country to give this measure their attention, and to rally public opinion to a vigorous support of it."

ANY elections which defeat Campbell of Ohio by 100,000 majority and which drive Brice, Blackburn, Smith, Dave Hill and Gorman's tool Gibson out of the Senate are a source of deep gratification. It is true that we have some republican bosses quite as offensive, and who seem to have been triumphant, but their triumph was rather in the primary than in the election. This is one of the events in the fight against bossism. It is hardly ever possible to disable the bosses on both sides in the same election; but by taking them turn about they can eventually be so weakened that their own henchmen will no longer find it profitable to follow them in the primaries. If they can not carry elections and get spoils to divide, their following will melt away and their respective parties will drop them. We do not join in the expectation that Gorman is permanently used up. He still controls the Maryland democratic machine, and will for a time at least control its nominations. But the election is of inestimable value in showing that Maryland democrats have the spirit to defeat him at the polls. This same spirit should impel them to keep Maryland a doubtful state.

THE result of the election in New York city is a seeming drawback to the satisfaction with the elections elsewhere. How this result came about is well understood. The city for the first time in generations had a police board which regarded the excise law as made to be enforced and their oath to see to the enforcement as an oath which they could not disregard. They thereupon enforced this law thoroughly and with absolute fairness. Nevertheless the triumph of Tammany was undoubtedly made possible by this action of the police board. This triumph interferes with the progress of municipal reform and in the same manner the excise question is likely to interfere with that progress in other cities. It is an overshadowing question and must be taken account of by reformers. There should be no excise laws upon the statute book which are not intended to be enforced. In many communities a prohibition of the sale of beer on Sunday can not be permanently enforced. Officers who temporarily enforce it will not be left in office, and those who will not enforce it will take their places, and the community will learn to look upon the non-enforcement of law as proper and unavoidable. Nothing is worse for public morals. The idea that one part of a community believing it to be wrong may therefore make another part of the community stop drinking beer on Sunday will have to be given up. The Germans, for instance, for more than two thousand years, have drunk beer Sundays and week days as Americans for a lesser period have drunk tea and coffee, and the Germans do not believe it is wrong and can not be legislated into such a belief. Connected with the sale, however, there are matters to be dealt with. A large class of persons engaged in that sale are but one remove from the worst elements of the community, and some not even that far. Another class of seemingly respectable men have no respect for law, and encourage its open violation. A considerable percentage of the places of sale are nurseries of immorality and crime. These are the matters which ought to be dealt with by legislation. In a word, the effort should be not to make the sale disgraceful, but to make it respectable. This is another way of saying that the sale should be regulated so as to maintain stringent public order, and to prevent every species of blackmail. In New York the mistake was undoubtedly made by the opponents of Tammany in not boldly and openly advocating an excise law which, under reasonable regulations, would permit Sunday sales. We do not diminish anything from our unqualified praise of Theodore Roosevelt, but we think that in talking in churches, and to temperance organizations and elsewhere, he should, in addition to what he did say, have advocated the change here suggested. Indianapolis has a lesson of this kind to learn. The signs seem unmistakable that the saloons are to be allowed to go in disregard of the law, after a period of strict enforcement.

It is every man's duty to work for a practical substitute for an excise system which leads to such a break down of public morals.

THE CHRONICLE will next month give in full, from the pen of an expert, the history of Gorman's career, and how, after repeated efforts, he has at least temporarily been overwhelmed.

THE annual meeting of the national civil service reform league will be held at Washington, at the invitation of the civil service reform association of the District of Columbia, Thursday and Friday, December 12 and 13, 1895. The rooms of the Cosmos club, Lafayette square, have been secured for the two days' meetings. The morning sessions of each day will be devoted as usual to the business of the league, and the afternoon sessions to the reading of papers. The annual address of the president will be delivered at Metzerott's hall, on F street, the evening of the 12th, and the visiting delegates will be entertained by the local association the evening of the 13th. The printed invitation and detailed programme, together with available information regarding hotel accommodations, rates of railroad fare, etc., will be furnished as soon as prepared. Aside from the object of this meeting, the place chosen will make this in other respects a delightful and profitable trip. Indiana, however, could not win medals for interest in civil service reform, were she judged by attendance at the annual league meetings. Besides the annual address of Mr. Schurz, the president, the following papers will also be read:

"The Recent Civil Service-Reform Movement in Chicago," John W. Ela, of Chicago.

"The Appointment and Tenure of Postmasters," Richard Henry Dana, of Cambridge.

"Superannuation in the Civil Service," Wm. Dudley Foulke, of Indiana.

"The Interest of the Workingman in Civil Service Reform," Herbert Welsh, of Philadelphia.

"The State of Civil Service Reform Sentiment in the South," Herman Justi, of Nashville.

"The Important Function of Civil Service Reform," F. L. Siddons, of Washington.

"The Reign and Overthrow of Office-holding Oligarchy," Charles J. Bonaparte, of Baltimore.

"The Necessity of Thorough and Permanent Reform in the Consular Service," Jonathan A. Lane, President of the Boston Merchants' Association.

To any one who has known enough of spoils system to understand its significance as a moral question the apathy of women in regard to it has been remarkable. So far as we know the first open alliance with the movement for civil service reform was the meeting of prominent New York women, at the residence of Bishop Potter, on November 20. They organized as the "Women's Auxiliary to the New York Civil Service Reform Association" with the following officers:

President, Mrs. William H. Schieffelin; vice president, Mrs. C. R. Lowell; secretary, Miss Chandler; treasurer, Mrs. Winthrop Cowdin; executive committee, the officers and Mrs. F. H. Kinneut, Miss Schurz, and Miss Margaret Morgan.

Among the women present were Mrs. Charles Haven Royce, Miss E. O. Butler, Mrs. H. C. Potter, Miss Potter, Miss Bishop, Mrs. William Chandler Casey, Miss Eleanor Jay Schieffelin, Miss M. M. Morgan, Mrs. F. Nathan, Mrs. E. Fales Coward, Mrs. Griswold, Miss Louis L. Schuyler, Mrs. J. W. Brannan, Mrs. Ben Ali Haggin, Mrs. Charles W. Watson, Mrs. K. W. Ward, Mrs. Reeves-Merritt, Mrs. E. L. Godkin, Miss Alice Pine, Mrs. M. F. Johnson, Miss Lowell, Miss Frelinghuysen, Miss Sibyl Kent Kane, Miss Willard and Miss Harriet Rogers.

ONE of the bright signs of the times was the recent completion of the decoration of the court of oyer and terminer in the new criminal courts building in New York. This decoration was the result of open competition, and a distinguished committee of New York artists and not Tammany were the judges. Following this comes the announcement from Philadelphia that $5,000 has been appropriated to cover the expenses of a competition for sketches for mural and other decorative painting, in their new city hall. This competition is open to all American artists.

EVERY friend of Michigan university must sincerely regret that in the lecture course of its students such an unblushing scoundrel as Dave Hill should be allowed to appear. It is true that the government of the university had no control over the matter, but the circumstance indicates an unhappily low grade of political taste among the students. The faculty is in some degree responsible for this. It is no satisfaction to know the fact that this institution in political matters is not below its fellows. It emphasizes again the fact that politically the education of our colleges is a lamentable failure.

THE INDIANAPOLIS CIVIL SERVICE.

To the Executive Committee of the Indiana Civil Service Reform Association:

Your special committee, appointed to inquire into the present condition of the classified service of the city of Indianapolis, respectfully report as follows:

Section 45 of the city charter provides as follows:

"It shall be the duty of the mayor to call together the heads of departments (except of assessment and collection) for consultation and advice upon the affairs of the city, at least once a month. * * * Records shall be kept of such meetings above provided for and rules and regulations shall be adopted thereat for the administration of the affairs of the said departments not inconsistent with any law or ordinance, which regulations shall prescribe a common and systematic method of ascertaining the comparative fitness of applicants for office, position and promotion and of selecting, appointing and promoting those found to be best fitted (except in the department of public safety) without regard to political opinions or services."

The heads of the departments of finance, law, public works, public safety and public health and charities constitute the so-called "cabinet" to be called together once a month, whose duty it is to establish these regulations for admission to the civil service.

It will thus be seen that the city charter does not simply permit but it absolutely requires the adoption of regulations for admission. These regulations must prescribe a systematic method for ascertaining the comparative fitness of applicants. That is, the test must be competitive; and the rules must provide for the appointment of those found to be best fitted without regard to political opinions or services. All appointments, therefore, on the ground of political opinions or services are in violation of the rules prescribed by the charter. Any regulations which would allow such appointments or appointments without competition would be equally a violation of the charter. Section 48 provides in substance that no appointments or removals shall be made inconsistent with the civil service rules adopted by the cabinet. An additional check is made upon arbitrary removals by the provision that after the head of a department has been in office for thirty days, written reasons must be assigned for such removals.

In pursuance of the provisions of this charter, the "cabinet" of the late administration of Mayor Denny adopted on February 13, 1894, a series of rules classifying the civil service, providing for a board of examiners, for admission to the lower grades of the service by means of competitive examinations and for promotion to the higher grades by means of a comparative monthly record of conduct and efficiency. Clerks, engineers, assistants, inspectors, hospital internes and, in fact, all city employes, except laborers and teamsters, were to be selected in this way.

All examinations were to be practical in their character, so as to test the relative capacity and fitness of the persons to be examined for the service which they sought to enter. Those examined were to be graded according to their excellence, and those whose standing was more than 65 per cent. were to be placed upon a list of eligibles, and the three highest names upon this list of eligibles were certified to the appointing officer whenever a vacancy occurred which it was necessary to fill.

Applicants for labor were to be registered in the order of their application by the secretary of the board of examiners. And whenever laborers were needed, they took their turn in the order of registration. Soldiers, however, and those having the largest families dependent upon them were entitled to preference. If their service was satisfactory they might keep their places upon the register and be called upon again, if not they were to be dropped from the register. Any person in the service of the city who obstructed an applicant in his right of examination should forfeit his office.

It will be seen that these rules if enforced would exclude all political reasons for appointment to any place in the city service.

These rules were similar to those which have been satisfactorily applied for many years in the city of Boston, where they had done much toward the elimination of the more disgraceful features of ward politics.

The legality of these rules was expressly passed upon by the supreme court of this state in the case of William C. Newcomb v. The City of Indianapolis, where the rules were held to be valid and made in pursuance of the requirements of the charter.

It is clear that these rules are still in force and are part of the law governing the city of Indianapolis. Neither the statutes of a state nor the ordinances of a city become void because a new administration comes into power. The mayor's cabinet, for the purpose of making these rules, was invested with the same kind of power as a city council in respect to the making of ordinances authorized by the charter. The adoption of these rules was the corporate act of the city duly performed by those agents of the city who were authorized by its charter to do this very thing. They are therefore the law of the city, and neither the mayor nor any of the heads of departments had any more right to disregard them than to disregard the city ordinances or the provisions of the charter itself.

The board of examiners was composed of the mayor as chairman, Mr. Herrick, secretary, and Mr. White, all officers of the city, and Mr. Daniels and Mr. Pickens, citizens of Indianapolis not in the city service.

When Mr. Taggart became mayor, Mr. White, Mr. Pickens and Mr. Daniels resigned their places. Mr. Herrick, the secretary of the board, who has charge of the eligible lists still remains. If Mayor Taggart had been as anxious to carry out the provisions of section 45 of the city charter, as he was to distribute the spoils of office among his political supporters, he would have filled these three vacancies just as he filled the vacancies in the heads of the various departments in the city. But he has not appointed a single person, and the board of examiners is therefore without a quorum. But even in this condition the eligible lists remain and Mr. Herrick, the secretary of the board, could at any time furnish from these lists the records of persons duly qualified for appointment to most of the positions in which vacancies have occurred. No such appointments, however, have been made. The secretary of the board has not been called upon to certify a single name. Large numbers of employes have been removed and others appointed without the slightest regard either to the rules or the charter. For example, in the city engineer's office the field force numbers about twenty-five. There have been twenty removals for which no reasons have been assigned and the vacancies have been filled by democrats. A considerable number of men have passed examinations and are still upon the eligible list for appointment to these positions. No requests whatever have been made for the certification of any of these men.

The recklessness of the city's welfare in these dismissals is shown in the case of John Owen, an inspector. He had performed his duties with such zeal that it brought an attack from a contractor's men. For his course he was praised by Mayor Denny and was allowed police protection in the performance of his duties. He was dismissed as "incompetent."

In this connection we submit an extract from a letter written to your committee by Thomas Winsor, of Indianapolis:

"On or about the 10th day of last August, I made application for a position in the engineering department as an inspector, took the examination and succeeded in being placed on the eligible list.

"October 1st, received an appointment, served in said appointment to the best of my ability and to the apparent satisfaction of my superiors. October 29th, received a letter from Acting Engineer Jeup, requesting me to call at his office at a stated time, to which I responded. He informed me that my resignation would be accepted, or if I was not disposed to resign that I would be discharged at the end of the month. I asked him the reason, and he said there was nothing whatever against me, but that he had been directed so to do by those in higher authority than himself. I declined to resign under such circumstances, and on October 31st, received by special delivery mail a letter signed by the board of public works notifying me that after that date my services would no longer be needed.

"The next morning I called on Acting Engineer Jeup for my warrant, and asked him whether or not there were any vacancies in the engineering force, to which he said there were not. He also told me that he would like to have just such men as myself, but that he had to do as he was directed. I will state that I have had over nine years' experience in engineering work, and for three and one-half years was assistant engineer in a neighboring city.

"Being out of employment, took the examination for inspector with a view (if successful) of getting on the force, so as to be in the line of promotion. But it seems that a man's qualifications for work count for nothing with the present administration as long as his hair is not of the right political color. During my connection with the department I wholly refrained from discussing politics and conducted myself in such a manner that no one could charge me with 'offensive partisanship.'"

Again, five hundred and eighty-nine names have been entered upon the labor register, and a considerable portion of that number is still available for any requisitions for workmen, yet no requisitions have been made, and the labor service of the city has been selected wholly without reference to the rules, and largely, as your committee is informed and believe, from political considerations.

There are 143 laborers, including foremen, now in the service of the city, and all appointed in disregard of the rules. October 19th the board of public works notified the new foreman of street repairs that for lack of money he would have to materially reduce his force. This notice was sent him two days before his appointment took effect. He seems to have reduced the pay-roll by ceasing to assign work to laborers in the city employ. He has since hired other laborers until his pay-roll has reached the dimensions which the board of public works regarded as quite inadmissible for lack of funds. Of the laborers now on the city pay-roll, Clerk Piercy F. Tall, in the office of foreman of street repairs, says: "They are all good democrats, I guess; if not, there's been a mistake made."

The board of public safety, which has charge of the police and fire departments and the markets of the city, is governed by other provisions of the charter. Section 95 empowers the commissioners to make rules and regulations for the appointment of members of the police and fire forces, providing that these forces shall be equally divided politically, and that members shall not be dismissed except for cause. They may be removed for any cause other than politics, (section 96), and the written reasons for such removal shall be entered upon the records of the board. Section 97 provides that upon conviction of a member of the city fire or police forces for any criminal offense, or neglect of duty, or of violation of rules, or neglect or disobedience of orders, or incapacity, or absence without leave, or conduct injurious to the public peace or welfare, or immoral conduct, or conduct not becoming an officer, or other breach of discipline, said commissioners shall have power to punish the offending party by reprimand, suspension without pay, dismissal, or by reducing him to a lower grade and pay. Upon any investigation of the conduct of any member of the fire or police force, or upon the trial of any charge preferred against any member thereof, the commissioners may compel the attendance of witnesses, etc.

The commissioners of public safety under the administration of Mayor Denny, in pursuance of their power under the charter, adopted a series of rules providing for admission to the police force and fire department by competitive examinations, which included reading, writing and arithmetic, together with such inquiries as would show the applicant's past experience and knowledge of local matters, and of the duties of the position sought. A physical examination by the police surgeon was also required. Eligible lists were made of those whose grading was not less than 65 per cent. in general efficiency, and appointments were made from the three highest on these lists.

These rules have never been rescinded nor altered by the board of public safety, and are as much a part of the law of Indianapolis as the civil service rules adopted by the cabinet in reference to the other departments.

Examinations were held under these rules and there are still a number of names upon the eligible lists of those who have passed examination. In order to comply with the provision that the police force should be half republican and half democratic, the eligible lists of each party are kept separate.

After the present board of commissioners of public safety came into office there were two resignations in the police force and the board discharged twenty nine men. But although the charter required that the reasons for removal should be stated and made provisions for a trial of the charges against officers, yet these men were all discharged without other cause than the statement that the board found them to be "inefficient officers." No notice was given to them of the character of the charges or the evidence against them. They had no opportunity to exonerate themselves or to prove the falsity of the accusations against them. Some of these removals may have been warranted but no means were afforded of separating the innocent from the guilty, and your committee is satisfied that at least the spirit of the rule which requires these charges to be stated in writing has been wantonly disregarded. But even if the discharges of these men had been proper the appointment of their successors was undoubtedly irregular and illegal. On the democratic eligible list were the names of the following men who had passed examination with an average of more than sixty-five per cent. and some of them at least were entitled to appointments in case of vacancies: Chas. M. Halstead, Dan'l Donohue, Wm. E. Brooks, Chas. W. Quack, Martin Dougan, W. H. Bigger, Harlan B. Haskell, Augustus Hall, J. L. Byard. Not one of these men, however, was certified or selected. But in their places eleven new men were chosen and five men who had been on the force before but had been discharged under the former administration, were reinstated. There were eight men upon the republican list. None of these men were called for or certified, but it so happens that four of them were selected without certification and eleven new men were chosen without competitive examination. There was a physical inspection by the surgeon and the new men were required to write their names. This was all. According to this system a man may be appointed a policeman in Indianapolis who can not even read the warrant which he is to serve.

The present commissioners of public safety appear to have totally disregarded the rules established for the purpose of securing efficiency and impartiality in appointment to the police force.

Among the new appointees was one who had been dismissed from the police force under a charge of levying blackmail on fallen women; another who had been refused an appointment formerly on the ground that he had been running a crap game, and who had once been in the police court for assault and battery; another who had been arrested for assault and battery; another who was known as a drunkard; another who, while on the police force, had been charged with borrowing money from a keeper of a house of ill-fame, and who had afterwards been dismissed; another who had been dismissed from the police force for insubordination and for leaving his post when on duty; another who had been dismissed for sleeping while on duty; another who is ruptured and is physically unfit to be a patrolman, and others still, the reasons for whose appointment can only be found in their having been active workers for the election of Mayor Taggart. One of the improper appointees is a relative of Police Commissioner Mack. Robert Campbell, a captain on the police force and regarded for many years as a capable and efficient officer, was forced to resign. Your committee has been unable to discover any reason for this action. Captain Quigley, a democrat, who, under the former administration, had been conscientious in obeying his orders, was attacked by a degraded class of saloon-keepers and only kept his place by showing that he acted under strict instructions.

Another curious violation of the rules and the charter appears in the changes made among the sanitary inspectors all of whom obtained their places through open competition. Four republican inspectors were removed and the only democratic inspector was retained. These removals were first made by Dr. Morrison, who had no possible authority to make them under the law. After discovering that his act was illegal he reported these men for removal to the board of public safety and they were removed upon various charges. James Shepherd was discharged upon the alleged ground that he had applied several years ago for appointment as a patrolman and had been rejected on account of insufficient height. The rules of the board of public safety require that the standard height for patrolmen shall be five feet nine inches, but this rule has no more reference to sanitary inspectors than it has to judges of the supreme court. Such a cause for removal is trifling and frivolous. M. W. Welling, undoubtedly a highly efficient officer, was removed on the alleged ground that he was over the age established by police rules. The police rules require that patrolmen shall not be more than forty years of age, but there is no such rule in regard to sanitary inspectors. It is to be noted that when vacancies are wanted the rules appear in very large letters; but when appointments are to be made, the page becomes totally blank. To fill the offices of the men so removed three men, Wesner, Champion and Kleine were appointed entirely without examination, although there were four names on the eligible list of men who had passed the examination for sanitary inspectors: Frank Adams, Harry Patton, Wm. Kuster and E. A. Tousey.

The foregoing facts do not cover all which your committee has discovered, but are illustrative of the treatment which the city civil service has received and independent of the admission of Mayor Taggart, they show to your committee that the best interests of the city are being disregarded for the benefit of personal and partisan considerations.

Your committee, through one of its members, made a personal inquiry of Mr. Taggart as to the reasons for removals and changes in the city administration, and for the failure to observe the rules regulating admission to the civil service. The mayor stated that he had never read the civil service rules at all; that he did not suppose that they were in force under his administration, and that the changes had been made (except in the police and fire departments) for political reasons.

Your committee believe that these avowals show that there has been a systematic violation by the mayor as well as by the heads of the different departments, under which these changes have taken place, of section 45 of the charter of Indianapolis and of the rules made in pursuance of that section.

Your committee regard the conduct of the new administration in thus disregarding the organic law under which it exists as highly reprehensible. It signifies a return from the merit system to the spoils system, a retrograde movement from the reform which is everywhere making headway throughout the cities of the country to the unclean and corrupt methods of Tammany hall.

WILLIAM DUDLEY FOULKE,
DEMARCHUS C. BROWN,
HUGH TH. MILLER,
FREDERIC E. DEWHURST,
LUCIUS B. SWIFT.

Indianapolis, November 21, 1895.

CLERICAL POLITICS.

Mr. Davis, a presbyterian clergyman of Noblesville, this state, is reported in the Indianapolis News, of October 27, as having preached upon "The value of partisanship," and as saying:

The most dangerous instruments in American politics to-day are the independent newspapers and the independent voter. The doctrine that a man must eschew all parties and give allegiance to none is most dangerous and pernicious. Such a man is the most dangerous element in American politics. He is anchored nowhere, has no faith in anything, and is just drifting with the currents. They are mere expletives, mere ciphers, and the world is full of failures made out of just such timber. I admire a straight, clean, party man, and I love a devoted, consistent christian, whether he belongs to my party and church or not. But I despise the man who tries to spread himself out over all parties and to absorb all the good out of all parties, and then sets himself up as the independent voter—so much better and nobler than his fellow-men. And I abhor the christian who spreads himself out over the church and the world, and by compromising with evil tries to advance his political or business interests. The independent paper is in the same category, and its policy and support of men and measures usually smells of filthy lucre. Nothing in this country is entitled to so much respect as "party loyalty." The most admirable spectacle in American politics was the solid, firm stand of the 306 delegates in the Chicago convention for General Grant in 1880. Whether right or wrong, their faith in the great commander never faltered, and their support was true and unquestioned.

We might, perhaps, leave Mr. Davis to the following comments of the republican paper, the Richmond Item:

The Noblesville preacher who is appealing for more partisanship and less independence in both religion and politics is fighting against fate. He might as well pray that the corn should not ripen under the sun and rain, as to hope that man will not ripen under the benign influence of time and knowledge, and the more man ripens, the smaller does mere partisanship appear, whether political or religious. The reverend gentleman must be either a bigot, a demagogue or an ignoramus.

But while we do not apprehend that the man who glorifies the attempt to nominate

Grant for a third term is personally of particular importance, nevertheless, his cloth is of importance, and we should like to present a few practical problems to this teacher of public and private morals.

There is a considerable class of ministers whose party zeal gets the better of their discretion, and who enjoy the sounding flow of words of general denunciation of men who decline under some circumstances to wear a party yoke. These ministers never give any facts, but declaim wholly in generalities. We now present to Mr. Davis a number of questions to answer, which will require considerable historical knowledge, and we offer him space in THE CHRONICLE to make his answer.

Gorman in Maryland had literally seized the government, and for years had deprived that state of free institutions. The members of his party acting within the party were utterly powerless to restore free government and they tried abundantly. Was it their duty to submit their necks to the yoke or to vote temporarily with another party with the best candidates in order that Gorman might be overthrown?

A condition quite similar exists under Quay in Pennsylvania. No law can be passed and scarcely any person can get an office in that state without Quay's consent. He has many times and by papers of the highest financial standing been branded as a thief who stole money from the public treasury and he has never dared take up the challenge to come into court and test the matter. The republicans of Pennsylvania acting with their party are powerless. Is it their duty to submit or by acting as independents make it impossible for Quay to carry elections and thus compass his downfall?

There is a similar condition in the state of New York. The coming winter only such laws can be passed as Tom Platt, a private citizen doing an express business on Broadway, in New York city, will consent to. No man can be put on any committee in the legislature, except as Platt allows it. This has been the case for years, when his party have been in power. For years he has collected money of corporations and distributed it among the workers of his party until they have become completely bound to him and through them he can control the party-machine absolutely. The party at large although it has repeatedly tried can not shake him off. Is it the duty of republicans to submit or by voting independently make it impossible for Platt to carry elections, which failure will destroy any boss?

Again, Tammany hall is, by its party action in state convention, recognized as the official party organization for New York city. It is a combination of thieves and blackmailers, and by a system of robbery and blackmail it has had the funds to build up the best disciplined party machine the country has ever seen. It controls its party's action absolutely in New York city, and it desires to continue its career of robbery and blackmail. Individual democrats, acting within the party, are buffeted as chips upon the waves. Are they to submit, or by voting independently make it impossible for Tammany to carry elections, and impossible for it to get its men into offices and places, and impossible for it to rob and blackmail, and therefore impossible for it to live?

An ignorant local party boss named Murphy is Dave Hill's colleague in the senate from New York. Murphy is the boss of the city of Troy, and by the usual boss methods he has bound to him the works of his own party and a good sprinkling of republicans, who are known as Murphy republicans. One of Murphy's henchmen, named "Bat" Shea, in his henchman zeal, committed a murder for which he is about to suffer the extreme penalty. The New York Evening Post, of October 11th, gives the following summary:

The city of Troy has long been notorious for election frauds. A democratic machine has for years been in the habit of returning its candidates as successful at the polls, and has resorted to every device of rascality required to produce such a showing. The outrages perpetrated in Troy elections have long rendered that city notorious, but their full enormity was never officially set forth until the court of appeals found it necessary to summarize the facts concerning the contest in the thirteenth ward on the 6th of March, 1894. On that day a mayor was to be chosen, and also a board of aldermen and supervisors. The most lively canvass for nominations had been over the republican candidacy for alderman in the thirteenth ward. At the party caucus in February the nomination had been vigorously contested for by Dunlop, a saloon-keeper who worked with the democratic machine, and Haneox. Bartholomew Shea, commonly known as "Bat," a young fellow of twenty-three, a moulder by trade but not a steady worker, was a friend of Dunlop and used to tend bar for him when politics required the absence from the saloon of the would-be alderman. A disturbance occurred at the caucus, during which Shea broke into the meeting-room through a window, brandished a revolver, went to a mutual friend of himself and Dunlop, McGough, who was chairman, received from him the ballot-box, marched out of the room with it, and gave it back to McGough some distance from the polling-place. Trouble then arose as to the regularity of the proceedings of the caucus, and Dunlop and Haneox both ran, each claiming to be the republican candidate for alderman.

Excitement increased as election day approached. On the evening before Shea provided himself with a revolver, for the reason, as he said, that he always anticipated more or less of a row on election day. Shea, McGough, and one or two other particular friends of Dunlop were very greatly interested in the latter's success, "and so far," says the judicial summary of the matter, "did they carry their interest that during election day they carried on, as leaders and conductors of a ruffianism, the most open, shameless, and reckless system of fraudulent voting, by means of repeating and by false personation of legal voters, that has ever come to our notice." These proceedings can not be more concisely or clearly described than in this passage from the court's decision:

"Fraud as a means or measure of concealment was not resorted to. The names and residences of reputable and well-known citizens were openly taken, called out to the inspectors of election, and voted on by these miscreants, while the citizens themselves whose names were thus taken were in the booths preparing their ballots, and in some instances the citizen would come out of the booth to protest against his name being used by such person, but no weight was given to the protest, and when challenged these repeaters swore in their votes under the names thus taken. A line of legal voters, formed for the purpose of voting in their proper form, would be broken, and this 'bunch' of rascals would get to the polls and each deposit a ballot and retire, only to repeat the performance at the same poll in a short time. This was particularly the case at the first election district of the ward, and the defendant and friends acted as the captains and directors of the men who were personally doing the repeating, conducting them to the polls from a saloon near by and gathering them again in time for another raid."

The conduct of Shea and his friend impressed the judges of the highest court as "almost beyond belief," and the decision says that, were it not for the fact that it had been testified to by numerous witnesses, who were reputable business men and entitled to credit, they would have had great hesitation in accepting the narrative as true, since "the reckless audacity displayed in the commission of these offenses would of itself lead us to doubt whether any one would be willing to run such risks as to thus openly violate the law in the presence of so many reputable and decent men." But the facts were established "by evidence which is simply overwhelming."

Four brothers named Ross, all of them good citizens and engaged in the manufacturing business, had been deeply interested in this contest from the start. They represented the decent republican element in the ward, which opposed an alliance with the democratic machine. They had supported Haneox in the disorderly caucus, and they resolved to do all that they could to secure his success on election day. Like Shea, they expected trouble at the polls, and armed themselves with clubs, while some of their associates had pistols also. Early on election day the Ross brothers went to the polling place in the third district of the ward. During the forenoon Shea and some others of his party appeared, and on one occasion commenced to quarrel with one of the Ross party, and struck one or two in the face, "but nothing serious then occurred." About noon Shea, McGough, and half-a-dozen others returned, and on their way were heard to utter threats to "do them," that they were strong enough, and that they should "come on," "to hell with them," and such expressions. One of the party passed into the room, assumed the name of William Armstrong, of No. 51 Glen avenue, claimed the right to vote as such, while the real William Armstrong was preparing his ballot, and actually voted on that name. Other efforts to repeat were made by the Shea crowd, leading to an affray, during which McGough and William Ross came together, and the former shot the latter. Robert Ross started in pursuit of McGough, overtook him, they both fell, and while Robert was bending over, Shea walked up behind, deliberately shot him in the back of the head, and then walked around and fired at him in front, the first shot causing instant death.

These facts were conclusively established. The only defence was an obviously absurd claim that Boland, one of the Ross party, had fired the fatal shot at his friend, supported only by witnesses of whom some had served in the penitentiary, "and not one seems to have been a steady worker at anything other than frequenting saloons and passing his time in such pursuits as are usually followed there." Shea ran away, but was soon caught. His indictment for murder speedily followed. The local prosecuting authorities being distrusted, the case was placed in charge of an assistant district attorney, to assist whom an eminent lawyer was appointed. The jury found Shea guilty of murder. The case was taken on appeal to the general term, which sustained the trial court. Appeal was then taken to the highest court in the state, which has just overruled all the objections and affirmed the verdict, so that the murderer must now be executed.

In the course of the decision Judge Peckham, who spoke for the court, said:

"It does not appear nor is it important to know to what political party the defendant belonged. Such men have no politics. As the soldiers of fortune of a bygone age fought, so these repeaters vote for the candidate who pays them. The repeater is the modern pirate, an enemy of organized and civilized society, and it is the duty of all parties to assist the officers of the law in the prompt punishment of the guilty."

Are the citizens of Troy to continue their submission to Murphy or are they in disregard of party loyalty to vote to overthrow him?

Further, shall self-respecting citizens be asked to vote for the candidates for the New York legislature, whose biographies we reprint from the New York Evening Post, a paper of financial standing:

Timothy D. Sullivan (Tam.)—Generally known as "Dry Dollar;" professional politician, formerly a liquor dealer; one of the very worst of Tammany's legislative galaxy; was elected to the assembly seven times, and elected to the last senate; has been a preposterous legislator, being regarded as a notorious lobbyist and an introducer of "strike" measures; was recognized leader of the "Black horse cavalry;" in 1893 the most audacious colonization frauds were practised in his district; at his own polling-place there were many warrants for repeaters; several were sentenced to prison for ballot frauds; Inspector Byrnes in 1889 charged that he was the associate of thieves; has been engaged in street brawls, and has been described by the city reform club as "a typical New York tough."

Alexander S. Williams (rep. and state dem.)—Ex-policeman, rising through the grades to an inspectorship; was retired at a secret session of the board; is a man of brutal instinct and known as "Clubber" Williams; was deeply smirched by the Lexow investigation; during his captaincy in the "tenderloin" precinct the system of police blackmail and protected vice, revealed by the investigation, attained its rankest growth; during his inspectorship, which gave him control of east side precincts, vice was never so open; during the investigation Capt. Schmittberger swore as follows: Q. "Did you give any part of 80 per cent. (blackmail money) to any one? A. I did. Q. To whom? A. To Inspector Williams. * * * I went to him and handed him the money. The first time it was $50. I gave it to him at headquarters." He stands as the official candidate of the state democracy through a "deal" made with "Jakey" Kunzenman and "Fatty" Grote, but his candidacy has been repudiated by the state democracy.

Charles Smith (Tam.)—Liquor-dealer; known as "Silver Dollar" Smith; has served several times in the assembly, being one of the worst men ever sent there; he has been arrested four times, three times for brutal assault, once for bribery; was indicted for bribery, but escaped conviction by a disagreement of the jury; during the senate inquiry it was shown that he was a trafficker in bail bonds, and that he "ran things" at Essex market police court, having many poor victims at his mercy; was recently tried on a charge of wrecking a saloon of a rival and stabbing him, but was acquitted.

William F. Grote (state dem. and rep.)—Liquor-dealer; known as "Fatty" Grote; a man of absolute unfitness; has been arrested no less than nineteen times for various offenses, beginning with his arrest and conviction for burglary in 1868, and ranging down to arrests for stealing, assault and disorderly conduct; unsuccessful Tammany candidate for alderman in 1889; state democracy candidate for alderman in 1891, and state democracy candidate for assembly last year; made a "deal" for exchange of support with ex-Inspector Williams, republican, but was compelled by his organization to repudiate it, although the official indorsement stands.

THE GENTLEMAN IN POLITICS.

Tammany has understood the necessity of putting up an occasional "decoy" in office. Here and there it has set up as judge or as a single member of a board some notable figure with the backing of an honorable family, social distinction and great personal respectability. This "gentleman in politics" they point to when obliged to meet any charges of malfeasance or corruption, as prima facie evidence that the charges must be malicious. This decoy also makes himself useful in answering charges. His education and his respectability are extraordinarily valuable at these critical junctures. At a recent investigation of the late Tammany dock board the official stenographic records of their executive sessions were disclosed. The board consisted of Andy White and the "gentleman," Mr. Cram, the son of an eminent father, himself a graduate of Harvard college and a man of means, and "yet he has for two or three years been associating intimately, night and day, with a lot of thieves, cheats and ruffians. Moreover, whenever they were near being found out, they were in the habit of coming forward and saying, "Look at Cram. Cram would not be with us if we were doing anything wrong."

As is stated, these stenographic reports give a life-like and authentic picture of these Tammany worthies "at work" on the business of a great department of the municipal government.

"Session after session was given up mainly, not to a discussion of the best methods for caring for the water-front of a great city, but to wrangle about "pulls" and getting the "men" of Croker and other Tammany magnates upon the pay-rolls of the department. Mr. Cram, as the president of the board, was always the guiding mind in its deliberations. He declared under oath yesterday that "politics never influenced him in the discharge of my (his) duties," and that he was "perfectly satisfied" with his conduct in the board. He also remarked that he thought the citations from the records were "trivial," and that the examination to which the commissioners subjected him was "very foolish." Yet these trivial citations showed that Cram had no other idea of his position than to use it, absolutely without decency, for Tammany politics. The key to his official conduct was given by himself at a meeting of the board on June 22, 1893, when the board was "discussing" the usefulness of an employe named Dennis O'Brien, in whose place it was proposed to appoint some else. The record reads:

President Cram—Dennis O'Brien is my man. Why should you put on anybody?

Engineer—He is a very bad man.

President Cram—Ten days is all he will get; I don't care if he is the devil.

Engineer—Suppose we give him twenty days?

President Cram—I appointed him for Richard Croker.

On the same day a similar question arose about one Tracy, and the record proceeds:

President Cram—Give him $15 a week; it simplifies the account.

Engineer—A good-for-nothing fellow; I want to get rid of him as soon as I can. He is one of the poorest men I have out there.

President Cram—I appointed him for Fox. Shall we lay it over a week?

Commissioner White—Yes.

Perhaps the most notable achievement of Cram in behalf of anybody was performed in the case of Patrick McCann. On January 21, 1893, the chief engineer formally recommended the discharge of McCann for "general inefficiency and worthlessness," and at the executive session of February 9 following, the subjoined "debate" occurred:

Commissioner Phelan—What about Pat McCann?

President Cram—Reinstate him.

Engineer—There isn't any place for him.

President Cram—Then you have got to find one.

Engineer—He is the most useless whelp there is on the water-front.

And at the executive session of November 23 following, McCann reappeared as follows:

Secretary—You won't forget McCann?

Commissioner Phelan—McCann? That is the worst man in the department.

Commissioner White—What is the matter with him?

Commissioner Phelan—It would take too long; he does everything.

Commissioner White—What did he do?

Commissioner Phelan—He is a laborer in the eleventh district.

Engineer—He used to get drunk and leave his gang, go up street and play polley; then you would have to hunt for him. We got so we could find him quick in the policy shops up street.

Commissioner Phelan—He used to have an association and compel all of his men to join and pay fifty cents a week to his association; levied assessments on his men.

Engineer—Mr. Cram has kept him in here for years against everybody's protest and everybody's request, except Mr. Docharty's.

These are accurate specimens of the usual executive sessions, and a perfectly fair sample of Cram's methods. He was always ready to recognize any Tammany man's pull, from Croker down through Comptroller Fitch, Jos. J. O'Donohue and Sulzer, to Mike Daly. When a question arose on June 29, 1893, as to why an unsatisfactory man was retained, Cram answered: "He was appointed for Michael Daly," and added that he had a "pull," * * * because "Daly is personally interested in him, and he is also in Dalton's district." At the same session Cram announced "frankly" that "Sulzer has brought into my room about 500 laborers," and added: "I move that Frank M. Donohue be given $15 a week. He writes beautifully." No man was treated with more deference by Cram than Seannell, the murderer. On August 7, 1893, the records contain these passages:

President Cram—I think we will have to dismiss all of the employes of the department from the eleventh assembly district unless they bring letters from Seannell. Hereafter you must have a letter from Seannell before I will appoint anybody. I don't know whether he wants John O'Brien—he wants two or three men discharged. I hate to discharge laborers, except for cause; but he says that John O'Brien, who is a very decent old man, was appointed without his request.

President Cram—Hereafter, I won't appoint any one unless he brings a letter from Seannell. You can put Michael O'Keefe in place of John O'Brien.

Another great power was Senator Plunkitt, to whom the board could refuse nothing. He appeared on October 27, 1892, and asked the board to pay $180,000 for some property which it was to take for the city. The manner in which the board reached a decision is very edifying:

President Cram—I move that the offer to sell be amended by making it $175,000, and then be accepted.

Senator Plunkitt—I think it is very cheap for the city of New York at $180,000, I do. I have been in this section of the city all my life.

Commissioner ————What offer has been made by the department for that property?

Senator Plunkitt—No offer has been made.

Commissioner Phelan—The matter was referred to you and me. So far as I am concerned I am willing to refer it back to the board without any report.

President Cram—I move that the offer be accepted, with that amendment, making it $175,000.

Commissioner ————We ought to have the boundaries of the property, knowing exactly what and where it is.

Senator Plunkitt—There is a map here, sir, which shows all of that grant. I think they ought to get $150,000.

President Cram—Will you take $175,000?

Senator Plunkitt—I think they ought to get $180,000 upon my word; I don't think your people ought to crowd them, gentlemen.

President Cram—There is no use in asking more than the sinking fund will approve, and $175,000 is a more symmetrical sum. I will have to go before the sinking fund and explain this, and where will we put the $5,000 in?

His own view of the condition of the service of the department was given with great frankness at a meeting on June 1, 1893, when the following conversation between him and his colleague, "Judge" Andy White, is recorded:

President Cram—I tell you, really, judge, as I told Croker the other day, we have got about eight or ten masters who are neglecting their work—at least two-thirds.

Commissioner White—I don't think we have got but two or three of them in the whole lot that are worth a cent.

A similar conversation occurred on July 20, of the same year:

President Cram—Peter Snedden is a very good man.

Engineer—He won't stay on his work, Mr. Cram.

Commissioner White—I think you have got more statesmen in this department than anywhere I ever saw.

President Cram—Snedden is a very fine man.

Commissioner White—I gave you a very good man the other day, Foley.

President Cram—I put him in place of one of my men; I got the man in for Charles Dayton; Snedden put him back.

Engineer—He only watches Sunday; he is not a watchman.

President Cram—There is no objection to that; he will stay on. You will have to try him. Put him back. He is one of the very best statesmen.

We will close our extracts with the following samples of the general "tone" of Cram as the president of the board:

September 13, 1894. President Cram—I am willing to compromise, but Farrell can not go unless Hughes too. I would like to give him another chance. It seems rather hard if they only took a drink on a wet day.

Mr. Parker—They went off and left their work. You can't depend on that Farrell; he has been laid off a dozen times; he is fonder of President Cram—That shows good taste; shows he is a gentleman by instinct.

September 25, 1893. President Cram—What pull has he got? There is nobody there that we want.

Engineer—We have looked over those men; they are all pretty good men; the best one is Mr. Murphy.

President Cram—Well, who in hell is Murphy? He may be a republican for all I know. Let him go to McClellan. The first endorser is from Croton, N. Y. Tell him to bring a letter from Mr. Purroy and Mr. Docharty. I move that it be tabled.

THE BROTHERHOOD OF BOSSES.

The republican county convention was recently held, and among the nominations made was that of W. P. L. Stafford for county judge and surrogate. How he secured the nomination is told by the Albion Free Lance, a republican newspaper, which says that at the republican caucus in that town Stafford's lieutenants brought in groups of half a dozen democrats, guarded them up to the box, and saw that they cast Stafford ballots; that "one of Stafford's hardest workers and closest adherents admitted to us that they were voting Democrats."—New York Evening Post, October 9.

The appeal of Kentucky republicans to the party at large to lend assistance in a financial way for legitimate campaign expenses was heeded in Indiana and some money was forwarded from a number of counties to the treasurer of the Kentucky committee. Joseph I. Irwin, one of the rich men and one of the party leaders of Bartholomew county, carried, personally, to the treasurer $94, contributed in Columbus, by general subscription. Each donor received a lithograph receipt. Mr. Irwin says that when he handed over the money to the committee he was informed that Senator Quay, of Pennsylvania, had forwarded $1,000 by personal check, but that he had asked that no part of the money be used to defeat Senator Blackburn.—Indianapolis Journal, November 8.

The evidence taken before the Oneida grand jury issued to indicate that money was sent by Henry D. Purroy of Tammany Hall to Dave Dishler, Hill leader, and Thomas Wheeler, Platt leader, to be used in securing the nomination of Henry J. Coggeshall, renegade, by the Oneida republicans. If such a pooling of interests between Hillites and Plattites should be proved, it would be something for republicans throughout the state to think over.—Buffalo Express, October 23.

The Mail pointedly observes: The republican county committee is in the hands of incompetents, traders and self-seekers in politics. It does not now and, unless differently officered, never can command the confidence of the community.—Buffalo Express, November 18.

THE GRIND.

Warden Harley, of the Northern prison, says that his institution is now controlled almost exclusively by republicans. At a meeting of the board of directors Tuesday night all of the democratic guards were let out and republicans appointed to the vacancies.—Indianapolis Journal, September 6.

The Marion county institute passed resolutions this afternoon favoring the establishment of civil service rules governing the employment of teachers in the common schools. Superintendent Flick says that after many years' experience in looking after schools, he is convinced that nothing would do more to elevate the common schools than the establishment of rules of civil service.—Indianapolis News, September.

"To the Hon. A. H. Taylor, Petersburg, Ind.:

"DEAR SIR—Your communication of the—date, relative to the appointment of John Surrant as postmaster at Surrant, Pike county, Ind., has been received. On March 13, 1893, you recommended Felix G. Dearing, for postmaster at Surrant, Ind. Will you kindly notify the department which of the candidates you prefer?

Very respectfully,

"R. O. MAXWELL,

"Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General.

"Washington, D. C., June 21."

* * *

The New York civil service commission has granted the request of Mayor Green of this city to place Jamestown in the list of civil service cities. All the appointive offices of the city will now be filled after an examination, except the heads of departments and clerks who have the handling of public funds.—Jamestown (N. Y.) Dispatch, August 30.

* * *

The state civil service commission has written to the board of supervisors of Kings county in approval of the board's plan for providing a county civil service commission, to have jurisdiction over employes on the public works of Kings county. Over $3,000,000 is to be expended on county works beyond the jurisdiction of the Brooklyn civil service commission. This is the only board of supervisors in the state to take such action.—Albany dispatch, New York Times, July 31.

* * *

Thirty consecutive years in the service as a letter carrier and not one complaint in all that time, is the record of Wm. H. James, of Rochester, N. Y.

He was appointed by Postmaster S. W. Updyke, on May 7, 1865. Rochester was a small city at that time, and but nine carriers were employed. Of that number Mr. James alone has withstood the ravages of time and removal, and can justly claim the title of being the oldest letter carrier in point of service in the United States. The fifty-eight years of a busy life rest lightly upon him, and there are few men in the Rochester post-office who answer more regularly to roll-call than he. Upright in character and of sterling integrity, Mr. James numbers his friends by the legion, and his pleasant home where he has lived for thirty-two years is filled with many interesting and valuable relics of Uncle Sam's postal service. It is needless to say that the letter carriers of Rochester are proud of him, proud of his record as a letter carrier and as a man, and sincerely hope that he may be granted many more years of life and usefulness.—Postal Record for May.

* * *

The printers of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, have expelled ex-President John L. Kennedy, for unbecoming conduct in writing an article for the Dayton, Ohio, Journal, censuring public printer Benedict for the adoption of civil service rules in the government printing office. The vote on expulsion was 184 to 66.—Washington dispatch, September 16.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

VOL. II, No. 34.

INDIANAPOLIS, DECEMBER, 1895.

TERMS: { One dollar per annum.
10 cents per copy.

Published monthly. Publication office, No. 23 N. Meridian St., Indianapolis, Ind. Address,

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

THE Taggart administration in this city has continued its disregard for law with characteristic impudence. It has continued to quarter upon the public treasury a large number of men who are not legally in the employ of the city, and the payment of money to whom is an unlawful use of public funds. The quality of some of the men who are thus loaded upon the city was indicated in the following extract from the report of the committee of the Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, published in the CHRONICLE last month, the statements of which there has not been the least pretense of denying:

"Among the new appointees was one who had been dismissed from the police force under a charge of levying blackmail on fallen women; another who had been refused an appointment formerly on the ground that he had been running a crap game, and who had once been in the police court for assault and battery; another who had been arrested for assault and battery; another who was known as a drunkard; another who, while on the police force, had been charged with borrowing money from a keeper of a house of ill-fame, and who had afterwards been dismissed; another who had been dismissed from the police force for insubordination and for leaving his post when on duty; another who had been dismissed for sleeping while on duty; another who is ruptured and is physically unfit to be a patrolman, and others still, the reasons for whose appointment can only be found in their having been active workers for the election of Mayor Taggart. One of the improper appointees is a relative of Police Commissioner Mack."

DURING the month Mayor Taggart and his heads of departments met together and repealed the civil service rules. Nothing was substituted therefor except a general reference of appointments to the heads of departments. It is but fair to say that these men did not regard the matter seriously. They are wholly ignorant of the widespread movement for a revolution in the conduct of municipal affairs, and they would not want to join such a movement if they knew of it. They regarded it as a good joke to kick all "civil service nonsense" out of the government of this city. There never was a more insolent and reckless disregard of law and public sentiment. The law requires that the mayor and the heads of departments, meeting together, shall adopt rules for the employment of persons by the city, except in the fire and police departments, and that such rules shall be competitive. They meet together and repeal a good set of rules then in force and substitute none in their place. There has been nothing like this since a member of the police board under a former democratic administration publicly declared for the toleration of open gambling-rooms because they brought business and gave a metropolitan air to Indianapolis. This action will doubtless help Taggart with the Indiana democratic machine in securing the nomination for governor next year, as a similar attitude enabled P. C. Trusler recently to secure a republican nomination for mayor of this city, but the Trusler incident shows that the voters at the election may differ radically with the machine at the convention.

When this matter is fully understood there is no occasion for surprise. The men in control of the democratic party in this city, with one or two exceptions, are, and have been, engaged in politics for the money which it directly or indirectly brings them. Mayor Taggart was a restaurant keeper and was elected auditor of this county, and held the place until it made him, in a small way, rich. In his first canvass for election, he was the constant political companion of John E. Sullivan, the candidate for county clerk, who was one of the most corrupt and corrupting politicians that ever lived in Indianapolis.

During all the years Taggart held the office of auditor, he probably did not give an hour a week to the duties of his office, but did the work by deputies. The office was to him simply a source from which to draw emoluments. It is not to be expected that such a man would have very high political ideas, nor has he. A study of the men who have influence with Taggart as advisers, or who, for one reason or another, have a pull with him, shows that there is not a single one who has any desire for improved transaction of public business. Some of them have held good offices and made money out of them. Others have large financial interests which are affected by the way the laws are enforced. Others are looking to offices in the future and want to quarter henchmen upon the city. These men are ready to sacrifice everything in the way of good administration of the city to the particular ends of their selfishness. What is said here of the city, is true also of the controlling democratic elements of the state. They like the Voorhees stamp and do not want any better. There was a time when Mr. Morss first became owner of the Indianapolis Sentinel, when it seemed that under the leadership of that paper there was to be a decided elevation of democratic standards. But Mr. Morss received an office and the paper has dropped back to a position little, if any, in advance of the old Sentinel, and views the treachery of Taggart in this city with complacency. Evidently, the democratic party in Indiana has not been drubbed enough.

INDIANAPOLIS has had recently a number of serious fires which led the board of trade to appoint a committee to overhaul the fire department. The committee found a lack of discipline in the department and recommended that the board give the chief more power. The remedy to be of any use needs to go much deeper than that. We have a system by which a man must declare that he is either a republican or a democrat before he can get employment. He then gets employment, not on his merits but by a pull. The system has loaded and loads the department with politicians and favorites and will continue to do so. If the board should make a rule giving the chief more power there would be a string to it, and the chief would not dare to exercise the power. Nothing may be expected of a city administration which brazenly and flippantly tramples the law under foot as the present one does. The committee should have recommended that the general assembly be asked to place the service of this city upon the merit system so that if any man desires employment in the fire department he may go and compete for it physically and mentally, and so that if he outstrip his competitors he may get his place without dependence upon the petty politicians who now disgrace the government of this city. The law should further provide for the dismissal of any fireman by the chief for cause stated in writing, and by that is not meant a dishonest and tricky evasion by stating "incompetent" as the cause, such as our same city officials now resort to.

If the Springfield Republican wants the next democratic candidate for the Presidency taken from Mr. Cleveland's cabinet, it would be much better for the public if it dropped Olney, and took up Postmaster-General Wilson. In the latter's recent report, he comes nearer to rock-bottom in stating the principles which should govern the postal service and regulate the transaction of public business and in carrying them out than any other man who has ever occupied his office. It begins to seem strange that it has required argument to convince the people that two of his assistants, each charged with expending over forty millions annually, together with the management and discipline of tens of thousands of employes, should have a tenure not depending upon Gorman-Quay-Platt-Voorhees politics. Speaking of the recent order providing for the transfer of post-offices into the classified service, he says:

The order * * may be accepted as the beginning and foundation not only of a better postal service of the public, a better and more business-like accounting to this department, but also a wise extension of the civil service system to postmasters. It is my purpose to proceed under the authority of this order as discreetly as I can, and in the long run as far as experience will justify, so as to secure these commendable results.

It has been easy enough in the past to make orders, but here is a high executive officer intent upon execution. All this emphasizes what the CHRONICLE said last month, that the battle of civil service reform has been won and it is now only a question of putting the methods into operation. The report of the secretary of the interior, Hoke Smith, sounds a similar note of progress in the flat recommendation that the tenure of office of an Indian agent "should be conditioned alone upon the faithful discharge of his duties," and that "the classified service be extended over all the subordinate positions both at the agencies and at the schools." In the same line are the acts of Secretary Morton in putting everything in the department of agriculture under the rules. Is it not about time that the democratic party of Indiana shook off its Voorheeses and Taggarts and began to show some appreciation of the progress which its national administration is making?

Boston has just elected Josiah Quincy mayor by over 4,000 majority. Doubtless Boston would warmly resent the insinuation that this was to be taken as an indorsement of Quincy's loot of the consulships, or of his unfortunate connection with a printing contract while he was assistant secretary of state. He went out of that office wholly discredited and, as Mr. Dana Estes says, with a national reputation as a spoilsman. It is more than probable that there was a large element of forgiveness in his election as mayor and a disposition to give him another chance. What he will do with this chance is now to be seen. If he should return to the course which his name and his former professions gave expectation of, he would radically disappoint the conference of Indiana democrats presided over by Mayor Taggart of this city, who the other day telegraphed him congratulations upon his election. Whenever a democrat achieves an ignoble notoriety in politics, any success which seems to "vindicate" him is sure of the warmest congratulations of the controlling democratic elements of Indiana. Their notion of a public official is one who goes in "for all there is in it" for himself and friends. If Quincy now honestly enforces the merit and labor service systems in the city of Boston, instead of deliberately breaking the law, as Taggart does, these Indiana democrats will say he is not the man they took him for.

In the Chautauquan for October there is a forcible illustration of the unhappy barrenness of moral teachers as to political morality, a fact often pointed out by the CHRONICLE. The Chautauquan has some pages of "Current History and Opinion," for the reading of which it offers a reward. In October a page and a half of these was devoted to Quay and consisted in setting out a picture of him with an editorial insinuation that in his recent struggle he was fighting the battle of his life over "the burning question of reform in city government." It follows this with fourteen extracts from newspapers over the country. These all give the impression that Quay is a patriot in the sense that George William Curtis was, and that added to this patriotism is a consummate skill as a political manager. In fact he is known to all men as one of the most dangerous and corrupt men that ever engaged in American politics. He has repeatedly been accused by newspapers of having stolen a large sum of money from the public treasury. These newspapers were of such financial standing that they would have had to respond to any amount of damages assessed by the jury and they challenged Quay to a trial and he has never dared to take up the challenge. What do men of ordinary judgment say of such a set of facts? It is not easy to decide whether Quay or the clerical editor of these pages of the Chautauquan deserves the greater public censure and contempt.

THE FIFTEENTH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE NATIONAL LEAGUE.

The fifteenth annual meeting of the National Civil Service Reform League was held in Washington the 12th and 13th of this month and shows greater strength and vigor than ever. In his address Mr. Schurz again reached his highest mark and set the boss before the American people in a lasting aspect. His address has an added interest because it follows his recent stand against Tammany Hall in New York—a stand which required the highest civic courage and was a triumph which fittingly ranges with a long line of similar civic triumphs in Mr. Schurz's career.

It is to be regretted that the limits of the CHRONICLE permit only excerpts. The resolutions have not been received, but the CHRONICLE gives extracts from all of the papers which have reached it.

THE BOSS, THE MONARCH OF THE REPUBLIC.

[From Mr. Schurz's Address.]

There has actually been such a monarchy on a small scale in existence among us. I have seen it in operation and so have many of my hearers. We have witnessed in the greatest city of the United States one man wielding the powers of municipal government like a monarch, in some respects like an absolute monarch, too. Standing at the head of a pretended political organization ruled by him with autocratic power, he made appointments and dismissals in the public service of the city by merely issuing his orders. He determined what candidates for office should within his dominion be submitted to the popular vote, and his followers with prompt obedience enforced his pleasure. He gave audience to citizens having business with the municipal government, and either granted or refused their petitions like a sovereign. He ordered his agents in the legislature of the state to pass this bill or to defeat the other bill, and it was done. Citizens became accustomed to approach him as supplicants approach a king. Aside from the public taxes for his municipal government he levied a separate revenue, the payment of which could not be refused without danger—a sort of civil list, partly under the euphonic title of "campaign funds," partly without any euphony—for the use of which he never thought of accounting. He grew rich in a marvelously short time, and when a popular uprising against his rule broke out which threatened to become too formidable to resist, he abdicated and withdrew to his estates.

This was monarchy—not, indeed, a monarchy surrounded by the pomp of a court of nobles with ancient names, escutcheons, and gold lace, and ribbons, and stars, and crosses—rather a very vulgar sort of monarchy whose vassals and high dignitaries were a mayor and police commissioners and heads of municipal departments, and district leaders and ward politicians, with names and antecedents and manners and social standing anything but aristocratic—but a monarchy for all that with most of the essential attributes. To be sure the title of this monarch was not that of king, but that of “boss”—but a boss clad with regal power which he exercised with arbitrary authority until, like some French kings, he had to yield to a popular upheaval amounting to a revolution. Such things happened, as every one acquainted with the history of Tammany Hall knows, in this very republic; and if we speculate upon the manner in which monarchy, not in name, but in fact, may rise up among us, here is the living example.

THE BOSS.

The development of political bossism into something like actual monarchy is, to be sure, an extreme case. But all political bossism has a tendency in that direction. When in a political party the selfish element obtains controlling influence, it will, for mutual benefit, naturally seek to organize itself into what we call a machine; and machine rule will usually, for the more certain attainment of its selfish ends through united and well-regulated action, drift into more or less irresponsible one-man rule—the one man to rule the machine for its and his benefit, to rule through the machine the party organization, and to rule through the party organization, as the case may be, the municipality or the state. And this rule he does not exercise by bringing his fellow-citizens, through persuasion, to his own way of thinking, if indeed he have any, with regard to principles or policies, or measures touching the public interest, but by distributing among the selfish politicians composing his organized corps of mercenaries, in the true feudal fashion, as rewards for services rendered, or as inducements for services to be rendered, things of value, such as public offices with their emoluments and opportunities, which things of value do not belong to him, but to the public, he doling them out among his henchmen, not for the benefit of the public, but for his and their own.

How far the aspirations of bossism, thus established, are already reaching, found recently a curious illustration in the newspaper report that some of the state bosses, not content with their local autocracy, met together in conference to agree upon certain persons to be put forward as candidates for the Presidency of the United States—just as in the old times of the German empire the princes wearing the high dignity and power of “electors” met together to agree upon a selection for the imperial crown. Equally striking was another piece of news going through the press, that when the boss of one state was hard pressed in an election by an uprising of citizens impudently wishing to govern themselves, the boss of another state, although not of the same party, but inspired by a feeling of common interest and of comradeship, sent a strong troop of his own experienced and fearless repeaters to aid the struggling brother boss at the polls—just as the czar of Russia in 1849, when the emperor of Austria was in danger from the Hungarian revolutionists, sent his hard-pressed brother-emperor a Russian army to help him subdue the insurgent subjects and save the monarchical authority. Even if these stories had been wholly invented by newspaper reporters, yet it would be a significant sign of the times that they were generally believed as entirely natural occurrences. And as to their naturalness, given the premises, there can be no doubt.

THE CONGRESSMAN.

In this manner weeks and weeks pass after the incoming of the new administration, and still our friend has on his hands a formidable number of pursuers to whom he has promised “something equally as good,” and others, too, to whom he has promised nothing, but whom he thinks he can not afford to offend by blunt refusals. Some have left Washington, but flood him with letters. Others have staid and indomitably dog his steps. Some owe boarding bills in Washington, and have no money left for the home journey. In his despair he pays their bills, and buys them their railroad tickets, to deliver himself of the insufferable infliction, promising to move heaven and earth for them in their absence. But there are a few who still have funds and will not go, and from them the wretched statesman, jaded and disgusted, at last runs away himself and hurries home. But there he finds no rest. Incessantly he is pestered by the reproaches of the disappointed, and by the impatience of those who are still expectants. He begins to doubt whether the patronage business has not made him more enemies than friends. Fortunate he is if he does not find himself forced to run away once more without leaving his address behind, into some solitude far from the madding crowd. And yet he may have to fear that quiet solitude more than the distracting bustle he has escaped; for it will bring to him moments of self-contemplation, when memories will rise up before him of promises made to be broken, of confidence invited to be betrayed, and of honor and self-respect lost never to be retrieved. And yet, of the political debts which the spoils system seduced him to contract, only the most pressing have been paid.

So far he has gone only through the experience of the first months after the incoming of the new administration while Congress was not in session. The time arrives for Congress to meet, and now he thinks he will atone for it all by giving his whole soul to that duty for the performance of which he really was elected. But, alas! the old torment will not let him go. The men with claims who have not been provided for are still dogging his heels, or mercilessly pelting him with letters, and like, an errand boy, they keep him running from department to department. Every new chance opening revives the pressure. The work is never, never done; and although it abates somewhat, it continues to trench most severely on the time, working power, and good humor which should wholly belong to the legislator's real duty.

Well, our friend tries hard to do the best he can under the circumstances, and flatters himself with the belief that he has at least this political home machine tolerably well arranged. But new complications arise. One of the office-holders appointed upon his recommendation so grossly misconducts himself as to make his removal imperative. There is no doubt as to the facts. But the delinquent public servant calls upon his congressional patron for protection. Has he not a right to do so? Has he not been appointed simply by way of reward for services rendered to the member of congress? Has he ever been expected by his patron to earn his salary by downright hard work for the public? Was he not rather to have “a good time” while in office, and to make out of it what he could? And now because he did so he is to lose the reward he had earned, and to be disgraced by removal to boot? Will the congressional patron leave his friend in the lurch? Our friend is a little puzzled at first. In spite of the many rebuffs it has suffered the old conscience speaks once more. Does his sense of duty permit him to endeavor to keep in office, to the evident detriment of the service and of the public interest, a man he knows to have proved himself unworthy? But there is also another voice speaking to him. Has not this unworthy public servant friends or relatives who exercise influence in his district? True, he ought never to have recommended this man for office, but can he now afford to make enemies of him and his clan? True, the integrity of the service and the public interest are entitled to consideration; but can he afford that consideration when one of his appointees is concerned, and he himself has so much at stake? Well, he seeks to have the removal recalled. He does not find a willing ear. He begs, he protests, he blusters, he threatens, he entreats, he implores the administration to do a thing which he knows it can not do without being false to its public duty.

But still other complications come to plague him. The administration follows some policy which he feels himself in conscience bound to oppose; or vicious practices are discovered in some government department which his sense of duty commands him to denounce. His first impulse is to obey that command. But has he not appeared before the President and before the department chiefs, as a petitioner for favors in the shape of offices for his friends? Will he not have to solicit similar favors again, and if he criticises and opposes the administration, will it not have the power not only to refuse further favors needed by him, but even to remove the persons appointed upon his recommendation? Nay, may not thos very persons, his political retainers, the members of his home machine, if he opposes the administration, turn against him and denounce him as a mugwump and a renegade, for the purpose of winning the favor of the administration, and of thus saving their own necks? He keenly feels that here his moral independence as a legislator is at stake—that moral independence which, if he is to do his duty to his country, can never be surrendered. But can he afford to maintain it at the risk of losing all the dearly-bought results of the management of the patronage in his district, and even of turning his own handiwork against himself? No—unless there be in him some of the stuff of which martyrs are made, the moral independence of the legislator will die as a sacrifice at the shrine of that patronage. And to many legislators making that sacrifice, it will hardly occur that it bears all the features of a bargain essentially corrupt.

* * * * *

It was in a magazine article written by Gen. Jacob D. Cox, ex-secretary of the interior, that I first found a description of senators and members of the house of representatives personally introducing to a cabinet minister constituents of theirs as candidates for certain places, extolling the merits of those constituents in the warmest language, and with apparently earnest eloquence urging their appointment, while the cabinet minister had in his desk notes from the same statesmen cautioning him not to pay any regard to their recommendations. I must confess that this startled me. Being at that time a member of the senate myself, I inquired of two cabinet ministers then in office whether any instance of such duplicity had ever come to their own personal notice. The answer was that indeed they had, and they were by no means infrequent. But I have not to depend upon other men's testimony; for a few years later I myself, sitting behind my desk as secretary of the interior, looked into the eyes of senators and representatives who played before me the same ignoble trick, and into the eyes of their confiding victims—and I did not know whom to pity most, the deceiver or the deceived. If there is anything I have to be sorry for it is that I contented myself by disregarding their recommendations altogether instead of uncovering the dastardly fraud on the spot.

* * * * *

The post-offices scattered by thousands all over the land have done more than anything else to keep alive the spoils idea among our people. More than anything else they have been the prizes fought for in national contests by local politicians. More than anything else they have served to demoralize the public mind with the notion that a change of party in power must mean a partisan change in all the offices, and thus to turn our party contests into scrambles for plunder. It is no exaggeration to say that the post-office used as party spoil has been the bane of American politics. It has especially been the curse of the member of congress, hounding, tormenting, and degrading him every day of his official life. To be rid of that curse will be to him a true deliverance. Every post-office the disposal of which he loses will be so much gain to his working power, to his freedom and moral independence, to his usefulness and dignity as a legislator. He will, therefore not only do the utmost in his power to aid the postmaster-general in the work of reorganizing the postal service according to the President's order, but he will zealously promote the passage of a law bringing under effective civil service rules those post-offices which the President's order cannot reach. He will contribute to this result all the more gladly as, with the postal service taken out of party politics, the greatest citadel of the spoils system will have fallen.

A YEAR'S PROGRESS.

At our last annual meeting, I spoke of the remarkable strength the civil-service reform movement had gained in public sentiment. I am happy to add now that the growth of that strength has continued. It was strikingly manifested by the overwhelming popular majority by which the merit system was adopted for the municipal government of Chicago, and by its successful introduction. Efforts are being made in various other places to follow this great example. We have, indeed, to deplore two concurrences, which show that the spoils politicians have by no means given up the battle, but still strive to recover what they have lost. One of these occurrences is the passage by the legislature of Massachusetts, in spite of the governor's spirited resistance, of a law striking a vicious blow at the integrity of the merit system in the public service in that state, and at the same time to the honor and the true interests of the war veterans. And the other is the utterly lawless conduct of the mayor of Indianapolis, who has simply declared himself not bound by the provisions of the city charter prescribing the introduction of the merit system in the municipal service. Such things admonish us that militant watchfulness must still be the order of the day in the reform camp. I am glad to say that in Massachusetts the constitutionality of the obnoxious law is ably contested in the courts; and we all know that the champions of civil-service reform in Indiana are of too militant a spirit to let the refractory mayor sleep on his spoils laurels in comfort.

On the other hand, in the state of New York, and in its great cities, the reform system has made most cheering progress. The embodiment in the state constitution of the civil-service reform clause, and its faithful observance by the governor, the mayors of the great municipalities, and the respective civil-service boards, have caused a very large extension of civil-service rules and a vigorous enforcement of them. One of the most important features of that progress consists in the adoption and the successful operation in the large cities of the labor-registration system, which rescues the laboring men doing public work from the tyrannical control and the ra-pace of political bosses and machines. And now in Maryland, too, the day of reform has dawned with unexpected brilliancy, and I trust that old state will step into the front rank of its champions. There are several others that promise to follow her.

THE APPOINTMENT AND TENURE OF POSTMASTERS.

Richard H. Dana.

It is a curious fact about our so-called "American" spoils system in politics that we spoil not a distant enemy, nor even some other race living in our midst as the Turks do the Armenians, but we despoil ourselves in making spoils of our own institutions. Nowhere is this better illustrated than in the postal service of the United States.

Our post-office department is the largest department in the country and on its efficient management depends much of our material and intellectual progress as well as our daily convenience, and yet we have been letting our representatives strengthen their political fences by making frequent changes and unfit appointments, in a way to ruin any business exposed to open competition. As a result we have the worst postal service of any civilized country in the world. In Tokio, Japan, they have more frequent deliveries than in New York city and there are improvements adopted in England, France, Germany and Italy twenty and thirty years ago which we have not yet adopted at all or only partially and imperfectly. For example, in the large cities of those countries there are numerous branch offices, so numerous as to be for all practical purposes as accessible as letter boxes with us, where stamps or money orders can be bought, where parcels can be weighed and where matter can be mailed. When a note is dropped into a letter box here it lies untouched for one, two or three hours until the collector takes it out and it is not assorted until the collector deposits it at the post-office. When, however, it is mailed in one of these branch offices it is immediately canceled and assorted so that the time wasted in the letter box is utilized and the note is ready for direct delivery at the first call of the carrier.

This expedites the local city delivery so that a note mailed at a branch office is delivered almost as quickly as if sent by a private special messenger, and this again so stimulates the local use of the mails that the extra expense is reported to be more than made up by the increased sale of postage stamps.

For some twenty years or more we did nothing towards adopting this plan and not only was all the time lost while the mail was waiting in the letter boxes but a letter posted within a half mile of its destination often had to be carried two, three or even four miles to the central office to be assorted and then to travel all the way back, going over, perhaps, eight miles to accomplish half a mile. We have very tardily adopted in some of our largest cities a few branch offices, but so few and far between that they do not half serve their purpose.

This is only one of numerous instances that could be cited to illustrate how much our postal system has been spoiled. Not only in detail has it been thus spoiled, but so much have the postmasters-general and their assistants been occupied with the distribution of patronage that they have not had the time to attend to the organization of the department. For example, a business man appointed postmaster-general writes to some of the model postmasters to consult him on the business of the service. On account of the pressure of congressmen he is unable to fix a date before the June after his inauguration in March, but even then, these model postmasters get no further than his ante-room, where they vainly wait many valuable hours while applicants under the wing of members of congress pass in before them. At last, after about a week of waiting, one gets into the inner room and finds the postmaster-general engaged in a discussion with a negro postmaster of a small town in the south, over the question whether the appointment should not be revoked, not on the ground of unfitness, but because of a rumor that this negro had once attended a democratic caucus. After some quarter of an hour consumed over this question, so vastly important to the postal service, the postmaster-general has a moment or two to shake hands and explain that the business consultation must be postponed till the next August, as he is overwhelmed with the pressure for places. This story I tell not as illustrating the work of any one man, but of the heretofore usual duties of this cabinet position in general.

As a result the organization of the department is on the same basis that it was under Franklin, when there 75 post-offices in the country. When any ordinary business grows large it is subdivided. The express companies, for example, are divided into districts, with a superintendent for each. So with the great railroads, and with the post-offices in Great Britain; so with an army. But in the United States postal service, there is nothing between the bureau at Washington and the postmasters. It is like an army with no majors, no colonels, no brigadier-generals, in fact, with no officers between the general-in-chief with his staff, and the captains of the companies.

All the questions relating to the wants of the various postmasters have practically to be passed on by two clerks at Washington who are too far off to be able to judge of the circumstances. Apparently they have to decide by lot in most cases, granting one fourth or one-eighth of the requests, as it may be, in proportion to the appropriation. For example, from the Boston post-office is sent a request for a New England Directory, price, $7.50. The request is denied. As a consequence a clerk at a salary of $750 a year has to be detailed to go out and look over the directories belonging to some business men as a favor, and bring back the desired addresses, to the great loss of money to the office and delay to the re-addressed letters.

Again, here are two towns, one twenty-five and the other twenty-nine miles from Boston, and about four miles apart, with railroad connection between them. The letters from one to the other are sent all the way to Boston, there to be assorted and sent back to the other town, taking on an average about a day and a half. There is much correspondence between the two places. Who is to make the short cut? The only persons officially charged with changing the routes are in Washington. They have no idea of the merits of the case. The postmasters of these two towns may write to Washington, but it is supererogation on their part if they do, and they are usually told in reply to attend to their own business. The only way to have the change made is for the prominent men of both towns to bring pressure to bear on the department and to make the life of their congressman miserable till, after perhaps two years of agitation, at a great personal sacrifice, the change is at last made.

Indeed it is one of the greatest tributes possible to the versatility and natural business talent of the American people that, amid all these frequent political changes of postmasters and this utter want of organization, the business of the department is carried on at all.

That the people of the United States do not rise and demand a better service is because they have not seen any better and do not know of the possibilities of a really good post-office department. It is only a small portion of the small minority who travel abroad that have intelligently observed and compared our postal system and that of other civilized countries.

[Mr. Dana then discusses the necessity of taking the postmasters out of politics, reaching the conclusion that the recent order of the President, supplemented by the Lodge bill, will accomplish the object.]

SUPERANNUATION IN THE CIVIL SERVICE.

William Dudley Foulke.

John Wanamaker, late postmaster-general, of happy memory, once caused a circular letter to be written to a number of civil service reformers throughout the country, asking why both parties should not discard their insincere professions for the law and have the patriotism to go back to the spoils system.

The devil himself can sometimes put an apposite question and this letter inquired what answer reformers made to the objections that a civil pension list was the logical result of their system, and that the efficiency of the departments would be seriously interfered with in ten or fifteen years by the old age of clerks who could not be removed. It was easy to answer that these clerks ought to be dismissed when they ceased to be efficient. It was easy to say that when they accepted employment they knew that no pension awaited them and that it was their duty to save in the days of their prosperity enough to support them in the infirmities of age. It is still true that permanency in office-holding, which the merit system encourages, makes even discretionary removals more difficult, and as men everywhere outlive their usefulness, this so-called tenure during good behavior does sometimes fasten "barnacles" upon the service. I use the epithet of another high authority in the camp of our enemies, the late Mr. Porter, who conducted with such impartial and disinterested fidelity the taking of the last census.

The competitive plan has indeed removed one great temptation. Men are not dismissed for the mere purpose of appointing to the vacant place a personal or partisan follower. But there are other temptations to retain the inefficient and some of these temptation spring from the best feelings of our nature. Men in prosperity do not always save up their earnings for the hour of need and the man who has served faithfully for twenty years may find himself when no longer able to perform his duties in a position where dismissal would make him an outcast and a pauper. We may say that the chief of the department or bureau ought not to consider this; that his duty is wholly to the state; that he must keep the best men only; and that if a clerk through the weight of years or infirmities becomes inefficient, he must be discharged. We may preach this sort of morality till doomsday, but no man with a heart will do it under the present system. The government service will continue to be a refuge for the helpless where these have not forfeited their rights by any willful act of their own. Many of those who are aged and incompetent, but who can point to a record of past usefulness, will stay in place and besides drawing pay for work which is not performed, they will injure the service in other ways. It was the old practitioner who most strenuously resisted the code. It is the old physician who is most reluctant to adopt the new methods recently revealed by science for the cure of disease and it is the old official who is often the greatest obstacle to renovation and reform in the public service. This proposition is too plain for argument. Furthermore, it is true that many a man, by mere length of service, comes to believe that he has an indefeasible right to his office. He becomes stubborn and opinionated. He is harder to manage than a new man. Even the judges of our federal courts sometimes become arbitrary and disagreeable largely on account of the life tenure upon which they hold their places. A certain insecurity in office is a great stimulus to urbanity. And politeness is an important virtue in public servants, especially in those with whom the people are brought into daily contact. [Mr. Foulke then discusses the feasibility of periodical examinations to be followed by promotions or reductions in accordance with the results.]

The extract from Mr. Jonathan A. Lane's paper will appear next month.

THE REIGN AND OVERTHROW OF AN OFFICE-HOLDING OLIGARCHY.

—
Charles J. Bonaparte.

The Pendleton bill was reported to the senate on December 12, 1881, just fourteen years ago. In the debate which followed, Senator Brown, of Georgia, expressed grave apprehensions regarding the effects of its enactment on our free institutions. His words were:

"I say it is not compatible with our very form of government. It is one step in the direction of the establishment of an aristocracy in this country, the establishment of another privileged class. * * * It builds up a powerful class supported out of the treasury of the United States, out of the taxes of the people, and places in their hands the power, if they choose to exercise it—and there is a great deal of human nature in man, so that they probably would exercise it—the power to do much to control the future rulers and destinies of the government.

"I am not very fresh from my reading of Roman history; but as I recollect it, there was a period in the history of that government when it became necessary to establish the prætorian guard to protect the ruler against the populace. It would naturally enough have been claimed that that guard would take no part in the politics of Rome, and yet in the workings of time that prætorian guard became the master of Rome, and assumed control of the government. As they protected the sovereign, they dictated who should be the sovereign, and for a large enough amount of money they would displace one sovereign to make room for another. How do we know that we may not build up a similar class here, when we build up a life-time aristocracy in office, or when we establish a life-time tenure of office? It is contrary to the very genius and spirit of our government."

The fears thus expressed by this eminent statesman had haunted many others of our public men from the time when legislation looking towards civil service reform was first suggested by Mr. Jenckes, the "old war horse," and "old wheel horses" who flourished in his day snorted suspicious defiance at a measure destined, in the language of one of the best known at that time of their number, "to create a pampered aristocracy." It is not my purpose to discuss how far these patriotic forebodings have been justified by the event; the dangers to our liberty lurking in the insidious proposals of Jenckes and Pendleton, have had every opportunity to become visible since the senator from Georgia depicted them in prophecy. In one of the Ingoldsby legends, the hero remarks: "I did not see my little friend, because he was not there." Such blindness as we may exhibit to these perils admits, perhaps, of the same explanation. I have lived, however, for some twenty or twenty-five years under a government marked by not a few of the characteristics which these sages saw in vision defacing that of our nation. In Baltimore we have had a powerful class supported out of the taxes of the people holding "in their hands the power, if they choose to exercise it" (and they most undeniably did so choose) "to do much to control the future rulers and destinies" of the city and state. We have had an organization by no means unlike a "prætorian guard" which "protected the sovereign," at least the sovereign de facto, "from the populace" when this "populace" endangered his safety or continued rule at the polls, and it "protected" him, on the whole, very effectually. Moreover, this "guard," had occasion offered, would have readily "dictated who should be the sovereign," and, "for a large enough sum of money, displaced one sovereign for another;" indeed, it actually did these things whenever, and in so far as it had the opportunity.

In Baltimore that "first step towards the establishment of a privileged class," which Senator Brown saw in the Pendleton bill, and a good many succeeding steps as well, had been taken a number of years before that bill was heard of, or its author heard of as a civil service reformer; it is, perhaps, doubtful whether the late rulers of my native city could appropriately be called "pampered," for the adjective at least suggests indolence, and to charge them with this fault would be certainly unjust; nevertheless, they no less certainly constituted a "privileged class" in every sense of the term—a class of men in many respects legibus soluti, privileged to do wrong (or what would be wrong for others) with impunity and even with profit, superior themselves to the laws as well as able to make the laws for those of inferior station. In my trespass on your attention this afternoon I shall depict a few features of their rule, and describe briefly some of the causes and incidents of their downfall. * * * *

Now the government which has lately fallen in Baltimore was distinctly monarchical, at least in its tendencies. Under it power was not always, indeed it was never, quite concentrated in the hands of one man, but our rulers were never truly equal inter sese; their mutual relations rather resembled those of the several Augusti and Cæsars of the later Roman empire—they always tended towards, and within the past eight years had well-nigh definitely settled into, the dominion of a single ruler surrounded by a group of more or less powerful, sometimes more or less mutinous, but always distinctly subordinate, lieutenants. There were, however, already indications that in this case, as in those of all other privileged classes known to history, there would have been in time developed a theory of hereditary right to public office, as the nobility of the Roman republic was gradually formed of descendants of office-holders, claiming by custom a monopoly of all posts of trust and honor. Thus, in the seventeenth ward of the city, there bore sway a magnate whose merits as a "prætorian" had been proven by an almost incredible number of assaults, arrests and indictments for crimes of violence, whilst his influence was no less clearly illustrated by his prompt acquittals and the steadiness with which, throughout his eventful career, he retained the apparently modest, but really important, position of superintendent of street-cleaning for his district. However useful as a drill master for recruits, advancing years and frequent wounds had, in a measure, impaired his personal prowess, but during the past year public attention has been called to three worthy sons, displaying at once their father's decided inclination toward public employment and his characteristic methods of deserving this. They "did good work" at the last election; unfortunately their services can hardly receive the recognition they expected, although it is not impossible that another may await them. * * * *

To understand the system of government which has existed for nearly a generation in Baltimore, we may glance at three departments only of the city's public service, those headed in the book respectively, "City Commissioner's Office," "General Superintendent of Lamps," and "Superintendent of Streets and District Superintendents." These were composed as follows:

CITY COMMISSIONER'S OFFICE.

One city commissioner.....	$4,000
Three assistant city commissioners.....	2,000
One bridge engineer.....	2,400
One chief clerk.....	1,500
One assistant clerk.....	1,200
Five engineers, each.....	1,500
One clerk.....	1,200
Five engineers.....	1,200
Eighteen foremen of gangs.....	1,200
One sand inspector.....	1,080
Six draughtsmen, each.....	900
One clerk.....	1,100
Eight rodsmen, each.....	900
Three rodsmen, each.....	700
One keeper Belair lot.....	800
Twelve watchmen, each.....	720
Two superintendents of annex, each.....	1,000
One superintendent of Light Street Bridge.....	1,200
Six assistants at Light Street Bridge, each.....	500
Fourteen superintendents of cobblestone gangs.....	600
One paymaster.....	1,400
One assistant paymaster.....	900
Fifteen tally clerks, each.....	750
Twelve carpenters, each.....	900
Eighteen assistant foremen of gangs, each.....	600
Two thousand laborers, and other minor positions, when working full force, per week.....	10

GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT OF LAMPS.

One general superintendent.....	$2,000
One clerk.....	1,000
Two inspectors of electric lights, each.....	900
Two superintendents of repairs, each.....	900
Five general utility men, each.....	520
Five district superintendents for city, each.....	600
Two district superintendents for annex, each.....	936
Twenty-one lamplighters, western district, each.....	416
Twenty-two lamplighters, northwestern district, each.....	416
Twenty-two lamplighters, southern district, each.....	416
Twenty-two lamplighters, northeastern district, each.....	416
Twenty-four lamplighters, eastern district, each.....	416
Thirty-four lamplighters, annex, each.....	416

SUPERINTENDENT OF STREETS AND DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENTS.

One general superintendent.....	$2,000
One clerk.....	1,000
Seven district superintendents, each.....	1,000
Four tally clerks at dumps, each.....	600
One foreman of street cleaning wagons, each.....	700
Five drivers of street cleaning wagons, each.....	550
Twenty-seven drivers of street and garbage carts, first district, each.....	935
Thirty-seven drivers of street and garbage carts, second district, each.....	935
Twenty-seven drivers of street and garbage carts, third district, each.....	935
Thirty-seven drivers of street and garbage carts, fourth district, each.....	935
Thirty-six drivers of street and garbage carts, fifth district, each.....	935
Thirty-eight drivers of street and garbage carts, sixth district, each.....	935
Nineteen drivers of street and garbage carts, seventh district, each.....	935

In these three departments alone there were employed, when that of the city commissioner was "working full force," and it is needless to say that such was always the case when elections were held, and might be, if needful, at time of primaries, 2,540 men; 95 per cent. of these discharged functions for which any ordinary laborer was qualified; all, except perhaps a dozen of those highest in rank, received a compensation greatly in excess of that paid for similar services by private employers; and all of them, without exception, were selected for reasons of political expedience or personal favoritism. * * *

I have said thus much of the special election of last March because, although otherwise of comparatively little importance, it serves to illustrate with special clearness one of the principal causes of the ring's long lease of power in Maryland; this is simply that, through its absolute control of the state and municipal patronage, it was able to maintain in Baltimore, at the people's cost, a small standing army of experts in election frauds and professional ruffians, unreservedly subject to its orders, and prepared to furnish any reasonable majority which could be required for its safety under normal conditions; whilst it could likewise assure them almost certain immunity from punishment for their crimes committed in its interest. But this alone would not have availed it much, even if we suppose the number of fraudulent votes cast at the special election to have been (as it very possibly may have been) twice as great as the reform league's committee reported, still, at least four-fifths of those received by the ring's candidate must have been legal votes, and with all its facilities for successful fraud, its reign would have been short-lived, but for its unqualified and, of late years, undisputed dominion within the democratic party. Indeed, it fell at last, not because it either couldn't or wouldn't cheat, but because, although it would, it couldn't cheat enough to overcome the widespread revolt within that party against its dominion. A few words then as to the instrumentalities which rendered that domination permanent and irresistible.

The Venetian oligarchy maintained its rule through a council of ten, that of Baltimore may have been said to reign through one of nine, bearing the modest and outwardly innocent title of city members of the democratic state central committee. There was one marked difference, however, between the bodies: in Venice the doge was a figurehead and not a member of the council; in Baltimore his analogue, the reigning boss, was a member of the council, and very decidedly not a figurehead.

THE STATE OF CIVIL SERVICE REFORM IN THE SOUTH.

Herman Justi.

When the letter of your worthy and zealous secretary was received, asking me to give "the status of civil service reform sentiment in the south," my first impulse was to decline the task, for the field was not only vast, but seemed uninviting. When one of our local wags, some time ago, was asked for his opinion of the financial condition of the people of a certain section of the south, he replied: "One-half of the people are busted and the other half are insolvent." I am an ardent believer in the merit system, and yet I, like many others, often grow impatient at the apathy and indifference of our people regarding this vital issue, and I was almost tempted, in a fit of momentary despondency, to answer Mr. McAneny's courteous invitation, after the laconic style of my witty friend, with the simple statement that one half of our people are opposed to civil service reform and the other half are not for it. But this would be, I am happy to say on reflection, far from the truth. And yet, though the gains to the cause of civil service reform can not be easily specified, I feel certain that, whatever the casual observer may say to the contrary—whatever we may think in times of despondency—public opinion in the south is opposed to the spoils system. Strict party men and party leaders will stoutly deny this, but it is nevertheless true; and since political parties are subject to that superior power, the will of the people, the politicians must ultimately yield. We are, as yet, badly organized, our demands are not clearly stated and we have taken hold of the issue in a way so half-hearted, that the friends of the "spoils system" continue very bold, even presumptuous. As was so well said by the lamented George William Curtis, "party machines no more favor civil service reform than kings favor the restriction of the royal prerogative." Party leaders will not admit the growth of the civil service reform sentiment, because they try not to see it. They wish to ignore its growing power, because to admit it is to give it a tremendous sweep; but we must keep up the fight at every point and make everybody see that ultimate triumph is sure. * * *

The impression widely prevalent in the south that civil service reform is designed to favor the highly educated and the wealthy is erroneous, and the encouragement to this belief comes entirely from spoilsmen. It is also not true that under its operations the south fares unequally with other sections. Through the operation of the reform law employment in the civil service was thrown open to the people of the south for the first time since the breaking out of the war of the rebellion. Poor men and men of limited education, but ambitious and resolved to learn, have risen to distinction in our civil service. It is well known that during Harrison's administration Commissioner Roosevelt made it a special object to encourage young southerners to go into the examinations and to see, when appointments were made, the full quota of each southern state was allowed. It became something of a novelty for southern congressmen to meet young constituents on the streets of Washington and to learn that they were there under a republican administration. Nothing of this sort had been known for a generation. Thirteen southern states, including Maryland and Kentucky, are under the operation of the reform law, entitled to thirty per cent. of the offices in the civil service. Of the eleven civil service commissioners appointed up to January 1, 1895, four were southern men, viz., William L. Trenholm, and Hugh S. Thompson, of South Carolina; George D. Johnson, of Louisiana, and John R. Proctor, of Kentucky. What more had we a right to ask? What fairer treatment could we expect? It should also be borne in mind that an appointment now in the civil service means an opportunity for an official career. This is impossible under the spoils system. As a plain business proposition, for government is only another name for business, what could be better for both the citizen than the honest, capable office-holder?

The southern press is fast falling into line, and it is now definitely known that at least twenty-five daily papers, over one hundred weekly papers, and eight monthly publications, are entirely friendly to the merit system, and are advocating its cause with a zeal and intelligence. In fact few southern newspapers now openly and enthusiastically support the "spoils system," a sure indication of the tendency of public opinion on that subject, and as the advocates of the merit system, steadily increasing in numbers, are each year becoming more active and more aggressive, they must ultimately be the balance of power in determining the fate of candidates and of parties.

As a southern man, both by the accident of birth and as the result of my deliberate choice, proud of the past of my beloved southland and confident of her future glory, I declare it to be my honest conviction, that the southern people are tired of the iniquities of a vicious public policy, which has always been condemned by her wisest statesmen, who have ever taught that the greed of the spoilsman, the corrupter of elections, is the greatest danger threatening the perpetuity of our government. Their words of warning were once heeded, and they are now again being driven home with telling force to the southern heart and mind, and he who seeks shall find unmistakable evidences of an awakening patriotism, of a higher sense of public duty and of a healthier political life and spirit abroad in the land.

CIVIL SERVICE REFORM IN ITS BEARINGS UPON THE INTERESTS OF WORKINGMEN.

Herbert Welsh.

When Mazzini, the great Italian patriot, addressed the workingmen of his country in 1844 he chose as the title of his essay "The Duties of Man," in sharp antithesis to the great cry which heralded the French revolution—"The Rights of Man." No reformer certainly was more sensitive to the rights of man, in the recognition of which liberty was cradled, but with true religious intuition he perceived that rights were an empty possession even to the freest of us, unless the heart that rejoiced in them was alive to the obligations they conferred; unless the mind which discerned and demanded them, humbly recognized them as the mother of duties. Mazzini pointed out to his fellow-countrymen now barren to the world had been possession of rights gained by the revolution, where the advance was followed by no recognition of duties to one's self and one's fellows. The recognition of individual rights must be followed by a universal obligation. He appealed to his hearers with a breadth and simplicity which must have at once erased the line which separates the workingman from man, and reached the hearts of his hearers, for the heart leaps artificial boundaries. "I intend to speak to you according to the dictates of my heart," he said, "of the holiest things we know—of God, of humanity, of the fatherland, and the family." And so in speaking to-day out through this audience to those workingmen whom I may be able to reach of the appeal which civil service reform should make to them, I do it with these four great human relationships which Mazzini enumerates, firm in my mind—God, humanity, the fatherland and family—and not so much to workingmen as men of a separate and distinct class do I speak as to them as members of the great human family. But this nobler point of view will not exclude the consideration of those especial points in which civil service reform is of peculiar benefit to those whom we call wage-earners.

The true American workingman, and the true American of whatever trade or work in life he be, are one in this: that both desire the full benefits of American institutions; both desire to see the government of these United States stand for liberty, for equal laws, under which men may not be tempted to change their conception of God, as a just and loving father, of humanity as the great family of mankind throughout whose extent some day may be realized the idea of universal brotherhood; and under which the family may be made a holy and true relationship, the fountain of domestic virtue, the support of the state, which, I for one, believe that it was ordained to be. We are one—workingman and other man—in desiring that America shall be a nation in which these ideas which appeal to all hearts shall be nurtured and have sway. I take it that the true American workingman will be quite content if the government under which we live be honest and true; if it will truly seek those great principles of liberty and justice to rich and poor alike, to obtain which its great founders gave their life, and to preserve its entirety and integrity, to prevent a rupture that would have been fatal to the realization of its ideals, its saviors or thirty years back shed their patriotic blood.

If I mistake not, at the bottom of industrial discontent, whose mutterings and moanings create at times vague uneasiness and concern in the business of the country, which flashes out into revolt, showing fierce tooth and claw, as at Homestead or in Chicago, is the feeling, reasonable or unreasonable, that there exists to-day some dangerous dislocation between a real Christianity and American political ideals on the one hand, and practical, existing American Christianity and existing American politics on the other. A more or less vague idea exists in the minds of American workingmen that capital and wealth have influence with the political machinery of the country, with legislatures and executives, that they do not possess; that monopolies and great corporations can, by corrupt and dishonest methods, so control the conditions of wealth-getting that enormous and unjust profits accrue to them out of all proportion to their merits, with total disregard to the rights of those who are dependent upon their pleasure for daily bread. The workingman feels that more and more is the possibility increasing for capital to organize itself into trusts and monopolies by which the necessities and the luxuries of life may be put at a price which will bring enormous wealth to the beneficiaries of the monopoly, and a correspondingly heavy burden upon the people. Believing this, is it to be wondered at that the American workingmen organize in self-defense; that he forms trades-unions and labor organizations of various kinds for operations offensive and defensive, against those whom he believes to be hostile or indifferent to his liberties, his rights, his opportunities? Or, is it marvelous that the method by which he defends himself should often lack in wisdom, that it should be sometimes violent or even criminal, therein being akin to the methods which have been more than once adopted by his opponents? Truly the workingman would be much less than human if he never shared in human folly. * * *

But civil service reform has another application which is only now beginning to be seriously considered. It is to the administration of our great American cities in which for various causes it is not necessary now to discuss, vast populations are centering; where wealth, intelligence, enterprise, commerce and manufactures, the homes of the rich and the poor are focused. Here every question affecting human life and happiness—questions of sanitation, of sewerage, of water supply, of transportation, of public parks and libraries, of taxation, of the care of the poor—assume accentuated importance. To deal intelligently, honestly and economically with these questions requires intelligence, honesty and experience on the part of the public men, the mayors and the heads of departments to whom they are committed. Every citizen's interest, his health and happiness and of those near and dear to him are bound up in the right handling of those matters, but above all others will the workingman, the wage-earner, the man of slender means, of hand-to-mouth existence, to be sensitive to the excellence or folly of the government of the great city in which he lives. A few cents difference in his car fare may be sufficient to unbalance his small account at the end of the year. A very small rise in the rate of taxation, due to municipal extravagance or dishonesty, will be keenly felt by him, while public advantages such as free libraries, public parks, and the like, to the poor man mean much; while the man of ample means is virtually independent of them.

The sanitary conditions of the city, of which the rich man is measurably independent, by his ability to go elsewhere during the summer, or to obtain at all times a protection which is impossible to the poor man, to the latter are matters of vital import. But how is the city to be well governed if the boss and the machine control it, whose interests are selfish interests, who, by an invariable law of their being, will be as selfish and dishonest in their government of the city as the relative indifference and partisanship of its citizens will permit. How can the city be well governed, I ask intelligent workingmen, whose interest in this question are the interest of us all, only double, trebly accentuated, if the 10,000 or 15,000 or 20,000 offices of the city are to be filled by boss and machine, not on proved merit, and held not for faithful performances of duty, but as partisan rewards of the unworthy, and so as to compel partisan service. How, I ask sensible working men, can any intelligent and satisfactory city government be conducted on these corrupt lines? And for the folly of all this, for the pickings and stealings, the losses and blunders, for the costly, unfulfilled contracts, the man who pays most is the workingman. These were the principles which gave us the Tweed ring, in New York, with its $15,000,000 to $17,000,000 direct theft, its debauched judiciary, its carnival of spoils. It was the spoils system where there should have been civil service reform, which made Tweed and his fellow conspirators possible. This truth he himself confessed before he died in prison, that unless some way were found to remove the control of the patronage of a great city from the grasp of politicians there would be recurring scandals, such as his.

Civil service reform is the narrow pass where the defenders of good government may mass their feeble strength so that it shall count in value out of all proportion to their numbers. We must make this reform in our struggle for good city government the Thermopylae of the present crisis.

Can not the workingmen of America see how for every good and honorable purpose which they have in view, their influence should be concentrated to establish this reform in all its practical details in the administrations of our great cities, in whose slums, in whose saloons, in whose brothels, in all those foes to family life and welfare, the roots of corrupt politics find their nourishment? Let them insist upon the passage of a good civil service law in every state legislature, if one does not already exist. Let them apply it to every city of the state, that every smallest office may be removed from the curse of boss patronage, and so that it shall be filled by suitable test. See that a state civil service commission exists in every state to superintend the practical application of the law; a commission with such men upon it as Theodore Roosevelt, and Col. Proctor, and Major Harlow have proved themselves to be on the federal commission; honest, experienced, courageous men, who will see that under that law the humblest, least protected applicant gets his rights and a fair chance to show what is in him. See that every city of your state has the same great American principle of justice, and fair-play, as opposed to privilege applied to its labor service, just as to-day is in successful operation in the city of Boston, in Cambridge, and in New Bedford. The same labor system has won the approval of naval officers of high rank in the federal service.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

VOL. II, No. 35.

INDIANAPOLIS, JANUARY, 1896.

TERMS: { One dollar per annum.
10 cents per copy.

Published monthly. Publication office, No. 23 N. Meridian St., Indianapolis, Ind. Address,

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

THE President's order relating to fourth-class post-offices is beginning to be worked out. Twenty offices near Baltimore have been abolished, and in their stead stations of the Baltimore office have been established, and the whole territory now becomes a part of the latter office. The wholesome and salutary effect of this local application of this great reform scheme is apparent at a glance. Twenty petty postmasters cease to be watch-dogs of congressmen; they cease to be pestiferous centers of local politics; they spend their days in sober and industrious work under strict supervision without any regard to politics; twenty vexatious lines of correspondence with the department at Washington are broken off, and the advantages of free delivery and infinitely improved service are extended to the people. There is around Indianapolis a ring of similar localities with ludicrously inefficient service, which it is to be hoped will not long escape the attention of the postmaster-general.

THE sounds from Maryland are strangely different from those which came the many years when Gorman held the state and every office and public place in it in the hollow of his hand. The new governor, Lloyd Lowndes, says there shall be no clean sweep. Further, "We should heed the demand for civil service reform, and extend wherever practical in this state and in its principal cities the merit-system of appointments to office." He further says, with reference to the charge that he is backing up a particular man for senator, "I would not use the patronage of this office to advance my own personal ambition or those of any other man in the state."

THE Chicago Tribune says that the great reform of 1895, for that city, was the civil service act. It then adds: "Whenever a vacancy occurs now it is filled by a man appointed on his merits. The occupation of the spoils huckster is gone. There is not a place on the pay-rolls which he can dispose of. As compared with this time last year, the condition of the city is enviable."

The full benefits of the law will not appear at once, nor for a year or two. The attempts to break it down in the courts and the attempts of officers in charge of it, to cheat and trick it, have all to be fought down. This will have to be done, and confidence in absolute fair-play in competition for places, will have to be established among all parties, colors and sects, before the full advantages of the system will come into play. But the Tribune's remark shows the bent of public opinion. It is only in Indianapolis that city officials are petty and impudent enough to attempt to turn back the wheels of progress by repealing competitive rules and going back to Tammany methods.

THE combination between Platt and the venerable Governor Morton is evidently part of a plan of Platt, Quay and Clarkson to control the next presidential nomination of their party. To be of any use, Platt must own the delegates from New York, and Governor Morton does not see what the whole country sees and laughs at, that Platt is cajoling him into throwing down the bars to spoil, by an impossible promise of the nomination. There is not the slightest danger of Morton, but if the republican party will rise to the occasion and defeat Quay and Platt and Clarkson, so that they are left high and dry, and so that they have no weight whatever in the choice of a candidate, it will accomplish a great work.

GOVERNOR MORTON has forced Mr. McKinstry out of his place of state civil service commissioner of New York and has nominated for the vacancy a man named George P. Lord. McKinstry was entirely competent and efficient and his influence was against political interference with the public service. The new man, Lord, is a chronic office seeker, a machine politician, and years ago voted for some of Tweed's bills. He is simply a Platt man educated and fitted to be an efficient Platt tool. There will now be upon the commission two Platt men and Col. Burt. The indications all point to a deal between Governor Morton and Platt by which Platt is to obtain control of the commission. This is all the more important because the state this year is to spend four millions upon the canals. The long battles which have been carried on throughout the country with tricky officers who had charge of the federal civil service law have shown too well how such a law may be brought to nothing by such officers. That Governor Morton should make this and other similar appointments recently made tends further to show what the CHRONICLE has always believed of him, that he is a highly respectable rich man who makes now and then a show of reform tendencies but whom the bosses like to have in office because they know that under him they can come to their own. One who goes among machine politicians in his state will find them openly avowing their esteem for him because he is a "sinews-of-war-man." Happily the matter is not to go in silence. The New York Tribune and other papers, the city club, and various reform organizations are making it lively for the governor.

THE reformers within the party who are always crying that the remedy for slum politics is for good citizens to go to the primaries, have just had another practical lesson in the city of New York. There never was a harder struggle made by the better element in any community to defeat its bad neighbors than was made in New York to defeat the expressman Tom Platt and his followers, and there never was a more signal failure. To vote in the primaries it is necessary to be enrolled beforehand, and Platt's men ran the enrollment up to 70,000, in the meantime keeping the places of enrollment in the dark as long as possible. That the enrollment was fraudulent, and contained a large contingent of Tammany men there seems no reason to doubt. Not one-third of the number enrolled appeared at the primaries. How Platt's men managed the primaries is illustrated in the district of which ex-Postmaster Van Cott is Platt's sub-boss. In that district Alfred R. Conkling was an anti-Platt candidate, and he tells the following interesting story:

"I am ashamed of the political pirates who compose the machine of the republican party in this city. I have long fought Tammany methods, and now I must fight for honest elections within the republican party. I do not intend to leave the party in order to purify it, but will keep up a fight on the inside. It is necessary to strike at the root of the evil, the district leaders. I live in the district presided over by Cornelius Van Cott, and this is how he managed the primaries. In my election district voters were notified at the enrollment that they must come to No. 36 Clinton Place to vote at the primary. The polling place was changed, and I learned of the change at five o'clock yesterday afternoon, I left the dinner-table, sent messengers to my friends to inform them of the change, and managed to get enough together to elect me by one vote. Men who were not legally enrolled in my district were afraid to vote last night. I had fourteen names marked for challenge, and not one of them appeared. If they had voted, the election district would have three delegates instead of two. I had policemen in three election districts, ready to make arrests. If Mr. Van Cott is the leader next year, I shall see that policemen are placed in every election district. At the last election the fifth assembly district gave the republican state ticket a majority of eighteen. I hope that those eighteen will not leave the party in disgust with the machine, and turn the district over to the democrats."

The comment of the New York Tribune also adds piquancy to the situation:

"The proceedings were part and parcel of the fraudulent and bogus enrollment. In many of the 1,393 election districts, where no headquarters were opened and no voting was done, delegates sworn to perpetuate the Platt-Lauterbach regime will be returned all the same, and will take part in the assembly district convention."

Wicked Gibbs, another of Platt's bosses, touches off the situation as a "practical" politician:

"Both sides are to blame in this matter. The Brookfielders as well as our people swelled the rolls beyond reasonable proportions, and I am surprised that practical politicians should be guilty of such amateurish tricks. I am disgusted with them. As long as a leader controls a district, what is the difference whether he does it with 30 or 300 delegates? And, besides, large bodies of delegates are unwieldy and liable to cause trouble."

The result of all this is that Platt is more of a boss than ever, and it seems that he will go to the republican national convention next year able to "throw" the vote of the entire state of New York in such a manner as will best benefit not the republican party but Platt the expressman.

THE career of Platt in New York continues to be an interesting study. We have noted the struggle which good citizens of his party made in the recent primaries in that city, and how Platt gained a complete victory. The good citizens were not satisfied and began an investigation to find out how it was done, which has resulted in the arrest of seven Platt inspectors. At a meeting of the republican county committee of the county of New York, held January 16, a committee attempted to read a report bearing upon the subject, but were prevented by Plattism. For the reason that the report is signed by a large number of men of national reputation, we give it in full. It should make a profound impression everywhere, because of its proof that even under our boasted free government, one man may become, except in the matter of life and death, a dictator:

To the Republican County Committee and the Republican Party in the City of New York:

The undersigned committee of the republicans have been engaged for some time in an investigation of the alleged frauds in the republican enrollment in this city and in the recent primaries. After due consideration, and mindful of the gravity of the situation in view of the approaching national election, we deemed it essential to the welfare of the party that a thorough and impartial investigation should be made by a committee consisting of Messrs. John Sabine Smith, Paul D. Cravath, Adelbert H. Steele, Benjamin Oppenheimer, and John S. Wise, who immediately undertook the task assigned to them. The report, transmitting the statement of C. N. Jones, recently associate actuary of the New York Life Insurance Company, whom they selected to conduct the investigation, is appended. We wish to emphasize our belief in the entire impartiality and sincerity of this investigation.

Notwithstanding the charges which have been frequently made in the public press, we had no adequate conception of the magnitude and enormity of the frauds and irregularities which have been perpetrated in connection with the republican enrollment and the recent primaries, until the investigation of the enrollment in several of the assembly districts had been made and the results tabulated.

In view of these results, there can be no escape from the conclusion that the present enrollment is rotten to a degree never before paralleled in the history of the party, and that the primaries and conventions in many assembly districts based upon it, by which delegates were elected to the county committee for 1896, are unworthy of serious consideration.

An organization based upon such wholesale frauds can not command the confidence of the republican party, nor of the public. We, therefore, urge that the organization of the county committee for 1896 be not effected until reasonable time has been given to complete the investigation now in progress and to secure adequate relief.

Primaries are the fountain-head of all representative government, and the primaries necessarily spring from the enrollment. If the latter is fraudulent, the entire party structure is tainted, and unworthy of confidence and respect. This is a subject in which every republican, whether his name be upon the rolls or not, is interested, for all look to the organization of the party to secure honest conventions and truly representative nominations.

For the foregoing reasons, and in the interest of the harmony and efficiency of the republican party, we earnestly request that no permanent organization of the county committee be effected until the completion of this investigation.

Joseph H. Choate,	Cornelius N. Bliss,
Samuel Thomas,	William Brookfield,
Anson G. McCook,	Benjamin Oppenheimer,
Wager Swayne,	Elihu Root,
R. G. Alexander,	Horace Porter,
John C. O'Connor,	Isaac V. Brokaw,
Elias Goodman,	Edward Mitchell,
Charles Stewart Smith,	John S. Wise,
John E. Milholland,	A. H. Steele,
John Sabine Smith,	Joel B. Ehrhardt,
E. W. Bloomingdale,	Paul B. Cravath,
S. V. R. Cruger,	John Prector Clarke,
	Committee.

THE condition of things in New York will have to be dealt with by the national republican party. The favorite method of the CHRONICLE in fighting bossism is to defeat its candidates at the polls, and of this there is a long line of wholesome and gratifying examples. The situation in New York, however, is peculiar. Platt rides rough-shod over practically all of the respectable element of his party, led, as is shown by the protest printed elsewhere, by such republicans as Joseph H. Choate, Elihu Root and Cornelius N. Bliss. Submission on their part can not be thought of; nor can they beat Platt at the primaries controlled by his patronage supported army. Seemingly they have no other course but to form a new organization on the ground that the Platt organization is not the republican organization, but, as the New York Tribune says, is a mere band of brazen banditti. This new organization should demand exclusive admission to the national convention, and let us see whether the republican party will put its neck under Platt's heel. The discussion outside of the state can not be begun too soon.

MR. ROOSEVELT recently delivered an address in Philadelphia, and Mayor Swift, of Chicago, has lately spoken to the commercial club of that city. From both men we learn anew what respectable citizens do and will continue to do, so long as public offices and places can be used as rewards to maintain the boss system, and thus force upon us councilmen and other officers who can be bought and sold. Mr. Roosevelt said:

"You would be astonished if I should tell you the names of men, standing high in New York City, who came to me for some of the worst people that there were in that [the police] department, because it was a department in which money could accomplish most anything; any man who had money, whether he was a law-abiding citizen or criminal, could buy protection and the services of the police if it was necessary for him to have them, and naturally he got efficient services, for which he paid, and he was not willing to receive merely the protection that would be meted out to him exactly as to other citizens, rich or poor. He did not want the change which would deprive him of the advantage his money gave him in getting police protection."

Mayor Swift said:

"The present mayor, within sixty days, has vetoed a half dozen ordinances, passed by your representatives, giving space in the streets to representative property owners, who came to the common council and asked for it. Who is it that comes into the common council and asks for such privileges? Who is it who are accused of offering bribes for such franchises? It is just the same ones, the same prominent citizens that come into the same council's chamber and ask for the right to occupy space in your streets.

"I tell you these questions come home. Talk about anarchy; talk about breeding the spirit of communism. What does it more than the representative citizens of Chicago; your high toned business men; your patriotic men? Your prominent citizens of Chicago are the men who knock at the door of the council and ask for illegal franchises. It is not the common people. Who bribes the common council? Is it men in the common walks of life? They are men in your own walks of life, sitting by your firesides at your clubs. Is it your men in the common walks of life that demand bribes and who receive bribes at the hands of the legislative bodies or the common council? No. It is your representative citizens, your capitalists, your business men. When have they come to the front, either individually or collectively, and inveighed against this manner of obtaining franchises? When will they come to the front, individually or collectively, and ask of the common council adequate remuneration for the city? Never, to my knowledge.

"Who is responsible for the condition of affairs in the city of Chicago? Your representative business men. If an assessor grows rich while in office, with whom does he divide? Not with the common people. He divides with the man who tempts him to make a low assessment, not the man who has the humble little house, but the capitalist and the business man."

EVERY test of the tie which binds the boss to politics gives the same result. No matter what takes away the plums, whether a civil service law or the longer arm of a rival boss, their removal destroys his interest in public affairs. Josephus Yeakel is a late instance. For more than ten years he was the republican boss of the twenty-first ward of Philadelphia. Some under-handed over-reach took away his spoil, and thereupon Josephus said:

"I will resign from the city committee and the leadership of politics in the ward next Monday evening, unless the mayor makes amends for certain promises made and not kept. I was promised to be given the appointments that were to be made in the ward here, and had pledged positions to a number of ward workers, but since then the positions have been filled by men from other wards, one of whom has not even moved into the ward. I believe a leader becomes a nonentity when he is unable to fulfill his pledges."

THE "American" system, as contrasted with what some are pleased to call the Chinese system, is now displaying its legitimate results in Philadelphia. For years Dave Martin has run the city government and has given boss principles their full development. If a man got a place in Philadelphia, great or small, there was some reason for it besides mere fitness, except as he fitted a place in the Martin machine, and helped to run politics in a way satisfactory to Martin. The results are a government debauched from top to bottom. The condition of things is unspeakable. Robbery, blackmail, and the wholesale marshaling of law-breakers at the polls on condition of being permitted to break the law, are common characteristics. It seemed that the condition of political morals in boss-ridden Pennsylvania was as bad as it could be, but this makes it worse.

In the recent division of places in the house of representatives, Indiana congressmen occupied a large place in the public eye. Day by day the dispatches noted the mighty efforts each one was making for his henchmen, and finally what each one "got." It is doubtful if they will again be so deeply interested in any object during their respective careers, but in fact their efforts in this struggle were about of the grade of a lot of old women absorbed in tending a small kitchen garden. The inevitable result has followed that the appointees put in through a "combine" of the mighty men who constitute congress, are largely good for nothing. The other day, one member asked if the reading clerks, foisted upon the house by the men "who farm out the offices," were to be retained, although they could not be heard on either side of the house. Henry U. Johnson, of the Richmond district, of this state, is the only one from Indiana who comes off with any sort of dignity, who in advocating the re-instatement of an employe discharged after twenty years' service, denounced the discreditable proceedings of the combine.

It is not often that any one can agree with the New York Sun, but the approval of its recent denunciation of Voorhees and Turpie, is all but unanimous. These two Indiana senators are about as near worthless as any two men in any position ever were. They do not represent the state on any public question. For years Voorhees has been simply a large bray, while Turpie has been nothing. Nothing makes more certain the hopelessness of hoping anything in the near future from the democratic party of Indiana than its reliance upon such men. It is to be said, however, that they are comparatively harmless, being looked upon with contempt by the entire country. Bad as they are, they are less dangerous than senators like Gorman, Brice and Murphy.

THERE has been no change in the situation in this city. The mayor, Tommy Taggart, pursues his way, evidently ignorant that the tendency of the times is not backward to Tammany methods but forward to such methods as shall reform the Taggarts out of politics. The charter of this city makes it the duty of the mayor to call together the heads of departments at least once a month for consultation and advice. The charter then proceeds:

Records shall be kept of such meetings above provided for and rules and regulations shall be adopted thereat * * * which regulations shall prescribe a common and systematic method of ascertaining the comparative fitness of applicants for office, position and promotion and of selecting, appointing and promoting those found to be best fitted, except in the department of public safety, without regard to political opinions or services.

Of course this requires the introduction of open competition for places requiring skill, and the adoption of a system absolutely excluding politics in the employment of laborers. The preceding administration obeyed the charter by adopting a fairly good set of rules. Taggart's meeting repealed those rules and has adopted none whatever in their place. The city is therefore thrown back upon the Tammany system pure and simple. This will undoubtedly help Taggart to get the nomination of his party for governor. His party machine in this state is made up of men of his stripe, and the indications now are that he will be nominated by acclamation. We hope he will. Let us see if the people of Indiana are prepared to turn over the benevolent institutions of this state to the calloused mercies of this ignorant demagogue.

THE first of the year Mayor Taggart's administration took possession of the city hospital. It was immediately found that the policy of the administration in the manner of carrying messages could not be carried out except by a democratic orderly, and one was immediately appointed. In like manner the democratic policy regarding the removal of dirt would not be safe except in the hands of a democratic janitor, and one was chosen. There is a Taggart method also of carrying sick to the hospital which could only be carried out by a democratic ambulance driver, and a good democrat was given that place, and the Taggart style of cleaning and running an engine, was made sure of by appointing Lon Cox engineer. This is big business—in fact, about the biggest business engaged in by our present city government, unless it is selecting out its critics and requiring them to repair brick sidewalks in the middle of winter, omitting a like requirement of "good democrats" in the same half square. Taggart's administration will find that the Indianapolis Tammany is neither so powerful nor so much feared as its New York model—nor, in fact, feared at all.

MUNICIPAL REFORM.

At the meeting of the American Economic Association and the Central States Political Science Association in joint session, held in Indianapolis in December, the subject of municipal reform received attention. There were upon the programme two papers and four discussions, but practically it amounted to five elaborate papers and one discussion. With the single exception of the discussion by Professor J. W. Jenks, of Cornell University, we do not think any of the participants grasped the immediate situation. Some of the papers had detailed plans, but all came to the conclusion that the one thing needful was an elevated sense of the duties of citizenship which must be cultivated in the inhabitants of every city. To deny that citizens will be brought to appreciate and practice in the most commendable manner their duties as citizens is to fly in the face of history and human progress; but the CHRONICLE wants to see municipal reform not a hundred years from now nor in the next generation, but now. If we are to depend upon the elevating process of preaching that all inhabitants of cities must be good, must not work worthless henchmen into the labor service and into the police and fire departments, that respectable men and church members must not bribe councilmen and must not work all manner of financial deviltry through ward heelers and bosses who control the city government, then we must be content to see the blessings of municipal reform showered not upon us but perhaps upon our children's children. The key to the problem is in the distribution of places as laborers, clerks, firemen, policemen and so on among bosses who give them out to their henchmen, who through these control primaries and conventions and who set up themselves or, at most, weak, respectable citizens for mayors and councilmen. This was the foundation of the power of Tammany Hall and it is the foundation of the boss system in all our cities. While this spoils system exists no amount of preaching a higher standard of citizenship will convert those who enjoy the fruits, nor will the election of good citizens to offices be anything more than spasmodic reform, for the reason that so long as the rewards are in sight bands of local buccaneers will gather again and again to fight for them, and in nine cases out of ten will succeed. It is true that the removal of the spoil will not convert the heelers or the bosses but it will destroy their interest in public affairs. When they can get nothing out of politics they will leave politics alone, or let us hope many of them will settle down to be useful citizens. Now the merit and labor service systems honestly enforced will destroy the spoils system so thoroughly that the mayor can not appoint the spittoon cleaner of his office nor a councilman, a dog catcher—and yet the service of any city will be vastly improved and it is not an exaggeration to say that the people will get one-third more for their money than they now get. This condition would elevate citizenship, for it would obliterate the greedy and degrading aims which engross every effort in our city governments. There is no reason why we should not have municipal reform in five years instead of fifty.

THE MUGWUMP.

[From the paper of William Dudley Foulke before the Tuesday Club of Richmond, January 7.]

My theme to-night is "The Independent in Politics." I call him "The Mugwump." This is the name given to him by his enemies: I like such names. Heretic, Roundhead, Quaker, Abolitionist (for that, too was once a word of contumely), all epithets that tell the story how man without just cause has sought to cast contempt upon his brother and has failed. "Friend" is a good word, but "Quaker" is better, for it gives us a glimpse of the little band that trembled with deep feeling as they clung to their simple faith amid the laughter of a jeering world. "Yankee Doodle" inspires us because it records the barren mockery of the British regulars who at last showed their heels and their backs to the plain farmer boys whom they despised. And so I like the word "Mugwump," which tells of the unprofitable hatred which believers in worn-out political creeds have borne toward those who desired to act upon their own convictions rather than upon the line of conduct prescribed for them by the political organizations of the day.

Independence in politics means simply this, that men shall believe that which their judgment dictates and shall speak and act according to their belief, no matter what the party may say. It stands for an honest expression of political views by word and vote, for a refusal to be bound by the opinions of others. Nobody denies that in a republican government parties will always exist. The men who think alike will vote together. They will organize to express their joint convictions. But the tendency of the custom is such that they often remain together long after they cease to have these common convictions. The mugwump says that when they cease to think alike they ought to separate. The out-and-out party man says they should stay together whether they think alike or not.

The proper object of all civic activity is the public good. A party is a combination of men organized for the purpose of obtaining this. It is not a political sovereignty like our country to which our allegiance is always due. And yet it has often happened that party spirit has been more intense than even patriotism itself. So it was when the declarations of the Hartford convention opposed the war of 1812 and proposed to disregard the requisitions of the general government. So it was with the advocates of nullification in South Carolina, with the promoters of the secession movement in 1860, and with those who, like Jacob Thompson, proposed to invoke the aid of the British against their own countrymen in 1864.

What said Washington of party spirit in his farewell address? These are his words:

"In governments of a monarchical cast, patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor, upon the spirit of party. But, in those of a popular character, in governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From their natural tendency it is certain there will be always enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose; and there being constantly danger of excess, the effort ought to be, by force of public opinion, to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched, it demands uniform vigilance to prevent its bursting into a flame, lest instead of warming it should consume."

To those who have outgrown the wisdom and patriotism of Washington, it may be useless to cite his words. But there are still those who believe them. In 1884, there were still enough of those who listened to call of their country and believed that it was higher than the claims of any party, to prevent the author of the Mulligan Letters from occupying the chair which had been filled by the author of these declarations.

Now what would be the result if there were no independents? Each party would be sure of its supporters, no matter how vile its candidates or how detestable its principles. Each party man would remain a party man forever. That is the logic of it. "Once in grace always in grace," and once condemned to perdition, no power in heaven and earth could remove the interdict.

Would parties nominate their best men or advocate things which are just, and pure, and wise, if they were thus in advance the recipients of a plenary indulgence to advocate bad principles and nominate bad men? The thing which drives each party to its duty is the knowledge that if it supports bad principles and bad men it will be hurled from power. Party government is only beneficial because there are mugwumps to repudiate it when it fails to do its duty. We may talk of "reform within the party" until doomsday. If reform within the party accomplishes its work, it will also keep within the party those who are devoted to reform; but if it fails, then reform without the party, and by the defeat of the party, is not only the most effective, but it is the last remaining remedy—and this remedy the Mugwump does not intend to relinquish.

Mugwumps are accused of inconsistency and vacillation. Yet it is not possible to follow the career of those who have adhered constantly to party during the past twenty-five years who has not done things more vacillating and inconsistent. Whatever the party said these men were its obedient vassals. It was like the game of "Simon says thumbs up"—if Simon advised it, all thumbs were elevated. But if Simon did not say so not a thumb was raised.

Let me illustrate. In 1876 the platform of the republican party in Indiana demanded the repeal of the resumption act which had just been enacted. But when, only a few months later, the national convention insisted that resumption should be carried out, the command "right-about face" was given to every local republican in the state. The resumption keynote was struck by the leaders of the band and all the little fifers and players upon French harps responded. It will perhaps hardly be believed that a republican platform in Indiana once declared in favor of a tariff for revenue, in which protection was only an incidental feature, but such is the fact. In the fullness of time this doctrine developed into the McKinley bill and every orthodox republican changed front accordingly.

Far be it from me to say that men should not modify their belief by the light of experience. The convictions of every man are subject to change, but when these convictions take new form in exact accordance with party platforms there is strong reason to suspect that the rank and file are obeying the commands of others rather than follow their individual judgment.

In the democratic party the changes have been very violent. That party was the advocate of slavery, yet its members voted for Horace Greeley for President. It denied the power of the government to make greenbacks a legal tender and then demanded an unlimited issue of greenback currency for the payment of the national debt. It declared the war a failure and the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments unconstitutionally adopted and then accepted the consequences of the four-years' struggle and agreed to abide by the amendments. The orthodox democrat has undergone more changes in his belief than the phases of the moon. In view of these transformations, it is hardly becoming for either republicans or democrats to accuse the mugwumps of vacillation.

Every new dissent from the old order of things is a kind of mugwumpery. Every man was a mugwump who lifted his voice against the institution of slavery, and withdrew from existing organizations in the day when the whig party and the democratic party divided political power and maintained cowardly silence in regard to the burning iniquity which was destroying the life of our republic. The new party which declared that the infant territories should be consecrated to freedom, was itself composed of mugwumps of this description. Had there been no independents in those days there would not be a republican to-day. Least of all does it lie in the mouth of any supporter of that party to belittle or revile an independent. His own political organization would not have existed had it not been for the same spirit of independence in the past. The party which has stood so long for liberty ought to accord liberty to others.

A man who sticks to his party through thick and thin is called a "stalwart." The mugwump who resists its dictations is considered a weakling. This is a curious instance where in social and moral questions it is deemed an evidence of greater moral strength to float with the tide than to swim against it. Obedience to party dictation shows more power than resistance. By a strange paradox the slave is regarded as stronger and more courageous than the freeman.

Our community is largely protestant, and protestants wonder how it is possible for a Roman catholic to submit his individual judgment in religious matters to the dogma of the Roman pontiff, or even to the declaration of the ecumenical council of the church. And yet strict party men, both republicans and democrats, are willing to declare in advance, and declare it the duty of others to agree in advance to support, not only the platform but all the nominees of a future party convention. In other words, they will agree to say that black is white if the convention shall so declare it. They will agree to support a public robber, as the purest and fittest man for the place if the convention shall demand it. With what consistency can a protestant maintain the right of private judgment in the things ecclesiastical when he denies that right in things political? With what face can he criticize the catholic for submission to Rome when he himself agrees to submit unhesitatingly in advance to the decrees of the ecumenical council of his party? Those who stand for liberty of individual opinion in the affairs of the church, ought to be willing to encourage liberty of individual opinion in the affairs of state.

About two months ago one John M. Davies, D. D., suddenly flamed forth into such notoriety as is conferred by a special dispatch to an Indianapolis daily newspaper by a sermon at the First Presbyterian church of Noblesville, Indiana, on the "Value of Partisanship." I profess the profoundest ignorance in regard to Dr. Davies. Who or what he may be I don't know and I would not think of dragging him forth from the obscurity in which his life has no doubt been peacefully passed, and which he seems so excellently qualified to adorn, except for the fact that he seems to be a fair representative of a certain kind of public opinion.

His expressions therefore serve as an appropriate text.

The worthy doctor of divinity thus sets forth his political creed: "I believe in partisan politics. I believe in the unflinching adherence to the principles of party and to the established tenets of the church. A strong, firm adherence to convictions of truth is fundamental to growth, success and happiness in any and all the walks of life. The great heroes and leaders of history are but shining monuments of the theory of believing something and adhering firmly and conscientiously to that faith. Luther, Calvin and Wesley accomplished their great work in the world because they taught and labored with intense faith and loyalty to their cause."

This is an illustration of just that sort of sloppy logic which has greatly weakened the hold upon the popular mind of the religion which such men represent. The reason that Luther, Calvin and Wesley accomplished their work was because they were true to their own convictions and not to the convictions imposed upon them by the religious organizations in which they had grown up. If Luther, religiously speaking, had been a good party man he would have lived and died a monk of the church of Rome. His name would have been unknown in history. Calvin and Wesley became the leaders of great churches because they were original and deep innovators, not because they trod the tried and beaten path. It would be just as logical to cite the works of Copernicus as an argument in favor of the Ptolemaic system as to speak of Luther, Calvin and Wesley as illustrations of the advantages of party loyalty. It is because these men were not loyal to their traditions that they were great.

The reverend gentleman continued: "The most dangerous instrument in American politics to-day is the independent voter. The doctrine that a man must eschew all parties and give allegiance to none is most dangerous and pernicious. Such a man is the most dangerous element in American politics. He is anchored nowhere, has no faith in anything and is just drifting with the currents. They are mere expletives, mere ciphers and the world is full of failures made out of just such timber."

Disregarding the mixed metaphors and grammatical blunders of these sentences it would be interesting to know who are the supporters of his alleged doctrine that a man must eschew all parties and give allegiance to none. There are men, it is true, who perversely maintain that it is their duty to eschew a party whose principles they can not believe and whose candidates they are unwilling to support. There are men who insist that they do not owe allegiance to a corrupt organization of dishonest and unworthy politicians. These men are anchored nowhere—except upon principle. They have no faith—in what they know to be wrong. As to drifting with the currents that is just the one thing they will not do. So far as a man may be an expletive (whatever that may mean), the reverend gentleman represents the possibility of such a thing far better than any mugwump could pretend to do. If mugwumps are ciphers they have the cipher's power of adding tenfold to the value of the integer which to it is annexed. The good sense of the American people has not seldom ratified their conclusions. There are many independents in the country to-day who have not as yet cast a vote for a presidential candidate who has not been elected. It must be sad, indeed, for party men to feel that ciphers have such power and that the "failures out of just such timber" have been so potent in their influence upon American politics.

But the reverend critic is not yet done. "I despise," he says, "the man who tries to spread himself out over all parties and to absorb all the good out of all parties and then sets himself up as the independent voter so much better and nobler than his fellowmen." It is refreshing to hear this doctrine from a minister of the gospel. He who denounces corruption, he who rebukes by his vote the man who acquires wealth by the plunder of the public, he who objects to the doctrine that public offices are personal or party pelf, the democrat who resists the criminal domination of Tammany in New York and the republican who repudiates the iniquitous rule of Quay in Pennsylvania, is to be despised because he sets himself up as better and nobler than his fellows. If men have no right to attack political wrong doing what business have they to denounce wickedness of any sort? What right has the church to lift up its voice against sin?

Mr. Davies further declares that the policy and support of the independent paper usually "smells of filthy lucre." In his eyes the Indianapolis News, the New York Evening Post, the Springfield Republican are venal and corrupt while the mugwump denouncing Sun, the Cincinnati Enquirer or Commercial-Gazette are pure, sweet, clean and of good repute forever. The organs of Quay in Philadelphia and of Brice in Ohio are reliable guides to those who seek the truth! Their honest aspirations have never been tainted by the lust for gold! It is only independent journalism which is defiled!

The charge of the smell of filthy lucre is indeed the best possible to those who have nothing else in the world to say. George William Curtis would not vote for Blaine lest he might lose a lucrative position with the Harpers. That was the logical explanation of the conduct of as pure and upright a character as has ever illustrated our national life. It was just as plausible as the claim that the father of our country promoted the establishment of the city of Washington to improve the market value of Mt. Vernon. It was just as true as the slander that Henry Clay procured the election of John Quincy Adams in consideration of an agreement that he should be secretary of state. History sets these things right.

But there are others more tolerant, who merely say that the mugwump is "misled." Curtis was perhaps honest but was deluded. Who are they that sit in judgment on the delusion? Deluded! That was what men said of Garrison when he demanded emancipation, of Seward when he talked of the irrepressible conflict, of Lincoln when he declared that a house divided against itself could not stand. Yet our country rose on the wings of that delusion from the dark valley of the fugitive slave law to the white peak of universal suffrage. It is the coming century which will best declare where the delusion lies. But even with our limited vision we may safely affirm that it does not lie at the doors of those who insist upon common honesty against the claims of party spirit and upon sound principles against the prejudices and the catch words of the hour.

The chorus against the mugwumps has been long and loud, but it is inharmonious and unimpressive. The heelers of Tammany Hall despise a mugwump, the thugs who drove men from the polls at Gravesend have no words strong enough for their contempt. The men who organize voters in blocks of five are loud in their outcry. Those who raise and contribute fortunes to campaign funds, and then demand cabinet positions or foreign missions for their services, can see no useful purpose in mugwump existence. Postmasters and collectors who fill their offices with political freebooters abhor such emasculated politics. The policemen who levy blackmail upon the vices of great cities have infinite contempt for mugwump principles. Gorman, and Hill, and Croker, and Quay and Platt are well convinced that mugwumps are all pharisees. The men who sully their hands with the gold of bribery know that they are hypocrites. Those who give over the insane to brutal attendants to carry the ward for the straight party ticket are filled with indignation at the mugwumpery of the men who expose their iniquities. Yet still the mugwump survives, and increases and multiplies. Advocacy is hardly necessary when so much of the world is turning mugwump without it. So long as political scoundrels ply their trade the scourges for their chastisement shall not be put away.

WANAMAKER REDIVIVUS.

It is in accordance with the fitness of things that pious John Wanamaker should reappear in politics surrounded with a cloud of humbug and corruption. He is a candidate for the United States senatorship in Pennsylvania, and has scarcely taken the field before a charge is made that a systematic attempt is under way to subsidize the press in his interest. The editor of the chief republican paper of Lancaster county, charges that Wanamaker's lieutenants are offering the publishers of country papers from $3 to $20 for editorial articles supporting Wanamaker, the rate being adjusted to the influence of the paper. Instead of being denied, this charge is admitted by C. C. Kauffman, a state senator, who publishes a card in which he says:

"I wish to say that upon my own responsibility and without the knowledge or consent of Mr. Wanamaker, I met some representatives of the country press and showed them articles which I wanted them to print in their papers, and for which I paid them, as I would for any other political matter, and just as I have paid both city and country papers for like services in the past. I believe in printer's ink, and I appreciate what the newspapers did for me in my successful fight against Cameron in this senatorial district two years ago. This same thing is done in every preliminary campaign in this county. It was an open business transaction, with nothing secret or mysterious about it, and which I will do again if occasion justifies it. It is exactly what was done all over the state by both sides in the late contest for the chairmanship of the republican state committee, to influence public opinion for one side or the other, through the medium of the press. I have too high a regard for the integrity and independence of the press of Lancaster county to believe that it is venal, or that it could be subsidized in any cause, personal or political."

The light which this throws upon political morality in Pennsylvania is too fully illuminating to need comment. Kauffman's tribute to the "integrity and independence" of the press, which he says is regularly bought to "influence public opinion," is worthy of pious John himself. It is quite natural to find following close upon this a declaration that so far as he (Kauffman) knows, "Mr. Wanamaker has not contributed one dollar to promote his candidacy," and "has never consented to be a candidate."—New York Evening Post.

Mr. Herbert Welsh's Philadelphia paper, City and State, notes that "all of the great Philadelphia dailies, with the exception of brief items in the Times and Record," have "not made even a mention" of C. C. Kauffman's acknowledged purchase of editorial opinion in Pennsylvania in support of Wanamaker's senatorial aspirations. "What newspaper," it asks, "whose editor was in a normal condition of moral health, would not ring with indignant repudiation of this insult and wrong done the public and the press?" And, as to Wanamaker himself, "why has he not written to every paper in which the facts have been stated, and in which Kauffman's humiliating confession was made, disavowing all connection with him, and stating explicitly that Kauffman had no authority whatever to purchase editorial opinions advocating his candidacy. Such a disavowal from Mr. Wanamaker is undoubtedly in order. It would be demanded by sound public opinion from any public man, it is still more urgently demanded from one who has assumed Mr. Wanamaker's position as a moral and religious teacher."

* * *

Wanamaker will make a strong candidate for the senatorial nomination. He is well known all over the state, and has a host of workers at his call in the shape of the postmasters appointed while he was postmaster-general, and who hope to regain their old places through his influence if elected. Through his wholesale place he comes into close touch with a large number of influential men throughout the state, who will be able to give very material assistance to his candidacy. There is no doubt that he has extensive business relations with country stores, which are usually centers of political activity, and the country newspapers will help him along both through the methods explained by Senator Kauffman and through the large amount of advertising which Mr. Wanamaker places from time to time. He has, if current report is true, gone into the newspaper business himself, having purchased one of the Huntingdon locals.

Wanamaker's hold on the newspapers of Philadelphia is almost complete, and all on account of the page "ads" he frequently places, and the regular two and three columns of advertisements which appear as regularly in each morning and afternoon newspaper as the weather forecasts, with the exception hereafter noted. He is never criticised in these papers. Neither his connection with the Keystone bank failure nor the movement to have the embezzling City Treasurer Bardsley pardoned has been exploited, or his shortcomings as postmaster-general.

About a year ago, when the petition for the appointment of a senatorial committee to investigate Philadelphia affairs was under discussion, one of the Philadelphia newspapers published as an item of news that Thomas Dolan and William H. Wanamaker were in Harrisburg to prevent affirmative action. The Wanamaker "ad" has not appeared in that paper since until a few weeks ago; and there are persons who allege that the two facts must go together as cause and effect. The paper in question, it is almost needless to remark, abstained from criticism during its period of probation.—Philadelphia dispatch New York Evening Post, January 10.

THE CONSULAR SERVICE.

Jonathan A. Lane.

But, as I have already intimated, these views and conclusions are not entertained by everybody. A leading citizen of Boston, hearing that at the time being in Washington I had expressed to Mr. Olney satisfaction at so much of what the department had done as was then published, called my attention to an editorial in the New York Journal of Commerce—by no means a republican organ—which condemned the whole scheme as insincere and worthless, which my friend approved as conclusive and correct.

* * * * *

The President of the United States by his high office inherits the privilege of these appointments. Under no other limitations or restrictions than his oath of office and the approval of that potential body, the senate, which very naturally has come into a sort of joint proprietorship in this patronage, by virtue of its authority and power therein. At the "outset" of Mr. Cleveland's administration we may perhaps admit conditions were not favorable—the pressure upon the President was very great, and the department of state was not manned as it is to-day. Therefore no such action as we are discussing did take place. Now, then, I would respectfully submit for the consideration of this body to what extent should the present incumbent of the presidential office, under these circumstances, make rules and regulations concerning the consular service, which would seem to circumscribe and abridge the privileges and the inherited rights of his successor? Of course it is intended that this policy shall be transmitted to the next administration, otherwise it would not, or should not, have been entered upon—and upon that excellent rule, good in affairs both national and personal, which in some sense here unite—"put yourself in his place."

Is Mr. Cleveland to be condemned by considerate, fair-minded men for going no further in these rules than he felt it was becoming and proper for his administration to do? He reserves consulships above the salary of $2,500 for which this New York critic also condemns him. What limitation would this editor suggest, if any? And why not, with equal propriety, demand that he should have gone as far as the Morgan bill into a reformation of the consular and diplomatic service? Mr. Cleveland has gone slow in this movement, which, it is to be confessed, is quite in contrast with the too rapid gait which characterized his changes in the consular service at the beginning of his administration. It remains for his successor, the incoming President, to show the country that the opportunity reserved for him to make further extension of the civil service, and to do much more, and to do it better, will be eagerly embraced, and that Mr. Strauss's admirable suggestion—that it be done at the outset of the succeeding administration—will not be forgotten. The party in power, which shall in this business take the most liberal non-partisan stand, will earn the lasting gratitude as well as admiration of the country.

BOSSISM IS THE BANE OF MUNICIPAL POLITICS.

[From the address of Joseph C. Butler, of Cincinnati, before the Columbus Board of Trade, Jan. 7.]

"Civil service is bound to come. Its progress is slow, but final success is inevitable.

"Ten years hence, when the merit system shall have been introduced all over our country, in municipal, state and federal offices, there will be those who will regret having allied themselves with the opposition to this cause, the merit of which they, in their ignorance, did not see, and others will feel the prick of conscience for having sacrificed their nobler impulses for temporary partisan gain.

"During the noble fight conducted by a few in England for civil service reform, against the very same conditions as exist in our country to-day, there were many who fought the measure with the same wanton and futile arguments that are hurled at its introduction here. The politicians were the very last to accept it in England, the members of parliament fought it, not seeing that it would ultimately work to their advantage, and feeling that its introduction meant a serious loss of power to them. However, as soon as its favorable results became evident, the very same men became its champions and defenders.

"We are the only first-class nation to-day that is saddled with the monarchical and effete system of the past. The whole of Europe—Germany, England, France, Switzerland, Austria, Spain, Belgium, Italy—administer their respective governments by officials and employes chosen for their personal worth—the fitness of an applicant for the office he seeks once being established, his tenure does not depend upon favoritism, but is rendered secure by law. The same inducements that the business world offers are held out to the young man who enters their service. They allow him to have the opportunity to rise by industry and faithfulness to the highest position for which his abilities qualify him. This is sound policy and good business sense. This policy has made their governments all the more stable, by holding out sufficient inducements to young men in office to work and strive all the more earnestly for their own and their country's interests.

"All of this is of comparatively recent date. Our present spoils system was in vogue in England at the time of the declaration of independence.

"According to Edward Porritt, the Aberga-venny manuscripts and other papers covering the same period, taken in conjunction with Donne's letters of North and the Walpole correspondence, furnish full and excellent materials for a study of the England against which America revolted, and of the methods which George III used in the management of the house of commons. They show that the system of political corruption and political management—'bossism' in politics, to use current political slang—was not invented in this country. George III was as keen and as active a political 'boss' as any American politician. Offices, great and small, were given solely as rewards for political services; men were broken and turned out of the army and the civil service on account of their votes in and out of parliament. A subsidized daily press upheld the policy of the king and maligned the characters of men who dared oppose him.

"To-day there is a wide-spread feeling of discontent with the existing state of affairs in all our large cities and towns. We hear a clamor against 'bossism' from every direction—from New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Missouri, Minnesota, and from our own great state. Thinking people are greatly agitated over the situation. And pray, what is bringing the American public to its senses, what is causing the business men, even, to give it their attention? I will tell you. One of the chief reasons is that the burden of taxation is commencing to be felt more than ever. This is the club that is reaching out and striking many that heretofore have rested easily upon the 'cushions of advantages.' It is harder to pay our taxes than ever before; rents and prices of commodities all have fallen. The tax rate remains the same. This serious question of paying taxes is making the nation think.

"The remedy which has been so effective in foreign countries will work here. Adopt civil service, and you destroy the power of levying assessments; stop assessments, and you take away the ability of organized gangs to exist. 'You take my life, when you do take the means whereby I live.'

"In all our large cities, men are awakening to the necessity of giving more earnest attention to public affairs. This is a very healthy and promising sign for the nation, for once the American people are fully roused, we may expect to see the same great ability bestowed upon public affairs that has made the results of their private undertakings the wonder and admiration of the world.

"From a business point of view I may state that if I could, by any efforts of mine, turn out of power our present political 'boss' in Cincinnati, I would not do so; in fact, I would do everything in my power to allow him to remain until such time as we have a change of system. What is the use of trying to turn one man out who has now grown rich and well supplied with this world's effects, to allow a lean one to come in to take his place?

"Our 'boss' who was a very poor man a few years ago, is reputed to be worth three to four hundred thousand dollars. The question suggests itself, how much additional has been paid out to his lieutenants, or ward-healers, of the money of the tax-payers, for you must recognize that however indirect it may be, that it is the fountain source of supply; again, how many hundreds of thousands of dollars have been lost by way of this element representing the city's interest when a bargain is to be made for a franchise, etc.? If our city has lost hundreds of thousands, how much has the whole state lost?

"While recently in Baltimore, just prior to the election, where they were making a valiant fight against 'bossism,' I saw this statement, that the city had spent of late years some twenty millions for improvements, and she has not to-day over seven or eight millions in the way of assets to show for the expenditure. * * *

"A short while ago, in Cincinnati, our real autocratic ruler called for an assessment. He got it, some sixty thousand dollars. How does he get it? Every man who is elected to office is, in the first place, under obligations to the boss for his nomination. Secondly, if he is not informed, he is supposed to know the conditions—they vary according to the individual and the requirements of the situation. If, however, the former feels his power is being endangered or weakened, through the past extravagance of the administration of his automatons, or by those whom he has nominated and sent to the legislature, whose actions have not been satisfactory to the tax-payers, he immediately raises his standard of applicants for office, and in proportion as he does so, the conditions placed on the office-holders are less exacting, in many cases amount to nothing, except the little assessment for campaign purposes. Such is the case with our representatives recently elected in Hamilton county. The latter have now the power in their hands to help wipe out, for all time to come, the reign of 'bossism' and substitute that of the people, for they are under no obligations to the 'boss' through whom they got their nominations. He was in desperate straits and was obliged to nominate good men to have his ticket elected.

"The corrections of these evils, as I have said, lies in the adoption of the merit system. If it is not practical, it is not anything. Behold the bitter attacks made against the introduction of the merit system in England by the politicians, and the same weary fight at home. Many persons, judging from their remarks, have shown a disposition to be dubious in regard to their belief in the efficacy of the merit system to strengthen our government and make it more stable, to bring about the purification of politics, and downfall of 'bossism.' Allow me to endeavor to answer a few of these.

"Soon after the burning of the court-house by the mob in my city, in 1884, a law embracing the elements of the merit system was passed, placing our city police largely out of politics. What a transformation have I seen within the last ten years! From one of the worst to one of the finest body of men in the land, all owing to the vision of the measure. This is a notable example, showing that one of the inherent qualities of the merit system is the productiveness of strength. * * *

"When cast last fall an eminent divine said: 'I am opposed to the civil service system, on the ground that it would create in time an office-holding class. You know we do not desire any overbearing aristocracy of that kind, such a system would be un-American and un-democratic.' I told him that he was not the first to express such idle fears. If he desired to take the time, he could read the little work of E. L. Godkin upon that subject, which would show him the fallacy of his position. If there ever was an aristocracy among public servants, it exists to-day. A man holds a position by the will of his liege lord, the boss. His actions are only amenable to the aforesaid individual. What cares he for the public, just so he does not fall under the displeasure of his royal highness, the boss.

"I desire to congratulate our President, Mr. Grover Cleveland, on his stand for civil service reform, especially do I wish to emphasize my congratulations on his recent act of placing many of our consuls under civil service rules. I know from my own personal and business friends' experience, that many of our consuls have been and are a disgrace to our country. Consuls are purely commercial agents, their business is with the trade and commerce of the world. Still, while not congratulating Mr. Cleveland on taking this step in the right direction, I wish to say, that I regret exceedingly that he should have been swayed, as it is said, in this recent act through the influence of Secretary Olney, from the only true and practical method of civil service. The limited pass system, which is part of his scheme, is worn out and proven by the experience of the past to be thoroughly unreliable. * * *

"But the civil service rule is gaining ground, and must in the end be preferred to the spoils system, as surely as right must triumph over wrong. What are the grounds upon which I base my assertion that within ten years it will be the established system all over our country, and what is the present position and outlook of civil service in the various states? The grounds for my claim that the merit system will be the only mode of service in vogue all over our country within ten years are: First, the faith I have in my fellow-countrymen, their lack of prejudice and their possession of good sense; secondly, it is characteristic of my countrymen to adopt the best of anything, no matter where they find it; thirdly, it is only necessary to have an illustration of the superiority and efficacy of this system, such as the happy results obtained in Massachusetts, for it to be demanded by all other states.

"One of the illustrious sons of Ohio was George H. Pendleton, the champion in the United States senate of civil service reform. His great measure became a law June 16th, 1883. An agitation was at once commenced in the New York legislature looking towards the passage of a state act; such an act was passed and became a law May 4th, 1883. At the same time a movement was commenced in Massachusetts, and a state act there was approved on June 3d, 1883. In New York, during the five years of the history of the first commission appointed under Grover Cleveland, who was then governor, a great deal was accomplished in the arrangement of classifications and the gradual extension of the competitive system, both in the state and the cities. In 1887, however, the first commission, of which John Jay had been chairman, was removed by Governor Hill. From that date until the close of 1894, under the blighting influence of this man, the law was imperfectly administered, and positions taken wholesale from the competitive schedules and placed in the non-competitive or exempt. An investigation was made on behalf of the civil service reform association, and the facts discovered were reported to the legislature, together with a request that the condition of the service be investigated by a legislative committee. Such an investigation was held, and the charges of the association fully substantiated. Governor Flower and the then commission proceeded at once to repair a great deal of the damage. Governor Morton removed the majority members of the old commission, and appointed as their successors men thoroughly in sympathy with reform, and well qualified to give it real effect. Since then the great bulk of the positions in the state service have been made competitive, and a general improvement effected. Experience has proven that the New York state act is peculiar in the degree to which its operations depend upon the good intent of its administrators. It is practicable under its provisions to carry the principles of civil service reform to the farthest extent; whereas, at the same time, in the hands of administrators who may be ill-disposed, it is possible to go just so far in the other direction.

"The Massachusetts law differed from that of New York in that it allowed of a gradual extension of the rules to the various branches of the state service, something similar to the Pendleton act for the United States service. Large classes have been brought in from time to time, until at present practically every one is covered, excepting, of course, the classes usually exempt, elective officers, heads of departments, etc. Everything there is competitive. The Massachusetts act permitted the establishment in Boston of a system of labor registration, which has been in successful operation for ten years, and has recently been copied, with various modifications, in the navy yards of the United States, in New York city, and in Brooklyn. * * *

"And now, where shall stand the great state of Ohio in this movement to free ourselves from the serfdom of bossism? Will she allow her glorious record of the past to be broken on the greatest issue of to-day? Ohio has always taken an equal, if not a greater, share in the defense of the right of every leading issue. Her voice has been prominent in the councils of the nation, and her might has been felt on the field of battle, for the love she cherishes for the Union. She has furnished the majority of the chief actors in the history of the past forty years, Salmon P. Chase, John Brown, Generals Grant, Sherman, Sheridan, Rosecrans, Presidents Harrison, Garfield and Hayes.

In the municipal government of the city of Brooklyn only eighty places are exempt from civil service rules.

Morton has approved of the resolution of Nov. 12 last, adopted by the state civil service commission, transferring the following named places from non-competitive to competitive places: The division engineers, special examiners in the insurance department; principals, professors and teachers in the normal schools; the clerks in the office of superintendent of state prisons; deputy inspectors and expert examiners in the office of factory inspector; the chemists in the agricultural experimental station; the geologists, botanists, entomologists and their assistants in the state museum, and several other places have been re-deemed from spoil.

The house committee on reform in the civil service will hold its first meeting under a call by Chairman Brosius, of Pennsylvania, next Friday morning. Mr. Brosius was chosen from among several former republican members of this committee as the one most friendly to the reform, and it is expected that several important measures will be reported to the house during the session. The two measures in which the reformers feel the greatest interest at present are those which were favorably reported by Representative Andrew, of Boston, when he was chairman of the committee in the fifty-second congress. One of these gives authority to the civil service commission to prepare eligible lists of laborers on public works, in the navy yards and elsewhere, and requires appointing officers to make selections from these lists. The other bill relates to the classification of the fourth-class post-offices, and has been introduced in various forms for several years.—Washington dispatch New York Times, January 14.

Commissioner George B. Forrester, of the department of police and excise, Brooklyn, is a disgusted man. He had a faithful follower whom he wanted placed on the police force. With his political influence he believed this was an easy matter. It might have been had it not been for the civil service examination. When the list of men who had passed the civil service examination was published a few days ago, Commissioner Forrester carelessly looked over the names. He missed the name of his political protegee. He then put on his glasses, after wiping them carefully, and went over the list extremely carefully, but the name was not there.

"O, it's only a mistake," said he to himself, "the name has been left off accidentally."

The excise commissioner called on Commissioner Welles for an explanation. Mr. Welles simply referred Mr. Forrester to his protegee's examination papers. Here are some of the questions and answers:

Q.—Who is the governor of New York state? A.—Grover Cleveland.

Q.—Who is mayor of New York City? A.—Richard Croker.

Q.—What is the northeastern state of the union? A.—Africa.

Q.—What states border on the Mississippi? A.—The Hudson.

Q.—What is the usual process of dealing with a prisoner from the time of his arrest until his conviction? A.—One month.

Q.—Who appoints the police commissioner? A.—Mr. Welles.—New York Times, January 9.

It is significant, the Buffalo Express (Rep.) thinks, "that Governor Morton's appointee for inspector of gas meters, J. L. Stewart, was confirmed by the senate without reference, on motion of the Tammany Senator Grady. Evidently Tammany is entirely satisfied with this selection of the Platt machine."

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

VOL. II, No. 36.

INDIANAPOLIS, FEBRUARY, 1896.

TERMS: { One dollar per annum.
10 cents per copy.

Published monthly. Publication office, No. 23 N. Meridian St., Indianapolis, Ind. Address,

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

WITH this number the CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE closes its seventh year. It is proud of the share it has taken in the great contest which has been carried on during that time. Its one single principle of action has been a steady onslaught upon officers in place for the time being who were practicing or in any manner aiding or abetting the spoils system. It has not omitted to praise any acts of officers which promoted administrative reform, but it has not overpraised such acts, nor has it regarded even notable reform acts as any excuse for indulging in carnivals of spoil. It has refused to recognize any occasion as inopportune, nor has it regarded any sort of plain speaking as intemperate. It has let the sun go down every night upon its wrath. Its course has met with protest on every hand—from cabinet officers, from all manner of under-officers, from ministers of the gospel, from college professors, from good citizens whose party feelings were hurt. It has been ostracised from college libraries and religious reading rooms. Nevertheless, it knows that it has the respect of its enemies, and it has the approval of a wide circle throughout the country too eminent in the workings of government to leave any doubt. The men who have to be fought with in the struggle against the spoils system are too thick-skinned to heed innuendoes or fine phrases. The progress of administrative reform during the seven years has been enormous. When the CHRONICLE was started, the clippings of favorable discussion the country over would scarcely fill a page. Now hundreds of columns are the daily product. In short, the voice of the opponent has become dumb. His future recourse until his inevitable defeat will be to malicious trickery and a mulish refusal to move on

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE enjoys a vindication as well as anyone, and it has a vindication in the present aspect of the tariff question. For a long time it had to struggle with the contention that the tariff question must be settled first and that then civil service reform would have a chance. The CHRONICLE has never for a moment yielded to this claim. It steadily pointed out that the agitation under Mr. Cleveland was not different from the agitation under Polk and that the tariff question had been with us a hundred years and would be with us for another hundred. It took the ground that what the two parties most desired was to divide upon an economic question and obscure the question of the division of millions of spoil just as in the forties and fifties it desired by the same division to obscure the question of slavery. The Wilson bill was passed and the tariff question was pronounced settled. Yet what so far as can be judged by party organs and leaders is now dividing the parties? The tariff. On every hand and in every shape the republicans declare their one object in life to be "the resumption of the American policy of protection." Federal civil service reform has been accomplished in the midst of this tariff turmoil. Is the same reform in municipalities and states to wait until the republicans now "settle" the tariff? The CHRONICLE'S answer is that in season and out of season, with reckless indifference to the success of parties it intends to urge these reforms as the first political matter to which every citizen should give his attention.

For the first time in a hundred years policemen in the city of New York are appointed and promoted upon merit, and upon merit alone. There is no political pull, there is no church pull, there is no saloon pull, there is no gambling pull, there is no house of prostitution pull, there is no purchase and sale, there is no anything, except straightforward honest fitness for the position to be filled. Nothing in the world can take the place of this magnificent example of good government. No loss of privilege, which this has brought about is of the least weight compared with the benefit. Too rigid laws can be relaxed by legislation, but bargain and sale, blackmail and the pull system running through a city administration are death to public virtue.

RICHARD CROKER, ex-chief of Tammany, was presented with a "loving cup" at a dinner given in his honor, February 8, in New York. The cup was of solid silver, thirteen and a half inches high, weighing 210 ounces and holding two gallons. The dinner cost forty dollars a plate. John C. Sheehan, the Buffalo defaulter, presided, and on his right were Senator Edward Murphy, Thomas J. Grady, ex-Mayor Hugh J. Grant, Judge Frederick Smythe, Jacob A. Cantor, Nathan Strauss and James Martin. On his left were Croker, ex-Governor Roswell P. Flower, District Attorney John R. Fellows, ex-Mayor Gilroy, Amos J. Cummings and Henry D. Purroy. Among other guests was a son of General McClellan, to say nothing of Paddy Divver and numerous criminals. It is worth while to preserve these few facts, for in time they will be curiosities in the history of politics. The government of robbery, murder and universal blackmail in the city of New York reached the zenith of its glory when the city government was Tammany and Tammany was ruled by Croker. When he went into Tammany Croker had little, now he has not only thousands and tens of thousands, but certainly hundreds of thousands and perhaps millions. It is a strange spectacle and has few parallels in the history of government.

It begins to be doubtful if the republicans of Maryland are worthy of the great victory they recently gained over Gorman. If that victory was gained on any one ground, it was on the promise to institute civil service reform. The present aspect of the Maryland republicans is as though an army fighting for independence had held together until a victory was won, and then had at once broken up and devoted itself to plundering the enemy. The governor is overwhelmed with office-seekers, and it is said that half the members of the legislature want places. The promises to pass a civil service law are dodged or broken on every hand. It is but another proof of how selfish and dishonest and small the components of party machines are. In this case the enemy will rally and these ignoble victors will be defeated beyond power of recuperation in any near future, except the power to form bogus republican clubs and prey upon the remnants of federal patronage. In other columns we have reproduced the situation extensively from the Baltimore Sun, and we ask a careful reading. Mr. Bonaparte's denunciation is as withering and blasting as the scorn of the prophets.

PLATT'S war for the mastery of the city of New York goes merrily on. The protest of the most distinguished republicans in New York against the Platt primaries, published last month, will be remembered.

The rolls of the primaries have been found to contain 25,000 bogus names in a total enrollment of 77,000. The chairman of the protesting committee, John Sabine Smith, went to Albany and laid the whole matter before Governor Morton. The latter promptly referred the case to Platt's chief henchman, Lauterbach, and the Platt crowd had a great time considering it. Platt was so exalted that at a dinner afterwards in Jake Patterson's district he sang the stanza beginning

In the beauty of the lilies Christ was born across the sea.

The protesting committee also appealed to the state republican committee. Now every man on that committee happens to belong to Platt and the following happy resolutions were unanimously passed:

Resolved, That the proceedings of the republican organization of the county of New York appear to be, and are regular and proper.

Resolved, That the gentlemen who appeared before the state committee having conceded that the constitution of the republican organization of the county of New York needs amendment, that the state committee recommends that the republican organization of the county of New York be requested to amend such constitution; and

Resolved, That the memorial filed, with all the papers, be referred to the republican organization of the county of New York for its consideration.

Verily the wheels of the Platt machine are well greased. Nothing like this has happened since the democratic state committee in answer to an analogous protest from the honest men of its party declared Tammany Hall to be the "regular democratic organization" of New York city. The difference between the Platt men and the Tammany men is that many of the latter have already served their time in prison, while, according to the following extract, a percentage of the former seem likely to:

The grand jury to-day found indictments for misdemeanor against three election inspectors of the fifteenth and thirty-third election districts. * * *

Owens was the chairman of the board of inspectors of the fifteenth election district, and besides being indicted for violating the election law was indicted for an assault on George H. Martin, an official watcher.

Mr. Melville, who lives at No. 80 E. Washington square, in his complaint alleges that he went to the polling-booth of his election district on the night of December 10, and was informed that forty-four votes had already been cast. Four votes were cast after he came. Of the forty-eight Mr. Melville charges forty-four were fraudulent, having been cast by Tammany men and other persons in no wise connected with the republican party in that district. In spite of his protest the two election inspectors persisted in counting these votes in. Mr. Melville at once informed Alfred R. Conkling, the former republican representative of that district, who laid the matter before the grand jury; and as a result of this these indictments to-day were filed in court.

At the Croker dinner which is described elsewhere, there was outspoken rebellion against John C. Sheehan's elevation to the chairmanship of the finance committee of Tammany Hall. This is the greatest and most envied position in latter-day piracy. The chairman handles all the money, keeps no accounts, performs his addition and division all by himself and keeps his own silence. After a time he can buy anything in the world that takes his fancy. To return to the subject, the insult to Sheehan at the dinner had to be repaired. The Tammany executive committee was therefore called together on the 14th, and the next day the Evening Post gives Sheehan's vindication the following "send-off."

We presume there are few Christian capitals in which such an assemblage as the meeting of the Tammany executive committee last night would not be closely watched by the police, if not broken up. Its object was to pledge allegiance to John C. Sheehan as a leader, Sheehan being a thief, who made away with a large sum of money belonging to the city of Buffalo, and the owner of numerous bank accounts in New York on a salary of $5,000 a year. The selection of such a man for the head of an association would naturally put the authorities on the alert in any well-governed city. They would ask, what must be the objects of such a society? and would detail detectives to keep an eye on its activities. Here it carries on its operations openly without the slightest fear, and even proposes itself for the government of the city. Has there ever been an odder thing since municipalities first took their rise? The apparent revolt against Sheehan at the Croker dinner was squelched at this meeting, and a resolution passed declaring that they loved Sheehan "as a man," and respected him as "a leader." Sheehan then moved that Croker be made an honorary member of the committee, which was carried, and means that Croker will still be the real head of the organization, and that Sheehan will fill towards him a position which Mike Daly filled towards Gilroy. The appointment of Sheehan, a notorious defaulter, is interesting as one more, and the most striking illustration of the boldness of the Tammany contempt for the morality of the community. The organization is, we think, the first of a political nature in the western world to make no pretence of seeking to promote better government. All preceding ones have given out that they were in pursuit of a reform of some kind. Tammany is the only one which has ever gone to the polls with the avowed object of making money by it. Similar organizations, like the Italian Camorra, do not vote. They levy blackmail secretly, and thus pay some homage to law and decency. The evolution of a voting Camorra by the country of Washington and Franklin is surely a strange phenomenon.

In Harper's Weekly of February 8, Julian Ralph has an article headed "Poison in the Civil Service." It bears upon undoubted evils and dangers. The effort to introduce the merit system in the federal service for many years had practically no help, nor even the approval of the employes themselves. But there came a time when the advantages of the system dawned upon them, and by classes according to employment, they began to form associations of which the National Association of Letter Carriers is an example. The tendency of these associations is to go beyond the legitimate field of reform and to pass into the realm of selfishness, and to try to get special advantages. Two years ago the letter carriers came near getting the approval of the National League to a bill granting them special privileges, such as trial before dismissal. Mr. Ralph sets out important examples of undoubted evils arising from this selfish struggle of classes of civil employes, national, state and municipal. The danger is the menacing attitude they take toward congressmen and with state legislatures like New York, the corrupting influence of their money must be added. We all know the abject condition to which the pension system has brought congressmen—so low that one demagogue from Indiana declared the other day in the house that he was there to vote for every pension bill introduced. The alarm can not be taken too quickly to prevent great associations of public employes reducing congressional and legislative representatives to the same whipped-cour condition.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE has hopes that the historian of the future will find in its ninety six numbers valuable and graphic material, and this material at least the Universities of Johns Hopkins, Wisconsin and Amherst College will have. It is for some student of the future that we complete the career of Bat Shea, who has suffered the penalty of death for a political murder, while the man actually responsible for him and his criminal career sits undisturbed and not dishonored or shunned by his fellows, a member of the senate of the United States. Senator Murphy's henchman, after an extraordinary struggle for escape from the law, fell at last before it. It is not too much to say that a long outraged public opinion finally aroused in its might could not be stilled, and brought to naught all of Senator Murphy's efforts to save his victim. But the methods to maintain the machine of Senator Murphy, tragic as they now seem, are the methods of several of his colleagues—Hill and Gorman and Quay and Brice and an ex-senator, Platt. All use intimidation, fraud and violence to maintain their boss-ship. The student of the future will be amazed as he glances at the accounts of great social functions at the capitol to find that most of these men are not social outcasts, but mingle on terms of intimacy with people of distinction, and that Platt sits at the governor and Mrs. Morton's table an honored guest. If the student is of foreign extraction, he will be positive he has fallen upon the rottenness of Rome before her fall. If he is an American student, he will understand that his country was very far from moral collapse, shocking as it appears in these annals.

THE civil service of Rochester, New York, appears to be honeycombed with favorites who were given their places in violation of the civil service rules—adopted, mind you, under a preceding administration in pursuance of a state statute. The new mayor was mindful of his oath of office, and he gave notice that he would veto the salary item of every placeholder not appointed in accordance with the rules. He began his lessons in respect for law by striking out the salaries of the city sealer and six city physicians whom the common council had appointed on the "cold toes" plan. The moment an honest man was found to be in the office of mayor a change came like magic. More than three hundred applicants are about to take the competitive examination, and among them are fifty now holding places illegally. The occupation of the spoilsman in Rochester is destroyed with one blow by a determined man. He will be justly honored and praised by the whole country. For any other course he would have been despised by the country and applauded by a ring of party workers. But any other course would have been grossly dishonest, contemptibly dishonorable, unmindful of the oath of office and treacherous to the interests of the people.

THE executive committee of the New York Civil Service Reform Association at a meeting, February 12, passed the following resolutions emphasizing the manner in which Governor Morton recently delivered himself and tried to deliver the civil service law of his state into the hands of Platt:

WHEREAS, The annual report of the State Civil Service Commissioners for the year 1895 affords gratifying evidence of the benefits to the state government from the application of the civil service laws, which have been in substance embodied in the constitution of this state by an overwhelming popular vote; and,

WHEREAS, It is equally obvious that these results, so advantageous to the public interests of the people of the whole state, have been assured by the faithful performance of their duties by the State Civil Service Commission as it was constituted during the past year; and,

WHEREAS, The experience of previous years has demonstrated that such public benefits from the execution of the civil service law may be wholly prevented by hostile sentiment and action on the part of the state executive authorities, especially by the appointment of officers who are not in sympathy with the principles of civil service reform, and who are ignorant of the duties to be performed in its administration,

Resolved, That the Civil Service Reform Association reaffirms its disapproval of the change in the membership of the State Civil Service Commission made lately by Governor Morton as a step calculated to shake the confidence of the people in the strength of his purpose to promote honesty and efficiency in the public service when other interest are arrayed against such a course on his part.

THE general assembly of Ohio seems likely to pass a corrupt practices act drawn by Mr. Cushing, of Cleveland, and a bill for the application of the merit system to cities prepared by the Cincinnati Civil Service Reform Association. Ohio has always been classed with Indiana as being thoroughly debauched by the use of money in campaigns, and that such bills should come anywhere near passing shows the irresistible onward march of administrative reform. Even our Indiana politicians will yield or be brushed aside in time.

FROM Chicago comes the news that Frank Lawler is dead. He carried to Washington in a telescope trunk a petition with 60,000 signatures asking that he be made postmaster of Chicago. In the waiting-room of Postmaster General Bissell he exhibited to the editor of the CHRONICLE a condensation of his petition by classes, making a very effective showing, which he clinched with the remark that the Chicago postoffice had been managed by a Swallow-Tail and that it needed a Short-Hair. His last public act was as alderman to vote for a shady electric railway franchise. In the same city Judge Payne, of the superior court, charged the county commissioners with being open to pulls to secure their influence to corrupt grand jurors selected by them. Being challenged by the commissioners, the judge came promptly to the mark with a check for $300 indorsed by one commissioner. It is claimed that he got the money on this for a pull. In Chicago, also, a committee of one hundred citizens has been formed to undertake the work of removing city affairs from party politics. That Lyman J. Gage is chairman leaves no doubt of a determined and systematic effort by influential men.

THE Lincoln League, of Indiana, which is a combination of republican clubs of this state, had a meeting here recently and claiming to be the bone and sinew of the party its resolutions may be looked to as indicating what it thinks should now engage a citizen's political activities. According to these resolutions the citizen should rely upon the republican party, should stand aghast that the country is borrowing money, should favor the resumption of the American policy of protective tariff, should favor bi metalism and the Monroe doctrine, and so on. This is a very old and deep rut. A protective tariff has not been departed from, but, like the Monroe doctrine, it is safe to mouth about. To have declared the tariff not a matter for partisan strife would have been a patriotic and progressive action. The progressive question connected with the finances is whether the government shall be compelled to go on borrowing money to maintain gold payments or whether that burden shall be shifted to the banks and the government go out of the banking business. A declaration upon that point would at least have shown that the party had something genuine to work for. Bi-metalism in the sense of simultaneous circulation upon equal terms is unknown in the history of American currency; but that, too, is a safe party yell. There is one question which in far-reaching beneficial effect and importance to the greatest number is the first question of these times; that is the question of municipal reform. Yet these clubs seem never to have heard of it. It is not, however, an obscure subject, for no other is so generally discussed among the citizens. The secret is that political clubs are not formed for the purposes of political progress. They would naturally be looked to as the leaders of public opinion and their declarations would naturally be even in advance of party principles as stated in regular convention platforms. But their declarations are mere platitudes. If the abolition of slavery had depended upon the agitation of political clubs, we should have been buying and selling slaves to-day. Civil service reform has been accomplished in the civil service of the United States; yet it is safe to say that in the thirty years it has taken to bring it about, not a dozen political clubs have declared in its favor.

IT seems that the gerrymander in Indiana has received its quietus. The supreme court in an opinion by Judge Howard has laid down such rules for the interpretation of apportionment laws as to effectually block future attempts to cheat the people of this state out of a fair chance to govern themselves. The utterly whipped attitude of the party managers and legislators and ex-legislators who for a generation have been engaged in this rascally business is a wholesome sight, and there is no choice of parties. The republicans a year ago played the last trick, and now they are signing a written pledge that if the governor will call them together again, they will respect their oaths of office and pass an honest bill. Governor Matthews, however, does not seem disposed to do this, but is inclined to leave the state under an outrageous gerrymander fixed by his party in 1885. Governor Matthews will need a good deal of furbishing before he will make a Presidential candidate that will command much of the independent vote which decides elections in these times. He refused in his last message to recommend that the state institutions be put under the merit system, and he would do something to take himself out of ordinary hide-bound democracy by calling the legislature together to enact an honest apportionment law and at the same time by his recommendations rectify his blunder regarding the state institutions.

THE board of public safety of this city has been making a report to the mayor in which they say: "The board removed twenty-nine members of the police force for inefficiency in the discharge of their duties, and their places were filled by men carefully selected, whom we considered especially adapted for police service." The board omits to say that it filled these places in impudent and reckless disregard of the law and set to the police force a flagrant example of law breaking. Nor did the board define its notion of the kind of a man "especially adapted for police service." The report of the investigating committee of the Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, the statements of which have never been in any manner questioned or denied, would seem to throw some light on that question. Referring to these twenty-nine new appointees the report said:

Among the new appointees was one who had been dismissed from the police force under a charge of levying blackmail on fallen women; another who had been refused an appointment formerly on the ground that he had been running a crap game, and who had once been in the police court for assault and battery; another who had been arrested for assault and battery; another who was known as a drunkard; another who, while on the police force, had been charged with borrowing money from a keeper of a house of ill-fame, and who had afterwards been dismissed; another who had been dismissed from the police force for insubordination and for leaving his post when on duty; another who had been dismissed for sleeping while on duty; another who is ruptured and is physically unfit to be a patrolman, and others still, the reasons for whose appointment can only be found in their having been active workers for the election of Mayor Taggart. One of the improper appointees is a relative of Police Commissioner Mack.

THE prohibition party held a county convention in this city on the 9th, and chose twenty-three delegates to the party state convention to be held February 25. This party is organized as all other parties are, having township and ward committees, men and county and state committees. How is it, then, that under our statute requiring the policemen and firemen of this city to be "as nearly as possible equally divided politically," this city administration only gives places to republicans and democrats? The same question may be asked in behalf of the regularly organized populist party. The CHRONICLE is neither prohibitionist nor populist, but it believes in a fair and impartial enforcement of law, whether as to sidewalks, or saloons, or appointing policemen and firemen. We know very well that, in answer to these questions, Mayor Taggart and the board of public safety would say that they do not recognize the above organizations as parties. But they are parties; such an answer, however, would be of a kind with Taggart's refusal to recognize as law civil service rules (which he had never read), adopted in obedience to a command of a state statute.

A MONUMENT TO CORRUPTION.

The capitol commission reported to the senate finance committee to day that it will take $1,716,647.99 to complete the capitol—$1,356,388.60 for contract work, per bids submitted, and $360,259.39 for day labor. No effort is made by members of the legislature to conceal the fact that they are opposed to having the work on the capitol completed by contract. The adoption of that system would mean the loss of a good deal of patronage to senators and assemblymen of both parties, whose influence secures employment every winter for some of their constituents in the construction departments of the capitol. Few years go by when at least half a million dollars is not spent on the work, and that sum represents plenty of patronage. —Albany dispatch, New York Evening Post, February 12.

A correspondent who is appalled at the cost of the state capitol nevertheless asks The Express if we really mean that we would have the work on it stop where it is, leaving the building in an unfinished state. Yes; we mean just that. The capitol is near enough to completion to be available for all the uses to which it would be put if entirely finished. The argument that it must be finished since it has been begun is the one that has wheedled the people out of the millions that have already been spent on it. The great pile never will be finished while that argument will avail to get appropriations for continuing the work. Let it stand as it is, with its unfinished parts a monument to the corruption that has built it. Let it so remain till the sight of it shames the state officials into dealing with it honestly. —Buffalo Express, February 14.

NEXT to the career of Tammany in New York City the building of the Albany capitol is probably the greatest example of practical politics in the country. It was begun some thirty years ago under Tweed. The limit of the cost was to be three millions and a half. But when that sum was spent the building was complete only to the water tables. Some twenty-one millions in all have so far been spent. The work to show for it is comparatively of small value. It has been simply a generation of appropriations drawn from the treasury by favorites given places by bosses who rendered little service in return. Successive party bosses have worked this gigantic scheme of robbery until a child born when the corner stone was laid is now well on toward middle age.

In Harper's Weekly of February 15, we find the following description of two paintings by Elihu Vedder for the new congressional library which we give, with the remark that one should be spread upon the walls of the Albany senate as expressive of its spirit and the other in like manner upon the walls of the assembly:

To the left of the central panel Mr. Vedder places his allegory of corrupt legislation. A robust, beautiful figure, with an ignoble face, is seated carelessly upon a throne, of which the arms are painted to represent horns of plenty. But all the plenitude is flowing toward the woman herself. She bears a parody of the scales of justice with a sliding weight. An old man of crafty countenance sits at her left in possession of the law, the ballot and riches. He places a bribe in the scales. On the other side a child stands showing a useless distaff, and apparently pleading in vain for work. The little jar in which the child's savings might have been hoarded lies broken at her feet. Behind her are smokeless chimneys, but in the background beyond the rich briber the factories are seen in full operation, their chimneys eloquent of busy life below. In the next panel the dire outcome of corruption is portrayed. The painting represents the brawny Goddess of Anarchy trampling the ruins of an arch. Her crown is of serpents. In one hand she bears a lighted torch made of a scroll, and in the other she holds a cup. She is spurning under her feet, and casting into the ruin beneath her, symbols of religion, law, learning and the arts. She is aided by a figure of Ignorance on her right, who uses a surveyor's staff for her fell purpose. Ignorance is kneeling on a millstone rendered useless by anarchy, and a broken and rusted cog-wheel resting with it among the thorns of desolation suggests industry abandoned to ruin and decay. On the left of the central figure is a muscular type of violence engaged in the removal of the corner-stone from a building. He has his eyes fixed on the cup of madness in the hand of the goddess. A lighted bomb in the foreground is a reminder that anarchy contains within itself the seed of its own destruction.

MURPHY AND SHEA.

Boss Murphy, of Troy, otherwise known as Senator Murphy, of New York, stands by his heelers when they get into trouble. He pleaded with Governor Morton to commute the sentence of "Bat" Shea, who killed Robert Ross, a republican election watcher at the polls, and who is to be executed next week. Murphy's son went to see the governor in Shea's behalf, as his father's representative, but the governor refused to interfere. It was the Murphy machine which prompted the row in which Ross was killed, and Murphy is warranted in feeling a little annoyed that his political methods should have cost two lives at one election. —Springfield Republican.

The confession of John McGough that he, and not Bartholomew Shea, was the murderer of Robert Ross, will fall on incredulous ears. His statement, however, makes necessary the postponement of Shea's execution and a new trial. Just before Shea was respited by the governor in December, the Albany Argus printed a story hinting at some such development as this. Later the Troy Times asserted that the politicians who have befriended Shea from the first were planning to secure a confession from McGough in case all other steps to save Shea should fail. Matters have turned out exactly as foretold.

The evidence against Shea was of the most positive character. The murder was committed in open daylight, and was seen by many persons. Witnesses who had no possible motive for fixing the guilt on the wrong man, swore to having seen Shea fire the fatal shot. If now it could be proved that these witnesses were mistaken, there would be no possibility of ever establishing a case which could send anybody to the electric chair for Robert Ross's murder. Even McGough's own confession would not do it, for he would probably deny the truth of the confession on his own trial, after having secured the release of Shea, and no other testimony could be found against him which would stand under the light of the previous testimony given against Shea.

Shea's crime was one of the most infamous ever committed in this state. He was employed by the democratic machine in Troy to intimidate republican voters. It has been evident from the first that powerful political influence has been exerted to save him from the consequences of his act. The public well remembers the scandalous blindness of the Troy police officials at the time of the murder. They first arrested one of the murdered man's friends and openly asserted that they had a clear case against him, though numerous witnesses were coming forward voluntarily and declaring that Shea was the guilty man. It required powerful pressure to secure Shea's arrest at all. A day or two after the murder a statement defending him was issued to the public over the signatures of two high officials of the democratic state machine at Albany. The warden of Dannemora prison, in whose charge McGough now is, owes his appointment to Senator Murphy and is counted one of the active members of the Troy machine.

If McGough's confession fails to stand the light of examination in court, steps should be taken to see who the plotters are and to what extent they are interested in the crimes of McGough and Shea. The responsibility for Robert Ross's death rests primarily on other souls than the wretch who fired the shot. There is no place in the state of New York for the politics which employs murder to gain its ends or upholds murder when a political tool has blundered into it.—Buffalo Express, January 6.

* * *

All the circumstances connected with the getting up of this confession point to it as a last desperate move of the Murphy ring to save their tool Shea. The warden of the prison from which McGough's confession was given out was twenty years ago a compositor in a Troy newspaper office. He "got into politics," and finally, through Senator Murphy's influence, secured the important position which he now holds at Dannemora.—Troy dispatch, New York Evening Post, January 7.

* * *

A mass meeting of the citizens of Troy was held this evening under the auspices of the committee of public safety. It was a very large and earnest gathering. An address to the public was adopted, reviewing the facts regarding the murder of Robert Ross on March 6, 1894, and the trial, conviction, and sentence to death of Bartholomew Shea for the crime. It also quotes from the unanimous opinion of the court of appeals, written by Judge Peckham, sustaining the verdict, and expressing detestation of the practices which resulted in the tragedy.

In conclusion, the address says:

McGough's so-called confession is a part of a trick to enable McGough to save his partner in crime without incurring additional punishment himself. It is at variance with the facts established at the trial, and is not worthy of serious consideration. It is the unsupported word of a criminal; a thief, who served a term for burglary and larceny; a convict, who is now serving a term for attempted murder; a self-confessed perjurer, who swore that he saw Boland shoot Ross, and who now says he did the shooting himself. We prefer to believe the testimony of the fifteen respectable men who saw the occurrence, and identified Shea as the man who did the shooting. Mindful of this injunction, we are here to-night to reassert our belief in the sanctity of the ballot, to express anew our detestation of the crime in resisting which Robert Ross met his death; to give voice to our indignation at all improper attempts to frustrate justice, to uphold the officers of the law in their efforts to bring the guilty to punishment, and to ask for the co-operation and moral support of all good citizens throughout our republic. We are not actuated by any desire for revenge. We deplore the death of Robert Ross, but his murderers were guilty of a still greater crime; for, in the murder of a citizen they were guilty of a crime against the republic and against republican institutions. If such a crime is to go unpunished, "government of the people, by the people, for the people," must perish from the earth.—Troy dispatch, New York Times, January 14.

* * *

Osborne C. Lansing, one of the most important witnesses for the prosecution in the trial of "Bat" Shea, was attacked on the street by four men in this city last night. He was struck on the head and badly bruised. One of the assailants said, "You went to Schoharie to try to get in some testimony in the Shea case, didn't you?" This is not the first time that Mr. Lansing has been assaulted since he gave testimony in the Shea trial.—Troy dispatch, January 30.

* * *

Immediately, friends of the condemned circulated petitions asking the governor to commute the sentence to life imprisonment. Those who refused to sign were threatened. Several storekeepers were boycotted by the Shea faction. The proprietor of a large concern was forced to take his advertisement out of a news paper that had kept up a constant fire against Shea. Senator Murphy, head of the famous political machine that bears his name, wrote a personal letter to the governor asking for commutation of the sentence. Other democrats of national and state renown made the same request. The strongest political and personal influence was brought to bear upon Governor Morton to mollify the sentence.

For two years the chair in electrocution chamber at Clinton prison has been waiting for Shea, and five distinct times has it been prepared to receive him, four occasions seeing the law temporarily cheated of its victim.

The sensational episodes that have marked the case since the commission of the crime and down to the day of the execution will not be lacking to-morrow. It is a singular and rather horrible fact that Shea will be executed by his friends. Warden Thayer, who will read the death warrant to him, has known him from boyhood, living in the same city with him. Deputy Warden McKenna, who will lead the procession of death as a guard to the prisoner, is also from Troy and knew the convicted man well.—Buffalo Express.

* * *

The funeral of Bat Shea to-day was made the occasion of a great demonstration by his friends and morbid sympathizers. Crowds of curious persons struggled until midnight last night to get into the house where the body lay, and the mass of people in front of the entrance extended across the street so as to impede the passage of the cars. A squad of police tried to keep the crowd under control. At each of the collar shops yesterday funds were subscribed by the girl employes for the purchase of flowers and for the funeral expenses, $300 being raised in one shop. A great crowd assembled to see the funeral procession, and a reserve force of police was kept on duty. Although cold weather and a driving snow-storm prevailed, as early as seven o'clock the cars going toward the location of the church were jammed with persons anxious to get a good position in the church. The streets between Shea's home and the church, a distance of about a half-mile, were filled with spectators so that traffic was cut off. At the house and at the church squads of police from the reserve force made attempts to keep the crowds in abeyance, but with poor effect. By nine o'clock the church was filled and fully 10,000 persons crowded the thoroughfares.—Troy dispatch, February 13.

* * *

The last scheme of the machine was to procure a new trial for Shea on the ground of newly discovered evidence in the form of a confession of a fellow-heeler, one McGough, who is in prison for complicity in Shea's crime, but this effort has failed, and Shea went to the electric chair on Tuesday. It is to be hoped that the two New York senators, both of whom have encouraged and profited by the methods of electioneering which logically resulted in the killing of Ross, and who are therefore—Murphy especially—morally responsible for Shea's crime and its consequences, will give a thought to their victim.—Springfield Republican, February 14.

* * *

Bossism in the government of a city reached its logical conclusion in the execution this morning of "Bat" Shea for the murder that he committed in Troy two years ago, in carrying out the orders of the machine to which he was attached. The man who has been put to death by the state to-day was in himself only an ordinary criminal, whose just punishment would invite no comment; but he was part of a system which extended from the ward politics of his city to the capital of the nation, and which placed Edward Murphy in the senate of the United States * * *

Shea was poor and friendless. But he was defended upon his trial by lawyers of great ability, who always charge large fees for their services. No expense was spared to secure the best possible presentation of his case on each of the successive appeals to higher courts. When the McGough "confession" offered a loophole of escape through the meshwork of legal technicalities, legal ability was again at the wretched convict's service. There was, of course, only one possible explanation of all this, as well as of the suspicious fact that the "confession" was made to a prison official who was a protege of Murphy. The Troy machine was standing by its man all the way from the polling place where he led a gang of repeaters to cheat for it to the electric chair at Dannemora, from which it would have saved him if money could have found ability enough to circumvent the law.

"Bat" Shea has been justly executed. A worthless brute, his crime was without defense or excuse. But Shea was not alone to blame that he is put to death at the age of twenty-five for a murder done in the course of "politics," as he understood it, instead of earning an honest living at his trade as a moulder. He was the mere tool of the machine which has long made Troy the worst governed city of its size in the Union. He would not have been "in politics," he would not have been breaking up caucuses, he would not have been leading a gang of repeaters from one voting place to another, he would not have armed himself and would not have used his weapon on election day, if the machine organized by Edward Murphy had not educated him to secure a majority for its candidate at any cost.

Society has done its duty in the case of "Bat" Shea so far as he is concerned. But its duty in the case is not done when he is executed. It should visit punishment upon the man who is morally responsible for his crime. The head of the democratic machine in Troy can not be convicted of murder in any court. But Edward Murphy is morally guilty of an attempt to murder a system of government that can only live when elections are honest. Public sentiment should serve notice on the United States senator from Troy that he is held responsible as a partner in the crime that was punished by the execution at Dannemora this morning.—New York Evening Post.

MARYLAND REPUBLICANS AND CIVIL SERVICE REFORM.

(From The Baltimore Sun.)

An Absorbing Occupation.

The leaders of the party are beginning to realize that too much time has been needlessly consumed without any result, and they have seen the necessity of curbing the rank spirit of spoils which is rampant everywhere.

It is learned from the applications filed in the executive department, that nearly one-half the members of the legislature are after office for themselves, and in their pursuit of spoils, seem to wholly neglect the interest of constituencies.

Nothing like it was ever known in a Maryland legislature before. Up to date, only one bill has been passed by both houses, and that received the approval of the governor this morning. It was a bill sanctioning the sale and conveyance by John M. Glenu and Wm. L. Glenn of a lot of ground at the southwest corner of Preston and Chester streets in the city of Baltimore to the vestry of the Church of the Atonement. This is the first fruit of legislation.

One-third of the session has elapsed and nothing in the way of legislation has been completed, except this private bill. The difficulty of the situation seems to be not so much with the party leaders as with the members of the legislature, who are more engrossed in the struggle over spoils than in the struggle for good government.

Republican Clubs Sound The Alarm.

At a meeting of the First Legislative District Association of Republican Clubs, held at the Fairmount Republican Club of the third ward, George W. Golden, of the Active Club, presiding, and W. A. Johnson, Jr., secretary pro tem., the following resolutions were adopted: "That we call upon our representatives in the house of delegates to use every honorable means to defeat the Bruce civil service law or submit it to the vote of the people, and we would suggest to all other republican clubs of the city to prevail upon their representatives to work together to that end. That we indorse the manly and courageous stand taken by Senator Wilkinson, of St. Mary's county, and commend his action as an example for all republican members to follow."

At a meeting of the thirteenth ward regular Republican Club, resolutions were adopted that: "We earnestly condemn the Bruce civil service bill as presented before the legislature, and demand that members of that body, elected by our votes, shall vigorously oppose it as being un-American, un-democratic and un-republican, and in the interest of a privileged class, which would build up an office-holding aristocracy never intended by the founders of our government, and against which a vast majority will protest at the ballot-box if the opportunity be given them."

The following resolution was left at the Sun office last night:

"The Lloyd Lowns Republicans of the 16 Ward do here by comden and oppose The passag of the Bruce Civles bill in the house of Legature."

Mr. Charles J. Bonaparte's Answer.

"Gentlemen of the association," said Mr. Bonaparte, "the time has come to speak plainly.

"A little more than a year ago, in an address to the Unit Club of the twelfth ward, I told the managers of the democratic party that in the choice of Judge Dobler, in the republican majority throughout the state at the election of 1894, the people of Maryland had given them 'a notice to quit,' not, indeed, an absolute notice, but a fair warning, that unless they remedied abuses long since scandalous and discarded, leaders long since tried and found wanting within the year next to elapse, that year would see the end of their party's rule.

"I say to-night to the leaders of the republican party, that it will be driven from power before it has ruled as many months as its rival did years, unless they promptly rebuke the insolence and rapacity of its parasites, abandon at once and finally practices decisively condemned by public opinion, and satisfy far better than they have yet shown either ability or desire to satisfy the reasonable expectations of those through whose votes, labors and sacrifices power was given them.

"I say to Governor Lowndes, that if he were a candidate for his present office at an election to be held to-morrow, thousands of votes which he received in November would be cast for his late or almost any other competitor, and thousands more would not be cast at all. He would be in grave danger of defeat, and I do not believe that in this city his vote would equal that of his party in 1894.

"It is fair to say that the gathering storm of public indignation, whose mutterings may be drowned in the clamor of office-seekers and the wrangling of greedy factions for the governor and his advisers, but which grows daily louder and more threatening, is due to nothing which Governor Lowndes has himself said or done, and it is due much less to what the general assembly has done or its members have said, at least in debate, than to what it has left undone, and to the impudent boasts of notorious political adventurers—boasts apparently but too well warranted—regarding its probable action and the motives and influences which will determine this.

"The typical 'republican club' is well-known in Baltimore politics. It is one of the many unhappy fruits of our proximity to Washington and of the long control of federal patronage by the party here in an evident minority. Its genesis is familiar to us all. A politician, booming himself for some office, 'rounds up' in a room he has hired over a grog shop, a herd of shabby loafers, buys for them on the instalment plan, a second-hand table and chairs, guarantees them a reasonable credit at the bar down stairs, picks out one relatively sober as president and one not wholly illiterate as secretary, and, behold the Elijah Pogram Republican Club of the twenty-third ward, born on its brief life and ready to 'resolute' and 'delegate' in its owner's interest.

"When these gentry tell us that they detest civil service reform they give us no news. We are as ready to believe this as that they abhor cleanliness and sobriety and honest industry, and well nigh everything which makes man estimable, or life in civilized society a source of happiness. If the convicts in our penitentiary or the prisoners in our jail gravely resolved that they didn't like those laws which prevent or punish larceny, no one would question their sincerity. The Australian chorus was doubtless hearty:

"We'll damn that jury, every man,
"That sent him to Botany Bay."

"One of the greatest blessings conferred by civil service reform upon a community which thoroughly and honestly adopts it is that it forces hundreds, even thousands, of men to work for their living who would otherwise grovel in penury, idleness and sordid vice, doing all sorts of political odd jobs in the hope that they may somehow, by hook or by crook, and usually the latter, pick up a transient and precarious living at the tax-payers' cost. No one who knows anything of degraded human nature will wonder that it is as odious to those it would thus transform as are soap and water to a tramp, and their clumsy expression of the hatred they feel for it would not be worth mention were this not serious and menacing as a symptom—a symptom because it shows the course which responsible politicians of the party, on which these men sponge, will take if they dare; the clubs are allowed, even encouraged, to ask them to defy public opinion, that they may judge whether such defiance will be safe.

"Gentlemen of the association, you have been called together to aid in answering this question. When I say, as I do, without a moment's doubt or hesitancy, that to put or keep in power such a party as theirs would then become I would not move a finger, spend a dollar, write or speak a word, would not even cast my vote or lend my name, it is, to them and to the public, a matter of small moment if I speak for myself alone. I believe that in saying this I voice the thoughts of thousands of my fellow-citizens, just as I believed a year since that, as I then felt, so had a majority of the voters of Maryland come to feel. I ask you, gentlemen of the association, to say, as plainly as I have spoken, whether you think I am right."—The Sun, February 5.

Reply of The Malster Republican Club.

"Mr. Charles J. Bonaparte has, with his disregard of truth, asserted in an address before the civil service reform league that which is false and slanderous as to the republican clubs of this city," and "that the club denounce his statements as infamously false and the ravings of a fanatic against which we call upon all the republican clubs to vigorously protest."

Another.

At a meeting of the Wm. H. Schilling Republican Association of Baltimore the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"We commend the action of all the members of the legislature who absented themselves from the meeting called for the 6th of February by the reform league of Balto. City and addressed specially by Charles J. Bonaparte for the passage of the Bruce civil service bill at Annapolis. Many of these are active members of the republican clubs referred to in a former Speech by this Man Bonaparte And he justly deserves the censure of all good thinking Men.

"We are Not of the Herd of Shabby Loafers of the New Territory Ward 23 referred to by Charles J. Bonaparte. We are American Citizens fully able to defend our Course against Civil Service. And We Consider the Source from whence Came Such foul and filthy Language Eminating from this Man Bonaparte Who on a previous occasion has Compared our public Schools as Common Soup house.

"We are not disposed to rest under such Language and refections. We care not for the opinion of Bonaparte—our Characters for Cleanliness, Sobriety and honesty will compare with his. We do not Live over Liquor Stores or Lager Beer Saloons and our furniture is not of the make up he no doubt would Like it to be. one Second hand Table and Chair bought on the Installment plan. Not blessed perhaps as Bonaparte with the Silk Tapestry and Cushion Chair to Lounge upon But being Voters we can measure arms with you at the ballot box and this right we reserve to ourselves and Civil Service we will defeat if left to the Voice of the people whence it should rightfully and properly go.

"We denounce all such unjust Legislation and will not forget those who are Endeavouring to make the Legislature believe that Civil Service was an issue in our Last Campaign. We deny that such was the Case—And it was not a part of the platform of the Republican party adopted at Cambridge—And we call upon our friends in the Lower house of our assembly to stand by us in our rights and defeat the Bruce bill as we believe you will or send it to the people.

"Chicago and New York were granted this privilege as argued by those who favor this bill. Now let the people of Maryland have the say also at the ballot box."

Mr. Bonaparte Closes.

"What they say about me will hurt no one—not even themselves—while their indorsement of the principles of civil service reform may do good to their party and to the community. Indeed, I should be pleased to see the Bruce bill amended by a clause disqualifying me for any state or city office of trust or profit for the rest of my life if that would insure its immediate passage. Such a clause would not cost the republican party a single vote—at all events, would not cost it mine—while the bill's defeat or its serious injury by amendment will, in my humble judgment, drive that party from power at the next general election with the approval and possibly the help of thousands of citizens who feel as I do. 'I am accustomed to displeasing politicians; pretty much all my connection with public affairs has consisted in treading on tender feet, and I am prepared for the usual sounds to follow. These are, after all, very harmless. If the republican party in Maryland prefers my room to my company I shall not insist upon staying where I am not wanted, and I hope to survive the separation.'

Before The Legislature.

"I will endeavor by what I may say to redeem some of my misdeeds, whether in the remote or near past, by one virtue—that of advocating a civil service reform bill," said Mr. Charles J. Bonaparte. "We are here for two things. First, as to what we want, and second, to tell you that we want it very much. The last is the more important, and I think I speak for the whole of this large delegation when I say that we ask earnestly and unceasingly for this bill.

"It has been said that it is the desire of many delegates to submit the bill to the people. This experiment has been tried. In New York a similar law has been made part of the organic law of the state by popular vote. In Chicago the opportunity was offered to vote on this question when no other issue was involved and it was adopted.

"The time has passed to question whether or not the people of Baltimore want a merit system applied. A grave responsibility rests upon any legislative body which will longer keep open the door of the spoils system. We think we voice the sentiment of the people of Baltimore when we say we do want this bill.

"Public opinion asks this legislature to place itself on record in the application of the merit system to offices the incumbents of which are paid by the tax-payers of Baltimore city. On this question the public mind is made up."

Mr. Joseph Packard, Jr., who followed, explained the features of the pending bill. Among other things, he said: "Many democrats who voted against their party last election did so by reason of the pledge of the successful party that a civil service reform bill should be enacted. We are willing to accept it now as only applicable to Baltimore, for we remember the reform of the Australian ballot. This at first was not of general application, but after its good results had been demonstrated, the exempted counties were not only willing, but anxious to come in."

"There seems as much sense in civil service reform to those who don't know anything about it," said John C. Rose, "as there was in Mr. Bonaparte's description of a typical republican club. Examinations for place may accomplish all that is claimed, and may not always produce the best results, but they will serve to keep notoriously unfit persons out of public positions. When a democratic senate has passed a civil service bill it is necessary for the republican house to go one better, and not only pass this bill, but all other reform measures as speedily as possible. By doing this we will carry out the governor's promise and keep the state in line in 1896. The scramble for office will break up the republican party, and will only provoke further disgraceful primary elections, of which the republicans of Baltimore have already given us a sample."

Mr. T. Wallis Blackistone said, he was one of the democrats who voted the republican ticket and who had induced other democrats to do so, because of the promises to pass this measure. "If you do not do so," he continued, "we will be taunted by those democrats who said we only aided in putting out one set of spoilsmen so that another might get in. I took your platform in good faith as did more than 10,000 democrats in Baltimore city who voted your ticket."

Mr. J. Frank Supplee, the last speaker, said he wanted to add his condemnation to the charge of Mr. Bonaparte, that republican club members were loafers and bums. It was unfair, he said, to attack all the clubs because a few had been unwise enough to repudiate this measure.

Later, the Boys Have An Inning.

President W. Cabell Bruce, of the senate, the champion of civil service reform, as he sat in the space before the speaker's desk in the hall of the house of delegates this morning, reminded the spectators of Daniel in the den of lions. He was in the midst of the delegates from the republican clubs who had come down to have their say in opposition to civil service reform. They did not eat Mr. Bruce, but they roared at him extremely.

Amid the hoots and jeers and laughter of a reform legislature he was denounced as a "political highwayman" and the "champion spoilsman of the time, who had put himself upon the bargain counter for sale to either of the parties who would take him." And yet the champion of civil service reform was before a civil service reform committee and in the midst of people solemnly pledged to that measure.

The members of the legislature from the city who had sullenly absented themselves from the reform meeting last week when Messrs. Bonaparte, Gaither, Smith and others spoke in favor of reform, gathered into this meeting and laughed and applauded and jeered and made merry in turn. It was a great contrast.

Mr. Bruce stood his ground like a courageous man and compelled this reluctant crowd to give him a respectful hearing. They groaned and hissed when he mentioned Chas. J. Bonaparte's name, but he even made them listen to him as he spoke of the honesty and courage of that gentleman.

Major A. M. Hancock made a speech which created the wildest enthusiasm. He said it seems to be assumed, especially in Baltimore, that the house of delegates is incapable of doing its work and every civil service society and every reform society esteems it its duty to formulate bills and send them down here and demand their enactment. The house is denounced because they have not turned things upside down and made heaven of hell and in forty days wiped from the statute books the accumulated legislation of Rasin and Lananhan for thirty years.

Turning to President Bruce, who sat just in front of him, not ten feet away, Major Hancock said:

"I consider William Cabell Bruce the most unmitigated spoilsman in the United States. He is the only political highwayman. He has put himself upon the bargain counter to go to the highest bidder. When he saw John Walter Smith going to the president's chair in the senate he cried, 'Stop! Give me that office or I will go over to the republicans.' Such a spectacle has not been seen as that presented by Mr. Bruce when he tells a republican governor that his appointments must be satisfactory to him or they will all be held up. Is there no manhood in the republican party that we should stand this?"

Then the Major turned his attention to Mr. Charles J. Bonaparte. He said Mr. Bonaparte is so light that he treads the upper air and does not get down to the earth. His Corsican blood makes him favor the vendetta.

Mr. Thomas W. Blades followed in a speech of fifteen minutes. He considered the civil service bill a plot of the kid glove, silk-stock-ing gentry to create a monopoly to rule the country by an oligarchy. He honored Senator Wilkinson because it had been said he could not do a sum in long division and could not take an examination which would entitle him to the place of screwman in a tobacco warehouse. "If you don't intend to kill the bill," Mr. Blades concluded, "give it to the people and they will kill it."

Mayor Hooper's ideas of civil service reform and economy, particularly the latter, have not made him very popular with members of the Log Cabin (republican) Club, on East Montgomery street. Members of the club think he is inclined to abolish too many officers, and to retain too many democrats in office. Last night members of the club turned his large picture to the wall, and then held a jollification meeting over it. The picture is a nicely framed crayon, which Mayor Hooper presented to the club during the late campaign.—Baltimore American, February 1.

From The Sun Editorials.

The republican party in Maryland has arrived, sooner, perhaps, than its members expected, at the "parting of the ways," when it must definitely decide which road it will take. Entrusted, provisionally and on probation, with a measure of political power which it has never before enjoyed in this city and state, and may never enjoy again, it is brought face to face with its own pledges and promises, upon the faith and strength of which its candidates were elected last November, and it is called upon to say whether it means to keep those pledges or not. And when we speak of the republican party, we do not refer to a mere political entity, much less an abstraction, we mean the republican governor, members of the legislature and city council, who, but for their solemn promises of reform, would not to-day be occupying their present places. Mayor Hooper thus far stands almost alone in the readiness and determination he has exhibited to fulfill the pledges to which he owes his election. How about the rest—the other ninety-and-nine who have yet to show by their works that they have either recognition or remembrance of the causes and influences which wafted them into power?

Let them make no mistake. The healthy, honest indignation of the people, which was strong enough to crush the thirty-years'-old despotism of the democratic bosses, will trample out of existence the cockatrice's eggs of republican misrule and corruption before the end of as many months. The loud-mouthed, shallow-pated republican politicians who are proclaiming their devotion to the spoils system will never be allowed to grow to the stature of "bosses." They will die young—plucked up by the roots in their greenness and immaturity by the same hands which so mercilessly rooted out the weeds and tares in the democratic garden, even at the cost of laying the garden waste. In fact, there is and will be far less toleration of republican misgovernment than there was of democratic. There are none of the associations, the habits and prejudices of long years, almost a lifetime, to plead in behalf of republican abuses and their authors. The old servant had abused his trust, had been warned and admonished year after year, and it cost an effort, a painful effort, afterward to dismiss and get rid of him. The new servant, who has no such old ties and associations to appeal to, if he shows himself worthless, impudent or dishonest, will be shown the door without hesitation or mercy.

If the republican party shall follow in the footsteps of the democratic ring and show itself unworthy of the trust committed to it, it will meet the same fate. Whether it will substantially redeem its promises and satisfy public expectations remains to be determined, but whether it does or not, the revolution of last fall can not fail to be productive of good results. If it accomplishes nothing else, the storm has at least partially purified the political atmosphere as far as the democratic party is concerned, and by freeing that party from the malign influences that have disgraced its management has put it in a position to recover public confidence and support. The party can, of course, once more bow its neck to the yoke and put up its hands for the fetters of political serfdom, but for the present it is emancipated, and it can, if it chooses work out its own salvation and redemption. Above all and better than all, last year's campaign has demonstrated the power of the people and sown the seeds of independent political thought and action so essential to free and pure government; and we have made an incalculable gain in the emancipation of the manhood of the state from the political thralldom to which it had been subject so long, and in the perpetual warning which has been served upon bosses of both political parties.

Secretary Morton, of the department of agriculture, has appointed John Nordhous, of Chicago, Ill., his private secretary. Mr. Nordhous entered the agricultural department in 1893, through the civil service, and his promotion is a recognition by Secretary Morton of the merit system. Mr. Nordhous, for the past year, has been acting as stenographer to the secretary.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

VOL. II, No. 37.

INDIANAPOLIS, MARCH, 1896.

TERMS: { One dollar per annum.
10 cents per copy.

Published monthly. Publication office, No. 23 N. Meridian St., Indianapolis, Ind. Address,

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

SECRETARY CARLISLE is being urged for the presidency in some very respectable quarters. The position in which Mr. Cleveland will leave the civil service makes the choice of the next president a matter of vast importance. He can not upset what Mr. Cleveland will do, but he can play tricks which will appreciably prolong the life of the spoils system. Now to be plain about the matter, the CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE has steadily published facts which show that under Secretary Carlisle such tricks have been very common. Yet Civil Service Commissioner Rice, in a recent address in Boston, says: "Every member of the present cabinet believes thoroughly in the merit system and shows his belief by active co operation with the commission in its enforcement." Either the CHRONICLE has been mistaken, or Secretary Carlisle has been converted. What explanation can be made for the actions of Logan Carlisle? We can furnish an ugly list of facts, some of them of recent date, and none of them have ever been explained. Mr. Carlisle lately asked congress to provide for some money counters and not put them under the civil service law, though there is no better subject for competition. Will some one furnish a statement of the politics of the men actually appointed? The CHRONICLE is open to conviction, and it is the duty of those who are urging Mr. Carlisle's nomination to show conclusively that the civil service would not be controlled by Logan Carlisle.

THE President is about to make a final order which will nearly dispose of the spoils system in the federal service. This justifies the confidence lately expressed by the CHRONICLE that the battle of civil service reform has been won. As we have also said, the tricksters who can yet do a good deal to beat the law have not all been disposed of, and they may be expected to hang on for some time in a sort of guerrilla fashion and here and there give ground for the assertion that the reform is a failure. We may expect a good deal of this work should the republicans come back in 1897; but it will be the expiring kick. Deprived of spoil our congressmen will cease to be mere trimmers for votes and will put their minds to legislation upon business principles.

Now that the victory of civil service reform has been won, we may soon expect "practical" politicians to sum the matter up after their manner of summing up the slavery question. Everybody knows that Garrison had nothing to do with the abolition of slavery except to hinder and retard it. It was the Cotton Whigs who deftly managed that transaction. So now it will soon begin to appear that George William Curtis was only a detriment to the advance of civil service reform and that the real reformers were the party bosses, like Quay, Clarkson, Platt, Brice and Gorman.

It will be remembered that the office of pension agent at Indianapolis was sold to the present incumbent, upon his promise to let Voorhees, Turpie and others name the incumbents who were to be quartered upon the treasury. We understand that the promise was largely carried out. Then came the order placing the office under the civil service law, which was smiled at by the local party bosses, who thought they knew a trick or two yet. The first vacancy was recently filled under the law, and the party bosses, the heelers and ward workers, were paralyzed at the sight. The opinion of no local boss was asked. Neither the agent nor his chief clerk, the democratic politician, Riley, was consulted. The new incumbent is neither a heeler nor a worker, and has never had the least part in setting up primaries and conventions in Indianapolis, nor in "whooping 'er up" for Voorhees or Turpie. She is a girl from Kentucky!

THERE seems to be just a shadow of hesitation about nominating Tom Taggart, mayor of this city, as the democratic candidate for governor this year. The CHRONICLE believes that after considering all the facts there will be no hesitation. Taggart's predecessor carried this city for the republicans by nearly three thousand; but last fall, two years later, Taggart swept it for the democrats by nearly four thousand. Where is there a democrat in these times with such a running record as that? Then there are the four hospitals for the insane, the school for the feeble-minded, the home for soldiers' orphans, the prisons, and various other public institutions with some thousands of places, all of which may be looted, and there is proof to demonstrate that there is "no civil service nonsense" about Tom Taggart. Surely there will be no hesitation about nominating Taggart. He is a man after the machine's own heart.

THE work-house of this county is run largely upon the plan of prisons and has a considerable number of employes. When the republicans got possession of the county last year, they adopted the vicious and corrupt plan of a clean sweep and filled the places with party henchmen and personal favorites. The other day one of the prisoners refused to have his mustache cut off, and therefore one of these new guards took out a pistol and shot at him, although the prisoner wore a ball and chain and the guard was not in danger. We refer to this to show the results of the system. The people little understand the amount of inhumanity and barbarism displayed toward prisoners in most prisons. The warden is usually a political boss and a prominent "third house" man around the legislature. The under-employes are political henchmen. In every dilemma the only resort they can think of is brute force. The prisoners can rarely make an effectual protest, and the party does not fear them. It is a curious fact that the late republican rib-breaking legislature dared to loot the two prisons of this state but did not dare to touch the other public institutions. Of course it is manifest to every humane person that those who deal with prisoners should have long experience, permanence of tenure and be absolutely free from the reach of partisans. This would permit humanity to have a fair chance. The present system is cruel and selfish to the last degree.

It is well known that the post-office department has been trying to find out whether its letter-carriers do their duty. To this end it has sent agents to different cities to watch the carriers. There would seem to be nothing improper about this. A carrier only works eight hours a day, and compared with other employments he is well paid. If he keeps at his work industriously during this time, as he should, he need not care how many men are watching him. Yet a great "howl" has been raised over it. Cowardly congressmen have made themselves hoarse denouncing the "spy system." The other day, when the appropriation was under debate in the house, a committee of letter-carriers in uniform appeared in the gallery, apparently as a threat. The attempt of associations of government employees to bully congressmen can not be met and defeated too soon. In the carriers' case, the proposal that local postmasters could do all necessary inspecting is worthless, and will continue to be worthless so long as local postmasters are politicians, and merely four-year men. No such man knows enough about his office to inspect anything, and many of them are not beyond local pulls. The CHRONICLE has always stood for fair play and open competition in getting into the service; it stands also for strict discipline and a faithful performance of duty, and it knows that there is no way to secure this except by a rigid inspection free from local influences. What would be said if a committee of soldiers appeared in the gallery in uniform to see that members "talked right" in a debate on an army appropriation?

THE court of appeals of New York has long ranked as one of the great courts of the world, and nothing better entitles it to that rank than its recent decision interpreting the civil service section of the new constitution. That section says: "Appointments and promotions in the civil service of the state and of all the civil divisions thereof, including cities and villages, shall be made according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained, so far as practicable, by examinations which, so far as practicable, shall be competitive." The question arose under an attempt of Aldridge, the head of the public works, to evade the law, in which attempt he was most disastrously defeated. Of the system itself and of the position of the judiciary the court says:

Whatever doubt or distrust may exist with respect to the possibility of obtaining for the law an honest and fair execution, there is none and can be none, at least among thinking men, with respect to its ultimate beneficial effect upon the service. That it must, if fairly and honestly administered, go far to suppress very grave evils and abuses that have become peculiarly ripe and active in our political system, few intelligent people who have given the subject much attention can doubt. In so far as its administration may depend upon an action of the judicial department, it is entitled to, and doubtless will receive, a fair and liberal construction, not only according to its letter, but its true spirit and the general purpose of its enactment.

But when the court turns to the constitution, it deals the heaviest blow which bad government has received in many a day. It says:

The principle that all appointments in the civil service must be made according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained by competitive examinations, is expressed in such broad and imperative language that in some respects it must be regarded as beyond the control of the legislature and secure from any more statutory changes. If the legislature should repeal all the statutes and regulations on the subject of appointments in the civil service, the mandate of the legislature would still remain, and would so far execute itself as to require the courts, in a proper case, to pronounce appointments made without compliance with its requirement illegal.

The attention of the cheap politicians who compose the present city administration of Indianapolis, and who are riding rough-shod over the law of the state, is called to the above opinion. An appointment not made in accordance with the law is illegal. It is no matter whether the law is found in the constitution or in the statute. Appointments in Indianapolis are not made as the law directs, and the city attorney will not risk his legal reputation by giving the mayor an opinion that they are. It is simply a case of willful, deliberate law-breaking, to enable party heelers and favorites to draw money from the public treasury. That is all there is of it, and the men engaged in it should be looked upon by the community as any other rascally law-breakers are.

THE other day Theodore Roosevelt said: I say that the civil service law is not only practicable but it is the only system that is practicable. We have 600 appointments and over 100 promotions in the police department, and in no single case have we paid the slightest heed to a man's politics or creed. In not one single case have we considered the recommendation of any outsider.

The change wrought in New York city is a change from practical politics in its fullest bloom to the merit system. Under practical politics, which immediately preceded the present administration, the 380 policemen appointed by the present board would have brought in $300 apiece. The 20 roundsmen, $500 apiece, the 20 sergeants, $3,000 apiece, and the 16 vacancies for captaincies, $10,000 apiece. No wonder that the bosses and the boys despise civil service reform.

THERE are few instances in the history of politics where the party machine has so thoroughly destroyed the fruits of victory as the republican machine has in Maryland. As we have already shown, the campaign which resulted in Gorman's overwhelming defeat last fall was conducted on the highest plane of administrative reform and the election was won because the campaign was so conducted. The republicans had the governor, the legislature and the city government of Baltimore. But no sooner was the election over than the members of the party for revenue only began to swarm like wolves after every vestige of a place. Being in control of the machine they carried the party into the basest acts of treachery. They passed an act introducing the merit system but coupled with it provisions making it almost beyond doubt unconstitutional. Their crowning act was in Baltimore where the mayor was disposed to carry out the party promises. The party jackals, finding that they could not control him, put through the common council an ordinance transferring the appointments from him to itself. When he vetoed this ordinance they passed it over his head. An attempt was made to get the legislature to save the credit of the party by a new law, but the wolves and jackals were in complete control and prevented legislation. The character of the legislature is shown by the fact that more than one-half of the members want some kind of a place. This outcome in Maryland makes a record of party treachery which has few parallels even in American party history. It again shows how imperative it is that parties must loosen the hold of their leeches. Necessary work before elections must be hired and paid for and with that the connection of the party worker with the party management must cease. At present the men who run primaries and conventions and get paid for it before election take possession of the party after election and do their best to wreck it. In Maryland they have thoroughly succeeded. At the next election the party will be driven out. Yet we have great faith in Maryland. She has a large body of able and fearless men who know what good government is and who will sooner or later bring its blessings home to their state and its municipalities.

THERE must be recorded for Platt a new triumph in the passage of the Raines excise bill, in which the New York legislature was as subservient as ever the Roman senate was to Cæsar. The doors were locked, no one being allowed to leave, and at the ordained moment, the bill was passed. The bill is a curious and refined scheme of tyranny, and of one-man power, and really fit to be classed with those by which governments in all ages have gone on to imperialism and absolutism and final ruin. This bill was passed because it creates a compact set of lucrative offices which it is proposed to fill through the chief excise commissioner acting under the direction of the boss. The yearly emoluments amount to a quarter of a million. As a political machine it is admirable and the capabilities of taking financial interests by the throat on the stand-and-deliver plan are almost beyond estimate. The measure is now in the hands of Platt's governor, Morton, who will do with it exactly as Platt dictates.

It continues to be the eighth wonder that Tom Platt should be able to control not only his party in the state of New York but the law-making power also. This statement is not to be taken as mildly as it seems. His control is absolute. It has often been stated where he gets the money and how he operates, but, hoping to bring home to good citizens the wretched condition of our party politics, we republish Plattism stated in a concise form from the New York Evening Post of February 27:

Thomas C. Platt follows a trade which no one of whom we have yet heard denies the criminality. * * * For what are these "political burdens" which he says he has taken on himself? Are they not the collection from rich men and corporations of money, by way of blackmail, for protection against "striking" legislation, or in aid of corrupt legislation—that is, either for protection from extortion or assistance in evading lawful obligations? And is not this money used systematically to corrupt legislators, by causing them to violate their oaths and cheat their constituents by voting, not in obedience to their consciences, but in obedience to another will than their own for ends which they dare not avow?

The ninth wonder is that such a man as Platt can find a place at any respectable man's table. Yet at a recent dinner Governor Morton made the occasion notorious by inviting Platt. This matter is best pointed by Dr. Parkhurst:

"You can not excoriate to-day a man who is doing his best to suck the civic life blood of a community or state—I say you can not excoriate such a one to-day and then clasp hands with him tomorrow on even social ground, even though that ground be the governor's dinner table."

Dr. Parkhurst paused a moment and then said, slowly:

"Friends, you know what I mean."

MR. HENRY A. CASTLE, for the last four years postmaster at St. Paul, recently delivered a farewell address to the employes of his office. The most noticeable thing in it is his pride in having impartially enforced the civil service law, and his thorough belief in the law itself. It is the greatest triumph of the merit system, that by its own demonstrated value, it has conquered its way. Mr. Castle also entirely grasps the possibilities of manliness and independence which employes may enjoy under the law, and he also urges upon them to become active advocates of the system, not entirely for their selfish benefit, but for the great public good which the merit system can accomplish. He declares that this has but to be known to the people of Minnesota to secure the application of the system to the state and its municipalities. The address is so good that we should like to publish it all.

In the death of Governor Greenhalge of Massachusetts, sound government has lost an able and fearless advocate. Like many other men he grew and broadened with responsibility. He discerned the difference between statesmanship and mere partisan politics and took his stand on the side of the former. A notable example was his veto of the veterans' exemption act by which a contemptible and truckling legislature attempted to destroy the civil service law of Massachusetts. And after this the people overwhelmingly re-elected him.

MR. WILLIAM G. RICE, one of the civil service commissioners in an address before the Massachusetts Reform Club, March 20, gave an interesting account of the conduct and progress of his department during the last nine months. It is the progress which might have been expected as soon as the administration turned its mind to a genuine and concerted effort to complete the introduction of the merit system. Many interesting facts are given, among which we note that to Commissioner Harlow, formerly postmaster at St. Louis, is due the admirable plan for the consolidation of post-offices and which congress, not by an increased appropriation, but by a slight change in wording, is now being asked to aid in carrying out. Mr. Rice's remark that the law can not be successfully carried out in a spirit of antagonism to those who have in charge larger matters of state may be misunderstood. There have been no larger matters of state since the war. The relation between the civil service commission and a cabinet officer who wants to enforce the law should be one of friendly and courteous co-operation. But with a cabinet officer who wants to trick and beat the law, the commission has a duty and that duty is to fight. The early commissions nearly ruined the law by courteous subserviency and Mr. Roosevelt literally rescued it out of the jaws of destruction. We have no doubt that there are those in official circles in Washington, who are yet sore under Roosevelt's punishment; nevertheless it did both them and the law good.

THE settled habit of our congressmen to trim for votes at the expense of the treasury was never more aptly illustrated than in the seed contest. Secretary Morton refused to distribute seeds further, but congress promptly made a new appropriation and made his duty to spend it mandatory. He has now advertised for ten million packets of garden, field and flower seeds, beginning with asparagus and ending with wheat. Out of this each congressman will be allowed fifteen thousand packages with which to bribe voters. There never was a greater swindle perpetrated upon the people. If any one can find any distinction between this transaction and going into the mule market and buying ten million mules for congressmen to give to voters we should like to see it pointed out. It is paternalism gone to seed.

IN case of another President from the republican party, his burden in respect to the distribution of offices will be wonderfully lightened. There may not be fewer applicants, but the number of places, and therefore the number of decisions to be made, will be curtailed to an extent which will make the bosses and the boys think there is nothing worth living for. And there will be nothing worth the political existence which they have been leading; let us all hope that they will quit it. True, there are fat postmasterships and many headships of offices in the internal revenue, the customs department and other branches of the public service yet within reach of the mere spoilsman; and these will be fought over desperately to the detriment of the public service and the scandal of the American name. Many of these offices are large and are filled with highly-trained subordinates. More ridiculous than ever before will appear the seemingly inconceivable folly of going into the street and picking up a local politician without any special fitness whatever, and making him postmaster of New York or Philadelphia or Cincinnati or Indianapolis or Chicago, or in fact the head of any office. The system is, of course, doomed. That the local Toms, Mikes and Jakes will have to find other means of living than by getting these places as rewards for valor in the service of bosses is only a question of time. The merit system of promotion by competition will grind the life out of this considerable remnant of the spoils system as surely and irresistibly as a glacier grinds down mountains. It is unfortunate that congressmen do not cheerfully bow to the inevitable and by legislation make the way easy to the wholesome and most desirable end.

WITH the destruction of the spoils system in the federal service, it can not long survive in states and cities. With federal public business conducted on the soundest principles at their very doors the people will not long submit to be swindled and cheated in the conduct of their local public business. The result will be of serious moment to party organizations. These organizations will have to be kept up without offices and without money secured by direct or indirect assessment upon officeholders. Speed the day. If a party has no principles with life enough to draw voluntary and unrewarded support to the party organization, then that party should die. There is not the least doubt but that the life of parties deserving to survive will be made wholesome by the disappearance of the hope of office as the great object of political activity. The natural liking of the American people to strive for particular solutions of public questions will bring their political activities into healthy play. But no one should think that it will be possible to conduct campaigns without a considerable expenditure of money. The paid campaign speaker can be dispensed with. The man who wants his house rent paid to avoid the loss of his vote by ejection can be let to move. The heeler who has to be paid wages on election day and for several days previous for imaginary work can be laid off and the corruption fund can in fact be dispensed with altogether. The advantage will come in hiring necessary party work done and paying for it as a business matter. Literature must be printed by printers and distributed by clerks, the poll of the voters must be taken, agents must be employed for a variety of purposes and many other expenses must be incurred, but these will be paid for as for value received and that will end the matter; after the election the various employes will not come around and demand an office as an earned bonus. It will be the duty of every member of the party to contribute money to carry on the party campaign; that is a sacrifice every citizen will owe and the making of which will be a duty. It should also be a pride, for it will take away the excuse of turning for money to those who want legislation or have some other self-interest in view.

CLINTON ROGERS WOODRUFF, secretary of the Municipal Reform League, has in the New York Evening Post of March 14 a summary of the encouraging progress of municipal reform in the South.

MUNICIPAL SPOILS.

I consider the question of pure or corrupt municipal government in the United States as the most far-reaching and important that can possibly engage the attention of all thinking men who believe in government by the people.—Charles Stewart Smith.

IN BALTIMORE.

Spoils-Mad.

Revolution Proposed by the Crazy Councilmen—Strip the Mayor of Power and Vest it in Joint Convention of the Two Councils—Public Sentiment Stirred—Indignant Protests from Friends of Good Government—Hooper Firm as a Rock—Will Fight it Out if it Takes all Summer—Reform League Issues a Call for a Mass-Meeting at Music Hall Next Tuesday Night to Voice the Universal Indignation—Council Meets Again this Evening—Professor Woodrow Wilson's Earnest Protest—Prominent Citizens Express Their Views—A Veritable Bombshell at Annapolis—Cunningham Alone Opposes the Mayor's Stand—Three Republican Councilmen Will Stand by the Mayor—Mr. Hennighausen's Ante-Election Promises—How the Scheme was Put Through the Council.—Baltimore News, February 28.

To Seize the Offices.

City Council Makes a Bold Stroke Aimed at the Mayor—Change of Appointing Power—Ordinances Passed to Vest it in a Joint Convention of the Council Branches—Rushed Through to a vote—Then a Number of Temporary Engrossing Clerks were Pressed into Service—Programme Well Executed—Caucuses Had Been Held and the Members Did Their Work Like Soldiers—All Except Three "Kick-ers," Messrs. Steffens, Hoffman and Smith, Voted with their Party Associates—The Democratic Members Departed in a Body and Left the Republicans to Fight it Out Among Themselves—Full Text of the General Measure on Which the Radical Legislation is Based—A Determined Effort to Override the Mayor's Veto When it is Sent in.

The fight between Mayor Hooper and the city council reached a crisis Thursday night which may involve a revolution in the machinery of the city government.

Ordinances were enacted by the council which, if they become laws, will take from the mayor the power to appoint public officers subject to confirmation, and will give that authority to the council absolutely.—Baltimore Sun, February 29.

* * *

Accusations affecting the personal character and standing of two appointees for justices of the peace in Baltimore city were made to the governor Tuesday, which excited great indignation in his mind and caused him to express himself very freely as well as to withdraw the nominations. He said: "It is an outrage for me to be placed in this position. I refer to two nominations for justices of the peace in Baltimore city which I sent to the senate. I find that these are the charges—that one of them had been convicted in a criminal case of the charge of embezzlement and sentenced to jail for six months, while the other, according to the record furnished me, was indicted in 1881 as a common thief, though the case was settled. I want to state, and I think my position should be known to the public, that in making appointments the larger percentage of the people are unknown to me, and while this is the case I have to rely upon such recommendations as are filed with me and upon the representations of senators and delegates. In these particular cases the usual course was followed. The wishes of the republican senators from Baltimore city and of the entire Baltimore city delegation in the house were consulted. A written recommendation is on file with the secretary of state, signed by Senators Strobridge and Dobler and the entire delegation in behalf of these appointees, both of whom were so recommended. I think it is an outrage that such people should be recommended to me, as I have to rely upon their judgment and I want the public to understand my position.

"The appointments were not made from any personal knowledge or preference, but from reliance on the indorsement. Some one, however, has been good enough to inform me, and they will not be confirmed, for I will recall the names."

Later in the day Delegate Cunningham and Senator Strobridge, who were understood to have especially championed the objectionable nominees, saw the governor and excused themselves on the ground that they were not aware of any of the serious objections that had been brought to light.

Governor Lowndes said he had felt so much indignation on account of the expose that he felt like withdrawing the names of every man he had sent in for justice of the peace and for some other offices in the city of Baltimore.

Senator Strobridge asked him why he had thought of taking such a course.

The governor replied that it was because so many protests had been sent in against the city appointments that it depressed him.—Annapolis dispatch Baltimore Sun, February 27.

* * *

PERCY C. HENNIGHAUSEN.

Among the men guilty of an atrocious betrayal of the cause of good government, there is one whose conduct, in view of his antecedents, is peculiarly disgraceful. Mr. Percy C. Hennighausen stood most distinctly pledged to non-partisanship in city government. Both last year and the year before he obtained the support of the good government club of the twelfth ward—known in 1894 as the Unit club—on the express promise that, if elected, he would stand for the principles of city government which the Unit club advocated. Upon the basis of that support, he was elected to the city council in 1894 by a plurality of 174, while the democrats carried the ward for congress by 163. It is plain that he owed his entrance into public life unmistakably to his solemn and emphatic professions of devotion to good government. Last year he renewed his declaration of allegiance to the cause.

His conduct in siding with the spoilsmen and joining them in their riotous opposition to the mayor will brand him with the condemnation and scorn of all honest men. For many of his fellows it may be pleaded that they don't know any better, and that they were not particularly responsible for the pledges of the representative men of their party. Mr. Hennighausen, being a man of education, must know better; but, what is even more important, he is a deserter from the cause of honest government, and hence deserves tenfold the censure of those who never made personal professions of being anything more than ordinary ward politicians.

* * *

Mr. Percy C. Hennighausen, president of the first branch, is one of the councilmen who engineered last night's coup.

On October 22 last, just before the election, Mr. Hennighausen wrote a letter to the Unit independent club of the twelfth ward, of which the following is an extract:

"If I am elected there will be but one consideration which will in any degree influence my vote, and that is the good of the whole people of Baltimore, whether democrat, republican, prohibition or populist. I will know no party. I will fear no 'boss.'

"My ideal of a city councilman is a man who feels that he is one of the directors of a large corporation, who devotes his best thought and effort to the care of the business interests with which he is entrusted, and who recognizes no more 'politics' in the business of a municipality than he would in the business of a bank."—Baltimore News, February 28.

* * *

The republican members of the city council met again this afternoon and continued their fight with the mayor. They are attempting to take out of his hands all the power of appointment, and they have already passed over twenty ordinances looking to that end.

The cause of the war, as has been stated in the New York Times, is the refusal of Mayor Hooper to consult with them in appointments, and especially his refusal to appoint only republicans to office. The councilmen are after the spoils, and they will not be happy until they get them, but their fight is undoubtedly a losing one. The mayor says he will veto the ordinances, and the "kickers" have not the necessary three-fourths to pass the ordinances over the vetoes. Three of the councilmen stand by the mayor. The "kickers" issued a statement this morning saying they were compelled reluctantly to take extreme action in order to assert their rights and to uphold their dignity. But the people do not look at it in this way, and a mass meeting is called for next week to protest against the spoilsmen and to uphold the mayor. The democratic members of the city council are staying away and letting the republicans work their own destruction.

It is freely said that as this is the first "dose" of general republicanism that Maryland has had in thirty years, it will be thirty more before it shall be tried again. A lot of men whose election was not expected were swept into the legislature and the city council of Baltimore by the tidal wave, and just as soon as they felt their power they abandoned their non-partisan promises, and, in the language of one of their leaders, felt how good it was to "pull the grapes after they had been a quarter of a century getting into the vineyard."

The gubernatorial patronage, which is larger in Maryland than in any other state in the Union, was used to elect Wellington United States senator, and Thomas J. Shryock was elected state treasurer against the protest of the reform league and with serious charges hanging over him. The legislature practically has killed the civil service reform bill by adding the referendum, after the most explicit promises to give the city and state the merit system. It has elected as police commissioner of Baltimore W. W. Johnson, whose administration of the Baltimore post-office under the Harrison administration necessitated the attention of the civil service commissioners, with results that caused much unpleasant comment, although Johnson was not removed.

In the midst of all the discouragement, especially at the weakness of Gov. Lowndes, the friends of good government have had one conspicuous consolation. The mayor is only about five feet in height, but he seems to be nearly all backbone. A favorite local cartoon is the cathode ray illustrating this idea. At first the council tried to defeat him by refusing to confirm an appointment because the appointee was a Catholic. The mayor himself is one of the leading Methodists of the city, and gave $200,000 to the woman's college, a Methodist institution. He sent the Catholic's name up again, and it went through. Several democrats were appointed, and they also got through. His latest batch of appointments had democrats and republicans, and there was not a single politician named in the list.

This brought on the revolt. The fighters rage. The little mayor calmly says it does not make any difference to him what they do. He will stand his ground, and he intends to win. The people are getting ready for an explosion next week.—Baltimore dispatch, New York Times, March 1.

* * *

Five thousand persons crowded into music hall to-night in answer to a call of the reform league for a mass meeting "to protest against the unprecedented, dangerous and disgraceful attempt of the city council to seize the public offices of this city to gratify their appetite for spoils, and to uphold Mayor Hooper in his fight for good government."

Theodore Roosevelt, of New York, was the "star" of the evening from an oratorical standpoint. He said, in part:

"I hold that the man who serves his party best serves the state well. The man who has to be bribed with any office to serve his party is a curse to that party. Baltimore is not the only place that has had the trouble you are having here, and where the politicians have sought to turn victory to their own base uses. We have had the same trouble in New York, where, after the people overthrew one set of bosses, those who were elected thought they had been elected to do the same things that the others had been overthrown for doing.

"Your council will destroy the future of their party's cause unless you let them understand that decent citizens will not tolerate their course. As a member of the New York legislature I was the author of the bill to place the power of appointment of New York city officers in the hands of the mayor, without being subject to confirmation by the council. It gives general satisfaction.

"As I understand the fight, it is that the council finds fault with the mayor because he has insisted on placing in office some of the decent democrats who assisted them to win last fall; while the council itself, in order to defeat the mayor, is willing to make a 'deal' with some of the ring democrats who tried to defeat them."

A number of local orators of all shades of political belief also addressed the meeting.

Resolutions were adopted denouncing the action of the city council as a usurpation, declaring that their action will throw the city government into confusion and calling upon the general assembly to prevent, by appropriate legislation, the consummation of this scheme of spoliation.

Mayor Hooper will veto the ordinances which passed the council last Thursday. At the sessions to-morrow evening the republicans of each branch will endeavor to pass the bills over the veto. If the three republican members who have indorsed the mayor remain steadfast, and the democratic members attend the meetings, the bills will fail of the necessary three-fourths majority.

Meantime President Bruce's bill, giving the mayor of Baltimore absolute power to make appointments, passed the state senate to-day by a vote of fifteen to five. Its fate in the republican house of delegates is uncertain.—Baltimore dispatch, New York Times, March 3.

* * *

One of the most notorious of the gang of colored repeaters who operated in various sections of the city on the last election day was to-day sentenced to two years in jail for the active part he took in the infamous work of the ring to maintain its power in this city. This man was James Boone, whose reputation is almost as black as his face, and who, at the head of a gang of repeaters, drawn from the lowest negro dives in the city, went through the ninth ward on last election day and, it is alleged, committed many outrages.

The crime for which he was to-day sentenced to jail was for an assault upon William L. F. Miller, who was one of the reform league watchers.—Baltimore News, February 28.

ELSEWHERE.

DID BROOKLYN PAY TOO MUCH?

Commissioner Squier Bought Land for a Park from His Deputy's Wife—P. H. Flinn Brings Suit

—New York Times, September 19.

It was learned yesterday that on Monday Frank Squier, the park commissioner, paid to Michael J. Dady, $29,000 for a piece of ground along the water front in Gravesend. The land reaches from East Eighty eighth street to East Ninety-second street, and from Skidmore avenue to the bulkhead line. It is said to consist of the most part of marsh. The site is destined by Commissioner Squier for one in his system of small parks.—September 25.

GREANEY'S GRAVE CHARGE.

He Was Forced, He Says, to Lend Money to Kings County Officials—Declares They Will Not Pay Him—While He made Loans He Got Good Contracts—His Receiver Will Sue the Men Named by Him.

—New York Times, September.

HOWARD D. HERR AND JOHN M. DANAHY UNDER ARREST

For Grand Larceny—Alleged They Padded Pay Rolls in the Street Department—Locked Up in the Freezer—The First Fruits of the Charges Against the Department of Public Works—Now It Will be Clearer Why the Mayor Demands that the Aldermen and Councilmen Give Him the Authority to Investigate the Department of Public Works—A Third Man, Joseph Burke, Saloon-keeper and Former Boss of a Gang of Street-cleaners, is also Held at Headquarters—He is Charged With Being a Conspirator With Herr and Danahy in the Defrauding of the City.

—Buffalo Express, October 9.

BLIND THEM.

Ten Dollars a Team the Amount Demanded by Ross—"Voluntary," He Says—But Teamsters Who Paid are Very Sure It Was a Case of Force—One More Conspiracy Found—Another Way Foremen and Team Owners Got Together and Defrauded the City.

—Buffalo, October 24.

HERE IT IS.

Byron Kring Tells of Political Assessments—All Hands Taxed—Barton Ross, O'Shea's Clerk, Accused of Doing the Levying—Fisher's Hard Day's Work—His Examination of Kring Made Matters Worse for the Defense.

—Buffalo, October 25.

Leading Chicago citizens have formed a committee of 100 whose aim is to drive national party lines out of the local elections and rescue the city from the clutch of the saloon gangs that ride into the control of the city council on the divisions of good citizens at the polls. It would seem to be high time for such an attempt. One night last week two leading aldermen were on the streets drunk and assaulted a policeman who, however, had the courage to run them in. That policeman would have lost his place under the old system, but the new civil service rules will protect him now. Thus something has been gained.—Springfield Republican, February 21.

* * *

A meeting of 200 Chicago clergymen has unanimously voted to support the committee of one hundred and the civic federation in municipal reform, and to urge their congregations to go into politics that the city government may be reformed.—New York Evening Post, February 21.

* * *

There is plenty of work for the municipal reformers in Chicago. The Post of that city prints a list of 26 aldermen who are candidates for re-election, with what it calls their "disgraceful record."—New York Evening Post, February 22.

* * *

Ed. Murphy, city alderman, saloon-keeper and local political boss, was to-day found guilty of running a disorderly house, after a most sensational trial.—St. Paul (Minn.) dispatch, March 7.

* * *

The city of Reading, Pa., has long been under republican control, but the democrats recently elected their candidate for mayor. The result had hardly become known before the mayor-elect had over 200 applications for the 60 offices in his gift, and he was soon so overrun with applicants for places that he had to flee from home in order to get a chance to eat and sleep.—New York Evening Post, February 26.

The mayor-elect of Reading, Pa., who ran away to escape the office-seekers, has returned. So have the office-seekers. The mayor-elect's door-bell has been pulled out, and the back fence broken down by the efforts of office-seekers to get in the rear way when no answer was returned to their knocks at the door.—New York Evening Post, March 9.

* * *

"The proposition of the (Rochester) republican aldermen to cut down the salary of Mayor Warner from $5,000 to $2,500 or $3,000 a year is a striking indication," the Rochester Herald says, "of the guerilla warfare that the official enemies of the public interests propose to wage on him. It has no other motive than the disgraceful and depraved one to turn him from his resolution to give an honest, efficient and economical government."—New York Evening Post, February 21.

* * *

For the first time in years politics has crept into the management of the school board. Unless all signs fail Boss Filley is not going to be able to whip self-respecting republicans into line, however, for the school board ticket he had nominated at the Harmonie Hall convention last week. Murmurings of discontent from republican homes in every section of the city are heard, and though Collector Zeigenheim is exerting himself to the utmost in South St. Louis, it is considered hardly possible for him to carry the ticket through in that section. A sample of what the better class of republicans are saying about Filley is the following frank expression of a prominent official at the city hall:

"Filley should not be allowed to brutalize our public schools by placing them under the domination of machine politics. Party bosses have no right to lay their hands upon the schools, and decent men of all political parties should call a halt to all such attempts. It will be a sad day for the parents and children of St. Louis when their public schools are run according to the dictates of a lot of wardheelers and bum politicians. Filley should remember that he was thrown ignominiously out of the post-office in 1877 by President Hayes, because he tried to make Mr. Schweikhardt, then a member of the school board, vote to oust a democrat from the post of secretary and treasurer of the board, which he had filled with satisfaction to all the people for many years."—St. Louis dispatch, New York Evening Post, February 24.

THE USE OF MUNICIPAL SPOIL IN NATIONAL AND STATE POLITICS.

Willis in Brooklyn.

Theodore B. Willis, the new commissioner of city works in Brooklyn, to-day discharged eighty-six men in his department. This is said to be the largest number of simultaneous removals in the history of the city in a single department. In every instance the men are democrats who were retained by Commissioner White, with three exceptions. These three are Worth republicans. That Commissioner Willis would remove the democrats in his department and fill the places with anti-Worth republicans, has been no secret since he assumed the duties of his office on February 1, but nobody expected that these removals would be made in such a wholesale fashion. Even after the conference of Commissioner Willis and his advisers last evening, the statement that probably forty men would be removed to-day was not credited, and consequently when the list containing the eighty-six names was given out, there was consternation among the office-holders.

The corridors of the municipal building in which the offices of the city works department are located were thronged all the morning with office-holders and their friends, anxious for the list to make its appearance, and when it came there was a hasty scanning of it to ascertain who the unfortunates were. The salaries of the men who were removed ranged from $4,000 to $1,000 a year. They include clerks, messengers, engineers, foremen, inspectors, etc. The discharges take effect to-day.—New York Evening Post, February 29.

* * *

Commissioner Willis, of the department of city works, Brooklyn, recently dismissed eighty-five employees in the city works department and created eleven new offices, to which he appointed faithful Willis republicans. The civil service commission and the civil service reform association objected to these appointments, as they claimed it was against the spirit of the civil service law, and Corporation Counsel Burr was called upon for an opinion.

* * *

Commissioner Willis, in speaking about the opinion, said that, while he had not had time to read the opinion very carefully, he believed that it was favorable to the position that he had taken.

"It puts upon me," said Mr. Willis, "the burden of showing that the new positions are dissimilar to the positions abolished or changed. Undoubtedly the major portion of the positions will all stand the legal test.

Edward M. Grout yesterday obtained a writ of mandamus directing Commissioner Willis to show cause why the employees that he discharged on February 29 should not be reinstated. Mr. Grout claims that Commissioner Willis discharged the men without stating any cause for his act.—New York Times, March 10.

* * *

Thug rule was introduced last night by Sheriff Buttlings, of Kings county, in the deliberations of the republican county committee.

It was a fight between the Worth and Willis factions, and was due to an effort on the part of the Worth men to capture the control of the committee by seating delegates of their faction in four wards where contests prevail. * * *

It was declared in order by the chairman to fix the places for holding the congressional and assembly district conventions, and that was proceeded with. The delegates had got as far as the seventeenth assembly district when Jacob Brenner, of the tenth ward, made a motion to adjourn. Chairman Roberts put it, and declared it carried.

Instantly the hall was in an uproar. Sheriff Buttling, surrounded by a number of his followers, forced his way to the front and declared that this action was outrageous. Shaking his fist in Chairman Roberts's face, Sheriff Buttling shouted:

"You call yourself a man, but you don't act like one."

Everybody present crowded as near as they could get to the platform, and the delegates of the opposing factions shouted and cursed at each other.

The sheriff attempted to seize the gavel, but Chairman Roberts, who had not spoken a word, took it from him. Then Sheriff Buttling demanded the gavel, and after a slight resistance, Chairman Roberts let him take it.

The sheriff then jumped to the platform and rapped for order. Everybody was shouting, jeering, or applauding, and pandemonium reigned. Cries of "Chuck him out!" "Chuck him out!" were heard on the floor and in the gallery.

Turning to the gallery, where a number of men were crowding on the stairway, Sheriff Buttling shook the gavel at them and said:

"If you think you can put me out, come down here and try it. I'll show you who is boss."

Benjamin F. Blair went up to Chairman Roberts and asked:

"Are you chairman of this committee?"

"Certainly," Mr. Roberts said.

"Then why don't you assert yourself?" Mr. Blair asked.

Mr. Roberts made no answer, but, taking up his hat and overcoat, walked out of the room. He was jeered at by the Worth delegates.

Sheriff Buttling turned to Mr. Blair and said:

"This is a meeting, and if we've got our fellows here, that's no reason why you should snap an adjournment on us. I thought you believed in fair play, but it seems you don't. You know there was not a majority in favor of adjournment."

The disorder was growing worse. Everybody was shouting. Sheriff Buttling kept rapping vigorously for order. The Willis delegates stood at one end of the room by themselves, while the Worth men proceeded to take their seats.

Mr. Buttling announced that, as the chairman had deserted his post, it was in order to elect a temporary chairman to continue the meeting. He was elected to preside when something like order had been restored. Mr. Buttling said that the roll should be called to ascertain how many were in favor of adjournment.

The Worth men only responded, the Willis men refusing to take part in the proceedings. The roll called showed sixty-two in favor of continuing business.

Coroner Nason of the seventeenth ward said that, as there were only 120 delegates present during the evening sixty two were a majority, and, therefore, the action of Sheriff Buttling was justified. He said that the committee should proceed with the business of seating delegates from the disputed wards.

Sheriff Buttling made a speech recommending adjournment because he did not think it wise to take advantage of their victory at that time.

"We've shown them," he said "that we were right. We don't profess to be anything but machine men, but I tell you the machine don't make mistakes. The machine gets there every time. The chairman who deserted us pretends to be a broad and liberal man. He's a big man, but he's not broad. He's narrow. It's a case of big head and little wit. We had a working majority at this meeting tonight and now we've proved it, and I think we had better adjourn and wait until the next meeting."

The sixty-two Worth men voted yea and the meeting broke up.

During the fight up stairs there was a more serious one in the corridor on the first floor.

William Griffith and another man got into a dispute over the offices in the twelfth ward. Griffith was kicked in the abdomen by the other man, who escaped. He was said to be a delegate named Simms. Griffith was so seriously injured that he had to be taken to the city hospital.—New York Times, March 11.

* * *

George B. Cox is the republican municipal boss of Cincinnati. He has the characteristics which have become familiar in municipal bosses everywhere. He could not be elected to any office himself, but he is a master in the art of setting up caucuses, calling snap conventions, making deals and distributing spoils. Thomas E. Major, the mayor of Toledo, is a man of similar type. Before the last state convention in Ohio a deal was arranged between Cox, Major and others by which it was agreed that, in return for Major's support of the machine candidate for governor, Bushnell, the machine would use all its power to force through the legislature a bill practically deposing all the officials of Toledo and leaving Major to revel unrestrained in municipal spoils. That measure is the Ripper bill now pending in the Ohio legislature. It will turn 2,000 officials in the city of Toledo out of office without the consent and against the protests of the people of that town. It is one of the most daring spoils raids ever attempted in this country. The opponents of the measure are the friends of ex-Governor McKinley. It is, therefore, held that McKinley's fate as a presidential candidate will be seriously affected by the disposition of this measure. If it should develop that the Cox-Major crowd control the state and that McKinley's candidacy must be left to the mercy of such men, he will not be nominated by the efforts of Ohio, at least. Cox and Major were in New York not long ago and had a conference with Thos. C. Platt. It appears that the hand of the New York republican boss has been extended from Albany to Columbus.—Buffalo Express, January 28.

CURRENT PLATTISM.

THE RAINES BILL.

OFFICES AND SALARIES.

State commissioner of excise.....	$5,000
Deputy commissioner	4,000
Secretary	2,000
Financial clerk.....	1,800

"Such clerical force as may be necessary," say 50.....Unlimited.
Special deputy for New York county, 4,000
Special deputy for Kings county..... 3,000
Special deputy for Erie county..... 2,000
Sixty special agents, at $1,200..... 72,000
Sixty special attorneys, if desired.

Compensation to be fixed by the commissionerUnlimited.
Number of possible employees.....175 to 200
Amount of possible salaries.....$250,000

All employees to be "confidential" and hence not subject to civil service regulations.

APPOINTING OFFICER.

THOMAS C. PLATT, No. 49 Broadway-

* * *

"I have been offered the naming of a $1,200 confidential agent if I would vote for the Raines bill," said Assemblyman French, of New York, tonight. The man who made the offer claimed to have the ability to deliver the goods. I shall not vote for the Raines bill, and will do all I can to beat it. This offer to me is only one of many such offers as are being made to many members of the assembly. I believe all the patronage under the bill has been already divided up among the senators, and has been promised ten times over to the members of the assembly.—Albany dispatch, Buffalo Express, March 9.

* * *

The fisheries, game and forest commission, as re-organized by Mr. Platt, is already at loggerheads with itself, and over the same old question, spoils. Some of the members who think they did not get their fair share are going to the legislature for another re-organization.—Buffalo Express.

* * *

Republican leader Ellsworth to-night made a grab for the control of the Niagara reservation. He presented a bill designed to transfer the control of that state property to the fisheries, game and forestry commission. It is now under the control of the Niagara Reservation Commission, of which Andrew H. Green, of New York city, for some years has been the president. The leading spirit of the forest, fish and game commission is Barnet H. Davis, a Platt politician from Wayne county, who is a member of the republican state committee. There is considerable patronage involved in the transfer. Doubtless some of Mr. Ellsworth's lieutenants would get the place now held by Thomas V. Welch, as superintendent of the park. He is a democrat. His salary is about $3,000 a year.—Albany Dispatch, March 9.

* * *

The new superintendent of the banking department, a Platt man, wants the places of assistant bank examiners taken from the competitive and placed in the non-competitive schedule. The state commission will have a chance to show where it stands with regard to civil service reform. These places were made competitive by Gov. Flower, a practical banker, in order to raise the standard of the service.—Buffalo Express, March 11.

* * *

The tactics by which the Platt politicians sought to stifle the McKinley sentiment in Lockport were tried in Niagara Falls, too. Republicans there received intimations that if they joined the McKinley movement, legislation which the city is seeking at Albany would come to a stop.—Buffalo Express, March 11.

* * *

"The Platt-Hendricks machine in Syracuse has resorted to tactics which must make the Lauterbach people in New York feel like mere amateurs," the Buffalo Express (rep.) says. The general committee has amended the rules to provide that no person shall be entitled to vote at the coming primaries who has voted the ticket of any opposition party since the last gubernatorial election. The rule, the Express points out, thrusts the 6,000 republicans who supported Baldwin as an independent candidate for mayor last fall out of the republican party.—New York Evening Post, February 21.

* * *

Another of the series of remarkable bills which have appeared recently from the office of the superintendent of public works was offered in the assembly to-day by Mr. Eldridge, chairman of the canals. It provides that the contracts for the $9,000,000 canal improvement may be let by the superintendent of public works, after he has advertised ten days in the state paper, "and in such other newspapers or journals, and for such period of time or number of insertions as the superintendent of public works may select or deem necessary."

This provision is to replace the present requirement that these bids shall be advertised for six weeks, in papers in all parts of the state. Should the bill become a law the superintendent could keep from the notice of most of the contractors of the state the fact that these enormous contracts were about to be let. The bill further extends the powers of the superintendent by providing that he shall let these contracts "to the lowest responsible bidder giving such security as the superintendent of public works may require and approve." This places in the hands of Superintendent Aldridge the entire control of this vast patronage.—Albany Dispatch to Buffalo Express, February 19.

* * *

The better elements among the citizens of Albany are aroused over a bill now before the legislature, the real purpose of which is to convert the local police force into a political annex to the Albany county republican machine organization. The measure was inspired by T. C. Platt's state committeeman from this district, William Barnes, Jr., who is the proprietor and publisher of the only republican newspaper in the city. It was introduced in both branches of the legislature simultaneously a week ago, and the scheme is to rush it ahead with all possible speed.

Under the administration of mayor Oren E. Wilson, who was elected on the platform of the honest election party, the police department was re-organized and placed on an excellent footing. There has been no change in its status since Mayor Thatcher took office on January 1. The existing law gives the mayor the appointment of the four police commissioners, and makes the mayor a member, ex officio, of the board. The bill which Mr. Barnes is seeking to have enacted into a law proposes to abolish the present police board and to remove the commissioners from office. It provides for another police commission of four members, but deprives the mayor of the power to appoint them. He is only to preside at trials of officers, and has no voice in the proceedings of the board, nor can he vote except in case of a tie. The appointment of the new police commissioners is to be vested in the common council, whose members must select for such officials two democrats and two republicans. The honest election party, which cast more than 4,000 votes at the last election, is not given any recognition in the choice.

The bill goes further, and practically legislates out the whole re-organized police force. A significant provision is the one which declares that the commissioners are to have the power to appoint the new chief, captains, sergeants and patrolmen only by the concurrent votes of three of their number. This means, of course, that in case the appointments are not of the sort the Platt-Barnes crowd want, their representatives in the police board will not concur in the action of the other two commissioners, and thus a deadlock will result. This contingency appears to have been looked for by the framers of the bill, for it provides that the senior captain of the present police force, who is a personal follower of Mr. Barnes and is the only member of the department not to be legislated out of office under the new scheme of the politicians, is, in the event of a failure to re-organize the force, to possess all the powers and to perform all the duties of the chief. He is to appoint the patrolmen and to designate the captains and the sergeants.—Albany Dispatch, New York Evening Post, February 3.

CURRENT TOPICS.

In Ohio a representative from Clinton county, in the lower branch, has just been exposed in asking a constituent for $300 to secure him an appointment as a guard in the state prison. The lawmaker admits the truth of the charge, and has announced his intention to resign. During the canvass last fall a candidate for the state senate on the republican ticket was found to have promised to vote for Brice for United States senator if the democratic managers would give him $500 for campaign expenses, and he was consequently forced to retire. A grand jury at the state capital is now investigating charges of corruption against members of the last legislature, and three members of the upper branch of that body were indicted last week. The worst feature of these three incidents is the fact that they have not shocked the people as such revelations about their lawmakers ought to do. The surprise is rather that the offenders have been caught than that men can be nominated and elected to the legislature who are capable of such offenses.—New York Evening Post, January 27.

* * *

Congressman-elect J. A. Hatch has been officially notified by the war department that there is a vacancy at West Point from this congressional district, and asking him to supply it. His predecessor made several strenuous attempts, but the young men whom he appointed at different times failed to pass examination. Congressman Hatch has a number of applications for the appointment, and has announced that he will name no one, but will throw the field open to the district. He states that neither politics, religion nor color will cut any figure. A competitive examination will be had, probably in Logansport, the date to be hereafter fixed.—Delphi dispatch Indianapolis News, July 8.

* * *

There was virtue enough in the senate to reject the scheme of Vilas and Elkins to give each senator the additional patronage of the appointment of two cadets at West Point, which act of self-denial the country will appreciate. There is no necessity for any such increase in the number of cadets, because the army is already over officered, and it is difficult to find places for all the present graduates.—Springfield Republican, February 21.

* * *

Mayor Strong presided, January 24, at a meeting at Sherry's in the interest of civil service reform. About 250 ladies were present. The meeting was held under the auspices of the women's auxiliary to the civil service reform association, of which the president is Mrs. Charles R. Lowell. There were five gentlemen announced in the programme to speak. They were President Seth Low, of Columbia College; E. Randolph Robinson, civil service commissioner; Colonel Waring, commissioner of street cleaning; Herbert Welsh, of Philadelphia, and Joseph H. Choate. Of these, Mr. Choate alone was absent.

* * *

Post-office clerk William H. Van Pelt, seventy years old, who has been in the service forty-six years, received from his associate employes of the second division yesterday noon a gold watch, chain, and seal as a token of their regard. The presentation was made by postmaster Dayton.—New York Times, August 23

THE BROTHERHOOD OF PIRATES.

Instead of transferring its services for a consideration, to one party or the other, as usual, the John J. O'Brien Association of New York has this year adopted the thrifty expedient of dividing itself into two parts. One section is with Tammany, and the other, under the leadership of the redoubtable Barney Rourke, has indorsed the republican state ticket. Rourke was a Tammany district leader last fall.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

VOL. II, No. 38.

INDIANAPOLIS, APRIL, 1896.

TERMS: { One dollar per annum.
10 cents per copy.

Published monthly. Publication office, No. 23 N. Meridian St., Indianapolis, Ind. Address,

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

THE CHRONICLE has never contained more important matter than that printed in this issue describing the partition of Pennsylvania. The various drafts of agreements are still under discussion with a view to drawing them down to one final agreement; but it seems that a contract of partition along the same lines, actually went into effect in 1890, and but lately expired. Except that prominent rivals are not murdered, we can not see that the condition of the government of Pennsylvania is to day much different from the condition of the government of Rome after Cæsar had overcome his rivals. The republican forms went on as always, but the one boss was Cæsar. The astounding thing is the craven and debauched spirit of the people and press of Pennsylvania. These indubitable proofs of the destruction of free government do not create a ripple in that state.

THERE is no more contemptible public figure to-day than Governor Morton of New York. The place he holds is one of the highest distinction and the holding should tempt even a mediocre man to the most conscientious performance of duty. But Mr. Morton's acts have so stamped him as the tool of Platt that the mark can never be removed. His respectability makes the mark more disgraceful. Over the protest of every leader in administrative reform, he reorganized the state civil service commission so that the majority were Platt men, a measure which could have had no object except to further a Platt scheme. Then the excise bill was passed and a storm of opposition arose against its approval. Platt wrote a public letter in favor of it and then Governor Morton signed it. The expenditures under the bill will be about $275,000 annually, and the question arose as to the classification of the employes. The state constitution requires all appointments to be competitive so far as practicable. Platt's civil service commission, over the protest of the one honest member, Colonel Burt, promptly classified the employes as non-competitive and the governor approved the classification on the ground that the law must be enforced at once and there was no eligible list. This excuse is worthy of the days of the civil service reform struggle along in the eighties and is the littlest thing which perhaps even Governor Morton has done. As chief excise commissioner he appointed H. H. Lyman, who at once went to New York and had a long conference with Platt, and a few hours later his nomination was confirmed by the legislature. From Platt he went to Hackett, chairman of the republican state committee. Then he appointed a deputy for the city and county of New York, one George Hilliard, a Platt district leader, and seems well started in building up a great Platt excise machine.

But a difficulty has arisen. The court of appeals has decided that the constitution is self-executing in its requirements as to admission into the state service and that it will be the duty of the court in any case brought before it to see that the constitution is observed. It further holds that non-legislation can not nullify the constitution. Lyman was making ready to appoint sixty agents which the legislature, in order to beat the constitution, termed "confidential." But the state comptroller, Mr. Roberts, here arose and gave notice that he would not pay a single appointee who did not get his place by competition. This paralyzed the machine and Chairman Hackett telegraphed to Roberts: "Are you going to forget our friends who stood by you for renomination?" It is more than likely that Roberts will forget "our friends," and the Platt men are now talking of having a law passed transferring the duty of the payment to Lyman. This will not help the matter; this whole Platt-Morton scheme is destined to an inglorious failure. Competition is practicable and the court will so hold. But in what a position is Morton, with his bogus respectability, bogus statesmanship, bogus everything. This extended instance is only one of a collection, among which is his sanction of a bill Plattizing the Albany police, and another bill authorizing the payment of Aldridge's illegally appointed employes who were kicked out by the court of appeals.

MAYOR WARNER, of Rochester, has followed up his proposal to enforce the civil service law by issuing a proclamation forbidding the city comptroller to issue any warrants for the pay of any person whose appointment has not been made in accordance with law and the rules. The hundred such now in the employ of the city are at last convinced and since most of them did not enter the recent competition their names are not on the eligible lists, and in a few days they will not only be payless but positionless. They too, talk of appealing to Platt's legislature; but here again the constitution stands as a barrier impassable to the Broadway expressman.

Is it not about time that Mayor Taggart, of this city, began to heed passing events? Here is the mayor of Rochester declaring that he will observe his oath and enforce the law. Here is the court of appeals declaring, that when the constitution says that employment shall be given by competition so far as practicable, it is self-executing regardless of a dishonest legislature, and that the court will judge of the practicability. Now, as late as March 16, 1895, the legislature of Indiana re-enacted a law, which had already for four years been the law of the state, requiring the mayor to call together the heads of departments, and adopt regulations which "shall prescribe a common and systematic method of ascertaining the comparative fitness of applicants for office, position and promotion, and of selecting, appointing and promoting those found to be best fitted, except in the department of public safety, without regard to political opinions or services." Mayor Taggart put under his feet the rules adopted in accordance with this mandate, and after brazenly violating them, and allowing them to be violated to his heart's content, he called his heads of departments together, and the meeting went through the form of repealing the rules, but adopted none in their stead. Mayor Taggart has a clergyman who takes a lively interest in his doings as a public officer, and we suggest that now is the time for a proper representation of the spiritual pains and penalties of perjury.

A FRIEND has called our attention to the possibility that the remarks in the CHRONICLE last month relating to Secretary Carlisle were unjust—and we have been over the matter again. The statement was made by Commissioner Rice, in his Boston address, that Secretary Carlisle in appointing money-counters had received only the applications of those formerly employed in like work and had selected those whose record was the highest in the former service; also that he had promoted a clerk after twenty years' service, who was not a democrat, to a position not classified; also that he had recommended all chiefs of divisions to be transferred to the competitive lists. The CHRONICLE pointed out that Mr. Carlisle had asked congress not to put the money-counters under the civil service law, and that, coupled with his son Logan, he had a long and offensive career as an anti-civil service reformer. It asked also for the politics of the counters actually appointed. This was no injustice. It is Mr. Carlisle's fault that the counters are not removed from politics, and some of the greatest scandals have been connected with the places of the very chiefs of divisions which he now seeks to have classified. If there is anything which Mr. Carlisle has ever said in favor of the merit system, we shall be glad to print it. Judged by his career, he has been its steady enemy. If he has become converted and is now its friend, it is easy enough to say so, and to dismiss Logan Carlisle; but we object to putting forward such comparatively petty facts as Mr. Rice mentioned as evidence that the old Adam is eradicated.

THE republicans of the senate have the distinction of being led to victory by Gorman. It all arose out of Gorman's solicitude for "taking the country post-office away from the people." The greatest pest in the federal service for many years has been the little country postmasters, by the fifty thousand or so acting as diligent electioneering tools of fellows like Gorman. No one appreciates this service more than Gorman. The recent plan of the postmaster-general for the gradual transfer of these offices to the classified service, if carried out, would render further usefulness to the Gormanites impossible; and it seems that a majority of the senators are Gormanites, and they forbade consolidation to run over the corporate limits of a city. The condemnation of this corrupt legislation has been all but universal, but it is not to be expected that any followers of Gorman would be made ashamed, any more than a thief is ashamed to be called a thief. Gorman says that all this talk is putting the matter on a low plane, and one has to hear him describe the evils of taking offices away from "the people," and explain how free he has been from interference with the distribution of spoil to get a just idea of what a nice man he is.

It seems to be taken for granted that President Cleveland is soon to issue an order completing the classification of the federal service and putting the destruction of the spoils system in that service upon the home stretch. In anticipation of the direful future the Washington correspondent of the Indianapolis Journal says, April 16: "Indeed, I see no encouragement in the future for a man to be a party worker. Every office in the nation which he might fill will be out of his reach." How about the party principles? The party worker has never said, "Vote with my party because I want to become a spittoon-cleaner." The one reason which he has bawled unceasingly has been the salutary benefits of his party principles? Was this all a lie? It can not be; the Journal correspondent owes an apology to the party worker. And, then, the party principles; are they not worth working for? Must a man be paid to work for them?

THE Ohio senate recently passed a bill providing for the merit system in the city of Cincinnati. The bill had been endorsed by the Chamber of Commerce, the Commercial Club and other business associations of the city and was earnestly desired by the people. The party bosses, however, realizing that the progress of the merit system means that they must go to some honest labor, ordered the action of the legislature reconsidered and it was done under the lead of a Cincinnati Senator named Shattuc. This undoubtedly ends the matter for the present. The result is not surprising. The party machine and the men who control it live very largely upon the distribution of spoil, and the members of our legislatures are about of an average with the ordinary ward boss. They have the same political ideas, the same corrupt notions of government and all alike are in politics for what there is in it. It is not, therefore, to be expected that in a state so thoroughly debauched as is Ohio politically, the party machine will advance the merit system except that as step by step it is kicked into it by public opinion. In these days, having in view the great triumphs which the merit system has won, its advocates know that its final success is certain even in Ohio. The party worker and the party boss are being crowded to the wall and like the rats and vermin in a ship under process of fumigation the only question is not whether they will survive but how long they can stand the fumigation.

WE have received from Philadelphia an interesting account of the efforts of the Eighth Ward Association of the Municipal League to elect a member of the common council. There are sixteen divisions in the eighth ward. Of these the eight which pay nearly all the taxes gave the league candidate a majority while the eight which pay a small proportion of the taxes gave a heavy majority against him. It seems to have been a matter of dollars and cents and offers a good view of Pennsylvania politics. A few days before the election the secretary of the ward association was assured that the league candidate could easily be elected if he would "put up" $900. This, of course, was refused, and the regular republican candidate was elected.

WHILE perhaps its object is not strictly within the scope of the CHRONICLE, yet we print below Mr. Foulke's letter to all the editors of Indiana papers. It will be noted that the charge is that certain men are pushing themselves for the national senate who have no particular qualifications for any public position, but who are possessed of great wealth, and are believed to have obtained and to be obtaining their present influence with the party workers and the possibly future legislators by heavy contributions of funds. The ominous silence of the leading republican papers throughout the state is commanding wide and fixed attention. The letter is as follows:

SIR—In other states we have seen men reaching the highest executive office, and even intruding themselves into the national senate, through the power of money alone, purchasing political influence to secure their nomination and election to places for which they had no other qualifications. Indiana has been singularly free from this kind of corruption. Her governors and senators have been selected with little reference to pecuniary considerations. Morton, Hendricks, McDonald, Pratt, Voorhees, Harrison and Turpie were chosen on account of the political prominence of the men themselves, and they honestly and fairly represented the respective parties to which they owed their election. But, in view of the supposed certainty of republican success next fall, the candidates who are now pushing their claims most loudly and eagerly are men without distinction or experience in public life, whose chief qualification is the possession of great wealth, which it is believed they are willing to use, paying for the coveted honor by enormous contributions to the campaign fund as well as in other ways.

The choice of any such men would simply mean that republican nominations in Indiana are for sale. It would involve greater injury to the honor of our state and to the national welfare than the mere success of either political party. No partisan victory is so precious that it will compensate for the sapping of public virtue involved in the election of a candidate representing dollars and cents rather than political principles. Upon this dark pathway to inevitable ruin the republican party of Indiana with its splendid traditions of patriotic beneficence ought not to enter. Yours,

WM. DUDLEY FOULKE.

Richmond, Ind., April 7, 1896.

THE PARTITION OF PENNSYLVANIA.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

Matt Quay—U. S. Senator and Over-Lord of Pennsylvania.

Richard, Son of the Above—Heir Apparent.

Chris Magee—A restless and rebellious Under-Lord.

Dave Martin—Another restless and rebellious Under-Lord.

Walter—An Intermediary.

Flinn, a State Senator, and Brown, a Director of Public Safety, } Anti-Quay Henchmen.

INTERMEDIARY WALTER'S PROPOSITION.

The correspondence which the Quay manager in Pittsburg made public yesterday began with a preliminary statement by Parker L. Walter, formerly a newspaper man in the Smoky City, in which he asserted that Director of Public Safety Joseph O. Brown, after consultation with Chris L. Magee and Senator Flinn, had authorized him to make a proposition to Senator Quay. The proposition Mr. Walter made in a letter, which was as follows:

"Personal.

"HOTEL DUQUESNE,
"PITTSBURG, PA., U. S. A.,
"December 24, 9:30 P. M.

"DEAR SENATOR—Joe Brown sent for me at noon to-day and asked me if any terms could be made with you. I said nothing but a complete lay down. He kept me here until now. First he went over the situation with Flinn, then Flinn went to Magee and this is the result, and is their formal offer to you, known only to them, myself and you:

"Magee will retire from national, state and city politics; Flinn will do the same after the February elections if you think best, and merely work along in harmony in the senate. He will step out of city chairmanship and let you name his successor. You are to name all delegates from Allegheny county to state convention. You are to name all members of legislature (house and senate) from the county; you are to name national delegates.

"Larkin or other city nominees (except Guthrie, who is regarded as unsafe for you and other side also) to be elected under secret agreement. Gourley to be defeated, even if nominated.

"Flinn to call down Martin and Porter and other Philadelphia leaders if so desired by you; they to give you legislature and national delegates.

"Any man you may name to be supported for senate or President.

"In return nothing suggested so far, except certain lines for investigation here. All bona fide wrong-doing of Brown, Flinn, Magee or others to be shown up.

"Brown to meet you at my house in early morning alone. After talk with him Flinn to come and give such guarantees as you may ask for.

"This is outline of matter. They say Hastings is with you and the game is up.

"This must be arranged, they say, before the committee meets here, and must be absolutely a secret.

"Wire me early, so I can tell Brown.

"Write what you desire done to 117 Linden avenue, East Liberty, Pittsburg.

"Yours, etc.,

"PARKER L. WALTER."

R. R. QUAY'S STATEMENT.

Following this letter, Ex-Representative Richard R. Quay, Senator Quay's son, made this statement concerning the correspondence:

"About two weeks before J. O. Brown and Senator Flinn went to Washington I heard from outside sources that they were going to ask for an interview with father and were seeking a compromise. I went to Washington and protested against father's even meeting them, saying to him at the time: 'If you meet them we will have the same old cry of Quay and Martin that we had in the hog combine fight of last summer.'

"He said to me: 'Dick, you are entirely too bitter; it is my duty as chairman of the state committee to do all I honorably can to harmonize the different factions of the republican party. If they ask for a meeting I will receive them as I would any other republicans.'

"Following out his ideas as expressed to me as to his duty as chairman, he wired Mr. Brown upon the receipt of Mr. Walter's letter of the 24th of December, if he desired to see him to come to Washington. The next day Mr. Brown appeared in Washington, accompanied by Mr. Flinn. At this time Mr. Flinn produced a memorandum written in pencil by himself, which was in striking contrast with the suggestions given through Mr. Brown to Mr. Walter. My father flatly refused to entertain the proposition. After this, and before they left, he told them they might leave it with him, and that he would amend it. He then wrote to friends in Allegheny county, to whom previous to the state convention he had made pledges that he would carry out his reform ideas in the manner enunciated in the state platform.

"It became noised about Pittsburg that Mr. Brown and Mr. Flinn had gone to Washington to see father, and father, having been written to on the subject, wrote to his friends that no compromise would be made with which they were not entirely satisfied.

"Several days after that Mr. Wright, father's secretary, forwarded, by father's direction, an unsigned typewritten suggestion which is dated January 1, and of which he retained a copy. This is the paper to which Senator Flinn has made so many mysterious references, and is the only paper that ever came from father in connection with this matter."

The memorandum agreement which was referred to, was in Mr. Flinn's handwriting, and was as follows:

"Memorandum and agreement between M. S. Quay of the first part and J. O. Brown and William Flinn of the second part. *The consideration of the agreement being the mutual political and business advantage which may result therefrom.

*Comptroller James A. Grier, in answer to the petition of Commissioners Mercer and Weir for a mandamus to compel him to ask for bids for tax receipts, has filed a reply stating that the county commissioners in March, 1893, advertised for proposals for the printing of tax receipts to be used in the collection of the taxes for that year for the county of Allegheny, specifying the character of the paper by a sample furnished by the American Bank Note Company, of New York, and limiting the same to the sample. On March 23, 1893, a contract was made between the county commissioners and Baird Reed for the tax receipts

"First—The said M. S. Quay is to have the benefit of the influence in all matters in state and national politics of the said parties of the second part, the said parties agreeing that they will secure the election of delegates to the state and national convention, who will be guided in all matters by the wishes of the said party of the first part, and who will also secure the election of members of the state senate from the forty-third, forty-fourth and forty-fifth senatorial districts, and also secure the election of members of the house of representatives south of the Monongahela and Ohio rivers in the county of Allegheny, who will be guided by the wishes and request of the said party of the first part during the continuance of this agreement upon all political matters. The different candidates of the various positions mentioned shall be selected by the parties of the second part, and all the positions of state and national appointments made in this territory mentioned shall be satisfactory to and secure the indorsement of the party of the second part, when the appointment is made either by or through the party of the first part, or his friends or political associates. All legislation affecting the parties of the second part, affecting cities of the second class, shall receive the hearty co-operation and assistance of the party of the second part, and legislation which may affect their business shall likewise receive the hearty co-operation and help of the party of the first part.

"It being distinctly understood that at the approaching national convention, to be held at St. Louis, the delegates from the twenty-second congressional district shall neither by voice nor vote do other than what is satisfactory to the party of the first part.

"The party of the first part agrees to use his influence and secure the support of his friends and political associates to support the republican county and city ticket, when nominated, both in the city of Pittsburg and Allegheny, and the county of Allegheny, and that he will and supplies to be used by the county that year, the same to correspond with sample on file. This contract, he says, while purporting to have been made by James G. Weir and R. E. Mercer, was illegal, and an imposition, as it was really made by Christopher L. Magee, acting collusively with Weir and Mercer.

The comptroller then states that the receipts furnished were printed on inferior paper, "on paper of a low cost price and within the control of said Magee and others, and large numbers of tax receipts were by them issued and used in subsequent county and city elections for illicit purposes. This was easily arranged because they had control of the majority of the county commissioners, who acted and co-operated with them in this matter. And your respondent assigns this as one of the competent reasons for refusing to countenance measures of this character." He also asserts: "That Senator William Flinn, chairman of the republican committee of Pittsburg, obtained blank tax receipts of this character from a county official, and used them in the city elections for illegal purposes." — Pittsburg dispatch, New York Evening Post, April 7.

discountenance the factional fighting by his friends and associates for county offices during the continuation of this agreement.

"This agreement is not to be binding upon the parties of the second part when a candidate for any office shall reside in Allegheny county and shall only be binding if the party of the first part is a candidate for United States senator to succeed himself so far as this office is concerned.

"In the forty-third senatorial district a new senator shall be elected to succeed Senator Upperman. In the forty-fifth senatorial district the party of the first part shall secure the withdrawal of Dr. A. J. Barchfeld, and the parties of the second part shall withdraw as a candidate Senator Steel, and the parties of the second part shall secure the election of some party satisfactory to themselves.

"In the twenty-second congressional district the candidates for congress shall be selected by the party of the second part. The term of this agreement to be for —years from the signing thereof, and shall be binding upon all parties when signed by C. L. Magee.

WHAT QUAY PROPOSED.

Senator Quay's suggested agreement was typewritten and unsigned. It was as follows:
JAN. 1, 1896.

"Until January 1, 1900, the following shall be the political conditions in Allegheny county: Mr. Quay is to have the absolute support of the signers hereof in state and national politics and is to sustain through his friends all regular republican nominees and the straight republican organization.

"If Mr. Quay is a candidate for the United States senate in 1899 he is to have the united support of the senators and members of the legislature from Allegheny county. In every other case his leadership is to be followed by a united support in the legislature and in national and state conventions except where a bona fide candidate appears in Allegheny county.

"In the national convention of 1896 the delegates from the twenty-second congressional district shall sustain Senator Quay. Unless otherwise agreed hereafter, Mr. Magee shall not be a delegate to either the national or state conventions of 1896.

"In the senatorial districts now represented by Steel and Upperman, the sitting senators shall retire and Senator Quay and his friends shall name the successors to Senator Steel. The other parties hereto shall name the successor to Senator Upperman.

"For legislative and state convention for the year 1896, Senator Quay and his friends shall name the members and delegates from the first, second, sixth, seventh and eighth legislative districts. After 1896 the personnel of the delegates of the sixth and eighth districts shall be a matter of conference between the parties hereto, and if no agreement be arrived at, shall be settled by arbitration. Senatorial appointments in the city of Pittsburg shall be first indorsed by the parties hereto residing there.

"No legislation is to be had at Harrisburg or desired, the effect of which will be to injure the character or business interests of the Pittsburg parties hereto. This, however, not to interfere with the general reform legislation outlined in the platform of the republican state convention of 1895.

"In the twenty-second congressional district the candidate for congress shall be named by the Pittsburg parties, and shall be, so far as the affair can be controlled, without opposition for nomination or election.

"All senators and members shall sustain Senator Quay in the organization of the legislature and in the election of a United States senator during the term of this agreement, except as hereinbefore provided."

SENATOR FLINN'S STATEMENT.

It was late yesterday afternoon when Senator Flinn learned that the foregoing correspondence had been made public. He and J. O. Brown were together at the Walton, and they had copies of the whole matter before them. Mr. Flinn was in a frame of mind to talk and after going over the two agreements he made this statement concerning them:

"The two agreements, relating to the proposed agreements between Senator Quay and J. O. Brown and myself on the other part, are practically correct. The difference between the two agreements are very slight, being that the republican organization of Allegheny county should not interfere in the politics of the sixth and eighth legislative districts, Senator Quay also demanding that he should name the successor to Senator Steel. He further demanding that C. L. Magee should not be permitted to go either to the national or state convention as a delegate. The agreement which Mr. Brown and myself submitted to him contained the provision that Mr. Magee should sign the agreement before it was binding

"There was nothing startling in the agreement submitted by Mr. Brown and myself, as it was a practical reproduction of the agreement made in August of 1890, and signed by Senator Quay and N. P. Reed on one part, and Mr. J. O. Brown and myself on the other part. This agreement ran for a period of four years, and when it expired Senator Quay called Mr. Brown and myself to a meeting at the Duquesne Hotel, when the agreement was destroyed. He complimented us on our fairness and integrity in the keeping of the agreement.

SENT FOR MR. BROWN.

"Senator Quay telegraphed to J. O. Brown to come to Washington and asked him to bring me with him, when he received a dispatch from him, announcing that he was ready to meet us. Senator Quay also instructed Mr. Brown to have us reproduce the agreement of 1890, which I did with the exceptions that I have enumerated. I notified Senator Quay that while I was anxious to have harmony in the lines of the republican party that we would do nothing without a consultation with David Martin, of Philadelphia. Mr. Quay objected strenuously to having Mr. Martin brought into the question at all, but I replied that Governor Hastings was our general and had gotten us into this fight with him; that Governor Hastings had made peace with him without notification to either the Philadelphians or ourselves, and that there was no reason why, if peace was made with the political interests of one municipality, both should not be included. I believe that the agreement would have been signed that day but for the provision relating to Mr. Martin which I insisted upon. I took the train to Philadelphia and notified Mr. Martin of my conversation with Senator Quay, and we both agreed that when peace was made it should be made with both municipalities at one time.

"Senator Quay then sent for Mr. Martin and met him at Senator Cameron's house. While Senator Quay is turning on the light, he might give the public the benefit of this interview. He again telegraphed Mr. Brown when he was ready to receive us, and we went to Washington, to his residence. He told us that his friends in Allegheny county objected to the renewal of the agreement of 1890, and that we had better see Lieutenant-Governor Lyon. I replied that Lieutenant-Governor Lyon was in a conspiracy with the democratic party and the municipal league to defeat the the republican city ticket, which was elected in February, and I would have no meeting with him. He then verbally enumerated the proposition which he afterward mailed to Mr. Brown, and which is the copy which is in to-day's Pittsburg papers.

THREATENED WITH THE LEXOW.

"We told him at the time that we would not agree to the unnecessary humiliation of Mr. Magee. He replied then that it was not his intention that Mr. Magee should shine again in the future in state or national politics. We reminded him of the fact that he did not live in Allegheny county, but upon this point he was obstinate and threatened us with the Lexow committee. We informed him that if the Lexow committee sat in Pittsburg and took the character of testimony they took in Philadelphia, there would be no agreement signed of any kind or character between us. He telegraphed Senator Andrews to meet us in Philadelphia, which he did the same day.

"If Senator Quay is still anxious to turn on the light he might inform the democratic party, or the municipal league of Pittsburg, why the Lexow committee only held one hearing, and why they conducted the line of examination which they did, which was neither personal nor scandalous, and which did not suit the municipal league. The only difference between the Senator Quay of 1890 and Senator Quay of 1896 is that he is a candidate for President; and while it may not be to the credit of a member of the state senate to engage in the political partitions of a county that he lives in, it might strike the public that it is far less creditable for a reform candidate for President, who is a candidate for the greatest office of any people on earth, to be engaged in a political partition of a community in a county where he does not live.

"I think, in order to make the chapter complete, that Senator Quay might as well turn on the light regarding his anxiety to make a deal with Mr. Martin, of Philadelphia, and tell the result of the meeting in Senator Cameron's residence, and tell the reformers of the municipal league why but one session of the Lexow committee was held in Pittsburg."

MR. BROWN'S STATEMENT.

Director of Public Safety Brown, of Pittsburg, speaking on the same subject, said:

"In January I received a telegram from Senator Quay, asking me to come to Washington. I did, and called upon the senator at his private residence, and he told me that he desired to discuss the propriety of a new political agreement of the same kind and character that was executed between N. P. Reed and himself on one part, and Senator Flinn and myself, of the other. He asked me to take a pencil and note down the main points of what he thought that agreement should be. This I did, and it was practically the agreement of 1890, and was to form the basis of a future discussion upon political matters therein set out; with the request that I take them to Pittsburg and submit them to Senator Flinn, and that Senator Flinn and myself should go over the main points of the agreement and return to Washington, which we did.

"On our way to Washington Senator Flinn wrote out and reproduced in writing practically the agreement of 1890, a copy of which appears in the Pittsburg papers of today. We had a very lengthy discussion over the political situation of Allegheny county, but failed to reach an agreement, for the reason that Senator Quay stoutly insisted that C. L. Magee, of Pittsburg, should not attend any state or national convention, and that he, Senator Quay, should have the choice of state senator of Pennsylvania, instead of Senator Steel. As to this whole matter, I have Senator Quay's original telegrams and letters in my possession in Pittsburg, which I will produce at any time. Senator Quay told me, in his own private library in Washington, that he did not desire Parker Walters should in any manner, shape or form have any part in these contemplated agreements."

SENATOR QUAY'S COMMENT.

Senator Quay was shown the interviews with Senator Flinn and Director Brown, but he refused to discuss them. "Let all the news come from the seat of war," he declared. "I have nothing to do with it. The people there have all the documents, papers and evidence, and they can publish them if they see fit."

He read the interview with Senator Flinn over carefully and occasionally would remark: "He tries to get away from the question;" then turning to the reporter, Mr. Quay would say: "The point is that they came to me, and he covers that part up with a mass of other matters.

When he read Director Brown's interview he said: "You will notice he begins with my telegram to him. He says nothing about the letter I first received."

When he had finished reading the interviews, Mr. Quay said: "I must decline to discuss the matter, preferring, as I have already remarked, to let the news come from the seat of war."

A DEBAUCHED AND MANACLED PRESS.

(Philadelphia Press, March 17.)

Quay and Flinn Here—They Were Both at the Same Hotel, But They Did Not Meet—The Proposed Peace Terms—Flinn and Brown Drew Up One Agreement and Quay Prepared Another—Senator Flinn's Statement—He Says Harmony Failed Because He Insisted That David Martin Should Be Taken In—Senator Quay Is Reticent.

United States Senator Quay and State Senator Flinn, the Allegheny county republican leader who has been challenging Senator Quay for several days to cross-examine him upon certain political matters, were at the Walton last evening for about an hour and a half, but they did not meet. Mr. Flinn had arrived in Philadelphia early in the morning, having come east immediately after making public his letter of defiance to the Beaver Statesman, which was published in The Press yesterday. Mr. Quay reached the city about 7 o'clock in the evening, having come up from Washington.

The presence of both Senator Quay and State Senator Flinn was merely a coincidence, both gentlemen declared. Mr. Flinn said he had not seen Senator Quay and the latter said he did not know that Mr. Flinn was in the city until told by a Press reporter.

Interest in the controversy between these republican leaders was heightened yesterday by the fact that Senator Quay's son, R. R. Quay, made public in Pittsburg the correspondence and peace agreements which have been so much discussed during the past few days. These papers show that Senator Flinn and J. O. Brown made a proposition of peace to Senator Quay, which was not acceptable to him and he in turn proposed terms of settlement to them which they would not agree to.

QUAY-FLINN LETTERS—PITTSBURG POLITICIANS NOT MUCH SURPRISED—AN EDITORIAL INTERVIEW.

PITTSBURG, March 16.—The publication of the correspondence between Senator M. S. Quay and State Senator Flinn created considerable talk to-day.

The News this afternoon, which represents C. L. Magee, says editorially, under the caption, "A Little Political History:"

"With regard to the published reports this morning concerning the relation between Senator Quay and Senator Flinn, it is interesting to go back a little into history. In 1889, during the absence of C. L. Magee in Europe, Senator Quay entered into an arrangement with Senator

Flinn and J. O. Brown (the late N. P. Reed being a witness thereto), that in consideration of the support of Messrs. Flinn and Brown, in harmony with Senator Quay's wishes in state and national politics the charter of the city of Pittsburg, which Mr. Quay had threatened to destroy, should be preserved as it had been adopted by the legislature of 1887, under which Mr. Brown was then, as now, at the head of the department of public safety. The only exception in this agreement was in case there was a candidate from Allegheny county for any national or state position. This agreement was to cover a period of four years, which overlapped the next gubernatorial election, the next Presidential election and the election of Mr. Quay's successor. It was kept in good faith during the entire period.

"In 1890, when it became necessary for the Republicans to nominate a candidate for governor, Allegheny county having its own candidate in the person of Major E. A. Montooth, such of its delegates, including all those from the city of Pittsburg as were in sympathy with Messrs. Flinn and Brown, supported the Allegheny county candidate for governor and declined to vote for Mr. Quay's man Delamater, although repeatedly urged by him to do so.

"In 1892, in harmony with the agreement referred to, and as showing Senator Quay's confidence in Mr. Flinn, the latter was chosen a delegate-at-large to the republican national convention, and in that body he and Mr. Brown, who was a district delegate, voted for and supported the candidate advocated by Mr. Quay.

"Coming down to the present difficulty, when the recent municipal campaign was pending, Parker L. Walter, claiming to represent Senator Quay, approached Mr. Brown and arranged for a meeting with Senator Quay with a view to securing harmony. This meeting was held at Washington, Senator Flinn being present. At that time Senator Quay agreed, as a basis of harmony, that there should be no interference with the charter of the city of Pittsburg, except as regarded the non-participation of police officials and other city employes in politics, as laid down by the republican state platform of 1895, and he agreed that the Lexow committee, which at that time was to come to Pittsburg, was, pending negotiations then under way, to confine its inquiries to such matters as should be covered by the system of government in vogue in this city. Any one familiar with the visit of that committee to Pittsburg will realize at once that they did just what the senator agreed, thus clearly indicating that the committee was at the beck and call of Senator Quay, and confirming the declaration made by Senator Quay at the time of the organization of the committee, that it would be absolutely under his control, and was not intended to injure any one, but simply to be used as a political club to compel the support of those who were not in harmony with his views.

"Subsequently Mr. Quay sent a typewritten proposition to Mr. Flinn, which is now in Mr. Flinn's possession, and which laid down such conditions as could not be honorably accepted. That ended the negotiations. Senator Flinn is now out of the city, but it is probable that more light will be thrown upon Mr. Quay's position upon Mr. Flinn's return to Pittsburgh."—Philadelphia Press, March 17.

(Philadelphia Record, March 17.)

Quay On His Bombshell.—He is Here, and Talks About Senator Flinn's Negotiations—Says It's Allegheny's Fight—Being a Presidential Candidate He Deems it Improper to Comment on Convention Prospects or Magee's War.

The bombshell thrown by Senator Quay's friends into the Magee-Flinn ranks in Allegheny county by publishing the correspondence relating to a treaty of peace which Senator Flinn took steps to negotiate, was the all-absorbing topic in political circles yesterday. Senator Quay, accompanied by his secretary and Congressman Monroe H. Kulp, of Shamokin, arrived at the Hotel Walton, last night, from Washington, and when asked if his coming at the time when Senator Flinn and Public Safety Director J. O. Brown, of Pittsburgh, were at the same hotel was merely a coincidence, he replied:

"I am told they went away just as I arrived."

Senator Quay did not see Mr. Flinn. The latter arrived at the hotel about 7 o'clock in the morning, having traveled all night from Pittsburgh. The presence of Mr. Brown, who figures in the published correspondence, was explained by the fact that Mrs. Brown has been staying in the city for medical treatment. Mr. Flinn's visit was a mystery to politicians, some of whom thought that, knowing that the publication was to be made yesterday morning in Pittsburgh, he started east for the purpose of explaining matters to David Martin and Senator Porter, who would infer from the publication that the Pittsburgh leaders, as long ago as last Christmas, were thinking of breaking loose from the Philadelphia combine chieftains, unless the latter should join the westerners in the work of making everything lovely for Senator Quay. Mr. Flinn took the 8.50 train for home last night.

HOW LOCAL FACTIONS REGARD IT.

The boomerang that has hit Magee and Flinn effects the "administration" element of of this city, because of the apparent intention which the Allegheny leaders had of forcing Messrs. Martin and Porter to offer the olive branch to the senator or of abandoning the Philadelphia combine chieftains to their fate, if they persisted in warring against the silent seducer of tarpon. The publication of the correspondence was regarded among both republican factions yesterday, as explaining why Mr. Martin had lately been acting and speaking, or rather not acting or speaking, without regard for Mr. Magee's attitude, and why the Philadelphia leader had said, on Saturday, that he was not ready to declare for or against Quay or any body else for President and would not announce his preference until he should arrive at St. Louis.

It was also thought among lieutenants of both factions, that the feelings which the Quay disclosure shows to have animated the Pittsburgh leaders last Christmas—about the time of the senatorial investigating committee's visit to the smoky city—might have made Senator Porter weary of his share in the alliance with the western end of the combine, and had some bearing upon the announcement of his retirement from politics.

(Philadelphia Times, March 17.)

Quay and Flinn in Town—At the Same Hotel in This City, But They Did Not Meet—Flinn's Threat a Boomerang—Quay's Friends Publish the Harmony Negotiations in Pittsburgh—Combine Made the Overtures and the United States Senator demanded Magee's Banishment from Politics, Stood Up for Reform Legislation and Declined to Consider David Martin or the Situation in This City—The Pittsburghers Were Evidently Afraid of the Senatorial Investigating Committee—Flinn and Director of Public Safety Brown, of Pittsburgh, Make Interesting Statements, But They Admit the Authenticity of the Published Documents—Quay Reticent About Politics and the Contest for the Republican Presidential Nomination.

United States Senator Quay came to this city from Washington last evening and took rooms at the Hotel Walton. About the time of the arrival of the Beaver statesman and candidate for President, State Senator William Flinn, of Pittsburgh, who had been in the city all day, with J. O. Brown, the director of public works of Pittsburgh, took his departure from the same hotel. It is needless to say that Senator Quay and Flinn did not have an engagement to meet, and they did not even get a glimpse of each other.

Senator Quay said he came to Philadelphia on private business which might compel him to remain a couple of days, or may be completed in time for him to go back to Washington to-day. He did not care to discuss politics, especially the situation regarding the contest for the republican presidential nomination. He was shown an estimate made by a New York newspaper, in which Major McKinley, of Ohio, was given 565 votes, which would assure him of the nomination; but even this failed to draw out the candidate of the Keystone state. He laughed as he glanced over the figures, to which, it was apparent by his manner, he attached no weight, and merely remarked:

"Why don't they give him all the rest?"

THE PITTSBURG CONTROVERSY.

Regarding the controversy between his supporters in Pittsburgh and Senator Flinn, who is Chris Magee's chief lieutenant in the anti-Quay combine, Colonel Quay declined to go into any discussion. He said that he did not consider that he was at all involved in the matter, and that it is entirely in the hands of his son Richard and Lieutenant-Governor Lyon, with whom Flinn raised the controversy.

"Dick and Lyon had the correspondence on the subject," he said, "to use as they saw fit. They deemed it proper to give it out for publication, and I have nothing whatever to do with it."

The correspondence referred to caused considerable of a sensation in republican circles in this city. It was in the shape of an exposure by the friends of Senator Quay of all the documents attending the negotiations for peace between the leaders of the combine faction of the party in Pittsburgh and the senator himself. Senator Flinn had threatened to make public a letter which he had in his possession from Senator Quay, in which, according to Flinn, the senator sued for harmony. This was met by a flat denial on the part of Senator Quay, and his son Richard, after a trip to Washington, gave out in Pittsburgh all the letters and written documents on the subject. As a result, Flinn's threat to publish the Quay letter has proven considerable of a boomerang, since it is clearly shown by the latest developments that overtures for peace first came from the western combine.

A SINGLE VOICE IN THE WILDERNESS.

POLITICAL ABSOLUTISM.

(Philadelphia Public Ledger, March 20.)

It has always been a popular belief—one strongly, clearly, and eloquently formulated, in President Lincoln's Gettysburg Address—that ours is a government of, for, and by the people. Undoubtedly that was what the wise, patriotic founders intended it to be, but with new lords come new governing methods and forces, and if President Lincoln were living to-day, and were to read the several agreements made respectively by certain Pittsburgh politicians and Senator Quay, he would unquestionably modify the language of his famous memorial speech by excluding from its application the people of the state of Pennsylvania.

The intelligent citizens of this state can not have failed to perceive long ago that they were politically corralled, but, until the exceedingly frank Pittsburgh agreements were made public, they probably did not similarly see that they have been for years in the political shambles, hung up and sold outright to Senator Quay. That the Ledger is justified in saying that that as their political condition to-day is proved conclusively, we think, by the following correspondence, which we here-with republish at length without fear that its reproduction will be found tedious.

* * *

There is no intelligent citizen of Pennsylvania in whom there survives a single gleam of public spirit who can thoughtfully consider the above stated agreements and negotiations without the profoundest sense of humiliation, indignation and disgust. That the citizens of this great old commonwealth should be openly, recklessly, shamefully made the mere trafficking commodities of the political market, in which their most precious and sacred rights of citizenship are bargained and sold by the most corrupt and venal politicians, should arouse the honest resentment of every good citizen throughout the state. When we consider the vicious lives, the unenviable characters, the smirched reputations of the practical politicians, both great and small, who at present dominate the government of this state, there can be no other feeling than that of shame that the government of this grand old commonwealth can be in any manner or degree controlled by men whose very names are by-words and cast scorn upon their bearers. But it is fair to Senator Quay and his pliant, unscrupulous henchmen to say that not they, but the people themselves, are responsible for their arbitrary, blighting political rule. The people have given them the extraordinary power they exercise, to the deep humiliation of Pennsylvania. They are but the creatures of the criminal indifference of voters to their duties of citizenship, the first, greatest and most sacred of all their duties. It is upon this indifference that these trading politicians exist and thrive. Replace it with popular political interest and energy, and our bosses, their "rounders" and "heelers" of all degrees, will cease to be.—

BOSS RULE IN PENNSYLVANIA.

McKinley has taken from Quay two of the votes which Pennsylvania will cast in the St. Louis convention, and the men who will thus break the solid delegation are Magee and Flinn, the bosses of Pittsburg. In connection with the contest for the possession of these votes there has come to light documentary and other evidence of a very interesting character, showing how the legislation and public offices and the political affairs generally of a state containing nearly 6,000,000 people are controlled by three or four political dictators and made subject to their bargains with each other.

The Pittsburg bosses are Magee and Flinn, the latter being a state senator and the chairman of the republican city committee. Two or three weeks ago Lieut.-Gov. Lyon, representing Quay, the state boss, in western Pennsylvania, remarked in public that Quay could have had the two Pittsburg delegates if he had been willing to make "a contract with the Pittsburg bosses." Whereupon Flinn wrote to Lyon, saying that he had in his pocket a proposition from Quay which he had declined to accept, and offering to give testimony on this point before any tribunal. Three days later Quay's son, who had asserted that no proposition had been made by his father to Flinn, caused to be published the proposition for a treaty of peace and division of spoils submitted to his father by Flinn and Magee, and also the counter proposition submitted by Quay to them. It is now admitted that a signed agreement or treaty between Quay and these men was in force from 1890 to 1894, when it expired by limitation. The proposition submitted by Flinn and Magee this year was practically a reproduction of it.

The Pittsburg draft of the new treaty which would fill nearly a column of the Times was introduced as follows: * * *

The Pittsburg bosses, who, to use a phrase with which men of their kind are familiar, "are not in politics for their health," could regard with complacency "general reform" approved by such a man as Quay. This shameful treaty, proposed by a candidate for the presidency, is regarded by his newspapers as proof that Quay is "a wise general and an honorable man!"

Accounts differ as to the reason why Quay's version of the treaty was not accepted. It provided that Magee should not be a delegate to any convention, and Flinn says he would not submit to such humiliation. Flinn insisted that "Dave" Martin, of Philadelphia, should be recognized as one of the treaty-making powers. "I believe," he says, "that the agreement would have been signed that day but for the provision relating to Martin." He asserts that Quay "threatened" him "with the 'Lexow' committee," but to no purpose. This committee, controlled by Quay, visited Pittsburg while the negotiations were pending, and passed only one day there, making harmless inquiries, Quay having agreed thus to muzzle it in order that the harmonizing process should not be disturbed. But Quay asked for too much, and as McKinley's agents appeared at the right time with inducements the treaty was not signed and the disgraceful truth began to come out.

The republican press of Pennsylvania is unable, so far as we can learn, to see anything objectionable in these negotiations for what Flinn calls "the partition of a community," or in the shameful agreement which was in force for four years. The Quay papers regard his proposition as an "honorable" one; the Magee papers hold that the terms of the Pittsburg bosses were strictly in accord with the rules of morality in politics. And yet here were proposed agreements providing for the absolute control, not only in conventions, nominations, and appointments, but also of the legislation of a great state—control divided between the bosses of two factions, it is true, but still confirmed to them jointly. No reference was made to the people. Why should any have been made? The subservience of the republican rank and file in Pennsylvania to these bosses is notorious.

What a revelation the documents and charges brought out by this quarrel make as to the forces and purposes controlling representation and legislation, both municipal and state, in that old commonwealth of nearly 6,000,000 souls!—New York Times, March 31.

The Massachusetts house rejected the bill to extend the civil service rules to the employes of counties.

Euclid Martin, postmaster at Omaha, is chairman of the state democratic committee.

MUNICIPAL SPOILS.

I consider the question of pure or corrupt municipal government in the United States as the most far-reaching and important that can possibly engage the attention of all thinking men who believe in government by the people.—Charles Stewart Smith.

HOW TO GO AT IT.

OUR AIM—THE WELFARE OF ALBANY. OUR MEANS—AN AROUSED CIVIC SPIRIT. OUR TIME—NOW.

ALBANY, N. Y., April 2, 1896.

To the Citizens of Albany:

Mr. James Bryce, in his celebrated work, "The American Commonwealth," speaks of municipal government as the one "conspicuous failure of the United States." President White of Cornell University asserts that "the city governments of the United States are the worst in Christendom—the most expensive, the most inefficient, and the most corrupt." All writers on municipal reform agree that a prime cause of our municipal evils is the confusion of state and national with municipal politics. The prosperity of Albany depends upon the honesty and efficiency of its government by enlightened methods and upon business principles. We are entitled to and should have the most improved system of taxes, of street paving, of lighting, of water, of drainage, of schools, of transit, and all other public necessities and conveniences. To secure these results there must, on the part of good citizens, be organization and earnest, incessant and systematic political activity. Spasmodic effort for a few weeks before election is fruitless—twelve months of disciplined energy means success.

There is to be formed at once in Albany an organization with these objects:

To promote the absolute separation of our municipal from state and national politics.

To advocate the extension and maintenance of practical civil service reform in all municipal departments.

To demand a rigid observance of all the statutes of the state and the laws and ordinances of the city.

To compel fair elections.

To insist upon the honest and economical expenditure of the taxpayers' money.

To watch the conduct of the city's servants in every branch of the municipal service.

To commend and uphold officials whose intelligence and devotion to duty merit approval.

To criticize and reprove where ignorance and negligence is found, and to condemn and prosecute criminal and unworthy officials.

Its special object will be to make a thorough and scientific investigation of the correct principles of local self-government as adapted to this municipality, and to collect and publish all appropriate information resulting from such study. While the members of this organization may belong to different national or state parties, all will unite to obtain the best government for our city, and the wisest expenditure of the people's money, to advance the material growth of the municipality and stimulate that spirit of progress in our citizens which will secure for them and their descendants the largest measure of domestic comfort and commercial prosperity. A meeting of those thus interested in Albany's welfare will be called at an early date to formally organize. If you are in sympathy with this movement and desire to identify yourself with it, kindly notify any of the undersigned. The blank appended can be used for this purpose.

Committee: Matthew Hale, Grange Sard, Samuel B. Ward, J. De Witt Peltz, Charles R. Knowles, David A. Thompson, Samuel S. Hatt, Dudley Olcott, Abraham V. De Witt, Amasa J. Parker, jr., Daniel Leonard, Douw H. Fonda, Albert Rathbone, William B. Van Rensselaer, W. Howard Brown, George E. Gorham, Edward G. Selden, Peter Kinneer, John F. Montignani, Oren E. Wilsou, Robert Shaw Oliver, George Douglas Miller, William M. Brundage, John E. McElroy, J. Towusend Lansing, Porter Hooghkeek, Marcus T. Hun, Abraham Lansing, Henry A. Peckham, William W. Battershall, Charles H. Mills, Edward N. McKinney, Henry P. Warren, John W. McHarg, and other.

* * *

The fourth national conference for good city government of the national municipal league will be held in Baltimore, May 6, 7, and 8. Charter reform will be an important topic, and one whole session will be taken up with its discussion.

The description of the municipal conditions of the principal American cities, which have been a feature of former conferences, will be continued, special attention being given to these of the southern tier—Richmond, Charleston, Atlanta, Nashville, Memphis and Galveston.

Among the speakers will be Samuel B. Capen and John A. Butler, presidents of the Boston and Milwaukee municipal leagues, respectively; James W. Pryor, secretary of the city club of New York; Henry W. Williams, of Baltimore reform league; George A. Deuison, of The Springfield Republican; Mayor John Boyd Thacher, of Albany, N. Y.; George W. Guthrie, of Pittsburg; Charles Morris Howard, secretary of the Baltimore reform league; Merritt Starr, of Chicago; Col. George E. Waring; Hazen S. Pingree, mayor of Detroit; Charles Richardson, one of the vice-presidents of the league; William M. Salter, and P. J. Magnire, general secretary of the united brotherhood of carpenters and joiners of America.

Invitations have also been extended to Magistrate John Primrose and Councilor Crawford, of Glasgow, Scotland, to be present at the conference, and describe the excellent municipal government of that city, and the methods adopted to secure it.

IN CHICAGO.

"The second ward is not cleaned according to specifications. It is not cleaned at all. There are plenty of alleys in that ward which have not been cleaned in six months. There are some that have not been cleaned in a year. There are several that have not been swept in two years. There are important street corners in the ward where the garbage boxes have not been emptied in months. There is more than one corner where the garbage is heaped up on the sidewalks, making a pile three or four feet high, and eight or ten feet long, rendering them almost impassable. The second ward of Chicago is the dirtiest, filthiest spot in the city, as the city is the dirtiest, filthiest spot in the world."—Chicago Tribune.

* * *

The board of election commissioners to-day declared that 45,000 of the 370,000 voters registered for the coming spring election were fraudulent. The commissioners have been at work for a week, and discovered wholesale registration frauds in nearly every ward in the city. The 45,000 names declared fraudulently registered, have been stricken from the poll list. The commissioners say the number of names thus stricken from the lists is greater than the total vote cast in the states of Montana, North Dakota, Delaware, Florida and Nevada.—Chicago dispatch, March 31.

* * *

Bloodshed was a prominent feature of the election to-day, in which the aldermanic "gang" was defeated pretty generally, twenty-six of the thirty-four alderman-elect being representatives of the respectable element of the community.

The "levee" section of the first ward provided its usual quota of brawls, with fists, rocks, and clubs as weapons, and whisky as the accessory in every case.

There were disturbances among the Italians of the nineteenth ward, where aldermanic contestants strove, with beer, whisky, and money, to influence the voting.

Fist-fights and ejections of trespassers from the polling places by the police were reported in the second, eighteenth and twenty-second wards.

The open violation of the law against salacious selling liquor during the voting hours, made most of the trouble for the police.

The most serious outbreak occurred in the "levee" district. Joseph Grogan, a clerk for the Chicago and Eastern Illinois Railroad, who was not in any way connected with the rioters, was shot in the leg. He was going to his office when a gang of colored and white men engaged in a fight, and half a thousand of the same class of men were quickly on the spot. An unknown colored man fired six bullets into the mob, one of them striking Grogan.

At the same place the factions working for "Bathhouse John" Coughlin, the present alderman, and George H. Williams his opponent, came in conflict with fists and revolvers. Numerous arrests were made.

Close upon this disturbance came another in the same part of the ward. "Sol" Van Praag, a deputy United States marshal was attacked by a gang of Coughlin "heelers," and a Williams crowd rushed to the rescue, precipitating a free fight, in which shots were fired. No one was hit, and the police captured two of the shooters.

At 192 Washington street, William Martin, a Williams worker, shot William Hickey, a Coughlin man, in the arm, and the trouble led to a small riot. The police arrested Hickey, and a gang of imported thugs tried to rescue him. The prisoner was being taken away when a riot call brought a force of detectives from the city hall, and the mob was beaten back.

For town officers the republicans carried all of the seven towns by majorities ranging from 1 to 4,000.

The campaign for aldermen was not on party lines, being more of an effort on the part of the reputable citizen, regardless of politics, to oust the clique which has controlled the council.

Of the thirty-four aldermen elected to-day, only eight are men who were opposed by the municipal voters' league. The remaining twenty-six may be said to fairly represent the respectable element.

Of the old council "gang," the following twelve were up for election: John Coughlin, Charles Martin, Frederick Rhode, F. W. Stanwood, Michael Ryan, M. M. O'Connor, William J. Mahoney, John Powers, John H. Colvin, Daniel Ackerman, Robert Mulcahy, and Cyrus Howell. Of these, Coughlin, Martin, Powers, Ackerman, Mulcahy, and Howell will return to the council. These six will still have company in the council chamber, as out of the thirty-four present aldermen, whose terms will not expire until next year, there are a number of alleged "boodlers." The election to-day will severely cripple them, but yet will leave them with a majority of two or three in the council. Heretofore they have had a two-thirds majority, which enabled them to pass at will ordinances over the mayor's veto. This they can no longer do. Of the successful contestants, thirteen are democrats, eighteen republicans, and three independents. The most bitter contest was in the first ward, between "Bathhouse" John Coughlin and George H. Williams. Coughlin will have a majority of over 1,200. In this ward there were six candidates—one democrat, two republicans, one people's party, and two independent. The two republicans came within 1,200 of reaching the vote of the democrat, but the highest vote for any one of the other three candidates will not reach 200. Extra precaution was taken with the ballot-boxes. Every box was taken from its booth to the city hall after the votes closed. No box was guarded by fewer than two policemen.—Chicago dispatch New York Times, April 7.

* * *

The entire board of county commissioners of Chicago were subpoenaed to appear before the grand jury last week, on the ground of discovered irregularities and frauds connected with the letting of coal contracts, with the result that certain of the contractors were indicted. Though the principal witnesses were the drivers of the coal wagons, who were privy to the short-weight scheme that had been arranged, whereby the county paid for about forty tons a month more than they received, yet there seemed evidence of an understanding between some of the commissioners and these fraudulent contractors. A movement is begun to probe this and other dark things on the part of the commissioners to the bottom.—City and State, April 9.

* * *

Matter for more than three pages of the CHRONICLE and relating to municipal spoil was printed but crowded out of this issue.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

VOL. II, No. 39.

INDIANAPOLIS, MAY, 1896.

TERMS: { One dollar per annum.
10 cents per copy.

Published monthly. Publication office, No. 23 N. Meridian St., Indianapolis, Ind. Address,

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

THE new order of the President transferring some 30,000 additional places to the classified service well-nigh completes his work. The reform in the federal service is not completed, but it has reached a stage where it will go on to the end by reason of its own now understood merit. When another party succeeds the present party in power there will be a struggle over the final pickings, and there will be many attempts to beat and trick the law. That struggle will be the last, and from that time the federal service will be conducted upon the merit and labor service systems honestly enforced to the upbuilding of political morals and the improvement of public administration. The order consolidating post-offices now blocked by Gorman and other birds of like feather will be carried out and fourth-class postmasters will disappear to be succeeded by trained employes under the sub-station system.

The victory has come suddenly, but that it is a victory is accepted on every hand, though in some quarters with bad grace. The agitators of the last thirty years have lived to see the fruits of their labor and they have the right to modestly congratulate themselves. Destroying the spoils system in states and municipalities should now command their attention. It seems that here too the merit and labor service systems are to sweep the country.

There is no work which President Cleveland has done which will in any manner compare with his work in finally taking this reform almost bodily and with his well-known strength and courage forcing it through. He has done other single acts as Grant did and Hayes did, for instance, in relation to the currency, which were courageous and statesmanlike, but after all, they were but the routine work which comes to every President. The same conditions are apt to recur. But in destroying the spoils system the work is done once for all; it will never come back. When done so much history has been made, and it will always redound to the glory of the maker.

PARTY organs, unhappy at the triumph of the merit system, are passing around the statement that one of the evil results predicted has come to pass. A bureaucracy has been formed. Place-holders are protected by the civil service law from dismissal and they have banded together and coerced congressmen. These are the same congressmen who fought the extension of the law at every step, but have been overpowered; and now they are so helpless and cowardly that they can not resist coercion. If it had been said that they are working for the votes of place-holders in the same recklessly corrupt manner that they pass rascally individual pension bills to get the soldier vote the truth would have been better expressed. There is a fatal defect in this pious "I told you so." The civil service law does not protect civil service employes from dismissal. They may be dismissed instantly, and one of the best reasons for dismissal would be an act which looked to the coercion of congress. This unhampered power of removal is the key to the reform system and should never be given up.

MR. DOMINIC I. MURPHY has just been promoted to be commissioner of pensions. He entered the service under the competitive system and has steadily made his way successfully through a line of positions, special examiner, supervising examiner, chief clerk, president of the board of review and first deputy commissioner. He is said to know more of the work of the pension office than any other man. This is the way to do public business. The man who is best fitted for the place gets it without regard to his politics, religion or color. This promotion meets with universal approval. Why not follow the same practice in the presidential postoffices? Every one of these offices has subordinates a thousand times better fitted for the headship than the politicians who are picked up on the streets and put in there.

THE Massachusetts supreme court, in deciding that a law providing for preference in favor of ex-soldiers in appointments to office is unconstitutional, has made a decision which was inevitable. It requires but a moment's thought to determine that such a distinction is a class distinction, and to say that the opportunity for public employment is not equally open to all undermines the foundations of republican government. If preference can be given for service in the army, it can be given for property or for descent, and so on to any number of classes. Service in the army is under certain rules recompensed by pensions, and this is the only legal preference permissible under our government. The decision is undoubtedly a good thing for public business. Where that business is transacted is no place for any kind of charity. The people are always entitled to the highest skill and to the best energy, and this is not obtainable if any class has a preference. In the light of this decision the silly law that the places of firemen and policemen in this city "shall be equally divided politically" is sillier than ever and would not stand the constitutional test for a moment. It is a wonder that some populist or prohibitionist does not attack it.

THE Civil Service Reform Club of Cornell University was recently addressed by J. Sloat Fassett on "The Citizen and the State." Now Mr. Fassett is one of the rich young men of this republic who upon leaving college aspired to public life, in itself an entirely laudable ambition; and he also set out to be a "practical politician," which is a path beset with peculiar dangers for the gentleman and scholar in politics. Mr. Fassett was unfortunate enough to live in the state of New York, and as he belonged to the republican party he could command the local machine and get office only as a henchman of the boss, Tom Platt. His public career therefore has appeared to be one of alternate subserviency to and revolt against his boss, and the general impression is that his boss has really played very scurvy tricks with him. If Mr. Fassett had given a minute history of his wars and truces and their causes, but especially of his and Platt's methods, it would not only have been edifying but instructive to the young citizens he addressed. They could then determine exactly what by his acts a practical politician is, and whether "politics is not war;" but Mr. Fassett, like many other public speakers, shunned the facts with which he was thoroughly equipped and sentimentalized very prettily upon theoretical politics as follows: "Every citizen should be a practical politician, not a voter, nor simply an intelligent voter. If every citizen would discharge his duty there would be no need of civil service reform. The erroneous idea is held by many that politics is war. But politics is not war; it is the divine law applied to human government. Its lifeblood is honesty; its main-spring, liberty."

NEXT year the people of Maryland are to have submitted to popular vote an amendment to their constitution regulating admission into their civil service in substantially the terms of the New York constitution. There is no question but that it is a gauntlet thrown down by the republican and democratic Gormanites of Maryland to the political moral sentiment of the state. We think the moral sentiment of the state should take it up, and in the opinion of the CHRONICLE it does not often fall to the lot of men to wage a battle with more relish and satisfaction than can now be done by the reformers of Maryland. As we have often said, that state has an unusual number of active, educated and high-minded men of both parties who are in favor of sound government. They have, moreover, an able, sincere and free press led by the Baltimore News and the Baltimore Sun. The result is only a question of education, and every corner of Maryland can be reached. Let it be understood that it is a battle of the henchmen on one side who desire to live out of the public treasury against the citizens who want public business transacted on the right principles and who want to stop the wholesale cheating and bribery which for years have made the name of Maryland a by-word, and who further desire to give every man an equal chance for public employment without making it a condition that he shall unman himself to get it. Every honest agency in Maryland should be set to work. Every labor organization, every turnverein, every good government club, every teacher, every preacher, every priest should be got to work on the right side of this question. Let it be shown how small is the army of the henchmen and how large is the opposing army of the people.

It is impossible to withdraw the gaze from Quay and Pennsylvania. They present the most astounding development of party politics the country has produced. The state has about six million inhabitants, with excellent schools, and with refinement and culture everywhere prevailing, and with an intelligence above the average. It is always and overwhelmingly republican. The republican state convention has just adopted the following:

The time has come when the state which has so long and faithfully led the republican column may justly and properly submit its own preference for the republican nomination for the presidency. In the presentation of the Hon. Matthew Stanley Quay, the republicans, not alone of Pennsylvania, but of the entire Union, will recognize one of their foremost leaders—wise in counsel and brilliant and able in action; at once the type of the American citizen, scholar, soldier and statesman.

Now Quay has a history which is known to all the world, for it has been published in the most responsible papers, with every opportunity to him to make corrections and to make large sums of money out of the papers if the history was false—and Quay is not the man to lose a chance to make money. We pass over a long list of shortcomings and note the following:

In 1879 Quay, with Cashier Walters of the state treasury, took $260,000 of the state's money and lost it in Wall street. Walters killed himself. Don Cameron and another republican furnished the money to make the loss good and took Quay's notes.

Again in 1885 Quay was state treasurer. He took $400,000 of the state's money and with it bought bonds of a Chicago street railway. Along with the bonds he got shares of stock for nothing, which he sold for $300,000 and pocketed the money. He turned the bonds over to the state in the place of the money stolen.

Under the circumstances we repeat that Quay and Pennsylvania transfix the gaze of the world. The wonder is what they will do next.

AFTER thirty-nine years of service, the deputy-comptroller in the finance department of New York city, Richard A. Storrs, died a few days since at the age of sixty-six years. It is stated that about once in twelve years he took a little vacation and that during the blizzard of 1888 he was the only man in the department at his desk every day. Nominally he was a democrat, but he stayed in office through all political changes because his consummate knowledge of the department made him necessary. The Evening Post says:

"At the meetings of the board of estimate and apportionment, the most important of the city boards, Mr. Storrs was an influential figure for many years. He said little, but he really directed the machinery of business. New mayors, comptrollers, presidents of the board of aldermen and of the tax department, came into office unfamiliar with the duties of the board, and they all looked to Mr. Storrs for points on the method of distributing the city's money and other necessary information. Mr. Storrs prepared all the resolutions providing for appropriations, and as each resolution names the law under which the particular appropriation is made, he had to be well posted in legislation. Mr. Storrs was a veritable encyclopædia of information about the city. Heads of departments went to him daily for information and he always had it ready. No man in the service of the city would probably be more missed than he will be."

Even Tweeds and Crokers were compelled to recognize the necessity for the training and knowledge that come to a public official from years of service. Mr. Storrs's death has called forth many tributes, but we hear nothing of the dangers to free institutions from an office-holding aristocracy as illustrated by him, nor of the wreck of free government because he got so bound up in his work that he was only nominally a party man.

PRIMARIES and conventions, where we are told good citizens ought to go to counteract the efforts of bad citizens, go merrily on. At the Georgia republican convention, which met at Atlanta April 29, Colonel Buck, the chairman of the state committee, and a McKinleyite acted as doorkeeper and admitted only those having tickets signed by himself. A party of Reedites charged the door and forced their way in with shouts. Delegates were placed in nomination and the method of voting was by rushing forward to the stage yelling and shaking fists at the chairman. Police cleared the stage, and the report concludes:

But the tumult continued, and as soon as the bluecoats disappeared the mob surged again about the chair and Mr. Wright again mounted the stand. Chairman Johnson caught him by the leg and tried to pull him down. He was about to fall and threw his hand back to steady himself. It caught in the chairman's collar. Ten or more black hands shot out from in front of the stand and pulled Wright to his feet and he resumed his speech while the chairman tried to free himself. The stand was partially cleared again and the chair received a motion to elect the four delegates named, put the motion and declared it carried. He then left the stand.

Suddenly a portly man forced an opening between the negroes, snatched the gavel and in a very excited manner called the convention to order. Then, in the midst of the din, he nominated Rev. K. Love for chairman of a new convention. Love was declared elected. He made a speech, but on account of the noise it was heard only by those within six feet of him. It was decided to call the roll for the purpose of electing Wright in place of Johnson. A list of counties was obtained and a man started with it to the stand, when he was attacked by one of Pledger's followers and, after a spirited fight, the roll was stuffed into the pocket of Pledger's man and he disappeared in the crowd. No other list of counties could be found, so a committee was appointed, one from each congressional district, to nominate four delegates from the state at large. Another committee was appointed to report a platform and then the delegates, who had howled themselves tired, lapsed into quiet to wait for the report of the committees. The committee on selecting delegates followed the lead of the convention and split. On returning, this committee presented two sets of delegates, one made up of A. E. Buck, R. R. Wright, J. Prather and K. Deveau. The other was made up of Josiah Gordon and J. E. Herrington.

Another equally interesting place for good citizens was in Pittsburgh, of which we quote the following thrilling account:

A meeting of the Afro-American League was held here to-day with the object of endorsing Quay. The Union League Republican Association (colored), who favor McKinley, attempted to break up the meeting and prevent the carrying out of its object. When the obnoxious men had forced their way into the hall trouble began. Sergeant-at-arms Mills got into a "scrap" with Attorney J. H. Holmes, a McKinleyite, and there was a free fight in a second. Men rushed into the midst of the melee as the two rolled over the floor. Coats were torn, limbs were bruised and oaths could be heard escaping from the pit of riot like sulphur fumes from a laboratory. Newspaper men fled for refuge to the more dangerous yard, where, perched on a platform, they saw the "center rush" through the narrow window. The policemen rushed in, and with drawn billies joined in the encounter. Such a struggling mass of men in a rough-and-tumble fight has never been seen in any convention. Blood flowed from cracked heads, and clothes lost all nattyess. After some further rioting the meeting adjourned until to-morrow morning.

THE republican primaries and their culmination, the state convention held here this month, presented perhaps unusual aggregations of knavery and trickery. For instance, this county had a candidate in Mr. John L. Griffiths whose nomination would have been in every way progressive and admirable. It was important, of course, that he should have the entire vote of his county. To prevent this, twenty-three democrats were brought into one primary, which gave the opposition a seeming majority. The local committee corrected the matter, but by some pull in the state convention the delegates chosen by the democrats did all the voting. There were a dozen or so candidates for governor, and a portion of them carried Tammany methods with a high hand. It is fair to say that the majority of the delegates were determined that not one of the Tammany candidates should be nominated; and the moment that one who had not used such methods took the lead, the counties literally trooped to him. The result is another proof of what has been thousands of times proved, that no matter how well the primaries are attended the "good citizens" can not prevail against trained heelers. In the second ward of this city, which is five to one republican and which pre-eminently contains the local share of God and morality, the attendance was en masse, but the heelers easily won by having eight "slates" with the names of their men scattered through each. Trickery and dishonesty in primaries and conventions are so common that no man, however respectable, loses caste with his party by resorting to them. After the struggle is over it is all hushed up and the cheats and the cheated "stand shoulder to shoulder." Primary politics makes strange bed-fellows, as for instance when Mr. Robert Martindale and that life-long Sim Coy democrat, Goose Eden, buckle to for Doxey.

THE following letter was sent to the city engineer of Mayor Taggart's "business" administration:

"Mr. B. J. F. T. Jeup:

"Dear Sir—The bearer of this letter, Mr. Albert Judd, is a gentleman that I cheerfully recommend for a position under you as an inspector. He is a party worker and was a committeeman in the sixth precinct of the fifth ward. He is a gentleman of good habits, and will make you a good inspector. You will confer a favor on me by placing him. Yours respectfully,

F. E. WOLCOTT,

"Councilman Fifth Ward."

This letter is a happy illustration of the feudalistic notions yet remaining among politicians. First, the man was a party worker; second, he was a committeeman; third, he has good habits, and a favor will be conferred on the councilman by "placing" the man. It is not often that the proposal to pay party workers out of the public treasury comes in bolder shape. It must be admitted that Taggart's administration is conducted on this plan. There are few more important places than an inspectorship under the engineer, and when Taggart came in there was a system which sifted out the heelers and henchmen and dead-beats, and enabled the city by competition to get men who understood their business, but Taggart kicked that all out and went back to the good old plan of making places for the boys, and the public interests be damned. We can illustrate this from the case of John Owen, an inspector who was dismissed early in Taggart's administration. The facts are from an entirely reliable report: "He was so earnest in his attention to duty that he had to have police protection. He had a fight with some of the men that worked for the contractors and was praised by Mayor Denny for his conduct. He was dismissed as 'incompetent.'"

GOVERNMENT by cheap-jack politicians is well illustrated in this city. Since 1891 we have been constructing improved streets, sidewalks, sewers and so on at an expense of millions of dollars. The city engineer, the inspectors and the board of public works must be of the mayor's politics. To all but the political mercenaries who prey upon American cities, it seems that a city engineer should hold his place because he is a skilled engineer, widely experienced and informed in every kind of public improvement. He should be absolutely impenetrable to political considerations, open to no pull and courageous and merciless with contractors. The value of such a man as a permanent official to keep the greenhorns on the board of public works in check would be incalculable.

Every two years we get a new board wholly ignorant of its business, and being appointed for political considerations, it always has an eye to the party. The third member from the opposite party is either a nonentity or he gets some share for his party and is quiet. There is never any protest from him. With the confidence of ignorance each board starts out to astonish the city by doing great things in public improvements. At one time graveled streets are the only streets, then it is asphalt, then brick, just now it is creosote. The board has been to Galveston and comes back with the knowledge never before known in the world that creosoted blocks are the only fit thing for a street. And there you are. In the meantime the taxpayers are paying enormously for government by greenhorn politicians. They ought to pay; they can drive politics out of the engineer's office and out of every other department of city government whenever they choose.

A TAMMANY STREET-GANG.

IN 1885 and 1886 when the experienced and competent employes of the Indianapolis post-office were being ruthlessly turned out to make room for party workers, it did not need a wise man to predict the whirlwind. Robbery, operating gambling rooms and other evil tendencies, together with the grossest inefficiency followed each other in rapid succession. Analogous results may be expected wherever the public service is abused in a similar manner. The Tammany methods employed by Mayor Taggart have all along been making their returns. He ignored the civil service rules and finally had them repealed and made vacancies and filled them on the principle of party and personal loot. Twenty-nine policemen, for instance, were turned out and twenty-nine favorites put in their places. There has been a steady procession of drunken policemen. The excellent labor service rules were abolished with the rest, and the board of public works ostentatiously notified the street commissioner, a man named Herpick, that he must reduce his force in the interest of economy. He reduced it by discharging every man. Then he turned around and hired democrats only. This is the Tammany style. A true Tammany result has just been reached in one of Herpick's foremen padding the pay-rolls. The city is full of inspectors of every grade and kind, yet Herpick had no checking system nor any way of discovering that the city was being robbed, nor was it known until a man whose name was concerned told of it. Collier, who is in jail charged with the padding, says to the Indianapolis News:

"It is true that I allowed old man Kcefe a week's work when he was sick and helpless. He was in bad circumstances and I gave him the time, but I never got a cent from him, nor did I ever ask it. I understand that he has made an affidavit that I demanded money from him. If he has, he has sworn to something that is not true."

"How about Lyons?"

"Lyons worked every day for which he received pay, and when the time comes I will be able to show that to be true. I never took a cent from any one in my life, but it has been offered me more than once. A man named Kelly came to me and offered me 50 cents if I would not dock him for a half day's work. He was drunk, and I told him to go on about his business and put the money in his pocket. He had worked half a day and then got drunk."

"Did you dock him for the half day he did not work?"

"No. His time was made up in the morning, and I forgot about it." * * *

"It is charged also that there is considerable drinking among the street laborers, and that they slight their work in consequence."

"Some, but not all of the men, drink. There are just as good men working on the streets as can be found anywhere. There are others who spend most of their time in the saloons when they ought to be at work. I never permitted anything of that kind in my gang, and that was one of the reasons the fellows had it in for me."

"Do you know of any of the other foremen allowing men pay when they did not work?"

"I understand that one of the foremen allowed his brother-in-law a week's pay when he did not work at all, and that the fact became known at the office and the brother-in-law was put under another foreman. I did not see this, and all I know is what was told me."

Herpick says that Collier was only a temporary foreman in place of one Irwin, who is part owner of a ten-cent circus, and this being the show season Irwin is off with his circus on leave of absence. On his return he will resume his foremanship. This is Herpick reform. Herpick says he will adopt a new system and that the pay-rolls shall not be padded any more. This is well. Tax-payers can stand lying around the saloons half the time, but they draw the line at padding the rolls.

THE BROTHERHOOD OF BOSSES.

The strongest proof yet seen of the deal between Platt and Tammany on the greater New York question developed in the assembly to-day, when the house substitute for the Lexow bill came up on second reading. The significant vote of the day was on Mr. Forrester's motion for resubmission. This was lost 77 to 29. The roll-call showed twenty-nine democrats voting with the Platt men. All but five of these were from New York and Brooklyn, the representatives of Tammany and the McLaughlin machines. If they had followed the democratic leader, Mr. Stanchfield, in favoring resubmission the Platt consolidation scheme would have been killed to-day. The result then would have been the adoption of a resubmission amendment by a vote of 58 to 48. The action of the Tammany men in coming to the rescue of the Plattites was the only thing that saved the bill.—Albany dispatch, Buffalo Express, March 11.

The Lexow Greater New York bill is likely to pass in the assembly to-morrow over the vetoes of two republican mayors. William F. Sheehan and John C. Sheehan want the Brooklyn surface railroads to have an equal chance with the elevated roads to run their cars across the Brooklyn bridge without change. Edward Lauterbach wants the privilege exclusively for the elevated companies he represents. Tammany Hall is willing to do anything to defeat the compromise school bill, which takes the schools of the metropolis out of Tammany's control. The Tammany men found that they had Mr. Platt on the hip, and they made exorbitant demands for saving his pet bill. They have killed Lauterbach's bridge bill, for the Sheehans have promises of places on the Greater New York commission and more promises that the school bill will not be passed over Mayor Strong's veto if it should be returned on Thursday with his disapproval, which is expected.—Albany dispatch, Buffalo Express, April 21. * * *

Platt and Tammany combined repassed the Greater New York bill in the senate yesterday over the vetoes of Mayors Strong and Wurster. The Platt men had not enough votes of their own to pass the bill and it would have been defeated but for the Tammany support. It will be defeated in the assembly to-day unless Tammany rallies to its aid as was done in the senate.

How long are honest republicans going to permit this democratic-republican alliance at Albany to exist? When Sheehan was running the democratic machine there, he was able to call on a sufficient number of republicans to pass any spoils grab that might be endangered by the opposition of the more honest members of his own party. Now that Platt has the majority, he calls on Tammany to help him out whenever the members of his own party become restive.—Buffalo Express. * * *

The vote by which the greater New York bill passed the assembly showed the power of Platt as a boss and the shrewdness with which he is capable of using that power. He had only two votes to spare, and he had just two Tammany recruits. It is said that these two came from "Purroy's men," who are antagonistic to Sheehan's leadership of Tammany, but, be that as it may, two votes in addition to those of his machine were all that Platt desired, and he contrived to get them. We have not the slightest doubt that he could have had more had they been necessary to pass the bill. Tammany's change of front on the measure is open to suspicion. Its contingent in the senate voted for the bill twice in that body, and its contingent in the assembly voted for it there once. That Tammany is in favor of greater New York is notorious, and the pretense of opposition is made now probably for the purpose of giving the bill a more respectable standing before the governor, and making it easier for him to fulfill Platt's assurance that he will sign it.—New York Evening Post. * * *

Senator Timothy "Dry Dollar" Sullivan pulled Thomas C. Platt's chestnuts out of the fire in the senate to-day. Through a combination between the ultra-Platt men and Sullivan, Platt was just able to squeeze through the resolution reviving the Lexow sub-committee of the senate and assembly so that it may act as a whip over the head of the greater New-York commission during the summer and fall. So stout was the resistance made to this bit of jobbery by several of the republican senators and all of the democrats except Sullivan, that when it came to a final vote on the resolution, the Platt republicans found it was impossible for them to pass it without the vote of Sullivan. And they got it.—Albany Dispatch, New York Times, April 28. * * *

The thin disguise placed over the Platt-Sheehan "deal" on Greater New York legislation was removed yesterday, when it came out Senator Tim Sullivan's vote in favor of the Lexow committee bill had been paid for by the retention in the state excise bureau of a lot of Tammany employes who had served under the old board of excise in this city. Mr. Lyman, state excise commissioner, is said to have ordered the transfer of these men from the old system to the new, the advantage of a transfer being that it avoids the requirement of competitive examination. The men transferred are not Tim Sullivan's men, but Tammany men, and they are retained in the service as part of the reward which Platt agreed to pay Sheehan for such votes as were necessary to get his Greater New York bills passed. The defeat of the Brooklyn bridge bill, to which Billy Sheehan was opposed, was another part of the reward. The pretence of wrath by Johnny Sheehan over Sullivan's vote contrary to Sheehan's orders was what is known in politics and journalism as a "fake" designed to deceive unsophisticated persons. The Sheehans and Platt had no end of fun in putting forth the "fake."—New York Evening Post. * * *

The local organization of the Democratic party has nothing to fear from this greater city. It can do naught but strengthen our power here. At the first election after it goes into effect we will gain at least 75,000 votes over the republicans. They have simply cut off their own noses to spite their faces. Why they should advocate the passage of this bill I do not know. We wanted it all the time, knowing that it would be sure to benefit us. Our opposition to it was a game of politics, pure and simple. Of course, the fact of the greater New York is too far off, January 1, 1898, for me or any one else to particularize as to its effects, but it is safe to generalize and say that Tammany Hall will only be more powerful and more popular than it ever was. We expect to get the next governor and the next legislature, and then the glory and credit of the greater city, if any there be of either, will accrue to us and to no one else. We will have it in our power to accept or reject the greater city, and it may never become a fact. We are certainly glad that the republicans have done as we wanted them to in this matter.—John C. Sheehan in Morning Journal, May 12. * * *

There was some comment to-day over Senator's Guy's bill increasing the salary of A. C. Lauterbach from $3,000 to $7,500. In the district attorney's office where Mr. Lauterbach is an assistant, he is considered an amiable young man, to whom all are glad to show some consideration by reason of his parentage.—Albany dispatch, New York Evening Post.

* * *

Mr. Platt's legislature in its last hours passed a bill raising the salary of a brother of Mr. Croker, who is a court clerk in New York. These little courtesies between bosses do much to relieve the sternness of political strife.—Buffalo Express.

BOSS PLATT'S FAMILY PICKINGS.

It turns out that Mr. Platt's interest in the Raines bill is not altogether political. The personal element enters into it also. Mr. Platt's son, Henry B. Platt, is the New York agent of the Fidelity and Deposit company of Maryland, which, by a special law enacted by the last legislature at the instance of Mr. Platt from purely patriotic motives, of course, is allowed to do business in this state. The Raines bill requires that every liquor dealer who takes out a license must give bonds for twice the amount of the tax. It also permits a "duly authorized corporation" to act as such surety. It further provides that blank bonds shall be distributed through the state by the state commissioner. He would be a very blind dealer, indeed, who should receive a blank bond from the state commissioner with a notice that the surety of a duly authorized corporation would be acceptable and, in the same mail, an advertisement saying that the Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland, managed by a son of Thomas C. Platt, was prepared to furnish such bonds, if he should not at once see that it would be best for his interest to turn the business over to Mr. Platt's son.—Buffalo Express, March 22.

* * *

There seems to be little doubt that the sons of Tom Platt and Senator Raines had a "straight tip" a considerable time in advance to the effect that some snug business for a surety company could be found when the Raines liquor tax law should go into operation. Whether they did or not, they were lucky enough to have their company all ready for business when the law was passed, and were lucky enough to get the state excise commissioner to give notice that his appointees must get a surety company to furnish their bonds. The liquor dealers must also have bonds, and, curiously enough, they are getting the idea that a surety company with Boss Platt's son as manager is undoubtedly the best source to go to for them. The rascals really think that in this way they may establish a "pull" not only on the Boss but on the excise department, which will be useful in enabling them to "beat the law" in various ways and escape the consequences. It is a wicked world, and our liquor dealers have been educated to believe that a "pull" is the basis of our system of government. Their delusion is likely to prove of great business advantage to young Platt and young Raines, who, of course, suspected no such fortuitous aid when they set up their surety company.

They would not mix politics and business for anything in the world; neither would their fathers permit them to do such a thing. But how surprised they must be at their wonderful luck!—New York Evening Post, April 7.

* * *

Commissioner Lyman has receded a bit from his position that only the bonds of surety companies will be accepted from applicants for tax certificates. He now says he will accept bonds with two reliable persons as sureties.—Albany dispatch, Buffalo Express, April 7.

* * *

A Dunkirk dispatch to the Enquirer tells this interesting little story: "Squire White of Fredonia, who claims to be the authorized agent of the Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland, of which Henry B. Platt of New York, son of T. C. Platt, is the managing director for the state of New York, is in the city working up business among the saloon keepers. Mr. White claims to have been the confidential agent of Thomas C. Platt in this district for the last twenty years, and intimates that it will be rather hard for persons in this city to secure liquor-tax certificates from the special agents, unless they are secured by the bonds of the company which he represents. He even goes as far as to claim that tax certificates will be granted only to those who have the company which he represents as their bondsmen." That looks as if the elder Platt were mixed up in the bond business and bent on turning an honest penny out of his great "reform" measure.—Buffalo Express, April 9.

* * *

The clerks employed by the Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland, with which the sons of T. C. Platt and Senator Raines are connected, were busy yesterday (Sunday) in the company's offices, in the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company's building, at Madison avenue and Twenty-third street. A reporter for the New York Times climbed to the eighth floor about five o'clock yesterday afternoon and found Mr. Platt's clerks working in shirt sleeves. Spread out on tables before them were stacks of applications and bonds issued to saloon keepers.

"This has been a busy day," said one of the clerks to the reporter, "and we won't get away from here till late. We worked here until midnight every night last week, and we will keep up the pace for some time to come. We are deluged with applications for bonds, and are going security for saloon keepers not only in this city, but in Brooklyn, Long Island City, Long Island and all over the state."

The reporter noticed several bundles of applications in wrappers bearing the names of prominent brewers.

"Are brewers getting bonds for saloon keepers?" asked the reporter.

"Yes." "No," said two clerks together.

Then there was an awkward pause.

"That is to say," said the first clerk, "some brewers are acting as agents for saloon keepers as a matter of convenience; but of course no brewer is paying us for bonding saloon keepers. Our fees come from the saloon keepers, not the brewers.

The Fidelity and Deposit Company's offices are on the floor below those of Deputy Excise Commissioner Hilliard. From one office to the other is but a few steps, and saloon keepers find the juxtaposition convenient.

"Our place yesterday," said one of Mr. Platt's clerks, "was so crowded with applicants for bonds that we hadn't room to do our work. We're doing a great business here."

There is a feeling among saloon keepers that persons who are bonded by the Platt-Raines company will stand a better chance of being unmolested in business than those whose bonds are not furnished by that company, and consequently there is a rush to that office. Saloon keepers reason that republican excise inspectors, who owe their positions to ex-Senator Platt and the author of the Raines law, will not be liable to report violators of the Raines law who are bonded by Messrs. Platt and Raines when convictions will result in financial loss to the latter.—New York Times, April 27.

* * *

The alliance between the Platt influence and the Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland has become more apparent since the excise board went out of office. That this company is issuing excise bonds and trading on the name and power of Platt seems to be openly admitted. As is well known, it got into the state on equal terms with domestic surety companies through a general act specially passed by the Platt legislature; the legislation was openly sought by Frank Platt, one son of the boss, and Henry B. Platt, another son, became the titular local head of the concern. The latter readily avowed in an interview in these columns not long ago that he was after the business of issuing excise bonds to liquor dealers, and that his duty to his company required him to make every exertion.

As soon as the offices of the new excise department were established in the Metropolitan Life Insurance building, the Platt company engaged commodious quarters on the floor below. Two glass doors were painted with the name of the company and with the name of the managing director, but the latter is the largest and most conspicuous part of the legend. The door which one naturally first comes to on descending from the excise department on the floor above contains more than this; it contains a large index hand pointing directly at the words, "Henry B. Platt, Managing Director." The index hand ostensibly indicates words designating the next door as entrance, but these words are in letters so disproportionately small that what really strikes the eye is the pointing, almost commanding hand, and the large name: "Henry B. Platt"—so placed as to be the direct aim of the finger.

An ample force of clerks was engaged, a dozen desks were put in, Henry B. Platt, managing director, took personal charge, emissaries of the company were posted at all the approaches and exits of the excise office, business cards were disseminated, even finding their way to the desk of an application clerk in the excise department, and the son of the boss stood prepared to discharge his duty to the company and "hustle" for this business. Upon observing the Fidelity and Deposit Company attach itself to the excise department in this intimate way, the American Surety Company of this city hired one small room adjoining the Platt offices. Its name, too, was painted on the door, and the name of the president, Mr. Trenholm, was also given, but in letters quite modest and entirely subordinate to the rest of the inscription; the index hand was likewise omitted.

For several days the rush has been on, culminating on Thursday night. The Platt company charged one per cent. for its bonds, making $10 on a storekeeper's bond, and $16 on a saloon, restaurant, or hotel-keeper's bond. The American Surety Company charged $5 and $10. The Platt company has been in the field here a little over a year and in existence only a few years; the other company is domestic and "old and established." The Platt company has a capital of $700,000; the other company a paid-up capital of nearly $2,500,000. The Platt company's net premiums received last year were $313,093; the other company's, $1,013,343. It is said on good authority that upon the larger number of risks the American Surety Company commands appreciably higher rates than the Platt company. But on excise bonds the positions of the two companies are reversed: the Platt company fixes its own rates, and the other company is constrained to offer the guarantee of its vastly greater wealth, experience, and prestige at very much lower figures. But despite every intrinsic advantage which the latter seemed to possess over its rival, the licensees trooped past the door of the American Surety Company's office to the door bearing the significant index hand and the significant name, and beyond that to the entrance door, into which they filed.—New York Evening Post, May 2.

* * *

The people of this state might learn an impressive lesson if they could visit the legislative halls and closely watch the process of legislation. They would see that the measures which are dealt with by the lawmakers are in the hands of a few individuals, and those individuals bear the stamp of approval of Thomas C. Platt. It has come to a pass where, in checking the minor scandals after the method outlined, Mr. Platt has brought the entire legislature to the very edge of scandal by allowing members of his own family and his political lieutenants to assume a prominence greater than all other combined influences. The first and most important question asked by many legislators as they begin consideration of a pending measure is, "Does it have the backing of Tracy, Boardman & Platt?" The last is the son of the ex-senator, and his law firm represents the family end of Mr. Platt's syndicate.

The second question asked is, "Does Ed Lauterbach favor the bill?" He is Mr. Platt's political representative. The measures now pending in which one or both are not interested are hardly worth mentioning. It is said, never in the history of the state has there been such a notoriously open-handed style of bringing the political power of Mr. Platt to bear on purely business legislation. The firm of which Mr. Platt's son is a member is the representative here of corporations whose aggregate capital is up into the hundreds of millions. Whatever they say for or against a measure has more weight than the words of any or all combined opposition. They begin their work when a bill is introduced, follow it through the committee rooms, are admitted to the floors of both houses—in plain and flagrant violation of the senate rules—and when the measure has passed they invade the governor's office.

Mr. Boardman and Frank Platt are the active agents here. Day after day Mr. Boardman has been on the senate floor when measures in which his firm is interested have been under consideration, and in many instances he has bound the senators by the mention of Platt's name as if a party caucus had bound them.

Frank Platt has been here less frequently, though often.

Louis F. Payn, who is one of Mr. Platt's most notorious and powerful agents, sits in the senate library and sends for senators. A procession of these representatives of the upper house to Mr. Payn's chair may be seen any day. They go like the most abject slaves to a throne room.

The powerful aid which Mr. Platt is able to give to corporations rich enough to employ the services of the firm of which his son is a member has been illustrated in several instances.

Here are some of the measures in which the firm has been interested:

The Albany police bill—The firm filed a brief in favor of it with the governor, succeeded in preventing a veto, and is now in part responsible for holding the legislature in session long enough to repass it over Mayor Thatcher's coming veto.

The Erie reorganization bill—It was passed in the senate last Tuesday night, and came to the assembly yesterday with some amendments. Not a dozen members knew what the bill meant. Mr. Kinne objected to consideration of the amendments, and the bill was therefore ordered again to committee. Mr. Kinne is a democrat. He was induced to withdraw his objection, and went to Speaker Fish and so stated. Before the members of the railroad committee knew that the bill had been taken out of their hands the assembly had passed it.

There is a well-authenticated story here that the passage of a bill similar to this was put through the New Jersey legislature this year at an expense of $20,000.

The anti-coal trust bill—Tracy, Boardman & Platt sought to kill the bill in committee, then tried to do it by amendments, and it was only when the senators for the first time broke from the firm's orders that it was passed. Once in the governor's room the bill had another narrow escape from a veto. Tracy, Boardman & Platt "laid down" on the governor.

The Acetylene gas bill—Tracy, Boardman and Platt appeared on one side of this fight, while Mr. Lauterbach opposed them. It was like the famous bear trap, that would "catch 'em comin', and catch 'em goin'."

The Greater New York bills were to be prepared by this firm providing for the government by commissions, if the governor had not put a stop to that proposed legislation.

The interference of the family of Mr. Platt in legislation has become notorious. It is so plainly evident and openly carried on that the legislators are talking of it. Constant reference to it is made as the disgrace of the legislature. Estimates are made as to the amount of profits the firm of which Platt's son is a member will reap. One member of the assembly told a Times correspondent that he believed $250,000 for the winter would not be too high a figure.

One assemblyman, commenting on the facility with which the Platt firm is able to pass or kill bills, said: "We might as well refer the calendars to this firm and adjourn. They will do what they please with them anyhow."—Albany dispatch, New York Times, April 19.

MUNICIPAL SPOILS.

"The root of the whole trouble in municipal misgovernment is the close alliance between the leaders of state and national parties, and the manipulators of local cliques or rings, and the true line of action to be taken by the friends of good government should be to banish—absolutely banish—from state and national politics the whole subject of municipal government.—President James C. Carter before the Municipal League at Baltimore.

There is one thing which is worse than corruption. It is acquiescence in corruption. No feature of American life strikes a stranger so powerfully as the extraordinary indifference, partly cynicism and partly good nature, with which notorious frauds and notorious corruption in the sphere of politics are viewed by American public opinion. There is nothing, I think, altogether like this to be found in any other great country. It is something wholly different from the political torpor which is common in half-developed nations and corrupt despotisms, and it is curiously unlike the state of feeling which exists in the French republic.—From Lecky's Democracy and Liberty.

IN BUFFALO.

Schlotzer, the keeper of the Buffalo almshouse and county hospital, and the spoils system in these public charities.

Schlotzer admitted the almshouse and the hospital were infested with bedbugs.

Schlotzer admitted his wife draws over $66 a month as general matron.

Schlotzer admitted his daughter draws $20 a month as an attendant.

Schlotzer admitted his son draws $40 a month as a clerk.

Schlotzer admitted his brother-in-law draws over $83 a month as deputy keeper.

Schlotzer admitted that Kate Duffy, who nurses the little Schlotzers, draws over $13 a month as an hospital nurse.

Schlotzer admitted that his family of 10 children, and his brother-in-law's family live at the county's expense.

Schlotzer admitted that two young men, friends of supervisors, had lived at the county's expense at the almshouse, while they were said to be medical students.

Schlotzer admitted that one student is there now. This student hails from Hamburg. The county pays the bill.

Schlotzer admitted that he does the buying.

Schlotzer admitted that his wife does the condemning.

Schlotzer admitted that he kept no record of pickings from condemned stuff sold.

Schlotzer admitted that no credit had been made to the county for such things, save for a load of bones.

Schlotzer admitted that his table was open to those who come to see him, and that the county paid the bill.

Schlotzer said he had no power or influence in the board of supervisors.

Schlotzer said he had influence with supervisors. * *

"Have you no influence in the board of supervisors?"

"No. I have nothing to do over them," said Schlotzer

"Is Supervisor Dedo's father working here?"

"Yes, his father is here."

"Is William McCarthy?"

"Yes, he is here."

"And are there not a lot more you appointed for supervisors?"

"Oh, supervisors may have recommended them."

"You obliged them, or, rather, you oblige each other?"

"Oh, in a way, they indorsed them," said Schlotzer.

"And you appointed them all?"

"Most all," said Schlotzer.

"They report to you?"

"Yes."

"You are the head?"

"Yes."

"You alone are head and in full charge and familiar with the whole institution?"

"Yes."—Buffalo Express, April 3.

* * *

Dr. E. J. Gilray was appointed superintendent of the county hospital on the recommendation of the medical staff. He was thought to be a good man for the place. He protests that he is an honest man, and no facts have yet come to light to show that he is not. Yet this medical superintendent, who ought to be free from political influences, if any man in Buffalo Plains can be, has evidently fallen under the domination of Schlotzer, and is more interested in keeping his job than in anything else. He admits that politics, instead of discipline, rules in the hospital, but he is evidently afraid to protest. He is not satisfied with his assistants, but he can make no headway against Schlotzer.—Buffalo Express, April 6.

The volunteer medical staff of the Erie county hospital have been removed because they did their duty. That is, the half-dozen physicians who have been most prominent in the fight to keep politics and spoils out of the hospital have been removed by the board of supervisors at the order of Keeper Schlotzer. The purpose is plainly confessed. Schlotzer's communication to the board demands the removal of the staff because "there have been complaints, unjust criticisms, and charges of inefficiency made against my administration as keeper of the Almshouse by various members of the medical staff" who have been serving without pay. The resolution offered by Supervisor Gilkinson recites that "Whereas, There appears to be some discord and disagreement between some of the physicians and surgeons so appointed and the board of supervisors, as well as with the keeper of the Almshouse," etc.

So it stands on the record that these faithful physicians may not give their services to the people of Erie county free of charge, because their consciences will not allow them to wink at maladministration.

It is an infamous system which puts skilled professional men at the mercy of an ignorant ward politician. But the system will not be changed until the people change it. The new staff is distinguished and competent enough, but if it dares to do its duty, it likewise will be summarily kicked out by Schlotzer and his hired men in the board of supervisors. It should be remembered, moreover, that, however competent the new staff may be, the old staff was removed simply and solely because it did its duty. Schlotzer's control of the board is so absolute that only thirteen supervisors voted against this outrage on public decency.—Buffalo Express, May 19.

IN BALTIMORE.

The new state board of health will, at its meeting for organization on May 1, consider the question of the election of a secretary to the board. This position, which pays $2,000 a year, is now held by Dr. James A. Steuart, who maintains that the position is independent of political control, the "secretary holding his office so long as he shall faithfully discharge the duties thereof." An effort will be made to remove Dr. Steuart, as there is opposition to him in the board. There are a number of republican physicians who are applicants for the place.—Baltimore Sun, April 8.

* * *

The first clash between the new republican members of the school board and their democratic colleagues occurred at the board's meeting last night. It was caused by an attempt of Mr. Adolph P. Schuch to remove janitresses and firemen from the schools. These removals, it was alleged, were attempted for political reasons. Mr. Schuch is the republican member from the sixth ward, appointed to succeed Mr. John T. Ochs. One of those who were notified to quit by Mr. Schuch was Mrs. Barbara Mooney, janitress at No. 7 English-German school. The preamble to the resolutions recites that Mrs. Mooney was removed "without cause, and merely to subserve a partisan political purpose," and that "the principals and teachers of the school have certified that she has been an efficient and painstaking janitress; that she has a family of four small children depending upon her for support, and that it is understood she has been removed to make place for another person at the instigation of a certain well known politician in order to favor another political party."

The resolutions called on the board to reinstate Mrs. Mooney and to condemn the removal of persons who have given efficient service when the removal is made in order to make room for others on some political pretext.—Baltimore Sun, April 8.

IN ST. LOUIS.

The taxpayers' league has brought suit to restrain Mayor Cyrus P. Walbridge from collecting the salary which accumulates while he is absent from the city. The injunction is asked on the ground that Mayor Walbridge has during the past year repeatedly absented himself and has drawn $1,100 for the time so wasted. The month of March is specified in the injunction because during that month the mayor has, it is said, been busy attending political gatherings in various sections of the state, but has demanded his salary as usual.—St. Louis Dispatch, April 1.

* * *

The following is an extract from a private letter from St. Louis, under date of February 27, last:

"A circumstance has recently happened here which, though slight in itself, possesses in my opinion much significance. The Missouri division of the league of American wheelmen has appointed a committee on city streets. I am a member of it, and several of its members are men of about my age. But the majority of them are younger—men of from 25 to 35 years of age. They very soon found from practical experience that little could be done in the way of improving the streets of our city, so long as the positions in the street department were filled by dispensation of political patronage. The result has been that nearly all of the committee have joined the local Civil Service Reform Association."—Good Government, March, 1896.

* * *

St. Louis may be the next large city to experience a campaign for municipal reform. A recent meeting of 800 earnest citizens requested the civic federation to call in conference representatives of the various prominent social, educational, philanthropical, business, and labor organizations of the city, "to originate, if practicable, a non-partisan, non-political, and non-sectarian movement, in which all good citizens can unite to secure an honest, efficient, and economical administration of city affairs." The conference will be held within fifteen days. The present plan is to appoint a campaign committee of one hundred.

IN CINCINNATI.

The meeting of the Manufacturers' Club took on a decidedly partisan turn after the banquet at the Queen City Club last night, at which Governor Bushnell was the guest of honor. * * *

The next thing in the order of business stirred things up to a livelier state than is customary in the Manufacturers' Club. J. C. Butler read a paper on the merit system in business, and civil service as applied to municipal affairs in Ohio. The attitude of the club on this very question had been made a special order for consideration last night. A resolution indorsing the bill now pending in the senate, which provides for the appointment of a commission of three to appoint and control municipal officers in the cities of Ohio, had been introduced at the last meeting of the club, but its consideration was postponed until last night. * * *

As soon as President Egau announced the proposition to be considered, Colonel W. B. Melish, who sat at his side, arose and moved to further postpone consideration of the resolution until next Friday night. He said that the Manufacturers' Club had been in the habit of indorsing everything that any "good fellow" in the club wanted indorsed, but the matter under consideration was important, and he wanted the members of the club to have an opportunity to debate on the question, and have the whole matter thoroughly explained.

Colonel Melish's motion did not make much of a hit, but Colonel Chas. B. Wing, who sat next to him, seconded it heartily.

One could breathe the refreshing air of the approaching storm, and it came when President M. E. Ingalls arose. He said that the method of postponement was the weapon used by some people to kill undesirable measures, and he thought that Mr. Melish's motion was made with that very purpose. Mr. Ingalls reminded the gentlemen that a copy of the bill now pending in the senate had been mailed to every member of the club four weeks ago. He thought they were perfectly familiar with it, and that they were qualified to vote intelligently upon the matter under consideration, as well last night as they would be next Friday night, or six weeks or six months hence. Continuing, Mr. Ingalls said:

"You gentlemen know, and know well, that there will be up before this club for consideration next Friday night an important matter that will consume nearly the entire evening in its discussion. There will be no time for discussion of this matter then. Gentlemen, there was once a man who used to turn back the hands of the clock to gain time, but you can not do it now. We must keep abreast with the march of progress, and there is no longer any doubt of the worth of civil service as applied to the control of municipal affairs. We do not want any further delay in this important matter. I would like to know what member of the club is not ready to vote upon it. I am ready, and I am ready to vote now." Mr. Ingalls also said that in his management of 20,000 employes he found the merit system to be successful, and why not the same result in the control of municipal employes?

Mr. Ingalls' speech was of the tobacco sauce order, and he was applauded heartily. When the rising vote was demanded, only four voted nay, and the motion to indorse the civil service bill was overwhelmingly carried.—Cincinnati Tribune, March 15.

* * *

"Do you suppose that if our county affairs were under civil service rules the county commissioners would make the disgraceful showing that they do to-day? What chance would there be for their re-election, when it came to be understood it cost the county about $60,000 to manage the court-house for the same service and material that is furnished our government building for $24,000—a building almost twice as large."—Mr. Butler before Cincinnati Manufacturers' Association.

IN THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

At a meeting of the Business Men's Association, of Syracuse, New York, held last Thursday evening, the mayor of the city, James K. McGuire, announced himself as a convert to the doctrine of non-partisanship in municipal affairs. Syracuse is one of the cities of this country where that question has been brought conspicuously and boldly to the fore. * * * Mr. McGuire was elected as a republican. He says: "When one reflects, how absurd it is to gauge the fitness of a candidate for public office by his opinions on bimetallism or the tariff question? What have national issues to do with the problems of our municipal life? Absolutely nothing. As a successful party candidate I am appointing men from my party to public office, having been elected as a party candidate. Most of the candidates for appointive offices ask for places as a reward for party services or political services rendered me. Fitness, which alone should be the discriminating test, is seldom mentioned. The theories of non-partisanship in municipal affairs are ideal and practical, and independence is becoming widespread and general in our local politics. It is a spirit which has come to stay, mark me."

* * *

The great change that has come over the people of this city as to what constitutes fitness for municipal service since the advent of the good government administration is shown by the results of the series of civil service examinations just brought to a close. During the three years preceding the election of Mayor Warner only 350 persons presented themselves for examination to the civil service commission. The reason for this small number was the well known fact that however good an examination a man might pass, he could not get an appointment without the approval of George W. Aldridge, then the chairman of the executive board and the boss of the republican party of the city. During the period of less than three months that Mayor Warner has been in office more than 700 persons have presented themselves for examination. Now there exists a genuine eligible list for every municipal office that comes under the operation of the civil service law.—Rochester dispatch New York Evening Post, March 21.

* * *

R. Fulton Cutting, in behalf of the New York trade schools, at the request of the local civil service board, this week has offered the use of the Auchmuty trade school's rooms and facilities for a new civil service test which the board has recently decided upon. This is to afford a more adequate trial of the many applicants who present themselves as skilled mechanics for positions in the city's service. The civil service board has never had the facilities for such a test, even if an adequate one had been devised. Therefore it was decided to turn all such applicants over to the teachers at the New York trade schools to be examined as to their mechanical skill in their own peculiar trades. Thus a carpenter will be required to show what he can do upon being presented with a saw, with other necessary tools, and with different kinds of wood. A cabinetmaker, in the same manner, will be asked to construct a piece of furniture, and on this piece of work his eligibility to a public place will be decided.

The applicants who are thus to be examined come under the following classes: Male and female bath attendants, carpenters, cabinetmakers, laboratory attendants, bricklayers, cement workers, horseshoers, blacksmiths, housesmiths, janitors, mates, masons, painters, pipe-fitters, saw-filers, stonecutters, pipe-tappers, varnishers and weighmasters.

Mere mechanical skill, however, will not be wholly sufficient, for in order to provide for another test of fitness the civil service board, after resolving upon this new departure, passed the following additional resolution:

"That it shall be within the discretion of the examining board to require, in addition to the usual test, as to the character of applicants, letters of recommendation from late employers as to the character and ability of the applicant to fill the position sought for."—New York Evening Post, March 22.

* * *

The trial of Michael Considine, the Italian saloon-keeper, who is charged with the murder of John J. Malone, a broker, on February 8, 1895, was began this afternoon before Judge Newburger, in general sessions. This is the trial which, at the district attorney's request, was transferred from court to court no less than nine times, and in which unsuccessful attempts to submit a plea of guilty for a minor offence were made no less than four times, until Recorder Goff put a stop to both practices.—New York Evening Post, April 9.

Seattle and Tacoma are getting ready to amend their city charters by adopting the Illinois civil service law for the control of appointments under the municipal government.

* * *

Inspired by its success in the Chicago municipal election, the civic federation of that city has invited every club in the city and every organization of a semi-political nature, or having good government as one of its principles, to join in a concerted movement looking to the enactment of reform measures by the next legislature.

FROM AN EDITOR.

"I trust that you will continue to send your valued paper. I have cut your March issue all to pieces, and used at least a dozen extracts.

"The only trouble is that when I clip on one side I lose something equally good, on reverse page.

"It seems to me that your work can not fail to bring good results. In this city we have rings within rings, and "merit" counts for naught. A good "pull" is all that is needed here, and the plums then proceed to drop, and all into the hands of the party workers. One party is just as bad as the other."

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

VOL. II, No. 40.

INDIANAPOLIS, JUNE, 1896.

TERMS: { One dollar per annum.
10 cents per copy.

Published monthly. Publication office, No. 23 N. Meridian St., Indianapolis, Ind. Address,

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

PROFESSOR HENRY W. FARNAM, 43 Hill-house avenue, New Haven, Conn., will pay a liberal price for No. 5, Vol. 1 (July, 1889), of the CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE to complete his file.

AT St. Louis the republicans declared as follows in relation to the civil service:

The civil service law was placed on the statute books by the republican party, which has always sustained it, and we renew our repeated declarations that it shall be thoroughly and honestly enforced and extended wherever practicable.

Leaving as it does no room for dishonesty, equivocation or trickery, it is entirely satisfactory. Civil service reform is accepted as established. Without treachery it would be impossible to disturb for spoils purposes the service where it is covered by the rules. It is to be expected that the supplanting of the fourth class post-offices by sub-stations will be promptly carried out and also that a plan will be adopted by which we shall cease picking up local politicians and making them postmasters of great cities. The republicans in the past widely neglected their opportunities to extend this reform, but there is a chance to gain a good deal of glory yet.

THIS generation has not before seen a national campaign in which the contest was so much upon a difference of view of public questions and so little over a division of plunder as the reward of success at the polls as it is in the approaching campaign. The plunder has not all disappeared, but the great bulk of it is gone, and it is recognized that it is gone forever. This is the condition which the CHRONICLE from its foundation has prophesied would come with the overthrow of the spoils system. But this is the first campaign in which the condition has actually been present. Another new thing not before within the memory of this generation is a national convention where the delegates in the face of the leaders of the majority candidate force a principle into the platform, as was done at St. Louis when the gold standard declaration was adopted. Here, too, it is remembered that in General Lew Wallace, Indiana was represented by a man who insisted that the delegation and not two or three bosses should choose him for the committee on resolutions if it wanted him, and who being chosen with an intimation that he must not favor the mention of gold in the platform, promptly refused the place with such a stipulation, and was rechosen. An additional sign of the times is that for the first time in a republican convention since 1880 the name of Webster Flanagan was not quoted with applause.

GOVERNOR MATTHEWS of Indiana seems to have been indulging in an interview on "civil service" in which he is reported to have said: "The civil service idea is a good one; good to test the efficiency of republicans when there are no competent democrats to appoint to office." We think this fairly indicates Governor Matthews's real opinion. He simply belongs to the lower grade of democrats, and has the instincts and range of view of a ward politician. Ever since he has been governor, wherever the law allowed him to do so, he has run the state service to build up a political machine. In spite of our unhappy past experience under the spoils system he refused to recommend to the general assembly the establishment of the merit system. He is not a man whom any one in favor of administrative reform could think of supporting for any office. It is fortunate that he has declared himself for now there can be no question as to where he stands. It is possible that he may be chosen by the Chicago convention as the candidate of his party, but he will not be chosen President, nor will he carry the state of Indiana. In these times a man never appears smaller than when he is denouncing the merit system.

THE low plane upon which the present Indiana democrat goes through life is well illustrated by the proposed action in relation to Governor Matthews. A large minority are in favor of the gold standard; yet to a man they propose "to do what they can" to make Matthews the nominee of their party for the Presidency. Now Matthews, as one of the most reliable of these democrats remarked, "would give his boots for any kind of a nomination, and would take it on any kind of a platform." He is for the free coinage of silver. This, to a man in favor of a gold standard, means death to national prosperity and disgrace to the national honor. Yet the gold democrats of Indiana propose to swallow it all and "whoop 'er up" for Matthews. Who can have any respect for such a crowd or have any feeling except a desire to see the party and the men who represent such cowardice and dishonor whipped out of public office?

THE board of aldermen of Detroit, by refusing appropriations, forced a reduction of the salaries of the city teachers. It might be thought that this was only an unhappy necessity to which careful custodians of the city's welfare were driven, and that the same high sense of duty controlled all their acts. The following transaction, however, set out in the Detroit News of June 6 tells more than could be told in volumes:

The republican aldermen drew lots last night for the June appointments, which furnish $17,761.25 worth of patronage. The two assistant city hall engineers were included in the drawing, although they were provided for in the controller's estimate and may fall to Mayor Pingree's portion. The aldermen drawing these two took chances.

Aldermen Scovel and Ashley drew blanks. A number of trades were made and more will follow. Alderman DeGaw got a municipal engineer when he wanted a janitress. Alderman Patterson wanted a western market clerkship for his brother, but drew an assistant city hall janitor. Alderman Batchelder always likes to draw the elevator conductors so that he can reappoint the cripples holding the positions in the city hall, but he drew a janitress. Alderman Klein drew the chief janitor of the city hall and talks about having sons he ought to take care of. Alderman Stevenson traded his drawing of an assistant municipal engineer at $860.75 for the messenger of the council at $3 a session, as he had a boy just the right size for the place. After all the swapping the places were distributed as follows:

City hall offices—Janitor, Alderman Klein; assistant janitor, Alderman Gotschel; assistant janitor (attic), Alderman Bleil; assistant janitor (basement), Alderman Harpfer; assistant janitor (men's toilet, etc.), Alderman Patterson; janitress (ladies' toilet), Alderman Batchelder; elevator conductor, Alderman Hanes; elevator conductor, Alderman Welton; assistant engineer, Alderman Wild; assistant engineer, Alderman Riebert.

General appointments—Clerk of market, eastern district, Alderman Conus; clerk of market, western district, Alderman Beamer; weighmaster, eastern district, Alderman Coots; weighmaster, western district, Alderman Grunow; poundmaster, eastern district, Alderman Stahl; poundmaster, western district, Alderman Reves; messenger common council, Alderman Stevenson.

Municipal building—Engineer, Alderman DeGaw; assistant engineer, Alderman Marx; elevator conductor, Alderman Gerecke; janitor, Alderman Sumner; assistant janitor, Alderman Beck.

WE do not hear so much as we did of "educational tests," yet there is a considerable class extending from Abe Gruber up to the owlishly doubtful but highly respectable opponent who still carp about it.

Such now almost daily occurrences as the competition of over sixty sergeants for the place of precinct commander in New York have no effect upon them. The highest examination could only give the competitors 35 per cent. The remaining 65 per cent. or any part of it was to be gained by their records for meritorious service and efficiency. In the course of the examination each was to write a report of an actual or imaginary case. Says the account:

Sergt. Thomas H. Mangin of the Wall street branch of the Detective Bureau chose as his subject, "How O'Brien Protects Bankers;" Oliver Timms wrote his version of the "Riot on Eighth Avenue July 12, 1871;" Edward F. Walling told of the abduction of Charlie Ross; George McCluskey wrote of the Eglau murder mystery; John R. Groo told in detail of the murder of Policeman Burns in the eighth ward, twenty-two years ago, and new versions of old and unsolved crimes were written by Stephen Brown, George Brennan, George Titus, and the rest of the candidates for promotion.

The rest of the examination consisted in answering questions as to state laws, corporation ordinances, regulations of the police department, and matters pertaining to the drilling of men.

It will be remembered that in its lately enacted excise law the legislature of New York undertook to save the appointments from the merit system by declaring them confidential and Platt's man Aldridge, the head of the public works, began to run henchmen into the non-competitive examinations where a large proportion of them ingloriously failed. Meanwhile dark clouds appeared on the horizon. It was questioned whether an office could be made confidential by fiat any more than paper can be made money by fiat. Opinion after opinion in the negative came from lawyers of the highest standing. The state comptroller refused to pay men who had not received their appointments under open competition. Finally instead of waiting for the courts to overthrow it the whole Platt scheme broke down—slowly and with creakings and groanings but surely. In the last ditch stood Cobb and Lord, Platt's majority of the civil service commission, holding back the notices for the competitive examination; but even they could not override the constitution, and the whole list finally went by the board pell-mell under the merit system. This changes the entire character of the excise law and it may result in being a great improvement over the pernicious system it supplanted.

ONE of Platt's moves in the state of New York was to have his legislature make a law by which his machine could seize the Albany police, and the usual bi-partisan board was set up. The supreme court declared the bill unconstitutional and the appellate division has affirmed the decision. The point in brief is that there can be no political qualifications for office. To say that one place shall be filled by a democrat is to deprive a man who is not a democrat of the privilege of holding that office. Thus one by one the courts are clearing the atmosphere of the clouds with which cheap-jack politicians have obscured the sky. The sunlight will reach Indiana by and by, covered as it is with humbug bi-partisan boards.

MAYOR STRONG, of New York, by an order made June 5, transferred 140 positions in the civil service of that city with salaries amounting to $318,000 a year to the competitive lists. This means that hereafter any vacancies must be filled by open competition. These offices are the very cream of the higher places in the city service and their removal from the present or future grasp of Tammany or the Platt boys has led to such a gnashing of teeth that it is plain that these patriots never had a more severe paroxysm. The list is so important that it is given in full that our readers may more fully realize the tremendous strides the merit system is now taking:

MAYOR'S OFFICE.		Salary.
Warrant and Bond Clerk.....		$2,500
Marshal.....		2,800
FINANCE DEPARTMENT.
General Bookkeeper.....		4,000
Paymaster's Clerks (10).....	$1,200 to	1,300
Assistant Cashiers (2).....		1,600
Clerks of Markets.....	$1,500 to	3,000
Deputy Collectors of City Revenue (8).....	$1,200 to	1,800
Paymaster's Messenger.....		950
STREET-CLEANING DEPARTMENT.
Chief Clerk.....		2,800
DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS.
Chief Clerk.....		4,000
Water Purveyor.....		4,000
Superintendent of Street Improvements ..		2,750
Superintendent of Lamps and Gas.....		2,750
Superintendent of Repairs and Supplies.....		2,750
Superintendent of Incumbrances.....		2,750
Superintendent of Streets ..		2,750
Examiner of Complaints.....		—
FIRE DEPARTMENT.
Assistant Secretary.....		2,500
Bookkeeper.....		3,500
Secretary of Relief Fund.....		1,800
Inspector of Combustibles.....		3,000
Fire Marshal.....		3,000
HEALTH DEPARTMENT.
Sanitary Superintendent.....		4,000
Register of Records.....		4,000
Secretary.....		4,800
Attorney and Counsel.....		4,000
Assistant Counsel.....		2,500
Assistant Sanitary Superintendent.....		3,000
PARK DEPARTMENT.
Engineer of Construction.....		3,500
Topographical Engineer.....		2,400
General Inspector.....		2,500
Superintendent.....		4,000
STREET IMPROVEMENTS, 23D AND 24TH WARDS.
Superintendent of Maintenance.....		—
General Inspector and Foreman.....		2,750
DEPARTMENT OF DOCKS.
Clerk to the Treasurer.....		2,000
Collector ..		1,800
Superintendent of Docks.....		3,500
Dock-master ..		2,100
Assistant Dock-masters (12), each.....		2,100
DEPARTMENT OF TAXES AND ASSESSMENTS.
Deputy Commissioners (18), each.....	$2,700 to	3,500
Assessors (4), each ..		3,000
BOARD OF CITY RECORD.
Supervisor of City Record ..		5,000
Deputy Supervisor and Accountant.....		2,500
Private Secretary.....		—
BOARD OF ELECTRICAL CONTROL.
Engineer.....		—
Electrical expert.....		—
Assistant Secretary.....		2,400
COMMISSIONERS OF ACCOUNTS.
Assistant examiners (8); per month.....	$100 to	133
Clerks, per month.....		70

BOARD OF ESTIMATE AND APPORTIONMENT.
Clerk.....		3,000
CIVIL-SERVICE SUPERVISORY AND EXAMINING BOARDS.
Secretary.....		2,500
Chief Clerk.....		1,800
Chief Examiner ..		3,600
Examiners, a day.....		10
BOARD OF ALDERMEN.
Clerk.....		5,000
Deputy Clerk.....		2,500
Engrossing Clerk (3), each.....		1,000
Librarian.....		1,000
Messenger (2).....		900
Sergeant-at-Arms.....		900
SUPERINTENDENT OF MAINTENANCE OF DEPARTMENT STREET IMPROVEMENTS.
23d and 24th Wards.....		2,750
DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC CHARITIES.
Purchasing agent.....		3,000
General storekeeper.....		1,800
Superintendent of Hospitals and Alms-houses ..		2,500
Superintendent of Outdoor Poor Department ..		3,600
Chief of Staff of Hospitals.....		2,000
Superintendent of Hospitals.....		2,500
DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTION.
Purchasing agent.....		2,000
General storekeeper.....		1,200
Wardens of prisons and work-houses (2).....	2,000 &	2,500
Deputy wardens (2).....	1,350 &	1,000

It would be unfair not to give both sides a hearing upon this transfer by Mayor Strong. Alderman Wund is a fair representative of Tammany and the republican boys. He says:

"This means the beginning of the end of government by the people in this country. Popular government can not exist without parties, and parties can not exist without rewards in the way of offices. Take away the offices, and what motive will a man have for working for his party? He will lose all interest in his party and in his country, and what will be the consequence? Things will go to the bad.

"Now, to come down to my own position. What is the use of being an alderman if you can't do anything for your friends? And how are you going to have any friends, or keep them, if you can't do anything for them? Why, if this civil service scheme is carried out, a man who hasn't turned a hand for his party or contributed a dollar to help it along can go and pass an examination and get a job, while the men who have given their time and their money and their labor to their party will be left out in the cold. If this thing is kept up, do you think men will work for their parties any more or take any interest in the government? No; they will not.

"Just to think," continued the alderman mournfully, "they are coming in here and trying to take our few clerks away from us! We haven't got much power left, and if they take away our little appointments, why who would want to be an alderman, anyhow? Not I, anyhow. It is a shame, an outrage, a—a—a—everything that is outrageous, to attack the board of aldermen in this way. And (in a solemn whisper) let me tell you that this is an attack not only on the board of aldermen, but on government by the people too."

THE Massachusetts legislature has again begun tinkering the laws to find some way to give preference to classes in public employment notwithstanding the decision of the supreme court. The state attorney-general seems to be working along the same lines. It is doubtful if these busy demagogues will have any permanent success. It is too plain that whether a man shovels dirt, or acts as policeman or superintends public works, if the employment is by the public, one class can not constitutionally be given any advantage over another in obtaining it. Three cities in Massachusetts, Boston, Cambridge and New Bedford, have the labor service system and an appropriation has just been made to extend the system to other cities. Meanwhile Indianapolis, the largest city in Indiana, and the largest inland city in the country, has a system of labor by pulls put through by Tom Taggart in plain and brazen violation of the law.

THE Tacoma Civil Service League edit a column in the Sunday Morning Union. Among the articles of their constitution are these:

Art. II. Object. To assist in the complete abolition of the spoils system from all branches of the public service, and especially to secure the honest and efficient enforcement of the civil service provisions of the city charter.

Art. III. Methods. The league seeks to accomplish these objects by agitation, by the enforcement of present laws, by securing further legislation and by directing the moral influence of the community.

MR. MCKINLEY AND CIVIL SERVICE REFORM.

In April, 1890, occurred the most vicious and dangerous onslaught upon the federal civil service law that has ever been made. It was an attempt in the house to defeat the appropriations, and for a time it appeared that the attempt might succeed. At the critical moment Mr. McKinley, then the republican leader of the house, said:

"Mr. Chairman, if the republican party of this country is pledged to any one thing more than another it is the maintenance of the civil service law and to its efficient execution—not only that, but to its enlargement and its further application to the public service.

"The law that stands upon our statute books to-day was put there by republican votes. It was a republican measure. Every national platform of the republican party, since its enactment, has declared not only in favor of its continuance in full vigor, but in favor of its enlargement so as to apply more generally to the public service. And this, Mr. Chairman, is not alone the declaration and purpose of the republican party, but it is in accordance with its highest and best sentiment—aye, more, it is sustained by the best sentiment of the whole country, republican and democratic alike. And there is not a man on this floor who does not know that no party in this country, democratic or republican, will have the courage to wipe it from the statute book or amend it, save in the direction of its improvement.

"Look at our situation to-day. When this party of ours has control of all the branches of the government it is proposed to annul this law by withholding appropriations for its execution, when for four years under a democratic administration nobody on this side of the house had the temerity to rise in his place and make a motion similar to the one now pending for the nullification of this law. We thought it was good then, good enough for a democratic administration; and I say to my republican associates, it is good enough for a republican administration; it is good and wholesome for the whole country. If the law is not administered in letter and spirit impartially, the President can and will supply the remedy. Mr. Chairman, the republican party must take no backward step. The merit system is here, and it is here to stay, and we may just as well understand and accept it now, and give our attention to correcting the abuses, if any exist, and improving the law wherever it can be done to the advantage of the public service."

The attack was routed by a vote of 120 to 61. On May 16th following, the Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, at its annual meeting, adopted the following:

We thank our western congressmen, McKinley and Butterworth, and those who joined with them, for their able and successful resistance in beating back the recent attack upon the civil service law.

THE CONFERENCE OF CHARITIES AND CORRECTIONS.

At the National Conference of Charities and Corrections, which began at Grand Rapids June 4, there was a very full discussion of the merit system in connection with the various institutions which are in the line of the objects of the association. Several papers were read, and these were followed by general discussions in which every minute was occupied. The greatest drawback to the introduction of the merit system is the mental condition of the heads of the institutions themselves and of other active members of the conference. There were some notable exceptions, like the warden of the Minnesota state prison and the state factory inspector of Illinois, who understood the system and were unequivocal and straightforward in its favor. Otherwise there were all kinds of opinions varying in rawness. One superintendent thought that the system was not even applicable to the appointment of clerks, because they were so closely connected with the other workings of the institutions. Another declared, with great emphasis, that the only true merit system was the superintendent's unhampered action in appointments and removals, although all but universally the superintendent's action has never been, is not now, nor ever would be unhampered, and this is one of the evils the merit system will correct. Another rehearsed the long exploded homily about peculiar fitness and nice adjustment of nerves which competition and a probationary period can not determine, although a superintendent under a political board by talking with an applicant can. This same superintendent also declared that a clean sweep removed a good many barnacles, and that the stray officers who were kept were really the only ones deserving to be kept. This was in the face of the hundreds of thousands of capable officers who have not been kept, and of a like number of barnacles removed under the spoils system only to be succeeded by barnacles. It was patronizingly stated that the merit system would, however, be given a fair trial. A member of the Ohio state board of charities, after revealing the utterly corrupt condition of that state in the matter of appointments, said that the merit system in the federal civil service would probably remain only until "our people get in and change it." In his paper Mr. Philip C. Garrett gave some distressing instances of abuses of inmates of charitable institutions, due wholly to the spoils system. In the course of some remarks later Mr. Loch, of England, said that he had been surprised at the practice in America of running politics into all phases of these institutions, but he thought it was a matter which the American people would correct. Mr. Frank Sanborn, of Concord, said that for the benefit of Mr. Loch he would say that all this talk reminded him of the old deacon who was in every way an exemplary man except that he would sometimes swear, and that instances of killing were rather exceptional.

Evidently the conference needs to educate itself. It would be well for the heads of the various institutions to examine the workings of the merit system and to learn better where it would apply and what objections to it have long been overthrown, and what its tests really are. They will not then iterate and reiterate as was done here that a purely educational test is not adapted to selecting employes for state institutions. We notice a letter reviewing the conference in the New York Evening Post contained no mention whatever of this the most important subject before it, presented by five papers and two lengthy public discussions. It mentions a discussion of the use of criminal and tramp dialect in juvenile reformatories which is a reminder that the superintendents without exception declared that their greatest obstacle was to prevent their teachers from descending to the use of the same dialect. There could be no louder commentary on the results of the present system of appointments. The plan by which the superintendent and the board converse with an applicant and then appoint upon the pull system or by shaking up the offices in a hat as was shown by Mrs. Flower's paper, evidently has its drawbacks. As to Mr. Sanborn's rather flippant and happy-go-lucky attitude we quote the following from Professor Henderson's powerful paper:

They tell us with just pride of the Michigan system of child-saving. But they can not boast of many of our county jails, city lock-ups and neglected poor-houses. They are ashamed to explain to the expert public servants in the institutions of Bremen, Hamburg and Dresden, how our clerks get their places, and on what dishonorable and au-noying terms they keep them. But these scandals are well known in Europe, and they are often supposed to indicate a deep seated and universal depravity among the people who can tolerate such abuses without efficient protest. The fact that we have general suffrage makes the case all the blacker for us.

DANGERS OF THE SPOILS SYSTEM IN STATE INSTITUTIONS.

[A paper read by Lucius B. Swift before the National Association of Charities and Corrections, at Grand Rapids, June 5, 1896.]

Some years ago the general assembly of Indiana was the scene of a busy struggle to secure the reorganization of the benevolent institutions of the state. No demand of public business nor any condition of the institutions themselves called for the change. The attacking force was a well organized band, a faction of the party already in possession; its object was the capture of the places. The bill became a law and its promoters who had for weeks constituted the "third house" of the general assembly gave a dinner in celebration and then as members of boards, superintendents, stewards and so on went into enjoyment of the captured spoil.

Some four years later it fell to me to assist in an investigation of the state hospital for the insane at Indianapolis, made by a house committee of the general assembly. The investigation occupied three weeks.

This hospital was beautifully situated, with male and female departments in great separate buildings standing in ample and shady grounds. Its board had the disposal of about $300,000 a year. Yet in this modern environment, with ample funds which made possible the application of the most humane and enlightened principles of the nineteenth century, the place was honeycombed with medieval notions and practices—unsympathetic, cruel, barbarous and corrupt. Every employe, the doctor, the ward attendant, the clerk, the carpenter, the washerwoman, must not only bear the party stamp, but must be of the faction which had captured the hospital; and so fierce was the demand for a share, that in the 350 places we found there had been 648 changes in four years. Along the same line, the contracts for supplies, with few exceptions, had been let to those who had helped in the capture or who had obtained some later hold upon the board. As might have been expected, we found an untold amount of misery inflicted upon the thousand helpless inmates by this aggregation of inexperience and knavery. Not one of the employes had an incentive to do well, for the place was not secured by merit nor held by efficiency. Physical force not infrequently assisted by blows, sometimes with the club, was the quick resort of inexperience and inefficiency, and in cases, was carried to extreme cruelty. Contracts were made and prices were paid for the best articles; yet through the steward's office there was an endless procession of supplies foreign to the contracts, decayed meats, decayed butter, decayed vegetables, hogs infected with cholera, shelf-worn goods and so on. The whirlwind had been thoroughly reaped.

This hospital was a full development. Perhaps nowhere in the country among hospitals does such a case exist to-day; but it is not certain that there may not be one to-morrow. This was a natural and legitimate outcome of the spoils system, a system which is never asleep, and whose restless and unscrupulous activity has given of late years an increasing number of full fruitions. There was this hospital. There is Tammany Hall which robbed and blackmailed the people of New York. There is the state of New York where no law can be passed without the consent of Platt. There is Pennsylvania in which free government has reached a like suspended condition under Quay. There is Senator Murphy's city of Troy which classes Bat Shea among the saints. And wherever good government has been laid waste, the cause is always the same—favoritism moved by a thousand motives, the spoils system with its one doctrine, that every item of public transactions is to be given a twist for personal or party benefit, and practiced in so many governmental functions that every rising generation imbibes the idea that public business is not as private business; that it does not call for the same abstention from deceit and speculation, but that every thing is fair in politics.

Now, it is not only true in experience, but it is true as an axiom that the presence of favoritism in the conduct of any public business is detrimental. There is no human nature the world knows of which can stand the test of its exercise, or which can stand the test of the opportunity of its exercise. There is no public institution in whose management favoritism is an element in which progress is not retarded or is at a standstill, and which is not in danger of a development as rank and unhappy as the Indiana hospital I have described. Now, if one says that he is an exception or that his board is an exception, that they have the power but they resist the temptation I shall not dispute the statement, but I shall doubt their knowledge of themselves, and I shall answer that if they have this almost unknown virtue, their successors in office will not have it. We find every grade of favoritism, but still it is favoritism. Where ordinary favoritism exists the condition is not creditable, but the public is used to it. At any moment, however, the developing power of a boss may send any institution so far down that the cry of misery becomes loud enough to be heard, and then the commonwealth feels its shame and disgrace.

I do not wish however, to confine myself to extreme dangers. Take the average state institutions, benevolent, penal or reformatory, and they do not fix the attention at all or they fix it because of things which are disagreeable. The impression made is of common-placeness, of mediocrity, of powerlessness to advance.

We are always in hopeless waiting either for the new set just in to become skilled or for some turn which will get rid of the old set of incapable and worthless favorites.

If you visit a prison you find the employes working in narrow lines. From lack of disposition or capability there is not enough of the play of honest human nature upon dishonest human nature to make it better. If you ask a warden, who has been some time in place and has become interested in his work, if there is no way to give natural manhood a better chance he will tell you privately that the insuperable obstacle is lack of permanency in place and the foisting upon him of employes by one pull or another. He can keep the prisoners within the walls, he can keep them in order, and he can keep the cost of maintenance within a proper figure, but to carry out extensively a system based upon the possibility that the prisoner can be made better is impossible under the present method of employment. If you get into his confidence he lays before you the full action of this method with its aggregation of pulls; the party pull, which is the blanket mortgage over all, the party-faction pull, the church pull, the lodge pull, the family pull, and so on.

I am not a specialist, but I do not need to be told that the best treatment of prisoners can be had only through employes of intelligence determined by test, of fitness determined by trial, of experience obtained by long service, and tenure depending solely upon faithfulness and efficiency. I know that still more is this true of physicians and attendants in care of the insane or teachers of the deaf and dumb and the blind. The time has passed for argument with those who say that equally suitable or better employes are those who get their places at the arbitrary discretion of the authority which is "responsible" for the particular institution, but who get them in fact primarily, one because he is a relative of a member of the board, one to pay a legislator for his vote, one because a prominent politician requests it, one because the governor is building up a machine, and so on through the endless list of pulls. Such a contention says that there is nothing in the treatment of prisoners but to keep them within the four walls, in silence, in stripes, and walking in the lock-step; there is nothing in the care of the insane but to keep a mad-house, to prevent escapes and the infliction of bodily harm, and keep down the cost of maintenance.

The country is familiar with the Indian Rights Association of which Mr. Herbert Welsh has so long been the secretary. Its object has been not only to prevent the Indians from being plundered and murdered, but to raise them to the level of self-supporting, civilized people. The object was entirely feasible. The process was the practice of common honesty in dealing, and by industrial and common education. The men and women united in this association for years spent large sums of money and wherever there was a lull in political activity made noticeable progress. Intermittently but inevitably came the swoop of the spoiler and at his demand experienced agents, trained teachers and faithful employes of all kinds were swept out and their places taken by those who had "whooped 'er up" in the last campaign. For years from the subjects discussed at their conference the association did not appear to realize the fundamental difficulty. Finally Mr. Welsh rose to the situation and declaring that the good accomplished would be destroyed as fast as accomplished while the spoils system existed, he took his place in the front rank of the national civil service reform league and helped carry its cause on to the great victory which has been won. And the spoils system has been destroyed in the Indian service. Having a clean instrument to work with in a civil service where tenure depends solely upon faithfulness and efficiency the way is clear to solve unhampered the great problems of Indian civilization.

A great wave of municipal reform is sweeping over the country. It has had the happy result of enlisting thousands of men who never before entered a reform movement. So far, unless its recent meeting was an exception, its league has laid its stress upon higher individual citizenship as the solution of the colossal difficulties presented by municipal government. The advance of that reform has been in the line of modern charters. The man who drew such a charter adopted by one of the finest cities in the west told me that he knew nothing about civil service reform. While these charters are an improvement, municipal reform will not be accomplished under them, nor will it be accomplished at all while any appointing officer may fill the places of policemen and firemen upon the pull system, or while the street gang may be made an almshouse where the local bosses quarter their followers. It is true that public morals are debauched, that individual citizenship is at a low grade and that it must be elevated, and that it is the final object of all reform; but leaving the power of appointment by favoritism untouched if we wait for municipal reform until this elevation takes place and the good citizens go to the primaries and there contend with and overthrow the bosses, it will not come in our time. It is the spoils system more than all other things combined which has debauched public morals and they will remain debauched while that system exists.

And so it is with state charitable and correctional institutions. I have looked over some years of the proceedings of this conference and have noted the wide range of the subjects discussed and the reports of progress in the various states. I do not wish to minimize the great good which has been accomplished and the great influence which those interested in subjects germane to this association have had in causing an advance of public opinion; but it seems to me that in the failure to deal with the subject of the service in these institutions, the effects of the various causes which lead to appointment, retention, or removal, there is a fundamental failure to grapple with an obstacle which blocks your further progress. The processes of charities and corrections have been made ripe by these discussions for the widest and most beneficent development. What can be accomplished amounts to a revolution. Why is it so hard to make headway? I take the case of the Michigan City prison. It had a warden who had obtained his place by political influence. He was, however, an honest and capable man and had become interested in his work. The prison was loaded with appointees made at the dictation of various pulls, but in the course of four years the warden had brought them into some sort of order and discipline and both himself and most of them had reached the point where they might be said to have obtained, at the expense of the state, an elementary knowledge and some years of experience in the treatment of prisoners. The warden particularly was at the point where he might be expected to become a most useful man to the commonwealth, but at that point there was a party revolution in the general assembly. Adequate legislation was put through providing for the erection of a new board which took the right view of the tariff question, and this board at once put into that prison from the warden down, men whose views on the tariff were also sound, allowing, however, within that limit the widest latitude for pulls, the new warden being a member of the party state committee. Let us grant that the new men are in themselves fair subjects for tutelage. In a few years they will have learned something at the expense of the state, but by that time it is more than likely that the necessities of the tariff or the currency will demand their dismissal. In the meantime this conference will go on meeting and will find this prison on the same plane it has been for years. It is true that in many states the party wheels do not turn backward and forward so frequently as in Indiana. I know that where a party remains many years in power the service becomes in a manner settled and efficient as was the case in the railway mail service in 1885. But no party remains forever in power, even in Pennsylvania, and there is, therefore, the standing menace that at any time the improvement of years may be destroyed.

Wherever the germs of the spoils system are there is constant danger of a ruinous development at the hands of politics. That system exists in general to-day, and the ideas which this conference advocates and hopes to see adopted will not take permanent root. I may be contradicted, but I shall remain in the confidence of foreordination that while that system lasts the institutions concerned will be found on the crude lines where they are. I shall also remain in an equally firm but more serene confidence that the system is doomed.

Within this generation two fundamental improvements have been made in civil administration; one is the merit system where public employment and promotion are granted upon impartial tests to those to whom the competition open to all has determined best fitted. In unskilled employment the labor service system of registration has barred out politics and all kinds of favoritism in that department. These two systems are now on their conquering way against the combined power of party machines; against every kind of treachery, against ridicule, and denunciation they have pursued their irresistible march until the voice of the opponent is dumb. Eighty-five thousand places in the federal service have been wrenched from the spoiler, and already in states and cities the forward movement has begun. There is no question as to the result. The heathen may rage again and may again imagine a multitude of vain things, but politics and favoritism are to go out of the management of state institutions. Even party machines can not resist the inevitable. These institutions will be filled with employes beholden to nothing but their own merit for appointment and who need look to nothing but faithfulness and efficiency for tenure. I do not claim that the introduction of any scheme of appointment, however good, will of itself clear public life of its dishonesty and inefficiency. The state of New York has for a number of years had a civil service law and has lately incorporated the principle into its constitution, yet Platt's legislature has just passed and Platt's governor has just signed a bill vacating the boards of eleven state hospitals, places filled for years by men and women serving disinterestedly and conscientiously without pay. New York city has for the same time had a civil service law, yet Tammany ran riot in every form. But what is it that is wresting from Platt step by step the spoils upon which his political life depends? It is the civil service amendment backed up by the power of the courts. What is it that enables Theodore Roosevelt and Colonel Waring to build up the police and street departments of New York until their improvement attracts the attention of the whole country? It is the civil service law and rules, and by these and these alone will Tammany Hall and Platt finally be broken. The high civilization which this conference advocates will, under such a system, have a clean instrument to do its work. Its ideas will not be inculcated one year to be uprooted the next, but in the grasp of those who believe in them and who desire to work them out, their benefits will increase from year to year and from generation to generation.

THE MERIT SYSTEM IN PUBLIC INSTITUTIONS.

[A paper by Lucy L. Flower, read at the National Conference of Charities and Corrections at Grand Rapids, June 6, 1896.]

Cook county is governed by a board of fifteen commissioners elected by the people. Formerly five members were elected each year to serve three years, so that the new members coming on to the board were powerless to make changes until, through one year's experience, they had learned something of the needs of the institutions, and of the competency of the employes. Under this system the employees were not changed very frequently; but, at the time of the far-famed boodle board, the members of the citizen's committee claimed that collusions, for the purpose of fraud, existed that could not be possible if members did not hold over; and, as a result, influence was brought to bear upon the members of the legislature and the law was changed so as to provide for the election of the whole fifteen each year. This resulted in a complete change in the management every year and the appointment of an entirely new staff of officials throughout the county, and was so disastrous in its effects that the law was again changed two years ago and the term made two years instead of one, though the whole fifteen are still elected at one time.

In December, 1894, a new board of county commissioners was elected under this new law, and within a few weeks of the organization of the board a statement appeared in the newspapers that, after a long wrangle over the offices, the matter had been at last amicably adjusted by the following plan:

A list of all the offices in the county, many hundred in number, was made, with the salaries attached to each. These were divided into fifteen parts, each containing an equal number of positions and of as nearly equal pecuniary value as possible. These fifteen lists were then put into a hat and each commissioner drew one and was then entitled to fill the positions on his list as he chose, with only such reference to fitness as he might be pleased to consider.

So much a matter of course had the filling of all public places by political appointees irrespective of merit become that the public statement in every Chicago paper of this hat scheme, created not a ripple of astonishment and almost no comment.

The following June the kicking to death of an insane patient, a harmless and quiet man, who had only been in the asylum one night, by an attendant whose previous occupation had been that of a butcher, created a public scandal that finally culminated in the appointment, by the president of the county board, of an investigating committee. This committee consisted of the members of the county board, two labor men, four persons indirectly connected with the county board, Miss Jane Addams, of Hull House, and myself. Miss Addams and I consented to serve on the committee at the request of some persons interested, who desired us to be present and report if an investigation by the state board of charities was desirable.

On the stand during this investigation one of the commissioners under oath, testified, that it was perfectly true that all the positions in their gift had been filled by the hat scheme which I have just described, and to the question, "Could the superintendent remove incompetent employes when thus assigned by the commissioners," he replied, "No." And to the further question, "Did not the board pass a resolution that the heads of departments were empowered to remove an incompetent employe no matter by whom appointed," he replied, "Oh, yes, but that was only done for outside effect, they could not really remove any one."

The investigation, which may be readily seen from its constitution, was superficial in the extreme, developed certain facts, however.

First, That absolutely no attention was paid in the appointments to the fitness of the appointees for the places to which they were assigned, and that competent employes could only be retained by some commissioner placing them on his list of appointments. This of course was done in many instances, especially by the commissioners from country districts, whose constituents were not struggling for places and who were not compelled to pledge all positions within their control in order to secure their election. At the head of Cook County Insane Asylum with 1,200 patients, was a young man whose only experience in a medical way had been as an interne for a year and a half in Cook County Hospital, and who had had absolutely no experience with the insane. His assistant was a young woman of about the same experience and these physicians testified that they had no authority whatever over the attendants, who were under the control of appointees called supervisors, ordinary and ignorant men and women who knew absolutely nothing about the proper care of the insane.

The attendants themselves were drawn from all classes, butchers, saloonkeepers, car drivers, etc., being among the number. Evidently the refuse of the appointments, as pay being small and the life disagreeable, only the hardest up and lowest down on the list would take these places.

Bad as conditions were, neither Miss Addams nor I, felt it advisable to call for an investigation by the state board, for the reason that eight years before, on a similar occasion, the state board had been called upon by the Woman's Club, a most thorough investigation made, with the result that just the same conditions as existed last July, were found to exist then; and as nothing had been accomplished before, we felt sure nothing would be now; simply because the fault lies, not with the particular commissioners, or the individual employes, but with the system; and no investigation, no arraignment of individuals, nothing will do any permanent good so long as the spoils system remains. Just as long as it is recognized as legitimate for a man to compensate individuals for personal services to himself in ward caucuses, by appointments to public position, just so long will public institutions be run, not for the benefit of the inmates, but to further personal ends, and the unfortunate poor, sick and insane, will be the victims of brutal, ignorant and untrained officials.

One of the commissioners with whom I talked, a really well intentioned man, voiced the usual way a commissioner looks at the matter. He said, "My friends worked for me to get this position, and it is only right I should pay them, the only way I can, by appointing them to any places I can control." This assumes that all public offices are individual spoils, in place of being public trusts, that a man is elected for his own benefit only and not to serve the public; and as long as the general public are content to so consider all official positions, no reform is possible. It must be the work of these conferences to arouse a public sentiment that will demand that at least all our charitable institutions, shall be governed under civil service rules, which will give some permanence to the employes, insuring their retention if satisfactory, and their removal if incompetent or unfaithful. At present, the manner in which the employe performs his duties is almost the last consideration, which influences his appointment or retention in office.

COL. WARING'S REFORM IN NEW YORK.

Col. Waring paid this tribute to-day to a faithful officer in the street-cleaning department, whose death was recently announced:

"This department has sustained an almost irreparable loss in the death of Mr. Auguste Bohn, jr., district superintendent in charge of the district west of Central Park. He insisted on working on the 20th inst., in spite of a severe cold and bad weather. He was taken to the hospital later in the day, and on the evening of the 26th inst. he died of pneumonia. Mr. Bohn was born in New Orleans, and was twenty-nine years old when he came into the department, January 18, 1895, as a 'detailed sweeper.' It was he who, with Mr. Stearns, a young graduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, took charge of the first effort for the removal of trucks and for the reformation of the very foul and disorderly condition of the streets of the Five Points region. In February, in addition to these duties, they were most active in connection with the snow removal. They worked day after day, and night after night, as only ambitious and faithful young men could work. The successful reorganization of the department was largely due to their resolute efforts at this, in the most difficult part of the city.

"Mr. Bohn earned rapid promotion and held several important positions. Early in November last he was made district superintendent, which is the highest position outside of the department headquarters. Here he secured the confidence of his superiors, the respect of his subordinates, and the complete satisfaction of the people of his district. Mr. Bohn was a gentleman by birth, education, and lifelong association, and he coupled with this the fidelity and tireless industry of a trained workman. He has fallen a victim to these qualities, which caused him to disregard the suggestions of ordinary prudence, and to stick to work which he thought must be done until compelled by pain and weakness to give it up. While the death of such a man for such a reason is almost the saddest of all deaths, it has its value in the example it sets of faithful and persistent devotion to duty. His friends will at least have the poor consolation of knowing that every man and woman in the department who knew him is his sincere mourner to-day."—New York Evening Post.

* * *

Mr. Bohn was one of the number of college-bred young men whom Col. Waring gathered about him when he took charge of the department, a year ago last January. With the idea that well-educated young men would become in time his most efficient aides, he brought several of them to this city, and started them at the lowest rung of the ladder as "detailed sweepers," a sort of assistant foremen. Mr. Bohn was born and reared in New Orleans, and was for two years a student at Harvard. Leaving Cambridge at the end of his sophomore year, he went into mining in the west. The mines in which he was employed were closed at the time Col. Waring took charge of the street-cleaning department, and he applied to the colonel for a place. Col. Waring told him to come to New York, and eventually set him to cleaning up the Five Points district. With him was associated F. L. Stearns, from the Boston Institute of Technology, another "detailed sweeper." Five Points, with the surrounding neighborhood, Mott, Pell, Doyer, Mulberry, Bayard and Baxter streets, constituted as filthy a district as there was in the city. Refuse of all kinds cluttered up the streets, trucks and push-carts blocked the way, and the residents of the district looked on the street-cleaner as their natural foe. So bitter was the feeling that Bohn and Stearns were accompanied for days by two policemen. Tact and forcefulness conquered, and in a few weeks the streets were clean, and Mr. Bohn was the most popular man in the district.—New York Sun, March 30.

* * *

The most astonishing thing in Col. Waring's tribute, the other day, to the memory of Mr. Auguste Bohn, jr., who fell a victim to pneumonia, caught in a resolute performance of his duty in the street-cleaning department, was the statement that he was "a gentleman by birth, education, and lifelong association." It was to his tireless activity, vigilance, and courage that we owed the removal of the trucks from the streets—a feat which a score of mayors had pronounced impossible—and also the reformation of the foul and disorderly Five Points region. In this work his chief assistant was Mr. Stearns, a young graduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. There are turned out from institutions of learning every year hundreds, if not thousands, of men who would bring to the public service just as much trained enthusiasm as Mr. Bohn, if they got a chance. But under the rule of the vile creatures to whom our cities have so long been delivered over, they had no chance of employment whatever. They might do anything with the education they got from our schools and colleges except use it in the service of the public. Drunken, shiftless, illiterate, "dead beats" and bummers, the Jakes, Mikes, Barneys, who have blown our shame around the world, and lightened our alleys with the ends of their noses, always had the advantage of them. Not by any means the least of the services which Col. Waring is rendering to the city is the introduction of the class to which Bohn and Stearns belonged, to the truly holy work of making the city a more wholesome and more comfortable and a more improving dwelling-place for all, and especially for the poor.—New York Evening Post.

* * *

Col. George E. Waring, commissioner of street cleaning, was busily occupied yesterday morning in decorating the most efficient male members of the two juvenile street cleaning aid associations with special badges and in giving them certificates which entitled them to the "due consideration and respect" of all "superintendents, foremen, detailed men, sweepers, and drivers of the department."

There were fifty-seven of these boys, nearly all Hebrew children from the east side, dressed in their best clothes. They were assembled in one of the old courtrooms in the brownstone building in city hall park shortly before noon.

After the badges were all distributed, Isidor Finkel was brought up to receive the special approbation of Col. Waring for having called last Sunday on "Silver Dollar" Smith's bar-keeper to remove a barrel of ashes which he had illegally placed on the sidewalk that day.

"You are a good boy," said the colonel, "and have done well. What did the bar-keeper say to you?"

"He asked me what business it was of mine, and I told him that I was a volunteer aid to the street cleaning department and showed him my certificate. He didn't do anything, so I reported him and told the newspapers."

The boy was very small and did not look strong. What ex-Alderman and ex-Assemblyman Charles Smith would have done had the boy drawn a certificate upon him for having his ash barrel on the sidewalk was a shuddering possibility to contemplate.

After young Finkel had been complimented, he turned to the reporters present and asked:

"What papers will this be in?"

A reporter replied that it would be in all of them, and the boy seemed much gratified.

Col. Waring's volunteer aid leagues will take part in the street cleaning department's parade next Tuesday. The boys will walk in the procession, while trucks will be provided for the girls.—New York Times, May 24.

* * *

The first parade of the street-cleaning department down Fifth Avenue yesterday afternoon was witnessed by a crowd that completely blocked the sidewalks and occupied every point of observation on the line of march, which was from Central Park to Madison Square. The feeling of curiosity which had doubtless drawn most of the spectators was changed, first to interest and then to enthusiasm, which extended from the young and noisy friends of the organized juvenile helpers from the east side, bringing up the rear of the line, to the adult citizens who in numerous instances were heard to remark that never before had they any adequate conception of the numerical force, equipment, or discipline of the department. The entire force, headed by Commissioner Waring, took part in the parade, which embraced about 2,000 men on foot, 750 horses and vehicles with their drivers, great roller sweepers, hose carts for flushing, and various other adjuncts of the department. Nearly twenty bands were interspersed among the marching division.

The sweepers were all clad in their uniforms of duck cloth, spotlessly white, each wearing a rose fastened behind his brass number plate. The carts were all washed clean and bright and were covered with white canvas. Altogether the marching white columns, broken by the hundreds of heavy carts rumbling over the pavement like pieces of artillery, presented a novel spectacle. The men marched erect and with admirable precision. They were reviewed by Mayor Strong and various city officials.—New York Evening Post.

* * *

For it is to be borne in mind that the force which the Mayor reviewed yesterday was composed, in the great majority, of the same men who belonged to the department of street cleaning when it could not have appealed to any human being as a proper object of municipal pride. Something like 80 per cent. of the rank and file are the same men who used in Tammany times to be seen talking politics over an inactive broom or betaking themselves for rest and refreshment to the nearest groggery. An equally large proportion of the subordinate officials of the department holds over from the same bad times. That is to say, they were appointed for reasons with which their fitness for their work had nothing to do, and they were retained for reasons with which their efficiency in their work had nothing to do. The change is not in the men so much as in the methods, not in the rank and file, but at the top. It is in the tenure by which the men hold their places. Every man on the force now understands that nothing can harm him if he does his work, and that nothing can save him if he fails to do it. Col. Waring has not found it necessary to make more than a few conspicuous examples in order to bring this notion into the head of every sweeper and every driver on the force. It is now universally understood, and the result is that the work of the department has been converted from a disgrace and a nuisance to a model service and a source of municipal pride.—New York Times, May 27.

* * *

Col. Waring is a scholar, a student of history, and a man of the world. When he put his street cleaners in white duck suits he was applying a wide and keen observation to human nature. He wanted to create a new spirit in workingmen of this elementary class—a sense of being representative of a great city, of always bearing evidence in their presence of the constant activity of the government of the people. Of course he never said just this to the laborers, but they felt it little by little. The uniform gave them dignity; it set them apart and showed their place; it created finally an esprit du corps—a capital sentiment, of the greatest value, as was shown in the recent parade of his "white-winged angels," when they had the air of soldiers instead of that of the trash of the streets.—Springfield Republican.

MUNICIPAL REFORM.

The persistence of the aqueduct contractors in seeking to make this city bear the expense which they were put to in order to make their own defective work good is extraordinary. The courts have decided against them invariably, but each year they go to the legislature and seek from it what the courts refuse. They ask now, as they have asked in former years, for a commission to hear and determine all claims against the city arising from the aqueduct work. They have nine million dollars of such claims, all of which are for money which they were forced by the aqueduct commission to spend to make good, according to contract, the poor work which they sought to palm off upon the city. This work was done under the old commission which was appointed through a "deal" with Gov. Hill and the republicans, and which was removed from office after its disgraceful doings had been exposed. The new commission, appointed by Mayor Hewitt, compelled the contractors to bring their work up to the requirements of their contracts, thus giving the city full and fair return for its money. It was a fortunate circumstance for the city that, when the contracts for that work were drawn, Mr., now Judge, Lacombe was corporation counsel, for he framed the contracts with such care and with jealous consideration of the city's interests that they have withstood all efforts of the contractors to get away from their obligations. The courts have held that under those contracts the contractors are not entitled to a cent of the money which they claim.—New York Evening Post, April 1.

A bill has been introduced, and carried to a third reading in both branches of the legislature, without reference to a committee, and is being "jammed through" by the speaker of the assembly, which provides for the establishment of a commission to pass once more on the claims of these very contractors, without regard to the terms of the contract, the law of the land or the decisions of the courts. * * * There is not a single thing to be said in favor of legislative interference in the matter, except that the contractors are out of pocket. Even if they are innocent men, who had found, after an honest effort to fulfill their obligations, that they had miscalculated the cost, the establishment, in a boss-ridden state, of a commission to set aside a written contract, and overrule the decisions of the courts, would be a precedent of enormous danger. But think of a commission to save fraudulent contractors from the consequences of their own dishonesty, framed in a hurry by the state legislature, and called for by four judges of the court of last resort, without other reason than that they had lost money through the failure of their own fraud. If any one can send us the particulars of a transaction like this occurring in the worst times of any free and civilized country in the world, we shall publish it carefully so as to show that we are really not so badly off after all; that, as the Hungarian said when the devil was carrying him off, we might be worse off, for there might be a state of things in which the legislature would vote the contractors their money without the intervention of a commission.—New York Evening Post, April 2.

The democrats are no sooner installed in power than the rush for the spoils begins. There are a half-dozen appointive offices at the disposal of Mayor Peterson and the democratic aldermen, and these officials are not given a moment's peace by the men who are after the plums. The struggle promises to be very bitter and by fall it is safe to predict the party will have dissipated the slight advantage gained by the result of the city election. For superintendent of streets there are at least twenty candidates.—Lockport dispatch, Buffalo Express, April 16.

The common council chamber was crowded to-night to witness the clean sweep which it was understood the new democratic administration would make. After the transaction of routine business the matter of appointments was taken up. A resolution to appoint Warren Welsh superintendent of lamps and gas was laid on the table. Augustus Morris, H. H. Woods and G. W. Lyons were nominated by Mayor Peterson for civil service commissioners and were confirmed.—Lockport dispatch, Buffalo Express, April 20.

The fight for municipal reform in New Orleans is against big odds. It matters little how many votes the citizens' league succeeds in getting into the boxes if it can not supervise the counting of them. There are two sets of election commissioners, three in each set, with a clerk and six of these eight places have been given to the democrats by the board of supervisors, leaving one commissioner for the league and another for the fusionists. As the New Orleans Picayune (dem.) says, it is a turning over of the city elections "to the political managers who are responsible for the present boodl government of New Orleans."

One of the fruits of the victory won by the Citizens' League, the municipal reform association which carried New Orleans at the election last month, will be a brand-new city charter, different from anything ever seen here before, "up to date," and of a radically reform type. One of the most novel and striking features, which will go into operation at once, is the introduction of the civil service rules for all city offices, save a few confidential ones. In no city in this country has the spoils system been more brutal than in New Orleans, and nobody can predict what will be the effects of this innovation. The Citizens' League finds the civil service system absolutely essential to municipal reform, as it has very nearly been wrecked on the shoals of office-seeking. Out of 18,000 white men who voted for "reform," over 3,500, or one in five, asked for office as a reward for their services—and there were only a few offices to give out. This is probably below the average in Louisiana, where one in every forty white men holds public office, and where one in every four is a standing candidate for it.—Harper's Weekly, May 23.

Probably no county in Pennsylvania is more boss-ridden than the county of Dauphin, in which the capital of the state is located. For years the people have had little to say in the selection of their candidates for county offices. The bosses have had their own way and so bold have they become that they now attempt to invade the school system with their political trickery. At the convention of school directors for the election of a county superintendent the other day, George McIlhenny, a son of the recognized boss of the county, was chosen over one who has held the office for several terms and given entire satisfaction to the people. R. M. McNeal held the respect of the patrons of the schools and the citizens generally, but he was compelled to retire to make room for a member of a family that is practically supported by the voters of the county. The father is a county prison inspector, one son is deputy register and is understood to be slated for register, when the wheel turns round once more; another son recently retired as register; a daughter is a matron at the county almshouse, a son-in-law is a director of the poor, and so on. There is much complaint and the storm will break when it is least expected. Boss McIlhenny is an uncouth farmer, whose influence is exerted among the ignorant yeomanry of the county. He attempted to have McNeal displaced by his son three years ago, but as the son had just emerged from a court trial on a very serious charge it was impossible to overcome public sentiment sufficiently to accomplish his purpose. But from that hour the boss and his henchmen got to work and wherever possible a school director favorable to the ring was put in position to be played later.—City and State, May 21.

The state board of health has received a letter from Secretary Dewey, acting for the executive committee of the state board of regents, complaining of the unsanitary condition of the Capitol Building. Disagreeable odors in the corridors, it is stated, are caused by wretched plumbing conditions, and endanger the health of the 100 clerks in the regents' department, most of whom are young women.—Albany Dispatch, June 15.

It is hard to get the schoolhouses of Boston put in proper sanitary condition because there is patronage for somebody in it, and who that somebody shall be is the rub. Politics is getting to a pretty pass when it disregards the health and physical welfare of little children.—Boston Times, May 31.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

VOL. II, No. 41.

INDIANAPOLIS, JULY, 1896.

TERMS: { One dollar per annum.
10 cents per copy.

Published monthly. Publication office, No. 23 N. Meridian St., Indianapolis, Ind. Address,
THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

WE ARE OPPOSED TO LIFE TENURE IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE. WE FAVOR APPOINTMENTS BASED UPON MERIT, FIXED TERMS OF OFFICE, AND SUCH AN ADMINISTRATION OF THE CIVIL SERVICE LAWS AS WILL AFFORD EQUAL OPPORTUNITIES TO ALL CITIZENS OF ASCERTAINED FITNESS.—Platform, National Convention of Looters, Chicago, July, 1896.

WHAT WE OPPOSE IN THAT PLANK IS THE LIFE TENURE WHICH IS BEING BUILT UP AT WASHINGTON, WHICH EXCLUDES FROM PARTY REPRESENTATION IN THE BENEFITS THE HUMBLER MEMBERS OF OUR SOCIETY.—Bryan's Interpretation.

THE CIVIL SERVICE LAW WAS PLACED ON THE STATUTE BOOKS BY THE REPUBLICAN PARTY, WHICH HAS ALWAYS SUSTAINED IT, AND WE RE-NEW OUR REPEATED DECLARATIONS THAT IT SHALL BE THOROUGHLY AND HONESTLY ENFORCED AND EXTENDED WHEREVER PRACTICABLE.—From the Republican Platform, 1896.

"MR. CHAIRMAN, IF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY OF THIS COUNTRY IS PLEDGED TO ANY ONE THING MORE THAN ANOTHER, IT IS THE MAINTENANCE OF THE CIVIL SERVICE LAW AND TO ITS EFFICIENT EXECUTION—NOT ONLY THAT, BUT TO ITS ENLARGEMENT AND ITS FURTHER APPLICATION TO THE PUBLIC SERVICE.

"THE LAW THAT STANDS UPON OUR STATUTE BOOKS TO-DAY WAS PUT THERE BY REPUBLICAN VOTES. IT WAS A REPUBLICAN MEASURE. EVERY NATIONAL PLATFORM OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY, SINCE ITS ENACTMENT, HAS DECLARED NOT ONLY IN FAVOR OF ITS CONTINUANCE IN FULL VIGOR, BUT IN FAVOR OF ITS ENLARGEMENT SO AS TO APPLY MORE GENERALLY TO THE PUBLIC SERVICE. AND THIS, MR. CHAIRMAN, IS NOT ALONE THE DECLARATION AND PURPOSE OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY, BUT IT IS IN ACCORDANCE WITH ITS HIGHEST AND BEST SENTIMENT—AYE, MORE, IT IS SUSTAINED BY THE BEST SENTIMENT OF THE WHOLE COUNTRY, REPUBLICAN AND DEMOCRATIC ALIKE."—Mr. McKinley in Congress, April, 1890.

THE meeting of looters held at Chicago this month which assumed the name of the national democratic convention, included, among its other schemes of robbery, the looting of the public service. Their platform opposes a life tenure of office and Bryan defines it to mean such a life tenure as is being built up at Washington which this demagogue says "excludes from party representation in the benefits the humbler members of our society." With the crowd before him any kind of a lie would pass, and he showed himself a glib and comprehensive liar. There is no life tenure being built up at Washington nor anywhere else in this country for the reason that executive officers have the power of instant dismissal. The humbler members of society never had an opportunity for public employment except at a sacrifice of manhood until the system of competition open to all known as civil service reform was introduced. The tenure which Bryan wants is the tenure limited by the interest and will of the silver mine and Altgeld anarchists and by the "humbler members of our society," he means the pensioners of the owners of silver mines whom the latter expect to unload upon the public offices, and the Altgeld rabble who want a change from rioting out of office to rioting in office.

It is not too much to say that since 1860 there has been no such onslaught upon government and law and order, and the same duty arises now that arose then. There is no question of parties. It is the duty of every man who respects law and order and the rights of individuals and public honor, and who seeks for good government, and who wants business prosperity, to turn to and help inflict upon these incendiaries a crushing defeat. That there will be a defeat and that it will be crushing, there is no manner of doubt. It would be a shame if Indiana did not lead in the victory. Now is the time to rescue her out of the hands of Voorheesism which has preyed upon her so long. In Indiana Altgeldism will be defeated, and the defeat must be overwhelming. The people of this state want it understood that capital invested here is as safe as if invested in Holland. If it is not so understood, they mean that this election shall make it so.

THE enemies of administrative reform have many times made combinations to defeat that reform. They sometimes attempted to defeat the appropriation in congress, notably when in 1890 they were baffled under the leadership of Mr. McKinley. Clubs have been formed like the Anti-Civil Service Democratic Reform Club of Indianapolis, and like that other club of this city which called itself the Farwell Club because Senator Farwell was the only man "who had the sand to oppose civil service," but Farwell refused the honor and the club was sold out by the constable for $36.41. But until the recent Chicago gathering never before have the political rascallions been able to form a national organization, including in its comprehensive scheme of destruction the overthrow of civil service reform. The advocates of that reform do not shrink from the contest. They will throughout the country be united to a man and their opponents will be cast headlong.

GEORGE FRED WILLIAMS is a showy man anxious to show off. All his life he has been on the side of public order and particularly on the side of civil service reform. He sold himself for a poor mess of pottage, and after he had delivered himself bound hand and foot he failed to get the pottage. He might claim that there was no consideration for the sale, but the other party might claim that too. Whatever of unhappiness a barren future has in store for him he has this sweet morsel of commendation from Altgeld: "There is a great deal in that youth from Massachusetts, and he had better be cultivated."

It is hard that Massachusetts should lose two of her leading young men in a single month, for George Fred Williams is lost to all that has constituted Massachusetts since 1776. But William E. Russell died on the eve of a great struggle, vitally involving the honor and welfare of his country with his last public utterance a message of patriotism. Manly in presence, manly in heart, courageous in spirit, the embodiment of personal and civic nobility, he died honored and mourned as Warren died at Bunker Hill.

DAY by day Bryan unfolds his demagogic soul to the country. At Salem July 14 he said that if elected he hoped to bring back to the people a government which "like heaven shall treat all alike." The government of which he is seeking to get possession has nearly 100,000 employments which are open on exactly equal terms to rich and poor, white and black alike. The system under which these employments are awarded is the greatest boon to the self-respecting wage-earner that was ever afforded in civil government. Yet Bryan in his platform as expounded by himself before his nomination, proposes to overthrow this system and restore again the piratical system of over-bosses and under-bosses and heelers and henchmen, which it has taken so many years to expel from the public service. We can not too strongly urge the gravity of the situation. If during the thirty years in which the battle of civil service reform has been fought out to what has lately seemed a decisive victory, any man or woman has made any effort in its favor that effort should now be repeated a hundred fold to beat back this horde which comes like an invasion of Tartars upon civilization.

THE methods which the Bryanites would pursue with the federal service are easily divined. If strong enough they would amend the law so as to retain a show of reform, but the amendments would, in fact, destroy the merit system. If not strong enough to legislate, we should be treated to a tricky civil service commission under whom the system would be thoroughly Tammanyized.

The fitness of Bryan for this purpose is shown out of his own mouth. In a speech in Chicago after his nomination he told a story of a man who, when asked why he walked the floor, said he had a note for $10,000 coming due in a week and it was time to walk the floor. A friend said, "Why don't you sleep and let the other man walk the floor?" A presidential nominee in sympathy with beating creditors would not stick at beating a law.

Further, look at the men who are leading in this great movement for all kinds of spoil. The onslaught for spoil would be a prolonged Chicago convention over again so long as a vestige was left. This is not in any respect an over statement. Those leaders, local and national, are well known. They are wild for something which belongs to some body else and compared with what they would do the old transactions of "pie" and "plums" and "cold toes" and "carrying out the policy of the administration" would appear conservative and decent. All who do not wish to see the work of George William Curtis undone should stand together against this onslaught.

PAPERS both east and west are publishing cautions against speaking sharply of the populist-Altgeld combination which is now endeavoring to get control of the government. The CHRONICLE does not exactly sympathize with the caution. When men get together and with whoop and yell propose to loot the public service we do not perceive that they are entitled to soft spoken admonitions. They know what they are about. For thirty years the argument for taking the federal service out of the clutches of spoilsmen has been publicly made and acted upon and every man in the Chicago convention knew the difference between the spoils system and the merit system. Yet with deliberation they propose to destroy the merit system and turn the victor loose upon the public service. It is the spirit and practice of the pirate and the buccaneer, and that is all there is of it. This is in the platform under some smoky phrases and it is in the hearts and minds of the men who made the platform.

THE CHRONICLE has criticised President Cleveland in every case where it believed he was at fault; and looking back now it believes that at times he was seriously at fault. But the summing up of his career will leave him among the great Americans. He stands to-day immovable between public honesty and order and all kinds of social and business disorder, and he will continue so to the end of his term. It is a curious irony of fate that the horde which at critical moments he tried to appease, we think improperly, now turn against him like wolves and try to rend him.

It will be remembered that soon after the present city administration was installed the state civil service reform association carefully examined its various acts and found it in the matter of appointments proceeding in reckless and impudent disregard of law. An administration so conducted could have but one outcome in its civil service and elsewhere is given a partial recital of the various results which have accrued by using the public service for personal and party ends. We have not by any means all of the instances of insubordination, drunkenness, dishonesty and other misdoings which have happened. But enough are given to show that nowhere in the service does there exist a feeling that employment is obtained by fitness and held by faithfulness or efficiency. There is no pride in any service such as Colonel Waring has evolved out of his Tammany sweepers in New York. The prevailing spirit is that appointments are obtained and held by a pull. The infallible test of this is the acts of the appointees themselves. The record is a disgrace to the city.

THE county administration does not appear any better. This county has a work-house of considerable importance. It is under the control of the board of county commissioners, consisting of three members, who are practically never overhauled in their doings, except as the public prints now and then do so. There was a change of parties in the board last fall, and the new board made a clean sweep at the work-house. The record of the results which is given elsewhere was what might have been expected. It does not appear that the new superintendent has any qualifications for the place. He was the personal favorite of one of the commissioners. He has had no voice in appointment or dismissal of the under-employees, he himself saying that he has no power to dismiss any one. The employees throughout are loaded upon the county treasury without any regard to their fitness, but they simply receive the places as plums at the hands of the commissioners. In the few months which have elapsed, among other things one guard shot at a prisoner without the least excuse, sixteen prisoners have escaped and some of their escapes can not be explained except through connivance of employees. The matter became such a scandal that the grand jury has just made a scathing report upon the affairs of the work-house and properly lays the whole blame upon the method of appointment.

We have never over-estimated the real emancipation which has come to public employees wherever the merit system has been applied. On every hand the result is the same. The latest instance is the labor service of New York city which is heard across the continent. Forty-one sweepers and drivers called upon Col. Waring and invited him to a public celebration in honor of the way in which he had bettered their condition. Speaking of his fellow-men the leader said, "You have raised them out of a state of political slavery which you found them in when you assumed office. Heretofore to get employment in this department a man had to be a slave to the liquor dealer."

In a statement issued by the executive committee of the sound-money democrats of Illinois, to explain why their state is ostensibly committed to free silver in the national convention, the efforts of the Cook county sound-money democrats to secure fair primaries are rehearsed. Their proposition was rejected by the central committee, 63 of the 74 votes in opposition being "cast by the appointees to office of Governor Altgeld, or their appointees."—New York Evening Post, July 8.

INDIANAPOLIS AND MARION COUNTY GOVERNMENT.

James B. Curtis, chairman of the executive committee, which made the nomination for mayor, is city attorney; Joseph E. Bell, member of the committee from the sixth ward, is assistant city attorney; Michael Laughin, member from the fifth ward, is an inspector in the engineer's office; E. M. Gooble, member from the first ward, is market master. Nearly every employe of the city was either a delegate to the last democratic convention or has relations with those who were. All who are mentioned were in the convention. Pierce Norton is one of the bondsmen of the superintendent of police. William Ripley is clerk of the board of health. John Manning is license inspector. Oscar Plumm is employed in the engineer's office. H. A. Mansfield was appointed city engineer, but was allowed to resign. Dare A. MacBeth was appointed to the city comptroller's office and resigned. Jerry Foley had a place in the assessment bureau and resigned. John Costello is an inspector in the engineer's office, and so is Charles A. Brown. Whit Byfield was a delegate, and his nephew was made clerk in the comptroller's office. E. A. Bryant, father-in-law of Mayor Taggart, is a clerk in the comptroller's office. John Shine is a foreman of a street gang. Jerry Shea has an appointment in the fire department. Bert Parker is clerk of the board of public works. John P. Brennan is clerk of the street commissioner's department, and, with Michael Burns, has the hiring of the men and teams employed on the city work. Burns is assistant foreman of street repairs, and is a candidate for school commissioner. Charles Adam, school commissioner, is chief clerk in the comptroller's office. He is backing Burns and has succeeded in securing the appointment of several firemen and policemen. In signing their applications he writes himself down as "a city passenger agent" (a position he formerly held). John Lucid is custodian of the city yards. Thomas W. Palmer is in the bureau of assessment. Michael Gantner is head janitor in the basement of the court-house. Larry Brennan and John Bernhauer are assistant janitors. John Kiley, always committeeman or a delegate, is custodian of Tomlinson hall. Joe Wagner is assistant market-master.—Indianapolis Journal, June 13.

* * *

Four-fifths of the men given employment on the streets were either delegates themselves to the last city democratic convention or they "fixed" delegations for certain candidates. Those who always go as delegates have been given permanent positions.—Indianapolis News, May 21.

THE FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Present indications are that J. H. Webster will be retired as chief fire engineer within thirty days. The plan is to make "Jim" George chief in his stead. The administration does not want a republican at the head of any department. The reason assigned for the change is that Webster has no discipline in the department, and can not handle the men. The friends of Webster say that he is not allowed to place the men, and even his suggestions as to the appointment of a captain is ignored. They say that Richard Herrick, clerk of the board of public safety, is using his influence with the board to have Webster displaced. They assert that Webster's clerk, who is of opposite politics, was forced upon him by the board. They declare that if there is a lack of discipline in the department the board is to blame for it, because it has made Webster a mere figurehead, and that if he is consulted at all it is only in a perfunctory way. It is charged by Webster's friends that the fire department has become a political machine, that men are appointed regardless of their qualifications as firemen, and only because of their ability to control primaries; that there are members of the force who are doing outside work and engaged in other business.—Indianapolis News, Feb. 25.

* * *

Fireman D. R. Foor was before the board of safety yesterday on a charge of insubordination, preferred by Acting Captain Hunt, of chemical company No. 2. He admitted his guilt and was fined six days' pay and reprimanded. He was absent from duty without permission for a number of days.—Indianapolis News, Feb. 25.

* * *

The board of public safety met yesterday afternoon and dismissed Matt Rodgers, driver of the engine at house No. 6, for drunkenness. He declined to give up his badge and defied any one to take it from him.—Indianapolis News, Feb. 20.

* * *

John Fanning, a brother of Joseph Fanning, who was deputy auditor of state under J. O. Henderson, was appointed to the fire department and assigned to duty as a lineman.—Indianapolis News, March 17.

* * *

John Fox, captain of fire department company, No. 5, was charged by Chief Webster with incompetency and neglect of duty. The hearing was set for 4 o'clock this afternoon. The specific complaint against him was that in answering a call from box 131 his company was the first company to arrive at a burning barn in North Alabama street, but that he failed to have a line of hose laid out, and allowed three other companies, arriving later—Nos. 9, 13 and 1—to get water on the fire before his company.—Indianapolis News, April 28.

* * *

Yesterday John Fox, captain of fire company No. 5, was acquitted of the charge of incompetency by the board of safety. Chief Webster reached a barn fire early and found that Fox's company was the first to arrive, but that two other companies got water on the fire before he did. Fox's explanation was that he had only two men and that his driver was a new man and drove past the water plug. Before he could return to it another company had attached to it. He then assisted another company.

Albert Rees was ordered to appear before the board and answer to his failure to comply with the order of the board that he pay $25 a month on certain debts owing by him. He had been ordered to pay this amount each month on bills amounting to about $150, and failed to do so.—Indianapolis News, April 29.

* * *

James Taylor, a fireman, connected with Hose Company No. 7, appeared before the board with a blackened eye. He was charged with drunkenness and disorderly conduct. It was shown that Taylor, while off duty, was drinking beer with a friend at his own home. Mrs. Riley is his neighbor, and Mrs. Jacob Kashman, living next door, 312 West Merrill street, called on Mrs. Riley. The Taylors and others have been at outs for some time on account of the children, and Taylor heard a remark at which he took offense. He rushed over to the house of Riley and announced that he was after no one but Mrs. Kashman, whom he denounced vigorously. Mrs. Riley admitted that she struck at Taylor with a broom, but did not hit him. Then Taylor went to the place where Mrs. Kashman's husband is at work, and insisted that she keep his wife quiet.

"Just tell my husband what you called me," said Mrs. Kashman, according to the testimony. Taylor repeated the epithets, and Kashman punched him in the face. Mr. Maguire remarked that Kashman did right. It was shown that Taylor, who had been on the fire force for nine months, had a good reputation as a fireman. "And a good free silver man?" asked Mr. Maguire, to which the defendant bowed. The board decided that he was not drunk and that he should consider himself reprimanded, and suggested that he move out of the neighborhood, which he agreed to do.—Indianapolis News, June 24.

THE POLICE DEPARTMENT.

It was remarked at the office of the board of safety to-day that demoralization seemed to have struck the police force after a period of comparatively smooth sailing. One of the members of the board said that he had just begun bragging about the good conduct of the force. This forenoon five patrolmen were up on charges of conduct unbecoming officers. Mr. Morse, of the board, was absent.

It was charged that B. R. Stevens had played cards with women of bad character in a North Indianapolis saloon in the Michigan road. Testimony showed that Patrolmen Stevens and Kitzmiller had gone to the place under general instructions to keep a watch on the women. Two women were sitting at a table in a room back of the bar, one of them playing "solitaire." She asked the patrolman to take a hand at "seven-up," and threw down six cards a piece for them. Kitzmiller said he couldn't play, but Stevens took up the hand dealt him, carelessly played out the six cards, while still standing and talking, and then left the table to go away from the saloon. The officers were in the saloon a short time Kitzmiller said fifteen minutes, Stevens and other said five. They did not drink. Stevens said that he had taken up the cards unthoughtedly and without realizing that his conduct was improper, but that he had since reflected on its impropriety. It was his first offense. The board fined him ten days' pay.—Indianapolis Journal, March 19.

* * *

Sergeant John Lowe found Patrolmen Conrad Houser and Edward Wheeler asleep in the flagman's watch-house at the railroad crossing at Noble and Washington streets, yesterday morning, at 2:45 o'clock. They pleaded guilty to the charge of being found asleep on duty. Lowe said that they had not been drinking, but had evidently gone into the place to dry themselves at the fire, as it was a wet and stormy night. Houser, a young man of about a month's experience, had nothing to say in his defense, he said. Wheeler, who has been on the force five years, spoke of the charge as the first brought against them. He recognized the gravity of the offense, but explained that their feet had become very wet, and they had gone into the place to dry themselves, and had drowsed away in the warmth. They had not been there more than twenty minutes, he said, and the step of the sergeant awakened them immediately. The board retired to consider the case, and then announced that, in view of the fact that both men were up for the first time, and that both the sergeant and superintendent had spoken well of their general behavior, they would be fined thirty days' pay, instead of being dismissed from the force. Had either man had a previous charge against him, President McGuire said, he would have been dismissed.

Charles Ware and Charles Leubking were charged with drinking and acting in a boisterous manner with women and men in a house while on duty. Ware did not appear at the board's office, and as it was considered advisable to try both men at the same time, the trial was postponed to Wednesday morning at 8:30 o'clock.

A charge against Newton Jackson of using profanity and acting in an unbelieving manner in arresting a North Indianapolis barber was referred to the superintendent.—Indianapolis News, March 17.

* * *

The resignation of Patrolman Henry Dushong was not accepted by the board of public safety last night, but the record was made to show that he was dismissed for neglect of duty. Superintendent Colbert reported that Dushong had been ordered to appear at the Chandler & Taylor company shops at 4:30 o'clock Saturday afternoon, and had failed to appear either there or at 6 o'clock roll call, his excuse being that he had made an arrest and was "hunting witnesses." The superintendent had suggested that obeying orders was more important than "hunting witnesses," and said that Dushong had better not appear before the board whereupon the man resigned.

Simon J. Guntz, democrat, was appointed to fill the place of Dushong, also a democrat. Guntz was among the patrolmen appointed under the Denny administration, who were dismissed for "inefficiency" when Mayor Taggart assumed charge. President Maguire murmured something last night about Guntz's dismissal being a "mistake;" that he was "really a very good officer, let go by an oversight more than anything else." He was "reinstated." The records at the board's office show that, among other patrolmen dismissed for "inefficiency" on October 29, were George Tomlinson and Timothy Mackessy. These men were ordered on February 7 to report to the superintendent, and in the month Tomlinson worked nineteen days and Mackessy nine days. No great noise was made about it at the time. The superintendent says they were employed temporarily when extra men were needed, on account of burglaries.

Patrolman Kiefer was on trial last night charged with being drunk while on duty. Superintendent Colbert said that at about 7 o'clock on the night following St. Patrick's day it had been reported to him that Kiefer was seen to stagger and fall in front of the Commercial block, at Kentucky avenue and Washington street. Captain Dawson and Sergeant Schwab were sent to the block where Kiefer rooms to investigate. They arrived at about 8 o'clock, and found him stupid from intoxication. Kiefer had been sent that day to escort the Chandler & Taylor men home, and was off duty at 6 o'clock. He brought four witnesses—John Meadows, George W. Budd, Thomas Mack and Thomas Long—to show that he had not been intoxicated while on duty. They all saw him at 5 o'clock, and shortly after, and said that he was perfectly sober. It was a wet, snowy day. His defense was that he had slipped on the snow. His feet were wet, he said, and after reaching his room he had taken two glasses of whisky and some quinine to prevent taking a cold. He denied drinking any during the day. President Maguire said that the board was inclined to believe him to some extent, and fined him ten days' pay.

One of Kiefer's witnesses, it chanced, was Thomas Long, a striking molder, under charge of conspiracy in the Saturday night riot, and released on $2,000 bond. He had seen Kiefer escorting the non-union men on Wednesday night.

"What is your occupation?" asked President Maguire.

"I'm not working now; I'm a striker," said Long.

Mr. Maguire laughed. "I suppose you were watching Kiefer escorting your friends. I suppose you call them your friends."

"Oh, yes, they are my friends," replied Long.

"You were not in the riot Saturday night?"

"Well, I was there," replied Long with a laugh, "but I wasn't taking part. I tried to keep the men back."

"Just a peaceful citizen trying to prevent trouble," suggested Maguire.

"Yes, sir; just a peaceful citizen," replied Long.—Indianapolis News, March 24.

* * *

Patrolman Henry Kiefer was dismissed from the police force by the board of safety last night for sleeping when he should have been on duty. Last Saturday Kiefer did not appear at the corner of Washington and Illinois streets to relieve crossing Patrolman Lund at the noon hour. Sergeant Lowe, by instructions of Superintendent Colbert, hunted for Kiefer, and found him sleeping in his room. He pleaded guilty, and permission was granted him to speak. He said it was his habit to go to his room to read the paper while he was resting at noon. He unintentionally fell asleep while reading last Saturday. The records of the board showed that Kiefer had been charged with lapse of duty twice before, once last August, when he failed to report to the police station by telephone, and again last March, when he was charged by the superintendent with being drunk. He was fined three days' pay for the first and ten days' for the last offense.—Indianapolis Journal, June 18.

* * *

The board of safety yesterday came to the conclusion that ex-Superintendent Powell did not recommend the discharge of members of the police force simply for political reasons. While Mr. Powell was superintendent he recommended that George H. Thomas, a democrat, be discharged because he drank too much liquor for a policeman. Shortly after the present board came in power Thomas was reappointed, but now it has been discovered that the action of the other board was taken for good reasons, and on the recommendation of Superintendent Colbert and the certificate of the police surgeon, that Thomas is suffering from alcoholism, he was dismissed.

Timothy Mackessey, a democrat, who was dismissed from the force, was reappointed.

N. J. Hoffbauer, John Johnson, James Recker, M. Mahoney, W. L. Cox, N. Jackson and D. B. Keplinger, patrolmen, were notified to appear before the board to-morrow afternoon at 4 o'clock. The board very delicately worded the notice. It states that those men who are given to an overindulgence in the fiery fluid and other indiscretions, which are not specifically set out, shall appear to be cautioned against allowing their appetites and inclinations to carry them too rapidly in the pace that kills. In this connection it was also ordered that in the future when patrolmen are reported sick by the police surgeon and the illness was not caused by the discharge of their duties, or, as more specifically stated by the board, when members are reported off duty on account of dissipation, they shall receive no pay during the time they are off.

Some time ago Patrolman Mulhall was tried on the charge of intoxication. He claimed to have been sick at the time and not drunk. Yesterday the board decided to dismiss the case, after having had it under advisement since the trial.—Indianapolis Journal, April 22.

The board of public safety met last night and disposed of a variety of business. Charges in two different cases against Patrolman George Dilts were disposed of. In the first case David Fesler, a McCarty street saloon keeper charged Dilts with intoxication. He stated on the stand that Dilts was in the habit of drinking in his saloon, and that on one occasion he had come in the place badly under the influence of liquor. On another occasion Dilts had caused him to open the saloon on Sunday night in order that he (Dilts) might be given a drink. This testimony in regard to the specific case of Dilts's intoxication was corroborated by Leo Cornett, a bookkeeper for the Indianapolis Gas Company. Superintendent Colbert testified that Dilts had the reputation of being overfond of liquor, but that he had never seen him under the influence.

In behalf of Dilts several sergeants and patrolmen who were well acquainted with him stated that they had never seen him under the influence of liquor, and his superior officers gave him the best of reputation as an officer. It also developed that there might have been more or less spite work in the charges. Dilts had reported Fesler to the superintendent for allowing card playing in the saloon, and from that time Fesler had tried to have Dilts removed from that beat, and a short time ago Dilts was removed. The board concluded that on account of the enmity that Fesler seemed to have for Dilts the charges could not be given full weight, although it was apparent that Dilts was too free with drinking. He was cautioned not to let such a thing occur again. He was also discharged in the other case with a caution.—Indianapolis Journal, May 21.

* * *

Sergeant Jas. O. Mefford yesterday pleaded guilty to the charge of intoxication while in full uniform and the board of safety allowed him to resign and then dropped the case against him. The charges were preferred by Captain Quigley, who is acting superintendent in the absence of Mr. Colbert. Mefford had been on the police force seven years, and this is only the second time charges of any kind were ever preferred against him. He was charged with drunkenness by Superintendent Powell, but the charges were not sustained. Some time ago another officer appeared in an intoxicated condition at the police station. He was not hauled before the board. He is a democrat.

This leaves a vacancy to be filled by a republican. During the conversation as to the qualifications of the men on the force and the time they had been on, Captain Quigley mentioned the fact that Michael Rafferty is the oldest man on the force and during his twenty years' service had never been charged with a single infraction of the rules of the department, even of the smallest degree. He was also spoken of as a man who never takes a drink of any kind of liquor under any circumstances. The board looked with favor upon him as a successor to Sergeant Mefford, but decided to wait until Superintendent Colbert returns before making an appointment. All persons were unanimous in expressing their belief that Rafferty should be the new sergeant.—Indianapolis Journal, May 13.

* * *

(The board appointed William Scheigert as police sergeant to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Sergeant Mefford.)

* * *

The board of public safety this morning restored ex-Sergeant James O. Mefford, who was permitted to resign May 12, to a position on the police force in the ranks. It was the feeling that Mefford's fall was entirely out of harmony with his general gentlemanly bearing and due to an unfortunate circumstance. He was appointed to fill the vacancy caused by the dismissal of patrolman Kiefer.

Timothy O'Connor was severely reprimanded for sundry little breaches of discipline as a patrolman. He left his district without leave recently. He pleaded guilty, but explained that he was hunting witnesses.—Indianapolis News, June 5.

* * *

Superintendent Colbert has sent the board of safety a communication preferring charges of neglect of duty against officers Joseph Beatty and Louis Sheridan, both of whom were found asleep in the West Washington street engine-house yesterday morning at 3 o'clock by Sergeant Crane.—Indianapolis Journal, June 8.

* * *

Superintendent Colbert yesterday suspended Patrolman D. B. Caplinger for leaving his district without permission. Caplinger has been running the eleventh district. Saturday he made his telephone call twice from telephones outside his district.—Indianapolis Journal, June 13.

* * *

Charles Bunnell, patrolman, handed in his resignation this morning. Bunnell took this action on account of charges of cowardice that had been preferred against him, and which were to have been investigated by the board. It is alleged that a man named George Shipman got into a fight with another man Wednesday night, and Bunnell was sent for. He was told to arrest Shipman, but when he started toward him, Shipman threatened to lick him if he came too near, and said: "You'd better sneak out of this."—Indianapolis News, July 18, 1896.

THE STREET DEPARTMENT.

Some of the republicans who have not been able, they say, to secure work on the streets for themselves and teams are insisting that the man without a "pull" stands a poor show of getting employment. This Street Commissioner Herpick denies. He says he never asks a man's politics. He only insists that the man shall be able to do the work for which he is paid, and that he live in this city.

"I have put men on at the request of Mr. Burns, at the request of Mr. Brennan, at the request of Mr. Stuckmeyer, Councilman Cooper (who is a republican) and at the request of some of the other councilman, but the whole number is small.—Indianapolis News, May 22.

* * *

A glance at the pay rolls of the street department for the last three months and then a glance at the streets of the city seems to point to the fact that the city will really lose nothing by giving the employes in the street department a half holiday on Saturday, or, for that matter, a whole holiday every day in the week.

There are enough men on the rolls and they draw enough money to keep the streets in a good condition at all times. Many of the streets which were cleaned (?), according to the ideas of the ward heelers who have the work in charge, during the last month now look as if they had not seen a scraper in seventeen years. There has been almost twice as much money spent in this department since February 1 this year as was spent last year in the same time. The weekly pay rolls of the street department for labor for the same period of both years, as recorded in the office of the board of works, are as follows:

	1896.		1895.
February 7.....	$558	February 8.....	$10
February 14.....	238	February 15.....	16
February 21.....	173	February 22.....	15
February 28.....	142	March 1.....	57
March 6.....	319	March 9.....	173
March 13.....	481	March 23.....	149
March 20.....	162	March 30.....	417
March 27.....	457	April 6.....	679
April 3.....	1,380	April 13.....	844
April 10.....	1,386	April 20.....	976
April 17.....	2,137	April 27.....	1,114
April 24.....	2,040
Total.....	$8,473	Total.....	$4,450

In this table the week ending March 16, 1895, has been missed in copying the amounts from the records, but the week before the pay roll amounted to $173, and the week following it had dropped to $149, so that even if $175 were added to the total for 1895 it would make only $4,625 for the three months, which is a little more than half what was paid this year for the same time, and there are few people who find their streets in as good condition as they were a year ago.—Indianapolis Journal, April 29.

* * *

Thomas Collier, a foreman on a street repair gang in the employ of the city, was arrested yesterday on the charge of embezzlement. The charge was preferred by Street Commissioner Herpick, after an investigation held in the mayor's office. It seems that John Keefe, one of the laborers under Collier, informed Mayor Taggart that his name had been used to "pad" the pay roll, and that he had divided the money thus received with Collier.

Keefe was called to the mayor's office yesterday morning and he made a full confession of his part in the transaction and put it in the form of an affidavit. He says that he was in the employ of Collier and that last week he was sick and did not work for three and a half days; that he was placed on the pay roll for a full week's time, and when he drew the $4.90 which he had not earned he gave Collier $1.50.

Information was received that Wm. Lyons was also used as a means of drawing upon the city treasury, and he was sent for. He denied all charges, however. The street commissioner believes he has three or four other instances where Collier padded the rolls in this manner, and that the evidence will be forthcoming at the proper time to convict him. Instances during the past three weeks are cited, though without any specific statement as to the amount of the peculations.

The fact that it was possible for a person occupying the subordinate position of that held by Collier to open such a pipe line as he may have opened to the city treasury was commented on with considerable surprise by persons who have been familiar with the affairs of the city during the past few years. It seemed strange that a foreman of a street repair gang should have the opportunity to make out a pay roll which should go to the comptroller for payment without any sort of auditing or checking by the street commissioner that would detect padding. Under an ordinarily safe and conservative method of business, it was believed, the street commissioner should have discovered any fraud that might have been perpetrated.—Indianapolis Journal, May 19.

* * *

Thomas Collier, ex-foreman of the democratic street-repair gang, was bound over to the grand jury by Justice Nickerson yesterday for presenting a fraudulent claim to the city controller. He was unable to furnish a bond for $500 and was sent to jail. Lyons, the principal witness against Collier, could not be found, and Justice Nickerson was informed that he left this city for St. Louis Sunday night. James Moriarity, a subforeman under Collier, gave the most damaging testimony. He cited a number of instances in which Collier had allowed Lyons and John Keefe full time when they were not working. One week early in May the gang was sent to do work at the Ray street bridge. Before anything was done the entire gang, Lyons and Keefe among the others, were laid off. The next day Moriarity and two other men worked spreading gravel. Lyons and Keefe did no work, but received the regular pay. On the cross-examination conducted by Collier's attorney, Moriarity testified that he was positive that neither man worked, as they were both in his gang under him as subforeman.

John Keefe testified that he worked nine hours during the week ending May 14. For this work he received $4.90 from the controller upon a voucher issued by Collier, witness said. Keefe sought to screen Collier, saying that the latter had allowed him pay for days he had not worked through charitable motives. Keefe said that he was sick and was in destitute circumstance. In the next breath, in answer to a question propounded by the prosecutor, Keefe admitted that he had given $2 of the $4.90 to Collier. When asked if he had ever given Collier money before that time Keefe replied that he gave him $1 once.

"What did you give it to him for?" asked the prosecutor.

"Well, Collier was a good friend of mine. He and I went into a saloon to get a drink. I was flush that day and gave him $1. He did not ask me for it."

No evidence was introduced in Collier's defense. A large contingent of his democratic friends and supporters from Irish hill were in the court room, clamoring for his release on his own recognizance. Collier and his friends claim that subforeman James Moriarity was an applicant for Collier's place, and that he had been actuated by spite and jealousy in making the charges against his superior.—Indianapolis Journal, May 23.

THE WORK-HOUSE.

The fight for places at the disposal of the county commissioners has assumed such proportions that in some instances considerable ill feeling has been engendered. There is almost a mob about the offices all the time, and when the place-hunters make room it is to give their friends a chance to speak in their behalf. The "old guard" is camping on the grounds early and late. It is charged that some of them do not go home to dinner and have their suppers sent to them. The "heelers" and "pullers" who are seen at all the primaries and in the conventions are there holding up plates for anything that will fall into them. When a stranger appears there is a rush for him, and the question "What are you after?" is hurled at him.

The struggles which Mayor Denny passed through when he took his office the last time is no more to be compared with the present struggle than is a game of lawn tennis to be compared with a foot-ball contest.

The commissioners have different views. Geer wants Harry Wheatley appointed superintendent of the work-house, and some of Wheatley's opponents declare that it was because Geer and Wheatley were in the army together, and not because of any fitness on the part of Wheatley for the position. J. W. Hess, who was the principal backer of Geer in the convention declares Wheatley not fit for the place, and insists that Fisher, street commissioner under the Denny administration, must have the appointment. Opponents of both men are talking about "fossils," and insisting that younger men who will maintain discipline at the institution be appointed.—Indianapolis News, Nov. 29.

* * *

The board of county commissioners, with County Attorney Hovey, yesterday investigated the work-house affray. The investigation revealed the fact that Graham, in shooting at Adams exceeded his authority at least in one particular. The rules of the institution require the guards to report the disobedience of a prisoner to the superintendent. Guards are not expected to take the authority of punishment upon themselves. Graham admits that he went into Adams's cell on his own authority, and without consulting the superintendent. All of those who had anything to do with the trouble were examined by the board.

Taylor Johns, a cell boss, was an eye-witness to the affair and told what he knew. He said that Adams refused to get into the barber chair, and he informed guard Graham, who went to the cell-house and ordered Adams to obey. The latter came out of his cell, and the guard pushed him toward the chair. Adams turned on Graham and the latter struck him twice with his mace. Graham then drew his revolver and shot as Adams continued to advance. Adams tried to get hold of a piece of gas pipe as Graham shot. Johns said the guard lowered the muzzle of the pistol before he fired.

Graham testified that the prisoner tried to strike him. He drew his revolver as a bluff, but Adams continued to come toward him, and he shot to scare the prisoner. After the shooting Adams got into the barber's chair, but insisted that he had been shot.

Adams, the victim, said that when he was brought back to the workhouse after his escape, the first of the month, he was wearing heavy clothing. When he exchanged his garments for the prison garb he took a heavy cold. All last week he was sick, and for two days prior to last Friday he was not eating anything. He refused to have his mustache taken off because there were other prisoners who were not clean-shaven. Graham, he said, called him out of his cell, and, with an oath, struck him half a dozen times with his mace. Graham declared he would show him who was boss and would break him in if he had to shoot him. Graham then told Kinney, the barber, to step aside, and then he fired. The ball passed through Adams's trousers, but did not enter the flesh.

At noon yesterday, when the prisoners marched into the dining room, there were fourteen men with mustaches in line. Assistant Superintendent Schooley said that since the shooting he had discontinued the shaving in cases where prisoners were unwilling to submit to it.—Indianapolis News, March 18.

* * *

Charles F. Adams, footpad and desperado, sentenced to one year in the work-house on December 24, 1895, escaped from there on the night of February 20. He was captured in Pittsburg and returned on March 10. Now he has again escaped. He has been gone since last Friday, but the news of the escape has been suppressed. The prisoner bore the reputation of being a desperate man. His first escape was effected by sawing through his cell and also through the outer windows, through which he and his companion made their escape by means of ropes woven out of the prison blankets. After his return, Adams refused to work, and was unruly. During his sojourn in Pittsburg he had grown a mustache, which he refused to allow the prison barber to shave off. Edward Graham, a guard, went to the prisoner's cell, and finding his orders disobeyed, after some talk drew his revolver and shot at the prisoner. The workhouse authorities tried to suppress the facts in this case, but they came to light, and, after an investigation, the guard, Graham, was discharged.

Information that Adams had again escaped came to the News this morning. A reporter went to the work-house, saw Superintendent Wheatley, and asked to see the prisoner, Charles F. Adams.

"Now look here," said Mr. Wheatley, "I want to tell you—Adams had escaped—you know that don't you?"

"How did he escape?"

"Well, it was through the negligence of one of the guards."

"Which guard?"

"I don't want to say."

"Is he still employed here?"

"Yes, you see I have not the power to discharge him even if I wanted to. I'll tell you, I reported this whole matter to the county commissioners and to the police, and the superintendent of police told me to keep it quiet so that they might have a chance to catch the man. It's my opinion that he'll be a difficult man to catch again. I thought that if we kept it quiet we might have a better chance."

"When did he escape, and how?"

"I'll tell you all about it. It was on Friday, at the noon hour. He had two balls and a chain on him, for we knew him to be a desperate man. He was working with the gang in the stone shed. There was about fifty men there, I guess. It seems that he had found some way in getting rid of his manacles, and when the men were lined up for dinner Adams got behind a screen in the stone shed and the guard marched off and left him there."

"How many guards are there in the stone shed?"

"Two."

"Who are they?"

"Charles Barr and Al Kerr. One of the guards goes outside the shed with a gun when the men are lined up for dinner, the other one lines the men up and marches them in."

"Does he count the men under his charge?"

"He is supposed to."

"Who was the inside guard?"

"Charles Barr. He is the one that is responsible for the escape. Of course we did not know he was gone until we came back after dinner, and then we found the balls and chains behind the screen. I hope the newspapers won't be too hard on me. I was in no way responsible for this. It was all the negligence of the guard. If he'd have used ordinary care and counted his men it could never have happened."

"Are you not able to maintain discipline out here?"

"Well, I try to, but a man can't be everywhere at once."

"What about the prisoner who was released Sunday, June 21, and for whom you swore out a warrant on Monday?"

"Oh, you've heard of that, have you? Well, he was John Davis, a colored prisoner. He was discharged last Sunday after serving a sentence of twenty-five days. I made him a 'trusty' and he was hall boy. It seems that he got down through a grating here in the hall and got into the clothes room. He stole a good suit of clothes belonging to another prisoner named Harry West. It seems that Davis took the clothes and hid them. Then when he was discharged he went and got them and carried them away. As you know, I swore out a warrant for his arrest, and I bought the prisoner, Harry West, a brand new suit of clothes, as good or better than the ones he lost."

"Have you had any more prisoners escape lately?"

"No—o-o, not escaped. There was a man tried to get away the week before last. His name was Fred Williams. I was walking around on the outside of the fence when Williams broke and ran. He ran up to within ten feet of me, and then I pulled my gun and halted him and made him climb over the fence. He didn't get away, though."

"How is it that none of these facts about the institution and its management have become known?"

"I don't know. I reckon we didn't think it would do any good to tell 'em around."—Indianapolis News, June 22.

* * *

James Ward, a pickpocket, who was serving a long sentence in the work-house for snatching a woman's pocket-book at the Schnull fire, has been gone from the institution since April. He is No. 9 of the known escaped list. Ward was at work whitewashing. When his day's work was done he hid behind a pile of lumber and forgot to return to his cell, and the guards forgot to see whether he was there. It is argued that there are still some prisoners at the work-house, for the telephone is generally answered by a voice which says, "I'm one of the prisoners."

A News reporter called at the county commissioners' court to-day to make the announcement that a prisoner had escaped from the work-house, and to ask what they intended to do about it. The commissioners were absent, but Superintendent Wheatley of the work-house, happened to be present.

"Oh yes," said the superintendent, cheerfully, "you want to ask about Jimmy Ward, the pickpocket who got away. That's no new case. You had that a month ago. You newspapers want to make out that a good many prisoners get away from us, and only three have got away in a month."

"Didn't two women get away the other day? Haven't you lost nine prisoners in the last three weeks?"

"Yes, two women got away. I wasn't thinking of the women. Do I know how many prisoners are there now? Yes, I do; there are 138."—Indianapolis News, July 8.

* * *

Sixteen is the number of escapes from the workhouse since January 22. In this number one man—Adams—is counted twice, but he escaped twice. Another one is a crazy man who simply ran away while in charge of Assistant Superintendent Schooley. He only had one day to serve. The full list of escaped prisoners, as brought out in the testimony before the county commissioner yesterday, is as follows, an asterisk following the name indicating that they were recaptured: James Kirby (crazy), January 22; Otto Williams,* February 18; Charles Adams* and Harry Williams,* February 20; James Ward, April 22; George Miller, May 10; Edward Johnson, May 17; William Hamilton, May 24; Andrew Allen,* May 24; Joseph Collins, June 4; Joseph Hagen, June 7; George Bogert, June 10; Charles Adams, June 19; Arthur Boyd,* June 21; Eliza Allen* and Nina Farington,* July 4. This is sixteen escapes, with nine of them still at large.

Yesterday afternoon the county commissioners made an investigation of the numerous escapes. It seems quite evident from the testimony taken, and this is the opinion of Commissioner Reinecke and possibly of Commissioner Harding, that in at least one case there must have been some connivance by those in charge, either a trusty or a guard, or the escape would have been impossible. This is the case of Bogert.—Indianapolis News, July 10.

* * *

After considering the evidence taken Thursday at the work-house in regard to the escape of prisoners, the board of county commissioners yesterday made the following entry on their records:

"Having heard the evidence of the various witnesses relative to the recent escapes from the work-house, and being advised in the premises, the board finds that the affairs of that institution have been honestly conducted by the officers in charge; and that, in the main, the officers have been vigilant and careful in guarding against escapes from the institution. The board, however, finds that in the cases of Adams and Williams bad judgment was exercised in making them cell-bosses and thereby furnishing them the opportunity of which they took advantage to make their escape. In the case of Ward poor judgment was exercised in making him a trusty for outside work. As to the other escapes, the board finds the officers of the institution blameless, and as to the two or three other cases of escapes of prisoners other than trusties the board finds that whatever carelessness may be attributed to any one must be attributed to the guards having charge of such prisoners. In accordance with this, there will be some reprimands and the matter will end."—Indianapolis News, July 11.

THE JAIL.

Whit Starr escaped from the Marion county jail some time during Thursday night. His escape was so carefully planned and the work necessary to accomplish it so successfully carried out that he was not missed until yesterday morning when the prisoners were let out of their cells for exercise in the corridor within the cage. It was then noticed that Starr was not among the number, and an investigation disclosed that he was gone and that he might have been gone long enough to have got entirely out of the state.

Sheriff Womack said last evening that Starr's escape was due wholly to the carelessness of jailer Mounts. "I give instructions repeatedly that the doors are to be opened only one at a time, and when the trustees go in to sweep they are supposed to be locked in until they finish one department and then admitted to another. If this is done the jailer sees every door opened and closed and knows just who goes through them.

Then if anybody escapes he must go through barriers that it is simply impossible for anybody to go through."

"Will you discharge Mounts?"

"I can't say yet. I intend to investigate further and lay the blame where it belongs."

Mr. Womack continued: "If I had had my way about Starr he would have been in Michigan City long ago. He was sentenced June 8 or 9, and I intended taking him to prison the same day, but was instructed by Judge McCray to keep him here until Governor Matthews could act on a petition to have him sent to Jeffersonville instead of Michigan City. His friends made a plea that he was suffering with consumption and that he would die if sent to Michigan City. I held him, and then Corriden, one of Starr's pals, was convicted, and I wanted to take Starr north with him, but Judge McCray said to hold him a while longer. The Judge assured me that I would not have to hold him longer than the 25th, and it seems that the Judge was right, for it was the 25th that Starr left.—Indianapolis Journal, June 27.

* * *

Sheriff Womack has made the suspension of jailor Harry Mounts permanent and has appointed in his place Harry Earp. Mr. Womack said he had made a thorough investigation of the escape of Whit Starr and could find nothing but the carelessness of Mounts to account for it. "If he had used common care or had followed instructions the escape could never have been effected, said Womack. "It is an offense for which no excuse can be offered and for which there is no atonement."

Concerning other charges which have been made against Mounts, Mr. Womack had nothing to say. He did not make the charges himself and does not believe there is any truth in them.—June 30.

* * *

Mrs. Charles Genther has been appointed matron of the county jail. The appointment is made by Sheriff Womack, who will pay her a salary of $10 a week out of his own pocket. He has been trying for a long time to induce the county commissioners to make the appointment, but never succeeded. The importance of having a matron at the jail has been emphasized recently by complaints which have been made by women confined in the jail. The new matron will have charge of the keys to the women's department, and no one will be permitted to enter unless she is present.—Indianapolis Journal, June 30.

Colonel Weaver, Whit Star's partner, said: "If you want to know the truth about it, I'll tell you. Star sneaked out when the door was left open for the sweepers. He was hiding in the machinery box and was not in the cage at all. After he had got one bar sawed, he came out of the corridor and came up here. If he had not been able to get out of the window he would have rapped Harry Mounts on the head with a hammer, and he'd have got the keys and have taken me out too. I'm only sorry that I wasn't down there with him. I'd be gone now." Weaver laughed at the sheriff, and made fun of the escape, saying: "You'll catch him, I bet! Why you fellows couldn't catch a bad cold in winter time!"—Indianapolis News, June 26.

A JUDGE.

The Rev. Dr. C. H. Parkhurst is dissatisfied with the outcome of the trial of Cornelius B. Parker, who has been called "the policy king." The case was tried last week before City Judge Rufus B. Cowing in the court of general sessions. The judge discharged the jury, which stood ten to two for conviction after it had considered a verdict for two hours.

The Society for the Prevention of Crime, of which Dr. Parkhurst is president, was much interested in the trial of Parker, against whose system of policy shops its agents had accumulated much evidence. During the trial of Parker, Chief Detective Dennett of the society keenly watched the proceedings, and it appears that his reports to Dr. Parkhurst prompted the clergyman to criticise Judge Cowing's methods.

At the trial two agents of the Society for the Prevention of Crime were ordered from the court, and Dr. Parkhurst maintains that they were orderly, and that what was done to them was simply smiting the society. Exception is taken to the action of the court in shortening the plea for the people by Assistant District Attorney O'Hare, and Dr. Parkhurst is of the opinion that Judge Cowing should have endeavored to compel a unanimous and satisfactory verdict by the jury, especially as one of the two who favored acquittal was wavering.—New York Times, May 5.

* * *

Judge Cowing's recent appointment of his son to a snug berth in the court in which he is judge, and his dismissal of three old and tried court attendants in order to make room for his son, are denounced even by Judge Cowing's Tammany friends as one of the worst cases of nepotism that has yet occurred in those courts.—New York Evening Post, May 5.

* * *

It is most unfortunate for Judge Cowing that his unusual course in discharging the jury in the Parker case should have been followed so quickly by a plea of guilty from Parker. He discharged the jury after it had been in consultation only two hours, and when it stood eleven to one for conviction, taking the ground that the evidence was not such as to make an agreement for conviction probable. When Parker was asked to plead to a similar indictment before another judge, he pleaded guilty, and was let off with a fine of $500. He was known as the "policy king," and his business was the backing of policy gambling houses, an occupation which has for years been intimately associated with politics, and hence, under the old police regime, was strongly protected by "pulls."—New York Evening Post.

MUNICIPAL REFORM.

Mr. Albert Shaw's study of the city government of St. Louis is especially opportune in the June Century. He had already shown in his two volumes how far British and continental cities have advanced beyond us in the solution of the problem how to make life in a city decent and attractive. He now shows how far St. Louis has gone ahead of other American cities in the achievement of home rule, in the employment of experts in certain city offices, and in a phenomenal freedom from charges of official corruption. Particularly is St. Louis to be congratulated on having partially, at least, thrown off the shackles of ward representation. There are, however, some features of the corporate life of St. Louis which prove that its citizens have not yet altogether emerged from the national stupidity and supineness in the treatment of civic affairs. They still, for instance, accept a clean sweep in offices with each change of administration as part of the providential order of human affairs.

* * *

I want to say something about the offices of county commissioner and township trustee. There is need of a radical change in the laws governing those offices. These offices are not supposed to pay much, but men bribe voters and pack conventions to get them. When the commissioner once gets in he is hard to dislodge, if he is devoid of scruples. He uses his office to perpetuate his hold. One of his main levers is the free gravel roads. He has the appointment of superintendents to take care of the roads. These superintendents are told if they want to hold their job that they must hustle for votes. They tell others that if they will go to the primaries and work for the incumbent they will get their share of the gravel hauling. "No vote, no work." This species of bribery should cease. These men, after repeated success, become intolerant, indolent and impudent, and conclude they are absolutely boss.

When one bridge company gets all the contracts for ten years, is this fact not suspicious? On the 20th of this month the commissioners of this county were to get a job of masonry, costing about $2,500, and a bridge costing anywhere from $900 to $1,000. A young man who had learned his trade, and could give any bond required, wanted to bid on the masonry and excavation. But he was informed, with much vehemence, that it was too small a business to be let in two contracts; that it would be let as a whole, and that while it was supposed that two feet below the bed of the stream would be sufficient for a starting point, whoever did the work would have to guess at the dirt to be moved and the stone necessary, and no stone was to be laid till a clay was reached, if it was two or twenty feet; that it would not be let by the yard or perch.

The young man could not make an honest, square bid because he was not rich enough to own a bridge foundry, and not willing to gamble with the county on the amount of dirt he would have to move or the stone it would require. It was hinted by the bridge and stone men who had come to bid on this work that the cause of this unreasonable and absurd demand was that a favorite bridge company had been to see about it.—Cartersburg (Ind.) Letter to Indianapolis News.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

VOL. II, No. 42.

INDIANAPOLIS, AUGUST, 1896.

TERMS: { One dollar per annum.
10 cents per copy.

"I do not believe that at the time when the agitation for civil service reform began there was any evil or abuse in the government an attack on which seemed so hopeless, and yet this evil has disappeared within one generation. I cite it as an illustration of the danger of error of treating any democratic failure as permanent or hopeless, or denying to any democratic society the capacity and determination to remedy its own defects in some direction or other by some means or other. No society in our time is willing to deteriorate openly, or ever does so long, without struggling for salvation"—Mr. Godkin, in the Atlantic Monthly for July.

Published monthly. Publication office, No. 23 N. Meridian St., Indianapolis, Ind. Address,
THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.
Indianapolis, Ind.

WE ARE OPPOSED TO LIFE TENURE IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE. WE FAVOR APPOINTMENTS BASED UPON MERIT, FIXED TERMS OF OFFICE, AND SUCH AN ADMINISTRATION OF THE CIVIL SERVICE LAWS AS WILL AFFORD EQUAL OPPORTUNITIES TO ALL CITIZENS OF ASCERTAINED FITNESS.—Platform, National Convention of Looters, Chicago, July, 1896.

WHAT WE OPPOSE IN THAT PLANK IS THE LIFE TENURE WHICH IS BEING BUILT UP AT WASHINGTON, WHICH EXCLUDES FROM PARTY REPRESENTATION IN THE BENEFITS THE HUMBLER MEMBERS OF OUR SOCIETY.—Bryan's Interpretation.

W. W. Durbin, chairman of the State committee, who had boarded the train at Lima, insisted on Mr. Bryan saying a few words at Ada, where he delivered the commencement oration at the Normal university last year. He left his breakfast and Prof. H. S. Lehr, president of the university, introduced the candidate as the next president. Mr. Bryan was received with cheers and said:

Ladies and Gentlemen—While I have not been speaking much on this trip I can not withstand the temptation to say a word here. The words so kindly spoken by Prof. Lehr, you will remember, are not thought of since the nomination. He is one of the original Bryan men. When I was here a year ago he was a Bryan man. I think he wanted you to become acquainted with me, so if you wanted post-offices you would know where to come to get them. I am not distributing postoffices yet, but I hope to be before very long. (Applause.) I remember with a great deal of pleasure this city and the students here of the university, and I hope they will become students of the money question and be prepared to take their part in this fight. I thank you. (Great applause.)—Mr. Bryan, at Ada, August 10.

It assails the independence of the judiciary by the covert threat to reorganize the courts whenever their decisions contravene the decrees of the party caucus. It seeks to allure office-seekers and spoilsmen to its support by attacking the existing civil service laws, which good men of all parties have labored so long to establish, and to extend to all departments of the public service.—From the call of the National Democratic party, Chicago, August 17.

THE CIVIL SERVICE LAW WAS PLACED ON THE STATUTE BOOKS BY THE REPUBLICAN PARTY, WHICH HAS ALWAYS SUSTAINED IT, AND WE RE-NEW OUR REPEATED DECLARATIONS THAT IT SHALL BE THOROUGHLY AND HONESTLY ENFORCED AND EXTENDED WHEREVER PRACTICABLE.—From the Republican Platform, 1896.

"MR. CHAIRMAN, IF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY OF THIS COUNTRY IS PLEDGED TO ANY ONE THING MORE THAN ANOTHER, IT IS THE MAINTENANCE OF THE CIVIL SERVICE LAW AND TO ITS EFFICIENT EXECUTION—NOT ONLY THAT, BUT TO ITS ENLARGEMENT AND ITS FURTHER APPLICATION TO THE PUBLIC SERVICE.

"THE LAW THAT STANDS UPON OUR STATUTE BOOKS TO-DAY WAS PUT THERE BY REPUBLICAN VOTES. IT WAS A REPUBLICAN MEASURE. EVERY NATIONAL PLATFORM OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY, SINCE ITS ENACTMENT, HAS DECLARED NOT ONLY IN FAVOR OF ITS CONTINUANCE IN FULL VIGOR, BUT IN FAVOR OF ITS ENLARGEMENT SO AS TO APPLY MORE GENERALLY TO THE PUBLIC SERVICE. AND THIS, MR. CHAIRMAN, IS NOT ALONE THE DECLARATION AND PURPOSE OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY, BUT IT IS IN ACCORDANCE WITH ITS HIGHEST AND BEST SENTIMENT—AYE, MORE, IT IS SUSTAINED BY THE BEST SENTIMENT OF THE WHOLE COUNTRY, REPUBLICAN AND DEMOCRATIC ALIKE."—Mr. McKinley in Congress, April, 1890.

"The pledge of the republican national convention that our civil service laws shall be sustained and thoroughly and honestly enforced and extended wherever practicable is in keeping with the position of the party for the past twenty-four years and will be faithfully observed. Our opponents deery these reforms. They appear to be willing to abandon all the advantages gained after so many years' agitation and effort. They encourage a return to methods of party favoritism, which both parties have often denounced, that experience has condemned and that the people have repeatedly disapproved. The republican party earnestly opposes this reactionary and entirely unjustifiable policy. It will take no backward step on this question. It will seek to improve, but never degrade the public service.—From Mr. McKinley's Letter of Acceptance, August 27.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE greatly desires any numbers of the July issue not needed by the recipients.

WHAT we said of Mr. Bryan last month is fully borne out by later events. Scarcely any man in American public life has shown such contempt for the moral sentiment of the people. The stupidest politician in the country would not have stood up before a crowd and said, "I am not distributing postoffices now, but I expect to be before long." He seems to be on a big moral drunk. There is no other way of accounting for his wild financial vagaries and his attempts to form classes and array them against other classes and to set section against section.

WITH regard to the civil service Bryan's attitude is unmistakable. He means to treat it in the same spirit in which Aldridge has treated the New York service. Everything that he has ever said about it is on the lowest plane. Before he was a candidate he wrote that "to discriminate against a portion of the party * * * is as indefensible as it would be to appoint members of another party to offices to which party is entitled." As we said last month, he has produced a grave situation. A reckless and unprincipled president can do an immense amount to wreck the system which it has taken more than twenty-five years to build up. He ought not to receive the vote of any civil service reformer in the United States. He is pandering to the coarsest spoilsmen and to every evil element. Let him have such votes and no others.

MR. MCKINLEY in his letter of acceptance is in the matter of the civil service fully up to the mark of the platform and even with his former record in congress. There is scarcely a shadow of doubt but that his election will lead to the complete and final development of the merit system. The full headway which that system now has will, under friendly guidance, carry it to the end. We may expect to see the fourth-class postoffices taken out of politics and a system established by which the higher postoffices shall come to be filled by promotions and transfers after the manner of the higher places in the railway mail service; and the same improvement will embrace the heads of other offices. Thus practically the entire federal service with its hundreds of thousands of places of all kinds will finally be transferred from the field of politics to the field of the wage earner. That means permanence of employment, fair pay, acquirement of homes, support of families, and education of children in a vast field and to a vast number where heretofore there has been only demeaning political service rewarded by places with the most uncertain tenure, subject to a rapid rotation and affording none of the benefits which are the reward of labor where labor has to depend only upon its faithfulness and efficiency. With Mr. Bryan all this would be changed again if we are to go by his platform and his words. The magnificent work of years would be wrecked and the whole service would be swept from the field of the wage-earner back to the field of spoils politics. He intends to do that. Will the American people let him? We do not believe it; but we say again there never was a time when every American who loves his country had more need to do his duty than he has now.

It is fitting that at this time there should be a memorial meeting of George William Curtis, such as has just been held at Ashfield, where Mr. Norton's address, printed in part elsewhere, was delivered. It will tend to make more stubborn the resistance to the attack upon the great work which Curtis did. It will help to unite all who worked under his leadership and all who now see or reap the benefits of that work. It will make them stand where they ought to stand, all on one side against the vicious and desperate onslaught which is being made on good government and public and private honor.

EVERY member of the classified service would do well to "size up" Mr. Bryan. He means them in his false reference to "life tenure," and he offers to them a defiance which they can not safely ignore. They now hold their places by the most democratic method of distribution known. That method, coupled with faithfulness and efficiency, means steady employment and good pay. A candidate for the highest office in a nation, whose talk and platform show him to be an all-round buccaneer now threatens them with loss of employment, of family support and of peace of mind. The way to avert such a disaster is by defeat at the polls. We notice that a few government clerks at Washington, in hopes of appeasing this vulgar and coarse spoilsman, go to his committee rooms and fold Bryan documents after their working hours. It will not avail. Service under the present administration is sure to bring down the Bryan revenge.

It is stated that in the recent dreadful heat in New York city the deaths among the little children were fewer than heretofore in a heated term. This was directly due to the clean streets made possible by Colonel Waring's taking that work out of politics.

ON August 17 Mr. Roosevelt, of the police board, invited young men to compete for 800 places in the police force of New York. We commend to Mayor Taggart what he says in the invitation to compete and suggest that Indianapolis should not follow the methods of Tammany longer, and that such an open competition for place to be given to the fittest would lessen the number of trials of policemen for sleeping on duty, drunkenness and other improper conduct so demoralizing to the Indianapolis force. Mr. Roosevelt says:

We need strong, intelligent young men of good character for the force. We have not sufficient applicants, and in order to fill the vacancies we should have at least twice as many as we are now getting. There probably never has been such a chance offered in New York for the employment of young men of good intelligence, of bodily vigor, and of good character. We desire all such to enter our examinations. If they pass them they will be admitted strictly on their merits and without regard to personal or political influence of any kind.

It must be remembered that not only residents of the city, but residents of the whole state, can apply if they wish. Skilled mechanics, clerks, laborers, hired men on farms, young fellows who have just left high school or academy and are better athletes than scholars, all these can come forward. The mental examinations are such that any man who has gone through our public schools can readily pass them. But we wish no man who has not a good character, and no man can pass the surgeons unless he is sound physically.

ELSEWHERE in the CHRONICLE are a number of extracts bearing upon politics in the schools of this country and the stand that should be taken by teachers and college men in the vital question of civil service reform. The Atlantic Monthly has had a notable series of articles on politics in the public schools. Dr. G. Stanley Hall thus sums up the result of the inquiry:

"Nowhere has there ever been, to my knowledge, so clear and forceful a presentation of the evils of subjecting schools to political officers who are nearly lowest in the scale of political preferment. It is worst of all when not only city and state superintendents, but even normal-school principals, must look to politics for a continuance in office. As long as this lasts appointment can not be wisely made, tenure is not by merit, and the value to the community of every dollar of school money is greatly depreciated. The moral influence of such a system is wholly bad, not only upon the community, but on every part of school work and on every person connected with it. It hurts the pupils most of all. The difference between a good and a fairly good teacher, to say nothing of a bad one, is incalculable, but, like all things of the soul, inappreciable to the general public. There are schools in my city, and other cities in my state, where I should prefer two years of schooling for a child of mine to four years in another school, where the public makes little or no discrimination."

PLATT'S officer, Aldridge, did not succeed in getting the nomination for governor in spite of his prostitution of his office, and in spite of the yells of his canal henchmen at the convention. Abe Gruber, who has been conducting a great "anti civil service" struggle without conspicuous success showed a clever understanding of Aldridge's backing in his story that Wicked Gibbs broke up an Aldridge procession at Saratoga by shouting "low bridge," "locks open" and the canalmen all broke ranks. We greatly hope that the Civil Service Reform Association will continue its disclosures of Aldridge's work and his jailbird appointees.

These must be mortifying days for Governor Morton. He was not blind when he made his Platt appointments. He deliberately sacrificed himself to practical politics, but all the same he must wince under the nasty disclosures regarding the man into whose hands he put the large sums entrusted to the superintendent of public works of the great state of New York.

And Mayor Strong should be feeling some of the picks of an uneasy conscience when he sees Mr. Roosevelt needlessly baffled and hindered in the struggle to thoroughly purge the police force by a politician on the same board given his place as a political reward. When will the good men in office learn that it not only is bad morals but bad politics to think to get on by appointments like Colonel Waring's, mixed in with Aldridge and his like.

A GREAT BOSS AND A GREAT RÔLE.

All readers of the CHRONICLE must have become curious over Pennsylvania. Two dynasties of bosses, the Camerons and Quay, seem to have paralyzed her moral forces and she has presented the strange spectacle of being passive and unresisting in the coils of these pythons. It seems a long while ago, so intent has been the interest in another struggle, that Quay's candidacy for the presidential nomination was soberly considered by the press of Pennsylvania and Judge, formerly Governor Beaver, soberly said in a New York interview that the republicans of Pennsylvania would support Quay for president heartily:

"As a Judge," he said, "I have no inclination and no time to indulge in political discussions. Senator Quay is a very much misunderstood man. It is generally supposed that he is merely a political organizer and manipulator, and cares for nothing else. On the contrary, he is a man of refinement, and is fond of literature and books. He has a fine library, and he would rather read a delightful book than attend a caucus. His devotion to Isaac Walton is exemplified in his piscatorial visits to the best fishing waters in the country. He is a clear and cogent writer, having once been the editor of a newspaper. True, he is not a great orator, but on any subject that he discusses he shows an intimate knowledge that interests and convinces."

* * *

It will be remembered that Quay had to suppress last year a formidable revolt instigated among others by his chief henchman Martin, boss of Philadelphia. The strength of this under-boss is indicated by the following:

The patronage of Philadelphia is something wonderful to contemplate. Mayor Warwick, who was nominated through the machinations of Dave Martin, over Quay's candidate, State Senator Penrose, has control of 16,000 appointments, a larger number, it is said, than is now at the disposal of the president of the United States since the general application of civil service that was made recently. "Dare" Martin, through Mayor Warwick, controls the street railway and other franchises of Philadelphia, which are valued at several millions every year.

Among other dogs of war let loose by Quay upon Martin, was the well-known device of a senate investigating committee. That is at first sight it seemed a dog of war, but later signs were that it was nothing but Quay's old dog Tray giving an occasional twitch and growl in his dreams. However, Quay crushed the revolt. But there are recent signs that he has not finished with the Philadelphia recreant henchman. We quote from City and State of August 13.

The testimony brought out by the inquiry of the senate investigating committee into the Mutual Automatic Telephone scandal, places two of the most influential political leaders of Philadelphia in a trying position. Mr. David Martin, who, after Mr. Quay, may be considered the most skillful republican politician of the state, who is supposed to have controlled at least 300 delegates at the convention which nominated Mayor Warwick, whose "matchless leadership" was declared by some to have played a very influential part in creating the enormous majority which made that gentleman our chief executive, who collects assessments at will from our city employes, and whose character has stood so high that no account of his stewardship in this regard has ever been required of him—is said, in the testimony of three sworn witnesses, to have been the holder of 1,525 shares of Automatic stock, and to have had a potent voice in the management of the company. This, notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Martin formerly testified under oath that the shares had been transferred to his name without his knowledge, and in spite of his refusal to subscribe for the stock.

* * *

Julian C. Gale, secretary to John B. Persch, promoter of the Mutual Automatic Telephone Company, was the most important witness wanted by the councilmanic committee, but heard for the first time before the senatorial committee. George A. Persch and William A. Persch, brothers of the promoter, also took the stand, giving important evidence and confirming the testimony of Secretary Gale. It was sworn that David Martin had the handling of the 6,000 shares of the company's stock which was alleged to have been used to bribe councils and secure the passage of the Mutual Automatic franchise. Gale testified that Mr. Martin had personal possession of the stock and returned it to the office, giving Gale instructions to divide it in smaller blocks. Of these blocks 1,525 shares were made out in the names of David Martin and Charles A. Porter personally, and, in addition, there were four blocks of 500 shares each, 25 blocks of 20 shares each, and 75 blocks of 6 shares each. These latter blocks were made out in Gale's name subject to his indorsement. He also swore that Mr. Martin received these blocks of shares in person after they had been registered by the Guarantee Trust Company. Later, two of the blocks, 500 shares each, were sent back to the office and divided into 50 blocks of 20 shares each. Gale said these were delivered to Mr. Martin in the republican city committee rooms. He also told how he and John P. Persch kept away from Philadelphia during the investigation. George A. Persch, who was employed in his brother's office, corroborated Gale's testimony and swore that David Martin paid him several sums of money at different times, varying in amounts from $17 to $40, to keep him away from Philadelphia during the councils' committee's investigation. These sums of money, Persch swore, were given to him by Mr. Martin at his residence or sent to him at New York through other parties. Charles E. Persch swore positively that David Martin had numerous interviews and was in constant communication with John P. Persch after the latter had fled from the city to escape the councilmanic investigation. He stated that Mr. Martin and John P. Persch had an interview in Trenton the day before Martin went on the witness stand. This testimony was in flat contradiction to Mr. Martin's sworn statement before councils' committee that he had not seen John P. Persch for several weeks and did not know where he was. A man named Atcheson told how he had been sent by Senator Porter to get a certificate for six shares of stock from the widow of Common Councilman White, who died about the time of the investigation. Outside of the testimony that Martin and Porter each received 1,525 shares of stock, there has been no evidence to show who were the persons who received the remainder of the 6,000 shares. It is believed that the blocks of six shares were intended for distribution in common council and the blocks of 20 in select. However, the committee adjourned without eliciting anything else of importance, and their work would have been of little actual effect if David Martin had not struck back as severe a blow as he himself received.

* * *

So far Quay has only appeared in the familiar rôle of a big boss, disciplining his henchmen, but there are signs that he meditates a great rôle that will place him high up among the grim humorists of all ages. He is apparently going to take Pennsylvania, strangled into helplessness and nervelessness by him and the Camerons, and thrust upon her a series of radical, vigorous and genuine reforms and then retire! Could any irony be more finished? He has announced his proposed retirement, and the Washington correspondent of the Buffalo Express says:

It is also Senator Quay's intention to have his reforms in state and municipal politics enacted into laws before he retires from the arena. He is deeply in earnest on this point, and when the legislature meets next winter, bills to carry out the reforms will be presented and enacted into laws.

The CHRONICLE has always had the fullest appreciation of the intellectual abilities of the great bosses, but Quay's plan, if carried out, will deserve another Milton to fittingly portray a companion to one of the greatest characters in Paradise Lost.

NEW YORK'S SPOILS AND SPOILSMEN.

The assault made yesterday afternoon upon John S. Bronk, chairman of the democratic county committee by William Kenneally, member of the committee from the second ward, illustrates the means by which State Superintendent of public works George W. Aldridge, the republican candidate for governor, has in the past controlled and now seeks to control the democratic organization of this city and county. Kenneally, who is an employee of the republican executive board, is one of the bullies that Aldridge depends upon to manipulate democratic caucuses in his interest. The occasion of the assault was the introduction of a resolution to prevent the interference of the Aldridge machine in the coming caucuses. Seeing the object of the resolution, Kenneally sprang to his feet, rushed up to Bronk, snatched the resolution from his hand, and gave him a savage blow in the face. Upon the motion of State Committeeman Smith, he was immediately expelled from the committee, against the protests of ex-State Committeeman William H. Tracy, one of Aldridge's henchmen, and about a dozen other of the superintendent's democratic followers in the committee.—Rochester dispatch, Evening Post August 6.

* * *

On the gubernatorial situation among the republicans, the thing which strikes the average observer of political affairs is the wholesale way in which George W. Aldridge, superintendent of public works, has been gathering in delegates. Mr. Aldridge is an expert in so managing the affairs of the canals as to strengthen himself among the machine politicians. He has several million dollars to spend in improving the canal system of the state, and, according to reports from "up the state," about every town within hailing distance of a canal holds Aldridge caucuses.—New York Times, August 9.

* * *

A letter, published yesterday, from the editor of the Friendship Register, tells something of the methods by which the defeat of the Hon. Fred A. Robbins for renomination to the assembly was brought about and the intense indignation among the republicans of Allegany County in consequence. It was a game of treachery throughout. Not daring openly to oppose Robbins, since that would have meant certain defeat for the machine, Glenn and the other agents of the state machine pretended that they were conceding his nomination. Their care was to get machine delegates elected to the county convention, with or without Robbins instructions. Having thus got their men chosen to the convention, the mask was dropped, instructions were cast to the winds and Robbins was turned down.

It is worth while to recall the record of this man Robbins. He was chairman of the judiciary committee in the last assembly. As such he was given charge of the bills prepared in the attorney-general's office to increase the power of the attorney-general to curb trusts. Naturally, the trusts were somewhat excited. But it soon became apparent that the boss of the legislature intended the anti-trust bills only for buncombe. They were to deceive the people into thinking the powers at Albany were really working in their interests against the trusts. But they were to be killed and the blame was to be thrown on individual members. If there had been a pliable man at the head of the judiciary committee this plan would have worked, as it frequently has in telephone legislation. But Fred A. Robbins was too honest to be a party to that sort of politics. Against all manner of secret pressure, he pushed the bills through, forcing them forward where every man who opposed them must go on record openly. After one of these bills—the most offensive one to the trusts—had reached the governor, Robbins received a direction from the executive office to recall it. He refused. He was determined that the governor himself must go on record as vetoing the bill, if he was unwilling it should become a law. The bill was not vetoed. But Robbins, from the hour of that resistance to machine orders, has been a marked man.

This was not his only offense, however. When the Greater New York bill came up, Robbins, realizing, as did all of the more independent country members, that it was very distasteful to the people of Brooklyn, assumed the leadership in opposing it. So well did he gather together the few grains of independence which existed in that boss-ridden legislature that he forced Platt to disclose the influences back of the bill by calling on Tammany members to make up the majority necessary to pass it. This exposure before the people of the whole state of the deal between Platt and Tammany was an unforgivable crime.—Buffalo Express, August 11.

* * *

The Platt men were a trifle premature in boasting that they had beaten Warner Miller in his own county. There was probably method in their haste, however, Warner Miller was not beaten. The result is close, but he has a majority. The majority is large enough, moreover, to prevent the re-election of Charles W. Hackett to the state committee.

The course of the state machine in this Herkimer contest is one of the most scandalous in the history of politics in this state. It is said $100,000 of the state's money has been expended in creating jobs merely to enlist the support of heelers against Miller. One canal job has been cited at which six men have been hired to do the work which was performed by one under a democratic superintendent. That is what machine rule by the power of patronage means for the tax-payers.—Buffalo Express, August 15.

* * *

The canvass for the republican state convention is closing amid charges and counter-charges of fraud and corruption, on the part of the various factions and of the rival candidates for governor, which seem to be well founded. A more disgraceful prostitution of the civil service of the state to political and personal ends has never been seen than the open and shameless manner in which Superintendent Aldridge of the public works department is using the canal force to elect delegates in favor of his nomination as governor. The squabble on Saturday over the control of the convention in Warner Miller's county was most disgraceful. As regards the state at large, the Platt machine has evidently secured an overwhelming majority of the delegates, as was to have been expected. A report is current that Miller, Milholland, and some of their allies will nominate another republican state ticket if the Platt men shall control the convention. But even Miller and Milholland are hardly capable of such a performance. A bolt, in order to amount to anything, must have some character and principle behind it. The fact that the bolters did not succeed in electing as many delegates as they think they ought to have had is not enough.—New York Evening Post, August 17.

* * *

By the day's proceedings Platt secures absolute control of the county machine, he gets a solid Platt delegation to the state convention, Wadsworth gets a solid delegation to the congress convention, and the independent Republicans of Genesee county are pushed aside to make way for the boss. But while Sanders gets control of the machine, he does not get control of the votes.

How the game is said to have been worked was stated in detail in the convention. Judge North hurled the charge that money was freely used with which to get the caucuses at the henchmen of the boss who writhed and hesitated in their weak replies. They made no specific denials. There were bluster and howls and bravado, but after the convention Sanders himself would not deny it when asked to do so by The Express.

"I will say that I had no part in any such acts," said Mr. Sanders. "I did not know of them if they were done. I do not know all that others did to aid me in my fight."

Said Judge North:

"And there are in Genesee county about 40 postoffices, each with a constituency of box-holders and patrons. How do you like it in the four corners of the county to have it given out as it has been that Mr. Sanders is to control all the postoffices and that you who live there may meekly walk up and get your mails, but that you shall have nothing to say as to who among you is to be selected as postmaster, because, forsooth, everything must yield to his overweening ambition to get votes for himself.—Batavia dispatch, Rochester Express, August 17.

* * *

Thomas Collier Platt is out with the following original signed statement thereanent: "I have made no promises, nor indicated by even so much as a nod or wink, any leaning toward the candidacy of any republican whose name is now being canvassed for the gubernatorial nomination.

That has been my position. I will take no part in the matter until I arrive on the ground at the Saratoga convention. When I get there I will look the situation over and try to form a judgment as to what is best to be done. All the interest I have is that the nominee shall be a republican of loyalty and courage. As to my estimates upon the relative strength of candidates, I consider them pure guesswork."—New York dispatch, Buffalo Express, August 17.

* * *

The secretary of the civil service reform association, George McAneny, to-day made orally some additions to his published statement and some remarks about the probable action on it. "We have had under consideration for some time," he said, "the matter of the violations of the constitution in the department of public works. The evidence cited in the statement is merely culled from that we have secured to instance the various ways in which the constitutional provisions regarding the civil service have been subverted. The evidence generally is of such a nature that the association, I am satisfied, will feel called upon to present the charges to the governor. The executive committee, from which any formal action must come, will not meet until September 9.

"In our opinion this complaint is a very serious one. Mr. Aldridge's personal views as to the merits of the civil service provisions do not make them any less binding upon him. To violate in a systematic and flagrant manner one of the most important provisions of the fundamental law is an offense which in our opinion neither the governor nor the courts can allow to pass unpunished. The employes of the department of public works number approximately 1,700, or more than a quarter of the total service of the state. The course followed by the superintendent has served practically to remove this entire body from the merit system.

"The evidence which we have shows, not only that the provisions requiring appointments after competitive examinations have been set aside, but that the constitutional obligation to appoint for 'merit and fitness,' irrespective of the requirement of examination, has been violated very seriously in the characters of many of the appointments made. We have information regarding perhaps one hundred such cases, some of which are cited in the statement. A great deal of this evidence will go to show that the cost of administration has increased in proportion to the growth of the patronage abuse.

"We also have information in regard to a case in which the contract for a piece of work was assigned, without advertisement as required by law, for $3,000, and evidence of engineers to the effect that the same work might be very practically done for $1,500. Although this is not exactly pertinent to the matter of the application of the civil service rules, it throws some light upon the general method of administration. An investigation ordered by the governor or the courts may be carried on even more effectively than ours, and any ordered, I have no doubt, will uncover a state of affairs even more serious than we are prepared to show."

Mr. McAneny remarked also that the association believed the present an opportune time for the public consideration of these facts; that while it is proposed to invest Mr. Aldridge with greater executive authority, the character of the appointments made by him in his present position should be kept in mind, as, if similar appointments were made by him in the executive office, the results would be disastrous.

The association's formal statement shows how Superintendent Aldridge, in his administration of the state department of public works, has grossly and flagrantly violated the civil service section of the constitution, and promises a further exposure of the serious waste of public funds thereby occasioned. The section in question requires that "appointments and promotions . . . shall be made according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained, so far as practicable, by examinations, which, so far as practicable, shall be competitive." The association recalls that on April 15, 1895, Governor Morton promulgated a new classification of the department by virtue of which certain officers were placed in the exempt schedule, A, and non-competitive schedule, D, respectively, while others were classed as workmen, and as such exempted from examination, and all positions not specifically designated in either of these three divisions were placed in the competitive schedule, B. It adds:

Both before and after the classification by Gov. Morton, Superintendent Aldridge resisted in every way possible the application of the rules to his employes, and insisted on appointing large numbers of clerks and other officers to competitive positions without examination of any sort. The history of these appointments, and the subsequent court proceedings, ending in the defeat of Superintendent Aldridge, is well known. There is no doubt that, even though the question of classification remain for a while in doubt, the superintendent personally violated the constitution. There are, however, graver violations than this with which he will be charged.

The association has been informed that the superintendent has appointed a large number of other persons without examinations to positions, the duties of which are the duties required to be filled as the result of competitive examinations, and that in order to permit this the positions in question have been designated by titles not fitting the duties performed. Many of the clerks whose appointments were declared void by the court of appeals have been reappointed in this manner as "foremen" and under other designations. So successful have been the various methods of evasion adopted that in a total of approximately 1,500 appointments made since January 1, 1895, only 38 have been after competitive examination.

Evidence has also been secured showing that persons have been appointed to positions classified in the labor service who have rendered little or no service in return for the salaries paid them; that other persons employed in such positions have been assigned to unnecessary labor, and that owing in part to these conditions the cost of maintaining the canals has been greatly increased. In spite of the constitutional obligation of the superintendent to appoint all of his employes for "merit and fitness," many of these appointees have been persons who have been convicted of crimes and confined in the state prisons, or who are of otherwise notoriously bad character, while others have been and are engaged in private business of a nature unfitting them for satisfactory public service. A few specimen cases of this character reported to the association, taken from Oneida county alone, are as follows:

THOMAS WHEELER—Superintendent of the middle division of the canals; is an active local politician; was formerly proprietor of a faro-bank and the partner of David Dishler; afterwards ran a gambling-room for three years. The authorities, it is said, feared to interfere with this business because of the influence he possessed. His name appears, however, on the police records many times; he was arrested at one time for assaulting a clergyman on the street and sentenced to the penitentiary for six months; was subsequently indicted for petit larceny and fined; was indicted for a burglary committed in Albany, some of the proceeds of which were found in his possession; has been the principal manipulator of the canal patronage in the middle counties, and has secured the appointment of many of his former associates to various minor positions.

A. D. BARBER—Son of the lobbyist, A. D. Barber; supposed to be employed as a foreman; he has no men under him, and, it is reported, spends his time fishing about the woods.

JOHN MULLIGAN—Appointed as a teamster; is a democratic alderman in Utica; is an ex-saloon-keeper, and has served a term in the penitentiary; has one team employed at $75 per month and one by the day.

D. HUGHS—Foreman; a democrat, and an ex-saloon-keeper; appointed through the influence of ex-Alderman Hackett.

J. MULLEN—Assistant foreman at Loft Bridge; has served a term in the Auburn prison for highway robbery, and another term at Sing Sing; is too heavy to work, and, it is reported, hires a substitute; was imprisoned at Sing Sing under the name of Mitchell for a robbery committed in New York.

E. G. GROSMEYER—Foreman; is proprietor of a liquor saloon and grocery store; is reported to have stated that his sole duty is to draw his pay.

JAMES HACKETT—On the payrolls as a foreman, but says he is an "emergency inspector;" is the proprietor of a saloon, to which he devotes the principal part of his time; reports at the power-house for a brief portion of each day.

J. B. DOHERTY—Foreman at Lock No. 46; has served six months in the Albany penitentiary, and has been indicted for robbery and other offenses at other times; acted as teller at the ninth ward (Utica) caucus.

CHARLES WALSH—Alias "Cooky," alias "Pussy"; assistant foreman at Lock No. 46; is an ex-saloon-keeper and a notorious character.

F. KOELBEL—Laborer; his father is proprietor of the saloon over which Wheeler & Dishler conducted their faro bank; is not supposed to perform any work.

J. HINKLESTONE—Laborer; has been a member of the democratic city committee for three or four years.

E. A. HUTCHINSON—Laborer; ex letter-carrier; discharged from the government service for drunkenness.

KARL HARPER—Bank-watchman; is a member of the Utica board of aldermen.

MAX ROBINSON—Assistant foreman at Lock No. 46; proprietor of a liquor saloon. On July 31 he passed the greater part of the day in court, attending to the naturalization of a number of Hebrews.

SEYMOUR VAN VALKENBURG—Clerk; supposed to be employed actually in Wheeler's coal office.

G. H. THOM—Clerk; keeps a clothing store, and is reported to do no work.

E. A. KLOCK—Reservoir tender at North Lake; occupies a house built by the state and keeps summer boarders; has a bar-room separated by a narrow passage from the state building. Three men are employed at this point to raise the water gates when necessary, although the same work was formerly done by one.

I. N. HAYES—Foreman; is proprietor of a grocery store at Boonville; presided at the local convention on the 17th inst.

HIRAM WAITE—Inspector at South Lake on a piece of contract work being done by a man named Nelson; was not seen about the work for ten days prior to the 19th inst., and was reported to be engaged in securing votes for the caucuses.

BENJAMIN THOMAS—Foreman; works at cutting stone for Nelson at thirty cents per hour, while drawing pay from the state.

ARTHUR O'BRIEN—Laborer; an active worker in the caucuses at Forestport; reported to have stood behind the ballot-box with money in his hand, offering bets that his faction would win.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS.

ASHFIELD, MASS., Aug. 12.—One of the great memories of Ashfield is that of George William Curtis, who was so deeply interested in the community, and whose place at the annual dinner is still vacant. His name is held in honor by the Curtis club, which to-night paid the first formal and permanent tribute to his connection with the town in the form of a handsome tablet erected in the Town Hall. The tablet is of brass with letters in black. The inscription upon the tablet reads:

In Grateful and Affectionate Remembrance of
GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS, and as a Memorial of His Presence and Speech on many occasions in this Hall this Tablet is set up by
THE CURTIS CLUB OF ASHFIELD.
MDCCCXCVI.

From the Address of Prof. Charles Elliott Norton:

"Of all the blessings which can befall a community, there is none greater than the choice of it by a good man for his home, for the example of such a man sets a standard of conduct, and his influence, unconsciously not less than consciously exerted, tends to lift those who come within its circle to his own level. In the quiet annals of this little town there are many incidents of local and personal interest, but the incidents of chief importance to its inhabitants of this generation and of coming times was its selection in 1865 by George William Curtis for his summer home. Hither for twenty-seven summers he came to find refreshment among these hills and woods, to show himself the best of neighbors, and to exhibit those social virtues and charms which would have made him beloved and admired by any society which he might have chosen to adorn.

* * *

"In August, 1856, just forty years ago, at the height of the struggle between the forces of freedom and those of slavery before the war, Mr. Curtis, then thirty-two years old, delivered at Wesleyan University, at Middletown, Conn., an oration on 'The Duty of the American Scholar.' It was at once a profession of faith and an appeal to the young scholars of the land to be true to those moral principles which in a period of material prosperity are apt to be subordinated to mere temporary interests. It was the first of that long series of speeches which secured to Mr. Curtis a place in the front rank of orators. He had spoken often before in public, but on this occasion he found and manifested his unequivocal vocation as a great master of the art of persuasive and powerful eloquence. To all her other gifts to him, Nature had added those of the orator. He was of a fine presence and easy grace of carriage, tall of stature, of strongly marked and expressive features, with the masculine nose and long upper lip that mark the born public speaker. His voice (it still echoes in our ears) was of wide compass, sweet, and full of tone, perfectly under control, and in perfect harmony with his aspect. Not often has a finer instrument of speech been vouchsafed to a man.

"From the date of his oration to the end of his life Mr. Curtis never put off the harness or relinquished the arms of public service. He took an active part in the local politics of the county in which he lived, he became a prominent figure in the politics of the State of New York, he exercised a powerful influence by voice and by pen in shaping the policy of the republican party and of the national administration. When the war came, that war which to the generation born since its close seems so remote, but which to us who lived through it is in a sense always present, giving poignancy to the disappointment of many of the highly raised hopes of that heroic time—when the war came Curtis threw himself into the contest with passionate zeal, passionate but not blind or irrational. In the bitter sacrifices of the war he shared. In 1862 one of his younger brothers fell dead at Fredericksburg at the head of his regiment, thus gloriously ending a stainless life of twenty-six years. His brother-in-law, the fair young Col. Robert Shaw, dying at the head of his black regiment in the assault on Fort Wagner and buried with his niggers, became the immortal type to all generations of Americans of the ideal hero of human brotherhood. Of the work which had to be done at home no less essential than that in the field, no man did more, or more effectively, than Curtis.

"Of all the many public questions of importance which claimed attention in the years following the war, none was of greater concern than the reform of the civil service. The 'spoils system' had become rooted in the practice of the government, both local and national, and in the popular theory of its administration. This system by which public office was held to be not a place of trust to be awarded only to such as were competent by character and intelligence to discharge its duties, but a place of emolument given as reward or incentive for partisan or personal services—this debasing and corrupting system had in the course of years become the source of evils which threatened the very foundation of our institutions. One of the least of these evils was the lowering of the quality of the public service and the degradation of the character of the public servant. To hold public office was no longer a badge of honor, but a token of loss of personal independence and a badge of servitude to a patron. The system poisoned the moral springs of political effort and action; it perverted the nature and the results of elections; it fostered corruption in every department of the government, and tended to vitiate the popular conception of the duty of a citizen in a republic and of the very ends for which the government exists. To contend against this system, intrenched as it was behind the lines of long custom, defended by the host of selfish, unprincipled, and ignorant politicians, and openly supported by both the great parties alike, seemed an almost hopeless task.

"But Mr. Curtis did not shrink from the contest. He had faith in the good sense of the mass of the people if once they could be roused from their temper of optimistic indifference. The fight had already begun when he entered it, but he had scarcely entered it before he became its leader.

"In 1871 he was appointed by Gen. Grant upon the commission to form rules for admission to the public service and regulations to promote its efficiency. He was made chairman of the commission, and their report—the basis of all that has since been done in the establishment of the reform—was mainly his work. But the opposition to the project of reform was strenuous, was persistent. The aims of the reformers were often baffled, often defeated. But they were not disheartened. In 1880 the New York Civil Service Reform Association was founded, in 1881 the National association for the same end, and of both was Mr. Curtis chosen president. In both he held this office till his death. The duties were arduous, and were performed by him with consummate fidelity and ability. He was a magnificent standard bearer. Slowly but steadily the cause advanced. He did not live to see its triumph, but he never doubted that it would win the victory. It has triumphed, and for this triumph, with all its far-reaching, beneficent results, the honor is mainly due to Mr. Curtis, as well as the gratitude of his country for her rescue from a grave peril and a great disgrace.

* * * * *

"Four years have passed since Mr. Curtis's death. The sense of personal bereavement and of public loss does not grow less as time goes on. The great cause of civil service reform has won its triumph more speedily than he hoped, but vigilance and activity will long be needed to defend its position. New questions have arisen and new perils threaten us. The times have grown darker. No lover of his country can look forward without anxiety. At this moment of popular delusion, of confusion, of parties, of excited passions, at this moment, when only a choice of evils seems to be before us, we long to hear—alas! that we should long in vain—that clear voice of prudent and sagacious council to which we were wont to listen for instruction and guidance. Never was there greater need than at this moment of enforcing upon the intelligence and the conscience of the people the truth that national safety and prosperity rest securely only upon the foundation of moral rectitude, of clearing away the sophistries by which the popular mind is confused and betrayed; of exposing the fallacies and stemming the passion of partizan zeal; of appealing to the true motives which should guide individuals in their political action. This was his work while he lived, and, following his example, this is our work now. The dangers and exigencies of the time are new. The perils that confront us are not transient, nor to be quenched or suppressed by spasmodic effort and the result of an election. The infuriate clamor for war, the eager cry for free silver and fiat money, the demand for subsidy under the name of protection, may be suppressed, but they are only the symptoms of disease, and to suppress them is no more a remedy for the disease than to check a fit of coughing by an opiate is a remedy for consumption. The diseases is the ignorance and the consequent lack of public morality of a large part of the people of our republic. To contend with this ignorance, to enlighten it, is our task. It is a long, a difficult, an uncertain fight that lies before us. It is the fight of civilization against barbarism in America. It is the new form of the old good fight, fought ever in different ages under different names.

"I was wrong just now in saying that we could not hear the voice of Curtis. He speaks: 'Whatever in human nature is hopeful, generous, aspiring—the love of God and trust in man—is arrayed on one side.' On that side he stood. On that side let us stand."

PSEUDO-PATRIOTISM.

Counterfeits of True Patriotism—The Demands of Real Patriotism

[Baccalaureate sermon delivered by the Rev. William De Witte Hyde, D. D., president of Bowdoin College, before the graduating class at Brunswick, Me., June, 1896.]

Another point on which true patriotism is called for is the civil service. Sneered at and betrayed and starved and decried by politicians, the reform of the civil service has gone steadily forward until at length, after thirty years of agitation, 85,200 places, or substantially the entire national service, is brought under the rules. Much remains to be done to establish the reform and to extend it in states and municipalities; but the principle has at last achieved a permanent and substantial victory in the field of national politics. By this reform, offices cease to be party spoils and become opportunities for public service. This is the grandest triumph of true patriotism that has been accomplished in our day.

DEMOCRACY AND EDUCATION.

[Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, of Columbia College, before National Council of Education at Buffalo, July, 1896.]

THE UNDEMOCRATIC SPOILS SYSTEM.

"Much of the disinclination to engage in active political life that is noticeable among a large portion of our people is due, I believe, to the evil effects upon political standards and methods that flow from the debasing and degrading system of treating public office as a reward for partisan activity, that has gained so strong a hold in the United States. The spoils system is utterly undemocratic and utterly unworthy of toleration by an intelligent people. Suppose that it ruled the schools, as it rules so many other departments of public administration; then we should expect to see the election of a mayor in Boston, Chicago, New Orleans or San Francisco, followed by hundreds of changes among the public school teachers, made solely for political reasons. How long do you suppose that this association would permit that to go on without a protest that would be heard from Maine to Texas? Why should we, as good citizens, be more tolerant of such an abuse in other departments of the government? We have all noted with gratification the progress that is making towards the elimination of this evil. A determined band of men have kept the issue before the public for nearly a generation, and now they have the satisfaction of seeing a great portion of the national service wrested from the defiling hand of the spoils hunter. In the state of New York the people have put into their new constitution an emphatic declaration on the subject. The full effect of this declaration, splendidly upheld and broadly interpreted by the courts, is just beginning to dawn upon the foes of a reformed and efficient public service.

LOW IDEALS OF PUBLIC SERVICE.

"From this advance of sound sentiment and honest policy we may take every encouragement. But much remains to be done. Public sentiment must be first interested, then educated. Efficient public service is a mark of civilization. To turn over the care of great public undertakings to the self-seeking camp followers of some political potentate is barbaric. We teachers are the first to insist that incompetent and untrained persons shall not be allowed in the service of the schools. Why, then, should we tolerate the sight of a house painter instead of an engineer supervising the streets and roadways of a city of one hundred thousand inhabitants, or that of an illiterate hanger-on presiding over the public work of a great metropolis? These instances, drawn at random from recent political history, are typical of conditions that will be widely diffused throughout our public service. Those conditions exist because of bad citizenship, low ideals of public service, and wretchedly inadequate moral vision. They will not be remedied until each one of us assumes his share of the task.

"It is instructive, too, to note that the spoils system has diverted public interest in great measure from choice between policies to choice between men. Two hundred years ago men would have made great sacrifices for an opportunity to share in the making of the laws by which they were governed. Yet, when in 1894, the people of this state were called upon to vote, at one and the same election, for a governor and for or against a new constitution, containing many important and some novel propositions, more than a million and a quarter men voted for a candidate for governor, while less than three-quarters of a million expressed themselves regarding the proposed constitution. And this is by no means a solitary instance of the tendency that it illustrates. A rational and intelligent democracy will first discuss questions of principle and then select agents in accordance with their earlier determination. To fix our interest solely on individuals and to overlook or neglect the principles for which they stand is not intelligent."

The public-school system in Milwaukee is suffering from the familiar trouble of too much politics. The city has had an excellent and every way acceptable superintendent, who has just resigned his position because he can no longer endure the conditions under which he has suffered. "I enjoy greatly the work of the school board and would be glad to keep it up," he says, "but the responsibility and power are not commensurate, and I doubt if I can do it." The radical difficulty is that the superintendent, while nominally responsible for the management of the schools, is not allowed any latitude in his action, but is made the mere creature of the school commissioners. He can not even appoint or displace a teacher except the board approve, and the board, while in form acting as a body, in fact act in each case as is determined by the commissioner of the ward. "The result is," says the Sentinel, that "the charge of the schools and the authority that belongs to their superintendence are not vested in the superintendent, but in reality are held and exercised by eighteen petty ward sovereigns, holding office under appointment of ward aldermen, who are governed, in most cases, by considerations of politics and not by the best interests of the schools."—New York Evening Post, July 8.

The Chicago Post is making a systematic effort to get at a clear understanding of the workings and condition of the public schools of that city, and to that end has addressed a series of letters to teachers and principals asking them to reply to the questions therein, assurance being given that their names shall not be disclosed under any circumstances. The schools there are under political domination, and one purpose of the investigation is to learn the extent to which improper appointments are made and incompetent teachers retained. So great is the timidity of the teachers and their fear that their identity will become known to the school authorities that many have sent in their communications without signature, but they show a remarkable agreement in their figures. The principals estimate that from 12 to 15 per cent. of the teachers in the schools are unfit for their positions and should be dropped. Many of them have been reported by principals from time to time as incompetent, but, owing to political influence, have retained their places and have even been promoted. One principal would drop 40 per cent. of the teachers for the good of the schools if she had the power.—Indianapolis Journal, June 28.

The first regular meeting of the school association was held in the Buffalo library building May 19. The president, Henry A. Richmond, in a short address, referred to the fact that for many years the school system had been in a very unsatisfactory condition, the nomination of superintendents being the result of political deals, and the appointment of teachers the reward of political service. With the advent of the new charter, which provided for a board of examiners and the application of the principles of civil service reform to the appointment of teachers, a new day had dawned, and already, under the vigorous impulse given by the present superintendent, the schools had begun the upward way.—Buffalo Courier, June 14.

SPOILS.

"As a general rule the southern (populist) delegates were not a creditable class. They practically admitted while in St. Louis that they were out for nothing but spoils. They said that there was nothing in it for them to indorse democratic nominees, and the same spirit will probably dominate their actions in the future."—Jones, Chairman Democratic-Populist Committee, Washington Interview, August 3.

* * *

Ex-Mayor Hewitt, in an interview published in the Times, has expressed the belief that Tammany indorsed the Chicago nominations "for the sake of greater spoils should Bryan win."

This adds a darker horror to the prospect of 16 to 1. Free coinage and free riot are bad enough; repudiation and national dishonor are shocking to men of moral sensibility. But Purroy as postmaster, John C. Sheehan collector of the Port and Sulzer, United States District Attorney—these things as the prospective fruit of regularity would kindle the fires of revolt in the bosom of Richard Croker himself and make an enthusiastic bolter out of the most unflinching Andrew Jackson democrat.

Spread the news that Tammany is out for the Federal spoils! It will be a most effective sound-money campaign cry.—New York Times, August 5.

* * *

The annual salaries of the senators aggregate $440,000, while the majority in control of the senate may distribute patronage worth $360,912 each year. This sum is divided among 255 people of all grades of work and remuneration, making an average of $1,431. The patronage ranges all the way from the secretary of the senate, who gets more than a senator, $5,396, down to laborers at $50 a month. It includes clerks to committees, pages, messengers, watchmen, clerks, mail-carriers, folders, firemen and engineers, and all branches of service. As nearly as possible the patronage is divided up among the senators according to a fixed rule, and a careful tab is kept on the lists of appointments and removals. The smaller the salary the more unstable the place. The range of salaries is high. Even in the more menial positions is this shown. The senators are generous in their distribution of the funds, and spare no opportunity to increase the budget of domestic expenses. Two years ago the democrats secured control of the senate by a deal with several of the populists, and there was a clean sweep. Every republican employe was dismissed and democrats and populists installed in their places. This distribution gave to each member of the combine about $11,000 worth of patronage for their friends.—Washington dispatch, Buffalo Express.

* * *

The Kings county grand jury yesterday handed to Judge Aspinwall a presentment in which they state the penitentiary is in first-class order, but in reference to the jail they say: "We found the straw in the beds of the women's prison very dirty and the bathtubs and wash-tubs in very poor condition and not clean. The sanitary conditions were useless, and the corridor under the female prison was full of garbage and other refuse, which should be removed. We would recommend that a shower bath be placed in the frame building in the jail yard. We further recommend that a better quality of food be furnished the prisoners. We found the females detained as witnesses were compelled to mingle with other prisoners. We would recommend that a proper place be provided for such witnesses."—New York Times, May 30.

MERIT.

An investigation of the New York letter carrier service was begun last April. Thirty inspectors who had been doing similar work in western cities were ordered to New York. The result of their work was that out of 1,346 carriers charges were preferred by the inspectors against only fifteen of them. In no case was the offense of a serious nature, and one of the men was able to exonerate himself.

The movements of the inspectors were kept secret. No post-office employe was supposed to be aware of their presence in the city. Each inspector was assigned to a particular district. His duties were to watch the movements of certain letter-carriers from the time they left the office with mail for delivery until they returned to headquarters.

This system was practiced upon each of the 1,346 carriers, and occupied upwards of ten weeks. Four carriers were caught loitering along their routes. Five carriers stopped at their homes to eat meals while on duty. Five others were caught drinking while on duty. One of the carriers charged with loitering explained that he had stopped at his home to see his sick wife. He was exonerated. For these offenses suspensions of a few days were imposed. Postmaster Dayton is quoted as saying of the report: "We are conducting no dress-parade administration here. The entire post-office force will be gratified that the result of the investigation should be made public, showing the high degree of discipline that prevails. I have had no fear of the result from the beginning. The cause of our success is due almost entirely to the co-operation of Superintendent Morgan and others and the men themselves."—New York Evening Post, July 3.

* * *

At the last general meeting of the committee the civil service committee brought forward the following petition to President Cleveland, which was heartily indorsed:

To the President:

The Civic Club of Philadelphia, representing over five hundred women, whose object is to "promote by education and active co-operation a higher public spirit and a better social order," believing that faithful attention to duty deserves such recognition, respectfully presents for your consideration the following petition: That the women employed in the Philadelphia mint be placed under civil service regulations.

* * *

"We have been able to do an immense amount, indeed, I think I may justly say an almost incredible amount, in cleaning up the police department, in giving it an entirely new spirit, and in teaching the men, once for all, that laws can be enforced and must be obeyed even in New York city; and that the elementary principles of honesty and morality and the old common-sense methods of administering the department with business efficiency can be applied just as well to the police department as to any other branch of our government. But with the law as it now is, it is absolutely impossible for any one or two men to make the police department all that it ought to be. * * *

"The legislature, however, to its lasting discredit, not only refused to pass the power-of-removal bill, and therefore refused to give us the means of weeding out the scoundrels from the force; but also passed the so-called bi-partisan police bill, as thoroughly vicious and pernicious a measure as could well be imagined. This bi-partisan police bill not only perpetuated the four-headed commission, but further divided the power and responsibility, instead of centering them. * * *

"With a four-headed board it is necessary that three should act as a unit in order that good work may be done; there is always a chance that three will work together, but the sapient legislature provided against this chance by actually making it necessary that the four should be unanimous when it came to discharging one of their most important functions, that of promotion. Furthermore, they took away from the board the power of making transfers and details, giving it as an independent power to their subordinate, the chief, who is irremovable, save for some cause which will stand the test of a trial in the courts, and who can not be disciplined in any way, save by due legal process. * * *

"Nevertheless, within certain limitations the board has some power, and by sheer force of will, and by resolute insistence upon the right, it can do and has done a very great deal. We can not guarantee, under the present law, no matter what may be our confidence in our subordinates, to suppress all forms of hidden corruption; but the immense mass of it we have completely cut away. We can not guarantee that some individuals here or there are not allowed to violate the law; but once for all we have put a complete stop to the custom of permitting the violation of the law by entire classes of privileged law-breakers. Indeed, the very completeness of our success in this direction almost causes people to forget what has been done. A year and a half ago it was accepted as a truism that the excise law could not be enforced in New York city; now, nobody for a moment questions that it can be enforced and is enforced. There is no justifiable complaint whatever about the way the police are enforcing the Raines law. The difficulties that do exist as regards its enforcement must be laid at other doors. So it has been with disorderly houses; the comptroller, Mr. A. P. Fitch, has been able to cause great loss and inconvenience to the different police officers from the chief down to the patrolmen by his discreditable course of conduct in trying to hamper the department in its effort to enforce the law as to disorderly-house keepers in precisely the same way that it enforces the law as to every other grade of law-breakers; but the comptroller has not succeeded, and will not succeed, in his effort to make us relent in our warfare against this class of criminals, the class of insidiously vicious who furnish so rich a harvest of blackmail in time past to the political organization of which the comptroller is now the chief representative in our public life. * * *

"We have made the police feel that they are the servants of the public and not their masters, and we have striven to make every citizen feel that if he is wronged by a policeman, his wrongs will be promptly righted if they will come before the commissioners with their complaint. We have made it evident that laws can and will be enforced, and we have shown that it is perfectly practicable to manage the police department on a basis of strict honesty and efficiency, without the slightest regard to politics, and to promote and appoint men with an eye single to their qualities and to the interest of the public at large."—From interview of Theodore Roosevelt, New York Post, July 27.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

VOL. II, No. 43.

INDIANAPOLIS, SEPTEMBER, 1896.

TERMS : { One dollar per annum.
10 cents per copy.

Published monthly. Publication office, No. 23 N. Meridian St., Indianapolis, Ind. Address, THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE. Indianapolis, Ind.

WE ARE OPPOSED TO LIFE TENURE IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE. WE FAVOR APPOINTMENTS BASED UPON MERIT, FIXED TERMS OF OFFICE, AND SUCH AN ADMINISTRATION OF THE CIVIL SERVICE LAWS AS WILL AFFORD EQUAL OPPORTUNITIES TO ALL CITIZENS OF ASCERTAINED FITNESS.—

Platform, National Convention of Looters, Chicago, July, 1896.

WHAT WE OPPOSE IN THAT PLANK IS THE LIFE TENURE WHICH IS BEING BUILT UP AT WASHINGTON, WHICH EXCLUDES FROM PARTY REP-RESENTATION IN THE BENEFITS THE HUMBLER MEMBERS OF OUR SOCIETY.

—Bryan's Interpretation.

W. W. Durbin, chairman of the State committee, who had boarded the train at Lima, insisted on Mr. Bryan saying a few words at Ada, where he delivered the commencement oration at the Normal university last year. He left his breakfast and Prof. H. S. Lehr, president of the university, introduced the candidate as the next president. Mr. Bryan was received with cheers and said:

Ladies and Gentlemen—While I have not been speaking much on this trip I can not withstand the temptation to say a word here. The words so kindly spoken by Prof. Lehr, you will remember, are not thought of since the nomination. He is one of the original Bryan men. When I was here a year ago he was a Bryan man. I think he wanted you to become acquainted with me, so if you wanted post-offices you would know where to come to get them. I am not distributing postoffices yet, but I hope to be before very long. (Applause.) I remember with a great deal of pleasure this city and the students here of the university, and I hope they will become students of the money question and be prepared to take their part in this fight. I thank you. (Great applause.)—Mr. Bryan, at Ada, August 10.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE greatly desires any numbers of the July and August numbers not needed by the recipients.

THROUGH the fault of the publishing office some of those on the CHRONICLE'S mailing list have not received the July and August numbers. If those who are keeping a file of the paper will notify this office, the missing numbers will as far as possible be supplied.

WITH the defeat of Bryan the publication of the CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE will cease. It was begun nearly eight years ago in the midst of the struggle for the establishment and maintenance of the merit system in the federal service and the burden of its work has been in that struggle. By the far-seeing and statesmanlike measures of Mr. Cleveland during his present administration the victory has been completed. It is not that there is not yet much to be done, but the forces to accomplish it are abundant and united. The federal employes themselves have at last espoused the reform, and on every hand they rise up and demand its enforcement and extension. The country has accepted it and it regards with aversion and distrust any man who threatens to overthrow it. In state, county and city fields the merit system has made little more than a beginning. It is, however, only a question of time. Neither Tammany Hall nor the present city administration of Indianapolis can much longer resist the crushing influence with which the merits of the merit system now make their way. The examples of the federal service now found throughout the United States are a daily lesson to the whole people of the wisdom of transferring routine public business from the field of politics to the field of the wage earner. It is true, however, that the cause still needs public agitation; but the press of the country has come over to the right side. There are notable cases of the press which have always been on the right side, and these give greatly increased space and time to the subject, while the press generally has changed from active or silent opposition to open advocacy. The newspaper which now advocates the spoils system is something of a rarity. The situation is believed to be a sufficient reason for the discontinuance of the CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE.

WE take Bryan's defeat as a matter beyond question. His beginning was demagogic enough but he has dropped now to even a cheaper grade. His proposal to destroy the merit system was proof of how little knowledge he had of the American people. This people by a vast majority are favorable to that system, and his declaration lost him instantly the votes of all civil service reformers and of all but a fraction of the federal employes. Bryan proved further that his knowledge of the true principles of civil administration is of the same half-baked, wild-eyed nature as his rolling declarations upon finance show his knowledge of that subject to be. It is all of the sand-lot order and whenever the American people have had a chance to get at such a man they have never failed to put him down, and they will not fail now. The fact that he proposes to destroy the greatest work which has been done for this nation since the abolition of slavery and that he proposes to reach the position of a destroyer by stirring up hatred between classes and sections will but serve to unite the great body of the people the more firmly against him. His defeat will clear the atmosphere as it has not been cleared in many years. In declaring his defeat beforehand, it is assumed that there will not be the least relaxation of the effort against him. There can not be, or the ruin will fall upon us. We repeat that if any man has ever done any thing for the merit system, he should repeat that effort by a thousand times. And the effort must grow more intense and more prolonged as the election approaches. Private business and private interests are nothing. The time has come when every citizen should go to work for the republic. Bryan must not receive the vote of a single patriotic citizen. Let them be all on one side, and let Bryan and Tammany Hall, and the likes of Tammany Hall everywhere, be on the other.

PARTICULARLY noteworthy is the fact that the employes in the postal service handled during the last fiscal year 13,851,000 pieces of registered mail with the loss of only one piece in every 16,254.—From Mr. Maxwell's report.

It is difficult to treat Mr. Bryan's utterances on "life tenure" and "a fixed term in appointive offices" as the sincere expressions of an ignorant man. The CHRONICLE believes that his talk on the civil service is but another "bid" for a support from those whose passions for a loot he believes he can thus inflame. But will not those reform papers who see in him only the passionate and sincere advocate of mistaken principles ask him to explain how, for instance, in the four years of his single term in addition to purging this country of syndicates, monopolies, trusts, money changers, corrupt judges and juries, as he has laid out to do, he will also introduce into the railway mail service those "humbler classes of our citizens" for a "fixed

It assails the independence of the judiciary by the covert threat to reorganize the courts whenever their decisions contravene the decrees of the party caucus. It seeks to allure office-seekers and spoilsmen to its support by attacking the existing civil service laws, which good men of all parties have labored so long to establish, and to extend to all departments of the public service.—From the call of the National Democratic party, Chicago, August 17.

THE CIVIL SERVICE LAW WAS PLACED ON THE STATUTE BOOKS BY THE REPUBLICAN PARTY, WHICH HAS ALWAYS SUSTAINED IT, AND WE RE-NEW OUR REPEATED DECLARATIONS THAT IT SHALL BE THOROUGHLY AND HONESTLY ENFORCED AND EXTENDED WHEREVER PRACTICABLE.—From the Republican Platform, 1896.

"MR. CHAIRMAN, IF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY OF THIS COUNTRY IS PLEDGED TO ANY ONE THING MORE THAN ANOTHER, IT IS THE MAINTENANCE OF THE CIVIL SERVICE LAW AND TO ITS EFFICIENT EXECUTION—NOT ONLY THAT, BUT TO ITS ENLARGEMENT AND ITS FURTHER APPLICATION TO THE PUBLIC SERVICE.

"THE LAW THAT STANDS UPON OUR STATUTE BOOKS TO-DAY WAS PUT THERE BY REPUBLICAN VOTES. IT WAS A REPUBLICAN MEASURE. EVERY NATIONAL PLATFORM OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY, SINCE ITS ENACTMENT, HAS DECLARED NOT ONLY IN term without impairing its efficiency." Green hands handling 13,851,000 pieces of registered mail with the loss of only one piece in every 16,254 would indeed be a glory to his administration.

THE declarations of Mr. Bryan and his various conventions for overturning the merit system built up by years of the unremitting toil of many unselfish and noble men, has brought the usual pitiful spectacle of public employes cravenly trying to mollify the wrath of the spoils Jugger-naut. Last month it was the Washington clerks, who folded documents for the committee after working hours. This month it is the group of postal clerk delegates who called on Mr. Bryan at Lincoln and promised him their support. Further, the "fifteen white roses presented by the lady clerks of the New Albany post-office to our next president," would have been more symbolic of their own sure decapitation had they been red.

THE impropriety of any federal employe taking any public part in a political campaign is apparent. His time and strength belong to the government which pays him. He has no right to make himself offensive to the tax-payer who is taxed for his salary. This in no wise deprives him of the rights of suffrage. If he feels the call for an active campaign, he should quit the public service. But the insolent public servant who flaunts his opposition to the administration should be promptly kicked out of office. We particularly mean Baldwin, auditor of the treasury, and Bell, deputy commissioner of pensions, who have for weeks been making Bryan speeches, and discussing the bond issues of the administration "with fearlessness."

THE Tacoma (Washington) Morning Union has been, says the writer of the following refreshing letter to that paper, a consistent and courageous champion of civil service reform, both in Tacoma and in the National government, and has recognized it as a reform of fundamental and vital importance. He goes on to say:

There are those in the community who believe that the cause of civil service reform, standing as it does for honesty in the administration of the government, is of equal importance with the free coinage of silver.

Let me call your attention to the fact that the Chicago platform practically declares against the principles of civil service reform and pledges itself to the adoption of what is at best only a modification of the "spoils system." It "opposes," in the words of Mr. Bryan, "the life tenure which is being built up at Washington, which excludes from participation in the benefits the humbler members of our society." There are two palpable untruths in this short sentence which are unworthy of a man of Mr. Bryan's moral and religious pretensions. Tenure of office during good behavior is not "life tenure," and no one knows this better than Mr. Bryan. An employe in the classified civil service has no more secure hold upon his position than any employe in a private business house has. Why could not the Chicago convention and Mr. Bryan say what they meant, viz: That they opposed tenure of office during good behavior? Evidently because it was necessary to arouse an unworthy prejudice against the legitimate beneficiaries of the civil service in order to champion the claims of the illegitimate would-be beneficiaries.

The second untruth in the above quotation is the assertion that the civil service "excludes from party representation in the benefits the humbler members of society." This is directly contrary to the facts. The civil service is the only system by which a "humble member of society" can obtain government employment without loss of self-respect. It may let in members of other parties, but it does not "exclude" any member of the prevailing party who is worthy.

"Fixed terms of office," which is the recommendation of the Chicago platform, means simply a periodical redistribution of the spoils which will give the party in power an opportunity to replace the incumbents of the opposite party with their own followers, as the fourth-class postmasters are now replaced under the reprehensible four years' term law. This is not civil service reform. It is the "other thing."

To this sound and straight forward argument, the Morning Union works out a pretty lame and curious answer, part of which is that "Anti-spoils" is a good citizen, who nevertheless is partisan:

"It is the failing of partisanship to cover up and hide the defects of partisans. 'Anti spoils' is a republican. He picks at, in another column, a side issue in the Chicago platform, which side issue, from the standpoint of practical politics, was judiciously handled by the framers of that document. As the matter stands, the main issue is the securing of bimetallism for this country, which has been growing worse and worse under the present gold standard. * * *

"We do not defend the civil service plank of the Chicago platform. * * *

"We are not partisan. We aim to be honest and fair always."

RECENTLY an address on sound money was given in Anderson, Ind., to a railway men's club. The speaker afterwards received a letter, part of which we gladly print:

I, however, wish to refer to that portion of your address in reference to the civil service. * * * I am a civil service reformer. I believe in it. It is one of the greatest blessings that has come to our country, and it took the blood of the noble Garfield to bring it about. One of its essential features is permanency of tenure. This is alike beneficial to the government and to the individual holding office. I notice that Mr. Bryan is opposed to what he calls the life-tenure, and I am convinced that should he succeed he will lend all his efforts to the rewarding of his followers and the destruction of civil service reform. I do not think sufficient attention has been given to this feature, and you ought to dwell on it more largely in your addresses.

THE 250,000 employes in the federal service who are receiving assessment letters and are being otherwise "coerced" to provide funds to elect Mr. Bryan should remember to take advantage of the secret ballot, and by that ballot protect themselves, their wives and children and their livelihood. We do not, however, counsel them to lose their manhood by adapting to their situation that further advice of this presidential nominee for the greatest office of a great country given to workingmen to wear a McKinley button, put up a McKinley picture, join a McKinley club, pay an assessment, but to use the secret ballot to vote for Bryan.

HE will suffer defeat, in our opinion, as surely as the sun rises; and, deserved as that defeat may be, we can not deny him the credit of being an earnest, sincere, honest man and a patriot who is working with all his might for what he deems the best interests and the true glory of his country.

This is the opinion of Mr. Bryan given by the Springfield Republican, known everywhere as a professed hater of spoils government. What a foe to everything clean and honest in government Tammany has been; what a tremendous power for evil it has been; what it has taken of strength, and time and money to expose it and to partially crush it is also known everywhere. And to Tammany Hall Mr. Bryan last week spoke and to Mr. Bryan Tammany Hall gave an ovation such as it never gave before. "The roar of applause

FAVOR OF ITS CONTINUANCE IN FULL VIGOR, BUT IN FAVOR OF ITS ENLARGEMENT SO AS TO APPLY MORE GENERALLY TO THE PUBLIC SERVICE. AND THIS, MR. CHAIRMAN, IS NOT ALONE THE DECLARATION AND PURPOSE OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY, BUT IT IS IN ACCORDANCE WITH ITS HIGHEST AND BEST SENTIMENT—AYE, MORE, IT IS SUSTAINED BY THE BEST SENTIMENT OF THE WHOLE COUNTRY, REPUBLICAN AND DEMOCRATIC ALIKE."—Mr. McKinley in Congress, April, 1890.

"The pledge of the republican national convention that our civil service laws shall be sustained and thoroughly and honestly enforced and extended wherever practicable is in keeping with the position of the party for the past twenty-four years and will be faithfully observed. Our opponents deery these reforms. They appear to be willing to abandon all the advantages gained after so many years' agitation and effort. They encourage a return to methods of party favoritism, which both parties have often denounced, that experience has condemned and that the people have repeatedly disapproved. The republican party earnestly opposes this reactionary and entirely unjustifiable policy. It will take no backward step on this question. It will seek to improve, but never degrade the public service.—From Mr. McKinley's Letter of Acceptance, August 27.

shook the building." "The cheering did not come in waves, but in a steady prolonged roar." Why did Tammany Hall go mad over Mr. Bryan as he stood "smiling and happy" before them? It was the scent of spoil. They knew their man. If this republic has reached the point where this Tammany idol is a "patriot" "working with all his might for what he deems the best interests and the true glory of his country," Heaven save our country

A SMALL number of influential papers keep up the maudlin sentiment of Bryan's "honesty" and "sincerity." This is in face of such repeated declarations as that syndicates control our government, prosperity never followed the gold standard, dropping the silver dollar from the coinage was done secretly, and so on through a long list, every one of which is a palpable falsehood and must be known to be so by Bryan. In addition we have him daily talking about aristocrats and the rich robbing the poor. The poor in this country work for wages and wages rose fourteen per cent. in gold between 1873 and 1891; yet this man of sincerity and honesty spends half of his time trying to stir up the hatred of wage-earners against their employers. His whole daily course since his nomination has been a blazing falsehood. It is an axiom that wage-earners in this country are the best rewarded in the world, and their reward has been upon a rising scale for fifty years. They are a credit to American civilization. They have not been robbed by their employers and they do not feel that they have been robbed. There is a constant competition between labor and capital, but labor has no reason to feel dissatisfied with the way it has come off. Since 1893 a very large body of wage-earners have suffered the keenest anxiety for want of employment; but their course has not been one of bitterness and hatred of any other set of men. It has been patient and manly and an honor to them as citizens. In the meantime it would be well for respectable papers to stop talking about Bryan's honesty and sincerity.

WHEN Mr. McKinley becomes President, a determined onslaught will be made on him for offices. There is yet a considerable list which will be claimed as spoils, and the republicans have now active in the campaign many familiar personages who will go, after it is over, and demand pay. We do not know what Mr. McKinley intends to do about this, but we do know that there is no necessity of giving a single place as a reward for services. With the understanding that the vancancies, whether in fourth-class post-offices or in higher positions, are to be filled by a system which absolutely excludes politics, and by competitive tests whenever such tests are applicable, we are ready to admit that there are offices which have been seized by democrats merely as spoil, and which are not now under the civil service rules that might be vacated to make room for the new system. For instance, to vacate the Indianapolis postmastership to make room for a republican politician picked up on the street would be a gross and scandalous abuse of a President's power and a violation of the spirit of the republican platform and of Mr. McKinley's letter of acceptance. But to vacate that place for the purpose of filling it by competitive promotion open to assistant postmasters of other cities would be an entirely proper proceeding, and a great advance in administrative reform.

The New York Evening Post of September 11, says:

The recent defalcation of an Iowa postmaster has brought to light a shocking development of the spoils system in that state. The offender's story is that his downfall dates from the time when money was extorted from him by democratic politicians as the price of their support for his office. He says that he was forced to give a note for $500 to the chairman of the democratic county committee, and various amounts, aggregating $400 more, to another prominent democratic politician, who has been a member of the legislature, for alleged services in going to Washington in his behalf. The defaulter's story seems to be universally credited, and it does not surprise the public as much as it ought, because ever since the redistribution of post-offices began in 1893 ugly rumors have been continuously in circulation in regard to democratic committeemen and others supposed to have "pulls" selling their influence to the highest bidder. One democratic ex-congressman is declared to have written letters to various applicants for office saying that he would file their petitions free of charge, but adding, significantly, that if he were expected to "brief" the case, he should expect a fee. The Des Moines Leader, the democratic newspaper at the state capital, appears to believe these stories, and declares that "the matter should be probed to the bottom, and no matter what the social or political standing of the men concerned, full punishment should be meted out." It says plainly that "the democratic party must purify itself of such rottenness," since "no party can prosper with such jackals preying on it."

This illustrates what will happen on a great scale if Mr. Bryan has the opportunity he so eagerly awaited in his Ada speech: "I am not distributing post-offices yet, but I hope to be before very long."

GOVERNOR ALTGELD is a more dangerous man because he is a very shrewd man who knows how to run an administration so as to secure the commendation of the large number of business men who look no further than that in certain lines his administration is economically administered. He recently held his Cook county convention, and his real character is shown by an analysis of the convention made by Henry F. Donovan in the Eagle, as follows:

Of the delegates there have been on trial for murder	17
Sentenced to the penitentiary for murder or manslaughter and served sentence	7
Served terms in the penitentiary for burglary ..	36
Served terms in the penitentiary for picking pockets	2
Served term in the penitentiary for arson	1
Ex-bridewell and jail-birds, identified by detectives	84
Keepers of gambling houses	7
Keepers of houses of ill-fame	2
Convicted of mayhem	3
Ex-prizefighters	11
Poolroom proprietors	2
Saloon keepers	265
Lawyers	14
Physicians	3
Grain dealers	2
Political employes	148
Hatter	1
Stationer	1
Contractors	4
Grocer	1
Sign painter	1
Plumbers	4
Butcher	1
Druggist	1
Furniture supplies	1
Commission merchants	2
Ex-policemen	15
Dentist	1
Speculators	2
Justices of the peace	2
Ex-constable	1
Farmers	6
Undertakers	3
No occupation	71

Total delegates

In face of the above, the following from the Springfield Republican of October 2, is interesting:

We have never believed him to be as black as his enemies have painted him, and feel that the country will have to revise its first impetuous condemnation of the man as an anarchist and intentional foe of law and order.

His methods and his "blackness" are of the same sort as those of Platt and Gorman, and Quay and Tammany, with certain other attributes considered by many dangerous in a republican form of government.

WHEN Mayor Strong came into office he appointed three fire commissioners. One appointment was for fitness, and the other two were in the nature of political returns to organizations that had supported him. The mayor at that time apparently defined a non-partisan administration as one which "recognized" all the organizations of influence which had supported him. The natural results followed. Politics still did their bad work in the board, and Mr. Sheffield's efforts were nullified. Through the death of Commissioner Ford, the mayor has again been obliged to fill the office, which he has done this time entirely with reference to fitness. Says the New York Evening Post, "a more suitable selection could not have been made." The regeneration of New York city is surely coming. If the next legislature will undo the work of Platt and Tammany in tying up the hands of the police board, the greatest step will be taken. Meanwhile let us rejoice that Colonel Waring's street cleaning force appreciate a man who runs his department strictly upon the merit system. They mean to celebrate his return from Europe by a grand reception.

THE influence of New York for municipal reform over the whole country is well put by The Indianapolis News in its reference to Col. Waring's work. It says:

We venture the prediction that, no matter who may be in power in New York in future, Tammany Hall or any other party, New York will hereafter have clean streets. Col. Waring has demonstrated that the streets can be kept clean; the people have had experience of clean streets, and appreciate what they mean; they will never consent to go back to the old way.

Moreover, New York will now be a model in this respect for all other cities. People from all other cities of the country are constantly visiting New York. They return home to ask why their streets can not be cared for as those of New York are. Little by little their asking will become louder, till it will have to be answered in the right way.

THE CHRONICLE is in receipt of the following letter, which is not written by some foreign student of our affairs residing in Lapland, but comes from a student in a considerable town in Illinois in the autumn of 1896:

Would you please give me the address and name of some work (if any can be had) favoring "civil service."

I would very much like to get a copy of a book devoted to this subject, or if you can let me know where I can secure copies of speeches made on this subject I would be greatly obliged.

My object for wishing same is I have the negative side of the following question in a debate at school, "Should offices be used as the spoils of political victory?"

What can the writer have been reading for the past eight years? Certainly not the newspapers. There has not been, we believe, a leading paper that has not had every day facts or comments illustrating the spoils system or the merit system or both. The newspapers have made many "books devoted to this subject."

THE letter of Attorney-General Harmon to a Virginia district attorney who had been acting as chairman of a campaign committee and whose resignation he accepted is so excellent that we give it in full:

"Whatever rule may prevail in other departments, it is well settled in this, as stated in my letter, that there is an impropriety in officers like you acting as committeemen to manage and conduct political campaigns. The reasons are so manifest that they should not require more than a mere suggestion. As United States attorney you determine whom to prosecute and whom not to prosecute. You conduct or recommend the discontinuance of prosecutions already commenced. You have admission to the grand jury rooms, and indictments are found or refused largely upon your advice.

"If I concede that you are, as you to-day claimed to be, one of those rare men who are beyond the reach of the unconscious operation of feeling of personal favor or disfavor, as I am sure you are beyond reach of the conscious operation of such feelings, still the general confidence of the community in your conduct as a public officer of justice is at least at risk, if, while holding that office, you so engaged in the exciting and often bitter political campaigns in which the entire community is ranged on one side or the other. Your political work necessarily brings you in direct contact with people of all classes whose assistance you seek to gain or whose opposition you seek to overcome. It is impossible for you to have done the work which devolves on members of a campaign committee, especially in times of high feeling and great excitement, without gathering a crop of friendly and unfriendly feelings which, as common experience teaches, very often have an unconscious influence on thought and action.

"It is more than likely that some of the persons with whom your political action so brings you in contact will be involved in your future official action. You may be able, as you think you are, to escape or repress in what you do as an officer all effect of the recollections of your campaign work, but you will be utterly unable, especially in cases where your action may appear to coincide with your supposed inclination, to make the community believe that your action has not been in any degree so affected. And, as has often been said by those who have established and maintained the high standing of our tribunals of justice, it is not only necessary that their officers should be in fact fair and impartial, but also that they should avoid all circumstances likely to give rise to suspicion that they are or may be otherwise.

"The rule which I have mentioned is not new. It has been often enforced both by my predecessors and by myself. I now report that your case comes plainly within it."

THE Buffalo Express suggests that William F. Mackey, assistant United States district attorney for the northern district of New York, and one of the principal local free silver leaders, take note of the recent letter of Attorney General Harmon.

MR. ROOSEVELT sends a letter to the Buffalo Express stating that eight hundred more patrolmen must be appointed in New York City within the next four months, and that the opportunity for good men, who have lived one year in the state, to secure work at good wages is open to all without regard to politics or religion. Mr. Roosevelt has said recently that of late the class of men who have presented themselves for examination has not been as high as it should be. There has prevailed of late the suspicion that, after all, pulls were necessary to secure appointments. This is because of the political tactics of the political commissioner, Parker. This must give Mayor Strong many peace-destroying twinges.

CIVIL SERVICE reformers owe it as a duty to make a careful study of the methods of conducting campaigns and elections. An agitation which arouses in every citizen a healthy interest in the questions involved in the campaigns is highly beneficial. Just how much needs to be done to arouse this healthy interest can not be told, but regularly organized machinery for use in campaigns will always be necessary. In Indiana and some other states the extent and reach of this machinery and the amount of time given by individuals during a campaign is surprising. The problem is this: that heretofore, as a general rule, such individuals, in case of victory, have demanded and have received the public offices in payment of the services so rendered. But these offices are now very largely cut off and in the near future will be entirely so. Those who have heretofore worked for offices and who will not hereafter work without them can be spared. As a matter of fact a very large number of them have been paid actual wages for the work they have done in campaigns, and their clamor for further pay of any kind has been without reason. We expect to see the character of party committees somewhat changed.

Now they are usually made up of politicians who "want something." When there is nothing to give, we expect to see their places taken by substantial citizens from patriotic motives entirely who will have executive agents selected for their peculiar fitness and paid adequately. This system is already springing up in Indiana. Much of the work of taking the poll, which is done ninety, sixty and thirty days before national elections, is paid for, and in some instances county chairmen, whose time is incessantly occupied, receive regular wages. The change from paying with offices to paying with wages would be an improvement of the healthiest kind. The efficiency of the workers will be incomparably improved, and it is doubtful if the new system will cost so much money as the old, because the funds will be handled by men of business instead of by politicians.

The grand jury in its recent report says of the poor farm in this city:

We found in this institution the same spoils system which we found in the county workhouse. All of the appointments, from superintendent down, are made by the county commissioners. Some of the appointees are aged and most of them have had no experience in the line of the duties imposed upon them.

The jury most earnestly recommended that this institution be placed in the hands of a man who is an expert; that he may be charged with the selection of his subordinates and held responsible for their conduct, and that a superintendent should not be removed except for cause.

We must go farther. The superintendent must be an expert and must not be removed except for cause, but he must not be charged with the "selection" of his subordinates. He must be charged with their dismissal for cause. These places must be open to be publicly competed for by any one, and those best fitted for the places must have them. If, after their probation, they are found to be qualified for their work, they must be kept so long as they do the work satisfactorily. Is it not strange that a community so highly civilized as is this, so deeply interested in social problems, should sit still and let its helpless old men and women, its blind and insane and idiot paupers be at the mercy of the appointees of political workers who if not the typical heelers have no fitness for these positions? It is barbarous.

WHEN our politician mayor, Mr. Taggart, broke down the merit system inaugurated by his predecessor and compulsory under the city charter, he probably did not foresee for how many humiliations he was preparing himself. The latest account we take from the Indianapolis News of September 29:

Charges of drunkenness and action unbecoming an officer have been preferred against Patrolman Timothy O'Connor, who will be suspended this evening at roll-call awaiting his trial by the board of safety. Superintendent Colbert has been investigating recent complaints against O'Connor, who has been stationed at the tunnel. It is charged that O'Connor was drunk Sunday morning. As John Leaman, of 238 South West street, was going to his work at an early hour he encountered O'Connor coming home staggering, so it is charged. O'Connor objected to Leaman looking at him, and grabbing him, threatened to send him to police headquarters. Witnesses say that O'Connor drew his club, threatening to arrest Mrs. Leaman, at the same time striking toward her. Leaman then gave O'Connor a severe thrashing and sent him home.

O'Connor was dismissed by the last administration for inefficiency. He was before the present board for leaving his district and was fined. He has been the standing joke of two administrations. Many stories are in circulation of his wit and prowess. It is told how he captured a primary for Mr. Taggart by pulling his mace, and, after threatening to send the opposition to the station, declared the Taggart delegation elected.

We commend, for reflection, the account in another column of the recent suspension of two republican appointees of November last year and May this year for cowardice and worse so that at roll-call, the superintendent says their comrades fell away from them and would not speak to them. Whose pull secured these men their appointments?

OUR present police administration deserves a place in municipal history. A policeman during a period of weeks repeatedly left his beat for immoral purposes. He was finally suspended, and with his suspension a report of his sergeant was handed in stating the reasons. The suspended officer treated the matter very lightly and freely boasted that nothing worse would happen to him than a further suspension. His confidence in his pull was well founded. The board looked into the matter and suspended him for thirty days, and by order of President Maguire of the board, the charges although an official record were destroyed. The facts, however, were known to too many people, and some very black clouds began to gather in the municipal horizon. At the first appearance of these there was a hurrying to and fro in the city administration. If the matter could have been hushed up this policeman with a pull would have been back on the force to day; but the minute there was a sign that it might be dragged into daylight, the cowardly and corrupt officials who had had a hand in it caused the offending policeman "to resign."

BRYAN IN WASHINGTON ON THE CENTENNIAL OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

The 19th of September, the centennial of Washington's farewell address, as it was marked in this city by a political meeting in the interest of William J. Bryan, who aspires to the seat of Washington, Jefferson, and Lincoln, was a day of humiliation to persons who prize the country's honor. The patriotic message of Washington was read in full, and Mr. Bryan presumed to take from it texts with which to close his harangue. One hundred years from Washington to Bryan! A century from the farewell address to the Chicago platform! At the Bryan meeting, A. A. Lipscomb, an eloquent spellbinder, referred in glowing phrase to a long list of ancient worthies, calling each by name, and his audience made no response. When he got down to Andrew Jackson, however, and the crowd scented a name they had heard before, the applause was enough to make up for the silence which had been accorded to the unknown orators of the ancient world.

An earnest advocate of the civil service reform movement called at the congressional headquarters of the Bryan democracy a week or more ago, and requested that it should be suggested to the presidential candidate, who had been advertised to speak here, that no more appropriate topic for the time and place could be found than the spoils plank of the Chicago platform. This is the city where the greater part of the administrative force of the government are employed, and the centennial of Washington's farewell was certainly a fitting time to discuss a subject so vitally related to the federal government as the public service. Mr. Bryan took the hint, and of the two sections of the Chicago platform which he declared to be of especial interest to this city, one was the plank against a "life tenure in the public service." While he said nothing that he has not said before, his plan avowal on this occasion of his belief in the old spoils system, and his desire to reestablish it, was one of the saddest features of the whole spectacle.

Mr. Bryan wants the government employes to have a fixed term, so that when appointed they will know how long they have got to stay and when they are to go out, and with no prospect of "a life position in the public service." It has been often pointed out that the average length of service of those who come into clerkships through the civil service examinations is less than that of those who entered under the old spoils regime, and so if the length of time that a man's name remains on the pay-roll is really the vital point, the present system should be less objectionable than that which Mr. Bryan seeks to restore. It may safely be set down, however, that the Bryanite objection to civil service reform on the ground of life-tenure is a "bluff" designed to cover the spoilsman's ordinary aims. Government salaries on the fixed-term principle, and distributed among the "humbler classes of our citizens," as Mr. Bryan proposed in his celebrated Chicago convention speech, would mean just so much prize money for party workers. Not ten per cent. of the money thus paid need ever get for the taxpayer any legitimate return, while the civil service system means an approach to those business methods by which every taxpayer's dollar shall secure one dollar's worth of public service honorably performed.

It is unnecessary to discuss the two systems. The spoils plan is entirely discredited on every side, and yet here was a candidate for the presidency boldly championing the old system with pious fervor after reading Washington's farewell address. One would mistake entirely the temper of Mr. Bryan's audience if one should assert that the speaker failed to carry his hearers on that point. There were no government clerks at the Bryan meeting, and Washington is divided on the civil service reform idea between the "ins" and the "outs." The latter are all "ag'in' it," and it was mostly the outs who attended the Bryan meeting, and no doubt his promise to treat the public service as so much plunder and spoil of war materially strengthens the ardor of his supporters.

It is probable that in the presence of the great financial issue this question of civil service reform may be neglected. Certainly, if the Chicago platform had agreed substantially with that at St. Louis, except in this particular, the friends of good government throughout the land would have made a vigorous campaign upon this one issue alone. In the presence of other, and perhaps larger dangers, this ominous threat may be comparatively overlooked.—Washington letter to New York Evening Post, September 21.

NEW YORK BRYAN-POPOCRATIC CONVENTION AT BUFFALO.

Senator Thomas F. Grady had been selected as temporary chairman. In his speech he said:

We are opposed to civil service reform as now interpreted and enforced, under which, while pretending to prescribe no other test than that of merit, in its present application exacts a collegiate and technical education as a requisite for employment in the public service. We recognize the fact that a vast majority of the youth of the country are now compelled to engage as wage-earners and bread-winners without any opportunity for advanced technical education, and we insist that honesty of character and the ability to discharge the duties of the position for which they apply, or to which they may be appointed, shall be the only test of fitness to which they shall be required to submit.

THE BROTHERHOOD OF SPOILSMEN.

What Mr. Black's candidacy seems to promise is the breaking up of the "combine" between the political rascals of the two great parties which has been in force, to a greater or less degree, at Albany since the advent of Hill to the governorship in 1885. Under this combine the rascals stood together for mutual protection when either set of them was assaulted. They united in the old aqueduct "deal," with Mr. Fish as one of the manipulators and beneficiaries, and they have stood together pretty steadily ever since. The reason why Mr. Fish can not abide Mr. Black is because the latter exposed and denounced him in his hidden efforts as speaker to protect the Murphy gang in Troy against hostile legislation. Fish learned in that experience that, however much of a republican partisan Mr. Black might be, he was not the kind of a republican partisan who was willing to "stand in" with the political rascals of the democratic party; he might be a member of Mr. Platt's machine, and might believe in machine politics, but he was incapable of accepting and wearing a set of diamond shirt-studs from Tammany legislators in return for services rendered, and was incapable also of accepting a $5,000 office from Gov. Hill in payment of services rendered in lobbying an infamous "deal" bill through the legislature. It is for reasons of this kind that Mr. Black's nomination is at once discouraging to the Hill democrats and so distasteful to Mr. Fish that he thinks of leaving the country, two effects which constitute excellent reasons why honest men of all parties should vote for Mr. Black in confident belief that he will make a good governor.—New York Post, September 11.

* * *

Michael J. Dady, who left the republican party several years ago and joined the democrats, and who only last year returned to the republican ranks, is now one of the leaders in that party, and on Saturday night was selected as a member of the republican state committee from the third district. Mr. Dady has made considerable money in the contracting business. While John Y. McKane was running things at Coney Island Dady was his favorite contractor and secured many of the paying jobs at that place. He had an office with McKane at 44 Court street, Brooklyn.

He expects to secure the republican nomination for the assembly from the first district of Brooklyn. He is also anxious to become a colonel on the staff of the next governor if a republican be elected.

Is it not curious that this sort of "mugwump" is always in good standing with the machine; is never giped and sneered at, and finally gets his political office or job?

THE BRYAN SORT OF "COERCION" AND "INTIMIDATION."

A letter is being circulated among letter carriers, custom house employes, and other officials in federal employ, asking for funds to help elect Bryan and Sewall. Such solicitation is against the spirit and the letter of the law.—Philadelphia Record.

* * *

The Bryan campaign committee is sending under date of September 12, a letter to the postmasters of the country for help. We quote a part:

Will you oblige me by sending as soon as possible a list of 100 or more democrats in your state whom you consider likely contributors to our funds? I desire to address them urgent letters soliciting their assistance at this time.

Knowing the burdens that must fall upon you during the campaign, I hesitate to address you as to aiding us directly, but if you could make some pledge at this time on behalf of your state it would be exceedingly helpful.

You can see the importance of knowing what we can depend on at as early a date as possible.

I enclose you herewith a blank pledge of contribution. If you find it impracticable to give direct assurance of assistance could you undertake to circulate a number of these pledges?

Thanking you in advance for your interest and the assistance I am confident you will render to the effort to secure funds, I am faithfully yours,

DANIEL J. CAMPAU,
Chairman democratic campaign committee.

The Chicago Times-Herald is authority for the statement "that Gov. Altgeld this week ordered an assessment of $5 each upon the employes of the Southern Illinois Hospital for the Insane at Anna, the money to be used for campaign purposes. The order applies to both male and female attendants at that institution. Many of the persons so assessed made vigorous protests, but they were informed very plainly that if the money was not forthcoming there would be several vacancies in Dr. Lentz's corps of assistants. They were further told that this contribution was not all that was expected, and that if the exigencies of the campaign demanded it, more money would be collected."

NO COERCION IN BALTIMORE.

When Mr. Hopkins, the collector of taxes, presented the monthly draft for the salaries of his department to Mayor Hooper last week, there were embarrassing consequences. The custom of the collector is to retain the money out of his collections, and afterward to have the draft signed in the regular form as matter of record. On Tuesday the salaries were paid, while the check was not signed for several days. The delay was owing to certain inquiries of Mayor Hooper, and the incident is important as illustrating the decaying system of campaign assessments.

When the check came before Mayor Hooper he asked the collector if it called for the full amount of the salaries, and represented the money that had been paid to the employes. The collector at once admitted that the usual campaign assessment had been retained by him out of the salaries, but added that it had been done with the approval of the men. He insisted that no one had been forced to contribute. The delicious part of his explanation was that, as there were both democratic and republican employes in the department, care would be taken to send the contributions proportionately to the democratic and republican committees.

Mayor Hooper firmly declined to sign the check until the assessments were refunded to the men by the collector. All the week the contention went on, but it ended in the refunding of the money, after which the mayor signed the check.

It was in Baltimore that George William Curtis made his last public address. It was on civil service reform, before the Civil Service Reform Association. At that time Baltimore and Maryland were somewhat notorious for their anti-civil service reform records. The federal offices in the city were regarded with suspicion, and the post-office was the object of official inquiry by the civil service board. Gorman was apparently entrenched in power beyond any hope of dislodgment, and the most practical kind of practical politics ruled in the city and state. Civil service reform was treated with open derision and contempt.

And yet in these few years changes have come beyond the furthest expectations of Mr. Curtis's address. Gorman and Rasin have been overthrown. There is in the City Hall a mayor who practices as well as preaches civil service reform. And there has not been the slightest infringement of the civil service law in any of the federal offices. The post-office, which was formerly the cause of so much concern to the civil service reformers, is resting absolutely on the merit system, with the result of a wonderfully improved service.

The republicans, who carried the state last fall, won their fight largely on the plank in their platform calling for the merit system in all state and local offices. They had such a big majority in the legislature that the spoils-men of the party, led by the delegate who achieved local fame by the sentiment, "Let us not despoil the vineyard before we get some of the grapes," began a fight against any civil service legislation. Twice the bill was defeated, but the contest waged, and at the last moment a bill was passed submitting the question to the popular vote at the next general election. That election will come next year. This bill was not satisfactory to the friends of reform, but as it was the best they could get, they will make the contest at the polls. The spoilsmen declare they will win, but while they are boasting the merit system is making its way firmly in the public mind, and is gaining steadily by the object lessons such as are daily evident to the people.

Resolute Mayor Hooper has killed the system of extortion that has been for twenty years the financial reliance of such men as Gorman and Rasin. "I do not deny the right of any city employe to make a political campaign contribution," he says, "but I am opposed to coercion."

The city government of Baltimore remains in the same curious condition. While the heads of the departments, with a few exceptions, are republicans, almost all the employes are democrats. This is due to the quarrel between the mayor and the city council. Mayor Hooper at the beginning of the year did not please the councilmen in his appointments. They especially objected to a republican mayor appointing democrats. The mayor held out, and the councilmen combined and rejected his appointments. They went further than that. They passed ordinances taking from the mayor the power of appointment in all the important offices of the city. The mayor vetoed the ordinances, and they were passed over his objections by a margin of one vote. This necessary two-thirds was secured by getting two of the democratic members to leave the chamber while the vote was cast. The council made its appointments, and when the new tax collector appeared before the mayor the mayor refused to swear him in. Then the matter was taken to the courts. The main question was whether a vote of two-thirds meant two-thirds of all the members or only two-thirds of the quorum present. The lower courts have had the case for six months, and it will reach the court of appeals next month.

Mr. Hopkins, the collector of taxes, is a democrat holding over until the decision is reached.—Baltimore dispatch New York Times, September 7.

IS THIS WORK TO BE DESTROYED?

A small application of civil service principles to the navy is indicated in an order made by the President placing ship writers in line of promotion to the grade of chief yeoman, whose compensation is $60 per month. This was done by simply designating the first, second and third-class writers as yeomen of similar classes, and hereafter vacancies in the grade of chief yeoman will be filled from the men of first-class grade, who formerly found it impossible to rise above the rank of first-class writers. The order is expected to stimulate the zeal of these officers, who have heretofore been subject to degradation at the whim of the commanding officers by making them permanent members of an established corps.—Washington Dispatch, October 3.

* * *

Ten thousand employes of the war department were classified in the civil service yesterday, in accordance with the order of the President of May 6 last, which extended the operations of the law to practically all government employes except those laborers whose work does not require technical skill, or intelligence above an ordinary degree. The order has been interpreted by Secretary Lamont to include even laborers who perform duties requiring a comparatively mediocre intelligence, and in his own office but two persons, the confidential clerks of himself and Assistant Secretary Doe, remain outside the classified lists. The chief clerk of the department and all the heads of divisions are included in the lists.—Washington dispatch, September 2.

MR. BRYAN, YOU SHALL NOT COERCE PUBLIC EMPLOYES.

Official circulars were posted in the various departments of the custom house yesterday, in which Secretary Carlisle directs that all customs officers shall use every possible means to call the attention of employes to the provisions all the civil service law, so far as they relate to contributions of money for political campaign purposes. In pursuance of this order, Collector Kilbreth issued the following notice:

"All employes connected with this district are hereby notified that they are under no obligations whatsoever to make subscriptions for political or other purposes, and that they will not be molested or in any way discriminated against for failure to so subscribe."

The notice was posted in the office of each deputy collector, the attention of the clerks was called to it, and each clerk was requested to affix his signature or initials to the notice as evidence that he had read it.—New York Times, September 1.

THE COMPETITION SYSTEM WINS ITS WAY.

The world moves. The application of Gen. Collis of the department of public works to have the inspectors of streets in his department selected by competitive examinations under the civil service rules is a sign of it. It is not many months since the exemption of these offices from the rules was regarded as one of the choicest privileges of the department. They are peculiarly suited for use as "patronage," being well paid and carrying considerable "influence," if used after the old political fashion. But Gen. Collis very shrewdly sees that the duties of the offices require the best men and that competitive examinations secure the best men. If he has any desire to get political advantage, he perceives that honest and efficient work in his department will give him more and better political advantage than the employment of politicians as inspectors.—New York Times, September 7.

ALTGELD'S VERSION OF PUBLIC OFFICE IS A PUBLIC TRUST.

He has spurned the charges of Mr. Forman but he appears to be sending out at the state's expense his explanation of how he comes to be requiring gold leases.

The jailor of Sangamon county has received a circular from the state board of charities inviting him to attend a conference of officials interested in charitable work, to be held in this city November 17 and 18. This circular was dated September 1, nearly three months ahead of the date of the proposed conference. It came by mail in an envelope bearing the official imprint of the state board, and with it was inclosed the gold rent explanation.

BROOKLYN ALDERMAN TRY TO CRIPPLE THE MERIT SYSTEM.

Here are three facts as to civil service reform in Brooklyn: (1) The commission of which Mr. Alexander E. Orr—a citizen of the very highest character and of sound judgment—is the president, asked for an appropriation of $25,000 for its work for the year. That is a moderate sum; considering the extensive and permanent benefits conferred on the city by the work of the commission, it is a very small sum. (2) The board of estimate and apportionment, for reasons to which they probably yielded in good faith, but which, in view of what the civil service commission's work is really worth, were inadequate, fixed the appropriation at $15,000, a cut of 40 per cent. (3) The board of aldermen, in a spirit of pure spite, ignoring the real interests of the city and their obligations to protect those interests, cut the appropriation down to the merely nominal sum of $5,000. The commission appealed to the courts, but Justice Dickey of the supreme court finds no authority to compel the common council to do its duty. He declares that the commission needs the money, but if the common council refuse it is an abuse of legal discretion that can not be prevented.—New York Times.

[The aldermen backed down and allowed $15,000 on the advice of party leaders that it would be "bad politics" to cripple the commission.—Ed. CHRONICLE.]

THE MERIT SYSTEM IN MILWAUKEE.

The city civil service law, under the provisions of which the method of employment of all the clerical force and all skilled and unskilled labor of the city was entirely changed, has now been in force fourteen months. Its system has proven so well adapted to the needs of the public service and promotive of a higher standard of proficiency that, in spite of defects in its executive administration, which have been recently corrected, the operation of the law may be now regarded as generally acceptable and its principles permanently engrafted on the civic system.

Even those who at first were loath to abandon the long prevailing practice of investing elective offices and political party committees with paramount influence in the distribution of appointments have become convinced that the plan of non-partisan selection and permanent tenure during good behavior will promote the efficiency of the public service, and moreover that reputable party organization will thrive better on principle than on patronage.—Milwaukee Sentinel, September.

BOSS MARTIN'S SHERIFF.

Of James Miles, nominated for sheriff in Philadelphia, the Municipal League of that city says: "His conduct in public office has been such as to justly earn for him the distrust of every friend of honest government and the confidence of its enemies." "If such a man," the Philadelphia Times (Ind. Dem.) says, "can be elected sheriff of Philadelphia, at the dictation of Lobbyist Martin, and that at a time when his own as well as Martin's connection with corrupt legislation in the city councils is fresh in the public mind, the hardest things that have been said by the critics of American politics would be justified."

THE REFORM SYSTEM IN ROCHESTER.

Should the new rules that have been prepared by the secretary of the civil service board of this city receive the approval of Mayor Warner and the state civil service commission, the cause of civil service reform here will take a great step forward. Under the new rules, all municipal employes will be divided into three classes. Those belonging to schedule A are exempt from civil service examination and include the superintendent of schools, the overseer of the poor, the corporation counsel, the three police commissioners, and the three city assessors. All those subject to competitive examination belong to schedule B, which includes the city clerk, the fire marshal, the city sealer, etc. Schedule C includes all those obliged to take non-competitive examinations; but they must pass at a standing of eighty-five to secure appointment. To this class belong the assistants of the corporation counsel, who shall retain his charter right to appoint them from a certified list. No person included in the competitive class will be certified that stands on examination under 75 per cent.

All the appointees of the board of education except the superintendent of the public schools and the teachers will have to submit to the examinations of the civil service board. The appointment of teachers will also be subject to regulations. Candidates for such appointments will have to present regents' certificates of their proficiency. When the board of education wishes to appoint any teachers, the civil service commissioners will submit a certified list arranged according to the standing on the regents' examination. From this list, and not from the names presented by political friends, all teachers must be selected.

Two important provisions of the new rules relate to the registration of laborers and to the prohibition of political activity on the part of municipal employes. Hereafter all persons seeking work as laborers must register their names with the civil service commissioners. The appointments made by the several departments requiring laborers will be made in the following order: Veterans with families, veterans without families, others with families, others without families. It is believed that this provision will put an end to complaints to the mayor that persons not veterans have been able, in consequence of their political influence, to get more work than veterans themselves. The other provision prohibits the solicitation of votes at polls or elsewhere, the collection of campaign funds, and all interference with the political rights of any citizen. The penalty attached to this provision is dismissal from office.

There is no doubt that the rules will be approved by Mayor Warner. They were prepared by a commission of his own appointment, and they are taken to represent his own views. Their adoption and enforcement in this city depends, therefore, upon the state civil service board. Whether George Alldridge, who would find his power much curtailed by them, has sufficient influence with the board to secure their rejection remains to be seen.—Rochester dispatch New York Post, September 25.

SPECIMEN POLICEMEN UNDER THE PULL SYSTEM.

Patrolmen Ernest W. Smith and E. O. Marquette have been suspended by Superintendent Colbert, pending an investigation into charges against them. The charges comprise cowardice, neglect of duty and conduct unbecoming officers.

The suspensions grow out of the failure to arrest Edward Hathaway, wanted for burglary and grand larceny. Monday night at roll-call the superintendent informed all the patrolmen that Hathaway was wanted, that a warrant was held for his arrest, and he instructed all the men that if they saw him they must arrest him at once. Smith and Marquette went into the drug store of E. E. Stewart at Senate avenue and Twelfth street about 8:30 o'clock that night. Hathaway was there. He had been using the telephone. Marquette knew him, and shook hands with him. Smith, after some talk, walked to the rear of the store, and then the proprietor told Smith that the man talking to Marquette was Hathaway. Marquette and Hathaway went outside and Hathaway showed the patrolman his revolver. Then Marquette and Hathaway walked away. Afterward Marquette asked Smith why he had not followed them and helped him to arrest Hathaway. The policemen went to Hathaway's house in Highland Place and failed to find him there, although Marquette had conducted him to the front door and had told him to go in and go to bed. Later Marquette saw Hathaway on the rear end of a street car going down town. He boarded the car, and, according to Frank Wyatt, the conductor of the car, he placed his hand on Hathaway's shoulder and said: "Ed, I've got to arrest you. If you don't make any resistance I'll make it all right with you."

Hathaway got off the car and Marquette followed him. Then the two men, standing not ten feet from each other, drew their revolvers and fired, mostly in the air. Then Hathaway fled. It is not known what became of Marquette.

Persons who were in Stewart's drug store at the time Hathaway and the two policemen were talking, say that Hathaway said to Marquette: "You are a public servant, carry my valise." Marquette took the valise and carried it about. Hathaway and the patrolman had some talk on the sidewalk and Hathaway seemed to be serene and in full control of the situation.—Indianapolis News, September 23.

TILLMAN SPOILS.

Add to this the scandals of his administration, with the bond deal in which it is charged and generally believed that he shared the commission of the Augusta broker, Rhind, in refunding the state debt; the scandal of the state liquor dispensary when under his sole management, about which there have lingered many suspicions, and as to which he himself, in the last hours of a heated canvass, made damaging disclosures, which as governor he had concealed from the people for nearly a year, in breach of his public trust; his open and shameless employment of the army of dispensary officials and constabulary as his political emissaries throughout the whole state; and the repeated charge and general belief that the state liquor dispensary had also become utterly corrupt by the taking of rebates by the state officers for liquors purchased by the state, and the bribes alleged to be given for special liquor privileges granted by state officials—these and many other scandals were heaped upon the reform administration and its leader by reformers themselves, and particularly by John T. Duncan, the reform opponent of Gov. Evans on the stump, who, though heretofore unknown, and personally standing no chance of election, in every joint debate repeated these charges at length and in detail to the people.—Charleston, S. C., letter to New York Evening Post, September 17.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE

LUCIUS B. SWIFT, EDITOR.

Volume I,

HARRISON'S ADMINISTRATION, MARCH, 1889, TO MARCH, 1893.

INDEX

By CHARLES ALLEN LEWIS.

- Abbott, P. S., civil service reformer of Cambridge, Mass., 204.
- Abbott, R. T. F., clerk in Indiana senate, 408.
- Ables, postmaster of St. Joe Station, Indiana political worker, 379, 380.
- Acceptance, letter of President Harrison of, strongly favoring civil service reform, 27.
- Active Club [republican]. See Baltimore investigation, 267.
- Adams and Vincennes post-office. See Chambers, 37.
- Adams, —, candidate for alderman. See Buffalo, N. Y., 197.
- Adams, Sec Tammany, 318.
- Adams, Pres. C. K., favors clerical recognition of civil service reform, 48.
- Adams [congressman] and Chicago post-office, 22.
- Adams, E. P., federal employe, levies political assessments. See Kentucky.
- Adams, H., uses influence for appointment of Throop, 59.
- Adams, J., on party spirit, 394.
- Adams, J. Q., president, 325.
- Adams, N. S., journalist, postmaster at Scott, Kan., 149.
- Adams, T. M., reports to Mayor Grant on street cleaning in New York: advises merit system, 220, 221.
- Adams, W. W., appointed postmaster at Quincy, Mass., through Congressman Morse; vice Speare, removed, 100; a political worker, 162.
- Addison, Ia., Postmaster Cruikshank of, a political worker, 260.
- Addison, Joseph, inspector for men of merit in public life, 235.
- Addison, N. Y., Roberts, postmaster of, a political worker, 266.
- Address, of G. W. Curtis (1892), distributed in Indiana, 338; inaugural of President W. H. Harrison, the public press and spoils, 17; inaugural of President B. Harrison, reform pledges in, 367; of mayor of Baltimore, Md., to Gorman, 236; to the citizens of Pennsylvania, against "Quayism," 249, 251, 252; issued by Pennsylvania republicans against Quay, extract from, 270.
- Addresses, on civil service reform, merit system, spoils system, etc., etc. See Church and Civil Service Reform; also (names) J. E. Campbell; S. S. Parr; H. Briggs; R. H. Dabney; C. Schurz; Donell; Lowell, J. R.; Roosevelt; R. H. Dana; G. W. Julian; C. B. Wilby; T. F. Bayard; Welsh; G. F. Williams; Johnson, J. H.; Swift, L. B.; Curtis, G. W.; Everett, W.; Bonaparte, C. J.; H. C. Lodge; Rogers, S. S.; Warner, C. D.; Sprague, H.; Sherman (senator); Civil Service Record; Foulke; Lambert, Rev. H.; Storey, M.; F. A. Walker; C. C. Allen; Collin; L. H. Gibson; D. C. Brown; C. T. Lane; Thurston; Niblack; Wort; McKain, A. A.
- Adel, Iowa, Journalist Hotchkiss appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Ader, representative in Indiana legislature, and spoils methods in, 407.
- Adin, Cal., Editor Wilson appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Adkins, S. D., journalist, appointed postmaster at Freeport, Ill., 126.
- Administrative reform. See Andrews.
- Adreon, Cal., and appointment of Sears in post-office at Baltimore, 277.
- Agar, W. F., postmaster at Mahopac Falls, N. Y., a political worker, 162.
- Agnew, S., on English census service, 292.
- Agnus, F., editor and politician, 363.
- Ahearn, D., removed on suspicion of being disloyal to Harrison, 300.
- Aiken, J. M., clerk in Indiana senate, 408.
- Aikin, W. A., praises CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 110.
- Airey, United States marshal at Baltimore, political worker. See Baltimore Investigation, 267, 328, 357, 372.
- Alta, Buena Vista county, Ia., Pickering, postmaster of, a political worker, 260.
- Abbot, Rev. L. and Indian, appointments; favors clerical recognition of civil service reform, 48.
- Akron, Col., Journalist Irwin appointed postmaster at, 126.
- Akron, Ind., Editor Noyes appointed postmaster at, 126, 377.
- Akron, O., postmaster of, appointed through influence of Sherman, 340.
- Alabama. See Clay, removal of; R. A. Mosely, Jr., politician, appointed collector of internal revenue for district of, 56; federal office-holders in, active politicians, 143, 348, 355; delegation to Minneapolis convention, fights in, 346; political assessments levied on federal office-holders in, 391.
- Alaska, O. T. Porter appointed United States Marshal for, 39; vote of for Harrison at Minneapolis; political activity of federal officers, 347.
- Albany, N. Y., O'Leary, postmaster at, 136; per cent. of removals in classified and unclassified service in post-office at, 185; Tammany steals in, 317; Warner spoken of as postmaster of, 46; Warner, postmaster of, enforces civil service law, 51, 136; Warner, postmaster of, in New York convention, 335.
- Albany Journal [republican] against civil service reform, 49.
- Albert Lea, Minn., Harkness, postmaster at, removed for cause by Cleveland, Stacy appointed; efficient. Removed and Harkness reappointed by Harrison. See also Dunnell, 39.
- Albion, Ill., Editor Colyer appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Albion, Ind., Editor Prickett appointed postmaster at, 126, 377.
- Albright, A., low politician. See Philadelphia.
- Aldermau, E. R., editor, postmaster at Marietta, O., 301.
- Alderson, J. D., congressman, on house committee, on civil service, 86; on census service in West Virginia, 293.
- Aldrich, C. H., favors civil service reform, 229.
- Aldrich, senator, at Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Alexander, state senator of Pennsylvania, 133.
- Alexander, Mrs. C. M., appointed stenographer in Indiana legislature, 406.
- Alexander, D. S., United States district attorney in New York, political worker at Minneapolis, 342, 343.
- Alexandria, La., Barrett, postmaster of, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Alger, General, more popular than Harrison, 240.
- Spoken of for presidency, 299, 348.
- Allan, S. W., federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Allard, C. A. See Baltimore investigation, 320, 326, 327.
- Allegheny Co., N. Y., postmasters' association, levies political assessments, 384.
- Allegheny, Pa., patronage in, 47; Gilliland, postmaster of, worker for Bayne, 135; supporter of Quay, suspected by Harrison, 299.
- Allen, ex-congressman, levies political assessments, 322, 332.
- Allen, "The," low politician of New York City, history of. See also New York City, 249.
- Allen, C. C., at Baltimore conference, 1889, 2.
- In report of, to civil service reform association of Missouri on civil service commission, 136.
- Prefers bureaucracy to spoils system, 308.
- Allen county, Ind., only office-holders in, for Harrison, 240.
- Allen, Eban, protests against removal of Milholand, as federal interference, 333.
- Allen, Edgar, federal court officer, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Allen, F. B., negro journalist, opposes Harrison, wants offices for negroes, 244.
- Allen, J. B., congressman, secures appointment of Marse as postmaster at Colfax, Wash., 166.
- Allen, S. B., deputy collector internal revenue, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Alley, F., political worker against Chase, 353.
- Allison, A., editor, supported by Congressman Cooper for postmaster of Nashville, Ind., 398.
- Allison, senator, and D. B. Eaton, 111; secures appointment of Osborn, 334.
- Almy, candidate of Platt, at Ithaca, N. Y., 264.
- Almy, F., secretary Buffalo civil service reform association, 200, 387.
- Altgeld, governor of Illinois, flees from office-seekers, 415.
- Alton, Pa., Postmaster Beaumont of, worker for Delamater, 134.
- Altoona, Kan., Journalist Rhea, postmaster at, 148.
- American Horse, Indian chief and rising at Pine Ridge, S. D., 218.
- American Protective League, requests lists of voters from postmasters, 330; seeks to assess postmasters, 382.
- Americus Club. See Quay and Clarkson.
- Ames, J. B., civil service reformer of Cambridge, Mass., 204.
- Anderson, A. T., appointed postmaster at Cleveland, O., 216.
- Anderson, C. W., federal employe in New York convention, 335.
- Anderson, Ind., spoils system in town government at, 331.
- Anderson, J. A., deputy sheriff, inefficient, 315.
- Anderson, W. G., Sr., police examiner at Brooklyn, N. Y., 222.
- Andrews, C. C., address on administrative reform, 23.
- Andrews, E. L. See Seneca county, N. Y., 260.
- Andrews, G. W., postmaster at Murphysboro, Ill., forced to resign, 165.
- Andrews, Ind., Courts, postmaster of, father of Editor Coutts, 316.
- Andrew, J. E., opposed to civil service reform, according to Grosvenor, 204; chairman house civil service committee, extensions proposed by, 305, 306; bill of, introducing merit system in labor service, commended, 321; and appointments under civil service rules, 350; and political activity of federal office-holders in Alabama, 355; chairman of house civil service committee, 86, 358; bill of, for reform in labor service, commended by workingmen, 331; bill of, to regulate appointments of fourth class postmasters; and to introduce Boston labor service system, 359, 388, 397; Secretary C. Foster, 330; opposed to congressional patronage system, 405.
- Andrews, W. H., chairman state republican committee of Pennsylvania, corrupt politician, 133, 134; political agent of Senator Quay, 38, 260.
- Angler, E. A., assistant United States district attorney, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Aunapolis, Md., appointment to naval academy at. See Turner, 100; Tucker, postmaster of, in Maryland convention, 335.
- Anti-Cobden club, of Philadelphia, resolutions of, demanding repeal of civil service law, 49.
- Appeal, to President, against civil service commission, threatened. See Indianapolis, investigation of post office of, 28.
- Appointees, unworthy, at various places, 39.
- Appointing power, resides in executive officers alone, 263.
- Appointments, from eligible lists, year 1889-90, 185.
- Internal revenue; squabble between Senators May and Sherman, 17.
- Applegarth, Rev. H. C., advocates civil service reform, 83.
- Apple River, to Daviess county, Ill., applicants for postmastership at, 109.
- Applicants, for office under spoils and merit systems, 185.

Arcola, Ind., Rockhill, postmaster of, removed through influence of Postmaster Higgins; McGoogle appointed, 362.

Arkaion, Kan., Journalist Stoufer appointed postmaster at, 148.

Arkansas, patronage of, controlled by Clayton, 188. Political activity of federal officers in, 347, 348.

Armour, H. O., political worker for Platt, 333. At Minneapolis convention, 344.

Armstrong. See Baltimore investigation, 326.

Armstrong, consul-general Rio Janeiro, removed by Harrison for political reasons, 54.

Armstrong, G. C., journalist, postmaster at Moline, Kan., 149.

Arthur, C. A., tool of "Tom" Murphy, controls New York custom house, 191.

Arthur, President, and Pendleton act, 10; and Postmaster Pearson, 12; and office-seekers, 24; Senator Harrison demands patronage in Indiana from, 31; removes Naval Officer Burt to make room for politician. See Burt, 52; Pardons E. S. Ransdall, 80; nominates M. Garrigus, corrupt politician, 88; appoints Langsdale postmaster at Greencastle, Ind., 89, 159; classifies departmental service, 185, 215; controls patronage, but fails of renomination, 262; appoints D. B. Eaton chairman civil service commission, 271, 272; denounces spoils system, 275; signs Pendleton bill, makes classification, etc., 276; appoints Isabella De La Hunt postmistress at Cannelton, Ind., 368, 374.

Asay, "Jim," disreputable politician, appointed through Congressman Hitt, 160.

Asbury Park, N. Y., E. G. Harrison appointed postmaster of, 386.

Ashton, J. H., post office employe. See Baltimore investigation, 267, 296.

Aspinwall, J., New York state senator, political worker for Nathan, 264, 371.

Assessments, political. See Baltimore investigation; see Indiana, Washington (city), South Carolina, West Virginia, Ohio, New York, Alabama, Maryland, Virginia, Ohio, Pennsylvania; see Indianapolis News; committee of national league (see) to investigate 1892; see Tammany Hall; see Old Dominion Republican League, 70; see Gunn, 72; in New York; see Roosevelt, Burt, Magone, Beattie, 97; see Quay, 134; see Curry, 160; see Grosvenor, Roosevelt, 161; in State and federal offices in Indiana, those levied on corporations, 171; under Harrison, 173; under Harrison and Cleveland, 255; advocated, see Stratton and Grosvenor, 178, 179; federal employes from Ohio subjected to, 179; see Dudley, 180; levied on federal employes from Indiana, 181; in federal and other offices in Connecticut, 183; in Virginia, made by republicans, 226; made by Iowa republican central committee, 240; denounced by President Hayes, 265; in Ohio, by state republican executive committee, 272, 280; in New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio; see Pendleton, Acton, 279, 280; under Harrison, see Mahone blackmailers, see Mahone, 281; in state offices at Albany, N. Y., 180; see Mahone, 305; in New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, 282; condemned in Ohio, Pennsylvania, 286; see Wagner, 287; correspondence of Pennsylvania civil service reform association, regarding, 289; by Postmaster Higgins of Ft. Wayne, Ind. 302; bill of Conkling preventing, in New York, 318, 321; see Morton, O. T., and Allen, 322, 332; see Kentucky, 330; money got by, used by Platt against Harrison, 347; warning against, by civil service commission, 358; levied in North Carolina, 362; in Indiana and New York, 363; see W. H. Harrison, 370, 373, 375, 382, 385; of Indiana office-holders in Washington, 377; in post office at Indianapolis, 403, 411, 412; in Ohio, and in Washington departments, by Old Dominion Republican Club, 412; see Zollinger, 414.

Associations; see also civil service reform associations; business men's republican and spoils, 234; Indian Rights, 9, 42; twenty-first district republican, of New York City, invited to investigate custom house service in, 236; Ohio republican and printing office, 234.

Astor, W. W., and politics in New York, 173, 285.

Atchison, editor and Winamac, Ind., post office, 88.

Atkins, postmaster at Freeport, Ill., active politician, 143.

Atkins, Indian commissioner under President Cleveland, 217.

Atkins, S., local politician opposed to Congressman Hitt, 109.

Atkinson, G. W., levies political assessments, 390.

Atlanta, Ga., census of 1890 well conducted in, 292.

Atlantic Monthly, for February, 1891, "An Object Lesson in Civil Service Reform," by Roosevelt, 192.

Atwood, Kan., Greason, journalist, appointed postmaster at, 148.

Auburn, Ind., Garden, postmaster of, political worker, 379, 380.

Auburn, N. Y., Knapp, postmaster of, worker for Platt, 143.

Auditor, removals in office of sixth, 55.

Augusta, Ga., census service in, inefficient, 295.

Augusta, Me., postmaster at, removed; place given to "Joe" Manley, 38; Manley, postmaster of, a political worker, 135, 150; Manley, postmaster of, congressional candidate opposing Burleigh, and non-delivery in Augusta of papers advocating Burleigh, 364; Stinson, nephew of Mrs. Blaine, appointed postmaster at, 371.

Augustine, Kan., Journalist Fenstermaker, appointed postmaster at, 148.

Aurelia, Ia., Marsh postmaster of, a political worker, 260.

Aurora, Ill., Journalist Hudder appointed postmaster at, 126.

Austen, Cal. See Tammany, 318.

Austin, C. H., editor, appointed postmaster at Lineville, Iowa, 142.

Austin, H. C., New York police officer given federal offices, 216.

Austin, Tex., DeGress, chairman Texas republican state committee, appointed postmaster at, 71.

Australia, civil service reform in, 111.

Australian ballot system, opposed by Boutelle; Reed, T. B.; Blaine, Gorman, 228.

Avery, supported by Congressman Hitt for assistant treasurer, 110.

Axon, L. H., and political assessments. See Kentucky.

Ayers, I., special treasury agent, pays political assessments, 279.

Bachelder, G. E., post-office inspector on removal of Postmaster Bundy, 176.

Bachman, postmaster of Carruna, Ind., 379; political worker, 380.

Backus, county treasurer at Indianapolis, 403; persuades Dunn, post-office employe at, to solicit political contributions, 411, 412.

Bacon, Rev. B. W., sermon on evils of spoils system, 102.

Bacon, D., journalist, postmaster at Nampa, Idaho, 155.

Bacon, F., mayor of Oregon, Ill., politician, 109.

Bacon, T., address annual meeting National League, noticed, 269.

Bad Axe, Mich., Journalist Maywood postmaster at, 149.

Bagby, low negro politician, appointed to railway mail service; unfit, 10, 21, 25, 27, 34, 35, 54, 94, 96, 112, 173.

Bagby, B., political worker for Harrison, 302.

Bailey, J. J., protests against Martin as internal revenue collector in Pennsylvania, 232, 374.

Bailey, J. M., candidate of Barnes faction for surveyorship of Albany district, 46; collector at Albany, political worker, 390.

Bailey, L. O., ward politician, city attorney for Indianapolis, opposes bill for new charter of, 212; deputy attorney-general of Indiana, 315.

Bailey, M. H., and political assessments, 384.

Bailey, T., applicant for postmaster of Portland, Ind., 88.

Bailey, W. A., Harrison delegate from North Carolina, 334.

Bain, congressman, on house committee of civil service, 86.

Bain Faction, in St. Louis, 304.

Bain. See Senator Harrison, 81.

Baird, postmaster at Ogdensburg, N. Y., removed, 126.

Baird, Colonel, politician, offered Brooklyn, N. Y., postmastership, 131.

Baird-town, O., Journalist Grimes postmaster at, 149.

Baker Ballot Reform Bill, ruined by Quay and Martin, federal office, 228, 229, 252, or 254.

Baker, D., postmaster at Mobile, Ala., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.

Baker, I. V. See Tammany, 319.

Baker, Judge, at Minneapolis convention, 343.

Baker, W. H., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.

Baldwin, post-office employe of Austin, Ind., at Minneapolis convention, 380.

Baldwin, editor, appointed to position in government printing office, 126.

Baldwin. See Woodruff, 106.

Baldwin, C., editor, given office by Governor Foraker, 301.

Baldwin, C. A., journalist, postmaster at Vicksburg, Mich., 149.

Baldwin, D. A., political worker, 182, 183; see also Kings county, New York, 371.

Bales, E. L., journalist, postmaster at Bloomington, S. Dak., 155.

Balk, W. A., post office employe, see Indianapolis investigation, 411.

Ball, Col., controls part of patronage in North Dakota, 216.

Ball, G. H., clerk in Indiana senate, 408.

Ballot, secret, good results of in Indiana, 389.

Ballantine, J., opposes political activity of federal office holders in New York, 336.

Ballantyne, R. C., appointed postmaster at Brackettsville, Tex., vice Gildea, removed for political reasons, 186.

Balmaceda, Pres., usurper in Chile, 261, 281, 364, 387; course of United States government with, 282.

Baltimore, Md., federal office holders interfere in primaries at, 219, 225, 226; investigation by Roosevelt, Rose and Bonaparte of interference of federal officers in elections at, 261, 267, 268; also federal interference in primaries, 277, 278; also of political activity of federal employes in primaries at, 287; also of political activity of federal officers in primaries at, 295, 296, 312, 320, 326, 329, 330; also of violations of law by federal employes at, 321, 322; also of political activity of federal office-holders in, 396; Roosevelt's report of investigation, 254, 255; political activity of federal office-holders at, 372, 373, 376; investigation, etc., 412; Wanamaker shields post-office employes for interference in elections, 350; conference, resolutions for publicity of examination papers,

10; resolutions of Tippecanoe Club, 49; custom house at, removals in, 53; evil effects of patronage on schools of, 211; public meeting of, condemns Gorman, 214; mayor of and Gorman testimonial, 236; Raisin, low politician, appointed naval officer at, through influence of Gorman, 237; Raisin, "boss" in, 251; violations of civil service law at, 366; federal officers at under Cleveland, 376; political assessments permitted by internal revenue collector, see Mudd and Coffin, 162; personnel of examiners at, 186; and state of politics, 283; customs district of, classified 1883, 276; Brown and Veazy postmasters of, and Sears, post-office employe at, 277; civil service in post-office at, 95; effect of secret eligible lists in post-office at, 53; conflict over control of post-office at, 84; Postmaster Veazy of, removals under, 53; Postmaster Brown of, spoilsman, 53; Johnson, postmaster at, conducts factional fight at, 121; removes employes without cause, 137; makes clean sweep, 189; makes clean sweep, testimony of before Roosevelt, 254, 255; in Maryland convention, 335; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 337, 347; political assessment circular of civil service commission, 363; as a campaign fund raiser, 370.

Baltimore American [Repub.] advocates civil service reform, 65.

Banbury, J. W., journalist, postmaster at Britton, S. Dak., 155.

Bancroft, postmaster at Concord, Mass., to be re-appointed, 91.

Bancroft; see Hillism, 309.

Bangor, Me., census of 1890; well conducted in, 292.

Bangor, S. Dak., Journalist Grifffers, postmaster at, 155.

Banks, a negro, opposes Harrison; wants offices for negroes, 244.

Banks, congressman advocates appointment of J. J. McCarthy in payment of political debts, 31; fails to obtain office for political worker, 39; aids spoils methods of Pension Commissioner Raum, 130.

Bannon, A., patronage of, 134.

Barbadoes, consul at, 56.

Bardsley, tool of Quay, 250.

Bardsley; see Quay, 305; embezzler, 352.

Bargue, P., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.

Bario, efficient post-office inspector, removal for political reasons, 298.

Barker, Wharton, protests against Quay 95; letter to Harrison protesting against giving patronage to Quay, 104.

Barker, "Billy," low politician, 311.

Barnard, Judge, and Dutchess county, N. Y., frauds, 366.

Barnes, appointed consul at Chemnitz vice Merritt, removed for political reasons, 371.

Barnes, justice of peace, a political worker, 162.

Barnes, representative in Indiana legislature, spoilsman, 407.

Barnes, C. B., negro, federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.

Barnes, J. M., postmaster, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.

Barnes, W., factional leader in Albany, N. Y., consults with Harrison over patronage, 46.

Barnett, I. O. G. federal employe, and political assessments. See Kentucky.

Barnett, J., door-keeper in Indiana senate, 408.

Barnett, J. S., federal employe, and political assessments. See Kentucky.

Barneveld, Wis., Journalist Jones postmaster at, 155.

Barstable (Mass.), collector of, appointed. See Goss, 46.

Barnum, collector, resignation asked, 22.

Barnum, J. S., editor, appointed postmaster at Princeville, Ill., 141.

Barrett, E. J., postmaster at Alexandria, La., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.

Barrett, W. E., signs petition for larger appropriation for civil service commission, 102.

Barrow, C. A., secretary Kings county republican committee, 121; secretary general committee, political worker for Woodruff, 197.

Barrow, H. A., politician appointed deputy naval officer at New York.

Barry, P. M., term expires as postmaster at Oswego, N. Y., 126.

Bartholdt, R., office-seeker, 14.

Bartlett, E. B., 311; delegate at Minneapolis convention, 345.

Batavia, N. Y., candidate for postmaster at. See Sawyer, 47.

Batchelder, General, federal officer, works for renomination of Harrison, 348.

Batcheller, assistant secretary of the treasury, 371.

Bates, W. R., requests poll of voters from Postmaster Daniels, 383.

Baxter, assessor, a political worker, 162.

Baxter, A. E., 259; U. S. marshal in New York, a political worker for Fassett, 265, 266, 269, 279, 280, 287.

Baxter, D., mayor of Rochell, Ill., politician, 109.

Baxter, F. K., political worker, to be appointed New York state railroad commissioner vice Spencer, removed, 356.

Bayard, T. F., secretary, favors civil service reform, 82; ex-secretary, and spoils system, 145.

Bayard, ex-secretary, extract from address be-

- fore alumni students of Ann Arbor Law School, on spoils system, 257.
- Bayard, secretary, Jewett claim, 290; and Elkins's claim against Brazil, 369.
- Bayfield, Wis., Journalist Bell postmaster at, 155.
- Baylis, Ill., Journalist Donley appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Bayne, T. M., congressman, advocates application of civil service reform to certain postmasters, 100; patronage of, 133; post-offices in his district used for his nomination, 135; and postmaster Gilleland, 299.
- Beach, D., journalist, postmaster at Valley Center, 149.
- Beal, U. S. minister to Persia, resigns to do political work, 382.
- Beallsville, O., Editor Keepers appointed postmaster of, 301.
- Beallsville, Pa., Journalist Robison postmaster at, 149.
- Beard, A. W., supported by Massachusetts senators for Boston collectorship, 22; appointed collector at Boston, vice Saltonstall removed, 129; signs petition for larger appropriation for civil service commission, 102; gives office to Journalist John L. Swift, 108; political worker, 162, 179, 269, 288, 334; removes democrats in custom house, 245; removals under, 322.
- Beardsley, railroad commissioner in New York, 356.
- Bearss, post-office inspector at Peru, Ind., at Minneapolis convention, 379.
- Bearss, A. C., worker for Harrison, appointed chief clerk in railroad mail service, 377.
- Beaty, J. W., worker for Harrison, 355.
- Beattie, surveyor, political assessments under, 197.
- Beattie, W. J., political worker. See Kings Co., New York.
- Beaumont, postmaster at Alton, Pa., worker for Delamater, 134.
- Beck, state senator of Indiana, son of, appointed page, 408.
- Beebe, E. R., journalist, postmaster at Princeton, Wis., 155.
- Beers, T. H., appointed supervisor of census, 301.
- Belden, congressman, and Syracuse, N. Y., postmastership, 46, 71; secures appointment of Editor Von Bergman, 132; opposed by Postmaster C. E. Smith, and Collector F. Hendricks, 356.
- Belknap; see Rochester, N. Y., 305.
- Bell, appointed by President Harrison, 27; second assistant postmaster-general, reinstates incompetent clerk in Massachusetts; removes competent clerk in Illinois, 30; candidate for governor of Texas, 159.
- Bell, C. G., journalist, postmaster at Bayfield, Wis., 155.
- Bell, J., a political worker, 160.
- Bell, J. A., post-office employe; see Baltimore investigation, 312, 320, 326, 328.
- Bell, J. L., superintendent of railway mail service, tool of Clarkson, 21; superintendent railway mail service, refuses access to records of removals, etc., 163.
- Bell, T., politician appointed to look after office-seekers, 46.
- Bellamy, W. H., political worker, 287; secretary republican county committee, at Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Benedict, G. G., editor, appointed collector of district of Burlington, Vt., 126.
- Benedict, R. D., defeated by ward politician Nathan, 121; candidate for congress, aided by Secretary Tracy, 135; defeated candidate controls patronage in New York, 142; congressional candidate opposes Nathan, 143.
- Benedict, Kansas, Journalist McMullin postmaster at, 148.
- Benjamin, Capt., federal employe, pays political assessments, 279.
- Benjamin, J., politician in Brooklyn, denounces Nathan, 304; ward politician in New York, 304; federal employe in New York convention, 335; political worker, 371.
- Bennett, S., political worker, appointed postmaster at Evansville, Ind., see Posey, 46, 153, 158, 377.
- Bennett, postmaster at Hartford, Conn. removal of Barrio, efficient post office inspector, 298.
- Bennett, postmaster at Warsaw, Ind., 316; political worker, 378, 380.
- Bennett, F., journalist, postmaster at Fulton, N. Y., 155.
- Bennett, J., postmaster at Kent, N. Y., a political worker, 162.
- Benson, Ill., F. E. Larned, son of editor, appointed postmaster at, editor, deputy postmaster, 148.
- Benton county, Mo., applicants for post-offices in, by, see Upton, 55.
- Berg, Dr., on Indiana State Board of Health, inefficient, 316.
- Berks County, Pa., control of patronage in, 47.
- Bernard, disreputable democratic politician in Cincinnati, 352.
- Bernard, C. M., Harrison delegate from North Carolina, 334.
- Berne, Ind., J. N. Sullivan appointed postmaster at and removed; political-worker Wagoner appointed, 88.
- Bernhamer, corrupt politician of Indianapolis, convicted of tally-sheet forgery, see Indianapolis.
- Berri, E. D., ward politician. See Kings Co., N. Y.
- Berry, schemes for postmastership at Colfax, Wash., 165.
- Berryman, W., deputy collector at New York city, a political worker, 265.
- Bertram, S., given place in Indiana legislature, 406.
- Besancon, H. O., journalist, postmaster at Harold, South Dakota, 155.
- Beshore, S. S., politician, census supervisor 6th Indiana district, 104.
- Best, E. T. journalist, postmaster at Niligh, Neb., 149.
- Beverly, Mass., Postmaster Odell of, a political worker, 162.
- Beyerle, L. H., editor, appointed postmaster at Goshen, Ind., 30, 126, 316, 377, 378.
- Bickford, political worker, 134.
- Bickham, editor, relatives of, hold federal offices, 301.
- Bicknell, postmaster of Garrett, Ind., political worker, 379, 380.
- Biddleman, deputy United States marshal, collects political assessments, 372.
- Bidwell J. E., recommends O'Donnell, 59.
- Bigelow, W. H., appointed division superintendent of railroad mail service, 22, 186.
- Biggs, congressman, opposes civil service reform, 125.
- Biglin, B., employs democrats, 311, 312; baggage contractor at Castle Garden, a political worker, 265; cartage bid of for New York custom-house, to be accepted for political reasons, 216; gets position for his brother in New York custom-house, 258; political worker in New York convention, 335; cartage contractor, 358.
- Biglin, J. C., brother of "Barney" Biglin, gets office through him; promised Appraiser Cooper's place in New York custom-house, 258.
- Bingham, J. H., federal officer, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Binghamton Republican [republican]. Roosevelt must not appear in earnest, 49; Dunn, postmaster of, a political worker, 266; Dunn, postmaster of, secures removal of pension examiner Van Alstyne, 304.
- Binkley, W., political worker for Foraker, charges federal interference as cause of his defeat, 301.
- Birch, J., applicant for postmaster at Greencastle, Ind., 89.
- Birkett, chairman republican general committee, and appointments in Brooklyn Navy Yard, 45; distributor of patronage in Brooklyn Navy Yard, 55; state senator of New York, supports Congressman Wallace, 142; opposed by Nathan, 265; treasurer Kings county, N. Y., central republican committee, 198; ward politician in New York, 304; politician of Brooklyn, 106.
- Birmingham, Ala., Houston, postmaster of, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Birmingham, Eug., city government of, 284.
- Bishop, mayor of Buffalo, N. Y., extends operation of civil service law in city offices, 200.
- Bishop, sheriff of Ogle county, Illinois, politician, 109.
- Bismark, builds up German empire, 244.
- Blackford, E. G., fish commissioner of New York, removed; Hackney, politician worker, appointed by Hill, 310.
- Blackford, L. M., on "Morals of Civil Service Reform," 130, 136.
- Blackford, W. T., federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Black, pension commissioner, attempts to remove Miss Sweet, 107.
- Black, J., and Petroff, 152.
- Black, R. A., republican "boss," see Greenfield, Ind., 89.
- "Blacklisting." See Stratton and Grosvenor.
- Blackwell, J., ward politician of Indianapolis. See Parnell Hall.
- Blaine, E., works for Blaine at Minneapolis, 345.
- Blaine J. G., secretary, and recommendations from General Brown, of office-seekers, 7; views on civil service reform in "Twenty Years of Congress," 9; defeat of, attributed to Pearson, postmaster at New York, 13; and "Joe" Manley, 38; and consulship at Barbadoes, 56; uses influence to secure family appointments, 71; and postmastership at Washington, Pa., 100; candidates of superseded by those of Quay, 112; on tariff, 169; subject to Quay, 173; begged to speak, 180; applicants for consulships under, 185; opposes Australian ballot system, 228; and Harrison, 240; and Harrison, 241; promises "fealty" to Harrison, 250; alienates reform element in 1884, 255; "knifed" by Nathan in 1884, 264; and Elkins's claim against candidate for presidency, 299; nomination of, favored by Quay, 300; workers for in Indiana, 302, 303; and Nathan, 304; supporters in 1876 in Maryland convention, 335, 337; a candidate at Indianapolis, 339, 340, 341, 342; at Minneapolis convention, 343; and Minneapolis convention, 344, 345, 346, 347, 348; and Elkins's claim against Brazil, 369; in 1884, 376.
- Blaine, Jr., J. G., son of Secretary Blaine, given office, 108; given office through Congressman Hitt, 110.
- Blaine, R. G., brother of Secretary Blaine, given office, 108.
- Blair, representative in Indiana legislature and spoils methods in, 406, 407.
- Blair, United States marshal and Monroeville post-office, 88.
- Blair, A. C., postmaster in Jackson county, Iowa, a political worker, 260.
- Blair, T., Indian agent, 217.
- Blair, J. C., editor, postmaster at Newell, Iowa, a political worker, 260.
- Blair, senator, civil service reform a humbug; opposed to it, 45, 49, 50, 65; and Eaves, 159.
- Bland, delegate to Minneapolis convention; opposing Harrison, 346.
- Blaukenburg, R., letter to Quay, 157.
- Bliss, C. N., and request of postmasters for list of voters, 330; political worker for Harrison, see New York, 333; treasurer national republican committee, 363.
- Bliss, J. W., journalist, postmaster at Greenleaf, Kansas, 149.
- Bloomfield, Ia., Postmaster Evans of, removed on secret charges, 175.
- Bloomington, Ind., branch of Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, meeting of, addressed by T. Roosevelt, 1890, 108; branch of Indiana Civil Reform Association, officers of, 182; census service, turned over to spoils, enumerators make lists of voters, 293; McPheeters, postmaster of, at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- Bloomington, S. Dak., Journalist Bales, postmaster at, 155.
- Blount, A. R., federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Blunt, ex-postmaster appointed customs surveyor, 150.
- Board, local examining at Indianapolis, efficiency of, 18, 42, 120; local examining at Indianapolis, 25, 26, 94; local civil service at Indianapolis, appointments to, 34.
- Boards, examining for civil service should be independent, 17; examining; see, also, examiners, 186; pension examining, appointed through influence of Senator Cullom, 30.
- Boatner, congressman on house committee on civil service, 86; upholds civil service commission, 204; Secretary C. Foster, 330.
- Bode, Ia., Postmaster Rassing of, a political worker, 260.
- Bogardus, E., whose son holds federal office, political worker for Hiscock, 265.
- Bogemann, Rev. E. C., favors civil service reform, 229.
- Boise City, Idaho, assay office, Wild, removed without cause by President Harrison. Place given to spoilsmen, 30.
- Bolton, J. A., soldier, a political worker, 159.
- Bonaparte, C. J., at Baltimore conference 1889, 2; address of, upon civil service reform, 25; duty of the President, 26; on spoils, heading to July number, 1889, CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 32; address of, before National League, 1889, on civil service reform as a moral question, 59, 60, 61; annual address of, before reform associations of Maryland, 1889, 62; spoils system immoral, 69; to examine management of civil service, 77; address of, before Catholic Club of Baltimore, on Catholics and citizenship, 97; to address Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, 108; to address annual meeting, 1890, of Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, 111; committeeman, report on congressional patronage, 113, 114, 115; address of, before Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, 1890, on "Scope and Difficulties of Civil Service Reform," 119, 126, 127, 128; on committee investigating patent office, report of, 139, 140, 141; on relations of civil service reform to other reforms, 153; on Gorman, 161; on Committee of National League, investigating presidential post-offices, 162, 163, 164, 166, 166; address before annual meeting National League, 1890, 169, 170; on committee of National League reporting on removals on secret charges, 175, 176, 177; on on committee of National League, reports on political changes in presidential post-offices, 188; assists in investigation of interference of federal officers in elections, at Baltimore, 261, 266, 267, 291, 295; address of, before annual meeting National League, noticed, 269; on special committee of National League investigating census service, 291, 295; on political corruption in Maryland, 317, 324; on committee of publication of Good Government, 357; on Judge Bradley and Assistant Attorney-General Tynor, 357, 358.
- Bond, see Baltimore investigation, 328.
- Bone, postmaster at Shelbyville, Indiana, removed on secret charges, 177.
- Bonge, appointed postmaster at Cumberland, Indiana, 89.
- Boody, congressional candidate, 183.
- Boody, D. A., democratic candidate for mayor of Brooklyn, New York, 287.
- Boone, Cal., superintendent work-house at Indianapolis, 205, 206.
- Boonville, Ind., editor appointed postmaster at, 37; Postmaster Hammond of, political worker, 380, Pate, postmaster of, political worker, 380.
- Booth, A. R., employe in navy yard, in New York convention, 335.
- Booth, W. C., promised place in Brooklyn. See Wallace, 72.
- Borden, supported by Massachusetts congressmen for Boston collectorship, 22.
- Borin, C., journalist, postmaster at Oberlin, Kan., 149.
- Bosler, J. W., 291.
- Boston Advertiser (republican), on CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 235.
- Boston Journal (republican), on civil service reform, 65, 66.

- Boston Post (democrat), opposed to spoils system, 85; accounts of spoils fights in treasury department and Indian service, 216, 217; on feudalism revived, in New York City and Brooklyn, 263.
- Boston Transcript (republican), on civil service reform, 65; attributes republican defeat of 1889 to patronage system, 76.
- Boston, Mass., municipal service in; a field for reform, 235; civil service system in, 68; competitive tests in police force of, 104; fire service in, 120; merit system in city offices of, 172; civil service methods used at, for laborers, 181; merit system in labor service of, 204; civil service reform in city offices in, 212; merit system in use in city departments of, 220, 221; merit methods of employing laborers commended; applied to navy yards, see Tracy, 221, 222; examination in use for police force of, 223, 224; merit system for laborers, 228; labor employment system of advocated for Indianapolis, 243; physical examinations for fire and police services of Boston, Mass., 243, 246, 247, 248, 249; civil service methods employed in city departments of, 273; city government of, 284; labor service system of, 317; labor system of commended, 349; labor service of, 357; no appointive officer at, allowed to work politically, 358; labor system advocated for federal service by Andrews, 359; labor service system of, bill of Andrews to introduce into federal service, 388; civil service reform association of; resolutions of on Postmaster Pearson, 23; civil service reform in custom house of, under Saltonstall, 71; removals without cause in custom house at, for relative of Secretary Blaine, 71; address before civil service reform association, by J. R. Lowell, 77; civil service reformers of, 93; employees in custom house at, political workers, 179; removal of Corse, postmaster of, for political reasons, 213, 215, 237; Collector Beard at, removes democrats in custom house, 245; ex-postmaster Corse of, entertained by Massachusetts Reform Club, Hart, new incumbent, commended by Corse, 251; Beard, collector of, a political worker, 269; customs, district of, classified, 1883, 276; Corse postmaster of, Saltonstall collector at removed, 282; Beard, collector at, a political worker, 288; removals under Beard, collector at, 322; Hart, postmaster at, Beard collector, and other federal officers, political workers, 334; Corse, postmaster of, removed for political reasons, 367; removal for political reasons of Corse postmaster of, 376; civil service reform association of, 415.
- Bosworth, T., applicant for postmaster at Portland, Ind., 88.
- Botty, H. C., political worker for ex-Alderman Rathwell, New York City, 199.
- Boulton, J. W., see Baltimore investigation, 278.
- Bourke, B., ward politician in New York City, 263.
- Boutelle, congressman, interview on patronage in Maine, 157; opposes Australian ballot system, 228.
- Bowden, congressman, controls spoil in Norfolk navy yard, 153; a political worker, 162.
- Bowles, F. T., naval officer, on board to examine applicants for positions in navy yard at Brooklyn, N. Y., 222.
- Boyd, state senator, and Noblesville, Ind., post-office, 89.
- Boyd, H., post-office employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Boyd, S. H., office-seeker, 14.
- Boyer, C. R., favors civil service reform, 229.
- Boyer, H. K., supported by Senator Quay for state treasurer of Pennsylvania, 38.
- Boyle, A., political worker, foreman in navy yard at Brooklyn, 142; political worker for Congressman Wallace, 183.
- Boyles, G. F., negro delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344, 348.
- Boynton, General, and scramble for offices, 24.
- Boynton, H. V., on Cincinnati Tammany, 301, 302.
- Brackett, governor of Massachusetts, signs petition for larger appropriation for civil service commission, 102.
- Brackettsville, Tex., Postmaster Gildea removed for political reasons, Ballantyne appointed, 186.
- Brackston, uses influence for appointment of Throop, 59.
- Bradbury, W. F., civil service reformer of Cambridge, Mass., 204.
- Bradford, Pa., postmaster at, see Flenniken, 99.
- Bradley, ward politician, see Buffalo, N. Y., 196.
- Bradley, Cal., and Blaine "boom," 344.
- Bradley, Justice, and Mahone "blackmailers," 305; charge of to jury in Mahone "blackmailers" case, condemned, 321; and Mahone "blackmailers," 357, 358.
- Brady, and Elkins, 374.
- Brady, opponent of Mahone, 52.
- Brady, A., postmaster at Charlotte, N. C., Harrison delegate to Minneapolis, 334, 348.
- Brady, J. D., appointed collector at Norfolk, Va., 52; collector internal revenue, political worker, 370.
- Braine, Admiral, warns Boyle, 142.
- Brandt, postmaster of Des Moines, political worker at Minneapolis convention, 346.
- Brant, police captain in Elizabeth, N. J., given federal office, 216.
- Brattleboro, Vt., Postmaster Childs endorsed for re-appointment, 100; caucus on question of re-appointment of Postmaster Childs of, 108.
- Bray, Representative, opposed to Congressman Hitt, 109.
- Bray, L. T., defeated candidate, opposes Hitt, 136.
- Brayton, see Collier.
- Brayton, E. M., politician in South Carolina, opposing Harrison, 382.
- Breckeuridge, Judge, civil service reformer of Missouri, 239.
- Breen, J. M., editor, appointed postmaster at Flanagan, Ill., 141.
- Brenner, J., political worker, see Kings county, N. Y., also, 371.
- Breslau, Journalist Dunlap appointed consul to, 126.
- Bretz, congressman, patronage of, 411, 419, 421, 422.
- Brewer, congressman, asks resignation of Cowan, postmaster at Ovid, Mich., 165.
- Brewer, postmaster at Vineland, N. J., removal of for political reasons, see Vineland, 39.
- Brewster, attorney-general, and Postmaster Pearson, 12.
- Bribery of voters, see Kercheval, 83; in offices and money, see Collier, 162; in Pennsylvania, 151; in elections advised to aid Republicans in Indiana, 190, 191; in republican caucuses in Cortland county, N. Y., by Hiscock, also Jefferson county, 264; for Harrison delegates in Indiana, 378.
- Brice, C. S., senator, and Gorman, 307.
- Bridgeport, Conn., removal of postmaster at, to give place to spoilsman, 29.
- Briggs, cartage contractor at New York custom-house, spoilsman, 332; cartage contractor, and Collector Erhardt, 358; cartage contractor at New York custom-house, 371.
- Briggs, H., part of address of at annual meeting of Indiana civil service reform association 1889, 8.
- Briggs, H. G., appointed postmaster at Portland, Me., through influence of Speaker Reed, 150.
- Briggs, T. A., cartage bid of for New York custom-house, not accepted for political reasons, 216.
- Brimberry, B. F., negro, postmaster, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Brinsmade, A. T., federal office-holder, political worker, 280.
- Bristol, Postmaster Montgomery of. See Simond, 91.
- Bristow, Henry, politician appointed to look after office-seekers, 46.
- Britton, M., treasury inspector, removed for political reasons, 332.
- Britton, S. Dak., Journalist Banbury postmaster at, 155.
- Broadhead, comptroller, secures reinstatement of thief Weeks, in Kittery navy yard, 147.
- Brock, S. G., president Missouri state republican association, 383.
- Brocket, chief clerk, spoilsman, 24.
- Brockmeier, H., ward politician, see New York City.
- Brodsky, J. E., corrupt politician, 234; political worker, 268.
- Brogan, captain of police in New York City, 319.
- Bronson, B. H., signal officer, secret charges against, 312.
- Bronson, O. H., journalist, appointed postmaster at New Richland, Kan., 126.
- Brooke, General, and Indian rising at Pine Ridge, S. Dak., 218.
- Brookfield, N. Y., Journalist Spooner postmaster at, 155.
- Brookfield, W., supports Lee for place in New York custom house, 259; chairman republican state committee of New York, 279; at Minneapolis, 344; chairman New York state republican committee, 363; chairman, etc. 371.
- Brookline, Massachusetts Civil Service Reform Association of, and Commissioner Roosevelt, sentiment in favor of civil service reform, 36.
- Brooklyn, Ind., retention of Gamble postmaster at asked, see Cooper, 112.
- Brooklyn (N. Y.) Times (republican), patronage a source of weakness, 65.
- Brooklyn, N. Y., places in navy yard at, at disposal of "The" Allen, see; spoils "committee" at, 24; appointments in navy yard at, how made, 45; navy yard at, control of patronage in, 55; appointments in custom-house at, 72; removal sought of Postmaster Hendricks of, 72; political workers of, get office through Congressman Wallace, 72; examination in fire department of, 93; fire service in, 120; Postmaster Hendrix removed, place offered to politician, 131; Collins spoken of for postmaster of, see Willis, 135; spoils system in navy yard at, 142; navy yard at, spoils system in, 148; abuses and spoils system in navy yard at, under Secretary Whitney, 148; examination questions used in police service at, 152; navy yard at, given up as spoil by Tracy, 153; removals in navy yard at under Cleveland and Harrison, 155; republican factional fights for control of machine in, 197, 198; merit system in use in city offices at, 220; examinations for positions in, 221; examination in use for police force of, 222, 223; examinations instituted by Secretary Tracy in navy yard at, statement of examining board, 236, civil service commission of commended, 239; feudalism revived in, 263; factional fights in among republicans, at primaries, 264; armory frauds at, see Tammany, 318, 319; Collins, postmaster of, political worker for Harrison, 336; Nathan and anti-Nathan factions in, 352; Page, chief of ordnance department at navy yard at removed, 355; prize fighter appointed at policeman in, 355; Collins, postmaster of, spoilsman, 360.
- Brooks, J. M., civil service reformer of Cambridge, Mass., 204.
- Brooks, W. H., appointed internal revenue collector at Philadelphia vice Martin resigned. See Quay and Harmer, 241; collector internal revenue, suspected by Harrison as supporter of Quay, 300.
- Brookshire, congressman, patronage of, 393, 410, 413, 419; allows Voorhees to name postmaster of Terre Haute Ind., 405.
- Brophy, J. C., doorkeeper in Indiana senate, 408.
- Brosins, congressman and post-offices in his district, 72.
- Brovard, J., doorkeeper in Indiana senate, 408.
- Brower, congressman, fights successfully for control of patronage in North Carolina, 47.
- Browne, General, and office-seekers, 6, 7, 14; and Hyat, officer in house of representatives, 84.
- Browne, postmaster at Clay City, Ind., removed, 89.
- Brown, politician, 134.
- Brown, state senator of New York, and Tammany bridge scandal, 317.
- Brown, political worker, 334.
- Brown, postmaster of Franklin, Ind., asked to resign, 377.
- Brown, representative in Indiana legislature, opposes spoils methods in 407.
- Brown, A. H., removed from office and political worker appointed, 79.
- Brown, A. H., physician, physical examiner for police and fire services of New York and Boston, 246.
- Brown, C. G., worker for Hiscock, 386.
- Brown, D. C., address of on school and civil service reform, 23, 24.
- Brown, E., see Hillism, 309.
- Brown, F., postmaster at Baltimore and Sears P. O., employe at, 277; postmaster at Baltimore, 189; postmaster at Baltimore, spoilsman, 53.
- Brown, F. W., editor, postmaster at Dysart, Iowa, 142.
- Brown, Capt. G. L. R., Indian agent at Pine Ridge, S. Dak., exposes political assessment scheme, 384.
- Brown, G. N., politician of N. Carolina, 109.
- Brown, H. U., officer Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, 108.
- Brown, H. U., of Indianapolis News, favors civil service reform, 227, 229.
- Browne, T., congressman, opposes civil service reform, an advocate of congressional patronage, 35, 49, 112; opposes appointment of Cravens, 84; secures appointment of Marsh as postmaster at Portland, Ind., 89; controls post-office of Knightstown, Ind., 118; given patronage by Harrison, 240; patronage of, 410, 411, 419, 420, 421, 422; and postmastership of Madison, Ind., 393.
- Brown, J. B., editor opposed to Congressman Hitt, 110.
- Brown, J. D., postmaster in Harrison county, Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Brown, L. H., journalist, postmaster at Hammondsport, N. Y., 155.
- Brown, L. W., United States consul to Glasgow, political worker, 390.
- Browne, W., postmaster at Russellville, Ind., removed, 89.
- Brown, R. B., editor, given office by Governor Foraker, 301.
- Brown, T. H., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.
- Brown, V. H., Cunard agent in New York City, surety for Collector Fassett, 258.
- Brown, W., warden of Sing Sing prison, worker for Hill, 309.
- Brown, W. L., state senator (N. Y.), recommends "Paddy" Divver for police justice, 184.
- Brown, W. L., and Fassett, collector at New York City, 258.
- Brown, W. W., railroad mail employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Brown, Z., praises CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 110.
- Brownsville, Texas, Customs Collector Rentfrow at, a political worker, 150; custom house at not classified, number of employes in, 277.
- Bruce, B. K., negro, register of deeds in District of Columbia, works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 337, 344, 345; political worker, 362, 382, 389.
- Bruder, C. F., at Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Brugman, Dr. A. F., 355.
- Brules, Indians, rising at Pine Ridge, S. Dak., 218.
- Bruner, E., sells city offices in San Francisco, 215.
- Brunt, J. R., postmaster at Osage Mission, Kan., removed after four years' service, second commission unexpired; Park appointed, 187, 188.
- Brush, W. T., advises bribery to aid republicans in Indiana, 190, 191, 213.
- Bryant, M. B., at Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Bryant, W. C., political worker, see Kings county, N. Y.
- Brydia, C. S., editor, appointed postmaster at Saeamin, Ill., 141.
- Brynildsen, J., journalist, postmaster at Graceville, Minn., 149.
- Bryson, Commodore, testimony of regarding Kittery navy yard, 147.
- Buchanan, United States marshal, active politician, 143.
- Buchanan, C. N., solicits political assessments, see Kentucky.
- Buchanan, G., navy yard employe, in New York convention, 335.
- Buchanan, G. A., special treasury agent, political worker in New York, 336.

- Buchanan, G. N., deputy collector internal revenue in Mississippi, delegate for Harrison at Minneapolis, 344, 348.
- Buchanan, J., President, civil service under, 124; spoils system under, 405.
- Bucher, G. F., postmaster at Carroll, Ill., works for Hitt, 136.
- Buck, applicant for postmaster of Portland, Ind., 88.
- Buck, A. E., United States marshal, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Bucyrus, O., Journalist Haffey postmaster at, through Senator Sherman, 149, 301.
- Budd, J. B., federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Bueman, pension examiner in Indiana, political worker, 380.
- Buffalo, N. Y., addresses by Loomis and Shephard before Central Labor Union of, 44; common council of disregards New York civil service law, 161; account of caucuses in, 196, 197; nineteenth of city offices outside of educational department covered by New York civil service act, 200; civil service reform in city offices in, 212; merit system in use in city offices at, 220; labor organizations of support civil service reform, 228; Morgan, customs collector at, a political worker, 265; civil service reform victories in city service of, 273; custom house at not classified, number of employes in, 277; civil service reform established in, 286; civil service law in city departments of upheld, 281; census of 1890 not well conducted at, 293; postmaster and post-office employes of pay political assessments, 391; memorial of G. W. Curtis adopted by civil service reform association of, 391; civil service reform association of gives aid to CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, eighth annual meeting, 32; civil service reform association of, annual meeting 1890, 137, active, 161; address of Rogers, president, list of officers of, 189, 200; annual meeting, 1891, thanks Secretary Tracy and Congressman Lodge, city government of applies merit system, 238; Express objects to patronage and spoils system, 66; Sunday Truth (labor) favors civil service reform, 84; Commercial (republican), civil service reform a humbug, 92.
- Bull, sitting, see Indian service, 182.
- Bunce, F. M., naval officer, on board to examine applicants for positions in navy yard at Brooklyn, N. Y., 222.
- Bundy, H. E., postmaster at Onconta, N. Y., removed on secret charges, 176.
- Burchell, United States marshal, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Burchett, D. J., United States marshal, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Burchinal, W. D., surveyor of port of Baltimore, in Maryland convention, 335.
- Burden, H., fish commissioner of New York, resigns, 310.
- Burdett, J. O., chairman Massachusetts republican state committee, signs petition for larger appropriation for civil service commission, 102.
- Burdick, S., and political assessments, 384.
- Burgess, A., office-seeker, 15.
- Burgess, C. A., candidate for postmaster at Newtonville, Mass., 100.
- Burgess, H., political worker, 280.
- Burit, J., federal employe, at Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Burkall, coiner of New Orleans mint, refuses to allow political assessments to be made in his department, 383, 384.
- Burke, C. J., editor, appointed postmaster at Olin, Iowa, 142.
- Burke, D. F., assistant appraiser at New York, assisted at dinner to Clarkson, 245; federal official, political worker, 287; internal revenue collector, in New York convention, 335; assistant appraiser at New York City, at Minneapolis convention, 343.
- Burke, state senator of Indiana, votes against bill for non-partisan control of state charitable institutions, see Magee, 201; low politician and spoilsman, see, also, Magee, 212; candidate for U. S. district attorney of Indiana, spoilsman, unfit, 414.
- Burke, J., page in Indiana legislature, 406.
- Burke, J. F., candidate for alderman, see Buffalo, N. Y., 197.
- Burke, Penn., postmaster at, see Brosius, 72.
- Burleigh, governor of Maine, congressional candidate, opposing Manley, 364.
- Burleigh, H. J., congressman, 354.
- Burlington Hawkeye, advocates repeal of civil service law, 49.
- Burlington, Kansas, Lockwood, postmaster at, removed, Lane appointed, see Kelly, 188.
- Burlington, Vt., customs district of, classified 1883, 276.
- Burnette, W. S. R., postmaster in Jackson county, Iowa, a political worker, 260.
- Burns, councilman of Indianapolis, supports Fire-Chief Webster, 208.
- Burns, C. S., employe in naval office, see Baltimore investigation, 328.
- Burns, W., postmaster at Plymouth, Massachusetts, to be removed for political reasons, 187.
- Burr, A., spoils system attributed to, 262.
- Burr, C. A., deputy collector at New York City, pays political assessments, 279; political worker, 287.
- Burrell, O. B., clerk in Indiana senate, 408.
- Burris, S. P., protectionist democrat, appointed postmaster at Talladega, Alabama, vice —, removed for political reasons, 186.
- Burroughs, G., journalist, postmaster at Hope, Kansas, 149.
- Burroughs, J. C., congressman, 279, 362.
- Burrows, L. G., editor, applicant for postmaster-ship of Lanark, Carroll county, Illinois, 109.
- Burt, naval officer at New York, favors merit system, removed by Arthur, re appointed by Cleveland, removed by Harrison, 52; removal of, 68, 94, 106, 107, 173, 237, 282; cessation of political assessments under, 97; naval officer at New York removed for political reasons through influence of Platt, 368.
- Burtin, J. S., United States marshal, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344, 348.
- Burton, J., journalist, postmaster at Jamestown, Kan., 149.
- Buser, E. W., journalist, postmaster at Dawson, Neb., 149.
- Bush, C. C., heavily endorsed political worker, appointed postmaster at Reading, Cal., 186, 187.
- Bush, speaker, corrupt politician of New York, 318.
- Bushnel, A. S., political worker in Ohio, 280.
- Bushnell, Rev. H., opposes spoils system, 77.
- Bushong, deputy city clerk at Indianapolis, 207.
- Buskirk, low police justice at Indianapolis, 314.
- Buskirk, given place of page in Indiana legislature, 406.
- Bussey, C., assistant secretary of interior, a political worker, 279, 370.
- Butler, comptroller, confidence of, and W. P. Montague, 56.
- Butler, politician, see Brooklyn navy yard, 45.
- Butler, appointed postmaster at Weeping Water, Neb., vice Ratnour removed, 175.
- Butler, unfit consul-general to Egypt under Grant, 191.
- Butler, Dr. C. S., civil service reformer of Buffalo, N. Y., 200.
- Butler, Ind., Jones, postmaster of, political worker, 379, 380.
- Butler, J. M., and Plattism, 281.
- Butler, N. C., member local examining board at Indianapolis, 18, 42, 120, 129, 186; officer Indiana civil service reform association, 108; clerk United States court at Indianapolis, favors civil service reform, speech of at Roosevelt dinner, 227, 229, 230.
- Butler, R. R., recommended for commissioner of Indian affairs, unfit, 14.
- Butler, S., bond of office of, secured by convicted briber Kemble, 152.
- Butler, senator, favors civil service reform, 120.
- Butler, T., editor, appointed postmaster at Huntington, Ind., resigns, 126, 377.
- Butterfield, A. H., editor, given federal office, 126.
- Butterworth, congressman, spoilsman, 15, 24; member house committee on civil service, 86; favors civil service reform, 119, 120, 124, 204, 211; on tariff, 169.
- Butting, W. J., political worker, 182, 183.
- Buttrick, postmaster at Concord, Mass., recommended for re-appointment, 100.
- Byerly, see Warmouth, 105.
- Bynum, W. D., congressman spoilsman, 108; spoilsman, able and unscrupulous, 171; patronage of, 392, 405, 410, 418, 419, 420, 421, 422.
- Byrnes, police inspector in New York City, 249; police inspector in New York City recognizes thieves among census enumerators, 294.
- Caberton, W. B., naval officer, on board to examine applicants for positions in navy yard at Brooklyn, N. Y., 222.
- Cabinet, and office-seekers, 6; President Harrison, composed entirely of spoilsmen, 27.
- Cable, postmaster of Hartford City, Ind., political worker, 379.
- Cable, postmaster at Oswego, N. Y., removed, 71.
- Caddy, C. B., editor, appointed postmaster at Pendleton, Ind., 126, 377.
- Cadmus, W. H. N., political worker for Nathan; see Kings county, N. Y.; political worker, 183, 304.
- Cadwallader, R. H., journalist, postmaster at Louisville, Kan., 149.
- Cady, J. R., judge, in New York convention, 335.
- Cain, P., postmaster at Fort Dodge, Iowa, asked to resign, 165.
- Caldwell, congressman, spoilsman, 15, 24.
- Calhoun, see Illinois Senators Farwell and Cullom, 31.
- California, republican platform, 1884, demands civil service reform, 50.
- Calkins, W. H., Gresham supporter, appointed United States judge in Washington territory, 240, 377.
- Call, senator, on examinations for civil service, 118.
- Callan, N., prize-fighter, appointed on police force in Brooklyn, 355.
- Calloway, Neb., Journalist Mair postmaster at, 149.
- Cambria Co., Pa., purchase of, by republicans, 133.
- Cambridge, Mass., Civil Service Reform Association; resolutions of, on removal of Postmaster Pearson, 23; address before civil service reform association of, by J. R. Lowell, 77; civil service reform association and President Harrison, on Indian and other service, 202, 204, 205; civil service reform association of, report of executive committee of, on circulation of Civil Service Record, 1891, 239; civil service reform association urges extension of merit system to Indian service, 273; merit system in city offices of, 172; no appointive officer at, allowed to work politically, 358.
- Cambridge, Ohio, brother of Editor Taylor, postmaster at, 301.
- Cameron, senator, influence of destroyed by Senator Quay, 30; controls patronage in Pennsylvania, superseded by Senator Quay, 34; and patronage in Pennsylvania, 47, 72, 133, 162, 329; and Quay, 105, 245, 252, 305; confers with International Revenue Collector Martin, 183; endorses Martin, low politician, for collector internal revenue in Pennsylvania, 233; supporter of Blaine, 344; spoilsman, 413; spoilsman controlled patronage of Pennsylvania, 34.
- Campaign of 1884, objection to scholars in politics in, see address of Parr, Prof. S. S., 8; residential, effect of on civil service reform in Indianapolis fire department, 13.
- Campbell, correspondence with Congressman Banks, 31.
- Campbell, and collectorship of customs at Chicago, 47; candidate of Senator Farwell for Chicago collectorship, 95.
- Campbell, B. F., political worker for Harrison, 260.
- Campbell, F., New York state controller, spoilsman, 356.
- Campbell, J. E., ex-governor of Ohio, and Stevenson, 375; ex-governor of Ohio favors a clean sweep, 396, 408.
- Campbell, W. H., receiver of political assessments, 391.
- Campbell, W. J., chairman republican national committee and Harrison, 354.
- Campbell, W. P., promotion of, 136.
- Canaday, sergeant-at-arms, opposes Quay's wishes, removes Mann, a page, 160.
- Canandaigua, N. Y., Journalist Milliken, postmaster at, 155.
- Candler, congressman and post-office at South Farmington, Mass., 99; ex-congressman works for re-appointment of democrat Morgan, postmaster at Newton, Mass., 224.
- Cannelton, Ind., post-office, 25; editor appointed postmaster at, 37; post-office at, see Clarkson, 54; Isabella De La Hunt appointed postmaster of by Arthur, removed by Cleveland, office given to editor; President Harrison refuses to re-appoint, 368; Zimmerman, postmaster of, political worker, 380.
- Caunon, congressman, and the second auditorship, 6; contest of with Illinois senators over appointment of Wilcox, 31; opposed to civil service reform, 30, 35, 49, 202, 204, 211; obtains reduction of salaries of democratic clerks opposed to him, 39; controls delegates for renomination, 160; forces of Catherwood, postmaster at Hoopston, Ill., 165; a machine candidate, 179.
- Cannon, J. A., candidate for postmaster at Kingston, Mo., 132.
- Canton, Conn., postmaster at, to be reappointed, 91.
- Canton, Kan., Journalist Davis appointed, 148.
- Cape Vincent, N. Y., Morse customs collector of, a political worker, see, also, Jefferson county, N. Y., 266; number employes in custom house at, not classified, 277.
- Capen, S. B., defends Cleveland's management of Indian service, 219.
- Cappeler, W. S., editor, given office by Governor Foraker, 301.
- Carbondale, Kan., Journalist Playford postmaster at, 148.
- Cardozo, Judge, see Hill, 306.
- Cardwell, G. B., favors civil service reform, 229.
- Carl, F. M., journalist, postmaster at Navarre, O., 149.
- Carner, William, see Cannon, 39.
- Carmonche, L. B., federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Carnahan, Gen. J. R., misrepresents civil service examinations, 79.
- Carpenter, postmaster, removed for political reasons, 22.
- Carpenter, postmaster at Flushing, L. I., removed for refusing to become a spoilsman, 91.
- Carpenter, A. H. W., postmaster at New Bedford, Mass., removed without investigation of secret charges, 175, 176.
- Carpenter, C. C., postmaster at Fort Dodge, Iowa, a political worker, 260.
- Carpenter, M., and Petraft, 152.
- Carr, Archie, special agent for interior department, worker for Filly machine, 150.
- Carr, B., worker for Harrison, 240; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 343, 379.
- Carr, C. E., minister to Denmark, calls on Chairman Carter, 361; United States minister to Denmark, political worker, 382.
- Carr, J. P., editor, appointed postmaster at Oxford, Ind., 126, 377.
- Carriers, questions used in examination for, at Indianapolis, August 6, 1889, 56, 57, 58.
- Carroll, Co., Ind., see Fawcett, letter of, 98.
- Carroll, F. J., ward politician, see New York City.
- Carroll, Ill., Postmaster Bucher of, works for Hitt, 136.
- Carroll, Iowa, Journalist Hungerford appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Carroll, J., low politician, see Hudson county, New York.
- Carroll, L., candidate for postmaster of Concord, Ind., supported by State Senator Chandler, opposed by State Senator Corning, 72.
- Carrollton, Ill., Postmaster Smith of, removed through influence of Senator Cullom, 188.

- Carrollton, Ohio, son of Editor Tripp, postmaster at, 301.
- Carruna, Ind., Bachman postmaster of, political worker, 379, 380.
- Carson, J. M., on Martiu, low politician, see.
- Carson, P., ward politician of Indianapolis, see Parnell Hall.
- Carson, P. S., 89.
- Carter J. S., Michener's candidate, 144, 377; land commissioner, works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 337, 339, 342, 344; worker for Harrison, 354; chairman republican national committee, confers with Platt, 359, 360, 361; gets lists of federal employes for assessment purposes, 363; chairman republican national committee, and political assessments, 382; chairman, etc., confers with Quay, 390, 406.
- Carthage, Ind., Editor Charles appointed postmaster at, 126, 377.
- Cartwright, C. M., journalist, postmaster at Hunter, N. Y., 155.
- Carver, opponent of Mahone, 52.
- Cary, E., address of before annual meeting national league, noticed, 269; on committee of national league to investigate interference of officeholders, 319, 320, 338; on committee of publication of Good Government, 357.
- Case, F. P., political worker for Dazell, 299.
- Casebee, J., journalist, postmaster at Casper, Wyo., 155.
- Casey, brother-in-law of President Grant, a federal officer at New Orleans, 191.
- Casey, Iowa, Martha Cowman, wife of Editor Cowman, appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Casper, Wyo., Journalist Casebee postmaster at, 155.
- Cass, representative in Indiana legislature, opposes spoils methods in, 407.
- Catherwood, J. S., postmaster at Hoopston, Ill., forced to resign, 165.
- Catholics and citizenship, see also church, 97.
- Catterson, R., on committee of public safety at Indianapolis, see equally divided politically, 212, 220.
- Cavanaugh, employe in post-office at Pittsburgh, dismissed without cause, 133.
- Cavanaugh, deputy sergeant-at arms in house of representatives, removed for political reasons, 250.
- Cavanaugh, J. P., recommends O'Donnell, 59.
- Cavour, builds up Italy, 244.
- Cedar Rapids, Ia., Daniels, postmaster at, 262; Lincoln, postmaster of, political worker, 370.
- Cedar Rapids, Ia., Gazette, civil service reform honesty in politics, 92; on using postmasters as political agents, 262.
- Census of 1890, not trustworthy, 173; act providing for requires selection of supervisors with reference to fitness and not to party affiliations, 292; civil service reform in, 19; no examination necessary, 49; disposal of offices in, see Porter, 72; made common spoil, 94; filled by republicans, 112; appointments to in Indianapolis made by Moores, 129; places in given as spoil, 131; spoils method allowed by Superintendent Porter in, 157; in England, absence of spoils methods in, 157; appointments defended, 182, appointments to, discord over, 183; examinations for clerkships in, alleged to be held, 190; investigation of feared by Superintendent Porter, 233, 234; corruption and spoils system in, 260; turned over to spoil, 288; investigation of reform in, by official committee of national league, 291, 29; enumerators used to get lists of voters, 293; refuses request for recount of New York city, 294; civil service reform in under Harrison, 372.
- Central Labor Union of Buffalo, N. Y., addresses before, see Loomis and Shepard, 44.
- Central Park, N. Y., "race course" hill, 320.
- "Century of dishonor, a" in Indian service, 182.
- Certificates of good character abolished, 34.
- Chadron, Neb., removal on secret charges of Wilson, postmaster at, 175.
- Chadwick, Rev. J. W., advocates civil service reform, 48, 82.
- Chadwick, F. E., naval officer on board to examine applicants for positions in navy yard at Brooklyn, New York, 222.
- Challis, F. H., editor, disappointed candidate for deputy collectorship, 84.
- Chambers, L. C., journalist, postmaster at Liberty, Texas, 155.
- Chambers, Smiley N., reasons for appointing as United States district attorney, 7; appointed United States district attorney for Indiana, 14; and post office at Vincennes, Ind., 37; uses influence for appointment of Throop, 59; and W. W. Dudley, 78, 374; case of, 94; speech of, regarding bribery, 154; a political worker; extracts from speech of, on democratic corruption, 158, 219; an active politician, 162; worker for Harrison, 316, 317, 334; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 337, 343; political worker, 353, 362; 370, 377, 378, 380, 381, 389.
- Champaign, Ill., Spaulding appointed postmaster at, 38.
- Chance, M., United States inspector of immigration, at convention republican league, 259.
- Chandler, C., reports to Mayor Grant on street cleaning in New York, advises merit system, 220, 221.
- Chandler, state senator, and Concord, Ind., postmastership, 72.
- Chandler, state senator of Indiana, spoilsman, 407, 408.
- Chandler, congressman, civil service reform a fraud, 73.
- Chandler, and re-appointment of Turner as postmaster at Newtonville, Mass., 100.
- Chandler, senator, works for J. B. Smith, 143.
- Chandler, senator, controls patronage of navy yard at Kittery, Maine, 148; spoilsman, 160 supports Blaine, 1892, 340; controls patronage of New Hampshire, 340.
- Chandler, W., candidate for constable; see Buffalo, N. Y., 197.
- Chapin, mayor of Brooklyn, and civil service reform, 82.
- Chapin, A. C., and Hill, 356.
- Chapin, E. B., editor, appointed postmaster at Toula, Ill., 141.
- Chapin, L. P., applicant for postmaster at Greencastle, Ind., 89.
- Chapin, ex-mayor of Brooklyn, N. Y., opposes McLaughlin, 318, 319.
- Chapman, B. S., postmaster at Derby, Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Chardon, O., Editor Converse appointed postmaster at, 301.
- Charity Organization of Indianapolis, 111.
- Charles, E., editor, appointed postmaster at Carthage, Ind., 126, 377.
- Charlestown, navy yard at, patronage of, controlled by Congressman Lodge, 69; clean sweep in navy yard at by President Cleveland, 69; navy yard at, conduct of Tracy in, 153; state legislature urges legislation to secure merit system to navy yard at and elsewhere, 274.
- Charleston, S. C., Crum, negro, nominated as postmaster at for vote at Minneapolis, not confirmed, 363.
- Charlotte, N. C., Brady postmaster at, Harrison delegate, 334; Brady, postmaster of delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Charlton, T. J., 399.
- Charter, of Indianapolis, requires application of merit system to all city departments except fire and police, 243.
- Chase, secretary, opinion of civil service reform, 39.
- Chase, appointment of condemned, 51.
- Chase, D. C., federal officer in Hamilton county, Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Chase, I. J., see Russellville, Ind., 89.
- Chase, I., favored by Harrison for governor of Indiana, 343, 347.
- Chase, governor, candidate for re-election, of Indiana, and Ransdell, 352, 353; a candidate for governor of Indiana, and administration, 320, 379; opposed by United States District Attorney Chambers and his assistant Cockrum, 351.
- Chase, Kan., Journalist Loman postmaster at, 148.
- Chase, R. H., journalist, postmaster at Ludell, Kan., 149.
- Chase, S. H., ex-judge, a political worker for Harrison, 260.
- Chatham, J. J., journalist, postmaster at Nogales, Ariz., 155.
- Cheadle, congressman and candidates for postmaster at Noblesville, Ind., appoints Royer, 47, 89; spoilsman, 55, 85, 92, 145; applicants for postmaster at Lafayette, Ind., 71, 84; endeavors to repeal civil service law, 77, 112; recommends MacDonald, 84; secures appointment of D. W. Fleming, 84; opposes appointment of Cravens, 84; supports Garrigus, corrupt politician, 88; opposes civil service commission, 119; against civil service reform 122; defeat of for renomination, 129; and post-office at New Hall, Ind., 149; opposed to civil service law, 153; snubbed by Harrison when asks for patronage, 240; opposes Harrison, 317; denied patronage in Indiana, 377.
- Cheatham, congressman, secures nomination to office for Young, ward politician, 183.
- Cheatham, H. P., negro, worker for Harrison in N. Carolina, 334.
- Cheek, J. A., Harrison delegate from N. Carolina, 334.
- Chelsea, Mass., Gazette, denounces civil service reform as claptrap, 364.
- Chemung Co., N. Y., republican convention of to nominate delegates, fights against Fassett and Platt, 259; factional fights in, 304; canal robbery, see Hill, 306; factional republican quarrels in, Collector Fassett and, 374.
- Cheney, ex-governor of New Hampshire, 143.
- Cheney, pension agent, active politician, 143.
- Chester, A., candidate of Draper faction at Albany, N. Y., see Draper, 46.
- Cheney, 291.
- Cheney, J. C., political worker, 354; president Indiana republican club at Washington, composed of federal employes, 382.
- Cheney, N. M., journalist, postmaster at La Porte, Pa., 149.
- Cheney, O. A., journalist, postmaster at Pitrodie, S. Dak., 155.
- Cheraw, S. C., disreputable character appointed postmaster at, 55.
- Chester county, Pa., applicants for post-offices in subservient to their congressman, 55; defeat of Delamater in, 134.
- Chestnut Level, Pa., post-office at, see Brosius, 72.
- Chicago, Ill., collectorship of customs at, see Nixon, 47; civil service in post-office at, 95; per cent. removals in classified and unclassified service in post-office at, 185; customs district of, classified 1883, 276; convention, 356.
- Chicago Standard, advocates civil service reform, evils of patronage system, 30.
- Chicago Tribune [republican], advises Harrison to pay no attention to office-seekers, 65.
- Chicago News, on corrupt politics and politicians of Indianapolis, see also Indianapolis, 206.
- Child, S. M., postmaster in Harrison post-office, Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Child, T. A., prominent Ohio republican, and dismissals from government printing office, 234.
- Childs, postmaster at Brattleboro, Vt., endorsed for reappointment, 100; caucus on question of reappointment, 108.
- Chile, see Balmaceda, 282.
- Chittenden, opposed to spoils system, 251.
- Chivington, Col., Journalist Liggett appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Choate, R., and Webster, 324.
- Chrisman, aided by Senator Farwell for collectorship of Chicago, 14.
- Christian Leader, and Pearson, postmaster at New York, advocates civil service reform, 30.
- Christian Union, on Postmaster Pearson of New York, 43; objects to "Quayism" and Clarksou, 257.
- Chubb, H. S., federal officer, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Church, Dr. S., police examiner at Brooklyn, N. Y., 222.
- Churchill, F., delegate to Minneapolis convention, brother of postmaster, 348.
- Church, and politics, see, also, Crosby, 155, 156, 257; and civil service reform, see Lambert; see names of clergymen; appeal to clergy to preach on, see Welsb, 40; and civil service reform, 48, 56, 65, 73, 74, 102, 190, 193; see Learned, Kaufman, Hickok, Richmond, Weatherby, McKnight, McDuffy and Applegarth, 81; see Nelson, Smyth, Dix, Collier, Chadwick, Huntington, Tuttle, Nickols, Rhodes, Holland, Snyder, Noble, Wilson, Prudden, Hall, Rev. H., 81; see Roosevelt, dinner to, at Indianapolis, 227, 229; see minister as citizen, 239.
- Church, Catholic, opposed to appointment of Indian Commissioner Morgan, 79; and civil service reform, 137.
- Cincinnati, Ohio, municipal patronage of, control by Governor Foraker, 71; meeting at, of league of republican clubs; election of Clarkson as president, 219; spoils system must be kept out of new charter for, 235; Smith, customs collector at, political worker for Sherman, 249; merit system in post-office at, 257, 355; Zumstein, postmaster of, carries out spirit of civil service law, 257; custom house at, not classified, number of employes in, 277; Tammany against Sherman, 297; Tammany, 301, 302; postmaster and collector at, political workers for Sherman, 302; reformers in, opposed by united republican and democratic machines, 352.
- Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette [republican], rejoices in rate of removals, 49; attributes defeat to patronage, 65.
- Cincinnati Times-Star [republican], on civil service reform, 92.
- Circleville, Ohio, editor, appointed postmaster at, 301.
- Civil service, congress, and, 86; federal report on, in Indiana, 1886, 37; statistics given by Moore, M. C., regarding, 128.
- Civil service commission of Brooklyn, report of for 1889, 152; examination questions commended, 239; of Massachusetts, examinations of, 74; examines applicants for clerkships in census service, 190; report of, 92; sixth annual report of, 152; seventh report of, showing progress of reform in Massachusetts, 204; eighth report, 317; of New York City, 225; not very commendable, 239; of New York State, see Sickles, 34; report of, 92; seventh annual report of, 152; annual report of 1890; statement regarding extensions to state hospitals, 200; not very commendable, 239; Riley, chief examiner of, removed by Tammany; commission powerless to act, 414.
- Civil Service Commission, United States, 10; at Indianapolis, 25; investigates at Indianapolis, 27; investigates custom house at New York City, and Troy (N. Y.) post-office, 29; Roosevelt and Sixth Auditor Coulter, 34; orders Tousey dismissed from Indianapolis post-office, 34; keeps secret names of signers' certificates, 34; secretary of investigates and makes unfavorable report on post-office at Milwaukee, July, 1888; refuses request for special examination of Collector Geer, of Port Huron, 36; should have authority to call and swear witnesses, 36; and New York custom house, Troy, N. Y., post-office, railroad mail service at Grand Rapids, Mich., 36; and Postmaster Van Cott, of New York, 42; and N. C. Butler and W. P. Fishback to local board at Indianapolis, 42; and Census Bureau, see Harrison, President, 42; permit publication of examinations questions, 51, 56, 57, 58; of, appointed by Harrison, especially good, 59; admirable, 65; endorsed, 66; and political assessments, 70; examinations under for year ending June 30, 1888, 74; a humbug, 77; report of, 77; see Harrison, President, 81; and the civil service, 86; and Mahone, 86; and eligible list, 93; petition for appropriation for, 93; petition for larger appropriation for started by Massachusetts Civil Service Reform Association, 102; investigation of by congress, 103; report of on conduct of Milwaukee post-office by postmaster Paul, 103; undemocratic, see Cummings and Vance, 116; debate over appropriation for in house of representatives, 119; investigation by congressional committee, 119; praised, see resolutions of Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, 120; Harrison requests aid for, 122; commended, see Missouri, civil service reform association of, 136; charges against, see Grosvenor, Houk, and Roosevelt, 115, 146; investigates post-office at Philadelphia, 144; 7th annual report of, 184, 185, 186; charges of Wanamaker against, 185; examinations held in year 1889-90 by, appointments, 185; inefficient methods of alleged, see Wanamaker, 193; opposition to and charges against, see Cannon, Plumb, Grosvenor, 202, 203, 204; treasury supervising architect not obliged to accept subordinates provided through, but does, 224; politics of applicants for office passing examinations of, unknown to, 224; exposes methods of Raum, Jr., 228; threatened by congress, 229; attacked by Clarkson, 230, 231; and prosecution of Raum, 238; attacked and defended, 250, 251; examinations ordered for promotions in Washington offices, 254, 261; charges of favoritism of denied by Roosevelt, publicity of all documents and books of promised, 266, 267; under Presidents Arthur, Cleveland and Harrison, see also Grant and Hayes, 271, 272, 273, 274, 275; first report 1884, extent of classified service, 276; and violations of law in Omaha, Neb., post-office, 281; necessity of more money for, 282, 287, 288; eighth report of, 289; asks Harrison to order competitive examinations for census service, 292; requires physical examination in railway mail service, 305; praised by National League, 321; gives information regarding political assessments to United States District Attorney Jolly, 330; warning of, against political assessments, 358; under Harrison, proposes extensions, 372; of House of Representatives and Baltimore investigation, 373; discovers political assessments, 375, 383, 385; praised, 376; report of for 1891-92, 396, 397.

Civil service examinations, see examinations; defects in system of local boards, 1; publicity of examination papers and records urged, 1; examinations of little value, 69; for Brooklyn and New York City police force, worthless, 355, 356.

Civil service commissioners, see Roosevelt Lyman, Thompson, Johnson, etc.

Civil service law of States; of New York, Massachusetts and Pennsylvania, decisions and opinions of courts on, 44, 281; of New York disregarded by common council of Buffalo, N. Y., 161; of New York held valid by New York courts, 200; of Massachusetts, some features of, 204; evasion of in New York City service, 319, 320; of United States, see also Pendleton act; plan to evade, see Grosvenor, violations of, see violations, 25; violations of in Milwaukee post-office, see Paul, postmaster, 36; and census bureau, see Harrison, President, 42; opinions of courts, 44; see Ewart, 47; objection to by Congressman Hall, 47; opinions on, see Chandler, Reagan, Payson, Cutchins, Dolph, Hitt, Simmonds, 73; see Pendleton and Eaton, 79; Senator Gorman opposed to, 79; broken at Milwaukee by postmaster under Cleveland, 103; opposed by Browne, 112; upheld, see Lodge, favored by Cleveland, 122; upheld, see Henderson, 122; opposed, see Cheadle and Grosvenor, 153; supported by Lodge and McKinley, M. C., 168, 169; rigidly observed in post-office at Indianapolis, 186; Raum attempts to override, 203; commended by Secretary Tracy, 221; Wanamaker's evasion of defended by Gorman, 225; G. B. Raum, Jr., sells privilege of selection under, 238; to be relaxed, to allow federal officers to work for Harrison, 240; and National League, 271; and the courts, 281; violated in Alabama, 355; construed favorably to Baltimore office-holders, politically active, 357, 358; as construed by Judge Bradley, and Assistant Attorney-General Tyner, 357, 358; Harrison claims vigorous enforcement of, 366; should be extended, 5; not extended in application by Harrison, despite platform pledges, 189; extension of, urged upon President Harrison by Massachusetts republicans, see Lodge, Roosevelt, Rogers, Wolcott, 192; order of President Harrison, extending it to part of Indian service, 221; President Harrison should put navy yards under, 222; extended by Cleveland to railway mail service, 224; extended by Harrison to Indian service, 230; somewhat extended by Harrison, 237; application of, only to federal offices having 50 employees, condemned, 238; extension of to all free delivery cities, requested by national convention of letter carriers, 253; should be extended to post-office and navy departments, 257; extended to fish commission by Harrison, 332; extensions under Harrison, 371, 372; extensions of, under Cleveland and Harrison, 376; proposal to extend under Harrison, 387; extended to all free delivery post-offices, and weather bureau service, 403; should be extended wherever applicable, 413.

Civil service law, repeal of, demanded, 49; attempt at, see Cheadle, 77; proposed by Senator Farwell and opposed, see Columbus Republican, 83; unwise, see South Bend Times, 83; bill of Senator Paddock to withdraw railroad mail service from operation of, 92; desired, see Richardson, 96; repeal of sought after, see Cheadle, congressman, 112; bills of republicans for, 358; bills for under Harrison, 388; bill of De Armond to suspend for first year of every president's term, 404.

Civil service reform, and the public school, see Curtis, C. T. Lane, D. C. Brown, duty of teachers to enter politics, see address of Parr, Prof. S. S.; relation of to other reforms, address by C. J. Bonaparte before annual meeting National League 1890; of prime importance, see St. Louis Republic; favored by Massachusetts legislature, see Boston and Cambridge; all other reforms should be subordinated to, see Swift; morals of, see Blackford; advocated, see DeLand; see Wirt, Senator, addresses of; newspapers devoted to, see good government, Civil Service Record, CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, Civil Service Reformer; see also patronage; see convention and platform; see press; and church, see church; see also address; in Indiana under Cleveland's first administration, 1; pledges of republican party of, see Foulke, W. D., 4; how it can be accomplished (see address of Dabney, R. H.), 7; reasons for (see address of McKain, A. A.), 8; attitude of democratic party in Indiana to, see address of H. Briggs, 8; movement for, if successful must be within party lines (see address of Lane, C. R.), 8; and teachers, 11; in Indianapolis fire department, 13; advocated by a professor, 16; advocated by a clergyman, 16; and Postmaster General Dickinson, 18; opinions of, 18; and the post-offices, 18; and census bureau, 19; and Senator Ingalls, 22; and the schools, by Brown, D. C., 23; movement for, stronger than ever, 27; status of, 28; progress in extending in federal service, number of places covered, examinations, persons examined, successful competitor, 32; under State laws, in New York, in Massachusetts, 32; Congressman Perkins opposed to, 35; opposed by Browne, Perkins, Cannon, Taylor, Houk, 35; objections to by Congressman Browne, 35; objections to considered, 35; Congressman Cannon opposed to, 35; sentiment in favor of at Brookline, Mass., 36; necessary to improve condition of Indians, see Welsh, 39; opinion of, held by ex-Secretary Chase, 39; see Hoar, 43; controversy over, between Loomis and Buffalo Evening News, 44; objections to by Hall, Ewart, Taylor, Blair, Ingalls, Houk, Shearman, Evans, Cannon, Browne, Perkins, 49; general opposition to, resolution and newspaper condemnation of, 49; objections to by S. R. Stratton and federation of republican clubs of 3d Maryland District, 49; favored by President Hayes, 50; pledges that President Harrison and cabinet to reform, 52; see Houk, Darlington, Evans, Shearman, Plumb, Harrison, Cleveland, 55; as a moral question, see Bonaparte, 59; address on by Lucius B. Swift, 137; advocated by St. Louis Republic, 138; disregarded by administration of Harrison, see Pennsylvania, 156; action of Harrison's administration in regard to condemned, 156; result of 1890 elections in Massachusetts and Pennsylvania strengthen cause of, 173; antagonism to, responsible for republican defeat of 1890, 173; election of 1890 in New York, disastrous to, 173; advocated by Everett, 174; growth of sentiment for, sketched, 174; circular letter of Cushing on, 174; hostility to of Clarkson and Wanamaker, 177; opposed by Houk, advocated by Senator Sherman, 177, 178; opposed, see Grosvenor, 178; see Cleveland, 181; opposed by Clarkson and Wanamaker, 188; opposed by Raum, commissioner of pensions, 190; opposed by editor of Delphi Journal, a postmaster, 191; disregarded by President Grant, 191; an object lesson in, see Roosevelt, 192; President Harrison deserves some credit for, 59; a necessity and a prime importance, 59; as a moral question, see Bonaparte, 60, 61; considered a humbug by Ohio republicans, 62; denounced by republicans of West Virginia, 62; Harrison not bound to enforce spirit of according to New York republicans, 62; denounced by Iowa republicans, 62; Neither party cares about it, see Indiana, 62; denounced in New Hampshire by republicans, 62; denounced as a sham by Pennsylvania republicans, 62; Maryland republican clubs denounce, 63; denounced by republican central committees in New York, 63; in Massachusetts and Maryland under Cleveland, 63; disregarded by Harrison's administration, 64; in Homiletic Review for October, 1889, 65; advocated, 65; opinion on by republican papers, 65; opinions on, republican party pledged to, 66; plan for agitation of before National League, annual meeting, 1889, 66; opinion of Foraker on, 68; violation of Harrison's promises of leads to republican defeat of 1889, 68; in Boston city service, 68; see Lodge, 69; in fire department at Indianapolis, 69; and fight against Gorman, in Maryland, State of, 70; not responsible for republican defeat of 1889, but patronage system, see Boston Transcript, 76; advocated by newspapers, 76; lecture on before students of Hanover College, Indiana, see Donnell, 77; supported by Pendleton, Willis, Cleveland, Bayard, Endicott, Whitney, Grace, Hewitt, Grant, Chapin, O'Brien, 82; advocated, see Marion Chronicle, 83; advocated, see Logansport Journal, 83;

favored by Indiana State republican press, 83; favored by Buffalo Sunday Truth, Labor, 84; "some popular objections to," see Morton, 85; sham bills for, see Rosecrans, 85; favored, see Sperry, 91; and republican press, 92; session of house committee on, 96; methods used in Eastern Dispensary, New York City, 101; advocated, see Crooker, 102; advocated, see Bacon and Strong, 102; attitude of reformers to, see letter of G. W. Curtis, 103; sentiment favoring at Indiana State University and Franklin (Ind.) College, 108; sentiment favoring in Utah, 111; some popular objections to, see Morton, 111, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119; growth of sentiment favoring, 119; advocated, see Butler, 120; opposed, see Perkins, Cheadle, Spinola, Grosvenor, 122, 123; advocated, see President Hayes, Moore, Greenhalge, Hill, 123; opposed by Houk, Coleman, Dunnell, Biggs, 124, 125; advocated by Cutchin, Tracey, Butterworth, McKinley, McComas, 124, 125; victory for in house of representatives, see Curtis, 125; "the scope and difficulties of," see Bonaparte, 126, 127, 128; "morals of," see Blackford, 130; its later aspects, by W. D. Foulke, Economic Tract No. XXXI, 200; great progress of in cities of Massachusetts, 204; under Harrison and Cleveland compared, diverse opinions of Harper's Weekly and CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, further funds for commission refused, 211; favored by Dawes, Butterworth and others, opposed by Cannon, 211; in Massachusetts and New York cities, 212; all other reforms should be subordinate to, 213, 214; Thurston, president league of republican clubs speaks in favor of, 219; recognized as the leading issue by Massachusetts republicans, 219; silence regarding, see Cleveland and Harrison, 220; methods, use of advised in street cleaning department of New York and Indianapolis, see equally divided politically, 220, 221; Secretary of Navy Whitney secretly opposes, 222; in Washington, D. C., in letters in Civil Service Record for April, 1891, 224; opposed by Wanamaker, 224; popular in Indiana, federal, state officers, and citizens favoring, 227, 229; supported by labor organizations of Buffalo, New York, 228; all other reforms should be subordinated to, 228; favored, see Wilby, 235; pupils in Indiana schools know nothing about, 236; attitudes of Cleveland and Harrison towards, compared, 237; the main issue, 244; favored by Chittenden, 251; favored by Harrington, appointed chief of weather bureau, 253; favored by national convention of fire superintendents, 253; advocated by Lowell, Jones, 254; present status of, by Rev. H. Lambert, criticized, 255; advocated by M. Storey, ex-Secretary Bayard, 257; D. B. Eaton, on, 257; pledges of republican party "not good after election," 260; see address of Lambert, 261; as an issue, 261; address of Foulke on, before social science congress at Saratoga, 1891, 262, 263; practicability of conceded by highest public officers, 271; in Buffalo, N. Y. city offices, 273; advocated in republican national platforms 1884, 1888, 275; praised by Cleveland, message 1886, by Windom, annual report 1889, 276; status of, 282; under Harrison and Cleveland, 282, 283; in census service, see report of National League act, 291, 295; opposed by Census Superintendent Porter, 292; favored by Public Service, 306; prize for essay on offered by W. G. Law, 308; bureaucracy objection to compared to spoils system, 308; opposed by Beard, collector at Boston, 322; favored by laborers, see Andrews, 331; in republican national platform, 1892, 337; Cleveland and Harrison compared, in regard to, 338; in national democratic platform 1888, 1892, in Indiana state democratic and republican platforms, 1892, 349; pledges of by Harrison, silence regarding in 1892, 357; under Cleveland and Harrison, strength of popular dislike for, 364; the real issue, 365; address on by G. W. Julian, 365, 367, 370, 376; see Welsh, 366; under Cleveland and Harrison, 367, 370; in letter of acceptance of Cleveland 1892, 375; under Harrison and Cleveland, 376; prospects for under democratic administration, 388; under Harrison and President-elect Cleveland, 389; O. T. Morton on, 396; in 1892, annual message of Harrison, 397; change of popular feeling regarding, 403.

Civil service reform associations, see national league of, Cambridge, Boston, Indiana, Maryland, New Haven, Massachusetts, New York, Buffalo, Brooklyn, Missouri, Newton, Pennsylvania, Bloomington, Philadelphia, Brookline, Milwaukee, civil service reform association of; see also Malden, Geneva, N. Y. Lawrence, Kan.

CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, opinions of by Indiana newspapers, 13; non-partisan, intends to advocate only civil service reform, 42; opinions of, 110; sent to college libraries, 192; policy of, 235.

Civil Service Record, Boston, March, 1889, 2; for April, 1889, plan for treatment of fourth-class postmasters, 18; articles in on civil service reform in Boston police force, 104; D. B. Eaton in, on removal of Saltonstall, 105; and growth of sentiment favoring merit system, 119; and Brooklyn, N. Y., navy yard under Secretary Whitney, 148; illustrates civil service labor examinations, 152; for October, 1890, contains speeches before National League meeting, 1890, 162; exposes methods of Porter, superintendent of census, 190; on reform bill introduced in Pennsylvania legislature, 204; on

- Flower's condemnation of congressional patronage, 201; condemns removal of Corse, postmaster at Boston, 215; prints examination papers of national census bureau and of Massachusetts census department for employes, April, 1891, 219, 220; for April, 1891, contains letters on merit system in Washington, D. C., 224; on examination questions used in navy yard at Brooklyn, N. Y., under Tracy, 236; commended, completes tenth year, E. B. Greene makes index for, 237; circulation of, 1891, 239; on "bosses," 251; on spoils system, 261; merges with Civil Service Reformer into Good Government, 357.
- Civil Service Reformer, Baltimore, March 1889, 2; article in advocating clerical advocacy of civil service reform, 30; on political assessments at Baltimore, 162; prints specimen applications for office of those failing to pass examinations, on abuse of census service, 204; on evil effects of patronage on schools of Baltimore, 211; for March, 1891, exposes Gorman, 214; for March, 1891, on corruption in politics, 214, 215; on Gorman, 219; on common cause among spoilsmen, 228; commended, 237; merges with Civil Service Record into Good Government, 357.
- Claffin, W., ex-Governor of Massachusetts, signs petition for larger appropriation for civil service committee, 102.
- Clapp, A. M., and political assessments, 287.
- Clarion, Iowa, Editor Harwood appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Clarion, Pa., Journalist Patrick, postmaster at, 149.
- Clark, Alderman, of Indianapolis, supports Fire-Chief Webster, 208.
- Clark, collector at Chicago, 95.
- Clark, ex-collector of customs at El Paso, Tex., 266.
- Clark, Dr., New York assemblyman, introduces bill for municipal reform in Oswego, N. Y., 415.
- Clark, A. B., officer Indiana civil service reform association, 108.
- Clark, A. B., editor, disappointed office-seeker, opposes Sherman, 301.
- Clark, E. P., on Jacksonian "rotation" scheme, in August, 1891, Forum, 257.
- Clark, G. W., politician, and post-office at Rochelle, Ill., 109.
- Clark, H., ward politician, see Buffalo, N. Y.; see Hill, 307.
- Clark, J., candidate as second auditor, 6.
- Clark, J. H., political worker, 160.
- Clark, M. H., in New York convention, 335.
- Clarkson, C., private secretary to J. S. Clarkson, 175.
- Clarkson, J. S., editor, appointed first assistant postmaster-general, 14; number, etc., of removals and "resignations" under, 22, 27, 35, 39, 41, 49, 62, 75, 76, 77, 91, 94, 130, 131, 149, 164, 173, 188, 253, 261, 376; see also removals; and office seekers, 14; and railroad mail service, 21; and office-seekers, 24; and Isabella De La Hunt, postmaster at Cannelton, Ind., 26; "the unspeakable," 27; tries to help Love, accused of selling offices, despite contrary evidence declares him innocent, 32; and post-offices, 37; appoints L. D. Levan, a disreputable character, postmaster at Wilson, N. Y., 39; spoilsman, 43; appointments in Iowa under, 46; and Syracuse post-office, 46; negotiates with Mahone, 52; and post-office at Cannelton, Ind., and at Long Island City, 54; appoints postmasters, 55; removes postmaster at Strawberry Point, Iowa, appoints political worker, resolutions by residents denounce this action, 55; condemned by Milwaukee Sentinel [republican], 66; largely responsible for republican defeat in Iowa in 1889, 67; and postmaster at Lawrenceville, Va., 74; spoilsman, 92; appoints J. H. Flenniken postmaster at Bradford, Penn., 99; investigates case of Love, 99; postmaster-general, 103; and post-office at Rochelle, Ill., 110; letter to from Cooper regarding postmaster at Freedom, Owen county, Ind., 112; banquetted at Boston, 119; and Harrison, 121; condemned, 125; thinks national sentiment against civil service reform, 128; and civil service reformers, 130; speech of at Boston before Norfolk club, 130, 131; gives patronage in Missouri to Filley, 132; condemned, see C. T. Russell, Jr., 136; correspondence of with R. H. Dana, 144; gives office to his cousin, 150; retires, laudation of, 154; and Dana, 154; and Postmaster McKenna of Long Island City, N. Y., 175; letter regarding removal of Evans, on secret charges, 175; and Greenhow, postmaster at Hornellsville, N. Y., 176; hostile to civil service reform, 177; removes postmasters "upon expiration of four years' service, and second commission not yet expired," 189; opponent of civil service reform, 188; spoilsman, 191; denounced, 193, 194; attacks civil service commission, 230, 231; advice of to young republicans on plan of campaign, 235, 236; dinner to, 245; appointment of, hurts civil service reform, 255, 256; takes place of Quay on National Republican Committee, condemned, 257; and Platt, 260; injures civil service reform, see Lambert, 261, 269; on mugwump, 269; spoilsman, 272; and civil service reform, 274; on "bosses," 278, 281, 282, 314, 317; and young republicans, 329; and post-office in saloon building, 331; deserts Harrison, 332; deserts Harrison, 337, 341, 342, 345, 346, 347, 350; enlogizes Quay and Dudley, 346; placated, 353, 354; works for Harrison, 359; on national republican committee, 363; general, 373; on post-offices as a factor in politics, 361, 369; member national committee, etc., confers with Quay, 390.
- Clarkson, N. C., cousin of assistant postmaster-general appointed postmaster at Hamilton, Mo., 150.
- Classification, once ordered can not be postponed, postponement not necessary, act of bad faith, 10.
- Classified service, ought the to be increased, address, see Rogers; extensions of Cleveland and Harrison, 275; extent of in 1884, 276; extension of under Harrison, 366; civil service commission recommends extensions of, 397.
- Clay, H., opposes spoils system, 274.
- Clay, Rev. J. H., negro, opposes Harrison, wants offices for negroes, 244.
- Clay, Mary L., postmaster at Huutsville (Ala.) removed by President Harrison on report of special agent, without cause, 29.
- Clay City, Ind., objections to appointment of Mrs. Wilber as postmistress at, 89.
- Clayton, B. S., appointed postmaster at Columbia, S. C., vice Gibbs, removed, 74.
- Clayton county, Iowa, resolutions of veterans of, denouncing Clarkson, 55.
- Clayton, Powell, obtains appointment of True as postmaster at Eureka Springs, Ark., dispenser of patronage, 55; controls patronage in Arkansas, 188.
- Clear Lake, Ia., fight over post-office at, 121.
- Clearwater, A. T., judge, a political worker for Platt, 265.
- Clements, congressman and civil service law, 123.
- Clements, E. M., introduces bill in Virginia legislature for non-partisan police and fire service, 87.
- Clements, I., politician, appointed pension agent at Chicago, 107.
- Clements, J. W., office-seeker, 24.
- Clerks, questions used in examination for, at Indianapolis, August 6, 1889, 56, 57, 58.
- Clelland, E., removed from post-office at Quincy, Ill., for political reasons, 148.
- Cleveland, Grover, as governor, civil service law of New York due largely to, appoints good commission, 271.
- Cleveland, President, extensions of civil service law under, see also civil service law; order of that railway mail service be classified, 10, 21, 22, 29, 81, 224, 372, 403; retains republican postmaster at Norwich, Conn., beyond four years, see Norwich, Conn.; and the Indianapolis post-office, 3; and the spoilsmen, 5; and civil service reform, 10; and Postmaster Pearson, 12, 20; number of appointments, April, 1889, 16; and Missouri offices, 24; and Thomas, and Dowling, 25; and Higgins, 25; removes Isabella De La Hunt, postmaster at Cannelton, Ind., for "offensive partisanship," 26; and Troy, N. Y., post-office, 29; allows republican postmaster at Bridgeport, Conn., to serve out term, 29; retained postmaster at Jersey City until end of term, 29; retains republican postmaster at Norwich, Conn., over his term, 29; at suggestion of Congressman Matson appoints H. G. Douglas, editor, postmaster at Plainfield, Ind., 30; removes Hankness, postmaster at Albert Lea, Minn., for cause, appoints Stacy, 39; promises of and their fulfillment in Indiana, 41; civil service reform, promises of, 43; abuse of civil service law by administration of, 49; re-instates Naval Officer Burt, see Burt, 52; and Kansas post-offices, 55; civil service reform under, see Eliot, 60; and civil service reform in Massachusetts, and Maryland, 63; patronage largely responsible for his defeat, 65; see Lea, 68; makes clean sweep in Charleston navy yard, 69; see Lodge, 69; gives patronage of Maryland to Senator Gorman, 70; appoints editor postmaster at Syracuse, N. Y., 71; removes four-year office-holders in Maine, 73; attitude of toward civil service reform, 82; weakened by patronage, 83; and Indian Rights Association appoints Oberly Indian commissioner, 86; appoints Spear postmaster at Quincy, Massachusetts, 86; removes Luke, postmaster at Jeffersonville, Indiana, 88; allows office-holders to be political workers, 88; secret charges under, 96; on civil service reform, 98; appoints Turner postmaster at Newtonville, Massachusetts, and Childs postmaster at Brattleboro, Vermont, 100; appoints Pyle postmaster at West Chester, Pennsylvania, 101; abuse of Indian service under, 102; appoints Mrs. Mulligan to succeed Miss Sweet, 107; gives patronage of Maryland to Gorman, 111; criticized by Senator Harrison regarding civil service, 119; favors civil service law, 122; and fourth class post-offices, 124; talk with Biggs, see Biggs, 128; circular of, warning employes in government offices against political working, 135; appoints Montgomery patent commissioner, appoints politician assistant commissioner, removes Montgomery, appoints B. J. Hall, 139, 140; accused of bribing the press, 144; abuses in Norfolk (Va.) navy yard under, 147; bribery of press under, see Harrison, senator, 149; brother in-law of, an office-holder, 150; appoints Ross postmaster at Washington, D. C., 153; removes employes in Brooklyn navy yard, 155; antagonized by party machine, because of civil service views, 171; object of tariff message of, 172; civil service reform and, 173; removes Fortune postmaster at Bloomfield, Ia., 175; and secret charges, 177; gives office to Higgins, disreputable politician, see Gorman, 181; appoints Vandever Indian agent, 181; on necessity of civil service reform, 181; and departmental service, 185; number applicants for office in Washington under, 185; removals under, 185; makes clean sweep of postmasters, 189; spoils system responsible for defeat of, 210; civil service commission under criticized, 211; removals in Indian service under, 217; makes almost clean sweep in Indian service, 219; silent regarding civil service reform, 220; appoints Morgan postmaster at Newton, Mass., 224; gives patronage to Quay and Voorhees, 235; loses by comparison with Harrison in respect to civil service reform, 237; Indian service under, given over to spoils, 239; appoints son of Senator Vest, to diplomatic service, totally unfit, 242; disaffection of Maryland under, gives patronage of to Gorman, 254; controls patronage but fails of re-election, 262; administration of, 266; honestly supports civil service commission, 272; message on civil service reform, 1886, 276; violations of law in post-office at Omaha under, 281; and Harrison, 282, 283; president appoints capable woman postmistress at Olneyville, R. I., 288; promotes Stearns, secretary, 288; and removals on secret charges, 297; clean sweep of Indian agents under, made, 308; on federal patronage, 316; and reform, 325, 326; present political assessments under, in Baltimore federal officers, 328; compared to Harrison, as to civil service reform, 338; ex-federal officers under work for at Chicago convention, post-office at Philadelphia under a scandal, 350; opposed at Chicago convention because favored by "mugwumps," 351; and regular democratic organizations in New York, 355; Kings county, N. Y. democratic leaders promise support to, 356; and spoils system, 358, 359; and Harrison, comparison regarding civil service reform, 364; and civil service reform, 367, 369; Cleveland, civil service reform under, 372, 374; civil service reform in letter of acceptance, 1892, 375; in 1884, 1888, 376; civil service reform under, 376; during the war, 381, 385, 386; President-elect, victory not a license to revel in spoils, 387; and extension of civil service law, 388; and civil service reform, 389; war record of, 389; applicants for office in Indiana during second term, 392, 394; refused while candidate to promise spoil to Sheehan, 395; address of, on issues, 395, 396; civil service commission under, first term, should reappoint Roosevelt, 397; endorsed for denunciation of spoils system, 398; obligations of, 404; opposes election of Murphy as senator from New York, 404; and congressional patronage, 405; applicants for office in Indiana, for second term, 409, 411; since election, 413; applicants for office in Indiana, under [second term], 415, 422.
- Cleveland, Ohio, Anderson appointed postmaster at, 216; custom-house at not classified, number of employes in, 277.
- Cleveland Leader [republican], civil service reform advocated, 92.
- Cleveland, Rev. Dr., favors civil service reform, 73; favors civil service reform, 227, 229.
- Cleveland, W. J., philanthropist, on Indian troubles at Pine Ridge, S. Dakota, 211, 217, 218.
- Clinton, Iowa, Editor Mahin appointed postmaster at, 126.
- Clinton, J., low politician of Indianapolis, 207.
- Club, Young Men's Republican, of Des Moines, Iowa, Clarkson advice to, on plan of campaign, 235, 236.
- Clugage, J. P., editor, applicant for postmastership at Sullivan, Indiana, 88; appointed postmaster at Sullivan, Indiana, 377.
- Cockran, B., Tammany politician, levies assessments for personal use, 184; opposes nomination of Cleveland because favored by "mugwumps," 351.
- Cockrell, and patronage in census bureau, 234.
- Cockrum, J. B., assistant United States district attorney for Indiana, 14; declares charges against Dudley not founded on fact, 41; a political worker, 158, 162, 219, 260, 353, 354, 370, 377, 378, 379, 380, 381, 389; worker for Harrison, 316, 317; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 343, 379.
- Coffey, acting mayor of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Nathan, 352.
- Coffey, T. J., letter to from Kemble, 270.
- Coffin, senator, levies political assessments on federal office-holders in Baltimore, Md., 162.
- Coffin, C. B., republican politician, works for reappointment of Morgan, democrat, postmaster at Newton, Mass., 224.
- Cogswell, general, desires removal of Stearns in favor of Dodge, 250.
- Cogswell, W., congressman, letter of to Johnson, postmaster of Manchester, Mass., 187; secures removal of Stearns for political reasons, and appointment of Dodge, 288.
- Colbert, captain Indianapolis police, arrests Moore, gambler and post-office employe, is asked to call arrest a put-up job, see Moore; and office seekers, see equally divided politically, 213.
- Cole, H., negro, Harrison delegate from N. Carolina, 334.
- Cole, T., on eligible list of N. Y. police force, induced to try to buy immediate position, is fleeced, see Tammany, 224, 225.

- Coleman, congressman, controls patronage of Louisiana, 71; opposes civil service reform, 121.
- Coleman, C. E., negro, R. R. mail employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Colfax, Wash., Postmaster La Rue of, forced to resign, 165.
- Collectors of internal revenue, editors appointed, 30.
- College graduates, young and civil service examinations, 26.
- Colleges, and duties of citizenship, 104.
- Collier, Dr., federal officer, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Collier, surveyor of port, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Collier, W. H., republican committee chairman, attempted bribery of, 162.
- Collin, professor in Cornell University, defends Hill, 305; defended for defense of Hill, 313.
- Collins, representative in Indiana legislature, spoilsman, 407.
- Collins, C., clerk in Indiana senate, 408.
- Collins, C. C., relative of Mrs. R. Croker, appointed police captain, 356.
- Collins, Edith, in charge of examination for police matron at New York, see Maloney.
- Collins, F. W., U. S. Marshal, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344, 348.
- Collins, G. J., spoken of for Brooklyn, N. Y., post-office, 135; postmaster at Brooklyn, N. Y., political worker for Harrison, 336; spoilsman, 360.
- Collins, J., deputy collector in N. Y. custom house, a political worker, 265, 279; low politician, desires clean sweep of democrats, 311; in New York convention, 334; at Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Collins, P. A., signs petition for larger appropriation for civil service commission, 102.
- Collyer, Rev. R., advocates civil service reform, 82.
- Columbia Club, republican organization at Indianapolis, 332; and spoils system, 338.
- Columbia, District of, D. M. Ransdall, politician, appointed marshal of, 34; central republican committee of favors spoils system, 63; Ransdall appointed marshal for, 68; clerk of committee of removed by Senator Ingalls, who appoints his own son, 215; Ransdall, U. S. marshal for, gets offices for relatives, 244; civil service commission recommends extension of classified service to all employes in, 397.
- Columbia, Pa., post-office at, see Brosins, 72.
- Columbia, S. C., B. S. Clayton appointed postmaster of, vice Gibbs, removed, 74.
- Columbus, Ind., dissatisfaction among applicants for postmaster of, 89; Hartman, postmaster of, at Minneapolis convention, 379; Finney supported for postmaster of by Congressman Cooper, 398.
- Columbus, Neb., Postmaster Hensley, of, forced to resign, 166.
- Columbus, Ohio, applicants for post-office of and Senator Sherman, 67; spoils system in asylum at, 304.
- Columbus Republican opposes repeal of civil service law, 83.
- Colville, W. W., federal office-holder, supporter of Quay, suspected by Harrison, 299.
- Colyer, W., editor, appointed postmaster at Albion, Ill., 111.
- Commercial Club, of Boston, address before on iniquity of spoils system by Roosevelt, 194.
- Commission, civil service, see civil service commission.
- Commission, Indian, controversy about, 22.
- Committee, national republican, offended by Harrison, 240; enlogizes Quay and Dudley, 257.
- Conaty, J. B., dishonest juror and bondsman for Sullivan, corrupt politician, see Indianapolis.
- Concord, Ind., fight over postmastership at, 72.
- Concord, Mass., reappointment of postmaster at, see Bancroft, 91; Buttrick recommended for reappointment at, 100.
- Concord, N. Hampshire, Postmaster Robinson of, active politician, 143.
- Coudit, E. M., politician, favored by administration, 180.
- Conference, civil service reformers at Baltimore, 1889, 2.
- Conger, U. S. minister to Brazil, political worker, 382.
- Conger, Col., speech of against Harrison, 240.
- Conger, A. L., patronage of, works for Blaine, 340, 341, 345; political worker, 389.
- Conger, S., appointed census supervisor 3d Indiana district, gives patronage to M. Moores at Indianapolis; politician, 101, 132; lets politicians appoint enumerators, 182, 190; turns service over to spoil, 293.
- Congregationalist, on Collector Erhardt, and decent politics, 257.
- Congress, members of harassed by office-seekers, 6.
- Congressional Patronage, see Patronage, Congressional.
- Congressmen, and internal revenue collectorships, 14; 140 recommend Butler, R. R. as commissioner of Indian affairs, 11; of Penn. control patronage of, after Senators Cameron and Quay, 72.
- Conklin, snpt. Central Park menageries, 320.
- Conkling, A. R., bill of, preventing political assessments in New York, 318.
- Conkling, R., Senator, and President Garfield, 14, 361; spoilsman, 413.
- Conn, Congressman-elect, 392; patronage of, 410; patronage of, 420, 422.
- Connecticut, republican platform 1872 and 1874, advocates civil service reform, 50; political assessments of federal and other offices in, 183; requisition of forger from, refused by Gov. Hill of New York for political reasons, 214; schemes of Hill in, 309; postmasters in and elsewhere, compelled to give list of voters, 330.
- Conuell, Congressman, and Lincoln, Neb., post-office, 72, 108.
- Conner, J. T., editor, appointed postmaster at Toledo, Ill., 141.
- Connersville, Ind., Fearis, postmaster of, at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- Connett, Alderman, and Indianapolis fire department, 13; obtains removal of Fire Chief Webster, 36; spoilsman and low politician, 207; Blaine supporter, bribed by Harrison with office, 362; politician at Indianapolis, given office as bribe, 366.
- Couduolly, postmaster, Scranton, Penn., 101.
- Conroy, F., Indian machinist, refused employment to give place to white man, 218.
- Conroy, P., appointed postmaster at Watkins, N. Y., see Hiscock and Flood, 150.
- Conroy, W., murderer, low politician, pardoned by Gov. Hill, 320.
- Consul, Swiss, and charges of corruption, 24.
- Consulships, great number of applications, 16; applicants for, 24; Editor A. Reed appointed to, at Dublin, 30; R. Spooner appointed to Prague through influence of Senator Spooner, 30; applications for, 75; number of applicants for under Harrison, 185.
- Convention, see also platform; national democratic, 1892, at Chicago, see Chicago; national republican at Minneapolis, 1892, see Minneapolis; republican national, 1888, D. McLean, delegate to rewarded, 30; republican national convention at Chicago, 1888, 121; Indiana democratic, July, 1890, denounces abandonment of civil service reform, 180; Ohio republican, June, 1891, condemns spoils methods of democratic governor, 257; state democratic of Maryland, July, 1891, condemns spoils methods of Harrison administration, 257; of republican league at Syracuse, August, 1891, federal office-holders at, 259; republican, Seneca county, N. Y., factional fights in, August, 1891, 259, 260; Iowa state, 1891, federal officers at, 260; republican state of Alabama, 1892, charges political activity of federal office-holders in, 355.
- Converse, J. O., editor, appointed postmaster at Chardon, O., 301.
- Conway, E., deputy U. S. marshal in Indiana, ward politician, 108; worker for Harrison, 302, 317, 379; political worker in Indiana, 144, 353, 377, 378.
- Cook, Mrs., letter of to Indian Commissioner Morgan, showing abuses of Indian service in S. Dakota, 202.
- Cook, C. A., U. S. dist. att'y, Harrison delegate from N. Carolina to Minneapolis convention, 334, 348.
- Cook, J. W., letter to H. Welsh on Indian service, 79.
- Cook, Major, federal officer, a political worker, 162.
- Cooley, W. B., chief clerk P. O. department, letter of Postmaster Smith, 188.
- Coolidge, T. J., appointed minister to France for political reasons, 382.
- Coombs, W. J., candidate for congress, 178; opposing Wallace, 374.
- Cooper, state senator of Penn., 133.
- Cooper, ward politician of Indianapolis, supports Fire Chief Webster, 208.
- Cooper, E. H., negro editor, opposes Harrison, wants offices for negroes, 243, 244.
- Cooper, G. W., favors keeping reform promises, is prevented from active work in Ohio campaign in 1889, 68; asks for retention of postmasters at Freedom and Brooklyn, Ind., 112, 174; and investigation of Pension Commissioner Ramm, 190, 238, 373; patronage of, 398, 399, 409, 411, 416, 422.
- Cooper, H. J., editor, appointed postmaster at Tampa, Fla., 141.
- Cooper, H. M., internal revenue collector, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Cooper, M. W., appraiser at New York Custom House, and Platt, 258.
- Cooper, T. V., editor and political worker, appointed through influence of Sen. Quay, see Quay, 39; Collector at Philadelphia, spoilsman, 85; works for Senator Cameron, 162; defends Quay, 219; a political worker with Quay, 260, 270, 280; political worker for Harrison, 299, 300; confers with Quay, Reid and Carter, 361, 362, 390; and political assessment circular to raise campaign funds in Pennsylvania, 363.
- Corbaley, chief deputy sheriff at Indianapolis, 315.
- Corboy, P. J., recommends O'Donnell, 60.
- Cornell, ex-governor of New York, 311, 319.
- Cornell University library, 350.
- Cornan, C., postmaster at Ovid, Mich., forced to resign, 165.
- Corning, state senator, applicant for postmastership at Concord, Ind., 72.
- Coruing, J. W., deputy surveyor at N. Y. city, pays political assessments, 279.
- Corpus Christi, Tex., custom-house at not classified; number of employees in, 277.
- Corsa, W. H., federal employe in New York convention, 334.
- Corse, Gen'l, postmaster at Boston, removed for political reasons, 203, 215, 237; entertained by Massachusetts reform club, 251; removed for political reasons, 282, 367, 376.
- Corsicana, Tex., Politician Zadek, appointed postmaster at, 187.
- Corydon, Ind., Hendson, postmaster of, political worker, 379, 382.
- Cotton, E. S., candidate for postmaster at Newtonville, Mass., 100.
- Coulter, J. M., president Indiana state university, favors civil service reform, 227, 229.
- Coulter, T. B., sixth auditor, interpretation of republican promises, his proceeding stopped by Roosevelt, 34; removes subordinates for political reasons, 39; removes Smith, 45; spoilsman, 47; intends clean sweep, 55; member of Ohio Republican Association, 234.
- Council Bluffs, Ia., Treynor, postmaster, political worker, 260.
- Counts, J. A., journalist, father of federal officeholder, worker for Harrison, 316.
- Covill, L. W., federal employe, asked to pay political assessments, 391, 392.
- Covington, Ind., Editor Vogt appointed postmaster at, 126, 377.
- Covington (Ind.) Friend, condemns opposition to Magee bill, see also Magee, 209.
- Covode, investigation, 124.
- Cowen, J. K., writes history of Gorman regime, 237.
- Cowie, J. A., ward politician and Gibbs faction, see also New York City, 241, 242, 265.
- Cowing, Judge, convicts Conroy, murderer pardoned by Governor Hill for political reasons, 320.
- Cowman, Martha, wife of Editor Cowman, appointed postmaster at Casey, Iowa, 142.
- Cox, Secretary, and Maxwell land grant, 369.
- Cox, G. B., low politician in Cincinnati, worker for Foraker, 302; allied with Foraker, 336; disreputable republican politician in Cincinnati, 352.
- Coy, "Sim," corrupt politician of Indianapolis, career of, see Indianapolis, forges tally-sheets, sent to penitentiary, pardoned by Harrison; and Starn, R. S., 17; effect of pardon of, on city election, 59; disreputable politician of Indianapolis, 203; opposes passage of bill for new charter of Indianapolis, 212; adherent of elected president city council at Indianapolis, 221, 228; low politician, aids republicans in Indianapolis, 269; Elkins compared to, 289; like Hill, 306, 307; and tally-sheet frauds, 313.
- Craft, G. T., postmaster of Maplewood, N. H., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Craik, R., federal office-holder, political worker for Harrison, 302.
- Craft, W. H., career as R. R. mail substitute clerk, 12.
- Craft, snpt of carriers at Indianapolis, political worker, 378.
- Cramer, brother-in-law of Pres. Grant, given office, 191.
- Crane, postmaster of Sedan, Ind., political worker, 379, 380.
- Crane, W. J., candidate for alderman, see Buffalo, N. Y., 197.
- Cratsenberg, A. J., postmaster in Winneshiek Co., Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Cravens, representative in Indiana legislature, opposes spoils methods in, 406, 407.
- Cravens, J. O., appointed collector of internal revenue, spoilsman, 35, 38, 41; removals by, 51, 53; opposed by congressmen of Indiana, 84; internal revenue collector in Indiana, political worker for Harrison, 302, 303, 316; gives office to anti-Harrison man, 347; collector and deputies in Indiana, political workers, 378, 379.
- Crawford, A., low politician, see Philadelphia, 233.
- Crawford, D., see Hillism, 309.
- Crawford, Mrs. R. A., charges of favoritism regarding appointment of denied by Roosevelt, 266, 267.
- Crawley, chief clerk of Indiana house of representatives and office-seekers, 406, 407.
- Creighton, W., negro, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Creigmyer, —, indorsed for postmaster at La Fayette, Ind., by Cheadle, 84.
- Crescent Club, low democratic organization in Baltimore, Md., 308.
- Cresco, Iowa, Editor Webster appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Creswell, ex-postmaster-general, office-seeker, 24.
- Crisp, Speaker, election of, 289.
- Crockett, postmaster of South Bend, Indiana, a political worker, 153, 158; political worker for Harrison, 316, 377, 378.
- Croker, R., Tammany boss, and McLaughlin, 245; defends Tammany, 305, 322; Tammany leader, 298; supporter of disreputable politicians, 309, 317, 414; his patronage, 319, 333.
- Croker, Mrs. R., relative of appointed police captain in New York, 356.
- Cronin, Father, supports civil service reform, 137.
- Cronkite, Major, federal official, pays political assessments, 279.
- Crocker, Rev. T. H., on evils of spoils system, 102.

- Croper, H. M., political worker, appointed collector of internal revenue for Arkansas, 39.
- Crosby, A. D., deputy collector internal revenue, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Cross, H. G., journalist, postmaster at Petersburg, Neb., 119.
- Crounze, Assistant-Secretary, spoilsman, tries to get office for his son, 253, 254; to resign to enter political work, 370.
- Crouse, state senator of Penn., political worker for Quay, 280.
- Crouse, G. N., supported for congress by Collector Hendricks and Postmaster C. E. Smith, 386.
- Croussore, J. W., appointment and removal of as postmaster at Oakford, Ind., 96.
- Crowley, R., ex-congressman, opposes Hiscock, 259.
- Crown Point, Ind., Editor Wheeler postmaster at, 302, 377.
- Cruiger, S. V. R., political worker for Harrison in New York, 332.
- Cruikshank, G. L., postmaster at Addison, Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Crum, W. D., negro, nomination of for postmaster at Charleston as political reward, withdrew, 363.
- Crutcher, G., and political assessments, see Kentucky.
- Cuba, N. Y., Journalist Glenn, postmaster at, 155; in N. Y. convention, 335.
- Cullman, Ala., Parker, postmaster of, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Cullom, Senator, and Cook Co. (Ill.) offices, 6; spoilsman, 21, 25; obtains appointment fourth-class postmasters, and examining pension boards, 30; and appointments in Ill., 31; and Farwell demand that commission of Wilcox be withheld because they were not consulted, 31; and office-seekers, 37; spoilsman, 79, 95, 107; and post-office at Lanark, Carroll Co., Ill., 109; obtains removal of Smith, postmaster at Carrollton, Ill., and appointment of successor, 188; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 342; supporter of Blaine, 344.
- Cullom, H., employed in N. Y. City government, assessed for political purposes, pays twice, refuses third time, removed, commits suicide, 45.
- Cullop, spoilsman in Indiana legislature, 406, 407.
- Cummings, A. J., congressman, civil service commission is undemocratic, 116; speech on spoils system in navy yards, 145; and navy yard at Kittery, Me., 146.
- Cummings, councilman of Indianapolis, receives street railway bribing check, 207.
- Cuneo, P., editor, postmaster at Upper Sandusky, O., 301.
- Cuuey, N. W., negro, and collector of customs at Galveston, Texas, political worker, 150, 158, 159; given patronage of Texas, 173; disreputable politician, 180, 266; and Minneapolis convention, 346, 348.
- Cunningham, appointed head of assay office at Boise City, Idaho, upon removal of former incumbent, makes clean sweep, 30.
- Cunningham, chief of division, removed for political reasons, see Coulter, 55.
- Cunningham, G. I., U. S. marshal, offers bribes, 162; delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Cunningham, Kan., Journalist Smith, postmaster at, 149.
- Cunniugham, W. S., and CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 308.
- Curran, M. P., removed without cause from Boston custom-house, place given to L. A. Dodge, relative of Secretary Blaine, 71.
- Curran, W. R., postmaster at Hoboken, N. J., removed for political reasons, 54.
- Currier, F. D., naval officer at Boston, a political worker, 143; an active politician, 160, 179.
- Curry, W. W., makes political assessments for Indiana, 153, 377; circular letter of making political assessments, 160; spoilsman, 181; political worker, 389.
- Curtin, Gov., and Quay, 105.
- Curtis case, 281.
- Curtis, Dr., disgraceful physician, in Central Insane Hospital of Indiana, 211.
- Curtis, G. W., address before N. Y. Civil Serv. Ref. Ass'n, 23; an "imposter," 49; address of before annual meeting of National League 1889, 59, 61; rep. journals favor civil service principles of, 76, 86; letter on attitude of civil serv. reformers on reform, 103; on absurdity of spoils system, 120; and civil service law, 125; on victory in house of representatives for civil service reform, 125; speech at laying corner-stone of Washington Arch 1890, 129; accuses Cleveland of subsidizing the press, 144; president National Civil Service Reform League, 153; before annual meeting National Civil Service Reform League, 161, 166, 167, 168, 169, 172; address before annual meeting National League 1890, 166, 167, 168, 169, 172; to address public schools of Philadelphia on public school and civil service reform, 205; address of before department of superintendence of national educational association on "The Public School and Civil Service Reform," 211; address of before annual meeting National League of Civil Service Reform Associations 1891, 261; address of before annual meeting National League 1891, 269, 275; writes civil service clause in republican national platform 1888, 281; correspondence of with Secretary Foster and Wauamaker over political activity of Van Cott and Hendricks, 289; address of before National League annual meeting 1892, on party and patronage, 321, 326, 329; on committee of publication of Good Government, 357; career of, 366, 367; memorial, adopted by Buffalo Civil Service Reform Association, 394.
- Curtis, J., speaker of Indiana house of representatives, patronage of, 106, 107.
- Curtis, J. E., physician at Indiana Central Insane Hospital, extorts fee for death certificate, 311.
- Curtis, N. W., congressman, 354.
- Cushing, M., circular letter of on civil service reform, 171; agent for Wauamaker, letter to civil service reformers, 188.
- Cushing, W. E., praises CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 110.
- Cushman, postmaster at Newburg, Ind., political worker, 380.
- Custer, Gen'l, see Indian service, 182.
- Customs, 22; deputy collectorship of at Port Townsend given to relative of Pres. Harrison, 30; collectors of, applicants for position as under Harrison, 185; house at N. Y., applications for, position in, 75; house N. Y., employees in become political workers, 108; at St. Louis, Mo., employees in workers for Filley machine, 150; house at Lockport, N. Y., patronage of controlled by Hiscock, 259; houses, and extension of merit system, 275; houses, should be classified, 403; service, examinations for, 1891-92, 396.
- Cutchins, congressman, and civil service law, 73.
- Cutcheon, Congressman, stands by civil service law, 124.
- Dabuey, Prof. R. H., part of address at annual meeting of Indiana Civ. Serv. Ref. Assoc., 1889, 7.
- Dabozy, D. B., office-seeker, 15.
- Dady, Mike J., spoilsman; see also Kings Co., N. York, 24; promised federal office in N. Y.; see Wallace, 72; corrupt politician of Brooklyn, N. Y.; career of, 106, 336; Worker for Nathan, 354.
- Daggett, "Al," corrupt politician of Brooklyn, N. Y., career of; see also Brooklyn, N. Y., 106.
- Dailey's ranch, cowboys kill Indian boy at, and precipitate trouble, 218.
- Daily, representative in Indiana legislature, opposes spoils methods, 406.
- Dakota, Delegate Mathews of, dictates appointments in, 30.
- Dallam, journalist, appointed deputy U. S. revenue collector, 148.
- Dalton, O., Journalist Scott postmaster at, 149.
- Dalton, W. J., deputy street-cleaning commissioner in N. Y. City, ward politician, 291.
- Daly, M. J., political worker, 371.
- Dalzell, gives way to Senator Quay, 30; controversy with Sen. Quay over Pittsburg, Pa., post-office, 87, 90, 112; opposed to Quay, 133, 280; and Quay, 299.
- Dana, police commissioner of N. Y. City, a Croker tool, helps in boosting Collins by beating Civ. Ser. law, 356.
- Dana, Ill., Editor Pritchett appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Dana, R. H., at Balt. conference, 1889, 2; address of, before National League, 1889, on taking 4th class post-offices out of politics, 67, 68, 74; to examine management of civ. service, 77; committeeman report on congressional patronage, 113, 114, 115; on committee investigating patent office, report of, 139, 140, 141; correspondence of, with Clarkson, assistant postmaster-general, 144; and Clarkson, 154; on committee of National League, investigating presidential post-offices, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 172; on committee of Nat. League reporting on removals on secret charges, 175, 176, 177; on committee of National League, reports on political changes in presidential post-offices, 188; on special committee of National League investigating census service, 291, 295; on committee of publication of "Good Government," 357.
- Dancy, J. C., negro, customs coll. at Wilmington, N. C., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Danforth, state treasurer (N. Y.), receives political contributions, 180.
- Daniel, L. M., federal officer, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Daniels, postmaster at Cedar Rapids, Ia., 262.
- Daniels, G. B., postmaster of Withey, Mich., asked for poll of voters, 383.
- Danville, Ill., Editor Jewell appointed postmaster at, 141; Postmaster Jewell of, a political worker, 160.
- Danville, Ind., Editor King supported by Congressman Cooper for postmaster of, 398, 399.
- Dany, J. C., negro, collector of customs at Wilmington, N. C., delegate for Harrison, 334.
- Darby, W., P. O. employe, see Indianapolis investigation, 411.
- Dargan, on house committee on civil service, 86.
- Darling, E., postmaster in Crawford county, Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Darlington, S., congressman, opposed to civil service reform, 37, 51.
- Darnall, S. A., federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Darnell, councilman, and Indianapolis fire department, 13; controls patronage in city offices, 104; and street railway bribery, 207.
- Daugherty, chairman Allen county (Ind.) republican committee, opposes Harrison, 303.
- Daus, R. L., worker for McLaughlin, see Tammany, 318, 319.
- Davenport, I., candidate for governor of New York, 1885, 351.
- Davenport, "Johnny," chief supervisor of elections at New York, 21; makes tool of "The" Allen, see also, 249; letter of questioning rights of voters, 387.
- Davidson, A. J., deputy pension commissioner, a political worker, 279.
- Davis, ballot-box stuffer, see Hudson county, N. Y.
- Davis, senator, spoilsman, 21; opposes E. G. Hay, 84.
- Davis, fireman in Indianapolis fire service, 36.
- Davis, "Bill," councilman and low politician of Indianapolis, 207.
- Davis, "Bill," P. O. employe at Indianapolis, political worker for Harrison, 302.
- Davis, C., political worker for Platt and Hiscock, 265.
- Davis, C. F., offer of Eubanks to sell office to, 99.
- Davis, D. P., father of Journalist Davis, postmaster at Harrison, Neb., 149.
- Davis, I., appointed postmaster at Greenfield, Ind., 89.
- Davis, Ill., Editor Potter appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Davis, "Jim," see also Indianapolis, 207.
- Davis, Rev. J. A., negro, opposes Harrison; wants offices for negroes, 244.
- Davis, J. B., applicant for postmastership of Monroeville, Ind., given office in Indian Service, 88.
- Davis, M., postmaster, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Davis, S. P., applicant for postmaster at Cumberland, Ind., 89.
- Davis, W., postmaster at Kane, Pa., worker for Delamater, 134.
- Davis, W. R., journalist, postmaster at Canton, Kan., 148.
- Davison, J. T., see Hiscock, 259.
- Dawes, Sen., letter to, from Congressman Banks, advocating appointment of J. J. McCarthy, 31; and Boston custom-house, 71; and Collector Saltonstall, 94, 105; controls census patronage in Mass., 104; favorable to civil service reform, 211; requests retention of Corse, postmaster at Boston, 367.
- Dawson, Neb., journalist Buser, postmaster at, 149.
- Dawson, T., soldier, given place in Indiana senate, 408.
- Dawson, Wm., chairman W. Virginia republican state committee, levies political assessments, 390.
- Day, deputy sheriff, a political worker, 162.
- Dayton Journal, (rep.), spoils system a necessity, 49.
- Dea, and Brattleboro, Mass., postmastership, 100.
- Deane, G. B., custom-house contractor, in New York convention, 334; and cartage contract at N. Y. custom-house, 358.
- Deane, W. G., given place by Collector Erhardt, for political services, 150.
- De Armond, congressman, bill of, to suspend civil service law, during first year of every president's term, 404.
- Deas, E. H., deputy coll. int. rev., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Decatur, Ind., editor appointed postmaster at, 37; Quinn, postmaster of, political worker, 379.
- Decker, O. H., appointed consul-general Rio de Janeiro through influence of his relative, Judge Settle, 47.
- Deen, H. W., journalist, postmaster at Jackson Court House, W. Va., 155.
- Deery, E. H., given place in Indiana legislature, 406.
- De Freest, clerk of N. Y. house of representatives and patronage, 215.
- De Grass, J. C., appointed postmaster at Austin, Texas; local politician, 71.
- Degress, politician of Texas, 159.
- De Haven, J. D., congressman, indorses Bush, political worker, 187.
- De Kalb Co., Ind., postmasters in, political workers, 380.
- De La Hunt, Isabella, appointed postmistress at Caunelton, Ind., by Arthur, on recommendation of Sen. Harrison, removed for political reasons by Cleveland, Harrison refuses to reappoint, 25, 177, 308.
- Delamater, state senator of Pa., charged with bribery, career of, 133, 134, 135, 138, 299, 353; candidate for governor of Pennsylvania, 143; opposition to in Pennsylvania, 161; defeated candidate for governor of Pa., financial ruin of, 183, 233; forced on Quay, 249; tool of Quay, 250.
- De Land, J. L., federal examiner, on merit system, 83; on examinations in treasury department, 152; friend of civil service reform, report of on workings of merit system, 200; devises rules for promotion in treasury department, 298.
- Delaney, J., postmaster at Orlando, Fla., removed on secret charges, Fletcher appointed, 176.
- Delano, congressman, and post-offices in N. Y., makes changes in, 47.
- Delaware, repub. platform 1882 advocates civil service reform, 50; political activity of federal office holders in, 334; vote of for Harrison and others at Minneapolis, 347; political activity of federal officers in, attempted bribery by, 347, 348, 389, 401, 402.

- Delaware, Ohio, Gazette, son of editor of, federal office holder, 301.
- DeLemas, B., sec'y republican committee of Alabama, levies political assessments, 391.
- Della Plain, Tex., Journalist McLain postmaster at, 155.
- Delmar, Ala., ignorant negro appointed postmaster at, 47.
- Delphi, Ind., Journal [repub.], editor of given office through, 85, 97; advocated republican bribery in elections as only means to win, opposes civil service reform, 191; condemns civil service examination system, because democrats get offices, 243; charges favoritism on part of civil service commission, 266, 267.
- Democrats, list of, voting in Indiana senate on Magee bill for non-partisan control of state charitable institutions, majority against, 201.
- Democratic platforms, see platforms.
- DeMotte, postmaster at Valparaiso, Ind., a political worker, 153, 377, 378; worker for Harrison, 316; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 343, 379.
- Dennis, Rev. H. D., applicant for postmastership at Lanark, Carroll Co., Ill., 109; defeated applicant for postmastership of Lanark, Ill., 136.
- Denny, C., mayor of Indianapolis, charges against, 207; ex-mayor of Indianapolis, on the mugwump, 269.
- Denton, J. S., see Chemung Co., N. Y., 259.
- Denver, Colo., per cent. of removals in classified and unclassified service in post-office at, 185.
- Deuver, Ind., Fite postmaster of, political worker, 379.
- Departmental service, classified by Pres. Arthur, 185.
- Departments, heads of, and congressional patronage, 47; proposal of Congressman Andrews to extend civil service law to heads of divisions in, 306.
- DePauw, family uses influence for appointment of Throop, 59.
- DePauw, N. T., worker for Harrison, 316.
- Depew, C. M., interview on spoils system, 38; on evils of patronage, 75; address at Pittsburgh on promotion among railway employees, 189; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 341, 342, 343, 344; and Collector Hendricks at head of republican party in New York, 348; worker for Harrison at Minneapolis convention, 379.
- Derby, Ia., Postmaster Chapman of, a political worker, 260.
- Derby, Dr. R. H., resigns from N. Y. City health dept., because it becomes a political machine, 356.
- DeRuiter, street commissioner of Indianapolis, see Indianapolis.
- Des Moines, Ia., advice of Clarkson to young men's republican club of, on plan of campaign, 235, 236; Brandt, postmaster of, political worker at Minneapolis convention, 346.
- Despo, candidate for alderman at Indianapolis, 208.
- Detroit, Mich., customs district of, classified 1883, 276.
- Deveraux, J., able ass't superintendent city delivery at St. Louis, 131.
- Devreux, J. H., negro, federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Dewey, J. F., journalist, given office in Chicago custom house, 126.
- Dice, —, post-office inspector, a political worker, 179.
- Dick, G. N., federal employe, in New York convention, 335.
- Dick, W. F., chairman Ohio republican state committee, levies political assessments, 390, 391.
- Dickey, J. M., anti-Platt political worker, 260.
- Dickinson, postmaster general under Cleveland, averse to civil service reform, 18, 20; gives spoils in Michigan to democrats, 45; and contributions to party funds, 100; and civil service reform, 274.
- Dimmick, D. A., appointed consul at Barbadoes through influence of Secretary Blaine, 56.
- Dimond, General W. H., chairman republican state committee of California, endorses Bush, political worker, 187.
- Dingley, congressman, supports civil service commission, 205.
- Disson, F., negro, post-office employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Disston, H., political worker for Quay, 280.
- Ditney, Ind., Ketcham, postmaster of, solicited for political contributions, 387, 392.
- Divver, P., low politician, appointed police justice by Mayor Grant, well recommended, 184; appointed to judgeship by Governor Hill of New York, 212, see Tammany, 317.
- Dix, Rev. M., D. D., favors clerical recognition of civil service reform, 18; advocates civil service reform, 82.
- Dobbins, P. B., receiver of political assessments, 390.
- Doble, A. K., and pardon of Petroff and Kemble, 152.
- Dobson, H. A., federal employe, asked to pay political assessments, 391, 392.
- Dockery, congressman, upholds civil service commission, 204.
- Dodd, assistant postmaster at Indianapolis, and those eligible for appointment, 9.
- Dodd, faction, see New York City.
- Dodge, F. L., editor, appointed postmaster at Hanford, Cal., 126.
- Dodge, L. A., relative of Secretary Blaine appointed an appraiser in Boston custom house, 71; succeeds Stearns, appraiser in Boston custom house removed for political reasons, 250, 288; appraiser at Boston, political worker, 334.
- Dodson, C., deputy revenue collector, in Maryland convention, 335.
- Doerbaum, J. F., employe in post-office at St. Louis, Mo., worker for Filly machine, 150.
- Dolliver, J. P., congressman, requests resignation of Postmaster Cain, see Cain, 165.
- Dolph, Congressman, and civil service law, 73.
- Donaldson, La., Weber appointed postmaster of, on request of Collector Warmouth, 241.
- Donato, J. G., federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Donavan, C., unsuccessful candidate for congress, ward politician, see New York City, 199.
- Donavan, E. J., signs petition for larger appropriation for Civil Serv. Com., 102.
- Donley, D. E., journalist, appointed postmaster at Baylis, Ill., 141.
- Donnell, J. T., address of at Hanover College, Ind., upon civil service reform, 77.
- Donnelly, J. B., U. S. marshal, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Doran, T. T., see Cannon, 39.
- Dorchester, commissioner of Indian schools, creates office for benefit of his wife, 38; removals under in Indian service, 79.
- Doremus, recommended for census service, 121.
- Dorsey, S. W., and star route scandals, 291; and Elkins, 281, 369.
- Doty, E. A., at Baltimore conference, 1889, 2.
- Dougall, A. H., candidate for postmaster at Ft. Wayne, Ind., 45.
- Dougherty, chief of division, removed by Coulter for political reasons, 55.
- Dougherty, fire chief at Indianapolis to succeed Webster, removed for political reasons, removed and Webster reappointed, 120, 207, 208.
- Douglass, F., ex-U. S. minister, works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 345, 346.
- Douglas, G., applicant for Winamac, Ind., postmastership, 88.
- Douglas, H. G., editor appointed under Cleveland postmaster at Plainfield, Ind., 30.
- Douglass, S. J., census supervisor, asks political work of subordinates, 293.
- Dow, F. N., for collector of customs at Portland, Me., 22.
- Dowling, low politician, and Cleveland administration, 28, 35, 94.
- Dowling, labor commissioner of New York, spoilsman, removals under, civil service rules suspended for, 414.
- Downing, J. H., discharged from navy yard at Norfolk, Va., by Sec'y Whitney, 147.
- Downing, J., confesses to bribery, 151.
- Doyle, sec'y civil service commission, investigates political assessment cases, 392.
- Doyle, H., page in Indiana legislature, 406.
- Doyle, M. J., postmaster, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Draper, leader republican faction at Albany, N. Y., supports A. Chester for surveyorship of Albany district, 45.
- Drapo, J. F., indorsed by Sen. Quay, 100.
- Draper, pension examiner in Indiana, political worker, 379.
- Drummond, S. A., journalist, appointed postmaster at Lancaster, Cal., 141.
- Dryden, postmaster of Martinsville, Ind., political worker, 380.
- Dublin, Editor A. Reed, appointed consul at, 30.
- Du Bois, delegate from Idaho Terr., spoilsman, uses influence; see Wild, 30; senator, supporter of Blaine, 341.
- Ducey, Rev. Father, and attempt to purify politics in N. Y. City, 130.
- Ducey, W. A., succeeded by Deane, appointed by Collector Erhardt at New York, 150.
- Dudley, W. W., obtaining offices for adherents, 2, 7; and offices, 189, 192, 214, 227, 256, 281, 282, 305, 373, 414, 24, 92, 154, 160; letter of, called "Blocks of Five" letter, 41, 78; negotiates with Mahone, 52; uses influence for appointment of Throop, 59; case of, see Edmunds, Sen., 87; and Harrison, 121; levies political assessments, 180; condemned by young men's republican club of Massachusetts, 219; desires indorsement of his "political activity," 244; enlogized by National Republican Committee, 257; Elkins compared to, 289; eulogy of by Clarkson, 359; and republican leaders, 354; and "blocks of five," 368; and Michener, 377; and S. N. Chambers, 380; warrant for not issued by U. S. Dist. Att'y Chambers, 380.
- Duer, E. F., postmaster of Princess Anne, Md., removed for political reasons, Lankford appointed, 108.
- Dufalo, F. F., consul at Havre, Harrison petitioned to retain, by N. Y. cotton exchange, 54.
- Duffy, T. L., laborer, given office by Gold, township trustee at Indianapolis, 256.
- Dugan, L., treasury inspector, removed for political reasons, 332.
- Duhurst, F. G., 335; receiver of political assessments for Maryland, 391.
- Dunbar, J. G., congressional candidate, and Raum, 373.
- Dunean, H. C., letter to from Cooper (M. C.) asking retention of postmasters at Freedom and Brooklyn, Ind., 112.
- Duncan, J., applicant for postmastership of Martinsville, Ind., 399.
- Dunham, federal employe, political worker at Boston, 334.
- Dunlap, H. J., journalist, appointed consul to Breslau, 84, 126.
- Dunlap, W. L., U. S. marshal for Indiana and civil serv. reform, 10, 14, 96, 108; asks Postmaster Browne of Franklin, Ind., to resign, 37, 377; a political worker, 144; worker for Harrison, 316, 320, 337, 343, 353; and republican clubs in Indianapolis, 362; worker for Harrison, 377, 378, 379, 380, 381; appoints "floaters" as deputies, 387, 389.
- Dunn, councilman of Indianapolis, spoilsman and low politician, 207.
- Dunn, postmaster at Stanberry, Mo., 121.
- Dunn, C. J., P. O. employe at Indianapolis, at instance of democratic committeeman Backus, solicits political contributions, removed, 403, 411, 412.
- Dunn, G. W., postmaster at Binghamton, N. Y., a political worker, 266; secures removal of pension examiner Van Alstyne, 304.
- Dunn, I., deputy coroner at Indianapolis, shaves witness fees, 314, 315.
- Dunnell, obtains removal of Stacy, postmaster at Albert Lea, Minn., and reappointment of Harkness, political worker, previously removed for cause, 39; opposes civil service examinations, 124.
- Dunning, F. H., journalist, postmaster at Sanbright, Tenn., 155.
- Dunton, A. G., appointed postmaster at Huntertown, Ind., vice Latham removed through influence of Postmaster Higgins, 362.
- Dunvell, C. J., political worker for Nathan, 264.
- Durbin, W., see Cannon, 39.
- Durbin, W. T., and office-seekers, 37; uses influence for appointment of Throop, 59; politician, secures some appointments, 71, 84.
- Durham, Judge, removed from comptrollership, 21.
- Duryee, S. W., chief clerk in patent office under Pres. Arthur, removed; re-appointed, 140.
- Dutchess county, N. Y., election frauds in, committed by Hill, 306.
- Dwight, J. W., uses influence for appointment of Robinson, postmaster at Ithaca, N. Y., 264; N. Y. delegate to Minneapolis convention, and supports Blaine, 344, 345.
- Dysart, Iowa, Editor Brown appointed, 142.
- Eagle, Edward, editor, worker for Delamater, etc., 134.
- Eagle Park, Idaho, Journalist Wheeler postmaster at, 155.
- Eagle Pass, Tex., custom house at not classified; number of employes in, 277.
- Eastern Dispensary of New York City, civil service methods in, 101.
- Eastman, A., journalist, given office in internal revenue service, 126.
- Eastman, R. B., supervising architect of Brooklyn, N. Y., to be removed for mal-administration, 234.
- Easton, D. J., journalist, postmaster at Union City, Mich., 149.
- Easton, Md., Mulliken, postmaster of, in state convention, 335.
- Eaton, postmaster at New Orleans, pays political assessments, 383.
- Eaton, D. B., memorial on Postmaster Pearson before N. Y. Civil Service Reform Association, 23; draws bill for present civil service law, 75, 79; advocates civil service reform, 82; on removal of Saltonstall, 105; praises CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 110; letters to Senator Allison; letters replying to Senator Hoar, 111; and civil service law, 125; on civil service reform, in June, 1891, North American Review, 257; studies English civil service, at invitation of Hayes; appointed chairman civil service commission under Arthur, 271; on Tammany, 317.
- Eaves, J. B., nomination of rejected by senate, 150; disappointed office-seeker, a political worker, 159; in N. Carolina, 334; stamp clerk at Statesville, N. C., resigns; levies political assessments; sons of given office, 362.
- Eden, "Billy," easy-going place-holder, 315.
- Editor — appointed consul at Palermo, Italy, 240.
- Editors, rewarding of for political services, see Press, 30.
- Edmunds, evils of patronage, 25; and investigation of case of W. W. Dudley, 87.
- Edsall, I. W., removal of by Flower, 319.
- Edwards, A. J., ass't postmaster at Pittsburgh, Pa., supporter of Quay, suspected by Harrison, 299.
- Edwards, Miss., negro Perkins, postmaster of, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Edwards, R., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.
- Edson, C. H., see Harlow, postmaster, 100.
- Edson, Dr. C., appointed sanitary supt. at N. Y. City vice Ewing, removed by Tammany, 356.
- Egan, P., appointed minister to Chile as political reward, 282; U. S. minister to Chile, political worker, 382, 389.
- Egger, C., ward politician, see Indianapolis, 196.
- Ehlert, H., low politician, flees from creditors, 226.
- Eidman, F., internal revenue collector in New York, a political worker, 265, 287; at Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Eiter, ex-postmaster, political worker, 370.

- Elbert, Dr. S. A., negro, opposes Harrison, wants offices for negroes, 243.
- Eligibles, list of civil service commission orders posting of, at Indianapolis, 25; at Indianapolis post-office, June, 1889, 29; in Indianapolis post-office, list of, 48; publicity of lists of, opposed by ex-Commissioner Oberly, 53; list of, and civil service commission, 93; made public, gives satisfaction, 186.
- Elliot, C. W. (Pres. Harvard Univer.), address of before Bay State Club comparing administration of civil service under Cleveland and Harrison, 60; Pres. Harvard University, civil service reformer, 204.
- Elizabeth, N. J., federal patronage in, see Kean, 216.
- Elizabeth, Pa., wife of Journalist Wiley postmaster at, 149.
- Elkham, W. Va., Journalist Greenawalt postmaster at, 155.
- Elkins, "Steve," and Kerens, "Dick," 22; wants larger share of patronage in West Virginia, 71; and Platt, scheme to defraud the government, 258; appointed sec'y of war, corrupt politician, career of, 289, 290, 291; appointment of as sec'y of war, unjustifiable, 298; political worker for Harrison, 336; and Minneapolis convention, 338, 339; confers with New, 340; sec'y of war, career of, 354, 368, 369, 374; appointed to alienate from Blaine, 376; confers with J. C. New, 379; sec'y, etc., political worker, 387, 390.
- Ellart, S., inspector in N. Y. custom house, a political worker, 108.
- Ellettsville, Ind., Sharp, postmaster of, political worker, 880.
- Elliott, councilman of Indianapolis, spoilsman and low politician, 207.
- Elliott, Congressman, 162.
- Elliott, B. K., judge Indiana supreme court, favors civil service reform, 227, 229; mentioned as candidate for governor of Indiana, 353, 381.
- Elliott, D. W., clerk in post-office at Ind'p'l's, 25.
- Elliott, G. F., political worker, see Kings Co., N. Y.
- Elliott, G. L., appointed postmaster at Reelsville, Ind., removed, 89.
- Ellis, chief of division, removed for political reasons, see Coulter, 55.
- Ellis, F., mayor, appointed postmaster at Muucie, Ind., 217; political worker for Harrison, 316, 362, 370, 378.
- Ellis, W. P., appointed postmaster at Washington, Ind., despite sale of office to Sefrits, 121.
- Ellison, state senator of Indiana, spoilsman, 408.
- Elmira, N. Y., postmaster at named by Congressman Flood, 53; Flood, postmaster of, a political worker, opposes Platt and Fassett, factional fights at, 259; a political worker, 265, 266; removed for political reasons, 297, 303, 304; Rathbun appointed, removed, 303, 304, 305; removed on secret charges, Rathbun appointed, 312; removal of through influence of Fassett, 331.
- Elmwood, Neb., Journalist Mayfield postmaster at, 149.
- El Paso, Tex., forty-nine applicants for collectorship of customs at, 45; Flanagan, political worker, appointed customs collector at, 266, 286; custom house at not classified, number of employes in, 277.
- Emans, corrupt political worker for Hill, 306.
- Emerson, L. W., ward politician, tired of factionalism, see Kings Co., N. Y.
- Emery, L., ex-state senator, charges Delamater with bribery, 134, 135.
- Emmert, P. W., journalist, postmaster at Erwin, Tenn., 155.
- Emmetsburg, Iowa, Editor Utter appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Employees, federal, in Massachusetts active politically, 179; at Washington, number of compelled to go home to vote, 179.
- Emporium, Pa., Journalist Gould postmaster at, 119.
- Encinitas, Cal., Editor Smith appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Endicott, Sec., favors civ. service reform, 82.
- England, competitive tests in civil and military service of, 118.
- England, methods used in census service of, 291, 292.
- England, G., a Nathan henchman, 304.
- English, postmaster at New Haven, removed, 96.
- English, A. M., journalist, postmaster at Fontana, Kan., 149.
- English, J., low politician, see Hudson Co., N. Y.
- English, W., low politician, see Hudson Co., N. Y.
- Engraving and Printing, conduct under E. O. Graves, 45.
- Enochs, Congressman, on federal interference in election of Sherman, 301.
- Ensley, N., appointment as pension agt. at Indianapolis opposed, 89, 96; pension agent in Indiana appoints his son chief clerk in pension office, vice J. L. Riley, 108; worker for Harrison, 303, 316; at Minneapolis, 337, 343, 379; and political assessments, 363; political worker, 378.
- Ensley, O. R., given office by his father, pension agent, 108.
- Ensor, J. F., deputy coll. int. rev., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Ensor, J. F., U. S. dist. att'y, and political activity of federal office-holders in Maryland, 335; delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Enyart, M.-L., editor, appointed postmaster at Macy, Ind., 126, 377.
- Ephrata, Penn., democratic postmaster of removed; republican appointed, 72.
- Episcopal Church, pastoral letter of House of Bishops of, favoring clerical advocacy of civil service reform, see Church, 73.
- "Equally Divided Politically," proviso in charter that offices in city service of Indianapolis be, 212, 213, 220, 222, 228, 235.
- Erhardt, J. B., collector at New York, and office-seekers, 38; deputies of, active politicians, 108; spoilsman, see Deane, 150; discontent of office-seekers with, 174; removals under, 183; and fraudulent cartage bids, 216; "resigns," Fassett appointed, 255; resignation of, 257; and Platt, 258; "frozen out" by Platt, 260; and office-seekers recommended by Platt and Gibbs, 261, 265; and Platt, 350; forced to resign for adherence to civil service reform methods, 358; and cartage bids, 371; forced to resign for resisting spoilsman, 373.
- Ernst, J. A., editor, appointed postmaster at St. Genevieve, Mo., 126.
- Erwin, representative in Indiana legislature, and spoils methods in, 407.
- Erwin, Tenn., journalist Emmert, postmaster at, 155.
- Esbridge, Kan., journalist Melrose, postmaster at, 149.
- Estee, M. M., indorses Bush, political worker, 187, 201.
- Estey, and Brattleboro, Mass., postmastership, 100.
- Eubanks, A. C., candidate, letter of, 23; and sale of offices, 99.
- Eugharth, E. E., postmaster at Roduey, Miss., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Eureka Springs, Ark., appointment of True as postmaster of, denounced by republicans of, 55.
- Enstace, A. C., N. Y. civil service commissioner, worker for Hill, 309.
- Enstis, delegate to Minneapolis convention, supports Blaine, 344.
- Evans, G. O., fiscal agent for Penn., corrupt politician, 270.
- Evaus, H. C., postmaster at Bloomfield, Iowa, removed on secret charges, 175.
- Evans, H. C., congressman, opposed to civil service reform, 49; opposed to civil service law, 55; secures appointment of politician Park, as census enumerator, 293.
- Evansville, Ind., Postmaster Bennett of, politician, see also Posey, 46; Postmaster Bennett of, a political worker, 153, 158, 377; republicans favor Gresham, 240.
- Evansville, Ind., Courier, condemns opposition to Magee bill, see, also, Magee, 210.
- Evansville, Ind., Journal [republican], 49; opposes Harrison, 378.
- Evansville, Minn., Journalist Lawrence postmaster at, 149.
- Evarts, W. M., Fassett deserts at suggestion of Platt, 259; Jewett claim, 290, 353.
- Everett, W., civil service reformer, 174.
- Ewart, H. G., congressman, opposed to civil service law, 47; objects to civil service reform, 49; supports politician Pritchard, 159, 161; levies political assessments in South Carolina, 390.
- Ewing, W., endorsed by his relative, Secretary Blaine, for collector at Pittsburg, 100.
- Ewing, Dr. W. A., removed from New York City health department for political reasons, 356.
- Examinations, civil service, general.
- Examinations, specimen papers of those failing in, see Civil Service Record; of civil service commission, assaults against and defense of, see Roosevelt; examination questions, 3; for appointment should be made public, 10; for civil service, objections to, considered, 11; special ordered for post-office at Indianapolis, 18; age of competitors in, at Bloomington, Ill., 26; civil service, a farce at Troy (N. Y.) post-office and New York custom house, 29; number of employes in New York and Indianapolis post-offices exempt from, 42; for civil service, said to be not pertinent questions asked in, 49; papers should be opened to public inspection, 53; questions used in for clerks and carriers at Indianapolis, August 6, 1889, 51, 56, 57, 58, see Call, 118; for positions in patent office, 141; in treasury department, see De Land, 152; paper used at Baltimore, 157; by civil service commission, number of persons examined, year 1889-90, appointments, 185; during 1889-90 for various branches of civil service, unsuccessful and successful applicants, see report civil service com., 1889-90, 185; central board of, suggestions as, see civ. service com. annual report, 1889-90, 185, 186; papers marked in, for civil service, made public, 186; census Superintendent Porter alleges, for clerkships, 190; "pass" discredited, 192; for various departments of service need improvement, see Wanamaker, 193; and eligibles for position as clerks and carriers at Indianapolis, 218; used in national and Massachusetts state census service, 219, 220; to be required for promotion from unclassified to classified service, 221; civil service, instituted for positions in navy yards by Sec'y Tracy, 221, 222; employes under treasury supervising architect, selected by, although not required by law, 224; of civil service commission, 230, 231; questions used in, at Brooklyn, N. Y., navy yard, 236; civil service, evasion of under G. B. Raum, jr., 238; C. W. Watson, chairman, committee on, of N. Y. civil service reform association, 239; for Indianapolis post-office to be held August, 1891, 243; for clerks and carriers for Indianapolis post-office, number of applicants, 253; competitive under civil service commission, ordered for promotions in Washington offices, 254; competitive for candidates for West Point, instituted by Congressman Warwick, does not accept result, see McKinley, 254, 262; competitive, Wanamaker establishes promotion by, in P. O. department, 256, 257; civil service, prejudice against hard to dispel, 257; system and civil service commission, prejudice against in the south, 273; promotion by competitive, 286; competitive for census service of England, Ireland and Scotland, and U. S. A., 292; competitive for promotion, introduced by Wanamaker in department offices, and post-offices, 297, 298; physical required for employes in R. R. mail service, 305; of August, 1892, in Indianapolis post-office, results of, 306; under civil service commission, 1891-92, in various departments, 306, 307.
- Examinations, civil service, municipal; questions used in for Buffalo police service, 41; No. of held, Mass. civil service commission, 74; questions used in, fire dept. at Brooklyn, N. Y., 93; questions used in, for Brooklyn police service, 152; for labor service see Civil Service Record, 152; for positions in police service at Indianapolis, Boston, and Brooklyn compared, see equally divided politically, 222, 223, 224; competitive and civil service methods should be instituted in city service at Indianapolis, see equally divided politically, 228; physical, for fire and police services of Boston, Mass., 243, 246, 247, 248, 249; in Indianapolis, for physicians in city hospital, 322; under N. Y. City civil service board for police matron, a complete failure, Mrs. Maloney, beggar, appointed, 104.
- Examiner (chief), investigates violations of civil service law in post-office at Milwaukee, Wis., Sept., 1888, 36.
- Examiners, local boards of, suggestions as to, see civil service com. annual report 1889-90, 185, 186; local board of, personnel of at Baltimore and Indianapolis, 186.
- Fahsel, on local examining board at Milwaukee, 103.
- Falling, A. H., applicant for postmastership at Oswego, N. Y., 126.
- Fairbanks, C. W., republican politician in Indiana, on business methods in politics, 137.
- Fairbanks, Crawford, Terre Haute distiller, 346, 419.
- Fairchild, ex-secretary of treasury, 169; on tariff message of Pres. Cleveland, 172; appoints Maynard ass't sec'y of treasury, 310.
- Fairfax, commander of Kittery navy yard, testifies as to abuses, 147.
- Fairmount Club, see Baltimore investigation, 295.
- Farlow, representative in Indiana legislature, opposes spoils methods in, 407.
- Farmer, S. C., postmaster in Wright Co., Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Farmington, Me., Pratt, postmaster at, removed on secret charges, 175.
- Farnum, H. S., postmaster at Uxbridge, Mass., removed on secret charges; C. T. Scott appointed, 175.
- Farragut, Iowa, Journalist Notson appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Farrell, commissioner, spoilsman, 315.
- Farrington, J. M., ward politician, see Kings Co., N. Y.; opposing Nathan, 304.
- Farwell, senator, and Cook co. (Ill.) offices, 6; and applicants for Chicago offices, 14; spoilsman, 17, 21, 25, 79, 92; and Sexton, postmaster at Chicago, 22; and Senator Cullom, 31; and office-seekers, 37; recommends O'Donnell, 59; proposes to repeal civil service law, 83; and Farwell Club of Indianapolis, 85, 92, 269; on control of Illinois patronage, and Clark, customs collector at Chicago, 95; indorses Hartoug for postmaster at Rochelle, Ill., 109; indorses application of Scalan, political worker, 132.
- Farwell Club, of Indianapolis, 79, 83, 86, 112, 119; end of, 85.
- "Fassett" report, on effect of civil service law in New York City and elsewhere, 219.
- Fassett, A. D., editor, given office by Governor Foraker, 301.
- Fassett, J. S., undertakes to name postmaster for Elmira, N. Y., 53; appointed collector at N. Y. City to make clean sweep, vice Erhardt, "resigned," 255; methods of, political worker for Harrison, 258, 259; political worker, 265-6, 269; appointment of condemned, 272, 373, 374; candidate for governor of New York, aided by custom house employes in N. Y. City, 278; campaign of, 279, 280, 287, 288; and removal of Flood, postmaster at Elmira, N. Y., 297, 303, 304, 331; attempts removal of Postmaster Van Duzen, 331; and Harrison, 345, 346, 352, 353, 337, 342, 344.
- Faulkner, C. R., member Indiana legislature, illiterate politician, gets federal office through congressmen and Senator Voorhees, 222.
- Fawcett, letter of to CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE on Delphi Journal and Owen, 97.
- Fay, H. H., appointed postmaster at Newport, R. I., see Rhode Island, senators of, 150.

- Fearis, postmaster of Union, Ind., worker for Harrison, 316, 378.
- Fearis, J. H., postmaster of Connersville, Ind., at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- Federal office-holders, political activity of, see states, cities, Minneapolis convention.
- Feland, J., internal revenue collector in Kentucky, political assessments under, 330; delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344, 348.
- Fellows, J. R., low politician, see Hillism, 199, 309.
- Felton, Senator, supporter of Blaine, 344, 359.
- Fensley, W., federal office-holder, see Baltimore investigation, 328.
- Fenstemaker, W., journalist, postmaster at Augustine, Kan., 148.
- Ferguson, C. E., and Orlando, Fla., post-office, 176.
- Ferris, G. C., whose son holds federal office, a political worker for Hiseock, 265.
- Fessenden, S., 354, 359.
- Feudalism revived, account of in N. Y. City and Brooklyn, by Boston Post, 263.
- Field, John, as postmaster of Philadelphia, 15, 300; suggested by Senator Quay for postmaster at Philadelphia, 22; withdraws resignation, 310.
- Fielding, R. W., candidate for U. S. marshal, defeated, 132.
- Filer, C. W., federal office-holder and political worker, 179.
- Filley, C. I., office-seeker, 14, 24, 131; spoilsman, defeated applicant for St. Louis postmastership, controls 4th class post-offices in Missouri, see also Spirely, 132, 150; to work for Harrison, 226; opposed to Harrison in Missouri, 336; delegate at Minneapolis convention, for Blaine or Harrison, 345, 386.
- Finch, councilman and Indianapolis fire department, 13; spoilsman, 207.
- Findling, —, removed from fire service at Indianapolis, see Equally divided politically, 235.
- Finkenhauer, G., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 333.
- Finney, G. E., supported by Congressman Cooper for postmaster of Columbus, Ind., 398.
- Flippen, F., page in Indiana legislature, 406, 408.
- Fippen, J. M., representative in Indiana legislature, spoilsman, son of appointed page, 108.
- Fire service in N. Y. City and Indianapolis, 36.
- Fire superintendents, national convention of, condemns spoils system in fire services, 253.
- Firethunder, E., Indiana blacksmith, defrauded, 218.
- Fischer, C. B., on inefficient census service in N. Y. City, 294.
- Fischer, I. F., political worker, see also Kings Co., N. Y.; politician aiding Woodruff, 106; navy yard patronage at New York, 182, 183; worker for Nathan and Platt, 304, 336; may "deal in legislative privileges" at Albany, 311.
- Fischer, J. H., federal employe, in N. Y. convention, 335.
- Fish commission, U. S., placed under civil service law, 332; of New York, Hill makes machine of, 310.
- Fish, H., Jr., and Gibbs, 288; corrupt politician in N. Y. legislature, and Hill, 307.
- Fishback, W. P., 18; added to local examining board at Indianapolis, 25; hitch in appointment of on local civil service board of Indianapolis, 34; member local examining board at Indianapolis, 42, 120, 129, 186; U. S. master in chancery, favors civil service reform, speech of at Roosevelt dinner, 227, 229, 232.
- Fisher, G. P., corrupt politician appointed first auditor of the treasury, 32, 38, 374.
- Fisher, R. J., promoted to be assistant patent commissioner, efficient, 140.
- Fitch, A. B., see Chemung Co., N. Y., 259.
- Fitch, C. E., editor, appointed collector of internal revenue at Buffalo, N. Y., 108; at convention republican league, 259; a political worker, 265; in N. Y. convention, 335.
- Fitch, C. P., census officer, a political worker, 160.
- Fite, postmaster at Denver, Ind., political worker, 379.
- Fitler, mayor of Philadelphia, 30, 143.
- Fitzgerald, J. E., signs petition for larger appropriation for civil service commission, 102.
- Fitzpatrick, delegate to Minneapolis convention, opposing Harrison, 316.
- Fitzwilliams, E., customs inspector at Boston, a political worker, 179.
- Flagler, B., political worker for law collector at Suspension Bridge, N. Y., 259.
- Flanagan, custom house employe, active politician, 179.
- Flanagan, Ill., Editor Breen appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Flanagan, W., political worker in Texas, 159; spoilsman, 245; appointed customs collector at El Paso, Texas, vice Clark, worker for Harrison, 266, 282, 286, supports Harrison at Minneapolis, 345, 346, 374, 396.
- Fleming, D. W., recommended for office by Cheandle, 84.
- Flenniken, J. H., appointed postmaster at Bradford, Pa., on recommendation of Ray, removed on protest of H. C. Frick, 99.
- Fletcher, P. O. employe at Frankfort, Ind., political worker, 380.
- Fletcher, E. B., postmaster at Morris, Ill., political worker and editor, 126, 186.
- Fletcher, I., appointed postmaster at Orlando, Fla., vice Delaney, removed on secret charges, 176.
- Fletcher, J., candidate for supervisor, see Buffalo, N. Y.
- Flickinger, S. J., editor, secures federal office for his brother, 301.
- Flynn, E. H. journalist, postmaster at Spencer, W. Va., 155.
- Flitten, A., political worker under Postmaster Johnson, in Maryland, 335.
- Floater, numbers of in Indiana, 78, 171.
- Flood, H., postmaster at Elmira, N. Y., 4, 53; political worker, opposes Platt and Fassett, 259; a political worker, 265, 266; removed for political reasons, denied permission to hear real charges, 297, 303, 304; removed, Rathbun appointed, 303, 304, 305; secret charges against, Rathbun appointed, 312; removed through influence of Fassett, 331.
- Flood, T. S., congressman, quarrels with Corporal Tanner over spoils, 54; names his brother postmaster at Elmira, N. Y., 54; obtains appointment of Courcy as postmaster at Watkins, N. Y., 150; opposes Fassett, 259, 303.
- Flora, Ill., Editor Reed appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Florence, Ind., Langsdale, postmaster of, political worker, 379.
- Florence, S. C., negro Wilson postmaster of, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Florida, chairman republican state committee of, rewarded, 30; political activity of federal officers in, 347, 348.
- Flow, E. S., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.
- Flower, R. P., as congressman, condemns congressional patronage, 204; candidate of Croker, Tammany "boss," for governor of New York, 245; governor of New York, worker for Hill, appoints Maynard judge, 309, 310; and Tammany, 319; removes Leaycraft, 332; votes for, as governor of New York, 352; and fish protection in New York, 356; suspends civil service rules in New York, 414.
- Floyd, low politician of Indianapolis, 207.
- Flushing, L. I., Carpenter, postmaster at, removed for political reasons, 91.
- Flynn, M. B., see Hill, 307.
- Foley, state senator of Indiana, votes against bill for non-partisan control of state charitable institutions, 201; spoilsman, opposes new charter for Indianapolis, see also Magee, 212.
- Folger, Commodore, praises merit system in Washington, D. C., navy yard, 331.
- Follett, J. E., address on civil serv. ref., 23; praises CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 110.
- Fontana, Kan., journalist, English postmaster at, 149.
- Fontanelle, Iowa, Editor Rany appointed postmaster at, 112.
- Foraker, Governor, and Ohio offices, 21, 336; civil service reform "all rot," 68; controls patronage in Cincinnati, 71; defeated, 75; and Senator Sherman, 249; opponent of Sherman, 297; charges federal interference in election of Sherman, 301, 302; and Ohio delegation at Minneapolis, 343.
- Forbes, C. S., journalist, appointed deputy internal revenue collector, 84, 126.
- Ford, candidate for postmaster of Pittsburgh, 91.
- Ford, T., see Hillism, 309.
- Fordham, C. H., negro, deputy coll. int. rev., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Foreign service, see also consulships, 30.
- Forrester, G. B., politician, see Brooklyn, N. Y., 197.
- Fort Dodge, Ia., Postmaster Cain of forced to resign, 165; Carpenter, postmaster at, a political worker, 260.
- Fortune, A. H., postmaster at Bloomfield, Ia., removed, 175.
- Fort Wayne (Indiana), civil service reform sentiment at, 16; candidates for postmaster of, 15; should have civ. service law applied to local federal offices, 85; Postmaster Kaough of, under Cleveland, political worker, 88.
- Higgins, postmaster of, a political worker, 88, 153, 158, 362, 377, 378; and his deputy, political workers, 162; ordered to levy political assessments, 302; political worker for Harrison, 316; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 342, 379; has poll of taken by P. O. employes, 380.
- Gazette, opposes Harrison, 378.
- Foster, political worker, aided by Sen. Moody, 78.
- Foster, C., ex-gov., and Fostoria, O., post-office, 91, secretary of treasury, so-called resignations under of Macgregor, 216; ex-congressmen apply for office in treasury department under, patronage to be given only to republicans, 217; member Ohio Republican Association, 234; given patronage to turn Ohio from Blaine to Harrison, 240; and spoilsmen, 250, 253, 254, 290; and Platt, 258; favors Platt, 264; advises Ohio office-holders to do "their duty," 280; defends Hendricks, collector, at N. Y. City, 289; establishes rules for promotion in treasury department, 298; suspends employes suspected of disloyalty to Harrison, 300; said to be interested in Toledo Commercial, 301; asked to remove democrats, 311, 312; and political assessments by federal office-holders in Kentucky and Baltimore, 330; and removal of Milholland and Murray, supporters of Platt, 332, 334; political worker for Harrison in Ohio; permits political activity of federal employes in Maryland convention, 335; and
- delegate from Utah; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 337, 338, 339, 345; political worker, 354; political worker for Harrison, 359, 360; and Baltimore investigation, 372.
- Foster, E., journalist, postmaster at Gladwin, Mich., 149.
- Foster, J. Ellen, husband of, rewarded with office, 56.
- Foulke, W. D., at Baltimore conference, 1889; address of on reform promises of republican party, 2, 4; declaration of impartiality of, 16; to examine management of federal civ. service, 77; address before Commonwealth Club, Dec. 16, 1889, 80; chairman investigating committee appointed by National League, 85; on Wanamaker's course in Shidy case, 103, 104; officer Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, 108; chairman's report on congressional patronage, 113, 114, 115; on committee investigating patent office, report of, 139, 140, 141; chairman committee of National League, on presidential post-offices, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 186, 188; work of, for good government, 173; chairman committee of National League reporting on removals on secret charges, 175, 176, 177; exposes evasive methods of Wanamaker, 190; address of, on civil service reform, "Its Later Aspects," 200; becomes president of Swarthmore College, 201; elected president Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, 239; address of, on civil service reform before Social Science Congress at Saratoga, 1891, 262, 263; on secret executive sessions of the senate, 261, 269; address of before annual meeting National League, 1891, 269; chairman special committee of National League investigating census service, 291, 295; before Boston Reform Club on broken republican pledges, 365, 371, 374; in 1884, 376, 385.
- Fountain, G. W., editor, appointed postmaster at New Carlisle, Ind., 126, 377.
- Four year term, bill of Martin, to limit all federal employes to, 404.
- Fowler, E. C., acting 1st asst. p. m. genl., letter of conditionally denying information regarding postmasters, 277, 297.
- Fox, E. P., efficient superintendent postal station at St. Louis, 131.
- Fox, R. L., chief clerk republican state committee of New York, 279.
- Frank, N., congressman, aiding office-seekers, 15; and Nledringhaus, correspondence over spoils, 22; says Harrison has ignored real workers and disorganized his party, 68.
- Frankfort, Ind., P. O. employes Irvin and Fletcher of, political workers, 380.
- Frankfort, S. Dak., Journalist Tapley postmaster at, 155.
- Frank Leslie's [repub.] advocates civ. service reform, 65.
- Franklin, Ind., Postmaster Browne asked to resign, 37, 377; opposition to postmaster appointed at, 88; Harris supported for postmaster of by Congressman Cooper, 398.
- Franklin (Ind.) College, sentiment favoring civil service reform at, 108.
- Franklyn Falls, N. H., Moore, republican congressman, recommends re-appointment of democratic postmaster, 100.
- Frazer, W. D., ass't U. S. dist. att'y, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344, 348.
- Freeburg, Pa., Journalist Magee postmaster at, 149.
- Freedom, Ind., Suffall postmaster at removed for political reasons, Watts appointed, see also Cooper and Michener, 112, 377.
- Freeman, of Indianapolis, on secret charges system, 177.
- Freeport, Ill., Journalist Atkins appointed postmaster at, 126; active politician, 143.
- Frelinghuysen, sec'y, and Jewett claim, 290.
- French, collector internal revenue in New Hampshire, political worker, 143, 371.
- French, state senator of Indiana, relative of appointed page, 408.
- French, S. B., ward politician, see N. Y. City, 198, 199; ex-police commissioner, in N. Y. City, "The" Allen works for, 249.
- Frick, H. C., secures appointment of Patterson as postmaster at Uniontown, Pa., 99.
- Friedman, asst. secretary Indiana senate, 408.
- Friedsam, D., at Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Friel, P. H., political worker, 134.
- Frost, aided by patronage at navy yard at Kittery, Me., 147.
- Frothingham, E. G., customs examiner, active politician, 179.
- Fry, senator, keeps more employes in Portland, Me., custom house than necessary, 242.
- Frybarger, J., not to be postmaster at Noblesville, Ind., 47.
- Fulk, state senator of Indiana, spoilsman, 407.
- Fuller, J. C., appointed in Brooklyn custom house, 72; political worker for Nathan, see Kings Co., N. Y.
- Fuller, J. M., political worker for Harrison, 304.
- Fullerton, and postmastership at Colfax, Wash., 165.
- Fulmer, L., ward politician of Indianapolis, 205, 207.
- Fulton, J. M., inefficient census enumerator in N. Y. City, 294.
- Fulton, M. K., candidate for postmaster at Bucyrus, O., 149.
- Fulton, N. Y., Journalist Bennett postmaster at, 155.

- Furlong, postmaster at Rochelle, Ill., 109.
 Furst, low political worker in Cincinnati, O., 352.
 Gabriel, "Bill," federal office-holder, political worker, 280.
 Gallegher, —, disreputable politician, 181.
 Gallagher, brutal policeman, see Tammany, 318.
 Gallagher, C. H., given federal office through influence of Higgins, 334.
 Gallagher, Major, an Indian rising at Pine Ridge, S. Dak., 218.
 Gallinger, senator, supporter of Blaine, 344.
 Gallup, police commissioner of N. Y. city, a Croker tool, 356.
 Galveston, Texas, Delegate Rentfro, appointed collector of customs at, 46; Cuney, customs collector at, a political worker, 159; Cuney, customs collector at, 266; custom-house at, not classified, number of employes in, 277.
 Gamble, L. H., postmaster at Brooklyn, Ind., retention of asked, see Cooper, 112.
 Gandy, J. P., journalist, postmaster at Gandy, Neb., 119.
 Gandy, Neb., Journalist Gandy postmaster at, 149.
 Gano, deputy collector at N. Y. city, pays political assessments, 279.
 Gans, W. A., opponent to police justice Smith; see New York City, 198, 199.
 Gant, J. A., postmaster of Marion, Ind., at Minneapolis convention, 380.
 Gapen, P., treasurer insane hospital board at Indianapolis, corrupt politician, 206.
 Gardiner, postmaster at Troy, Ind., political worker, 380.
 Gardiner, R. H., republican politician, works for re-appointment of democrat Morgan, postmaster at Newton, Mass., 224.
 Gardner, postmaster at Rochelle, Ill., succeeded by Furlong, 109.
 Gardner, W. E., journalist, given office, 84.
 Garfield, president, and Senator Conkling, 14, 88, 369; address of, before president at Williams College on congressional patronage, and article on spoils system in Atlantic Monthly, July, 1877, 114; murdered by disappointed office-seeker, 129; spoils system responsible for death of, 204; against patronage system in census service, 291; and Senator Conkling, 361; appoints Pearson postmaster at N. Y. city, vice James, appointed p. m. general, 367.
 Garland, attorney-general, 177.
 Garrett, Ind., Bicknell, postmaster of, political worker, 379, 380.
 Garret, J. J., negro, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344.
 Garrigus, M., corrupt politician, works for Pres. Harrison, but gets no office despite Cheadle, 88.
 Gaskin, appointed postmaster at Reelsville, Ind., 89.
 Gasper, "Joe," councilman and low politician of Indianapolis, see also Indianapolis, 207.
 Gasper, J. P., postmaster at Kingsley, Ia., forced to resign, 165.
 Gates, E. M., postmaster at Watertown, N. Y., furnishes political information, 392.
 Gates, M. E., president Amherst College, chairman Indian commissioners, urges reform methods, 205, 273.
 Gauss, C., ward politician of Indianapolis, see Parnell Hall, 194, 195.
 Gavisk, Father, favors civil service reform, 73.
 Gaylord, Kan., Journalist Headly postmaster at, 149.
 Gee, editor, opposes Harrison in Alabama, 346.
 Geer, collector of Port Huron, Mich., spoilsman, asks for special examination, refused, 36.
 Geneva, N. Y., civil service reform association of, 239.
 Genoa, Ill., Editor Hartman appointed postmaster at, 141.
 Georgia, federal officers in, candidates for congress, 162; political activity of federal officers in, 348.
 Gerard and Meyer, attempt to vote under false names of, see New York City.
 Gere, C. H., editor, applicant for postmastership at Lincoln, Neb., 72; appointed postmaster at Lincoln, Neb., 108; delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
 Gerrard, J., political worker, candidate for postmastership of Muncie, Ind., 217.
 Gest, obtains appointment of unworthy applicant as postmaster at Plymouth, Ill., 47.
 Gibbes, W. H., removed from postmastership at Columbia, S. C., 74.
 Gibbs, F. S., ward politician, see New York City, 199; notorious politician, and republican primaries, 211, 212; political worker opposed by Platt, places given to friends in of N. Y. federal offices, 265; notorious politician, Platt supports him by use of federal patronage, 287.
 Gibbs, W. B., postmaster of Jackson, Miss., active politician, 47, 348; delegate for Harrison at Minneapolis, 344.
 Gibson, L. H., address of, on "Relation of civil service to comfortable living in cities," 366.
 "Gift of offices," address on, by L. B. Swift, 145.
 Gilbert, C. H., commends Civil Service Chronicle, 364.
 Gilbert, J. M., defeated candidate of Senator Hisecock, 132.
 Gildea, C. A., postmaster at Brackettsville, Tex., removed for political reasons; Ballantyne appointed, 186.
 Gilkeson, B. F., Senator Quay speaks for, 17; Quay's henchman appointed second controller of the treasury, 30; removes W. P. Montague for political reasons, 56; appointment of, 241; political worker for Quay, 270, 280.
 Gill, representative in Indiana legislature, opposes spoils methods in, 407.
 Gillette, A. B., candidate for postmaster of Hartford, Conn., favored by politicians, 84.
 Gilliland, J. A., postmaster at Allegheny, worker for Congressman Bayne, 135; supporter of Quay, suspected by Harrison, 299.
 Gillycuddy, Dr., and Indian rising at Pine Ridge, S. Dak., 218.
 Gilpin, L. L., applicant for postmaster at Portland, Ind., 88.
 Ginn, S. P., refuses office rather than agree to pay political assessments or be subject to Mahone, 72.
 Gladfelter, L. E., P. O. employe, see Baltimore investigation, 278, 312.
 Gladstone, W. E., and Irish home-rule, 223, 230, 244.
 Gladwin, Mich., Journalist Foster, postmaster at, 149.
 Glasgow, Scotland, city government of, 283, 284.
 Glass, H., P. O. employe, see Baltimore investigation, 278, 279, 295.
 Glazebrook, doorkeeper of Indiana house of representatives, and subordinates, 406, 407.
 Gleason, political worker, see Pine Ridge Indian agency, 218.
 Gleason, H., at Minneapolis convention, 344.
 Glen Hall, Ind., Mustard appointed postmaster at, vice Stepp, "resigned," 149.
 Glenn, postmaster at Cuba, N. Y., in N. Y. convention, 335.
 Gleun, J. C., U. S. marshal, a political worker, 160.
 Glenn, J., appointed U. S. marshal through influence of Judge Settle, his relative, 47.
 Glenn, W. J., journalist, postmaster at Cuba, N. Y., 155.
 Gloucester, Mass., Mansfield, postmaster of, 362.
 Godfrey, appointed postmaster at New Albany, Ind., makes a clean sweep, 45; works for Michener, 144; political worker for Harrison, 316; at Minneapolis convention, 377, 378, 380.
 Godkin, E. L., editor, at Baltimore conference, 1889, 2; arrested through Tammany, 314.
 Goesling, H. H., candidate, makes spoils promises, 260.
 Goff, ex-representative, controls much patronage in West Virginia, 71.
 Gold, S. N., township trustee at Indianapolis, should refuse to remove F. Wright, 111; removes valuable officers, 146; defends his spoils methods; criticism of, 256.
 Golson, W. L., journalist, postmaster at Llano, Tex., 155.
 Gooch, aided by patronage of navy yard at Kittery, Maine, 147.
 Good Government, formed by merging Civil Service Record and Civil Service Reformer, 357.
 Goodale, Miss, friend of the Indians, 217, 218.
 Goode, —, city marahal, ward politician, see New York City.
 Goode, M., requests patronage, 311, 312; at Minneapolis convention, 344.
 Goodland, Ind., editor appointed postmaster at, 37.
 Goodland, Kan., Journalist Tait postmaster at, 149.
 Goodman, C., disreputable political worker for Gorman, career of, 307, 308.
 Goodrich, J. C., efficient postmaster at Short Hills, N. Jersey, removed; Grocer Kessler appointed, 386.
 Goodrich, W. W., political worker, see Kings Co., N. Y.; low political worker for Nathan, 288, 304; chairman Kings Co., N. Y., republican committee, 371.
 Gordon, postmaster of Auburn, Ind., political worker, 379, 380.
 Gore, of Boston, qualifications of office-holders according to, 45.
 Gorman, senator, and Maryland reformers, 2, 3, 5, 21, 28, 35, 43, 45, 68, 80; spoilsman, 92, 119, 170, 171, 175; "system" of in Maryland, 15, 161; secures appointment of democrat as postmaster at Lanrel, Md., although a republican had been named, Wanamaker allowing Gorman's claim to control the place, 38; compared with Mahone, 67; would have lost control of Maryland but for Cleveland, 70; opposed to civil service law, 79; and ballot reform in Maryland, 87; controls patronage in Maryland, 93, 111; "boss" in Maryland, 172; secures office for Higgins, disreputable character, 181; spoilsman, and disreputable politician, 413, 281, 289, 298, 329, 213, 214, 245, 256; "appreciation" of in Maryland, 219; dreads office-holding aristocracy, 227; defends spoils system of Wanamaker; opposes Australian ballot system, 228; and patronage in census bureau; conspires with Mahone, 234; and Cleveland; as presidential candidate, 235; presidential candidate; gets office for low political workers, 236, 237; attacks civil service commission, 250, 251; and Raisin, 251; controls federal and state patronage of Maryland, 254; boss in Maryland, 278; and his political worker, Goodman, 307, 308.
 Goshen, Ind., Editor Beyerle appointed postmaster at, 30, 126; Beyerle, postmaster of, political worker for Harrison, 316; Beyerle, postmaster at, 377; political worker, 378.
 Goss, editor, appointed collector of Barnstable, 46.
 Gostonia, N. C., Jenkins postmaster of, Harrison delegate, 334.
 Gould, C. B., journalist, postmaster at Emporium, Pa., 149.
 Gould, Jay, gives bribes, 171.
 Gowdy, J. K., political worker for Harrison in Indiana, 302, 303; chairman Indiana republican state committee, and Halford, 360, 362; campaign fund circular of, 382; confers with U. S. Treasurer Nebeker, 370.
 Goyles, G. W., negro, Harrison delegate at Minneapolis, 344.
 Grace, mayor of New York City, and civil service reform, 82; obtains removal of Squire, see Hill, 307.
 Graceville, Minn., Journalist Brynildsen postmaster at, 149.
 Graham, political worker for Quay, 300.
 Graham, W., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.
 Grand Army Post at Woodhull, Ill., denunciation of Congressman Henderson.
 Grand Rapids, Mich., civil service commission at, 36.
 Grand View, Ind., Editor Knight appointed postmaster at, 126, 377.
 Grant, mayor, see New York City, and civil service reform, 82; tool of B. Cockran, 184; supported by Gorman, 214; of N. York on street cleaning, 220, 273; and Wilmer, 290; and Staats Zeitung, 317, 318.
 Grant, C. W., employe in Indian service, asked for political contributions, 385.
 Grant, President, indorsed for selection of commissioners under civil service act, 50; and Indian service, 182; accused of nepotism, uses offices as as bribes, 191; as general, 231; and charges against officials, 238; executive order of, instituting reform methods, 271, 274; and Fisher, 374, yields to spoilsman, 186, 308, 414.
 Graves, E. O., civil service reform under in bureau of printing and engraving, 32, 45; removed by Pres. Harrison, 52, 94, 173, 237, 282, 368, 376.
 Gravesend, N. Y., ruled by "Boss" McKane, 352.
 Gray, F., journalist, postmaster at Ivanhoe, Kan., 149.
 Gray, I. P., ex-governor of Indiana, 206; spoilsman, mentioned for presidency, 235, 244; as applicant for various offices, 396.
 Grayson, Ky., Journalist Littlejohn, postmaster at, 149.
 Greacen, R. A., supports Lee for place in N. Y. custom-house, 259; requests patronage, 311, 312.
 Greason, J. D., journalist, postmaster at Atwood, Kan., 148.
 Greaves, M. A., on selection of census enumerators in N. Y. City, 294.
 Green, F. V., reports to Mayor Grant on street-cleaning in New York; advises merit system, 220, 221.
 Green, G., supervisor of Brooklyn, N. Y., rendered insane by office-seekers, 45.
 Greenawalt, J. R., journalist, postmaster at Elkhorn, W. Va., 155.
 Greencastle, Ind., applicants for postmaster of, squabble among, Hays appointed, 7, 89.
 Greene, E. B., makes index for Civil Service Record, 237.
 Greene, J. M., tries to collect political assessments of employes in Indian service, 384.
 Greenfield, Ind., I. Davis, appointed postmaster at, vice Howard, removed, 89.
 Greenfield, Iowa, Editor Hunt appointed postmaster at, 142.
 Greenhalge, on house committee on civil service, 86; recommends re-appointment of Bancroft, postmaster at Concord, Mass., 91; favors civil service reform, see also Buttrick, 100, 123; upholds civil service commission, 204.
 Greenhow, W. H., postmaster at Hornellsville, N. Y., removed on secret charges, 176.
 Greenleaf, Kan., Journalist Bliss, postmaster at, 149.
 Greensburg, Ind., Hendricks, postmaster of, worker for Harrison, 316, 378.
 Greenwood, S. Dak., physician at Indian agency at, leaves duty to engage in political work at times of sickness, 202.
 Greiner, postmaster at Terre Haute, a political worker, 153, 158; political worker for Harrison, 316, 377, 378; at Minneapolis, 342, 343, 346, 379; political worker, 379.
 Gresham, Neb., journalist Rhodes, postmaster at, 149.
 Gresham, O., son of W. Q., favors civil service reform, 227, 229; defeated as republican delegate, 302.
 Gresham, W. Q., supported at Chicago convention by Illinois, 7; letter of to Postmaster Pearson, referring to secret charges, 12; p. m. general under Arthur, removes Vandervoort, 215, 216, 220; more popular than Harrison with republicans, 240, 302; and Harrison, 370; popularity of, in Indiana, 376, 377.
 Griffen, F. D., journalist, postmaster at Bangor, S. Dak., 155.
 Griffin, C. F., and political assessments in Indiana, 363; political worker for Harrison in Indianapolis, 379.
 Griffin, T., and janitors in Indiana legislature, 406.
 Griffith, president Indiana senate, spoilsman, 408.
 Griggs, S. I., federal officer, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
 Grimes, G. G., journalist, postmaster at Bairdstown, Ohio, 149.

- Groesbeck, L., U. S. bank examiner, a political worker, 266.
- Grogan, S., able superintendent of city delivery at St. Louis, 131.
- Groner, V. D., federal officer, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Grosvenor, congressman, spoilsman, 68, 161; against civil service reform, 123, 178, 253; charges of, against civil service commission, 145, 146, 202, 203, 204; opposed to civil service law, 153, 178; and Roosevelt, 162.
- Grosvenor, C. H., editor, given federal office, 301.
- Grosvenor, D., makes political assessments, 161; federal office-holder and spoilsman, 178, 179; spoilsman, rewarded by Harrison, 237.
- Gunby, E. R., collector at Tampa, Florida, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Gundlock, P., henchman of Filly, postmaster at Station A, St. Louis, 150.
- Gunkle, F. W., deputy U. S. marshal in Iowa, a political worker, 260.
- Gunner, J. H., active politician, appointed deputy of Collector Erhardt, 108; deputy collector in N. Y. custom house, a political worker, 268, 311; in New York convention, 335; at Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Gwin, superintendent, and Craft, W. H., 12.
- Habberton, J., address on "The Ideal Citizen," 98.
- Habercorn, L. W., newspaper correspondent, appointed fifth auditor of the treas., 30.
- Habernel, J. F., postmaster of Indiana House of Representatives, 406.
- Hack, postal clerk, political worker, 144.
- Hack, P. O. employe, political worker, 377.
- Hackett, C. W., worker for Platt, chairman N. Y. state republican executive committee, 360, 361, 371, 388; requests lists of republicans from postmasters, 370; and political assessments, 382.
- Hackney, D. G., worker for Hill, appointed fish commissioner of New York, vice Blackford removed, 310.
- Hackney, W. P., disgust of with Kansas congressmen and senators, 15.
- Haddam, Kan., Journalist Tarsel, postmaster at, 149.
- Hagerstown (Md.), Herald [repub.], civil service reform advocated, 92.
- Hahn, M., see Tammany, 318.
- Hahn, W. M., chairman republican state executive committee, Ohio, asks political contributions, 280.
- Haines, G. B., and stock fraudulently issued to Wanamaker, 246.
- Haines, Wm., relative of Pres. Harrison, given office, 30.
- Hale, Annie, wife of Journalist Hale, postmaster at Spring Valley, O., 149.
- Hale, senator, controls patronage in Maine; keeps more employes in Portland (Me.), custom house than necessary, 242.
- Halford, E. W., journalist, private secretary to Pres. Harrison, and applications for office, 6, 14, 163, 175, 282; and office-seekers, 37; secures appointment of brother-in-law and others, 38; goes home to vote, 180; and printing office, 234; brother of editor of Youngstown, O., Telegraph, supporting Sherman, 301; at Indianapolis, 360; political worker, 359, 340, 343, 377, 379, 382, 389; appointed paymaster in army, 414.
- Halifax, N. C., Hannan, negro, postmaster of, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Hall (M. C.) denounces civil service law, 47, 49.
- Hall, B. J., appointed patent commissioner, efficient, 140.
- Hall, D. S., federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Hall, M. F., journalist, postmaster at Phillippi, W. Va., 155, 180.
- Hall, T. A., subscribes for CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE for Y. M. C. A. of Illinois, 350.
- Hallett, C. W., and Long Island City post-office, 100.
- Halstead, M., nominated minister to Germany, editor of Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette, 14; on force bill, 169.
- Hamilton, Gail, obtains appointment of E. A. Dimmick, consul to Barbadoes, 56.
- Hamilton, Mo., Clarkson, N. C., appointed postmaster at, 150.
- Hamlin, carrier, see Indianapolis post-office, investigation of, 28, 34.
- Hammell, M. A., journalist, postmaster at Mullen, Neb., 149.
- Hammond, postmaster of Booneville, Ind., political worker, 380.
- Hammond, A. G., apoluted postmaster at Wyoming, Ill., vice—, removed for political reasons, 176.
- Hammond, F., see Baltimore investigation, 267, 296.
- Hammond, Ind., postmaster at, inefficient, 90.
- Hammond, T., congressman, patronage of, 410, 416, 417, 422.
- Hammondsport, N. Y., Journalist Brown, postmaster at, 155.
- Hampton, W., governor, pardons Smalls, convicted of bribery, 39, 101; senator, letter to Wanamaker on removal of Gibbes, postmaster at Columbia, S. C., 74, 190.
- Hancock Co., Ind., appointments from, 71.
- Hancock, T. R., editor, appointed postmaster at Neoga, Ill., 141.
- Hanford, Cal., postmaster at removed, Editor Dodge appointed, 126.
- Hanlon, M. A., treasury inspector, political worker, 287.
- Hanna, federal officer, political worker for Harrison, 297.
- Haunon, J. H., negro, postmaster at Halifax, N. C., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Hansbrough, patronage pledges of to secure election as senator from N. Dakota, 216; senator, supporter of Blaine, 341, 345.
- Hanscom, I., and navy yard at Kittery, Me., 147.
- Hardson, chief of division, removed for political reasons, 55.
- Hare, Bishop and Rosebud, agency, Dak., 48; denies charges against Indian Agent McChesney, 130; alleges Indian abuses, 202.
- Harig, "Bill," ward politician of Baltimore, 308.
- Harlem, N. Y., Tammany street railroad scandal in, 317.
- Harley, C., politician, census supervisor 5th Indiana district, 101.
- Harlow, postmaster at Whitman, Mass., recommended for reappointment, 100.
- Harlow, H., applicant for postmastership at Plymouth, Mass., 189.
- Harlow, J. B., appointed postmaster of St. Louis, 88, 131; institutes reform methods, 136; conspiracy to remove, 226; ordered to give office to political worker for Harrison, 304.
- Harmer, congressman and Quay, 241.
- Harmon, G. W., promised place in Brooklyn custom house, see Wallace.
- Harmony, acting secretary of navy, and Portsmouth, N. H., navy yard, 147.
- Harn, G. V., editor, appointed sugar inspector, 301.
- Harald, S. Dak., Journalist Besancon, postmaster at, 155.
- Harper, G. W., editor, appointed postmaster at Robinson, Ill., 141.
- Harper's Weekly, civil service commission under Harrison and Cleveland compared, 211; comparison of Cleveland and Harrison in regard to civil service reform, 338; on what to expect of Cleveland, 358, 359.
- Harrigan, appraiser, resignation asked, 22.
- Harrigan, sergeant-at-arms in N. Y. legislature; his patronage, 215.
- Harrington, G. W., democrat, postmaster at Monson, Mass., recommended for reappointment, 188.
- Harrington, Prof. M. W., appointed head of weather bureau, 245; favors civil service reform, 253.
- Harris, A. W., customs inspector, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Harris, H. E., journalist, postmaster at Utica, O., 149.
- Harris, Rev. J. A., at Baltimore conference, 1889, 2; favors clerical recognition of civil service reform, 48.
- Harris, O. T., federal officer, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Harris, R. H., see Baltimore investigation, 267, 268.
- Harris, S., supported by Congressman Cooper for postmaster of Franklin, Ind., 398.
- Harrisburg Telegraph [rep.], civ. service reform a sham, 49.
- Harrison, Pres., removes postmaster at Norwich (Conn.), without cause and appoints spoilsman, see Norwich, Conn.; nominates Wallace, spoilsman, to be postmaster at Indianapolis, 2, 3; and civil serv. ref., in letter of acceptance, 1, 4, 9, 69; and civ. serv. ref., has not made promises, 5, 10; appoints S. N. Chambers U. S. dist. att'y in Indiana, 7; as senator, remarks on evils of patronage, 9; inaugural address and civil serv. ref., 9; order of, postponing classification of R. R. mail service, 10; and Postmaster Pearson, 13, 44; disputes with senators over patronage, 14; number of appointments to April, 1889, 16; overrun with office-seekers, 16; congressmen dictate appointments, 17, 93; civil serv. commission appointed by, 17; "public duties" of, dispensing patronage, 18; census bureau under and civil serv. law, 19; and spoils system, 20; and Pearson, postmaster at New York, 20; and nepotism, 21, 30, 84; and R.R. mail service, 21, 22; cabinet of formed according to Senator May's demands, 22; gives patronage of Missouri to Kerens, 22, applicants to be treated with consideration, 24; and Vandervoort and Bagby, 25, 34, 211; not keeping promises in Indianapolis post-office, 26; gives patronage of N. York to T. Platt, 27; hastily removes foreign ministers, 27; gives patronage of Pennsylvania to Senator Quay, 27, 47, 135, 138; inability to satisfy spoilsman, 27; removes Indian commissioner Oberly, 27; cabinet of composed entirely of spoilsmen, 27; removes Strauss, minister to Turkey; appoints "Sol" Hirsch, 29; removes postmaster at Jersey City without cause, 29; removes Postmaster Clark, of Jacksonville, Florida, for political reasons, 29; removes postmaster at Bridgeport before term expired, 29; removes Postmistress Clay, at Huntsville, Ala., without cause, 29; appoints Editor J. B. Stone collector internal revenue first Michigan district, 30; removes without cause head of assay office at Boise City, Idaho; appoints spoilsman, 30; rewards political workers; declares he will not cease appointments until offices are exhausted, 30; and Senator Cullom, 31; appoints G. P. Fisher, disreputable politician, first auditor of the treasury, 32; appoints D. M. Ransdall marshal District of Columbia, 34, 80; "discriminating test" of, 35, 36, 100; appoints White, editor and spoilsman, internal revenue collector, 37; appoints Robert Smalls, a convicted criminal, in face of well-known record and strong protest, 39; makes spoil of offices, 41; refusal of to have anything to do with Dudley, 41; searching examination of management of civil service by, promised, 41; refuses request of civil service commission to place census bureau under civil service law, 42, 88, 131; treatment of Indians by administration of, 42; civil service reform promises of, 43, 52, 61, 62, 63, 65, 292; rules of for appointment, 44; removals of postmasters under, 45; and collectorship of customs at Chicago, 47; and Congressman Brower, 47; and postmasters, 49; removes Naval Officer Burt, 52; gives patronage of Virginia to Mahone, 27, 52, 70; rewards Tanner for services, and later removes him, 53; uses offices to affect elections in Louisiana, 54; appealed to by MacCourt, 54; removes Postmaster Curran of Hoboken, N. J., for political reasons, 51; gives office to T. B. Willis as a political reward, 55; appoints E. Nathan, low politician, collector int. rev. for Brooklyn (N. Y.) district, appoints Lyon surveyor of port, 55; not enough credit given to, for administration of civil service law, 59; appoints Throop, political worker, collector of Terre Haute (Ind.) district, 59; congratulated on appointments by Mass. republican convention, 63; administration tramples civil serv. ref. under foot, 64; denounced for violation of pledges, by national league, 1889, 66; appoints J. N. Huston U. S. treasurer, objects to giving him Indiana patronage, gives it to Michener, 67; denounced for abuse of civ. service, by H. C. Lea, 68, 111; can stop political assessments, 70; gives patronage of Louisiana to Congressman Coleman, 71; removes postmaster at Syracuse, N. Y., for political reason, 71; and postmaster at La Fayette, Ind., 71; and appointment of postmasters, 74; responsibility of, 75; as senator and spoils in Indiana, 75; attributes defeat in 1889 to disappointed office-seekers, 75; and distribution of patronage in New York, 75; letter to General Macon, 77; extract from message on civil service commission; postpones execution of order classifying R. R. mail service, 80, 81; as Sen., criticises Pres. Cleveland for bribing the press, 81; weakened by patronage, 83; must stand by the platform (see Winchester Herald), 83; appoints E. G. Hay, a friend, U. S. district attorney, 84; rewards A. D. Shaw, 84; unsatisfactory to republicans so far as patronage is concerned, 84; and civ. service law, 86; his test for office; postmasters at Springfield and Quincy, Mass., 86; and W. W. Dudley, 87; and Winamac, Ind., postmastership, 88; promotes J. B. Harlow to be postmaster at St. Louis, 88; as Sen. and Pres., and Garrigus, 88; and Mitchell, 1st. postmastership, 89; and Greencastle, Ind., postmastership, 89; criticised at Noblesville, Ind., 89; discontent with, 89; and post-office at Hammond, Ind., 90; and Baltimore postmastership, 90; and Massachusetts civil service reform association, 92; memorial to from civ. service reform ass'n of Philadelphia, 92; civ. service reform in first year of, 94; and Collector Saltonstall, 94; and R. Williams, 95; appoints Clark collector at Chicago, 95; secret charges under, 96, 175; appoints Kinney postmaster at Hartford, Conn., 99; reappoints Lyman civil serv. commissioner, 103; letter to from W. Barker, protesting against Quay, 104; appoints Warmouth, ruffianly politician, collector at New Orleans, 105; nomination of, see Quay, 106; appoints Clements, political worker, pension agent at Chicago vice Mrs. Mulligan, 107; and appointment of examiners for pension office, 108; appoints Editor Fitch collector of internal revenue at Buffalo, N. Y., 108; conference with Congressman Hitt over post-office at Rochelle, Ill., 110; as senator, criticises Cleveland's course with regard to civil service, 119; and congressmen, 120; and patronage system, 76, 120, 173; spoils pledges of, 121; and postmastership of Stanberry, Mo., 121; requests aid for civil service commission, 122; and Garfield, 129, 130; removes Hendrix, postmaster at Brooklyn, N. Y.; offers place to political worker, 131; appoints Editor Von Bergman, 132; claims on, 132; condemned by Maryland Civil Serv. Ref. Assoc. for giving patronage to Quay, 136; appoints Mitchell patent commissioner, 140; abuses in Brooklyn navy yard under administration of, 142; complaints to of Warmouth, 143, 144; nominates Eaves; gives patronage of N. Carolina, 150; censured, 153; promotes Sherwood to be postmaster at Washington to succeed Ross, transferred, 153; and U. S. Attorney Chambers, 151; removes employes in Brooklyn navy yard, 155; praised; civil service methods advocated, see Indiana republican platform, 1890, 156; condemned for disregard of civil service law, see Pennsylvania, Indiana and New Hampshire platforms, 1890, 156; nominates democrat, Kirkpatrick, postmaster at North Hadley Falls, Mass., 157; nominates Eaves, a corrupt politician, 159; removals under: spoils system under, 159, 188, 269; gives patronage of Texas to Collector Cuney, 159; correspondence of with Foulke, W. D., over presidential post-offices, see also post offices, presidential, 163; good appointments of, 169;

gives offices as rewards for party service, 171; a greater spoilsman than any predecessor, 174; as senator, speech in senate on iniquity of secret charges system; see Shelbyville, Freeman, De La Hunt, 176, 177; gives patronage to Sewell, 180; and McFarland, disreputable politician, 181; gives patronage of navy yard at New York to Fischer, 182; uses offices to gain renomination, 183; and customs offices: Washington offices, 185; advised to appoint Avery postmaster at Plymouth, Mass., 187; removals under for cause, according to Clarkson, 188; secures control of Indiana republican state committee, 189; striving for renomination, 192; course of in Indian affairs: letter to Cambridge Civil Service Reform Association regarding, 86, 98, 102, 182, 202, 204, 205, 217, 219, 239; removes U. S. district attorney at Washington, D. C., 211; and Delphi (Ind.) Journal, 213; nominates W. R. Leeds, disreputable politician, as U. S. marshal in Penn., 216; appoints Mayor Ellis postmaster at Muncie, Ind., 217; silent regarding civil service reform, 220; order of putting part of Indian service under civil service law: forbids promotion without examination from unclassified to classified service, 221, 230, 231; should put navy yards under civil service law, 222; reappoints democrat, Sherlin, postmaster at Sandwich, Mass.; democrat, Morgan, at Newton, Mass., 224; federal office-holders interfere in primaries at Baltimore in behalf of, 225, 226; "Boss" Filley, of Missouri, works for, 226; and G. B. Ramm, Jr., 228; Martin, appointed collector internal revenue, aids Quay to ruin ballot bill in Penn., 228, 229, 232, 233; and Roosevelt, civil service commissioner, 232; makes terms with Quay, 235; promotes Thompson, assistant postmaster at Indianapolis, to be postmaster; consequent promotions, 235; renomination of, reasons for and against; course regarding civil service reform, 237, 240, 248, 287; republican opposition to, workers for, 240; appoints W. H. Brooks collector internal revenue in Pa., vice Martin, resigned, 241; negroes do not get patronage under, 243, 244; gives patronage of New York to Platt, 245; workers for, 249; removes Stearns for political reasons, 250; reasons of for removal of Corse, postmaster at Boston, 251; patronage as used by, and party platform, 1888, 253; orders promotions in Washington offices made on competitive examinations under civil service commission, gives patronage of Maryland to republican machine, 254; accepts "resignation" of Erhardt, collector at N. Y. City, appoints Fassett to make clean sweep, 255; betrays civil service reform, 260, 282, 319; extensions of civil service reform under, compared to Dictator Balmaceda, 261; controls patronage, but it is a source of weakness, 262; appoints Flanagan, political worker, collector of customs at El Paso, 266; civil service commission is good under, 271, 272; precise scope of extension of civil service law in Indian service, under, 273; and R. R. mail service, extends civil service law to certain employees in Indian service, 275; and violations of law in Omaha post-office, 281; rewards Flanagan, 286; uses patronage in Indiana for renomination, 297, 316, 317; uses federal patronage in Pennsylvania and elsewhere to secure renomination, removes supporters of Quay, 298, 299, 301; and removal of Flood, postmaster at Elmira, N. Y., 303, 305; and Mahone "blackmailers," 305; compelled to give patronage, 311, 312; and independents, 313; commended and censured by National League, 321; political activity of federal office-holders under, 33, 350; and appointment of Martin, 351; gives patronage to Boss McKane, 352; and candidacy of Chase for governor of Indiana, 353, 344, 355; "ceaseless activity of," 357; not opposed to political assessments, 181, 353, 359, 360, 361, 362; seeks to reward Delegate Crum, negro, with postmastership of Charleston, S. C., 363; Senator Sawyer, chairman senate committee on post-offices, aids nomination of, 364; Julian on abuse of civil service under, 365; enforces civil service law "with vigor and impartiality," 366; appoints Leaycraft, political worker, 371; civil service reform under, 80, 371, 372, 373, 374; and Minneapolis convention, 375, 376; civil service reform under: should be defeated, 376, 389; and political activity of federal office-holders in Indiana, 376, 381, 383, 385, 386; bans renomination with offices, 387, 408; and extensions of civil service law, 388, 390; opposes appointment of Hanlon, 393, 395; civil service reform in annual message 1892 of, 397; extension of classified service under welcomed, 398, 402; classifies all free-delivery post-offices, and weather bureau service, 403; merit system under, 404; extension of civil service reform under, not urged by republicans, 405; administration of ruined by spoils system, 413, 414; appoints Private Sec'y Halford paymaster in army, 414; accused of bribing the press, 144.

Harrison, Carter, appointed U. S. marshal by Pres. Harrison, his brother, 21, 30, 369.

Harrison, E. G., appointed postmaster at Asbury Park, N. Y., vice Toland, 386.

Harrison, Rev. H., Thanksgiving sermon of denouncing Clarkson, 193, 194.

Harrison, H., commends CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 364.

Harrison, J. C., father of Journalist H. Harrison, postmaster at Smithfield, O., 149.

Harrison, J. P., postmaster at Ln Verne, Ia., a political worker, 260.

Harrison, J. S., brother of Pres. Harrison, works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 339.

Harrison, Neb., father of Journalist Davis, postmaster at, 149.

Harrison, Russell, son of Pres. Harrison, influence of used for office-seekers, 38; political worker for his father, 189, 359, 378; solicits campaign funds for Pres. Harrison, 210; assists at dinner to Clarkson, 215; and Elkins, 290.

Harrison, Dr. T. H., president of state benevolent boards of Indiana, a spoilsman, 206.

Harrison, President W. H., the public press and spoils (in inaugural address), 17.

Harrison, W. H., Pres., forbids political assessments and political activity of federal office-holders, 370.

Harrison, W. H., Pres., on bribery of press, 376.

Harrity and Phila. post-office, 53.

Harrodsburgh, Ind., Woodard, postmaster of, political worker, 380.

Hart, H., alderman of New York City, sec sale of offices under Tammany, 224, 225.

Hart, M. L., journalist, postmaster at Ravenna, Kan., 149.

Hart, T. N., mayor, Boston, signs petition for larger appropriation for civil serv. com., 102; ex-mayor, Boston, appointed postmaster at Boston, vice Corse, removed, 215; commended by Corse, his predecessor, 251.

Hart, W. D., appointed postmaster at Meriden, Ncb., vice McGinness, forced to resign, 166.

Hart, W. H., third auditor, uses influence for appointment of Throop, 59; federal employe and printing office, 234; goes home "for rest," 362; political worker, 382; spoilsman, 112; and removal of Sniffall, 377.

Hartford, Conn., Kinney and Gillette, applicants for postmastership of, 84, 99; Bennett, postmaster of, and removal of Barrio, efficient P. O. inspector, 298.

Hartford City, Ind., Cable, postmaster of, political worker, 379.

Hartley, A. H., appointed in post-office at Scranton, Pa., removed for political reasons, appointed to place in R. R. mail service, removed by Harrison, 101.

Hartman, A., applicant for postmaster of Columbus, Ind., 89; postmaster of Columbus, Ind., at Minneapolis convention, 379.

Hartman, D. W., editor, appointed postmaster at Genoa, Ill., 111.

Hartong, A. W., druggist, candidate for postmaster at Rochelle, Ill., 109; postmaster at Rochelle, Ill., works for Mitt, 136.

Hartshorn, S. N., political worker for Major McKinley, rewarded, 52.

Hartwig, defeated congressional candidate, demands patronage, 99.

Harvey, G., political worker for Harrison, deputy coll. int. rev. in Indiana, 302, 303, 316, 378.

Harvey, J. W., appointed postmaster at Russellville, Ind., 89.

Harwood, J. C., editor, appointed postmaster at Clarion, Iowa, 141.

Hassler, Ang. E., journalist, postmaster at Pawnee City, Ncb., 149.

Hastings, General, opposes Delamater, 134, 143; candidate for governor of Pa., 249; political worker for Quay, 280.

Hathaway, postmaster of house of representatives, makes removals at suggestion of congressmen, methods of, 242.

Hatton, F., editor of Washington Post, and scramble for offices, 5, 76, 79, 92, 96, 161; spoilsman abuses Commissioner Roosevelt, 52; charges of against Commissioner Roosevelt, 101; and investigation of civil serv. com., 103.

Hayre, consul at, see Dnals, 54.

Hawes, J. W., and factional fights in N. Y., see New York, 241, 242.

Hawkins, U. S. marshal for Indiana district, oppression by, 9.

Hawley, Sen., supports Kinney as postmaster of Hartford, Conn., 84, 99.

Hawley, Pa., Langham, postmaster at, removed on secret charges, 176.

Hawthorne, Nat'l, removed from office, 46.

Hay, E. G., friend of Harrison, recommended by Sen. Washburn, appointed U. S. dist. att'y for Minnesota, 84.

Hayes, Pres., declaration in favor of civ. service reform, 50; letter of acceptance of, in favor of civ. service reform, 50; and loyalty, 75; pardons brother of D. Ransdell, 244; on evils of political assessment and political activity of federal officers, 265, 316; friendly to civil service reform; executive order of, instituting, 123, 271.

Hayes, W. J., congressman, refused knowledge of reasons for removal of Evans, postmaster at Bloomfield, Ia., 175.

Hayes, W. M., postmaster at Kingston, N. Y., political worker, 280.

Haynes, —, attempts fraudulent voting in primaries, see New York City.

Haynes, R. A., relative Pres. Harrison, given office, 38.

Hayes, J. M., appointed postmaster at Greencastle, Ind., 89.

Headington, N., applicant for postmaster at Portland, Ind., 88.

Headley, L. C., journalist, postmaster at Gaylord, Kan., 149.

Healy, M. J., requests patronage, 311, 312.

Heath, Rev. J. W., candidate for postmastership of Muncie, Ind., 217.

Hebbard, C. A., editor, appointed postmaster at Roseville, Ill., 141.

Hebring, H., customs collector at Geneseo, N. Y., at convention republican league, 259.

Heckler, removed on suspicion of being disloyal to Harrison, 300.

Hedden, collector at New York, removals under, 183.

Hedges, C., appointed chief of postal division of sixth auditor's office, Associated Press agt., 47.

Heerman, C. A., and Mahone, 52.

Heintz, L. J., street commissioner in N. Y. City, 234.

Hellen, Mrs., appointed stamp clerk at Winston, N. C., through influence of Judge Settle, her relative, 47.

Hemingford, Neb., Journalist Paradis, postmaster at, 149.

Hench, representative in Indiana legislature, and spoils system in, 407.

Henderson, congressman, nolds civil service law, 122, 125.

Henderson, J. J., congressman, and postmaster of Woodhull, Ill., 47.

Henderson, W., leader in tally sheet (sec) prosecution at Indianapolis, favors civil service reform, 227, 229.

Henderson, W., a leader in factional fight at Baltimore, 121; faction of, see Baltimore investigation, 268, 267, 277, 295; and Stone faction at Baltimore, 372.

Henderson, W. E., political worker for Eaves, 159.

Henderson, W. T., disappointed office-seeker, 144.

Hendricks, delegate to Minneapolis convention from Alabama, opposing Harrison, 346.

Hendricks, postmaster at Greensburgh, Ind., worker for Harrison, 316, 378.

Hendricks, A. H., P. O. employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.

Hendricks, republican politician and spoilsman, and Gov. 1111 of New York, 211; supporter of Senator Hiscock, 216; political worker for Hiscock and Platt; appointed collector at N. Y. City, 264, 266, 269; collector at N. Y. City; political worker, 279, 287, 354, 357; defended by Sec'y Foster (assessment case), 289; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 359, 360, 337, 343, 344; to lead campaign in New York, 347, 348; management of custom house by, 358; opposes Congressman Belden, 386.

Hendricks, T. A., ex-vice-president, his place in politics, 244.

Hendrix, efficient postmaster at Brooklyn, removed. Baird, politician, refuses appointment, 72, 131.

Henkel, W., at Minneapolis convention, 344.

Henry, J. A., journalist, postmaster at Jonesville, Minn., 149.

Henry, J. J., republican, condemns removal for political reasons of Corse, postmaster at Boston, see also Civil Service Record, 213.

Hensley, W. N., postmaster at Columbus, Ncb., forced to resign, 166.

Hepburn, solicitor of treasury, calls on Chairman Carter, 361.

Hepburn, A. B., appointed controller of the currency, 371.

Hepburn, W. P., federal office holder in Washington Co., Ia., a political worker, 260.

Herbert, congressman, and political activity of federal office-holders in Alabama, 355.

Herndon, Kan., Journalist Rathbone, postmaster at, 149.

Herod, W. W., candidate for mayor of Indianapolis; declares himself one of the "boys," 269.

Hess, J. W., worker for Harrison, 316; promises offices if elected, 378.

Hewitt, mayor of New York City, and civil service reform, 82.

Hicklin, councilman, and appointments to fire service of Indianapolis, 120; ward politician and spoilsman, 203; supports Fire Chief Webster, 207, 208.

Hickok, Rev. Dr., on civil service reform, 83.

Hicks, J., editor, office-holder, 14.

Higbee, representative in Indiana legislature, opposes spoils methods in, 407; and spoils methods in, 406.

Higgins, A., Sen., appoints Hinchman postmaster at Bridgeville, Del., 38; obtains appointment of Fisher as first auditor of treasury, of Knowles as consul to Bordeaux, 38; political manipulator, 160; at Minneapolis convention, 344; aided by Cooper, collector at Philadelphia, 363; attempts bribery, 397, 401, 402.

Higgins, E., and Cleveland administration, 25; appointment of condemned, 51; ex-office holder, henchman of Gorman, disreputable character, 181, 237, 314, 364.

Higgins, E. R., candidate for postmaster at Ft. Wayne, Ind., 45; postmaster at Ft. Wayne, Ind., a political worker, 153, 158; ordered to levy political assessments, 302; political worker for Harrison, 316; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 342, 379; political worker, 372, 377, 378; orders P. O. employes to take poll of Ft. W., 380.

Higginson, J. W., signs petition for larger appropriation for civil serv. com., 102.

- High, dictation of in Berks county, Penn., 47.
- Hildebrand, J. M., appointed surveyor of customs at Indianapolis, 38; a political worker, 144; denounced for political inactivity, 303; worker at Minneapolis convention, 379.
- Hill, representative in Indiana legislature, and spoils methods in, 406.
- Hill, congressman, favors civil service reform, 123.
- Hill, D. B., governor of New York, see Feudalism Revived; opposed to civil service reform, 82, 239, 261, 289; tools of, 196, 211; appoints "Paddy" Divver to a judgeship, 212; refuses requisition of Connecticut forger for political reasons, 214, 215; makes spoils bargains with Senator Hisecock, 216; workers for, oppose Fassett, by corrupt methods, 259; supporters of "knife" Cleveland, 282; Tammany leader, 298; career of, and Hillism, 305, 307, 309, 310, 311, 351, 396; defense of by Professor Collin, steals N. Y. legislature, 313; and Tammany, 317, 320; senator, gives Brooklyn bridge patronage to McLaughlin, 350; and fish protection at Lake Keuka, appoints saloon keeper Sheridan keeper at, 356; Kings co., N. Y., democrats, 356; imitators of in Indiana, 414; Sheehan, worker for, 415.
- Hill, F. B., negro, deputy collector internal revenue, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344, 348.
- Hill, J., negro, postmaster at Vicksburg, Miss., worker at Minneapolis, 343, 348.
- Hill, J. C., federal officer, resigns to do political work, 362.
- Hilliard, G., calls on Fassett, collector at N. Y. city, 258; at Minneapolis convention, 344; and cartage contract at N. Y. custom house, 358.
- Hills, W. C., journalist, appointed postmaster at Smithland, Iowa, 142.
- Hines, G. A., candidate for postmaster at Brattleboro, Mass., 100.
- Hirsch, L., editor, given office by Governor Foraker, 301.
- Hirsch, "Sol," the "Tom Platt" of Oregon, appointed minister to Turkey, 29.
- Hiscock, C., appointed through influence of Senator Hisecock, his brother, to office, vice L. D. Monery, 150; political worker for him, 264.
- Hiscock, F., Sen., spoilsman, 43, 353, 354, 360, 386; and postmaster at Syracuse, 46; obtains appointment of Smith, editor, as postmaster at Syracuse, N. Y., 71; notoriously corrupt, 71; and appointment of Von Bergman, 132; opposes appointment of Conroy, postmaster at Watkins, N. Y., 150; controls patronage in N. Y., gets office for his brother, C. Hisecock, 150; on performance of party pledges, 168; supports Merritt for postmaster of Lockport, N. Y., bargains for spoils with Hill, 216; recommends appointment of Wheeler, 241; patronage of, and factional fights against, 259; patronage of, secures office for brother, gives bribes, 264, 265, 266; indorses Payn, 312; supporter of Blaine, 344.
- Hitch, C. P., Harrison worker at Chicago convention, appointed U. S. marshal southern district of Ill., 30; political worker, 179.
- Hitt, congressman on civ. service law, 73; and his struggles in distributing patronage, see also Rochelle (Ill.), post-office at, 109; renomination of, 136; nominated, 137, 143; secures appointment of Asay, disreputable politician, 160.
- Hoar, Judge, recommends Bancroft postmaster at Concord, Mass., for reappointment, 91; indorses Postmaster Buttrick, 100.
- Hoar, Sen., letter to from Congressman Banks, asking aid for J. J. McCarthy, 31; letter of to Civil Service Record, declaring American people to be not yet aware of worth of civ. serv. ref., 43, 60; and Boston custom house, 71; and Collector Saltonstall, 94; controls census patronage in Mass., 104; thinks customs collectors should be in political harmony with president, 104; and removal of Saltonstall, 105; and Eaton, D. B., 111; on collectorship at Boston, 129; transmits letter of Cambridge Civil Service Reform Association to President Harrison, 205; and Corse, postmaster at Boston, 213, 357; requests retention of Corse, postmaster at Boston, 367.
- Hoar, S., opposed to civil service reform, according to Grosvenor, 203.
- Hobart, supporters of and Blunt, 150.
- Hobart, A., at Balt. conference, 1889, 2; and resolutions of Mass. Civil Service Reform Association, 1892, 398.
- Hobart, G. A., politician, surety for Fassett, collector at New York City, 258.
- Hobbs, purchases postmastership at Mitchell, Ind., see also sale of offices, 89.
- Hobbs, pension examiner in Indiana, political worker, 380.
- Hobbs, E. H., political worker, see Kings Co., N. Y.
- Hoboken, N. J., Postmaster Curran at, removed for political reasons, 54.
- Hodson, J. H., disappointed office-seeker, 144.
- Hoffman, F. N., given place in Indiana legislature, 406.
- Hogan, D., gains office through influence of Congressman Smith, 38; collector of internal revenue, a boss, 143.
- Hogan, M. C., U. S. supervisor of elections in New York, 390.
- Hohlt, W. H., politician, see Indianapolis, see also Parnell Hall, 195.
- Holcomb, state senator of Indiana, spoilsman, 408.
- Holderman, superintendent of fire telegraph at Indianapolis, refuses to teach intended supplanter, 235, 243.
- Hollowell, Me., removal of postmaster at, on secret charges, 39.
- Holman, congressman, renomination of, 37; congressman, patronage of, 393, 400, 411, 417, 419, 421, 422.
- Holman, bank examiner in Indiana, at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- Holmes, A. J., sergeant-at-arms of house of representatives, removes his deputy, Cavanaugh, for political reasons, 250.
- Holmes, L., republican member New Bedford (Mass.) city committee, seeks retention of democratic postmaster; correspondence with Wanamaker, 29, 176.
- Holt, S. R., politician of Indianapolis, opposes bill for new charter of; officer of new city government, see equally divided politically, 212, 213; on positions in city service being "equally divided politically," 220; examinations for police force under, 222; and city service, 228; appoints under "equally divided politically" rule, 235.
- Holton, I., supported by Congressman Cooper for postmaster at Plainfield, 399.
- Holyrood, Kan., Journalist Woodmausee, postmaster at, 149.
- Homilectic Review, October, 1889, and civil service reform, 65.
- Hooker, G. W., spoilsman, and Brattleboro, Mass., postmastership, 100.
- Hoopeston, Ill., Editor Warner, appointed postmaster at, 141; Postmaster Catherwood of, forced to resign, 165.
- Hope, Kan., Journalist Burroughs, postmaster at, 149.
- Hopkins (M. C.) on house committee on civil service, 86; indorses Hartong for postmaster at Rochelle, Ill., 109.
- Hopley, J., journalist, postmaster at Bucyrus, O., 149, 301.
- Hopper, F., nominee for council, see Indianapolis, see Parnell Hall.
- Hord, F., representative in Indiana legislature, opposes gerrymander of 1893, 414.
- Horn, C. W., journalist, postmaster at Plain City, O., 149.
- Hornellsville, N. Y., removal of Greeubow, postmaster at, on secret charges, 176.
- Horr, J. F., collector at Key West, Fla., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Horseheads, N. Y., factional struggles against Platt and Fassett at, see Chemung Co.; Van Duzer, postmaster of, a political worker, 265; Postmaster Van Duzer of, and removal of Flood, 304; Chemung county democratic convention at, run by Hill workers, 309.
- Hotchkiss, A. C., journalist, appointed postmaster at Adel, Iowa, 141.
- Houk, L. F., congressman, of Tennessee, opposed to civ. service reform, 35, 49, 54, 161; spoilsman, secures office for his son, 84; opposes civil service commission and reform, 124; charges of against civil service commission, 145, 146; opposed to civil service reform; sees evils of spoils system, 177, 178.
- Houk, J. C., appointed through influence of his father, 84.
- House of Representatives, Hathaway, postmaster of, spoilsman, removals under, 242.
- Houston, R. L., postmaster of Birmingham, Ala., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Hovey, A., governor, of Indiana, 17; of Indiana, appoints farmer as mine inspector, 192; on investigating insane hospital scandals at Indianapolis, 206.
- Hovey, C. J., son of Gov. Hovey, appointed postmaster at Mt. Vernon, Ind., 71; postmaster, etc., at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- Howard, Gen., on Indian abuses, 182.
- Howard, J., ward politician, see Indianapolis, 196.
- Howard, N. P., postmaster at Greenfield, Ind., removed, 89.
- Howard, R., signs petition for larger appropriation for civil service commission, 102.
- Howard City, Mich., Journalist Lowrey postmaster at, 149.
- Howarth, —, journalist, appointed census enumerator, 142.
- Howe, H. H., federal employe, pays political assessments, 279.
- Howell, chief of division, removed for political reasons, 55.
- Howell, J. C., commandant navy-yard at Kittery, Me., 147.
- Howell, W. A., nominated to be postmaster at Milwaukee, vice Paul, resigned, 47.
- Howell, W. C., relative of President Harrison given office, 90.
- Howells, J. J., editor, appointed postmaster at Jefferson, Ohio, 301.
- Howland, W., candidate, charges political activity of federal employes, 179.
- Hoysradt, state senator of New York, corrupt politician, see Hill, 307.
- Hoyt, governor of Pennsylvania subject to Quay, 151.
- Hoyt, W. E., brother-in-law of President Cleveland holds office, 150.
- Hubbell, J., congressional campaign, 1882, 272; campaign and Curtis, 306; and political assessments, 373, 390.
- Huber, Pa., postmaster at, see Brosius, 72.
- Hudder, J. H., journalist, appointed postmaster at Aurora, Ill., 126.
- Hudson, state senator of Indiana, votes against bill for non-partisan control of state charitable institutions, 201; low politician and spoilsman, opposes new charter of Indianapolis, see, also, Magee, 211.
- Hudson, postmaster of Corydon, Ind., political worker, 379, 382.
- Hudson, J. S., delegate to republican national convention, secures removal of Duer, postmaster at Princess Anne, Md., and appointment of Lankford, 408.
- Hudson Co., N. Y., factional democratic fights in police aid Davis faction, 199, 200.
- Huey, lawyer, and stock fraudulently issued to Wanamaker, 246.
- Huffer, S. W., candidate for postmastership at Muncie, Ind., 217.
- Hughes, asst. postmaster of Philadelphia, political worker for Quay, 270, 280.
- Hughes, A. M., leads Tennessee delegation for Harrison, 341.
- Hughes, E. N., applicant for Winamac, Ind., postmastership, 88.
- Hughson, J., given office through influence of Priv. Sec. Halford, 38.
- Huginir, appointed postmaster at Newport, Minnesota, 21.
- Hugo, V., on America, 210.
- Hulett, W. L., doorkeeper in Indiana senate, 408.
- Humphrey, mayor of Concord, N. H., 143.
- Hungerford, J. B., journalist, appointed postmaster at Carroll, Iowa, 141; a political worker, 260.
- Hunt, and office-seekers, 38.
- Hunt, police judge of Manchester, active politician, 143.
- Hunt, C. B., editor, appointed postmaster at Greenfield, Iowa, 142.
- Hunt, W. L., editor, appointed postmaster at St. Clairsville, O., 301.
- Hunter, commissioner, spoilsman, 315.
- Hunter, J. T., asks for financial "suggestions," 383.
- Hunter, N. Y., Journalist Casteright postmaster of, 155.
- Hunter, R. H., internal revenue collector in New York, a political worker, 265.
- Huntertown, Ind., Latham, postmaster at, removed through influence of Postmaster Higgins, Duntont appointed, 362.
- Huntington, Bishop, advocates civ. service reform, 40, 82.
- Huntington, Ind., Editor Butler, appointed postmaster at, 126, 377; Rogers, postmaster of, at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- Huntsville, Ala., Clay, Mary, postmaster at, removed without cause.
- Hurst, S. M., editor, given office by Governor Foraker, 301.
- Husted, speaker, secures nomination of Pentreath for postmaster of Yonkers, N. Y., 150; chairman republican executive committee of New York, 279; corrupt politician, see Hill, 307.
- Huston, G. N., 7, 78, 85, 96; treas. of U. S., 14; chairman Indiana republican state committee; controls patronage of Indiana, 67, 112, 121, 154; obtains office for Scanlon, for political services, 132; of national republican committee, 359; worker for Harrison, and distributor of patronage, 377; and political assessments, 382, 383.
- Hyatt, J., efficient officer in house of representatives, removed for political reasons through influence of McPherson, 84.
- Iches, editor, appointed postmaster at Newark, O., 301.
- Idaho., governor of officially compliments management of assay office at Boise City, whose chief removed without cause by Harrison, 30; Boise City, head of assay office at removed without cause, 30.
- Iding, pension examiner in Indiana, political worker, 380.
- Ide, C. E., defeated candidate, 132; politician, 386.
- Illig, police commissioner at Buffalo, works for Trautmann; uses intimidation, see Buffalo, N. Y., 197.
- Illinois, see also convention, platform.
- Illinois, congressmen of and offices, 6; senators of and President Harrison, 6; delegation and the offices, 7; congressmen and offices, 15; delegation from, favoring appointment of Asa Matthews as first comptroller, 21; congressmen of and Chicago post-office, 22; removals in, 22; Bloomington, examination at, 26; postmasters in democratic congressional districts appointed through influence of Sen. Cullom, 30; Harrison worker appointed U. S. marshal for southern district of, 30; Congressman Cannon of, spoilsman, 30; Senators Cullom and Farwell and Wilcox matter, 31; congressmen and senators of refused control of patronage by Harrison, 240; political activity of federal office holders in, 335, 336, 341; CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE to be sent to Y. M. C. A. of, 350; Governor Altgeld of flees from office-seekers, 415.
- Impeachment, President liable to, for abuse of civil service, 17.
- Independent, on resignation of Quay as chairman National Republican Committee, 257.
- Indian commissioner, Butler, low politician, recommended by congressmen for, 14; Oberly removed by Pres. Harrison, 27; Morgan, 38; Morgan favorable to civil service reform, asks re-

- tention of his predecessor, 11; Morgan upholds Harrison's Indian policy, 202.
- Indian commissioners declare Indian service in better condition than ever before, 205.
- Indian Rights Association, 12; and abuse of Indian service, 86; seventh annual report of on Indian service, 102; refused knowledge of cause of removal of Vandever, 181; efforts of, 182; conference 1891 favors application of civil service reform methods to Indian service, 288; report of commissioners condemning spoils system in Indian service, 308.
- Indian schools, Dorchester, commissioner of, 38.
- Indian service, extension of civil service law to, advocated, 10; Junkin, W. W., appointed inspector in, 14; congressional patronage and, 36; rules of Commissioner Morgan concerning tenure of office in, 44; letter of Welsh favoring civil service reform in, 47; evils in, 86; spoils system in, 94, 173, 192, 308; "home rule system of Pres. Harrison, 102; disgrace of, Pres. Grant and, see A Century of Dishonor, 182; gross abuses in, correspondence regarding, see Morgan, Harrison, Cook, Cambridge Civil Service Reform Association, 202, 204, 205; in better condition than ever before, see Indian commissioners, proposal to extend civil service law to agency clerks and employes in, 205; removals in under Cleveland and Harrison, 217; places in given as spoil, see Pine Ridge, 218; H. Welsh on removals in, Capen on removals in under Cleveland, 219; partially put under civil service law by Pres. Harrison, 221, 273, 372; evils of spoils system in, H. Welsh on, in Scribner's magazine for April, 1891, 224; used as spoils by Sec. Noble, 226; merit system introduced in, 230, 251, 289, 321; debauched by Harrison, 237, 376; spoils system in, H. Welsh on, 239; extension of merit system to commended, 286; thorough application of reform to demanded, 288; political assessments levied on employes in, 375, 384, 385, 388; examiners for 1891-92, 397.
- Indiana, see also Convention, Platform.
- Indiana, civil service reform in under Cleveland's first administration, 1; democratic party in, civil service reform, 8; number of postmasters appointed in, from March 4 till July 20, inclusive, 1889, 34; rotation in office in, 45; moral republican organ of thinks neither party cares about civil service reform, 62; fourth class post-offices used to strengthen republican machine in, 67; Huston chairman republican state committee, 1888, 67; federal offices in, used to make a machine, 68; reform sentiment in, 93; state university of, civil service reform sentiment at, 108; distribution of spoil in causes republican defeat, 111; republican congressmen of, and spoils, 112; status of merit system in, 119; state civil service in, devoted to spoils, 137; 20,000 floaters in, 171; patronage of given to Michener, 173; republican club, for spoils, see Curry, 181; republican factions fight over chairmanship of state committee, 189; bribery by republicans advised in, 190, 191; farmer appointed mine inspector of, by Governor Hovey, 192; state federation of trade and labor unions of, demand non-partisan control of state institutions, see Magee, 201; foundation of state board of charities of, opposed by State Senator Burke for not being partisan, 201; Magee bill for non-partisan control of state charitable institutions, defeated, 201, 202, 208, 209, 210; Dr. Harrison, president of state benevolent boards of, a spoilsman, 206; text of Magee bill authorizing board of state charities to regulate employment of officers of benevolent institutions of, according to merit system, 208, 209; illegal and spoils appointments made in state senate, spoils system and scandals in hospitals of, 211; 212; Magee bill for non-partisan control of state charitable institutions discussed, 214, 215; "boss" ridden, 219; civil service reform popular in, federal, state officers and citizens, favoring, 227; school children of, never speak on questions of public policy, 236; opposition to Harrison in, 240; federal officers in, political workers for Harrison, 260; under Cleveland given over to spoils, 282; federal patronage in, 297; federal patronage used in, for re-nomination of Harrison, 302, 303; central and southern hospitals for insane, evils of spoils system in, 315; Harrison uses federal patronage in, for re-nomination, 316, 317; spoils system in, civil service reform the proper issue, 322; political activity of federal office-holders in, 334, 337, 340, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 352, 353, 354, 362, 370, 374, 375, 382, 387, 389, 390; Chase, favored by Harrison for governor of, 343; Hill men of, defeated at Chicago convention, 350; state republican committee assesses candidates for office, also pension office at Indianapolis, 363; democratic politicians of, spoilsman, 365, 366; report to committee of National League, on political activity of federal office-holders in, 375, 381; republican state committee of, levies political assessments, 387, 392; democrats aspiring to office, 387, 392, 395; good results of secret ballot in, 389; applicants for office in, under Cleveland [2d term], 392, 394, 399, 401; spoils system in, legislature of 1893 under, 405, 408, 414; applicants for office in, under Cleveland [2d term], 409, 411; applicants for office in, under Cleveland [2d term], 415, 422.
- Indiana, civil service reform association of, 67, 88; membership of, 4, 9, 17, 25, 41; annual addresses at, 7; membership of, 41; announcement of annual meeting 1890, 85; annual meeting of 1890, list of officers, 108; notice of annual meeting, 111; annual meeting 1890, address of Bouaparte, C. J., 119, 120, 126, 127, 128; and Clarkson, 131; work of, 173; Bloomington branch of, 182; exposes scandals of partisan management of state charitable institutions, 214; annual meeting 1891; W. D. Foulke elected president of, 227, 239.
- Indiana School Journal and CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 13.
- Indiana Co., Penn., political fights in, 133.
- Indianapolis, municipal service in, 2; post-office at, 2, 9, 18, 34; post-office at under Cleveland, 5; civil service reform in fire department of, 13; Wallace, postmaster of, violates civil service law, 28, 73; post-office at, spoils system in, 26; post-office, investigation of by civil service commission, 27; list of eligibles at post-office at, 29; Fire Chief Webster of removed for political reasons, 36, 69; Hildebrand appointed collector of customs at, 38, 68; composition of local examining board at, examination at, 42; employees in post-office at exempt from examination, 42; Postmaster Wallace at and local board, 43, 48; post-office at under Postmaster Jones, 45, 51, 53, 80; Commissioner Roosevelt at, 46; agent of associated press at given office, 47; list of eligibles for post-office of, 48; questions used in examination at, August 6, 1889, 51, 56, 58; city election influenced by removal of Fire Chief Webster, 59; civil service commission and post office of, 59; non-partisan appointments in post-office at, 87; post-office at, no removals in except for cause, fairness of examination in, 94; examinations for physicians in city hospitals, 107; deputies in custom house as political workers, 108; civil service reform in township trustee's office at, 111; charity organization of, 111; excellence of examining board at, 120; vacancies in fire department of, civil service methods advocated for, 120; appointments to census service in made through M. Moores, 129; in efficient census enumeration at, 132; control of offices in fire service at, 137; Postmaster Wallace of, secretly a political worker, 144; Township Trustee Gold removes efficient officers, 146; examinations for postal service in, passed by negro, 146; federal office-holders at state convention at, 153, 158; spoils system in, township embracing, 171; spoils system in, for city laborers, 181; per cent. of removals in, classified and unclassified service in, post-office at, 185; personnel of examiners at, civil service law observed rigidly in post-office at, 186; commercial club of, and proposed charter of, Indianapolis, 104, 189, 190; methods used in, "primaries" in, 192; patronage of state insane hospitals at, controlled by Markey, ward politician of Indianapolis, 195; Social Turu-Verein of indorses Magee bill for non-partisan control of state charitable institutions, 201, 209; efforts against spoils system in city departments, 202, 203; local politics and career of corrupt politicians in, tally-sheet forgeries in, 205; 206, 207, 208; bribery by street railway company of, 206, 207; fire service at, efforts to turn over to spoils, 207, 208, 235; wholesale removals of employes in fire and police service of, see equally divided politically, 212, 213; new charter for government of, its passage, provisions and faults, new officers under, see equally divided politically, 212, 213; examinations for clerks and carriers in post-office at, 218; death of Postmaster Wallace of, a loss to the public service, 219; trouble arising from positions in city service being "equally divided politically," street cleaning service of, 220, 221; city assumption of various important functions condemned while spoils system exists, see equally divided politically, 220; system of appointment to police force of, compared with those of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Boston, Mass., see equally divided politically, 222, 223, 224; Thompson acting postmaster at, favors civil service reform, 227, 229; need of examinations and civil service reform in city service at, see equally divided politically, 228; adherent of Coy, disreputable politician elected president of council of, 228; post-office under merit system, 230; promotion of Thompson ass't postmaster at to be postmaster, and consequent promotions, 235; spoils system in city government of, merit system required for all city departments except police and fire, see charter, 243; examination for places in post office at, to be held August, 1891, 243; number of applicants at examinations held August, 1891, for carriers and clerks in post-office at, 253; Gold, township trustee at, defends himself for spoils methods, criticism of, 256; election of Sullivan as mayor of, over Herod, by independent votes, board of public works and controller of, commended, 269; city services in turned over to spoils, 289; Phipps, efficient employe in city service of, removed for political reasons, 297; Postmaster Thompson of, and other federal officers at, political workers, 302, 316, 317, 320, 378, 382; tally sheet frauds in, 313; spoils in city and county offices at, 314, 315; board of public safety of, 317; examinations for physicians for city hospital, 322; Thompson, postmaster of, subordinates work for Harrison at Minneapolis, 337, 343, 379; need of Boston labor service in, 357; Moores, republican politician, attempts to coerce Thompson, postmaster at, 366; Dunn, P. O. employe at, removed for soliciting political contributions of other employes at instance of Democratic Committeeman Backus, 403, 411, 412; Congressman Bynum allows Turpie to name postmaster of, 405.
- Indianapolis, Catholic Record advocates civil service reform, 76.
- Indianapolis Journal (rep.) on Indianapolis post-office, 9; declares civil service reform not a moral question, 56; strongly advocates civil service reform, 65; interview in on political ingratitude, 181, 182; defends census appointments, 182; and bribery by republicans in Indiana, 191; on corrupt politics and politicians of Indianapolis, see also Indianapolis, 205, 206, 207; accounts of spoils fights in various places, 217; on Roosevelt dinner, see at Indianapolis, 232; on independents, 313; on use of patronage to secure re-election of a President, 348; on use of patronage by Harrison to secure re-nomination; by Cleveland, 250.
- Indianapolis News (independent), and civil service reform, 11; and CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 13; attributes republican defeat of 1889 largely to patronage system, 76; on Clarkson and Maryland republican clubs, 154; on political assessments, 183; account of nominating caucus, see Parnell Hall, 194, 195; on corrupt politics and politicians of Indianapolis, 205, 206, 207, 208; on rush for office under new city government of Indianapolis, see equally divided politically, 213; an independent journal, opposes spoils system, 331; on the "mugwump," 351.
- Indianapolis Sentinel (dem.) and CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 13; complaints against violations of civil service law in Indianapolis post-office, 27; supports Magee bill for non-partisan control of state charitable institutions, 201, 202, 209, 210; on corrupt politics and politicians of Indianapolis, 207, 208; condemns democratic antagonism to Magee bill for non-partisan control of state charitable institutions, 215; accounts of spoils fights in various places, 217; on Roosevelt dinner at Indianapolis, 232; commended, 269; favors civil service methods in Indiana state institutions, 350; on what to expect of Cleveland, 358.
- Indianapolis Taglicher Telegraph, condemns opposition to Magee bill, see also Magee, 209.
- Ingalls, Senator, spoilsman, 5, 17, 27, 43, 65, 85, 161, 192, 211; Kansas and office seekers, 6; senator and President Harrison confer over offices, 22; correspondence with H. Welsh over Indian commissioner, 22; opposed to civil service reform, 49; and civil service law, 51; on purity in politics, 119, 130, 145; retracts statements on purity in politics, 190; guilty of nepotism in District of Columbia offices, 215.
- Ingraham, Judge, and Dutchess co., N. Y., election frauds, 306.
- Inspectors, post-office, requirements of, 193.
- Interior Dept., and request for census recount in N. Y. City, 294.
- Iowa, number of appointments in by Clarkson, 45; Editor Weinstel appointed collector of fourth district of, 56; republicans of denounce civil service law and demand its repeal, 62; spoils system in given full swing with disastrous results, 67; reform in, 111; political assessments made by republican state central committee of, 240; federal officers at state republican convention 1891, 260; becoming democratic, 281; political activity of federal office-holders in, 346, 382.
- Iowa State Register and Junkin, W. W., 14; Clarkson's paper and examinations, 49.
- Irvin, P. O. employe at Frankfort, Ind., political worker, 380.
- Irvin, judge, and "tally-sheet" forgeries at Indianapolis, see Indianapolis.
- Irwin, uses influence for appointment of Throop, 59.
- Irwin, D. W., journalist, appointed postmaster at Akron, Cal., 126.
- Issues, permanence of, other reforms should be subordinate to civil service reform, 214, 220.
- Ithaca, N. Y., Robinson postmaster of, political worker for Platt, 264.
- Ivanhoe, Kan., Journalist Gray postmaster at, 149.
- Ives, H. S., see Hillism, 309.
- Ivins, W. M., exposes methods of Hill, 307.
- "J. S.," advertisement of, offering to buy office, 22.
- Jackson, President, and bribery of press, 17; spoilsman, 20, 43, 105; and postmasters, 49; cabinet of, 63; offices under, a perquisite of the Executive, 115; and the civil service, 125; spoils system attributed to, 262; Webster condemns spoils system under, 270, 271.
- Jackson, J., ass't U. S. att'y, delegate to Minneapolis, 348.
- Jackson, Miss. Gibbs postmaster at, 47; Gibbs postmaster of, Harrison delegate to Minneapolis, 344, 348.
- Jackson, O. L., votes for, bought away, 151.
- Jackson Court House, W. Va., Journalist Deen postmaster at, 155.
- Jacksonian rotation, see Clark, 257.

Jacksonville, Florida, Postmaster Clark of, removed by Pres. Harrison, 29.

Jacobi, Dr. A., withdraws from N. Y. City health dept., because it becomes political machine, 356.

Jacobs, J. L., federal employe, political worker in New York, 336.

Jacobs, L., and cartage contract of N. Y. custom house, 358.

Jacobus, J. W., U. S. marshal, assists at dinner to Clarkson, 245; a political worker, 265; in New York convention, 334, 370; appoints "floaters" as deputies, 387.

James, postmaster at New York, 32; ex-postmaster-general testifies to worth of Postmaster Hendrix at Brooklyn, N. Y., 131; postmaster at New York appointed P. M. gen'l by Garfield, 367.

James, C. G., employe in N. Y. post-office, a political worker, 265.

James, J., applicant for Winamac, Ind., postmastership, 88.

Jamestown, Kau., Journalist Barton postmaster at, 149.

Jaueway, Dr., resigns from N. Y. City health department because it becomes political machine, 356.

Jasper, Minn., Journalist Kiug postmaster at, 149.

Jefferson Co., N. Y., factional fights in republican primaries of, political activity of federal office-holders, 264; postmasters and other federal employes in, political assessments levied on, 391, 392.

Jefferson Co., Pa., bribery in, by republicans, 133.

Jefferson, O., Editor Howells appointed postmaster at, 301.

Jefferson, T., "four-year" law on, 45, 46; on nepotism, 46; and the civil service, 125.

Jeffersonville, Ind., the civil service in, see New Albany Tribune, 83; Postmaster Luke of, 88; anti-Harrison worker appointed internal revenue collector for, 302.

Jeffersonville (Ind.) News, on Magee bill for non-partisan control of state charitable institutions, 215.

Jenckes, of Rhode Island, see Eaton, 105.

Jenckes, Rev. Dr., favors civil service reform, 73, 227, 229; a partisan, 137, 138.

Jenkins, L. L., postmaster at Gastonia, N. Carolina, delegate for Harrison, 334.

Jenkinson, I., editor, appointed postmaster at Richmond, Ind., 126, 377; works for Harrison, 249.

Jenks, corporation counsel at Brooklyn, N. Y., exposes methods of McLaughlin, 318.

Jenks, J. W., Prof., civil service reformer, 182.

Jennings, C. E. M., editor, disappointed office seeker, opposes Sherman, 301.

Jersey City, N. J., postmaster at removed without cause, 29; per cent. of removals in classified and unclassified service in post-office at, 185.

Jessup, M. K., reports to Mayor Grant on street cleaning in New York, advises merit system, 220, 221.

Jewell, W. R., editor, appointed postmaster at Danville, Ill., 141; political worker, 160.

Jewett, appointed postmaster at Oregon, Ill., see Hitt, 109.

Jewett claim, and Elkins, 290.

Jewett, C. W., employe in Indian service, asked for political contributions, 385.

Johnson, chief of division, removed for political reasons by Coulter, 55.

Johnson, postmaster at San Antonio, a political worker, 159.

Johnson, Congressman, patronage of, 419.

Johnson, representative in Indiana legislature, opposes spoils methods in, 407.

Johnson, Pres. Andrew, and scramble for offices, 24; appoints Elkins U. S. dist. att'y in N. Mexico, 368; spoils since, 413, 414.

Johnson, C. F., editor, appointed consul-gen'l to Frankfort-on-the-Main, 301.

Johnson, C. H., see Baltimore investigation, 267, 268.

Johnson, E. A., negro, Harrison delegate from N. Carolina, 334.

Johnson, F. W., sale of office to by Porter, D. E., 154.

Johnson, G. W., P. O. employe, see Baltimore investigation, 296.

Johnson, H. C., letter advocating civil service reform to Postmaster Richensteen at L. I. City, 100.

Johnson, H. U., congressman elect, distributes patronage, 217.

Johnson, U. S., district attorney at N. York, takes part in political squabbles, 106, 198, 352, 371.

Johnson, J., U. S. district attorney, works for retention of Boyle, 142; U. S. dist. att'y at Brooklyn, N. Y., a political worker, 265; U. S. dist. att'y in New York convention, 335.

Johnson, J. B., on local examining board at Milwaukee, 103.

Johnson, J. H., on "The Merit System of Appointing City Officials," 162.

Johnson, J. H., conditionally refused access to records of removals in postal service, 163.

Johnson, J. H., distributes Curtis address of 1892, 329, 338.

Johnson, J. L., passes civil service examinations for incapable applicant, 238.

Johnson, Kan., Journalist Webster postmaster at, 149.

Johnson, M., revenue collector, bets on Harrison, 344.

Johnson, R. M., efficient postal employe at St. Louis, 131.

Johnson, T. B., collector at Charleston, S. C., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.

Johnson, W. J., postmaster at Manchester, Mass., removed after four years service, second commission unexpired, 187.

Johnson, W. W., politician, appointed postmaster at Baltimore, Md., 90; conducts factional fights, 121; removals under without cause, charges against filed, 137; political worker, 144, 357, 372, 373; works for Harrison in primaries at Baltimore, Md., 225, 226; makes clean sweep, testimony of before Roosevelt, 189, 254, 255; see Baltimore investigation, 267, 268, 277, 278, 296; Johnson faction at Baltimore, see Baltimore investigation, 295; in Maryland convention, 335; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 337, 347; and political assessment circular of civil service commission, 363; as a campaign fund raiser, 370.

Johnston, councilman of Indianapolis, supports Fire Chief Webster, 208.

Johnston, G. D., civil service commissioner, and political assessments, 358.

Johnston, G. D., civil service commissioner, and duties of federal employes, 384; does not favor rapid extension of classified service, 397.

Johnston, N. Y., Postmaster Murray of, fighting for good service in, 72.

Jones, Senator, supporter of Blaine, 344.

Jones, postmaster of Butler, Ind., political worker, 379, 380.

Jones, postmaster at Scranton, Pa., through influence of Congressman Scranton, 101.

Jones, A., postmaster at Indianapolis, 1; interview on giving up office, 5; removal deserved, 9; and special exam. at Indpls, spoilsman, 18; removals under, and Moore, gambler, 28; opposed to civ. service reform, 80; appointment of, condemned, 51.

Jones, G., proprietor N. Y. Times, enemy of spoils system, 254.

Jones, I. A., see Chemung Co., N. Y., 259.

Jones, J. W., journalist, postmaster at Barneveld, Wis., 155.

Jones, J. W., low politician; his "reforms," 183; journalist, postmaster at Oelrichs, S. Dak., 155.

Jones, "Long," works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 342.

Jonesville, Minn., Journalist Henry postmaster at, 149.

Jolley, G. W., U. S. dist. att'y in Kentucky, prosecutes federal office-holders for levying political assessments, 330.

Judson, postmaster of Prattsville, N. Y., insane through fear of loss of office, 415.

Julian, G. W., address of on civil service reform, 365, 367, 370, 375, 376; opposing Harrison, 386.

Justice, H., civil service reformer, closes his subscription to CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 350.

Kane, Pa., Postmaster Davis of, worker for Delamater, 134.

Kannett Square, Chester Co., Pa., applicants for postmaster of, 55.

Kansas, office-seekers in, 6; discontent over spoils, 15; Congressman Perkins of opposed to civil service reform, 35; changes in post-offices in, under Harrison and Cleveland, 55; political activity of federal officers in, 348, 382; political assessments in Indian service in, 384, 385.

Kansas City, Mo., postmaster of appoints relative Pres. Harrison his deputy, 84; per cent. of removals in classified and unclassified service in post-office at, 185.

Kaontz, postmaster at Lafayette Corners, Pa., worker for Delamater, 134.

Kaough, postmaster at Ft. Wayne, Ind., under Cleveland, political worker, 88.

Kaufman, Rev. W. H., on civil service reform, 83; on sentiment favoring civil service reform in Utah, 111, 317.

Kawanna, Ind., Editor Newton appointed postmaster at, 126.

Kcagh, T. B., Harrison delegate from N. Carolina, 334.

Kean, ex-Congressman, gets federal offices for police officers, 216.

Keating, J. P., disreputable politician, gets office through R. Croker, 309.

Keegan, G., fraudulent voting name, see New York City.

Keeller H., customs inspector, pays political assessments, 279.

Keenan, J., see Hill, 307.

Keepers, G. A., editor, postmaster at Beallsville, O., 301.

Kehoe, M., treasury agent, Harrison delegate to Minneapolis, 344.

Keisburg, J., appointed to office by Township Trustee Gold at Indianapolis, 146, 256.

Keith, P., postmaster at Strawberry Point, Iowa, veteran soldier, removed see Clarkson, 55.

Keller, J., custom-house employe at Philadelphia, political worker for Harrison, 301.

Kelley, councilman of Indianapolis, supports fire-chief Webster, 208.

Kelley, C., emigrant inspector, political worker for Harrison, 302.

Kelley, Pat., ward politician of Indianapolis, see Parnell Hall.

Keller, R., ward politician, see Indianapolis, 195.

Kellogg, L. E., journalist, postmaster at Waterville, Wash., 155.

Kellog, W. P., Coleman supersedes him in control of patronage in Louisiana, 71, 304; opposes Harrison at Minneapolis, 344, 346; and War-mouth in Louisiana, 374.

Kelly, Miss, daughter of Congressman Kelly, given office in Burlington, Kan., post-office, 188.

Kelly, H., Congressman, secures removal of Lockwood, postmaster at Burlington, Kan., and appointment of successor, Lane, 188.

Kemble, W. H., corrupt politician, see Quay, 106, 152; ally of Quay, and convicted, 270.

Kendallville, Ind., Standard (repub.), favors civil service reform, 83.

Kenealy, M. E., journalist, postmaster, at Sitka, Alaska, 155.

Kennedy, Congressman, condemns Quay, 156, 157.

Kennedy, C., railway mail clerk, in Iowa, a political worker, 260.

Kennedy, E. K., ward politician, see Kings Co., N. Y.

Kennett, Pa., Advance (repub.), the way to get office, 55.

Kenny, —, and census enumeration of New York City, 294.

Kent, N. Y., Postmaster Bennett of, a political worker, 162.

Kentucky, office-holders in, allowed to serve out terms, 73; Jolley, U. S. Dist. Att'y in, prosecutes federal office-holders, for levying political assessments, 330.

Kenyon, J. S., sec'y republican state committee of New York, 279; at Minneapolis, 344.

Keata, Iowa, Editor Smock, appointed postmaster at, 142.

Kercheval, S. A., corrupt politician rewarded with office, 83; worker for Harrison, 240.

Kerens, and Russell Harrison, 359; member of national republican committee, 363.

Kerens, R. C., and offices in Missouri, his influence, 22; and clients, 24; political workers for Harrison, 304.

Kern, J., state senator of Indiana, and spoils methods, 408.

Kerns, postmaster at Smethport, Pa., worker for Delamater, 134.

Kerr, state att'y, of Maryland, and political frauds in, 335.

Kerwin, M., editor, appointed collector internal revenue 2d New York district, 126; assisted at dinner to Clarkson, 245; collector in New York, a political worker, 265, 279; Minneapolis convention, 344.

Kessler, grocer, appointed postmaster at Short Hills, N. J., vice Goodrich, removed for political reasons, 386.

Kessler, J. B., journalist, postmaster at Ottawa, Kan., 149.

Ketcham, C. K., postmaster at Ditney, Ind., solicited for political contributions, 387, 392.

Kewanna, Ind., Editor Newton appointed postmaster at, 377.

Key West, Fla., custom-house at not classified; number of employes in, 277.

Keyes, Miss L. C., postmaster at Yonkers, N. Y., succeeded by politician, 150.

Keyes, W. R., journalist, postmaster at Mountain City, Tenn., 155.

Kidd, J. H., postmaster, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.

Kinzie, C. H., statistics collector, a political worker, 160.

Kiernan, J., inefficient census enumerator in N. Y. City, 294.

Kilshimer, J. B., employed in N. Y. custom-house, political worker, 108.

Kimball, see Baltimore investigation, 327, 328.

Kimmell, Louis, editor, appointed deputy U. S. marshal, 126.

King, sheriff, inefficient, at Indianapolis, 315.

King, A. E., and post-office at Baltimore, Maryland, 84.

King, D. H., reports to Mayor Grant on street-cleaning in New York; advises merit system, 220, 221.

King, S., efficient employe in township trustee's office at Indianapolis removed, 145, 256.

King, S. S., journalist, postmaster at Jasper, Minn., 149.

King, W., editor, supported by Congressman Cooper for postmaster of Danville, Ind., 398.

Kings Co., N. Y., republican general committee, account of fights over, 197, 198, 304; factional fight in among republicans at primaries, 264; political assessments made by chairman of republican committee of, 287; Nathan republican boss of, 352; and Harrison, Nathan controls, 354.

Kingsley, Ia., Postmaster Gasper of forced to resign, 165.

Kingston, Mo., Editor Spirely appointed postmaster at, 132.

Kiugston, N. Y., Hayes postmaster at, a political worker, 280; Woolren, postmaster of, political worker in New York, 336.

Kinley, E., ward politician, see New York City.

Kinmundy, Ill., Editor Lawson appointed postmaster at, 141.

Kinney, J. C., appointed postmaster at Hartford, Conn., through influence of Senator Hawley, 84, 90.

Kinsey, W. M., congressman aiding office-seekers, 15.

Kirkpatrick, J., democrat, nominated for postmaster at South Hadley Falls, Mass., through Congressman Wallace, 157.

Kirkus, Rev. W., favors clerical advocacy of civil service reform, 30, 48.

- Kirwin, J., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.
- Kissel, J., navy yard employe, in New York convention, 335.
- Kittery, Mc., spoils system in navy yard at, 145, 148; navy yard at, see Tracy and Reed, 153; work on war ships in navy yard at, for political reasons, 217.
- Klemme, W. H., postmaster in Winneshiek Co., Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Knapp, J. N., postmaster at Auburn, N. Y., worker for Platt, 143; chairman New York State Republican Committee, on Platt, 258; in N. Y. convention, 335.
- Knight, ex-Senator G. A., endorses Bush, political worker, 187.
- Knight, W. E., editor appointed postmaster at Grand View, Ind., 126, 377.
- Knightstown, Ind., Postmaster Sample resigns, see Congressman Browne, 118.
- Kniseley, worker for Harrison, appointed internal revenue collector, 377.
- Knowles, political worker, rewarded, see Higgins, Sen., 38.
- Kramer, C., appointed postmaster at Columbus, Neb., vice Hensley, forced to resign, 166.
- Kramer, W., candidate for sheriff, 179, 180.
- Kuhn, A., ward politician, see Indianapolis, 195.
- Kunzemann, J., disreputable politician, alderman New York City, 184.
- Labor, organizations of Buffalo, N. Y., support civil service reform, 228.
- Labor, and civil service reform, see Andrew, 331.
- Labor, and trades-unions of Indiana, demand non-partisan control of state charitable institutions, 201.
- Labor Signal favors non-partisan control of state charitable institutions, see Magee, 209, 215.
- Lacey, E. P., applicant for postmaster at Sullivan, Ind., 88.
- Lacey, S., wife of Editor Lacey appointed postmaster at Westcliffe, Colo., 148.
- La Cyge, Kan., Journalist Lane postmaster at, 149.
- Lafayette, Ind., Candidate Throckmorton for postmaster of, and Congressman Cheadle, 71; applicants for postmaster of, 84; Postmaster Smith of aids Michener and La Follette, 144; Postmaster Smith of a political worker, 153, 158, 377, 378; republican delegation of, and Harrison, favors Gresham, 240; worker for Harrison, 316; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 342, 379; P. O. employes of distribute campaign documents, 389.
- La Fayette, Ind., Courier (rep.) condemns spoils system, 76; opposed to congressional patronage, 83.
- Lafayette Corners, Pa., Postmaster Koontz at, worker for Delamater, 184.
- La Follette, candidate for congressman, defeated, 129; controls census service patronage, 293; candidate for congress, supported by Michener, 144, 377.
- La Grange, Ind., Editor Rerick appointed postmaster at, 126, 377.
- La Grange, Ind., Standard (repub.), patronage an evil, 83.
- Laird, A. J., postmaster, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Lake, David, corrupt politician, working for Congressman Wallace, nominated for U. S. Marshal, 132.
- Lamb, Ind., Simpson, postmaster of, political worker, 379.
- Lamb, W. H., old employe, appointed supt. of mails in St. Louis, 136.
- Lambert, Rev. H., pres. civil service reform association of Newton, Mass., 136; views of on present status of civil service reform criticised, 255; address of on influence of Clarkson and Wanamaker on civil service reform, 261.
- Lamont, candidate for postmaster at Apple River, Jo Daviess Co., Ill., 109.
- Lanark, Ill., candidates for postmaster of, Root given place, 109, 136.
- Lancaster, Cal., Journalist Drummond appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Lancaster, Pa., post-office at, see Brosius, 72.
- Lancaster Co., Pa., Sen. Cameron "accorded" collectorship of internal revenue in, 47.
- Lander, Wyoming, Journalist Wynn, postmaster at, 155.
- Lane, C. R., part of address of at annual meeting of Indiana Civil S. Ref. Assoc., 1889, 8; sec. Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, 108; on census enumeration in Indianapolis, 293.
- Lane, C. T., address of on school and civil service reform, 23.
- Lane, D. H., political worker for Quay, 299.
- Lane, E. C., journalist, postmaster at La Cyge, Kan., 149.
- Lane, J. A., signs petition for larger appropriation for civil serv. com., 102.
- Lane, J. L., federal employe, and political assessments, see Kentucky.
- Lane, S. M., appointed postmaster at Burlington, Kan., through influence of Congressman Kelly, vice Lockwood, removed, 188.
- Langdon, Gen., see Chemung Co., N. Y., 259.
- Langdon, C. J., letter to by Walcott on removal of Postmaster Flood, 312.
- Langham, chairman Indiana Co., Pa., republican committee, 133.
- Langham, P. J., postmaster at Hawley, Pa., removed on secret charges, 176.
- Langsdale, appointed postmaster at Greencastle, Ind., by President Arthur, 89.
- Langsdale, postmaster at Florence, Ind., political worker, 379.
- Langston, ex-congressman, reconciliation of with Mahone, in interest of Harrison, 240, 241.
- Langston, see Bowden, 162.
- Langston, ex-minister, supports Blaine, 340, 345.
- Langston, J. M., and Mahone, 52.
- Lanier, C., barber at White House, goes home to vote, 180.
- Lankford, W. F., appointed postmaster at Princess Anne, Md., vice Duer, removed for political reasons, 408.
- Lansdon, B. C., editor, appointed postmaster at Nebo, Ill., 141.
- Lansing, A. W., journalist, postmaster at Plattsburgh, N. Y., 155.
- La Porte, Pa., Journalist Cheney, postmaster at, 149.
- Larke, F. D., journalist, postmaster at Rogers City, Mich., 149.
- Larkin, T., see New York, factional fights in, 241.
- La Rue, postmaster at Colfax, Wash., forced to resign, 165.
- Latham, R., postmaster at Hunterstown, Ind., removed through influence of Postmaster Higgins; Dunton appointed, 362.
- Latz, chemist for Indianapolis board of health, 314.
- Laurel, Del., Smith, postmaster of, attempts bribery, 397, 401, 402.
- Laurel, Md., postmaster at, see Gorman, 38.
- Laurence, A. C., journalist, postmaster at Evansville, Minn., 149.
- Law, civil serv., and its friends exemplified in Indianapolis post-office, 26.
- Lawler, fellows in district of, made application for O'Donnell, 60.
- Lawler, T., local politician, opposed to Congressman Hitt, 109.
- Lawler, T. G., postmaster at Rockford, Ill., works for Hitt, 143.
- Lawrence Co. (Indiana), applicants from, 16.
- Lawrence, Kan., civil service reform association of, 239.
- Lawrenceburg, Ind., Lucas, postmaster of, political worker, 379.
- Lawrenceburg, Tenn., Journalist Schrader postmaster at, 155.
- Lawrenceville, Va., postmaster at removed through influence of Mahone, despite promise to contrary, 74.
- Lawshe, A. L., editor appointed postmaster at Xenia, Ind., 71, 126, 377; political worker, 379.
- Lawson, J. D., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Lawson, R. F., editor, appointed postmaster at Kinmundy, Ill., 141.
- Lea, H. C., ou patronage, 387; advocates civil service reform, denounces President Harrison's course with the civil service, 68; on pledges of reform of republican party, 92; opposed to Senator Quay, 95; open letter to President Harrison protesting against patronage of Quay, 111, 112; appeal of to voters against Quay and Delamater, 138.
- Leach, chief of division, removed for political reasons, see Coulter, 55.
- Leach, F. W., receiver of campaign levies, 134; republican politician in Pennsylvania, 361.
- League, National, of civil service reform associations, see National League.
- League, republican, convention at Syracuse, August, 1891, federal office holders at, 259.
- Learned, F. E., son of editor, appointed postmaster at Benson, Ill., 148.
- Leaycraft, W. H., political worker Candidate Benedict, 142; port warden at New York, political worker for Woodruff, 198; calls on Fassett, collector at N. Y. City, 258; political worker, 304; political "boss," 311; office-seeker, 332; "boss," given office by Harrison, 355, 371.
- Lebanon, N. H., brother of Churchill postmaster of, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Lee, E. C., "pull" of in N. Y. custom house, supported by Platt, appointed janitor, 258, 259; at Minneapolis convention, 343.
- Lee, J. E., negro, collector at Jacksonville, Fla., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Lee, L. W., postmaster at Neodesha, Kan., removed after four years' service, second commission unexpired, 187.
- Lee, M. C., inspector in N. Y. custom-house, political worker, 108.
- Leech, D., employed in N. Y. custom-house, political worker, 108.
- Leech, E. O., director of mint, works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 344.
- Leeds, J. W., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.
- Leeds, W. R., disreputable politician, nominated by Harrison for U. S. marshal in Pa., 216, 374; political worker for Quay, 270, 280; political worker for Harrison, 299, 300.
- Leet, "boss" in N. Y. custom-house, 191.
- Leffson, F., and Fassett, 265.
- Lehigh Co., Pa., control of patronage in, 47.
- Leighton, Pa., J. P. Smith postmaster at, removed for political reasons, 39.
- Lehlbach, Congressman, on house committee of civil service, 86; politician favored by administration, 180.
- Leibhardt, P., superintendent dead letter office, political worker, 382.
- Leland, C. Jr., federal officer, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Lemcke, state treasurer of Indiana and Sullivan, corrupt county clerk of Marion Co. (Indianapolis), 206.
- Lemon, G. E., pension claim agent and Raum, 130.
- Leua, Ill., Journalist Lewis appointed postmaster at, 126.
- Lenox, Iowa, Editor Van Houten appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Leonard, Editor, political worker for Blaine, 302.
- Leonard, A. H., republican in Louisiana and War-mouth, 362.
- Leonard, J. R., 96; appointment as deputy, see Ransdall, 80; relative of Ransdall gets office under, 244; federal employe, worker for Harrison, 362, 382.
- Leonard, W., federal office-holder, political worker for Harrison, 302, 378.
- Letter carriers, national convention of at Detroit, requests extension of civil service law to all free delivery cities, 253.
- Leupp, F. E., editor Good Government, 357.
- Levan, L. D., appointed postmaster at Wilson, N. Y., 39; removal of, 45.
- Leverett, G. V., civil service reformer of Cambridge, Mass., 204.
- Levy, Indian agent at Yankton, removed, 98.
- Levy, B. A., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.
- Lewis, assemblyman 21st district in New York City, 75.
- Lewis, C. A., distributes Curtis address (1892) in Indiana, 338.
- Lewis, C. S., officer Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, 108.
- Lewis, E. B., journalist, postmaster at New Holland, O., 149.
- Lewis, F. A., asst. supt. of Society for Prevention of Crime in N. Y. City, see Tammany, 317.
- Lewis, J., customs inspector, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Lewis, J. A., applicant for postmastership at Martinsville, Ind., 399.
- Lewis, M. M., journalist, appointed postmaster at Lena, Ill., 126.
- Liberty, Tex., Journalist Chambers, postmaster at, 155.
- Lieber, Albert, ward politician, see Indianapolis, 195.
- Liggett, C. F., journalist, appointed postmaster at Chivington, Col., 141.
- Lincoln, Abraham, Pres., on evils of spoils system, 25; gives Cameron secretaryship of war in return for political aid; dismisses him, 34, 64; and civ. service reform, 76; see Welsh, 161; opposed to removals to make place for friends (1846), 211; promises of to the soldiers, 220, 274; on dangers of the spoils system, 56, 329, 367.
- Lincoln, G., postmaster at Cedar Rapids, Ia., political worker, 370.
- Lincoln Independent Republican committee of Pennsylvania condemns Quay and Delamater, 156, 161.
- Lincoln, Neb., Gere, editor, appointed postmaster at, 108; Gere, postmaster of, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Lincoln, R. T., 15; and anti-Quay republicans, see Welsh, 161; not a candidate in 1892, 340; U. S. minister to England, political worker, 382, 389.
- Lind, congressman, on house committee on civ. service, 86.
- Lindemuth, representative in Indiana legislature, opposes spoils methods, 407.
- Lindley, pension examiner in Indiana, at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- Lindsey, T., political worker for Harrison, 299.
- Lindsley, J. G., ex-congressman, political worker for Platt, 265.
- Lingenfelser, H., see Baltimore investigation, 326, 327, 328.
- Lineville, Iowa, Editor Austin appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Linton (Ind.) Call condemns opposition to Magee bill, see also Magee, 209.
- Lippincott, Judge, trying fraudulent election officers, see also Hudson Co., N. Y., 200.
- Lipscomb, P., son of journalist, postmaster at St. George, W. Va., 155.
- List of eligibles, see Eligibles, 48.
- Litchman, C. H., political worker, rewarded, 39; treasury agent, a political worker, 179.
- Lititz, Pa., post-office at, see Brosius, 72.
- Little Bat, Indian chief, and rising at Pine Ridge S. Dak., 218.
- Little Wound, Indian chief, and Indian rising at Pine Ridge S. Dak., 218.
- Littlejohn, G. W., journalist, postmaster at Grayson, Ky., 149.
- Llano, Tex., Journalist Galson, postmaster at, 155.
- Loane, see Baltimore investigation, 278.
- Lock, R. D., postmaster, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Lockport, N. Y., twenty federal offices in Niagara Co. filled with republicans, 30; Mayor Oliver of, spoilsman, and N. Y. civil service commission, 34; rival candidates for postmaster of; Ward, editor, and Politician Merritt, supported by Senator Hiscock, 216; federal offices of controlled by Hiscock, 259.
- Lockwood, E. M., postmaster at Burlington, Kan., removed through influence of Congressman, Kelly, 188.

- Loda, Ill., Editor Weaver appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Lodge, H. C., congressman, spoilsman, 30; obtains office for political worker, 39; evils of patronage system, un-American, speech at Lowell, July 4, 1879, 39; evil of patronage; heading to CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, Aug., 1889, 41; letter of to, Civ. Service Record on civ. service reform, 69; controls patronage of Charleston navy yard, 69; and Boston custom house, 71; bill of regulating appointments of fourth-class postmasters, 115; votes aid to civil service commission, 119; bill of to regulate appointment of fourth-class postmasters, 120; and spoils in navy yard at Charleston, 153; supports civil service law, 122, 168, 169; urges extension of civil service reform, 192; upholds civil service commission; exposes Grosvenor, 203, 204; bill of for selection of fourth-class postmasters on basis of merit, 238; bill of providing for non-partisan appointment of fourth-class postmasters, commended, 321; on civil-service reform under Harrison and Cleveland, 376.
- Logan, Senator, spoilsman, 413.
- Logan, O., Journalist Pursell postmaster at, 119, 301.
- Logan, R. W., Harrison delegate from N. Carolina, 334.
- Logansport, Ind., D. W. Tomlinson recommended as postmaster of, 88; Postmaster Tomlinson of, a political worker, 153, 158, 260, 377; federal officers work for Harrison at, 316.
- Logansport, Ind., Journal favors civ. service reform, 83; Journal bought by supporters of Harrison, including Postmaster Tomlinson, 260.
- Logansport (Ind.) Pharos, condemns opposition to Magee bill, see also Magee, 209.
- Loman, G. W., journalist, postmaster at Chase, Kan., 148.
- Long, deputy postmaster of Vevay, Ind., political worker, 379.
- Long, member national republican committee, and political assessments, 382, 383.
- Loesch, John, political worker, see Karr, 160.
- Long, G. I., journalist, appointed postmaster at Manson, Iowa, 142.
- Long, J. D., ex-gov. Mass., signs petition for larger appropriation for civil serv. com., 102.
- Long, W., councilman of Indianapolis, low politician, 206.
- Long Island City, N. Y., Postmaster McKenna of, removed for political reasons, 45; removal of McKenna, postmaster of, Richenstien appointed, 54; Postmaster Richenstien of, 100; Postmaster McKenna of, removed on secret charges, 175.
- Loomis, F. M., address of Central Labor Union, of Buffalo, N. Y., controversy with Buffalo Evening News on civil service reform, 44; weakening influence of office holding, 75.
- Lorenz, P. O. employe at Indianapolis, see Indianapolis investigation, 411.
- Lorimer, "Billy," recommends O'Donnell, 59.
- Louisburg, Kan., Journalist Cadwallader postmaster at, 149.
- Louisiana, see Warmouth, patronage of, conflict over, see Kellogg, 71; patronage of given to Warmouth, collector at New Orleans, 241; federal patronage in used for re-nomination of Harrison, 304; political activity of federal officers in, 315, 346, 348, 357, 383, 384; political assessments in, 383.
- Louisville Commercial (repub.), civ. service reform beneficial to party discipline, 65.
- Lourie, postmaster at Portland, Ind., removed, 46.
- Louthan, C. M., deputy int. rev. coll., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Love, J., candidate, views of on patronage; office-brokerage, 23; defeated candidate and sale of offices, see "Sale of Offices," 32, 99.
- Love, J. W., employed in N. Y. custom-house, a political worker, 108.
- Loveland, state senator of Indiana, opposes spoils methods, 408.
- Loving, J. T., postmaster at Richmond, Va., removed for political reasons, 21.
- Low, ex-gov., indorses Bush, political worker, 187.
- Low, E. B., political worker, appointed postmaster at Westport, N. Y., through influence of Congressman Weaver, 249.
- Low, J., collector at Suspension Bridge, N. Y., through influence of Hiscock, 259; customs collector at Suspension Bridge, N. Y., a political worker, 265.
- Low, W. G., offers prize for essay on civil service reform, 308.
- Lowe, representative in Indiana legislature, and spoils methods in, 407.
- Lowe, C., P. O. employe, political worker, 302, 378.
- Lowell, J. R., on evils of spoils system, in address of Cambridge and Boston Civil Service Reform Associations, 77; civil service reformer, 204; opposed to spoils system, 254.
- Lowell, Mrs. J. S., in charge of examination for police matron at N. York, see Maloney.
- Lowell (Mass.) Courier (repub.) declares Sen. Blair, of New Hampshire, not a good republican for denouncing civil service reform, 65.
- Lowery, Judge, levies political assessments, 287.
- Lowes, J. E., political worker in Ohio, 280.
- Lowrey, B. J., journalist, postmaster at Howard City, Mich., 149.
- Lowrey, J. E., asks political contributions from Ohio employes in Washington departments, 280.
- Lowry, postmaster at Portland, Ind., removed; Marsh appointed through influence of Browne, 88.
- Lowry, congressman, nomination of, 37.
- Lowry, federal employe, and printing office, 231.
- Lozier, chaplain, political worker, 389.
- Lucas, Rev., thinks civ. service reform a humbug, 73.
- Lucas, postmaster of Lawrenceburg, Ind., political worker, 379.
- Lucas, bank president, gambles in stocks with Wanamaker, 246.
- Ludell, Kan., Journalist Chase postmaster at, 149.
- Luke, A. M., postmaster at Jeffersonville, Ind., removed by Cleveland, reappointed by Harrison, 88.
- Lush, R., ward politician, see New York City.
- Lush, R. M., at Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Lusk, V. S., political worker for Harrison in North Carolina, 334.
- Lu Verne, Ia., Postmaster Harrison of a political worker, 260.
- Lyford, book commissioner for New Hampshire, 143.
- Lyman, civil service commissioner and special examiner at Indianapolis, 18, 49, 81, 372; and R. R. mail service, 21; unfit, allows postmaster at Milwaukee to ignore civil service law, 103; and political assessments, 358; and duties of employes, 384; report of, 397.
- Lynch, A. F., see Quay, 106.
- Lynch, J. R., negro, 4th auditor of treasury, political worker, 47; 4th auditor of the treasury, delegate for Harrison at Minneapolis, 337, 339, 343, 344, 345.
- Lynch, T. M., worker for Flower, appointed port warden, career of, 319.
- Lyon, C. D., editor, appointed postmaster at Milo, Iowa, 142.
- Lyon, G. W., appointed by Pres. Harrison surveyor of Port of Brooklyn, N. Y., 55; supports Platt faction, 183; and Fassett, collector at, 258; in New York convention, 334; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 343.
- Lyon, W., U. S. attorney, active politician, works for Delamater, 143; supporter of Quay, suspected by Harrison, 299.
- Lyon, W. C., editor, formerly postmaster at Newark, O., 301.
- MacCourt, P. C., removed by Sec'y Windom, appeals to Pres. Harrison, 51.
- MacDonald, W. A., recommended by Congressman Cheadle, 84.
- MacDuffy, Rev. M. V., on civil service reform, 83.
- MacGovern, supports Gillette for postmaster at Hartford, Conn., 84.
- MacGovern, "Pat," and Hartford, Conn., postmaster-ship, 99.
- MacGowan, Capt. A. B., denies charges against Indian Agent McChesney, 130.
- MacGregor, Capt. J. G., so-called resignation of, 216.
- MacKnight, Rev. Dr. W. J., on civil service reform, 83.
- MacNeal, street car company and ordinance, bribery used against, 207.
- MacVeagh, W., ex-attorney general, on Mahone in Virginia, 31; to examine management of civil service, 77; on committee of National League to investigate congressional patronage, 115; on committee of National League to investigate patent office, 139, 140, 141; on committee of National League, investigating presidential post-offices, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166; on committee of National League, reporting on removals on secret charges, 175, 176, 177; on committee of National League, reports on political changes in presidential post-offices, 188; and Quay, 245; and defalcation made by Quay, 252; on official committee of National League investigating census service, 291, 295.
- Macaulay, "Dan" treasury employe, political worker, 362.
- Macaulay, T., Lord, 228.
- Macdonough, A. R., on committee investigating N. Y. City civil service, 319, 320.
- Mace, J. A., editor, appointed postmaster at Saybrook, Ill., 141.
- Mack, chairman Iowa State Republican Committee, makes political assessments, 240.
- Macy, Ind., Editor Euyart appointed postmaster at, 126, 377.
- Madison, James, on abuse of civil service by Presidents, 17, 29; letter to, from Thomas Jefferson opposing spoils system, 45, 46; advises impeachment of any President making removals for political reasons, 62; on removals, 115.
- Madison, Ind., spoils system in town government of, 331.
- Madison Co., Ind., appointments from, 71.
- Madison, Wis., census of 1890 not well conducted in, postmaster of controls census patronage, 293.
- Magee, C. L., opposed to Quay, 280, 353; allies with Quay, 299; and Quay reconciled, 361, 363.
- Magee, J. H., and CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 110, 356.
- Magee, R., favors civ. service reform, 80; state senator of Indiana, bill of, for non-partisan control of state charitable institutions, opposition to and support of, defeated, 201, 202, 208, 209, 210, 214, 215; speech of, at dinner to Roosevelt, 227, 229; and spoils methods, 408.
- Magone, collector and office-seekers, 38; political assessments under, 97; secures appointment of
- Ducy as head of custom civ. service at New York, 150; removals under, 183.
- Mahan, John, editor, appointed postmaster at Muscatine, 46.
- Mahany, R. B., U. S. minister to Ecuador, political worker, 382.
- Mahin, E., editor, appointed postmaster at Clinton, Iowa, 126.
- Mahone, W., a spoilsman, 5, 35, 43, 45, 171, 211, 227, 289, 350, 369, 376, 387, 413; patronage of Virginia given to by Pres. Harrison, 27, 28, 41, 52, 56, 67, 72, 94, 111, 138, 172, 173, 174; history of political career of, 31; secures appointment of J. G. Watts as U. S. marshal, 38; assisted by republican national committee, gets control of Virginia patronage, 38; exercised patronage of Virginia with disastrous effects, 67, 68; and election in Virginia, 70; and postmastership at Lawrenceville, Va., 74; methods of condemned, 75; and civil service commission, 86; controls Petersburg, Va., 1882, 87, 111, 138; blackmailing system of, 228; conspires with Gorman, 231; Pres. Harrison responsible for failure to prosecute, 237; reconciliation of with ex-Congressman Langston, in interest of Harrison, 240, 241; course of prosecution against agents of, for political assessments, 281, 282; "blackmailers," trial and acquittal of, 305, 376; deserts Harrison, 332; "blackmailers," and Judge Bradley, 357, 358; and election of Harrison, 370, 413.
- Mahoney, Tom, ward politician of Indianapolis, see Parnell Hall.
- Mahopac Falls, N. Y., Postmaster Agar of, a political worker, 162.
- Mail service, railway, see railway mail service.
- Maine, senators fight over spoils, 22; democrats holding four-year offices being retained, 73; patronage of, see Boutelle, 157; political activity of federal office-holders in, 364.
- Mair, G. B., journalist, postmaster at Calloway, Neb., 149.
- Malden, Mass., civil service reform association of, 239.
- Malone speech of Pres. Harrison, 357.
- Malone, M., worker for ex-Judge Rooney and Congressman Wallace, given office, 143.
- Maloney, J., employe in Indianapolis insane hospital, low character, 314.
- Mamer, collector, political worker in Illinois, 335.
- Manchester, Mass., Postmaster Johnson of, removed after four years' service; second commission unexpired, 187.
- Manchester, N. H., Postmaster Piper of, active politician, 143.
- Manchester (N. H.), Republican, civil service reform a humbug, 50.
- Manchester, Vt., Journalist Simonds postmaster at, 155.
- Manderson, Senator, and applicants from Nebraska, 6; and Lincoln, Neb., post-office, 72; secures appointment of Gere, editor, as postmaster at Lincoln, Neb., 108.
- Maneely, W., fraudulent voter, see Martin.
- Manker, Coroner, at Indianapolis, 314, 315.
- Manley, J., appointed postmaster at Augusta, Me., 38; chairman state republican committee, 150; congressional candidate opposing Burleigh, and non-delivery of papers advocating Burleigh, 364; resigns, 371; confers with Quay, 390.
- Mann, —, census supervisor in West Virginia, spoilsman, 293.
- Mann, G. H., appointed through Quay, removed, 160.
- Mannfield, Fla., Editor Miles appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Mannheim, Pa., politician appointed postmaster at, 12, 72.
- Manning, ward politician, see Buffalo, N. Y.
- Manning, D., Sec'y, promotes MacGregor, removed by Sec'y Foster, 216; and Maynard, 310; recommends appointment of Graves as chief of bureau of printing and engraving, 368.
- Mansfield, postmaster at Gloucester, Mass., 362.
- Manson, Iowa, Journalist Long, appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Manson, M. D., efficient internal revenue collector in Indiana, removed for political reasons, 59; letter of President Harrison to, 77; removal of, 94.
- Maplewood, N. H., Craft, postmaster of, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Marche, T., acting supt. free delivery service, letter to, from Murray postmaster at Johnston, N. Y., 72.
- Marcy, Governor, and the civil service, 125; "spoils," 270, 271.
- Mare Island, Cal., navy yard at, patronage of given to ward bosses, 226.
- Marietta, O., Editor Alderman postmaster of, 301.
- Marietta, Pa., post office at, see Brosius, 72.
- Marine, S. A., editor, appointed pension agent, 126.
- Marine, W. M., collector at Baltimore, see Baltimore investigation, 326, 327, 328; political worker, 354, 389.
- Mariou, Ind., Gant, postmaster of, at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- Marion, Ind., Chronicle [repub.], favors civil service reform, 83.
- Marion, Ohio, Independent, son of editor of gets federal office, 301.
- Marion Club [repub.], of Indianapolis, 362.
- Marion Co., Ind., local politics and career of corrupt politicians in, see Indianapolis; office-seekers in rewarded, 88; 50 applicants for jani-

- torship of court-house of, 185; medical society condemns appointment of Dr. Elbert as pension examiner vice Stone removed, 192; medical society of endorses Magee bill for non-partisan control of state charitable institutions, see Magee, 201, 210.
- Markey, T., councilman of Indianapolis, low politician, methods of, 53, 195, 196, 206, 316; supports Fire Chief Webster, 208.
- Marlatt, W. P., P. O. employe, see Indianapolis investigation, 111.
- Marriott, J. H., see Baltimore investigation, 278.
- Marsh, P. O. employe, of New Albany, Ind., at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- Marsh, bank president, and stock fraudulently issued to Wanamaker, 246.
- Marsh, C. T., postmaster at Oregon, Ill., removed after four years' service, second commission unexpired, 187.
- Marsh, E. J., editor, appointed postmaster at Portland, Ind., 46, 88, 126; political worker, 377, 380.
- Marsh, W. C., postmaster at Aurelia, Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Marshall, T., government contractor, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Martin, editor, postmaster at Port Clinton, O., 301.
- Martin, Congressman, favors selection of postmasters by vote, 399; bill of to limit term of federal employes to four years, 401; patronage of, 411, 419, 420.
- Martin, C., political worker against Chase, 353.
- Martin, D., low politician, Sen. Quay obtains appointment of, as collector internal revenue, 30, 351; agt. of Sen. Quay, resolutions, 49; confers with Quay, 183; aids Quay to ruin ballot reform bill in Pa. legislature, 228, 229; political freebooter, 232, 233, 239, 361, 370, 388; resigns internal revenue collectorship at Philadelphia, 241; political worker for Quay, 280, 299, 300, 361, 374; member for Pennsylvania of republican national committee, 347.
- Martin, D. W., postmaster at Oakford, Ind., succeeded by Crousore, latter removed, Martin reappointed, 96.
- Martin, H., post-office employe in Baltimore investigation, 268, 277, 295, 296.
- Martin, J., politician, see Tammany, 318, 319.
- Martinsville, Ind., Dryden postmaster of, political worker, 380; J. A. Lewis and J. Duncan applicants for postmastership of, 399.
- Marvin, U. S. commissioner, testifies to worth of Barrio, removed P. O. inspector, 298.
- Maryland, see also Platforms, Conventions; Senator Quay in, 28; civ. service in under Cleveland, 15, 63; federation of republican clubs in 3d district of, and reform pledges of republican platform, 63; effort to loosen Sen. Gorman's hold on, meets with some success, 70; statistics of election of '89 in, 70; ballot reform in, see Gorman, 87; patronage of, given to Gorman, 93, 111, 236, 237; Roosevelt before civil service reform association of, 132; republican clubs and Clarkson, 154; republican factions in, 189; boss-ridden, 219; state and federal patronage of controlled by Gorman under Cleveland, by republican machine under Harrison, 254; 1890 census well conducted in part of, 292; under Cleveland given over to spoils, 282; spoil given to Higgins in, 314; Bonaparte on political corruption in, 317, 324; political activity of, federal officers in, 335, 337, 347, 348, 363, 370; political assessments levied on federal office-holders from, 391.
- Maryland, civil service reform association of, letter to by G. W. Curtis, 103; resolutions of condemning congressional patronage, 136; requested to investigate political activity of federal officers, 219.
- Mason, ex-mayor of Vineland, N. J., refutes charges against Brewsterly, removed postmaster at Vineland, 39.
- Mason, Congressman, and Chicago post-office, 22.
- Mason, A. B., on committee investigating N. Y. City civil service, 319, 320.
- Mason, G. H., P. O. employe in N. Y. convention, 335.
- Mason, J. W., commissioner of internal revenue, and the offices, 21; active politician, 159, 180.
- Maspeth, L. I., postmaster at, removed to make room for politician, see Mooney, 39.
- Mass, J., federal employe, in N. Y. convention, 335.
- Massachusetts, civil service commission of, see Civil service commission of; see also Platforms, Conventions; civ. service law of, see Civ. service law; merit system in, 45, 52; civil service reform in, under Cleveland, 63; congressmen of, and congressional patronage, 93; petition circulated in for larger appropriation for civil service commission, 93; legislature of favors civil service reform in navy yards, 93, 274; result of elections of 1890, to strengthen civil service reform cause, 173; civil service reform in use in state and city offices in, 212; young men's republican club of recognize civil service reform as leading issue, 219; reform club of H. Welsh speaks before, on Indian service removals, 219; examination papers used in state census service of, 219, 220; reform club of gives dinner to Corse, 251; methods used by state of, in collecting statistics, 291; 1890 census well conducted in, 292; labor service system recommended by Congressman Andrew 306; labor service in, 321; political activity of federal office-holders in, 334, 362; congressmen of request retention of Corse postmaster at Boston, 367.
- Massachusetts Civ. Service Reform Ass'n and Pres. Harrison, 92; starts petition for larger appropriation for civil serv. commission, 102; condemns removal of Corse, postmaster at Boston, see also Civil Service Record, 213; resolutions of, 1892, 398.
- Massey, G. V., federal officer, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Mastlin, J., editor, appointed postmaster at Shannon, Ill., 141.
- Mathers, deputy U. S. marshal in Indiana, political worker, 380.
- Mathews, delegate from Dakota dictates appointments in his territory, 30.
- Mathias, J., P. O. employe, see Indianapolis investigation, 411.
- Matson, congressman, secures appointment of postmaster at Plainfield, Ind., 30; in document No. 2 of Ind. Civil Service Reform Association, 30; henchmen work for renomination, 37.
- Matthews, A., praises CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 110.
- Matthews, Asa, appointed first comptrollership of the treasury, 21; and printing office, 284; political worker in Illinois, 335.
- Matthews, A. L., P. O. employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Matthews, C., governor-elect of Indiana, and office-seekers, 405.
- Matthews, "Johnny," gambler, friend of police justice Divver, 184.
- Matthews, S. S., deputy postmaster at Winona, Miss., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344, 348.
- Matthews, T. B., deputy coll. int. rev., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Matthews, W. H., negro, deputy collector internal revenue in Georgia, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Matthews, W. S., sec'y state republican executive committee, Ohio, and political assessments, 280.
- Maxwell land grant, and Elkins, 290, 369.
- May, Colonel, politician, and post-office at Rochelle, Ill., 109.
- May, Pa., postmaster at, see Brosius, 72.
- May, Rev. J., spoils system, immoral, 55; on Quayism, 162.
- Mayers, J. T., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 331.
- Mayfield, A. W., journalist, postmaster at Elmwood, Neb., 149.
- Maynard, J. H., deputy att'y-gen. of New York, and Dutchess Co., N. Y., election frauds, 306; corrupt worker for Hill, appointed appellate judge by Flower; career of, 309, 310.
- Mayo, Commodore, commandant navy yard at Norfolk, Va., 147.
- Mayors of cities of N. Y., and N. Y. civil service commission, 34.
- Mayse, W., authorized to receive political subscriptions, 179.
- Maywood, J., journalist, postmaster at Bad Axe, Mich., 149.
- McAdam, Judge, buys nomination of Tammany, 184.
- McAlister, R., political worker and briber, 134.
- McAlpin, E. A., appointed postmaster at Sing Sing, N. York, in reward of party services, 108; at convention republican league, 259; president of N. Y. state league of republican clubs, at Minneapolis convention, 344.
- McCain, G. W., efficient officer, removed from police service at Indianapolis, see Equally divided politically, 220, 228.
- McCarren, P. H., ward politician of Brooklyn, N. Y., 263; East River Bridge, bill of scandal of, 317.
- McCarthy, J. J., customs inspector, active politician, 179.
- McCarthy, J., nominee of Congressman Banks, superseded by nominee of Congressman Lodge, 39.
- McCanley, J. C., postmaster at Searcy, Ark., removed after four years' service, second commission unexpired, Rogers appointed, 187.
- McCaull, P. H., int. rev. coll., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- McChesney, Dr. C. E., Indian agent, false charges against, 130, 218.
- McClellan, Congressman, patronage of, 422.
- McClellan, L., office-seeker in Indiana Senate, 407.
- McClelland, councilman of Indianapolis, spoilsman and low politician, 207.
- McClung, D. W., relative of Pres. Harrison, appointed collector internal revenue First Ohio district, 30.
- McClure, C. M., appointment of, charges of favoritism regarding, refuted by Roosevelt, 266, 267.
- McClure, D., recommends "Paddy" Divver for police justice, 184.
- McComas, Congressman, upholds civil service law, 125; upholds civil service commission, 203.
- McComas, member of national republican committee, 363.
- McConnellsville (O.) Herald, editor of appointed to federal office, 301.
- McCoy, S. M., political worker for Cuney, 159.
- McCreery, C., given office by Gold, township trustee at Indianapolis, 256.
- McCulloch, Rev. O. C., an independent, 313.
- McDaniel, Lock, political worker for Cuney, 159.
- McDonald, fish commissioner, gets civil service law extended to fish commission, 332.
- McDonald, Ex-Senator, on permanence of political issues, 214; his place in politics, 244.
- McDonald, Kan., Journalist Sedgwick postmaster at, 149.
- McDonald, R. T., opposed to Harrison, 303; appeals to Clarkson against political activity of federal officers, 317, 362; ou political activity of federal office-holders in Indiana, 379.
- McDonough, C., ward politician, see Buffalo, N. Y., 196.
- McDougal, C., ex-U. S. marshal in N. Y., calls on Fassett, collector at N. Y. City, 258.
- McDowell, congressional candidate bribes, 151.
- McElvaine, W. J., editor, given office by Governor Foraker, 301.
- McFarlane, low politician, 54, 94, 96, 112.
- McFarland, H., appointed in government printing-office, totally unfit, 34; henchman, 35; disreputable politician, 138, 173, 181; federal office-holder, a political worker, 269, 378, 382.
- McGill, J., worker at Minneapolis convention, 343.
- McGinness, W. T., postmaster at Minden, Ncb., forced to resign, 166.
- McGoogle, Dr., appointed postmaster at Arcola, Ind., vice Rockhill, removed through influence of Postmaster Higgins, 362.
- McGrew, federal employe and printing office, 231.
- McGroarty, J., port warden of Brooklyn, N. Y., career of, 319.
- McGroarty, N., anti-Harrison man "placated," 347.
- McHenry, Ill., Editor Van Slyke appointed postmaster at, 141.
- McHugh, State Senator of Indiana, spoilsman, 408.
- McIntosh, J., letter to regarding Kingsley, Ia., post-office, see Gasper, 165.
- McIntyre, representative in Indiana legislature, opposes spoils methods, 407.
- McKain, A. A., part of address at annual meeting of Indiana Civil S. Ref. Assoc., 1889, 8.
- McKane, J. Y., corrupt politician working for Congressman Wallace, 132; low politician in New York, given patronage, 352.
- McKay, N., presents "San Domingo" cutlass to Fassett, collector at N. Y. City, "to be used in beheading democrats," 258.
- McKean, appointed postmaster at Pittsburg, Pa., through influence of Quay, 90; spoilsman, 133.
- McKee, F., relative of Pres. Harrison appointed deputy collector of customs at Port Townsend, 30.
- McKelvey, state senator of Indiana, spoilsman, 407, 408.
- McKenna, Congressman J., secures removal of Mrs. McKinley, 90.
- McKenna, J. A., postmaster at Long Island City, removed despite protests and petitions, 45, 54; removed on secret charges, 175.
- McKenzie, A., controls patronage in N. Dakota, 216.
- McKiuley, Mrs. L. W., postmistress at Winters, Cal., removed through influence of McKenna, 90.
- McKinley, W., political workers of rewarded, 52; platform of, 105; favors civil service commission, 119; thanked by Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, 120; supports civil service law, 124, 168, 169; fulfillment of party pledges, 168; holds competitive examinations for candidates for West Point, 254, 262; candidate for governor of Ohio, 280; political assessments for, 287; vote for in Minneapolis convention, 340, 343; tariff bill of in Louisiana, 345.
- McKnight bill, passage of, see Tammany, 317.
- McLain, J. R., journalist, postmaster at Della Plain, Tex., 155.
- McLaughlin, applicant for postmastership at Franklin, Ind., 88.
- McLaughlin, inspector in police department, examiner of police at Brooklyn, N. Y., 222.
- McLaughlin, political boss, 132, 318, 319, 411; patronage of in N. Y. state offices, 215; boss of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Croker, 245; and Hill, 309, 356; Hill gives Brooklyn bridge patronage to, 350; deals with Nathan, 352.
- McLean, A., given office by Tammany; career of, 355.
- McLean, D., politician, delegate to republican national convention, appointed general appraiser port of N. Y., 30; becomes political worker, 108.
- McMackin, J., custom-house employe in N. Y. City, a political worker, 279.
- "McMains" charges against Elkins, 291.
- McManes, J., 30; and appointment of Martin, disreputable politician, as collector of internal revenue in Penn., 232, 233, 241, 351, 374.
- McMillan, Senator, controls federal office-holders in Michigan, 335; supporter of Blaine, 344, 346.
- McMillin, Congressman, and civil service law, 124.
- McMullen, representative in Indiana legislature, and spoils methods in, 407.
- McMullin, C. A., journalist, postmaster at Benedict, Kan., 148.
- McNagney, Congressman, patronage of, 410, 422.
- McNew, J., clerk in Indiana Senate, 408.
- McNulta, Gen'l, attributes republican demoralization in Illinois to Harrison's use of patronage, 240.
- McNutt, A., P. O. employe, see Indianapolis investigation, 411.
- McPheeters, postmaster of Bloomington, Ind., at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- McPherson, controls patronage in Penn., 81.
- McQuinn, B., postmaster in Benton Co., Ia., a political worker, 260.
- McVickar, Rev. W. M., favors clerical recognition of civ. service reform, 40.
- McWhinney, T. A., political worker in New York, 264.
- Meacham, F. L., journalist, appointed postmaster at Plainview, Miss., 126.

- Meade, C. W., police justice, in New York convention, 334.
- Melrose, W. H., journalist, postmaster at Eskridge, Kan., 149.
- Memphis, Tenn., census of 1890 well conducted in, 292; Patterson, postmaster of, celebrates re-nomination of Harrison, 347.
- Merit system, in fighting trim, 25; and individual manhood, 256.
- Merrill, Col., endorsed by Harrison's regiment, 89.
- Merritt, H. F., consul, removed for political reasons, 371.
- Merritt, J. A., politician, supported by Senator, Hiscock for postmaster at Lockport, N. Y., 216.
- Merser, G. A., on committee of National League to investigate political assessments, 338.
- Meschert, removed on suspicion of being disloyal to Harrison, 300.
- Messerne, C. F., officer in Indian service, asked for political contribution, 385.
- Metcalf, Dr., of Indiana State Board of Health, inefficient, 315, 316.
- Metcalf, appraiser at port of St. Louis, active politician, 143.
- Metzger, R., republican politician, on political activity of federal office-holders in Indianapolis, 378.
- Meyer, H. A., Nathan's candidate for mayor of Brooklyn, 287.
- Michener, L. T., chairman Indiana Republican State Committee, uses 4th class post offices to make republican machine, 67; obtains removal of Sniffali, postmaster at Freedom, Ind., and appointment of Watts, 112; and Harrison, 121, 354; attorney-general of Indiana, controls federal patronage of, 144, 173, 377, 378; politician, partner of Dudley, 189; worker for Harrison at Minneapolis, 337, 340, 342, 345.
- Michigan, Editor J. B. Stone appointed collector internal revenue 1st district of, 30; distribution of spoils in, by the democrats, results in defeat, 45; political activity of federal office-holders in, 335, 348, 390.
- Middlefield, O., Journalist Murdock postmaster at, 149.
- Middleton, A. R., negro, Harrison delegate from N. Carolina, 334.
- Middleton, D. C., chairman Jefferson Co., N. Y., republican committee levies political assessments, 392.
- Middleton, J. H., postmaster at West Hoboken, N. J., removed and no reasons given, Klumpp appointed, 176.
- Miles, Genl., on Indian abuses, 182; and Indian rising at Pine Ridge, S. Dak., 218.
- Miles, G. E., editor, appointed postmaster at Mannfield, Fla., 141.
- Milholland, J. E., chief inspector of immigration at New York, assists at dinner to Clarkson, 245; at convention of Republican League, 259; political worker, 265; federal employe, removed for political activity, 332, 334.
- Miller, A. J., office-holder, a political worker, 162.
- Miller, J., postmaster at Utica, N. Y., a political worker, 266.
- Miller, S. D., son of att'y-general, gets office, 242; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 339, 346.
- Miller, T., congressional candidate, offers bribes, 162.
- Miller, T. A., postmaster at Tuscaloosa, Ala., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Miller, T. C., physician, son of and competitive examinations for West Point, see Warwick.
- Miller, Warner, heads political faction, 75, 264, 353, 354; faction of, opposed to Platt, 259, 260; and Harrison, 337, 347; "placation" of, 360, 361.
- Miller, Attorney-Gen., appointees must be good men and republicans, 25, 35; and office-seekers, 37; rules of for appointment, 44; innendo of Delphi Journal, 85; goes home to vote, 180; an independent in 1872; denounces Pres. Grant, 191, 192; and fraudulent cartage bids at N. Y. custom house, 216; and G. B. Raum, Jr., 228; and printing office, 234; and Raum investigation, 238; solicits campaign funds for Harrison, 240; invites criticism, 310; and Baltimore investigation, 329, 330; estimates Minneapolis convention, 345, 338; and Baltimore investigation, 372; and removal of Justice Sandford, 374; and political assessments, 387, 391, 392; political worker, 291, 389.
- Millersburg, O., editor appointed postmaster at, 301.
- Milligan, Congressman, civ. service reform, state of civ. service in his district, 73.
- Millikan, F. M., sec'y Indiana republican state committee, asks for political contributions, 387.
- Milliken, W. F., supported by T. Reed (Me.) for customs collector, 22; and J. Manley in Maine, 364.
- Milliken, N. J., journalist, postmaster at Canandaigua, N. Y., 155.
- Milo, Iowa, Editor Lyon appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Milwaukee, Wis., investigation of post-office at by civ. service commission adverse to postmaster, 36, 53; Paul, postmaster of resigns, 14, 47, 103, 104; Editor Watrous appointed collector at, former incumbent removed without cause, 71; civ. service reform in post-office at, 95; Postmaster Paul of removes Shidy, witness against him, 101, 103; per cent. of removals in classified and unclassified service in post-office at, 185.
- Milwaukee Sentinel [repub.], condemns Clarkson, 66.
- Miniden, Neb., Postmaster McGinness of, forced to resign, 166.
- Ministers, see also church.
- Minister as citizen, from address of Congressman G. F. Williams, 239.
- Ministers, duty of to advocate civ. service reform, 74.
- Ministers, foreign, haste in removing, by Pres. Harrison, 27.
- Minneapolis, republican national convention at 1892; federal office-holders of delegates to, 337, 348, 357; nominations of, indorsed by Indiana federal office-holders at Washington, 354; Indiana delegates to refuse to pay assessments, 363; political activity of federal office-holders at, 349, 350, 364, 365, 370, 375, 379, 382; selection of delegates for, and political activity in, of federal office-holders in Indiana, 378, 380.
- Minneapolis Journal (rep.), denounces Harrison's surrender to spoils system, 177.
- Minnesota, senators of, at war over spoils, 30; political activity of federal office holders in, 344, 348.
- Mississippi, appointees to Indian service from, under Cleveland, 219; political activity of federal officers in, 348, 339, 345, 344, 343, 337, 382.
- Missouri, removals in, 22; patronage in, 24, 52; spoils system in, 51; control of patronage in Sixth district of, 55; republicans of, think Clarkson too slow, 62; sale of offices in, 93; patronage in, given to Filley, 226; political activity of federal office-holders in, 336, 345, 346; Kerens for Harrison, chosen committeeman of delegation of, to Minneapolis convention, 346; political assessment of federal employes from, 333.
- Missouri, civil service reform association of, annual meeting of, 38; and removals in postal service, 92; report to on the civil service, 136; annual meeting, 1891; proceedings, 239.
- Mitchell, Sen., controls patronage in Oregon, 32; and Indians, 42.
- Mitchell, U. S. district att'y, and proposed prosecution of Van Cott and Hendricks, 287.
- Mitchell, B., federal employe, political worker in Indiana, 353.
- Mitchell, C. H., appointed patent commissioner by Harrison; efficient, 140.
- Mitchell, Ind., sale of postmastership at, see Wood and Hobbs, 89.
- Mitchell, W. A., P. O. employe, see Baltimore investigation, 268, 277, 296.
- Mizell, J. R., U. S. marshal, letter to C. C. Kirk, 90.
- Mizer, J. R., chairman Florida republican state committee, appointed U. S. marshal, 30.
- Moberly, Missouri, postmaster at, uses census enumerators as political workers, 131.
- Mobile, Ala., Baker, postmaster of, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Mohler, O. E., editor, "no Harrison republicans outside of office-holding ring," 240; on supporters of Harrison, 378.
- Moline, Kan., Journalist Armstrong postmaster at, 149.
- Molloy, J. R., sec'y Ohio republican state committee, levies political assessments, 390, 391.
- Moloney, Mrs. L., beggar, placed at top of eligible list for police matron of N. Y. City through political influence, 404.
- Monaghan, W., chairman Ohio republican state committee, given office, 46.
- Monahan, State Senator J., uses influence for O'Donnell, 59.
- Moncrief, Prof., 11; letter on ministers and civil service reform, 15.
- Money, J., chairman Tennessee delegation to republican national convention, 1888, appointed U. S. minister, 39.
- Monroe, Ia., Editor Vandermast appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Monson, Mass., reappointment of democrat Harrington postmaster at, recommended by Congressman Rockwell, 188.
- Montagne, removal of for political reasons, 56.
- Montana, political activity of federal office-holders in, 337, 339, 342, 344.
- Montgomery, patent commissioner, spoilsman, 139, 140.
- Montgomery, postmaster at Bristol, Conn., recommended for re-appointment by Congressman Simonds, 91.
- Montgomery, Editor, see Greenfield, Ind., 89.
- Montgomery, J. A., appointed superintendent in Chicago post-office, 14.
- Moody, Sen., and Indian service, opposes Morgan, Indian commissioner, 79; appoints his son to office, 84; and Yankton Indian agency, 86; controls patronage in Indian service, 218.
- Montoux, representative in Indiana legislature, opposes spoils methods in, 407.
- Moony, Miss., postmaster at Maspeth, L. I., removed on secret charges, place given to politician, 39.
- Moore, congressman and postmaster at Nashua, N. H., 73; favors civil service reform, 100, 123.
- Moore, E. H., gambler, discharged by Postmaster Jones, re-appointed by Postmaster Wallace, at Indianapolis, 18, 25; defended by Wallace and Asst. Postmaster Thompson, 28.
- Moore, A., deputy U. S. marshal and political worker in Indiana, 302, 353, 370, 375, 379.
- Moore, G. E., editor, appointed postmaster at Nara Springs, Iowa, 142.
- Moore, M., low political worker, controls patronage under Census Supervisor Conger, 129, 182; controls patronage in census service at Indianapolis, gets lists of voters of enumerators, 293; believes in political assessments, 332; chairman Republican County Committee at Indianapolis, attempts to bully Postmaster Thompson, 366.
- "Morals of Civil Service Reform," by L. M. Blackford, 136.
- Morey, Congressman, spoilsman, 15, 24.
- Morgan, state senator of Indiana, and spoils methods, 408.
- Morgan, editor and office-seeker, 16.
- Morgan, Indian commissioner, appoints his wife his private sec'y, 38; rules governing tenure of office in Indian service, 44; opposition to appointment of, 78; removals under in Indian service, 78, 79; and congressional barons, 86; not responsible for home rule policy, 98; upholds Harrison's Indian policy, 202; does not control appointments, 217.
- Morgan, G. H., democrat, re-appointed postmaster at Newton, Mass., 224.
- Morgan, W. B., customs collector at Buffalo, N. Y., a political worker, 265, 390.
- Morley, John, on slavery, 116.
- Morning Star (Baptist), advocates civil service reform, 30.
- Morris, alderman, political worker for Harrison in New York, 332.
- Morris, Ill., Journalist Fletcher appointed postmaster at, political worker, 126, 186.
- Morris, S. V., brother-in-law of Pres. Harrison, given office, 108.
- Morrison, D., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.
- Morse, E. A., opposed to retention of Spear, postmaster at Springfield, Mass., 86; and Postmaster Harlow at Whitman, 100; secures appointment of Adams, postmaster at Quincy, Mass., 100; gets office for his nephew, 108; correspondence of regarding postmastership of Plymouth, Mass., 187.
- Morse, F. C., appointed postmaster at Colfax, Wash., vice La Rne, forced to resign, 165.
- Morse, H. E., customs collector at Cape Vincent, N. Y., a political worker, see also Jefferson Co., N. Y., 266.
- Morse, S. B., negro federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Morss, S. E., of Indianapolis Sentinel, favors civil service reform, 227, 229; supporter of Cleveland at Chicago convention, 350.
- Morton, C. B., politician in Brooklyn, opposing Nathan, 304, 371.
- Morton, Vice-President, opposes appointment of Ritchie, postmaster at Saratoga, N. Y., 126; surety for Fassett, collector at N. Y. City, 258; Fassett favors at suggestion of Platt, 259; confers with Quay, 390.
- Morton, O. T., on popular objections to civil service reform, 85, 111, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119; attends dinner at Indianapolis to Roosevelt, speech of, 227, 229, 231; and levying of political assessments by Allen, 322, 331; on civil service reform, 396.
- Mosley, R. A., politician, appointed collector internal revenue in Alabama, 56; faction of, works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 346; in Alabama, leader of Harrison faction, 348.
- Mott, J. J., opposes Eaves, 150, 159.
- Moulton, W. P., editor, appointed postmaster at Stuart, Iowa, 142.
- Mt. Morris, Ill., F. Tice appointed postmaster at, see Hitt, 109.
- Mt. Vernon, Ind., editor, son of Governor Hovey, appointed postmaster at, 37, 71; postmaster at and Sen. Harrison, 96; Hovey, postmaster of, at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- Mountain City, Tenn., Journalist Keyes postmaster at, 155.
- Mounts, H., deputy collector at Indianapolis, worker against Chase, 352, 353, 379.
- Mowry, L. D., removed by Von Landberg, Hiscock appointed, 150.
- Moyer, H. B., journalist, postmaster at Freeburgh, Pa., 149.
- Mudd, S. E., congressman, political worker, 144; candidate, and political assessments, 162; ex-congressman, demands removal of Roosevelt, 226, 254.
- Mugwump defense of in Indianapolis News, 351; abuse of by republicans, 405.
- Mullen, Neb., Journalist Hammell postmaster at, 149.
- Mulligan, Mrs., appointed pension agent at Chicago, to succeed Miss Sweet, 107.
- Mulligan letters, 365.
- Mulliken, postmaster at Easton, Ind., in state convention, 335.
- Multnomah Co., Oregon, census service in, inefficient, 295.
- Muncie, Ind., political situation in, discontent of office-seekers, 88; applicants for postmastership of, Ellis appointed, 217; Ellis postmaster of, political worker for Harrison, 316, 362, 370, 378.
- Mundelle, R. B., discharged by Jones, postmaster at Indianapolis, reinstated by Wallace, postmaster at Indianapolis, 27, 34.
- Munroeville, Ind., Stewart appointed postmaster of, resigns; G. Webster appointed; applicant Davis given another position, 88.
- Munson, A., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.

- Murchison letter, 92.
 Murdock, C. B., journalist, postmaster at Middlefield, O., 119.
 Murphysborough, Ill., Postmaster Andrews of forced to resign, 165.
 Murphy E., mayor of Troy, Tammany chief, patronage of in N. Y. state offices, 215; corrupt politician, 307, 396; given office, 319; and prison patronage, 330; opposes mugwumps, 351; and nomination of Cleveland, 355; Cleveland refuses, while candidate, to pledge spoils to, 395; Cleveland opposes election of, as senator from New York, 404; obtains suspension of civil service rules in New York for benefit of worker Sternberg, 414; Sheehan worker for, 415.
 Murphy, M. C., appointed warden port by Gov. Flower, 319.
 Murphy, "Tom," controls N. Y. custom-house, 191.
 Murray, postmaster at Johnston, N. Y., and post-office department at Washington, 72.
 Murray, C. F., requests patronage, 311, 312.
 Murray, C. H., spoils circular of, for places in census service, 157; spoilsman, appointed census supervisor in N. Y. City, 294; supporter of Platt, removed, 333, 334; political worker in New York convention, 334; federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
 Murray, J., supt. custom-house at N. Y. City, resigns, 258.
 Muscatine, John Mahon, editor, appointed postmaster at, 46.
 Mustard, J., appointed postmaster at Glen Hall, Ind., vice Stepp, "resigned," 149.
 Muzzy, L. R., journalist, postmaster at Pulaski, N. Y., 155.
 Nampa, Idaho, Journalist Bacon, postmaster at, 155.
 Nashua, New Hamp., postmaster at, 73.
 Nashville, Ind., Allison, supported by Congressman Cooper for postmaster of, 398.
 Nathan, E., political worker, appointed collector internal revenue of Brooklyn (N. Y.) district, by Harrison, 55, 170, 191; wins fight in 23d ward in New York City, 121; political worker, for Congressman Wallace, 142, 150; backed by Platt, 143; uses power of office to intimidate voters, 178; trades votes for Wallace, 179, 180; engages in factional fights in Brooklyn and New York, 197, 198; corrupt political worker and boss, 264, 265, 304, 311, 332, 350, 371; political worker for Fassett, 287; in N. Y. convention, 335; worker for Platt, against against Willis, worker for Harrison, 336; boss in Kings Co., N. Y.; deals with McLaughlin, 352; controls machine in Kings Co., N. Y.; worker for Platt, 354, 355; uses office as political weapon, 374.
 National Baptist, on political status, as regards civil service reform, 257.
 National League of Civil Service Reform Associations; speeches before annual meeting of, 1890, see Civil Service Record; annual meeting at Philadelphia, Oct. 1-2, 51; annual meeting, 1889; resolutions of on agitating civil service reform, 66; appoints committee to investigate management of federal civil service, 77; investigating committee of, 85; special committee of, investigates patent office, 139, 140, 141; annual meeting of 1890; proceedings; report on presidential post-offices, 145, 153, 161, 172; investigation by special committee of, upon removals upon secret charges, 175, 176, 177; report of special committee of, on political changes in presidential post-offices, 186, 187, 188; resolutions of requesting Maryland Civ. Serv. Ref. Assoc. to investigate political activity of federal officers, 219; circular of executive committee of on status of civil service reform, 282; resolutions of at annual meeting, 1891, 286, 287; investigation of census service by special committee of, 291, 295; address before annual meeting on "Party and Patronage," by Curtis; also resolutions of, 321, 326, 329; committees appointed to investigate political assessments and political interference of federal office-holders, 338; report to committee of, investigating political activity of federal employes in Indiana, 375, 381.
 Nattinger, E. A., journalist, appointed postmaster at Ottawa, Ill., 126.
 Navarre, O., Journalist Carl, postmaster at, 149.
 Navy yard, at Brooklyn, N. Y., see Brooklyn, 45; at Brooklyn, N. Y., clean sweep in, see Dady, 106; at Kittery, Me., spoils system at under Sec'y Tracy, 145; at Brooklyn, N. Y., examinations under Sec'y Tracy at, statement of examining board, 236; at Norfolk, Va., and Portsmouth, N. H., merit system introduced in by Tracy, 251; introduction of merit system into requested by Mass. legislature, see Tracy, 271, 276; application merit system to commended, 286; Sec'y Tracy institutes merit system in, 221, 222, 230, 298, 306, 321, 326; at Brooklyn, N. Y., employes in ordered to work for renomination of Harrison, 336; at Brooklyn, Page, chief of ordnance dept., removed, 355; Sec'y Tracy introduces Boston labor system in, 331, 357, 376.
 Neal, U. S. attorney, active politician, 143.
 Nebeker, U. S. treasurer, spoilsman, tries to get office for his son, 253, 254; political worker, 370, 382.
 Nebo, Ill., Editor Lansdon appointed postmaster at, 141.
 Nebraska, office-seekers in, 6; political activity of federal officers in, 348, 370; political assessments in Indian service in, 381, 385.
 Neely, C. F. W., editor, applicant for postmaster-ship of Muncie, Ind., 217.
 Nell, J. I., recommended by Illinois senators and congressmen for assistant treasurer, 110.
 Negroes, desire "representation," 243, 244.
 Nelson, I. D. G., condemns democrats for defeating Magee bill for non-partisan control of Indiana state charitable institutions, 215.
 Neodesha, Kan., Postmaster Lee of, removed after four years' service, second commission unexpired, 187.
 Neoga, Ill., Editor Hancock appointed postmaster at, 141.
 Nepotism, see also Thomas Jefferson on, Cleveland. Nepotism, under Harrison, 21, 30, 253, 282, 369.
 Nettleton, acting secretary of treasury, and so-called resignation of Macgregor, 216.
 New, J. C., Editor, distributor of patronage in Indiana, 7, 85; appointed consul-general to London, 14; and Harrison, 121; works for renomination of Harrison, 334, 337, 340, 342, 344, 345, 357, 377, 379.
 New Albany, Ind., postmaster Godfrey at, spoilsman, 45, 393; works for Michener, 144; political worker for Harrison, 316; at Minneapolis convention, 377, 378, 380; Marsh, P. O. employe at, political worker, 380.
 New Albany Evening Tribune (rep.) and Civil Service CHRONICLE, 13; advocates civil service reform, 83.
 New Bedford, Mass., carpenter, postmaster at, removed on secret charges without investigation, 29, 175, 176.
 New Carlisle, Ind., Editor Fountain appointed postmaster at, 126, 377.
 New Castle, Ind., W. F. Shelley, dentist, appointed postmaster at, 132.
 New Castle, Ind., Courier (rep.), advocates civil service reform, 76.
 New Hampshire, administration organ denounces civil service reform, 62; patronage of given to Chandler, 340; political activity of federal officers in, 348, 371.
 New Haven, Conn., Sperry, postmaster at, favors civil service reform, 91; removal of English, postmaster at, 96; per cent. of removals in classified and unclassified service in post-office at, 185; Sperry, postmaster of, testifies to worth of Barrio, P. O. inspector removed, 298; civil service reform association of and post-office at, 96.
 New Holland, O., Journalist Lewis postmaster at, 149.
 New Holland, Pa., postmaster at removed through influence Brosius, 72.
 New Jersey, political activity of federal office holders in, 347.
 New Mexico, vote of for Harrison at Minneapolis, 347.
 New Milford, Pa., Journalist Vail, postmaster at, 149.
 New Orleans collector at, Ex-Gov. Warmouth appointed, 44; Collector Warmouth of, obtains appointment of Weber as postmaster at Donaldson, La., 241; customs district of, classified 1883, 276; and state politics, 283; relative of Harrison appointed naval officer at, 369; Eaton, postmaster of, pays political assessments, 383.
 New Richland, Kan., Journalist Bronson appointed postmaster at, 126.
 New Sharon, Iowa, Editor Vail appointed postmaster at, 142.
 New York City, see Pearson, postmaster at, and Van Cott, postmaster at, places of federal offices in, at disposal of "The" Allen, see post-office at, 12, 45; given over to spoilsmen, 28; custom-house at, civil serv. com. investigates, 29; post-office at, saving by merit system in, 35; Fire Chief Shay, retired on pension, 36; custom-house at, civ. service commission investigates, 36; Russell Harrison secures appointment for friend as postal stampast. at, 38; reform club of, work of, against tariff, 42; sixth assembly district of, resolutions of against civ. service reform, 49.
 New York Custom-House at, removals in, 54; applications for position in custom-house at, 75; effect of patronage in twenty-first assembly district of, 75; custom-house employes at, aid politicians and go on committees, 108; fire service in, 120; attempt to purify politics in, 130; per cent. of removals in, classified and unclassified service in post-office at, 185; Willis, naval officer at, a spoilsman, 191; custom-house at, controlled by "Tom" Murphy, C. A. Arthur, Leet, and Stocking, 191; account of factional fights for control of party machine in, 198, 199, 241, 242; custom-house at, cartage frauds practiced at, 216; street-cleaning department should be under merit system, 220, 221; custom-house at, Roosevelt invites 21st district republican association of New York City to investigate custom-house service at, 236; removal of Burt, naval officer at, for political reasons, 63, 237; civil service commission, not very commendable, 239; employes in custom-house of, appointed through influence of Platt; Collector Erhardt "resigns," Fassett appointed, 255, 258, 259, 260, 261; Feudalism revived in, 263; Erhardt, collector of, and office-seekers recommended by Platt, 264; Heudricks, political worker for Hiscock and Platt, succeeds Fassett as collector of, 264, 266, 269; James, P. O. employe at, and others, federal employes, political workers, 265; customs district of, classified 1883, 276; customs house employes in political workers for Fassett, 278; government of, 281, 285; Tammany methods in, 291; census service in inefficient, 294; thefts of Hill in, 306, 307; "sugar frauds" in custom house at, see Hillism, 310; state of politics in Brooklyn and, 350; Tammany makes political machine of health department of, 356; Boston labor system used for street work at, 357; employes in sub-treasury at ordered to vote republican ticket, 390; civil service board of (Tammany) and fraudulent appointment of Mrs. Maloney, 404.
 New York Herald, on "Paddy" Divver, 184.
 New York Evening Post, attributes republican defeat of 1889, chiefly to spoils system, 76; on civil service law, 92; on progress in civil service methods, 224; exposes corrupting influences of Tammany, 289, 290.
 New York Press (rep.), declares republican party favors extension of civil service law, 65.
 New York Sun, for spoils, 93.
 New York Times, account of caucus in Buffalo, N. Y., 196; accounts of spoils fights in several states, 215, 216, 217; on Raum and Harrison, 238.
 New York Tribune, on Postmaster Pearson, 12; supports Mahone, 53; advocates civ. service reform, 65; on "Paddy" Divver, 184; defends Platt against Erhardt, 255; silent regarding civil service pledges of Harrison in 1892, 357; subsidized by Harrison, 369.
 New York World, charges of against Senator Quay, 112; on "Paddy" Divver, 184.
 New York State, see civil service commission of, platform, convention; delegation from and its demands, 21; patronage of given to T. Platt by President Harrison, 27, 52, 56, 68, 173, 245, 258, 259, 261, 282, 332, 368, 376; delegate to Republican National Convention appointed general appraiser at port of, 30; Niagara Co., removals in federal offices of, 30; congressional patronage in (see Quackenbush), 32; post-offices in (see Delano), 47; competitive system in, 52; republicans in think President Harrison not bound to keep reform pledges, 62; republican committees of denounce civil service reform, 63; weakening influence of office-holding in, 75; clergymen of, oppose impure political methods, 155; disregard of civil service law of, 161; state courts of, uphold N. Y. civil service law, 161, 200, 281, 286; elections of 1890 in, disastrous to civil service reform, 173; postmasters in, appointed by Congressman Sherman, 180; quarrels over patronage in legislature of, 215; evasion of civil service law in cities in, reform associations of New York and Brooklyn are to blame, 219; R. P. Flower, candidate of Croker, Tammany "boss" for governor of, 245, 261; corruption in, 281; political assessments in, 180, 282, 286, 287, 391, 392; Hillism in, 309; legislature of stolen by Hill and Tammany, 306, 313, 314; political corruption long-seated in, appointing council of, 325; political activity of federal office-holders in, 272, 332, 334, 335, 336, 337, 342, 348, 359, 360, 361, 371, 384, 385, 387, 390, 391; republican discord in, 351, 352; nomination of Cleveland and democratic regular organizations in, 355; republican association requests lists for assessment purposes, 363; Riley, chief examiner of civil service commission of, removed by Tammany, 414.
 N. Y. Civil Service Reform Association, annual election, 23; annual meeting 1891, report of executive committee on efficiency of N. Y. state and various city civil service commissions, 239; correspondence with treasury and P. O. departments over political activity of Van Cott and Hendricks, 289; committee of, investigates civil service examination in N. Y. City service, 319, 320; and prison appointments, 331.
 Newark, N. J., per cent. of removals in classified and unclassified service in post office at, 185.
 Newark, O., Iches, editor, postmaster at, 301.
 Newaygo, Mich., Journalist Shaw postmaster at, 149.
 Newberry, General, confirmed as postmaster at Chicago, 6.
 Newburgh, Ind., Cushman, postmaster of, political worker, 380.
 Newburg, N. Y., Taggart, postmaster of, political worker for Platt, 260; census of 1890 well conducted in, 292; primaries at, run by workers for Hill, 309.
 Newcomb, J., postmaster, a political worker, 159.
 Newell, Ia., Editor Blair, postmaster at, a political worker.
 Newins, politician in Brooklyn, N. Y., opposing Nathan, 304.
 Newport, R. I., Fay appointed postmaster at, 150.
 Newton, C. E., editor, appointed postmaster at Kawanna, Ind., 126, 377.
 Newton, Mass., Democrat Morgan appointed postmaster at, 224; civil service reform association of, address before, on influence of Clarkson and Wanamaker, by Rev. H. Lambert, 136, 261.
 Newtonville, Mass., Turner indorsed for reappointmen, 100.
 Niblack, Judge, votes against Pendleton act; address of on civil service reform, 138, 139; ex-judge Indiana supreme court, favors civil service reform, 227, 229.
 Nichols, trades votes in behalf of Congressman Wallace, 179.

- Nicholls, E. T., commandant of navy yard at Kittery, Me., 147.
- Nichols, J., treasury chief of division, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 334, 348.
- Nicholls, J. A., quarantine commissioner, supports Congressman Wallace, 142; corrupt politician, 311.
- Nicholson, M., of Indianapolis News, favors civil service reform, 227, 229.
- Nicoll, dist. attorney, and Rev. Dr. Parkhurst, 319.
- Niedringhaus, F. G., and Harrison, 14; aiding office-seekers, 15; and federal appointments in Missouri, 22.
- Niligh, Neb., Journalist Best postmaster at, 149.
- Nipher, Prof. F. E., supposed telegram to by Secretary Rusk and reply, 244, 245, 253.
- Nithey, Mich., poll of voters asked of Daniels, postmaster of, 383.
- Nixou, editor and collectorship of customs at Chicago, 47.
- Nixon, deputy controller of currency, political worker, 389.
- Noble, Rev. Dr., on parties and government, 82.
- Noble, Secretary, on putting census bureau under civil service law, 19; accedes to wishes of Senator Mitchell regarding patronage of Oregon, 32; and Indian agents Rosebud agency, Dakota, 48; refuses to state causes of removal of Vandever, 181; spoilsman, 70, 191, 291; to blame for Harrison's Indian policy, 202; spoilsman and Indian service, 98, 221, 226; on Raum scandals, 237; establishes rules for promotion in interior department, 298; and federal patronage in St. Louis, 304; requests removal of Collector Wennecker, of Missouri, 336; and political assessments in Indian service, 375.
- Noblesville, Ind., postmaster at appointed, 47; Cheadle recommends Frybarger, afterwards Royer, for postmaster at, 89; Royer, postmaster of, political worker, 380.
- Nogales, Arizona, Journalist Chatham postmaster at, 155.
- Nolan, E., federal employe, political worker, 302, 375.
- Nora Springs, Iowa, Editor Moore appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Norfolk Republican Club of Boston and Clarkson, 119, 131.
- Norfolk, Va., Brady appointed collector at, 52; navy yard at, repairs in, for Mahone's benefit, 59; navy yard at, spoils system in, 147, 153; merit system introduced in navy yard at by Tracy, 251.
- Norris, C. O., P. O. employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- N. Carolina, patronage of given away by Harrison, 150; negroes of demand spoils, 159; political situation and fights in, 159; secret charges in, 312; political activity of federal office-holders in, 334, 362, 373; political assessments levied in by Eaves, 362.
- N. Dakota, patronage of, given to A. McKenzie, also to Ball, 216; political activity of federal officers in, 348.
- Northrup, editor Syracuse Courier, postmaster at, see Syracuse, 46.
- Norton, C. E., pres. Cambridge Civil Service Reform Association, and Harrison, 204, 205.
- Norton, M., letter to from Davenport questioning right to vote, 387.
- Norwich, Conn., post-office at under Cleveland, removal of postmaster of by Harrison, 29; census of 1890 not well conducted at, 293.
- Notson, J. T., journalist, appointed postmaster at Farragut, Iowa, 142.
- Nowland, custom-house deputy at Indianapolis, political worker, 108.
- Nowlin, E., republican politician, census supervisor 2d Indiana district, 100.
- Noyes, L. M., editor, appointed postmaster at Akron, Ind., 126, 377.
- Nugent, J. R., food contractor in barge office at New York, requests patronage, 311, 312; food contractor in barge office, in New York convention, 334; at Minneapolis convention, 344.
- O'Brien, 330, 331.
- O'Brien, E. C., federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 345, 348.
- O'Brien, H., mayor of Boston, and civ. service reform, 82.
- O'Brien, J., corrupt politician, and Hill, 307.
- O'Brien, J. J., spoilsman and bribe-taker, 170, 171.
- O'Connell, police surgeon, and examiner at Brooklyn, N. Y., 222.
- O'Connor, councilman of Indianapolis, supports Fire Chief Webster, 208.
- O'Day, D., supports Delamater on behalf of Standard Oil Company, 134.
- O'Donnell, groom of G. B. Raum, Jr., employed in pension office, 190.
- O'Donnell, J., jury-briber, given office through influence of Senator Farwell and others, 59.
- O'Donohue, J. J., recommends "Paddy" Divver for police justice, 184.
- O'Dwyer, Dr. J., resigns from N. Y. City Health Dept., because it becomes political machine, 356.
- O'Mara, J., violates health laws, given office by board of health at Indianapolis, 316.
- O'Neill, ex-Congressman, and his political assessment, 150.
- O'Neill, C., naval officer on board to examine applicants for positions in navy yard at Brooklyn, N. Y., 221.
- O'Rourke, J., appointed foreman in Brooklyn navy yard, efficient, 142; appointed master boiler-maker in Brooklyn navy yard under Cleveland, removed under Harrison, gets back on examination, 236.
- Oakford, Ind., postmaster at, see Martin and Croushore, 96.
- Oberlin, Kan., Journalist Barin postmaster at, 149.
- Oberly, Indian commissioner, 9, 48, 86; and Senator Ingalls, 22; removed by President Harrison, 27, 44; ex-commissioner opposes publicity of eligible lists, 53.
- Odell, postmaster at Beverly, Mass., a political worker, 162.
- Odell, B. B., Jr., political worker for Platt, 260.
- Oeh, P. O. employe, see Baltimore investigation, 295, 326, 327.
- Oelrichs, S. Dak., Journalist Jones, postmaster at, 155.
- "Offensive Partisanship," removals for, see report special committee Nat. League, 1889-90, 188.
- Office, scramble for, 3, 6.
- Office-brokerage, see Eubanks; also sale of offices, 23.
- Office-holders, republican, leave Washington to vote, 162.
- Ogden, Ind., postmaster of, distributes campaign documents, 390.
- Ogdensburg, N. Y., Postmaster Baird removed, Editor Smith appointed, 126; custom-house at, not classified, number of employes in, 277.
- Ohio, and spoils, 15; Darke Co. postmaster in, removed, 23; republicans of, and Gov. Foraker, 24; republicans of, think civ. service reform a humbug, 62; campaign of 1889 in, run by Congressman Grosvenor, spoilsman, 68; status of merit system in, hopeful, 119; political assessments of federal employes from, 179; republican association of, and printing-office, 234; patronage of given to Sherman, 210; defeat of Foraker for governor of, owing to use of patronage, 240; political assessments in, 272, 280, 282, 287, 390, 412; federal patronage used by Harrison in, for re-election of Sherman, 297, 300, 301, 302; political activity of federal office-holders in, 335, 336, 346; vote of at Minneapolis divided between Blaine, Harrison and McKinley, 340, 343; patronage of given to Sherman, 340; relative of Harrison appointed collector of internal revenue in, 369.
- Olathe, Kan., Journalist Perkins appointed postmaster at, 126.
- Old Dominion Republican League, attempts to aid Mahone by political assessments, frustrated by civil service commission, 70; political assessments by, in Washington departments, 412.
- Oler, C. H., efficient railway mail clerk, 224.
- Olin, Iowa, Editor Burke appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Oliver, mayor of Lockport, N. Y., and Sickles, N. Y. civil service commissioner, 34.
- Olneyville, R. I., postmistress of, removed for political reasons, 288.
- Olsen, ward politician of Indianapolis, supports Fire Chief Webster, 208.
- Omaha, Neb., Vandervoort, disreputable politician, appointed mail superintendent at, 215, 216; violations of law by postmaster of, 251.
- Omaha Republican (rep.), on curse of office-seeking, 65.
- Oneonta, N. Y., Postmaster Bundy of, removed on secret charges, 176.
- Onondaga Co., N. Y., factional fights at, republican caucuses in, political activity of federal office-holders, 264, 265.
- Orcutt, F. E., collector internal revenue, a political worker, 160, 162, 179.
- Oregon, "Sol" Hirsch, the "Tom Platt" of, 29; patronage of Sen. Mitchell in, 32.
- Oregon, Ill., Jewett appointed postmaster at, see Hitt, 109; Postmaster Marsh of, removed after four years' service, second commission unexpired, 187.
- Orlando, Fla., Delaney, postmaster at, removed on secret charges, I. Fletcher appointed, 176.
- Osage Mission, Kan., Postmaster Brunt of, removed, after four years' service, second commission unexpired, Park appointed, 187, 188.
- Osborn, S. C., federal employe, worker for Allison, 334.
- Osborne, United States Minister, in Brazil and Jewett claims, 290.
- Osborne, Judge, grants writ of mandamus against Nathan, for corrupt practices, 265.
- Osborne, Congressman, obtains office for his son, 84.
- Osborne, J. B., given office through influence of Congressman Osborne, 84.
- Oskaloosa, Kan., Journalist Roberts postmaster at, 149.
- Osseo, Wis., Journalist Thomas, postmaster at, 155.
- Ostendorf, J. H., deputy collector, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Oswego, N. Y., Editor Place, spoilsman, appointed postmaster at, 126; custom house at not classified, number of employes in, 277; Clark, N. Y. assembly man introduces bill for municipal reform in, 415.
- Otis, E. L., applicant for postmastership at Rochelle, Ill., 109.
- Otis, W. F., federal employe, congratulates Pres. Harrison, 317.
- Ottawa, Ill., Journalist Nottinger appointed postmaster at, 126.
- Ottawa, Kan., Journalist Kessler postmaster at, 149.
- Overin, G. D., federal employe, political worker for Harrison, 334.
- Overstreet, H. G., and political assessments, see Kentucky.
- Ovid, Mich., Postmaster Cowan of, forced to resign, 165.
- Owen, Congressman, and office-seekers, 14; spoilsman, 21, 30, 85, 90; suggests postmasters, 55; opposes appointment of Craveus, 84; recommends appointment of Tomlinson as postmaster at Logansport, Ind., 88; and Winamac, Ind., postmastership, 88; secures appointment of inefficient postmaster at Hammond, Ind., 90; and editor of Delphi Journal, 97; given patronage by Harrison, 240.
- Owen, W. D., superintendent immigration, 39; political worker, 382, 390.
- Owings, W., low politician and murderer, gets office through Gorman, 237.
- Oxford Co., Pa., applicants for postmaster of, 55.
- Oxford, Ind., Editor Carr appointed postmaster at, 126, 377.
- Pacific Unitarian Conference, resolution of, that ministers should officially advocate civil service reform, 65.
- Paddock, Sen., and Lincoln, Neb., post-office, 72; attempt of to withdraw railway mail service from civil service law, 92; secures appointment of Editor Gere as postmaster at Lincoln, Neb., 108.
- Page, E. F., chief of ordnance dept. in Brooklyn navy yard, removed, 355.
- Painesville, O., editor of Telegraph appointed postmaster at, 301.
- Palermo, Italy, editor appointed consul at, 240.
- Palmer, as presidential possibility, 235.
- Palmer, public printer and applications for office, 37.
- Palmer, F. W., and pardon of Petroff and Kemble, 152.
- Palo Pinto, Mo., Postmaster Trollington buys influence of Upton and gets office, 55.
- Paoli, Ind., editor appointed postmaster at, 37.
- Paradis, J. F., journalist, postmaster at Hemingford, Neb., 149.
- Park, politician, appointed census enumerator through Congressman Evans, 291.
- Park, E. B., appointed postmaster at Osage Mission, Kan., vice Blunt, removed after four years' service, second commission unexpired, 187, 188.
- Parker, Lieutenant, relative of Pres. Harrison, given office, 30.
- Parker, A. X., U. S. deputy atty., a political worker, 279.
- Parker, J., politician, and post-office at Rochelle, Ill., 109.
- Parker, M. F., postmaster at Cullman, Ala., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Parkhurst, Rev. C. H., on purity in politics, 119; exposes immoralities of Tammany rule, 319.
- Parkinson, councilman of Indianapolis, supports Fire Chief Webster, 208.
- Parks, W. R., editor, appointed postmaster at Petersburg, Ill., 141.
- Parnell Hall, nominating caucus for city officers of Indianapolis, account of, 194, 195.
- Parr, Prof. S. S., part of address of at annual meeting of Indiana Civil Service Ref. Ass'n, 1889, 8.
- Parsons, U. S. marshal, works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 345.
- Parsons, G. D., ex-mayor of Elmira, N. Y., dismissed from U. S. Express Company for political reasons, 259.
- Parton James, on civil service reform, 18.
- Party, evils of strict adherence to, 236.
- Party and patronage, address, see Curtis.
- "Party Boss," political advice of, 194.
- Passage, representative in Indiana legislature, spoilsman, 407.
- Pate, postmaster of Boonville, Ind., political worker, 380.
- Patent office, investigation of civil service in by committee of National League, 139, 140, 141; examinations and classified positions in, 141.
- Patrick, J. B., journalist, postmaster at Clarion, Pa., 149.
- Patronage a source of weakness, see Foulke, Brooklyn Ferries, 65, 68; party and, addresses, see Curtis; troubling republican party, 6; evils of, 25, 30, 41; evils of distribution of public, Senator Harrison on, 46; Depew on, 75; Wilmington Morning News (rep.) on, 75; La Grange Standard on, 83; evils of, see Platt, Boston Transcript, Indianapolis News, St. Louis Globe-Democrat, Philadelphia North American, N. Y. Evening Post, Philadelphia American, 76; source of weakness to Cleveland and Harrison, 83; system denounced by republicans of Wayne Co., N. Y., 156; evil effects of on schools of Baltimore, 211; condemned in state charitable institutions as barbarous by Indianapolis Sentinel, 202; evils of, in England, 270; system condemned, 271; system, in census service, bill of Garfield against, 291; system not according to organic law, 305; abuse of by Harrison, see National League, resolutions 1892, 321; and the constitution, 323; use of by a president to secure a re-election impossible, see Indianapolis Journal, 318.
- Patronage, federal, see also patronage, congress-

- sional; see Towner; see Sewell; of patent office, 139, 140; of treasury department used by Foster to turn Ohio from Blaine to Harrison, 240; meager distribution of to negroes, 243, 244; given to negro Langston, 340; used by Harrison to secure renomination, 298; of Indiana used by various people, 38, 84, 144, 173, 297, 316, 317, 376; of Maine, navy yard at Kittery, Me., used for Gooch and Frost, 117; of Missouri, see also Filley, 52; New York, given to Platt, 27, 52, 56, 68, 94, 121, 142, 173, 241, 255, 259, 263-266, 281, 282, 288, 376; see also W. Barnes; see Birkett, 55; Woodruff, 106; Lake and McKane, 132; of New York custom-house, disposal of, 216; of navy yard at Mare Island given to ward bosses, 226; of N. Carolina, 17, 150; of Ohio used by Sec'y Foster, 91; of Pennsylvania, that of Collector Cooper in, see Cooper; of Pennsylvania, used by Harrison to secure renomination, 299, 301; of Texas, given to Cuney, 173; Virginia, given to Mahone, 27, 31, 38, 41, 52, 56, 67, 68, 70, 74, 94, 376.
- Patronage, state and local; in offices at Indianapolis, see Markey; in fire service, 137; to be controlled by mayor, 190; municipal at Cincinnati controlled by Gov. Foraker, 71; quarrels over in legislature of New York, see Sheehan, De Freest, Webster, Murphy and McLaughlin, 215; in New York state affairs, use of, 216; of Brooklyn, New York, bridge, quarrel over, see Croker, 215; in New York and Tammany, 318.
- Patronage, congressional, R. R. mail service open to, 27; see Cin. Commercial Gazette, 65; evil of, 66; as practiced in U. S. Senate, 72; see report of committee of National League on, see also Garfield, 113, 114, 115, 188; is doomed, 120; condemned by resolutions of Maryland Civil Service Reform Association, 136; see letter of Wanamaker to Postmaster Marsh, 187; see Indian service, 36, 42, 192, 219; in postal service, 193; in census service, see also Porter, 234, 292; Allison, 334; Andrew, 405; Banks, 31, 39; Bayne, 133, 135, 299; Belden, 16, 71, 132; Bowden, 153; Bretz, 409-411, 419, 421, 422; Brookshire, 393, 405, 409-411, 413, 419; Brosius, 72; in N. Carolina, Brower, 47; Brown, 240, 393, 409-411, 419-422; advocated by Congressman Brown, 35, 84, 89, 118; Bynum, 392, 405, 109-411, 418-422; Sen. D. Cameron, 72, 133, 162, 329; Chandler, 99, 224; in Cannelton, Ind., post-office, 26; Cannon, 30, 31, 34, 35, 39, 160, 179; Chandler, 100, 148, 340; Chcadle, 17, 55, 71, 77, 84, 85, 88, 89, 129, 119, 240, 377; Cheatham, in Chester Co., Pa., 55; Clarkson, 331; Cockrell, 234; Cogswell, 187, 288; Coleman, 71; Conn. 409-411, 420, 422; Connell, 72, 108; Cooper, 112, 398-400, 405, 109-411, 416, 422; Sen. Cullom, 30, 31, 37, 95, 109, 188; Dalzell, 30, 87, 90, 112, 133, 299; Darlington, 51, 55; Sen. Davis, 81; Sen. Dawes, 71, 104; De Haven, 187; Delano, 47; Du Bois, delegate from Idaho, 30; Dunnell, 39; Enbanks, 99; Evans, 55, 294; of N. Carolina, see Ewart, 17, 159; Farwell, 31, 37, 60, 83, 95, 109; Flood, 51, 150, 259; condemned, see Flower, 201; Fry, 212; Gest, 17; of W. Va., see Hoff, 71; Gorman, 3, 5, 15, 38, 70, 93, 181, 234, 235, 237; Greenhalge, 100; Grosvenor, 204, 205; Sen. Hale, 242; Hammond, 409, 411, 416, 117, 122; Sen. Hampton, 74; Hamsbrough, 216; Harmer, 241; Harrison and Massachusetts offices, 93; Hartwig, 99; Hathaway, 242; Sen. Hawley, 81, 99; Sen. Higgins, 38, 334; Sen. Hiscock, 46, 71, 132, 150, 216, 241, 259, 312; Hitt, 136, 143, 160; Sen. Hoar, 71, 104; Holman, 39, 393, 399, 400, 409, 411, 417, 419, 421, 422; Hopkins, 109; Honk, 35, 54, 55, 84; Illinois congressman, 210; Ingalls, 22, 151; Johnson, 419; Kean, 216; Kellogg, 71, Kelly, 188; Lafayette Courier, 83; Lafollette, 293; Lodge, 30, 39, 41, 69, 71; Love, 99; Lowry, 39; Sen. Manderson, 72, 108; Martin, 399, 100, 109, 411, 419, 420; in Massachusetts, 93; see Mathews, delegate from Dakota, 30; Matson, 30, 31; McClellan, 422; McKenna, McNagney, 109, 411, 422; McPherson, 81; Miller, T., Minnesota, senators of, 30; in Missouri, 51; Monaghan, 59; Moody, 81, 86, 218; Moore, 100; Morse, 86, 100, 108, 187; Norfolk, Va., 251; Osborne, 84; Owen, 11, 21, 30, 55, 84, 85, 88, 90, 98, 240; Sen. Paddock, 72, 108; Payson, 73, 188; Perkins, 35; Pettigrew, 131, 218; Sen. Plumb, 55; Pope, 52; Posey, 16, 59; Postgate, 99; Quackenbush, 32, 54, 242; Quay, 6, 15, 17, 22, 27, 28, 30, 38, 39, 47, 52, 56, 68, 72, 87, 90, 91, 95, 100, 104, 111, 112, 118, 133, 135, 154, 160, 173, 216, 235, 241, 249, 263, 270, 280, 282, 299-301, 329, 332, 371, 376; Raines; Randall, 29, 221; Ray, 99, 100, 118, 133; Reed, T. B., 91, 150, 153, 212; in Rhode Island, 150; Rockwell, 188; Roosevelt, 39, 194; Sanders, 160; Sanford, 126; Sawyer, 57; Scranton, 101; Shearman, 54, 55; Sherman, 67, 149, 210, 249, 301, 310; Shively, 121; Simmonds, 73; Smith, 38; Smith G. W.; Spooner, 30; Steele, 210; Stockbridge, 84; Stroungle; Sweeney, 121; Taylor, 35, 75, 419, 421; Thompson, 55; Turner, 100; Turpie, 105, 109-411, 413, 418-422; Upton, 53, 99; Van Schaick, 44, 47, 55; Vandervoort, 215; Vest, 212; Voorhees, 222, 235, 393, 405, 109-411, 413, 418-422; Walker; Wallace, 55, 72, 132, 142, 143; Sen. Washburn, 84; Watrous, 71; Waugh, 419; Wever, 249; Wood, 150.
- Patterson, postmaster of Memphis, Tenn., celebrates nomination of Harrison, 347.
- Patterson, A. M., political worker for Miller, 259, 260.
- Patterson, J. B., federal office-holder in Boone Co., Iowa, political worker, 260.
- Patterson, J. M., ward politician, see New York City; requests patronage, 311, 312; office-seeker, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 341, 348; political worker for Harrison, 359, 360.
- Patterson, W., appointed superintendent of Indpls post-office, unfit, 19, 21, 27, 34; political worker for Harrison, 302, 337-343, 353, 370, 375, 379, 389.
- Pattison, candidate for governor opposing Delamater in Pennsylvania, 135, 161; of Pennsylvania, and Quay, 280.
- Pattison, governor of Nebraska, and Vandervoort, disreputable politician, 216.
- Patton, president of Princeton College, and politics, 396, 404.
- Patton, C. O., Harrison elector, and postmastership at Stanberry, Mo., 121.
- Paul, postmaster at Milwaukee, spoilsman, civil service commission reports adversely to, 36, 104; and Wanamaker, 41; resigns, 47; spoilsman, removes Shidy who testifies against him, 161, 103.
- Paul, H. S., and appointment of McKean postmaster of Pittsburgh, 91.
- Paul, R. H., ballot stuffer, appointed U. S. marshal in Arizona, 371.
- Pawnee City, Neb., Journalist Hassler postmaster at, 149.
- Paxton, Ill., Editor Stevens appointed postmaster at, 126.
- Payn, L. F., 312; supporter of Blaine, opposed to Harrison, 347; worker for Platt, 360.
- Payson, Congressman, spoilsman, 22, 73; demands removal of Reno, postmaster of Pontiac, Ill., for "offensive partisanship," 188; chairman of house during debate over civil service commission, 204, 205.
- Pears, H. B., employe in Indian service, asked for political contributions, 385.
- Pearson, H. G., postmaster at New York and the post-office, 12, 17, 20, 32, 38, 43, 168, 169, memorial on, 23; removed by Pres. Harrison for political reasons, 27, 30, 52, 63, 64, 68, 94, 173, 237, 282, 367, 376; the civil service in post-office of, under, 42.
- Peddie, A., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.
- Peele, S. J., worker for Harrison, appointed judge of court of claims, 378, 379.
- Peetrey, chief of division, removed for political reasons, 55.
- Pendleton, G. H., civ. service law due to him and D. B. Eaton, 79, 82, 125.
- Pendleton, Ind., Editor Caddy appointed postmaster at, 126, 377.
- Pendleton act (civil service law), 75, 118, 119, 128, 271, 276; provides penalties for public employes soliciting political contributions, 279.
- Pennsylvania, senators of, and spoils, 15, 313, 314, 329; patronage of, given by Pres. Harrison to Senator Quay, 27, 28, 38, 52, 56, 68, 72, 87, 90, 91, 95, 111, 112, 135, 173, 376; Senator Quay displaces Sen. Cameron as spoils distributor, 30; Sen. Cameron controlled patronage in, 34; distractions in, resulting from distribution of spoils, influence of Senators Quay and Cameron, 17; republican ass'n of, see Stratton, 19; republicans of denounce civ. service reform as a sham, 62; status of affairs before election, 138; condemnation of Quay and Delamater by Lincoln republican committee of Pennsylvania, 156; republican convention 1890 commends course of Quay, 156; political situation in, revolt against Quay, see, also, Quay, 161, 162; defeat of Quay in elections of 1890, 173; ballot reform bill in legislature of ruined by Quay, aided by Martin, federal officer, 228, 229; "Quayism" in, 245, 246, 249, 250, 251, 252; address to the citizens of, against "Quayism," 249, 251, 252; federal officers eulogize Quay, 260; Quay wins in, 281; political assessments in, 282, 286; patronage given to Quay; "degradation of politics in," see Welsh, 282; removals from office in of supporters of Quay, 299, 300, 301; delegation to national convention controlled by Quay; Bardsley frauds, 310; political corruption in, 323, 324; patronage of given to Quay, deserts Harrison, 332; vote of at Minneapolis, 310; D. Martin of, made member of republican national committee for, 317; political activity of federal office-holders in, 361, 363, 390; Cooper, collector at Philadelphia, to raise campaign funds in, 363; citizens of protest against appointment of Martin, 374; re-election of Quay in, 404.
- Pennsylvania Civil Service Reform Association of, introduces reform bill in legislature, faulty provisions of, 204; correspondence of regarding political assessments, 289; of annual meeting, 1891, address of H. Welsh before on Indian service, 238, 239.
- Pennsylvania R. R. Co. employs merit system, 285.
- Pension Commissioner, Tanner, 27, 38, 51; Browne and clerks in the service, 71; Raun and Harrison, 237.
- Pension boards, removed by Tanner, 27.
- Pension office at Indianapolis, attempt to collect money of employes in contrary to law, 36; examining boards, 30.
- Pension Examiner Stone removed, negro Dr. Elbert appointed, 192.
- Pension bureau, removals in, 55; bill providing for appointment of new examiners for, 107; removals in under Commissioner Tanner, 54.
- Peoria, Ill., census of 1890 well conducted in, 292.
- Percival, J. A., federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Perkins, congressman, opposed to civil service reform, 35, 49, 122; letter of to Brunt, postmaster, regarding removal, 188.
- Perkins, E. E., negro, postmaster at Edwards, Miss., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 341.
- Perkins, H. A., journalist, appointed postmaster at Olathe, Kan., 126.
- Pern, Ind., Stevens, postmaster of, political worker, 379.
- Petersburgh, Ill., Editor Parks appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Petersburgh, Neh., Journalist Cross postmaster at, 149.
- Petersburg, Virginia, political history of, 57.
- Peterson, O. B., editor, appointed postmaster at Story City, Iowa, 112.
- Petroff, E., worker for Quay, 106; convicted of bribery, shielded by Quay, 151, 152.
- Pettigrew, Senator, and Indian service, 130; Senator Pettigrew opposes Indian Agent McChesney, 131; controls patronage in Indian service, 218; and Harrison, 337; opposed to Harrison, 312.
- Petty, W., Blaine supporter, bribed by Harrison with office, 362.
- Pew, collector at Gloucester, Mass., and subordinates, political workers, 362.
- Philadelphia, Pa., post-office at, 14, 15; conflict over spoils in, 39; Collector Cooper of and Quay, 39; and spoilsman, 85; and office-seekers, 37; defends Quay, 249, 260; works for Quay, 280; patronage in, 47; removals in post-office at, 53; civ. service reform in post-office at, 95; recordership of and Quay, 106; investigation of post-office at, 174; per cent. of removals in classified and unclassified service in post office at, 185; citizens' municipal league, appointment of Martin, disreputable politician, as internal revenue collector, low politicians of, 232; Thompson, controller at, makes removals for political reasons, 239; young republican club of, speech before by Cooper, collector at, defends Quay, 211; Asst. Postmaster Hughes of, political worker for Quay, 270, 280; customs district of, classified 1883, 276; Field, postmaster at, 300; Witherow's resignation, 310; post-office at, a scandal under Cleveland, 350; combination of low politicians of both parties against reformers at, 352.
- Philadelphia, Civil Service Reform Ass'n of, memorial of, on railway mail service, 92.
- Philadelphia American [repub.], attributes republican defeat of 1889 to spoils system, 76.
- Philadelphia Bulletin [repub.], favors civil service reform, 76; condemns Platt, 260.
- Philadelphia North American [repub.], on Quay, 270.
- Philadelphia Press [repub.], removals of Clarkson obeying a "wholesome policy of reform," 49; republican party thoroughly committed to civ. service reform, 65; favors civ. service reform, 92.
- Philadelphia Public Ledger [repub.], on Quay, 270.
- Philadelphia Record (rep.), on civil service reform, 92.
- Philippi, W. Va., Journalist Hall, postmaster at, 155.
- Phipps, W. C., efficient employe in Indianapolis city service removed for political reasons, 297.
- Phoenix, N. Y., Journalist Williams postmaster at, 155.
- Pickering, J. E., postmaster at Alta, Iowa, a political worker, 260.
- Pierce, Captain, appointed Indian agent at Pine Ridge vice Roger removed, 192.
- Pierce, A. G., negro, deputy collector internal revenue, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344, 348.
- Pierce, President, spoils system under, 405.
- Pierce, Neb., Journalist Sharab postmaster at, 149.
- Pierre, S. Dak., physician of Indian agency at Greenwood, S. Dak., engages in political work at, shirking duty, 202.
- Pilgrim, —, federal office-holder, political worker, 162.
- Pilot, on Quay, Dudley, Wanamaker, and decent politics, 257.
- Pine Ridge, S. Dak., Roger, a political worker appointed Indian agent at, 192; causes of Indian trouble at, 217, 218.
- Piper, postmaster at Manchester, N. H., active politician, 113.
- Piper, F. T., editor, appointed postmaster at Sheldon, Iowa, 142.
- Pitkin, U. S. minister to Argentina, political worker, 382.
- Pitrodie, S. Dak., Journalist Cheny, postmaster of, 155.
- Pittsburg, Pa., post office at, controversy between Congressman Dalzell and Sen. Quay over, 87, 112; McKean appointed postmaster at through influence of Sen. Quay, 96; surveyorship of customs at, candidate of Quay appointed, 112; Postmaster McKean of, spoilsman, 133; per cent. of removals in classified and unclassified service in post office at, 185; (Ass't) Postmaster Edwards of, supporter of Quay, suspected by Harrison, 290.
- Pittsburg Dispatch (repub.), patronage an evil, 75; on "Chinese civ. service," 92.
- Place, J. A., editor, spoilsman, appointed postmaster at Oswego, N. Y., 126.
- Plain City, O., Journalist Horn postmaster at, 149.
- Plainfield, Ind., postmaster at, appointed through influence of Congressman Matson, 30; Hatton supported by Congressman Cooper for postmaster of, 329.

Plainfield, N. Y., Postmaster Pope of favors reform methods, but appoints his son ass't postmaster, 157.

Plainview, Miss., Meacham, journalist, appointed postmaster at, 126.

Plainview, Neb., Journalist Stevens, postmaster at, 149.

Platforms, national, see also Conventions; of different parties support civil service reform, 229.

Platforms, republican; national, 1872, 1876, 1880, 1884, 1888, 1892, favor civ. serv. ref., 9, 27, 50, 73, 275, 291, 337.

Platform, democratic; national, 1888, 1892, on civil serv. ref., 349, 365.

Platforms, state, see also Conventions; republican; 1884, 1887, favor civil serv. ref., 122; California, 1884, demands civ. service reform, 50; Connecticut, 1872, 1874, advocates civil serv. reform, 50; Delaware, 1882, advocates civil serv. reform, 50; Georgia, 1871, advocates civ. service reform, 50; Illinois, 1872, 1882, 1890, advocate civ. serv. reform, 50, 156; Indiana, 1876, 1886, 1890, favors civ. service ref., 50, 51, 156; Iowa, 1874, 1884, advocates civ. serv. ref., 50, 6; Maryland, 1871, advocates civ. serv. ref., 50; Massachusetts, 1877, 1885, 1890, advocates civ. serv. ref., 50, 51, 180; Minnesota, 1872, 1884, advocates civ. serv. ref., 50; Missouri, 1872, advocates civ. serv. ref., 50; New Hampshire, 1872, advocates civil serv. ref., 50; New Jersey, 1871, 1872, advocates civ. serv. reform, 50; New York, 1872, 1877, 1885, 1887, 1891, advocate civ. serv. ref., 50, 51, 288; Ohio, 1871, 1877, 1886, on civil serv. ref., 50, 51; Pennsylvania, 1882, 1883, 1884, 1885, 1887, 1888, advocate civ. serv. ref., 51; West Virginia, 1872, advocates civ. serv. ref., 50.

Platform, democratic, Delaware, 1890, silent regarding civ. serv. ref., 145; Indiana, 1890, 1892, denounces Harrison's administration of the civil service, 156, 349; Massachusetts, 1890, 1891, on civ. serv. reform and Harrison's abuse of it, 180, 288; Michigan, 1890, on abandonment of civ. serv. ref. by republicans, 180; New Hampshire, 1890, denounces Harrison's administration of the civil service, 156; Ohio, 1891, silent on subject of civil serv. ref., 288; Pennsylvania, 1890, 1891, denounces Quay and republican party for abuse of the civ. service, 156, 288; Wisconsin, 1890, denounces Harrison's administration of the civ. service, 156.

Platt, deputy collector in Indiana, at Minneapolis convention, 380.

Platt, senator, compels postmasters in Connecticut to give list of voters, 330.

Platt, F., gets office through his father, 255; and Fassett, 258; and proposed prosecution of Van Cott, and Hendricks, 287.

Platt, J. I., editor and postmaster at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., in N. Y. convention, 335; inefficient, removes Deputy S. Smith, 386.

Platt, T. C., ex-senator in New York on civil serv. ref., 18; politicians like, 22; patronage of New York given to by Pres. Harrison, 27, 52, 56, 68, 94, 142, 173, 263, 264, 265, 266, 282, 376; spoilsman, 35, 43, 45, 65, 77, 112, 172, 269, 289, 298, 311, 329, 355, 369, 373, 374, 387, 388, 105; names postmaster for Elmira, N. Y., 53; and postmastership at Oswego, N. Y., 71; and Hiscock, Sen., and Syracuse post-office, 71; attributes defeat of 1889 partly to disappointment of office-seekers, 76, 77; arranges for census appointments in New York, 121; and Harrison, 121; candidate for U. S. senator, 143; faction of, and its opposition, 183; and Police Justice Smith, see New York City, 198, 199; recommends appointment of Wheeler, 241; gives dinner to Clarkson, 245; controls patronage of custom house in New York city, gets office for his son, 255, 256; "freezes out" Erhardt, collector at New York city, 258, 259, 260, 350; inspires issuing of call for political contributions, 279; defended, 281; and Fassett campaign, 287, 288; and removal of Flood, postmaster at Elmira, N. Y., 297, 303; endorses Payne, 312; deserts Harrison, 332; supporters of removed, 332, 334; and re-nomination of Harrison, 334, 335, 366; given patronage, criticises Harrison, 337, 339, 341, 344, 346, 347; "placated," 353, 354, 357, 359, 360, 361, 362; secures removal of Burt, naval officer at New York, 368; and confers with Reid and Harrison, 371.

Plattsburgh, N. Y., Journalist Lansing postmaster at, 155.

Plattsburg, Vt., custom-house at not classified, number of employes in, 277.

Playford, R. S., journalist, postmaster at Carbon-dale, Kan., 148.

Pledger, W. A., negro, railway mail employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.

Plumb, Sen., and changes in post offices in Kan., 55; on tariff, 169; spoilsman, and census bureau, 203; allied with Gorman, 214, 228; attacks civil service commission, 250, 251; custom employe, sec investigation, 327.

Plunkitt, state senator of New York, bill of for race course in Central Park, 320.

Plymouth, Ind., Editor Siders appointed postmaster at, 126, 377.

Plymouth, Mass., Postmaster Burns of, to be removed for political reasons, applicants for position favored by E. A. Morse, 187.

Political activity of federal office-holders, see Harrison, W. H., also names of states, 336, 370.

Political assessments, see Curry, also names of states, 153.

Political corruption in Maryland, Bonaparte on, 317, 324.

"Political ingratitude," see Indianapolis Journal, 181, 182.

Politics, divorce of municipal business from, by M. Storey, 261, 283, 286.

Polk, Pres., for revenue tariff, 211, 244.

Pontiac, Ill., removal of Reno, postmaster of, demanded by Congressman Payson, for "offensive partisanship," 188.

Poorman, C. L., editor, given federal office, 301.

Pope, actor, recites Sheridan's Ride at Chicago convention, appointed consul to Toronto, 56.

Pope, E. R., postmaster at Plainfield, N. Y., favors reform methods, but appoints his son assistant postmaster, 157.

Pope, Gen. J., advocates congressional appointment of federal office holders, 52.

Port Clinton, O., Editor Martin postmaster at, 301.

Port Huron, Mich., Collector Geer of, spoilsman, asks for special examination, denied, 36; customs district of classified, 1883, 276.

Port Townsend, relative of Pres. Harrison appointed deputy collector of customs at, 30, 349; custom-house at not classified, number of employes in, 277.

Porter, A. G., spoken for mission to Rome, 7, 14, 85; worker for Harrison, 377; U. S. minister to Rome resigns to do political work, 382.

Porter, D. E., sells offices, 104.

Porter, O. T., editor, given office, 39.

Porter, R. P., editor, census supt., and Roosevelt, see Civil Service Reformer; appointed, 14; civil serv. law, 19; gives patronage to Senators Quay and Cameron, 72; gives Shidy office at request of Roosevelt, 101, 103; spoilsman, 104; and census service in New York, 121; overrun with office-seekers, 88, 131; Congressman Dalzell, 133; permits spoils methods in census service, 157; and Foulke, 173; defends appointments, 182; claims held examinations for clerks, 190; examination papers used in census services by, 219, 220; office under given to Weigel, worker for Bos-Filley, 226; fears investigation of census bureau, 233, 331; at convention republican league, 259; opposition of to civil service reform, 292, 294.

Porter Co., Ind., Vidette [repub.], on "Farwell Club," 83.

Portland, Ind., Lowry, postmaster at, removed, Editor Marsh appointed through influence of Browne, 88, 116, 126; political worker, 377, 380.

Portland, Me., changes in offices in, 22; Briggs, politician, appointed postmaster at, 150; employes in exceed requirements, see Reed, 242; customs district of classified in 1883, employes in, 276, 277.

Portland, Oregon, custom-house at not classified, number of employes in, 277.

Portsmouth, N. H., navy yard at, see also Kittery, Me.; work on war ships, in navy yard at, for political reasons, 217; merit system introduced in navy yard at by Tracy, 251.

Posey, Congressman, and office-seekers, 11; secures appointment of henchman in place of Isabella De La Hunt, 26; obtains appointment of worker as postmaster at Evansville, Ind., 16; uses influence for appointment of Throop, collector at Terre Haute, Ind., 59.

Postal divisions, superintendents of, proposal of Congressman Andrew to extend civil service law to, 306.

Postmaster, editors and publishers appointed; cases and lists of, 30, 37, 46, 71, 108, 126, 132, 141, 142, 148, 149, 155, 186, 200, 301, 302, 316, 377; scrambles for places of, 47, 72, 84, 88, 89, 109, 121, 216; recommended for re-appointment, 88, 91, 100; wanton removals, cases and lists of, 29, 39, 45, 47, 54, 55, 71, 90, 91, 101, 112, 118, 149, 165, 176, 186, 187, 282, 288, 362, 377, 386, 408; removals on secret charges, cases and lists of, 39, 175, 176, 177; eudalistic appointments, 108, 134, 135, 136, 143, 144, 150, 153, 158, 159, 160, 162, 186, 187, 211, 219, 340; henchman, service of, cases and lists of cases of, 134, 135, 136, 143, 144, 159, 160, 162, 186, 219, 259, 260, 262, 264, 265, 266, 280, 287, 302, 316, 334, 335, 336, 342, 343, 344, 316, 347, 348, 360, 362, 370, 377, 378, 379, 380, 382, 386; bad appointments, cases and lists of, 32, 39, 47, 54, 55, 90; special cases at Syracuse, N. Y.; Elmira, N. Y.; Terre Haute, Ind.; Valparaiso, Ind.; South Bend, Ind.; Muncie, Ind.; New Albany, Ind.; Indianapolis, New York, Baltimore, St. Louis, Boston, Philadelphia, Milwaukee, Ft. Wayne, Ind.; Pittsburgh, Augusta, Me.; La Fayette, Ind.; see same; removed and appointed by Brosius at May, Huber, Burke, Chestnut Level, New Holland, Lancaster, Columbia, Mannheim, Marietta, Strasburg, Little, Ephrata, Mt. Joy, 72; Judson, of Prattsville, N. Y., insane through fear of loss of office, 415; at Mt. Vernon, Ind., and Sen. Harrison, 96; Childs, of Brattleboro, Vt., caucus on question of reappointment of, 108; Harrington, at Monson, Mass., reappointment of recommended, refused by Wanamaker, 188; at Newton, Mass., democrat Morgan reappointed, 224; at Sandwich (Mass.), democrat Shevlin reappointed, 224; at Washington, D. C., Sherwood promoted to be, 153; Warner, Albany, N. Y., favors civ. serv. reform, 51, enforces law, 136; Sperry, at New Haven, Conn., favors civ. service reform, 91; Ketcham, of Ditney, Ind., solicited for political contributions, 387, 392; of Ogden, Ind., distributes campaign documents, 390; Terry, of Terryville, N. Y., removed for refusing to pay political assessments, 391; and P. O. employes in Buffalo, N. Y., pay political assessments, 391; Gates, of Waterton, N. Y., furnishes political information, 392; Smith, of Laurel, Del., attempts bribery, 397, 401, 402; Daniels, of Withey, Mich., poll of voters asked of, 383; Eatou, of New Orleans, pays political assessments, 383; at Omaha, Neb., under Cleveland and Harrison, violates law, 281; at Moberly, Mo., uses census enumerators as political workers, 131; Crum, negro, nominated for, at Charleston, S. C., for vote at Minneapolis, not confirmed, 363; Milliken, of Waterville, Me., and non delivery of papers advocating Burleigh, congressional candidate opposing Manley, 364; Isabella De La Hunt, at Canneltou, Ind.; appointed upon recommendation of Sen. Harrison, by Pres. Arthur, removed by Cleveland, Pres. Harrison refuses to reappoint, 368; of Madison, Wis., controls places in census service, 293; Bennett, of Hartford, Conn., removal of Barrio, efficient P. O. inspector, 298; Sperry, of New Haven, testifies to worth of Barrio, removed P. O. inspector, 298; Gilleland, of Allegheny, Pa., supporter of Quay, suspected by Harrison, 299; at Bradford, Pa., Flennickeu appointed, but removed on protest of H. C. Frick, 99; Hendrix, of Brooklyn, N. Y., removed and place offered to politician, 131; Pope, at Plainfield, N. Y., favors reform methods, but appoints his son ass't postmaster, 157; Zunstein, of Cincinnati, O., carries out spirit of civil service law, 257; Richensteen at L. I. City, letter to, advocating reform methods, 100; Wooster, of Fostoria, O., compelled by Washington authorities to turn over office to spoils, 91; at Richmond, Ind., the "party," 183; at Mt. Vernon, Ind., son of Gov. Hovey appointed, 71; at Austin, Texas, chairman republican state committee appointed, 71; at Hamilton, Mo., N. C. Clarkson appointed, 150; at Kansas City appoints relative of Pres. Harrison his deputy, 84; Rice, of Springfield, Mass., case of, 87; at South Hadley Falls, Mass., democrat Kirkpatrick nominated, see Wallace and Harrison, 157; Van Duzer, of Horseheads, N. Y., attempted removal of by Fassett, 331; Van Duzer, of Horseheads, N. Y., and removal of Flood, 304; Dunn, of Binghamton, N. Y., and removal of pension examiner Dr. Van Alstyne, 304; at Wyoming, Ill., removed because appointed through "political intrigue," Hammond appointed, 176; Reno, of Pontiac, Ill., removal of demanded by Congressman Payson, for "offensive partisanship," 188; Smith, of Carrollton, Ill., removed through influence of Senator Cullom, 188; at Laurel, Md., democrat appointed to please Gorman, 38; at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Editor Platt appointed, inefficient, removes deputy S. Smith, 386; Hathaway, of house of representatives, spoilsman, methods of, 242; Seifrits buys appointment as, at Washington, Ind., 121; at Mitchell, Ind., Wood purchases position is appointed, 89; at Winamac, Ind., applicants for position of, bargaining for, 88; at Palo Pinto, Mo., buys office, see also Trollington and Upton, 55.

Postmaster-general, see Wanamaker.

Postmaster-general, first assistant, see Clarkson.

Postmasters, arbitrary removals of, see resolutions of National League, 1890; regulation of, appointment of advocated, 100; many democratic ordered out, 16; presidential, many removals and appointments of, 27, 29; fourth-class, appointed through influence of Sen. Cullom, 30; number of appointed in Indiana from March 4th to July 20 inclusive, 1889, 31; editors appointed, 37; removals of fourth-class, 39, 62; comparison of changes of for first five months of Pres. Harrison and Cleveland's terms, 45; 15,000 removed by Postmaster Gen'l Clarkson up to Sept., 1889, 49; removals of, for political reasons, 54, 186; appointed through influence of Congressman Owen and Sen. Plumb, 55; fourth-class in Indiana, see Michener, 67; meeting of in Washington, 69; removal of 30,000 fourth-class without cause, 70; fourth-class, objections to removal of, see Simond, 91; removals of fourth-class in Washington Co., Ind., 91; forced resignations of, 111; bill of H. C. Lodge, M. C., regarding appointments of fourth-class, 115, 238; removals up to May, 1890, 120; of fourth-class and Cleveland, 124; fourth-class in Missouri, control of given to Filley, 132; become political workers, 160; removals of upon secret charges investigations of by committee of National League, 175, 176, 177; presidential, number of who are political workers, 186; Cleveland makes clean sweep, 187; forth class, bill of Lodge for selection of on basis of merit, 238 fourth-class, allowed to work politically for Harrison, 240; in Indiana, workers for Harrison, 260; fourth-class, removal of under Clarkson, 261; sons of, political workers for Hiscock, 265; fourth-class, bill to regulate appointment of, opposed by Wanamaker, 298; in Indiana, work for Harrison, 302; paper on appointment of, by Wood, before annual meeting, National League, 1892, 329; asked for list of voters by American Protective League, 330; in New York, asked for lists of republicans, 370; in Michigan, asked for lists of voters, 375; in DeKalb Co., Ind., political workers, 380; assessment of by American Protective

- Tariff League, 382; Allegheny Co., association of, levies political assessments, 384; fourth-class, bill of Congressman Andrew to regulate appointments of, recommended by civil service commission, 359, 388, 397; in Jefferson Co., N. Y., political assessments levied against, 391; applicants for positions as, supported by Congressman Cooper, 398, 399.
- Post-office at Indianapolis, Baltimore, St. Louis, Milwaukee, N. Y. City, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Syracuse, N. Y.; at Norwich, Conn., removal of, place given to spoilsmen, see Norwich (Conn.); at Troy, N. Y., and Indianapolis, investigate by civ. service commission, 36; at Vincennes, Ind. (see Chambers), 37; at Cannelton, Ind., see Clarkson, and 54; at Warsaw, Mo., sold by Upton, see Upton, 55; at Columbus, O., applicants for and Sen. Sherman, 67; at Lincoln, Neb., controlled by Connell, applicants for postmastership, 72; per cent. of removals in classified and unclassified service in, at New Haven, Conn., 185; at Jersey City, N. J., 185; at Kansas City, Mo., 185; at Denver, Colo., 185; at Chicago, 185; at Albany, N. Y., 185; at Cincinnati, merit system in, 257; at Lockport, N. Y., controlled by Hiscock, 259; at Cincinnati, O., merit system in, 358; at St. Joseph, Mo., political assessments in, 3-3; at Lafayette, Ind., employees in distribute campaign documents, 389.
- Post-office department, Wanamaker establishes board of promotion by competitive examination in, 256, 257.
- Post-offices, fourth-class changes in, see Delano, 47; applicants for in Chester Co., Pa., see Chester Co., 55; changes in, by Pres. Harrison in Kan., 55; taking the fourth-class out of politics, plan of R. H. Dana for, 68, 74; presidential report on, by committee of National League, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166; presidential, turned over to spoils, 211; given to editors by Harrison, 240; see also press; having less than 50 employees, 277; information regarding, refused to Rogers by P. O. department, 297; of 25 employees, proposal to classify by Andrew, 305; all free delivery classified by Harrison, heads of divisions in should be classified, 403; Roosevelt on benefits of classification of free delivery, 415.
- Post-office department, number of classified employees in total service of, 193; relative of Harrison appointed law clerk in, 369; examinations for applicants for position in service of, 396.
- Post-office employe does detective work for Harrison at Minneapolis convention, 346.
- Potter, worker for Internal Revenue Collector Hill in Maryland convention, 335.
- Potter, Bishop, and civ. serv. ref., 28, 30; and attempt to purify politics in New York City, 130; address of on political dangers, 1890, 145.
- Potter, J., editor, appointed postmaster at Davis, Ill., 141.
- Potts, W., at Baltimore conference, 1889, 2, 42, 44; refused access to records of removals in postal service, 163; on committee of publication of Good Government, 357.
- Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Editor Platt postmaster of, in New York convention, 335; inefficient, removes Deputy S. Smith, 386.
- Pousland, federal employe, political worker at Boston, 334.
- Powers, H. C., collector internal revenue, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344, 348; levies political assessments, 384.
- Powers, J., naval officer at Philadelphia, worker for Harrison, 300.
- Pratt, D. W., postmaster at Farmington, Me., removed on secret charges, 175.
- Pratt, E. W., asst. appraiser at N. Y. City, pays political assessments, 279.
- Prattsville, N. Y., Judson postmaster of, insane through fear of loss of office, 415.
- Prentice, Counselor, removed from N. Y. City health dept., 356.
- Present Status of Civil Service Reform, by Rev. H. Lambert, criticised, 255.
- Presidency, Hill sells, 307.
- President, appointing power of, 6; duties of, in regard to the civil service, under the constitution, 271.
- Press, and civ. service reform, 83; [repub.] on civ. service reform, 92.
- Press, bribery of, Pres. W. H. Harrison on, 17; see King, A. Allison, Habercorn, Beyrle, Reed, Stone, White, Douglass, Rice, Hicks, New, Roberts, Junkin, Halstead, Clarkson, Porter R. P.; under Cleveland, see Plainfield, Ind., 30, 81, 149, 366, 368, 369; by Quay in Pennsylvania, 151; in Indiana, 240, 378; under President Harrison, 30, 31, 36, 39, 46, 47, 56, 67, 80, 85, 88, 90, 94, 97, 100, 121, 126, 132, 141, 142, 148, 149, 150, 151, 153, 154, 155, 186, 187, 240, 249, 260, 266, 299, 301, 302, 316, 368, 369, 377, 386; Editor Porter given office, 39; see Rahway, N. Jersey, Smyth, Watrous, Lawshe, Smith, 71; see speech of Harrison, Sen., 81; condemned by Daniel Webster, 81; see Dunlap, Gardner, Forbes, Whitney, Challis, Kinney, 84.
- Prickett, J. P., editor, appointed postmaster at Albion, Ind., 126, 377.
- Pride, chief clerk under Cunningham in assay office at Boise City, Idaho, politician, 30.
- Princess Anne, Md., Duer, postmaster, of, removed for political reasons, Lankford appointed, 408.
- Princeton, Ind., Tichner, postmaster of political worker, 316, 378.
- Princeton, N. J., Theo. Seminary professors in, and civil service reform, 40.
- Princeton, Wis., Journalist Bebee postmaster at, 155.
- Princeville, Ill., Editor Barnum appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Printing and engraving, bureau of, status of reform in, 32; employees in, political workers, 179; dismissals in for lack of appropriation, 234; Gorman secures place in for low politician, 237; bureau of, under Cleveland and Harrison, 368.
- Pritchard, J. C., 159; Harrison delegate from N. Carolina, 334.
- Pritchett, R. M., editor, appointed postmaster at Dana, Ill., 141.
- Proctor, N., discharged by Sec'y Whitney from navy yard at Norfolk, Va., 147.
- Proctor, R., Sec'y, 242; Senator, 362.
- Professions, the, and civil service reform, see Roosevelt, dinner to at Indianapolis, 227, 229.
- Promises, of democratic party, 397, 398.
- Promotion, of Thompson, asst. postmaster at Indianapolis, to be postmaster, and consequent promotions, 235; by voluntary competition, introduced in departments at Washington by Harrison, 274; without examination, stopped by Harrison, 275; by competitive examinations, 286; in departments at Washington, rules governing, 289; on merit, under Wanamaker, by examination, 297, 298; on merit system, introduction of, in Washington departments, 321; should fill places below presidential offices, 413.
- Proner, postmaster of Speucerville, Ind., political worker, 379, 380.
- Protestant Episcopal Church and civil service reform, see Church.
- Prudden, Dr. T. M., withdraws from N. Y. City Health Dept. because it becomes political machine, 356.
- Pryor, federal office-holder, political worker, 287.
- Public school, and civil service reform, see Curtis, 205.
- Public Service, journal, 306.
- Publicity of eligibles, ordered by civil serv. commission at Indianapolis, 25.
- Pulaski, N. Y., Journalist Muzzy postmaster at, 155.
- "Purity in Politics," see Van Anda, 137.
- Purity in Politics, see Ingalls, 190.
- Purroy, Fire Commissioner of N. Y. City, 234.
- Pursell, F. S., journalist, postmaster at Logan, O., 149, 301.
- Pursell, J., policeman of New York tries to defraud by pretending to sell office, 224, 225.
- Putnam (Indiana), Democrat, and CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 13; advocates civil service reform, 76.
- Putnam, Judge A. A., letter of to Wanamaker regarding removal of Farnum, unanswered, 175.
- Putnam, R. P., federal employe, heuchmen for Grosvenor, 204, 205.
- Quackenbush, congressman, obtains appointment of G. H. Stevens, disreputable character, as postmaster at Shushan, N. Y., 32, 54; urges appointment of O'Brien in postal service of house representatives, 242; elect, political worker, 279.
- Quay, senator, spoilsman, 5, 35, 43, 45, 93, 119, 174, 175, 192, 214, 227, 256, 261, 263, 281, 350, 361, 373, 387, 388, 390, 404, 405, 412, 415, 422; and the offices, 6; and post-office at Philadelphia, 15; and spoils, 17; and Postmaster-Gen'l Wanamaker, 22; and Pennsylvania legislature, 22; and office-seekers, 24; dictates appointment of Postmaster-General Wanamaker, 27; conflict with Wanamaker over Philadelphia spoils, 30; supersedes Don. Cameron in control of patronage in Pa., 34; secures the appointment of Cooper as collector of customs at Philadelphia, 39; patronage of Pa. given to by Pres. Harrison, 28, 38, 47, 56, 68, 70, 72, 77, 85, 94, 95, 137, 138, 282, 329, 382, 337, 341, 376; agent of organizes machine, urges adoption of resolution demanding repeal of civil service law, 49; negotiates with Mahone, 52; controversy of with Dalzell over Pittsburgh post-office, secures appointment of postmaster, 87; secures appointment of McKean as postmaster at Pittsburgh, 90; endorses Sturgis for postmaster at Uniontown, Pa., 99; endorses Drapo for collectorship at Pittsburgh, 100, 104; political history of, 105; obligations of Pres. Harrison to, 111; protest of Lea against patronage of, 112; and appointments, 118; and Harrison, 121, 353; methods of, 130, 131; career of, 133, 134, 135, 151, 152; condemned by Maryland Civil Service Reform Association, 136; and U. S. Attorney Lyon, 143; opposition to in Pennsylvania, 153; condemned by Lincoln Independent-Republican committee, 156; opposes Canaday, 160; revolt against rule of, 161, 162, 170, 171; "boss" in Pennsylvania, 172; and election in 1890 in Pa., 173; confers with Internal Revenue Collector Martin, 183; supports Leeds, disreputable politician, 216; condemned by Young Men's Republican Club of Massachusetts, 219; ruins ballot reform bill of Pennsylvania, aided by Federal Officer Martin, 228, 229; Pres. Harrison makes terms with, 235; Harrison combines with, 237; and appointment of Martin, disreputable politician, internal revenue collector in Pa., 232, 233; defended by Cooper, collector at Philadelphia, Pa., reconciled with Harrison, 241; in Pennsylvania and elsewhere, 245, 246, 249, 250, 251, 252, 256; eulogy of by nat. rep. committee, 257; eulogized by federal officers in Pennsylvania, 260; and Americus Club, 269; revolt against in Pennsylvania, 270; supported by federal office-holders in convention at Scranton, Pa., and elsewhere, 280; denounced by Pennsylvania democrats, 288, 289; republican leader in Pennsylvania, 298; supporters of, removed from office by Harrison, 299, 301; wins libel suits against, 305; controls Pennsylvania delegation, 310; in Pennsylvania, 313, 314; supporter of Blaine, 344, 345; at Minneapolis convention, 347; eulogy of by Clarkson, 351; "placated," 357, 361, 362; asks for appointment of Wanamaker as reward for raising campaign fund, 368; secures appointment of Martin, 374; imitators of in Indiana, 414; deserts Harrison, 337, 341.
- Quay, R. R., 361.
- Quimby, H. B., relative of federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Quincy, Ill., C. A. Wilcox, editor, appointed postmaster at, removals at for political reasons, 141, 148.
- Quincy, Josiah, 69; secy. Massachusetts state democratic committee, signs petition for larger appropriation for civil service commission, 102; on spoils system, 308.
- Quincy, Mass., removal of Speare, postmaster of, desired by Morse, 86; Adams appointed postmaster at, vice Speare, removed, 100; a political worker, 162.
- Quinn, postmaster at Decatur, Ind., political worker, 379.
- Rahway, N. J., editor, appointed postmaster at, 71.
- Rail, J., ward politician of Indianapolis, see Parnell Hall, 194, 195; supports fire-chief Webster, 208.
- Railway Mail Service, condition of, 53, 68; removals in, 66, 94; necessity for reform in, 69; removal of hundreds of clerks in, under Wanamaker, 70; brought under civ. service law by Cleveland, 81; bill of Sen. Paddock to withdraw from civ. service law, 92; eligible lists in, 111; applicant for position before put under civil service law, see Lodge, 122; superintendent of condemned, 125; employees in getting "in line," 162; examinations for, should be more difficult, suggestions of Wanamaker, 193; Pres. Cleveland extends civil service law to, 224; in Iowa, political assessments levied in, 240; civil service law extended to, under Cleveland, action under his orders postponed at request of commission, by Harrison, 275, 403; employees in must pass physical examination, 305, 372; turned over to spoils under Harrison, 376; examinations for 1891-92, 396; prize offered for best clerk in, by Wanamaker, won by H. P. Swift, 415.
- Raines, J., Congressman, uses census patronage for his own benefit, letter of, requesting list of voters, 293.
- Raisin, I. F., low politician, appointed naval officer at Baltimore, through influence of Gorman, 237, 245; career of, 251.
- Randall, C. S., Congressman, recommends unwarranted removal of Carpenter, postmaster at New Bedford, Mass., 29, 175, 176; secures re-appointment of Shevlin as postmaster at Sandwich, 224.
- Ransdell, D., 7; appointed marshal District of Columbia, political worker, 34, 68, 77, 84, 85, 96, 112, 126, 173, 181; and office-seekers, 37; uses influence for appointment of Troop, 59; makes unfit appointments, 80; and printing office, 234; gets offices for relatives, 244; works for Harrison at Minneapolis and elsewhere, 297, 302, 337, 342, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 378, 379; and Chase, candidate for Governor of Indiana, 352.
- Ransdell, E. S., convicted of theft, gets office through influence of Marshal Ransdell, 80, 244.
- Ransom, Senator and Eaves, 159.
- Rany, M. A., editor, appointed postmaster at Fontanelle, Iowa, 142.
- Rarick, J. H., editor, appointed postmaster, at La Grange, Ind., 377.
- Rathbone, E. G., resigns as mail inspector, appointed 4th Asst. P. M. General, 241; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 337, 344, 345, 346; confers with New, 340, 379; refuses to give reasons for removal of Terry, 391.
- Rathbone, E. H., journalist, postmaster at Haddon, Kan., 149.
- Rathbone, L. G., appointed postmaster at Elmira, N. Y., vice Flood, removed on secret charges, 303, 304, 312.
- Ratnour, E., postmaster at Weeping Water, Neb., removed on secret charges, Butler appointed, 175.
- Raum, G. B., pension commissioner and clerks in pension service, 71; spoilsman, 108, 129, 130; believed to be dishonest, 173, 190; attempts to override civil service law, 203; and Harrison, career of, 237, 238; uses office for political purposes, 373; political worker, 370, 382, 389.
- Raum, Jr., G. B., appointed by his father, pension commissioner, to office in pension bureau, 130, 227, 254; before congressional committee, 190; sells offices, etc., 237, 238; removed from pension service for dishonesty, 228.
- Ravenna, Kan., Journalist Hart postmaster at, 149.
- Ray, Congressman, recommends Flenniken for postmaster at Bradford, Pa., 99; secures appointment of Underwood as postmaster at

- Washington, Pa., 100; on Senator Quay, 118; patronage of, 133.
- Ray, federal appointee, admits attempt to bribe member of legislature, 89.
- Ray, C. H., federal office-holder, political worker, see also Baltimore investigation, 320, 326, 327.
- Raymond, F., politician, aided by custom-house employes, 108; political boss, and appointments to census service, 121; deputy collector at N. Y. City, political worker, 279; controlled selection of census enumerators in N. Y. City, 294; in New York convention, 335; Minneapolis convention, 343, 344.
- Reading, Cal., Bush, political worker, appointed postmaster at, 186, 187.
- Reagan, Congressman, not much good to come of civ. service law, 73.
- Rector, J. W., politician of Texas, 159; internal revenue collector, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Reed, Judge, and congressman, opposed to patronage system, 91.
- Reed, A., editor, appointed consul at Dublin, 30.
- Reed, A. H., appointed postmaster at Flora, Ill., 141.
- Reed, J., employe in Baltimore custom-house, testimony of on interference of federal officers in primaries at, 254.
- Reed, T., and spoils, 22, 226; as speaker, house committee on civ. service, appointed by, 86; bribery of voters for, 145; secures appointment of Briggs as postmaster at Portland, Me., 150; desires spoil of Kittery, Me., navy yard, 118, 153; hampered by refusal of spoil, 157; on fulfillment of party pledges, 168; "boom" of, 178; opposes Australian ballot system, 228; keeps more employes in Portland (Me.) custom house than necessary, 242.
- Reeder, F., Genl., political worker for Quay, 280, 361.
- Reeds, W. H., member of Cowie faction, see New York, 211.
- Reelsville, Ind., Elliott, postmaster at removed, Gaskin appointed, 89.
- Reform Club at N. Y., see N. Y., 42.
- Reid, W., editor New York Tribune, appointed minister to France, 14, 369, 371, 381, 382, 389; republican candidate for vice-president, 1892, 354; and Platt, 360, 361.
- Reiley, W. H., postmaster in Washington Co., Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Reiley, J., employed in N. Y. custom-house, political worker, 108, 334.
- Resinger, editor, sell out to Andrews, W. H., 131.
- "Relation of the civil service to comfortable living in cities," see Gibson, 366.
- Removals, general, unwarranted, James Madison on, see Madison; in various departments, for year from July 1, 1889, see civil service com., 7th annual report; of postmasters upon secret charges, see secret charges; arbitrary, of postmasters, see Nat. League resolutions of 1890; of presidential postmasters, numerous, 27; of members of pension boards, by Tanner, 27; of foreign ministers by Pres. Harrison, 27; rate of under Asst. Postmaster-General Clarkson, 27; at Indianapolis post-office under Postmaster Jones, easily made, see Moore, 28; in treasury department, 29; of 16 R. R. mail clerks for political reasons, 276 removals in the 10th division, 29; to week ending June 6, 1889, of presidential post offices, 29; in federal offices in Niagara Co., N. Y., 80; of subordinates in treas. dep't, see Coulter, 39; under Tanner, commissioner of pensions, 51, 54; under Cravens, collector, 51; in custom house at Baltimore, in post-office at Philadelphia, 53; of postmasters for political reasons, 54, 120; in pension and sixth auditor's offices, see also Roosevelt, 55; in Brooklyn navy yard, 55, 155; by Clarkson, 39, 41, 62, 75, 76, 154, 173, 261; unjustifiable, 63; in R. R. mail service and post-offices, 66; of employes in Charlestown navy yard by Pres. Cleveland, 69; in fire dept at Indianapolis, 69; in postal service under Wanamaker, 70; in Boston custom-house under Saltonstall for good cause, 71; in district of Rockport, Ill., 73; under Cleveland, of office-holders in Maine, 73; in Indian service, 79; of fourth-class postmasters objected to, see Simond, 91; of fourth-class postmasters in Washington Co., Ind., 91; in postal service, Pres. Harrison asked to check, 92; under Cleveland and Harrison, 96; and "resignations" under Clarkson, 131; for political reasons under Postmaster McKean at Pittsburgh, 133; under Postmaster Johnson at Baltimore, for political reasons, 137; by Von Sandberg, 150; under Harrison, 45, 159, 266; secret charges, 173; under collectors Erhardt, Hedden and Magone, at New York, 183; causes of should be made public, see civil service com. annual report, 1889-90, 185; in classified service in various post-offices, 185; of presidential postmasters for political reasons, 161, 186; under Clarkson of postmasters "upon expiration of four years' service, and second commission not yet expired," 187; "offensive partisanship," 188; under Harrison, for cause only, 188; to make place for friends opposed by Lincoln, 211; wholesale, of employes in fire and police service at Indianapolis, see Equally divided politically, 212, 213; for political reasons, made by Controller Thompson at Philadelphia, 239; under Beard, collector at Boston, 245, 322; more than 100,000 under Harrison, 253; in classified and unclassified service under Johnson, postmaster at Baltimore, his testimony before Roosevelt, 254, 255; for cause only under Zumstein, postmaster at Cincinnati, O., 257; in departments at Washington, D. C., almost wholly for cause, 273; of efficient officials condemned, 286; of supporters of Quay in Pennsylvania by Harrison, 299-301; under Maynard at N. Y. custom-house, on false charges, 310; in navy yards, see Tracy, 311; in postal service for political reasons condemned, bills of Hoar (S.) and Lodge regulating, 321.
- Removal of Burt, Saltonstall, Pearson, Graves, Corse, see Burt, etc.; of De La Hunt, postmaster at Cannelton, Indiana, by Pres. Cleveland, for "offensive partisanship," 25; of Indian Commissioner Oberly and others, 27; on secret charges, cases and lists of, 45, 54, 175, 176, 177, 312; for political reasons, cases and lists of, 29, 30, 39, 45, 46, 47, 51, 54, 55, 56, 59, 71, 72, 74, 81, 87, 88, 89, 91, 94, 96, 100, 136, 142, 146, 147, 186, 187, 250, 256, 288, 297, 298, 303, 304, 319, 362, 368, 371, 374, 377, 386, 408; without cause, cases and lists of, 29, 39, 45, 176, 181, 228, 371, 374, 386; to make places for henchmen, cases and lists of, 29, 72, 90, 98, 101, 112, 126, 131, 140, 148, 188, 310, 331, 371; after four years' service, second commission, unexpired, 187, 188; of Royer, political worker and Indian agent at Pine Ridge, 192; of Dr. Stone pension examiner, and appointment of Dr. Elbert, condemned, 192; of Dougherty, fire chief at Indianapolis, Webster re-appointed, 207, 208; of U. S. district attorney at Washington, D. C., 211; of Royer, worthless Indian agent at Pine Ridge, S. Dak., 211, 217, 218; by Senator Ingalls of clerk of committee of District of Columbia, he appoints his own son, 215; of Vandervoort from R. R. mail service by P. M. Genl. Gresham, 215, 216; of Roosevelt, civil service commissioner, possible, for watching interference of federal office-holders in primaries at Baltimore, Md., 225, 226, 250, 311, 312; plots for, of Harlow, postmaster at St. Louis, Mo., 226; of Ryder, criminal, appointed to Indian service, 226; of Eastman, supervising architect of Brooklyn, N. Y., for maladministration, 234; under Hathaway, postmaster in house of representatives, 242; and re-instatement of Sears, P. O. employe at Baltimore, 277; in violation of law, under Cleveland and Harrison, in Omaha, Neb., post-office, 281; of Pension Examiner Dr. Van Alstyne, through Postmaster Dunn, 304; of Squires, corrupt public officer, see Hill, 307; of Leaycraft by Gov. Flower, 332; of Milholland, federal employe, for political activity, 332, 334; of Wimberly, internal revenue collector in Mississippi for lottery connections, 343, 348; of Erhardt, collector at N. Y. City, 350; of N. Y. R. R. Commissioner Spencer, 355; of Ewing, Prentice, from N. Y. health dept., by Tammany, 356; of P. C. MacCourt by Sec. Windon, 54; of Sharp, postmaster at Leadhill, Ark., and Stevens, postmaster at Shushan, N. Y., 54; of Reuttler, Downing and Wigg, by Sec. Whitney, 147; of Tanner, commissioner of pensions, 53; of Nat'l Hawthorne, 46; of Flenniker, postmaster at Bradford, Pa., on protest of H. C. Frick, 99; of Terry, postmaster of Terryville, N. Y., for refusing to pay political assessments, 391; by Postmaster Thompson of Indianapolis, of Carrier Duun, for soliciting political contributions, 403; of postmaster at Wyoming, Ill., for having been appointed through political intrigue, Hammond appointed, 176.
- Reno, M. A., postmaster at Pontiac, Ill., removal demanded by Congressman Payson for "offensive partisanship," 188.
- Rentfro, R. B., Harrison delegate to republican nat'l convention, appointed collector of customs at Brownsville, Texas, 46, 159.
- Report to Pres. Harrison by Roosevelt on interference of federal office holders in primaries at Baltimore, 254, 255.
- Republicans in Indiana legislature oppose bill for non partisan control of state institutions, 201, 202, 411.
- Republican clubs, league of, meeting at Cincinnati, election of Clarkson as president, 219.
- Rerick, J. H., editor, appointed postmaster at La Grange, Ind., 126.
- Resignations, forced in postal service, see National League, report of on presidential post-offices; under Clarkson, 149; in postal service, 164; cases and lists of, 165, 166, 216; of Erhardt, collector at N. Y. City, Fassett appointed to make clean sweep, 255.
- Resolutions of republicans of 6th assembly district, N. Y. City against civil service reform, 49; passed at annual meeting, 1890, Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, 120; of National League at annual meeting, 1890, 172; of annual meeting, 1892, of National League on status of civil service reform, 321.
- Reutlie, A. B., collector at port of Brownsville, Tex., a political worker, 159.
- Reuttler, C. P., discharged by Sec'y Whitney from navy yard at Norfolk, Va., 147.
- Rebyburn, Congressman, and Quay, 280.
- Reynolds, U. S. dist. att'y, political worker, and delegate to Minneapolis convention, 143, 346.
- Reynolds, Gen'l., postmaster of Rochester, N. Y., a political worker, 266.
- Rhea, M. A., journalist, postmaster at Altoona, Kan., 148.
- Rhinehart, sheriff, 107; and Brigg's cartage contract, 332.
- Rhode Island, senators and representatives of, secure appointment of Fay as postmaster at Newport, 150.
- Rhodes, S. R., journalist, postmaster at Gresham, Neb., 149.
- Rice, A. T., editor, office-holder, 14.
- Rice, F., sec'y of state for New York, worker for Hill, 309; enumeration of 1892, 317.
- Rice, G. A., post-office inspector, political worker, 160.
- Rice, J. L., postmaster at Springfield, Mass., thoroughly efficient, removal desired, 87.
- Richards, D. J., editor, postmaster at Zanesville O., 301.
- Richards, S. T., postmaster in Clayton Co., Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Richardson, member of Maryland legislature, moves for repeal of civil service law, 96.
- Richardson, E. S., negro, R. R. mail employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Richardson, R. H., negro, postmaster at Wedgefield, S. C., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Richensteen, W., appointed postmaster at Long Island City, N. Y., 54; letter to, from H. C. Johnson favoring civil service reform, 100.
- Richie, R. M., postmaster at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., a political worker, 266.
- Richmond, H. A., civil service reformer at Balt. conference, 1889, 2; address before Y. M. A. of Buffalo, March 24, 1889, 16, 32, 67, 85, 172, 200; on Curtis, 394.
- Richmond, Ind., should have civ. service law applied to local offices; Editor Jenkinson appointed postmaster at, 126, 377; postmaster of is the local "party," 183; works for Harrison, 249.
- Richmond, Ind., Sunday Register (Rep.) opposes political methods of Frank Hatton, 76.
- Richmond, Va., embezzler Russell appointed postmaster at, 374.
- Ricker, C., and political assessments, 384.
- Rickets, C. H., see Cannon, 39.
- Ricketts, V. L., editor, advocates repeal of civ. service law, is given office, 85, 86, 90, 213.
- Ridland, postmaster at Scottsburg, Ind., political worker, 144, 377.
- Riley, J., appointed to fire service at Indianapolis vice White, and Findling removed under "equally divided politically" rule, 235, 243.
- Riley, J. B., chief examiner N. Y. civil service commission, removed by Tammany, 414.
- Riley, J. L., succeeded by O. P. Ensley as chief clerk in pension office (Indiana), 108.
- Rinewalt, A. L., journalist, postmaster at Williams-ville, N. Y., 155.
- Rio Janeiro, Consul-General Armstrong at, removed for political reasons, 54.
- Ritchie, D. F., editor, appointed postmaster at Saratoga, N. Y., 126.
- Roark, N. S., and political assessments, see Kentucky.
- Roberts, A., postmaster of Addison, N. Y., a political worker, 266.
- Roberts, E. H., asst. treasurer, political worker, 354.
- Roberts, F. H., journalist, postmaster at Oskaloosa, Kan., 149.
- Roberts, G. M., political worker for Harrison, relative of Collector Cravens, of Indiana, 379.
- Roberts, W. T., receiver of political assessments for Maryland, 391.
- Robertson, Utah commissioner, political worker at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- Robertson, Col., political worker for Harrison, 302.
- Robertson, T. W., employed in custom-house (N. Y.), political worker, 108.
- Robertson, secy. of navy, orders re-instatement of thief Weeks, at request of Broadhead, at Kittery navy yard, 147.
- Robinson, postmaster at Concord, N. H., active politician, 143.
- Robinson, E. E., postmaster at Ithaca, N. Y., a political worker for Platt, 264.
- Robinson, H. C., inspector in N. Y. custom-house, a political worker, 108.
- Robinson, H. C., journalist, postmaster at Washington, Kan., 149.
- Robinson, Ill., Editor Harper appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Robinson, Congressman-elect, supported by Quay, 280; supported by Collector Cooper to succeed Quay, 299.
- Robison, W. E., journalist, postmaster at Bealsville, Pa., 149.
- Rochelle, Ill., Postmaster Gardner of succeeded by Hartong, 109; Postmaster Hartong of works for Hill, 136.
- Rochelle, Ill., Herald, letter to regarding Congressman Hitt's course in the distribution of spoil, 110.
- Rochester, N. Y., Reynolds, postmaster of a political worker, 266; Tarbox, postmaster of a political worker, 280; state civil service law enforced in city service, Belknap case, 305; Hillism at, 309.
- Rockford, Ill., applicants for positions in census service in district of, 104; Postmaster Lawler of, political worker for Congressman Hitt, 143.

- Rockhill, W., postmaster at Arcola, Ind., removed through influence of Postmaster Higgins, McGoogle appointed, 362.
- Rockport, Ill., removals in district of, 73.
- Rockport, Ill., Register (repub.), on civil service reform, 92.
- Rockwell, Congressman, recommends re-appointment of democrat Harrington, postmaster at Monson, 188.
- Rodebaugh, representative in Indiana legislature, spoilsman, 406.
- Rodney, Miss., Postmaster Engharth of, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Rogers, postmaster of Huntington, Ind., at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- Rogers, R. J., political worker, appointed postmaster, at Searcy, Ark., 186.
- Rogers, S. S., civil service reformer, 68, 172, 405; to examine management civil service, 77; report on congressional patronage to National League, 113, 114, 115; on committee investigating patent office, report of, 139, 140, 141; upholds civil service law of New York, 161; on committee of National League, investigating presidential post-offices, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 188; on committee of Nat. League, reporting on removals on secret charges, 175, 176, 177; president Buffalo Civil Service Reform Association, address of, to citizens of Buffalo, 189, 200; urges extension of civil service law, 192; address of, before annual meeting National League, 1891, on extension of classified service, 261, 275, 277; on special committee of National League, investigating census service, 291, 295; request of, for information refused by P. O. department, 297; on G. W. Curtis, 391.
- Rogers City, Mich., Journalist Larke, postmaster at, 149.
- Roggen, E. P., candidate for postmaster at Lincoln, Neb., 72, 108.
- Rokestraw, disreputable character, postmaster at Chocoma, S. Carolina, 55.
- Rollins, collector, and Eaves, 362.
- Rome, Ga., postmaster of, candidate for congress, 162.
- Ronner, J. H. V., deputy commissioner of street improvements, on Tammany methods, 234.
- Roosevelt, T., and Census Supt. Porter, see Civil Service Reformer; at Baltimore conference, 1889, 2; appointed civil service commissioner by Harrison, 17, 86, 95, 96, 103, 168, 174, 275, 405; investigates Indianapolis post-office and censures its management, 28; applies to Sec. of the Treas. and stops Coulter's proceedings, 34; and civil service reform association of Brookline, Mass., 36; on congressional patronage, 39; silences ridiculous arguments against civil service reform, 46; performances of fill republicans with disgust, 49; abuse of, 52; charges of against heads of pension and 6th auditor's offices for removals for political reasons, 55; appointment of especially good, 59; address of before Boston and Cambridge civil service reform associations, 77; reasons for removal should be public; examination questions under, 79; investigates office of Collector Cooper, of Philadelphia, 85; charges of Hatton against, Shidy case, 101; and Shidy case, 104; addresses Bloomington branch Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, 1890, 108; before congressional committee, 119; reports favorably on Indianapolis post-office, 120; commended, 125, 136; address of before civil service reform association of Maryland, 1890, on spoils in post-offices, 132; and Postmaster Johnson, of Baltimore, 137; and Grosvenor, 146, 204, 205, statement of before congressional committee; see also Grosvenor, 162; statement of as to scope of civil service reform, 172; address in Indiana, 182; before select committee of house of representatives, 188; and Wanamaker, 190, 298; urges extension of civil service reform, see also "An Object Lesson in Civil Service Reform," in Atlantic Monthly, Feb., 1891, 192; extract from address of before Commercial Club in Boston, 1890, on spoils "iniquity," 194; Gorman defends Wanamaker against, 214; investigates interference of federal office-holders in primaries at Baltimore, Md., his removal possible, 225, 226, 254, 255, 261, 267, 268, 277, 278, 321, 322, 329, 330, 350, 366, 372, 373; speech of at dinner to at Indianapolis, list of assistants, and regrets, 227, 229, 230, 231; invites 21st district republican association, of N. Y. City to investigate civil service reform as applied in N. Y. custom-house, 236; answers attacks of Gorman, Plumb and Stewart, 250, 251; praised by Mr. Storey, 257; denies charges of favoritism on part of civil service commission, 266, 267; on work of the civil service commission, 273; thanked, 287; removal of, desired by politicians, 311, 312; informed of political activity of federal employes, 334; against Wanamaker and Clarkson, 349; and Johnson, postmaster at Baltimore, 363, 372; and political assessments, 70, 97, 161, 358, 375, 383, 385, 390, 392; and duties of federal employes, 383, 384; report of, 397; resignation of, would be a loss to reform, 398; on extensions of classified service, 415.
- Root, G. A., Major, appointed postmaster at Lanark, Ill., through influence of Congressman Hitt, 109, 136.
- Rose, federal office-holder, political worker, 287.
- Rose, J. C., civil service reformer, at Baltimore conference, 1889, 2; on local examining board at Baltimore, 137, 186; investigates interference of federal office-holders at Baltimore, 225, 226, 261; on committee of National League to investigate interference of office-holders and political assessments, 338.
- Rosecrans, Gen'l., proposes that congressmen have absolute control of offices, 85.
- Roseville, Ill., Editor Hebbard appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Ross, postmaster at Washington, D. C., transferred, 153.
- Ross, M., editor of Indianapolis News, favors civil service reform, speech of at Roosevelt dinner, 227, 229, 231, 232.
- Rossing, L. A., postmaster at Bode, Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Rotation, in office in Indiana, 45; Jacksonian, 257.
- Rothwell, T., ex-alderman New York City, low politician, 199.
- Royer, political worker, appointed Indian agent at Pine Ridge, 192, 202; removed, seeks re-appointment, 211, 217, 218.
- Royer, N., appointed postmaster at Noblesville, Ind., through influence of Cheadle, 47, 89; political worker, 380.
- Rubens, fireman at Indianapolis, political worker for Trusler, 208.
- Runnell, ward politician, seeking collectorship customs at Wilmington, N. C., 183.
- Rusk, Sec., gives R. G. Blaine an office, 108; and Quay, 118; telegram of to Prof. Nipher and reply, 244, 245; supposed telegram of to Prof. Nipher never sent, 253, 290, 354.
- Russell, Jr., C. T., condemns Clarkson, 136.
- Russell, O. H., embezzler, appointed postmaster at Richmond, Va., 374.
- Rutherford, N. J., removal of Van Riper, postmaster of, on secret charges, 175.
- Ryan, efficient employe in R. R. mail service, promoted, 136.
- Ryan, U. S. minister to Mexico, political worker, 382.
- Ryan, J. J., political worker, appointed police justice by Mayor Grant, 184.
- Ryan, T., federal office-holder, returns home to vote, 162; removed for cause by Cleveland, re-appointed by Harrison, 79.
- Ryan, W. S., vice-president Kings Co., N. Y., central republican committee, 198, 304.
- Ryder, W. D., convicted criminal, appointed to Indian service, but removed, 226.
- Sage, S. L., journalist, postmaster at St. Lawrence, S. Dak., 155.
- Sahn, A., ward politician at Indianapolis, 315; applicant for postmastership of Indianapolis, see Indianapolis investigation, 411, 412.
- Sale of offices, by defeated candidate Love of Missouri, testimony of sale, 32, 55, 93, 99; elsewhere, 104, 121; in police service of San Francisco, 215; under Tammany, 221, 225; in pension bureau, by G. B. Ramm, Jr., 238.
- Salem, Ind., Ward, postmaster of, political worker, 380.
- Saltonstall, collector at Boston applies civil service methods successfully, 71; correspondence with Windom and Harrison, removal of, 94; signs petition for larger appropriation for civil serv. com., 102; removal of through influence of Hoar and Dawes, senators, Beard appointed, 105, 129, 168, 173, 179, 215, 282, 307, 376.
- Samoan commission, relative of Harrison appointed naval attache to, 369.
- San Antonio, Tex., Johnson, postmaster of, political worker, 159.
- San Carlos, Indian agency at, and Commissioner Oberly, 48.
- San Francisco, Cal., the "blind white devil of," 28; police positions sold in by Bruner, 215; customs district of, classified 1883, 276.
- Sanders, Senator, patronage of, 160.
- Sandford, E., appointed by Cleveland chief justice of Utah supreme court, removed for political reasons, 374.
- Sandwich (Mass.) democrat Shevlin reappointed postmaster at, 224.
- Sanford, congressman, helps Editor Ritchie to be postmaster at Saratoga, N. Y., 126; on house committee of civ. service, 86.
- Sangatuck, Mich., Journalist Wade, postmaster at, 149.
- Saratoga, N. Y., Editor Ritchie appointed postmaster at, although opposed by Vice-Pres. Morton, 126; Ritchie, postmaster of, a political worker, 266.
- Saulcy, E., political worker, career of, 138; deputy collector at Indianapolis, 144; political worker in Indiana, 302, 353, 375, 377, 379.
- Saunemin, Ill., Editor Brydia appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Sawyer, offered bribes for influence in behalf of candidate for Batavia, N. Y., postmastership, 47.
- Sawyer, Senator, favorably disposed to office-seekers, 6; chairman senate committee on post-offices aids nomination of Harrison, 364.
- Saxton, N. Y. state senator, calls on Fassett, collector at N. Y. City, 258.
- Saybrook, Ill., Editor Mace appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Sayre, W. G., Indian land commissioner, federal office-holder, political worker for Harrison, 189, 297, 316, 353, 378, 379, 389.
- Scanlan, J. F., political worker, given office through influence of Huston, 132.
- Scheusser, J. J., federal employe, in New York convention, 335.
- Schmester, R., employe in post-office at St. Louis, worker for Tilly machine, 150.
- Schmidt, F., custom-house deputy at Indianapolis political worker, 108, 141, 377.
- Scholar in Politics, see Roosevelt, dinner at Indianapolis, 227, 229.
- Schultz, F., census supervisor 6th Indiana district, politician, 104.
- School and civil service reform, see Civ. S. Ref.
- Schrader, Jr., J., journalist, postmaster at Lawrenceburg, Tenn., 155.
- Schreckengast, A. F., journalist, appointed census enumerator, 142.
- Schrieber, postmaster of Tell City, Ind., political worker, 380.
- Schuarfe contest, 226.
- Schurz, Carl, an "imposter," 49; Sec. of Interior under Arther, obtains reappointment of M. S. Sweet, 107, 321; address of, favoring reform methods, 396.
- Scott, C. T., appointed postmaster at Axbridge, Mass., vice Farnum removed on secret charges, 175.
- Scott, J. N., brother-in law of Harrison, given office, 21, 30, 369.
- Scott, Kan., Journalist Adams postmaster at, 149.
- Scott, N. B., member national republican committee, levies political assessments, 390.
- Scott, W. C., journalist, postmaster at Dalton O., 149.
- Scottsburgh, Ind., Postmaster Ridland of, compelled to aid Michener, 144; Ridland, postmaster of, political worker, 377.
- Scranton, Congressman, postmaster of Scranton, Pa., 101.
- Scranton, Pa., Hartley, P. O. employe at, under Postmasters Slocum and Connelly, 101; federal officer-holders political workers for Quay in convention at, 230.
- Scruggs, J. P., deputy collector int. rev., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Seenlock, G. C., negro, Harrison delegate from N. Carolina, 334.
- Seaman, L. L., protests against removal of Milholand, as federal interference, 333.
- Searcy, Ark., Postmaster McCauley of, removed after four years' service, second commission unexpired, Rogers appointed, 186, 187.
- Sears, G. W., P. O. employe, see Baltimore investigation, removal of, 277, 296.
- Secret charges, removal on, of McKenna, postmaster of Long Island City, N. Y., 175; removal of Wilson, postmaster at Chadron, Neb., on, 175; removal of Ratnour, postmaster at Weeping Water, Neb., on, Butler appointed, 175; removals upon, investigation into by committee of National League 1890, 175, 176, 177; rules of postal department on, as interpreted by Clarkson, 176; should not be allowed, 415.
- Sedan, Ind., Crane, postmaster of, political worker, 379, 380.
- Sedgwick, "Bob," political worker for Woodruff, see Kings Co., N. Y.
- Sedgwick, J. R., journalist, postmaster at McDonald, Kan., 149.
- Sefrits, L. D., buys post-office at Washington, Daviess Co., Ind., 121.
- Senate, secret executive sessions of, see Foulke.
- Senate, patronage evil in, 72.
- Seneca, Co., N. Y., republican convention of Aug., 1891, factional fights in, 259, 260.
- Service, diplomatic, necessity for reform in, 3; civil, federal, number of offices in, 10.
- Serviss, candidate for postmaster at Apple River, Jo Daviess Co., Ill., 169.
- Settle, widow of Judge, set aside through influence of Congressman Brower, 47.
- Settle, Judge, relations of in office, 47.
- Sewell, Gen'l., patronage of, 180, 386.
- Sexton, Colonel, aided by Senator Farwell for postmastership of Chicago, 14; postmaster at Chicago, spoilsman, 22.
- Seymour (Ind.) Democrat, condemns opposition to Magee bill, see also Magee, 209.
- Shackelford, Gen'l., appointment of as judge in Indian Territory, 240.
- Shaffer, J., pres. street railway company, is accused of bribing and intimidating voters, 207.
- Shangraun, L., and Indian rising at Pine Ridge, S. Dak., 218.
- Shannon, postmaster, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Shannon, Ill., Editor Mastin appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Sharob, J. B., journalist, postmaster at Pierce, Neb., 149.
- Sharp, postmaster of Ellettsville, Ind., political worker, 380.
- Sharp, H. E., convicted criminal, appointed postmaster at Leadhill, Arkansas, 39; removed, 54.
- Sharp, B. C., given office through influence of Judge Settle, his relative, 47.
- Sharpe, G. H., political worker for Platt and Hisecock, given federal office, 265; anti-Platt worker, 280; father of federal employe S. B. Sharpe, political worker for Harrison in New York, 336; federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Shaw, postmaster at Vevay, Ind., political worker, 379.

- Shaw, A. D., appointed deputy third-auditor of treasury for political services, 71, 81; a political worker, 162, 269, 352, 353, 351, 363, 378, 379, 382.
- Shaw, E. O., journalist postmaster at Newaygo, Mich., 189.
- Shay, fire-chief at N. Y. City retired on pension, 36.
- Shea, D., active politician appointed deputy of Collector Erhardt, 108; a political worker, 265, 331, 343, 344.
- Shearman, congressman, opposed to civ. service reform, 49, 54, 180.
- Shearman, J. G., and refusal of Cleveland while candidate to pledge spoil to Sheehan, 395.
- Sheehan, T. C., 317, 318.
- Sheehan, W. F., low politician of Buffalo, N. Y., 196, 197; speaker of N. Y. assembly and patronage, 215; lieutenant-governor of New York, corrupt politician, 310; and school patronage in New York, 318, 319; Cleveland refuses, while candidate, to pledge spoil to, 395; obtains suspension of civil service rules in, for benefit of workers, 414; and bill for municipal reform in Oswego, N. Y., 415.
- Shelbyville, Ind., Bone, postmaster at, removed on secret charges, 177.
- Shelbyville (Ind.) Republican (rep.), advocates civ. service reform, 76; on Magee bill for non-partisan control of state charitable institutions, 215.
- Sheldon, Iowa, Editor Piper appointed postmaster at, 112.
- Shelley, J. J., foreman on park board at New York City, defrauds Cole on pretense of selling office, 224, 225.
- Shelley, W. F., dentist, appointed postmaster at New Castle, Ind., 132.
- Shepard, E. M., on examinations in character, 153.
- Shepard, W. J., address by, before Central Labor Union of Buffalo, on civ. service reform, 44; civil service reformer of Buffalo, N. Y., 200.
- Shepardson, S. W., employe in railway mail service promoted, 136.
- Sheppard, J. T., federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Sherer, Dr., in appraiser's office at New York, removed on false charges, see "sugar frauds," 203.
- Sheridan, Gen. G. A., patronage defeated republicans in Ohio, 75.
- Sheridan, J., saloon-keeper and fish protection at Lake Keuka, N. Y., 356.
- Sherman, Senator, spoilsman, 15, 17; on evils of patronage, 25, 67, 177; at war with Quay, 56; secures appointment of Hopley postmaster at Bucyrus, O., 149; controls patronage of Ohio, 240, 310; and election controversy of 1877 in Louisiana, accused of bribery, 211; obtains office for Smith, political worker, 249; re-election due to federal patronage, 297, 301, 302.
- Sherman, Mich., Journalist Wheeler postmaster at, 149.
- Sherwood, H., promoted to be postmaster at Washington, 153.
- Shevlin, J., democrat, reappointed postmaster at Sandwich, Mass., 221.
- Shidy, P. O. employe at Milwaukee, compelled by Postmaster Paul to manipulate records, testifies against Paul, removed by him, given another place by Roosevelt, 101, 103.
- Shiel, R. R., works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 343, 379; candidate for office, aided by federal office-holders, 370.
- Shipman, Judge, and removal of Bario, efficient P. O. Inspector, 298.
- Shipsey, "Jake," gambler, friend of police justice Diver, 181.
- Shivelev, Congressman, patronage of, 421.
- Shook, S., supports Lee for place in N. Y. custom-house, 259.
- Short Hills, N. J., Kessler, grocer, appointed postmaster of, vice Goodrich removed for political reasons, 386.
- Shore, tax-clerk, a political worker, 162.
- Shrayer, A. R., a political worker for Harrison, 260.
- Shryack, C. V., editor, given office by Governor Foraker, 301.
- Shushan, N. Y., Stevens, disreputable character, appointed postmaster at, through influence of Congressman Quackenbush, 32.
- Sickles, General, of N. Y. civil service commission, a friend to civil service reform, 34.
- Seiders, J. W., editor, appointed postmaster at Plymouth, Ind., 126, 377.
- Sidney, Ohio, editor appointed postmaster at, 301.
- Sill, U. S. attorney, testifies to worth of Bario, P. O. inspector removed, 298.
- Sills, A. K., worker for Harrison, appointed swamp land agent, 30, 377.
- Simmonds, extension of civil service law advocated by, 73.
- Simmons, J. E., bank president, recommends "Paddy" Diver for police justice, 181.
- Simms, C., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.
- Simond, Congressman, civil service reformer, 91.
- Simonds, D. K., journalist, postmaster at Manchester, Vt., 155.
- Simpson, postmaster at Lamb, Ind., political worker, 379.
- Simpson, J., and Fassett, 258; requests patronage, 311, 312; federal employe, in New York convention, 334.
- Slug Sing, N. Y., E. A. McAlpin appointed postmaster at as reward for party services, 108; at convention of republican leagues, 259.
- Sinks, G. W., treas. state republican executive committee, Ohio, and political assessments, 280.
- Sissel, Rev. G. A., opposes Harrison, wants offices for negroes, 241.
- Sitka, Alaska, Journalist Kenealy postmaster at, 155.
- Sitting Bull, "kidnapping" of, 192.
- Skerritt, Commodore, opposes abuses in Kittery navy yard, 148.
- Slec, J. D. F., 259; accuses Fassett of corrupt political methods, see also Chemung, N. Y., 266.
- Sleicher, J. A., N. Y. civil service commissioner, at Minneapolis convention, 346, 354.
- "Slick Six," in Indianapolis, 230.
- Sloan, S. C., on inefficient census enumeration in N. Y. City, 294.
- Small, J. K., federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Smalls, Robert, convicted criminal appointed by Harrison, 39.
- Smethport, Pa., Postmaster Kerus of, worker for Delamater, 134.
- Smith, buys office in pension bureau from G. B. Raum, Jr., secures promotion by fraud, 238.
- Smith, politician, succeeding Miss Moody, 39.
- Smith, representative in Indiana legislature, opposes spoils methods in, 407.
- Smith, postmaster at Laurel, Del., attempts bribery, 397, 401, 402.
- Smith, Alderman, of Indianapolis, spoilsman and low politician, 207.
- Smith, A., ex-mayor of Cincinnati, office-seeker, 24; customs collector at Cincinnati, through influence of Sherman, works for, 249; political worker in Ohio, 336.
- Smith, A. A., editor and politician, appointed postmaster at Ogdensburg, N. Y., vice Baird, removed, 126.
- Smith, A. G., attorney-gen'l of Indiana, spoilsman, 315, 355.
- Smith, B. W., uses influence for appointment of Throop, 59; applicant for postmastership at Lafayette, Ind., 81; postmaster at La Fayette, Ind., aids Michener and La Follette, 144; a political worker, 153, 158, 316, 339, 342, 377, 379.
- Smith, C., son of federal officer, favorite of Platt at convention republican league, 259.
- Smith, C. E., candidate of Sen. Hiscock for postmaster at Syracuse, 16; editor, appointed postmaster at Syracuse, N. Y., vice editor removed, 81; a political worker, 266, 335, 347, 386.
- Smith, C. E., editor, appointed minister to Russia, 100, 133; worker at Minneapolis convention, 382.
- Smith, D., naval officer, on board applicants for positions in navy yard at Brooklyn, N. Y., 222.
- Smith, E., postmaster at Carrollton, Ill., removed through influence of Senator Cullom, 188.
- Smith, E. M., and political assessments in Alabama, 391.
- Smith, F. C., editor, appointed deputy collector at St. Albans, 126.
- Smith, G. A., political boss in Brooklyn, N. Y., accepts bribes, 106.
- Smith, G. W., congressman, forces resignation of Andrews, postmaster at Murphysboro, Ill., 165.
- Smith, H. C., successful competitor, given office, 1884, removed by Auditor Coulter, 45.
- Smith, J. C. H., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.
- Smith, J. E., naval office employe in N. Y. convention, 335.
- Smith, J. E., U. S. asst. dist. atty. in New York, a political worker, 265.
- Smith, J. G., journalist, postmaster at Cunningham, Kan., 119.
- Smith, S. B., anti-Platt republican, police justice and ward politician, see N. Y. City, 198, 199.
- Smith, S. E., negro, P. O. clerk delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Smith, S. F., editor, appointed postmaster at Enclitas, Cal., 111.
- Smith, T. G., civil service reformer of Buffalo, N. Y., 200; on Curtis, 391.
- Smith, W. H., federal officer, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Smith, Dr. W. M., health officer of port of New York, favorite of Platt, 259.
- Smithfield, O., father of Journalist H. Harrison postmaster at, 149.
- Smithland, Iowa, Journalist Hills appointed postmaster at, 112.
- Smock, F. M., journalist, appointed postmaster at Keota, Iowa, 142.
- Smyth, Recorder, recommends "Paddy" Diver for police justice, 181.
- Smyth, A. W., supt. New Orleans mint, pays political assessments, 383.
- Smyth, W., editor, appointed postmaster at Oswego, N. Y., 71.
- Smythe, supt. of New Orleans mint, political worker, 304.
- Snyder, H. R., journalist, postmaster at Waverly, O., 149.
- Soale, W., politician, census supervisor, 4th Indiana district, spoilsman, 104, 131, 182.
- "Solid South," vote of for Harrison and others at Minneapolis, 347.
- Sortwell, federal officer, political worker, 379.
- South Bend, Ind., Postmaster Crockett of, a political worker, 153, 158, 316, 377, 378.
- South Bend, Ind., Times (rep.), against repeal of civil service law, 83.
- S. Carolina, political activity of federal officers in, 347, 348, 382, 390.
- South Dakota, political assessments in Indian service in, 384, 385.
- South Hadley Falls, Mass., democrat Kirkpatrick nominated, see Wallace and Harrison, 157.
- Spalding appointed postmaster at Champaign, Ill., through influence of Priv. Sec. Halford, 38.
- Sparta, Ill., Editor Taylor appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Spatz, Louis, inspector in N. Y. custom-house, political worker, 108.
- Speare, appointed postmaster at Quincy, Mass., by Cleveland, removal of sought by Morse, 86; removed, 100.
- Speed, H., U. S. dis. atty., works for Harrison at Minneapolis convention, 346.
- Spencer, T. W., N. Y. state R. R. inspector, asked to resign, 355, 356.
- Spencer, W. Va., Journalist Flinn postmaster at, 155.
- Spencerville, Ind., Proner postmaster of, political worker, 379, 380.
- Sperry, postmaster at New Haven, Conn., civ. service reformer, 91, 258; testifies to worth of Bario, removed P. O. inspector, 298.
- Spidle, J., journalist, postmaster at Wilmot, O., 149.
- Spinola, congressman, against civil service reform, 122, 125.
- Spirely, L. M., editor, appointed postmaster at Kingston, Mo., through influence of Filley, 132.
- Spoils system for paying the workers in this country and England, 19; evils of, see Lincoln; evils of, Pres. W. H. Harrison on, 36; opposed by Thomas Jefferson, 46; evils of, see Strong, Rev. S., 102; evils of, see Senator Sherman, also Houk, 177.
- Spooner, senator of Wisconsin, obtains appointment of Bro. R. Spooner as consul at Prague, 30, 354.
- Spooner, H. L., journalist, postmaster at Brookfield, N. Y., 155.
- Spooner, R., appointed consul at Prague through influence of Sen. Spooner, 30.
- Sprague, E. C., address of before annual meeting of National League noticed, 269.
- Sprague, H. H., at Balt. Conference, 1889, 2; signs petition for larger appropriation for civil serv. com., 102, 172; speech of on Roosevelt, 415.
- Sprague, H. L., ward politician, see also New York City, 241, 242.
- Spring Valley, O., wife of Journalist Hale postmaster at, 149.
- Springer, Congressman, and star route scandals, 291.
- Springfield, Mass., case of Postmaster Rice, 87.
- Squire, R. M., corrupt commissioner of public works, N. Y. City, see Hill, 306, 307.
- St. Charles, Iowa, Editor Wood appointed postmaster at, 112.
- St. Clairsville, O., Editor Hunt appointed postmaster at, 301.
- St. Genevieve, Mo., Editor Ernst appointed postmaster at, 126.
- St. George, W. Va., Lipsecomb, son of journalist, postmaster at, 15.
- St. Joe Station, Ind., Postmaster Ables of, political worker, 379, 380.
- St. Joseph, Mo., political assessments of P. O. employes at, 383.
- St. Lawrence, S. Dak., Journalist Sage postmaster at, 155.
- St. Louis, disposal of patronage at, see Kerens; applicants for postmastership of, 21; J. B. Harlow appointed postmaster of, 88, 131; introduces reform methods, 136; plots to remove, 226; negro politicians of demand spoil, 146; post-office employes at supporters of Filley machine, 150; custom-house at not classified, number of employes in, 277; census service in, inefficient, 295; Postmaster Harlow of ordered to give office to political worker Rundstadtler, federal patronage is used for Harrison's renomination, 304.
- St. Louis (Globe-Democrat (rep.), patronage brings weakness, 76; on repeal civ. service law, 92.
- St. Louis Republic (dem.) favors good administration, 51; considers civil service reform as of prime importance, 59; on lesson of Garfield's assassination, 129; advocates civil service reform, 138; on Filley machine, 160.
- St. Paul Pioneer-Press (repub.), civ. service reform not abandoned, 65; favors civil service reform, accountability of Harrison, 75.
- Stacy, postmaster at Albert Lea, Minn., removed for political reasons, 39.
- Stamp, A. H., federal employe, asked to pay political assessments, 391, 392.
- Stanberry, Mo., fight over postmastership at, 121.
- "Star Route" ring, 28; scandals and Elkins, 290, 369, 371.
- Starr, collector, political worker in Illinois, 335.
- Staubach, J. B., on merit system in post-office at Cincinnati, O., 257.
- Stearns, appraiser in Boston custom-house removed through Congressman Cogswell, Dodge appointed, 250, 288.

- Stearns, J. T., custom-house auctioneer, in New York convention, 335.
- Steele, Congressman, given control of patronage by Harrison, 240.
- Steele, G., at Minneapolis convention, 346.
- Steele, Richard, in the Tattler, on absurdities of English spoils system, see Curtis, 120.
- Steele, W. T., governor of Oklahoma, political worker for Harrison, 189, 378.
- Stemen, pension examiner in Indiana, political worker, 380.
- Stepp, J. M., postmaster at Glen Hall, Ind., "resigns," 149.
- Sternberg, worker for Murphy, gets office through suspension of civil service rules in New York, 414.
- Steuben, Ind., Republican [repub.], advocates civ. service reform, 76.
- Stevens, postmaster of Peru, Ind., political worker, 379.
- Stevens, postmaster at Shushan, N. Y., removed, 54.
- Stevens, E. N., editor, appointed postmaster at Paxton, Ill., 126.
- Stevens, J. L., journalist, postmaster at Plainview, Neb., 149.
- Stevens, W. H., employe in custom-house at St. Louis, Mo., worker for Filley machine, 150.
- Stevens, W. J., opposes Harrison in Alabama, 346; republican politician in Alabama, charges political activity of federal office-holders in, 355.
- Stevenson, Congressman, on house committee, on civil service, 86.
- Stevenson, A. E., as presidential possibility, 235; asst. P. M. gen'l under Cleveland, spoilsman, 255, 350, 375, 376, 386, 408; democratic candidate for vice-president, 1892, 349; and Knights of the Golden Circle, 331, 389; vice-president elect, 388.
- Stevenson, R. B., endeavors to levy political assessments in Indian service in Kansas, 385.
- Stewart, senator of New York, and Fassett, collector at N. Y. City, 258.
- Stewart, Senator, attacks civil service commission, 250, 251.
- Stewart, D. F., postmaster at Wilmington, Del., political worker, 334.
- Stewart, H., resignation of as postmaster at Munroville, Ind., given office in Washington, 88.
- Stieb, P., employed in New York custom-house, a political worker, 108.
- Stimson, Dr. D. M., resigns from N. Y. City health dept., because it becomes political machine, 356.
- Stinson, W. D., nephew of Mrs. Blaine, appointed postmaster at Augusta, Me., 321.
- Stockbridge, Congressman, controls post-office at Baltimore, Md., 84.
- Stockbridge, Senator, in Michigan convention, 335; supporter of Blaine, 344, 345.
- Stocking, S. W., promoted in patent office, efficient, 140.
- Stockton, A. R., republican politician and postmastership at Stanberry, Mo., 121.
- Stoddard, inspector in postal service, and removal of Farnum on secret charges, 175.
- Stokely, mayor, and Martin, disreputable politician of Philadelphia, 233.
- Stokely, S., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.
- Stone, congressman, on house committee on civ. service, 86.
- Stone, collector and appointment of O'Donnell, 60.
- Stone, supporters of, bought by Delamater, 134.
- Stone, C. W., and pardon of Petroff and Kemble, 152.
- Stoue, F. C., internal rev. collector in Michigan, political worker, 390.
- Stone, Editor J. B., appointed collector internal revenue first Michigan district, 30.
- Stone, Dr. R. F., pension examiner, removed, Dr. Elbert, negro, appointed, 192.
- Storer, ex-representative, opposed to Congressman Hitt, 109.
- Storey, M., praises CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 110; on responsibility, 219; on Roosevelt civil service reform, 257; on divorce of municipal business from politics, 261, 283, 286; on committee of National League to investigate political interference of office-holders, 338; chairman committee Nat. League investigating political activity of federal office-holders under Harrison, report to by L. B. Swift, 375-381.
- Story City, Iowa, Editor Peterson appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Stoufer, A. K., journalist, postmaster at Arkalon, Kan., 148.
- Stover, representative in Indiana legislature, and spoils methods in, 407.
- Stratton, S. R., pres. Pa. republican ass'n, advocates clean sweep, 49; and office-seekers, 88; advocates political assessments and intimidation, 178, 179.
- Strawbery Point, Ia., Postmaster Keith of, removed, see Clarkson, 55.
- Strong, M., negro, unable to read or write, appointed postmaster at Delmar, Ala., 47.
- Strong, Rev. Sidney, on evils of spoils system, 102.
- Strouser, I. R., compares Cleveland and Harrison, 364.
- Strouther, P. W., deputy int. rev. coll., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Struble, I. S., congressman, forces resignation of Jasper, postmaster at Kingsley, Ia., 165.
- Stuart, P. O. inspector, at Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Stuart, Iowa, Editor Moulton appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Stuart, R. S., inspector, dismissed of, 17.
- Studebaker, E. H., requested by R. Harrison to persuade Blaine delegate to vote for Harrison, 337.
- Sturgis, O. T., editor, endorsed by Sen. Quay for postmaster at Uniontown, Pa., 99.
- Stutsman, auditing att'y at Peru, Ind., at Minneapolis convention, 379.
- Suffall, veteran, efficient postmaster at Freedom, Ind., removed for political reasons, Watts appointed through influence of Michener, 112, 377.
- "Sugar frauds," at New York, false charges against Dr. Sherer, in appraiser's office at, 203.
- Sullivan, Ind., applicants for postmastership at, 88; Editor Clugage appointed postmaster at, 108, 126, 377.
- Sullivan, J. E., county clerk of Marion Co., Ind., embezzles county funds, see Indianapolis.
- Sullivan, J. N., appointed postmaster at Berne, Ind., removed, 88.
- Sullivan, T., mayor of Indianapolis, should institute civil service reform methods in city offices, as in Boston, Buffalo and Brooklyn, see equally divided politically, 220; should introduce merit system in city service, 235; can at will apply merit system to every city department, 243; elected twice by independent votes, 269.
- Sulzer, M. L., special Indian agent, worker for Harrison, 316; opposed to Harrison, bribed with office, 377; political worker, 389.
- Sultz, deputy U. S. marshal, collects political assessments, 372.
- Sunbright, Tenn., Journalist Dunning postmaster at, 155.
- Sunner, J. H., deputy collector at N. Y. City, at Minneapolis convention, 343.
- Suspension Bridge, N. Y., Low, customs collector at, a political worker, 265; custom-house at not classified, number of employes in, 277.
- Sutton, John, politician, appointed to look after office seekers, 46.
- Sylvanus, P. O. employe, political worker, in Delaware, 334.
- Syracuse, N. Y., candidates for postmastership at, incumbent favored by Belden, 46; editor appointed postmaster at by Pres. Cleveland, 71; per cent of removals in classified and unclassified service in post-office at, 185; Editor Smith, postmaster of, a political worker, 266, 335, 347, 386.
- Syracuse, N. Y., Standard (repub.), on civil service reform, 92.
- Swain, councilman of Indianapolis, spoilsman and low politician, 207.
- Swalm, A. W., editor, postmaster in Mahaska Co., Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Swartout, ex-collector of port of New York, spoilsman, 272.
- Swayzee, G. S., employe in custom-house at New Orleans, works for lottery, 143.
- Sweeney, Congressman, and post-office at Clear Lake, Ia., 121.
- Sweeney, State Senator of Indiana, votes against bill for non-partisan control of state charitable institutions, 201, 212; spoilsman, 408.
- Sweet, Miss, pension agent at Chicago, re-appointed, Commissioner Black attempts to remove, serves full term, Mrs. Mulligan succeeds, 107.
- Sweet, E. R., removal of, 88.
- Sweet, W. L., political worker for Platt, 259, 260.
- Sweetland, H., negro, councilman and low politician of Indianapolis, 207.
- Swift, H. P., wins prize offered by Wanamaker in R. R. service, 415.
- Swift, J. L., journalist, given office by Collector Beard, 108; a political worker, 179.
- Swift, L. B., at Baltimore conference, 1889, 2; letter of Nov. 28, 1888, to editor Civil S. Record, necessity for reform associations to be alert, 5; address of, before annual meeting Indiana Civil Service Reform Assoc., 108; address of, on civil service reform, 137; address of, on "gift of offices," 145; on all other reforms should be subordinated to civil service reform, 153; address before annual meeting National League 1890, 170, 171, 172; letter to, from Roosevelt, refuting charges of favoritism on part of civil service commission, 266, 267; address of, before annual meeting National League, noticed, 269; on committee of Nat. League investigating political assessments, and political interference of federal office-holders, 338; on committee of Nat. League, to investigate political activity of federal office-holders under Harrison, report of, 375-381.
- Tackett, M. D., appointed special land agent in reward for political services, 234, 377.
- Taft, editor, worker for Sherman, brother of U. S. solicitor-general, 301.
- Taggart, T., ward politician at Indianapolis, 315; chairman Indiana state democratic committee, on Gray, 396; patronage of, 400, 401; chairman Indiana state democratic committee, 407.
- Taggart, W. G., postmaster of Newburg, N. Y., political worker for Platt, 260.
- Tait, J. H., journalist, postmaster at Goodland, Kan., 149.
- Talladega, Ala., postmaster of removed for political reasons, protectionist democrat appointed, 186.
- Tallentire, fire-foreman at Indianapolis, a political worker, 208.
- "Tally-sheet" frauds at Indianapolis, see Indianapolis.
- Tama, Iowa, Editor Wonser appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Tammany Hall, see Feudalism revived; opposed to civil service reform, 128; rule of in New York City, 130, 230, 262, 274, 298, 311, 313, 314; controls patronage of Brooklyn navy yard, under Sec'y Whitney, 148; political assessments levied by, estimates of, 183, 184; uses "pass" examinations, 192; primaries of and republican primaries, 198, 199; supported by Gorman, 214; continued exposure of evils of, will defeat, 219; methods of, 224, 225, 234; R. Croker "boss" of, and McLaughlin, 245, 309; rules New York, 283, 284; and Platt, 288; corrupting influences of, 289, 290; of Cincinnati, O., opposes Sherman, 297; defended by R. Croker, 305, 323; evils of rule of, 317, 320, 333, 356, 385, 390; and nomination of Stevenson, 349; and N. Y. republican machine, 352; and N. Y. City, streets, 357; allied with Platt, 376; fears of under Cleveland, 388; and appointment of Mrs. Maloney as police matron, 404; need of civil service reform paper to oppose, 414.
- Tampa, Fla., Editor Cooper appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Tanner, "Corporal," appointed by Pres. Harrison as superintendent of pensions, 27; appoints his daughter his private sec., 38; spoilsman, 51; removals by, for political reasons, 53, 54.
- Tanner, J., U. S. sub-treasurer, political worker in Illinois, 335.
- Tanner, J., asst. treasurer, at Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Tansel, A., journalist, postmaster at Haddam, Kan., 149.
- Tafley, Wm. B., journalist, postmaster at Frankfort, S. Dak., 155.
- Taffer, police commissioner of N. Y. City, Tammany tool, 356.
- Tarbox, postmaster at Rochester, N. Y., a political worker, 280.
- Tarleton, T. P., dep. col. int. rev., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Tarrow, chief of division, removed for political reasons by Coulter, 55.
- Tate, confesses to accepting bribes, 151.
- Taylor, river commissioner, at Minneapolis convention, 379, 380.
- Taylor, Judge, political worker for Harrison, 302, 343.
- Taylor, (Illinois) Congressman, and Chicago post-office, 22.
- Taylor (Ohio), congressman of Ohio, opposed to civil service reform system, 35, 49; congressman and office-seeker in Ohio, 75.
- Taylor (Indiana), congressman, patronage of, 419, 421.
- Taylor, Col., special treasury agent, active political worker, 108.
- Taylor, D. D., editor, brother of postmaster at Cambridge, O., 301.
- Taylor, H. A., editor and politician, appointed commissioner of railroads, 39, 108.
- Taylor, S. J., editor, appointed postmaster at Sparta, Ill., 141.
- Tell City, Ind., Schrieber postmaster of, political worker, 380.
- Teller, Senator, supporter of Blaine, 344, 346.
- Tennessee, appointees to Indian service from, under Cleveland, 219; political activity of federal office-holders in, 337, 339, 346, 347.
- Tenure law for four years, condemned by National League, 321.
- Terre Haute, Ind., Manson, efficient collector at, removed by Harrison, Throop appointed, 59; should have civil service law applied to local offices, 85; Greiner postmaster of, political worker, 153, 158, 316, 342, 343, 346, 377, 378, 379; Congressman Brookshire allows Voorhees to name postmaster of, 405.
- Terre Haute Mail [repub.], opposed to spoils system, 83.
- Terrell, asst. U. S. attorney in Texas, a political worker, 159.
- Terrell, E. H., minister to Belgium, 14.
- Terry, P. E., postmaster at Terryville N. Y., removed for refusing to pay political assessments, 391.
- Terry, S. S., on committee investigating N. Y. City civil service, 319, 320.
- Terryville, N. Y., Terry, postmaster of, removed for refusing to pay political assessments, 391.
- Tests, competitive, objections to, 26.
- Texas, republicans of, headed by Customs Collector Cuney, 150; patronage of given to Collector Cuney, factions of, 158, 159, 173; political activity of federal officers in, 345, 346, 347, 348; political assessments in, 383.
- Thalman, low politician, councilman, and Indpls. fire department, 13; spoilsman, 69, 207.
- Theopolis, R., federal office-holder and political worker, 179.
- Thieme, A. B., census enumerator on inefficiency of the service, 294.
- Thomas, U. S. marshal, a political worker, bargains with Karr, 160.

- Thomas, state senator of Penn., political worker for Quay, 280.
- Thomas, and Cleveland administration, 25, 51.
- Thomas, A. C., librarian of Haverford College, letter of, 412, 422.
- Thomas, B. F., journalist, postmaster at Wymore, Neb., 149.
- Thomas, T. F., P. O. employe at Baltimore, political worker, 267, 296, 335.
- Thomas, M. A., low politician, appointed Indian agent through influence of Gorman, 237.
- Thomas, S., levies political assessments in New York, 391, 392.
- Thomas, W. C., journalist, postmaster at Osseo, Wis., 155.
- Thompson, controller at Philadelphia, makes removals for political reasons, 239.
- Thompson, secy. of state for New Hampshire, 113.
- Thompson, threatens office-holders, 55.
- Thompson, Dr., state senator, advocate of spoils system in state charitable institutions of Indiana, opposes new charter for Indianapolis, see, also, Magee, 201, 212.
- Thompson, E. P., asst. postmaster at Indpls., reinstated, 9; and Moore, 25; tries to secure special examination, 26; and fraudulent appointments of Wheat and Tousey, 28; recommends Van Buren, spoilsman, for local civil service board, asks for special examination, 34; acting postmaster at Indianapolis, favors civil service reform, 227, 229; promoted to be postmaster, consequent promotions, 235; political worker; and subordinates, work for Harrison at Minneapolis, 337, 343; attempt to coerce by Merrill Moores, small republican boss, 366; political worker, 302, 316, 320, 375, 379, 382; removes carrier Dunn for soliciting political contributions, 403.
- Thompson, H. S., civil service commissioner appointed by President Harrison, 17; and political assessments, 70; and Shidy case, 101; before congressional committee, 119; commended, 125; resigns, 322; and Attorney-General Miller, 330, 372.
- Thompson, O., postmaster in Winneshiek Co., Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Thornton, B., negro detective, used for Harrison at Minneapolis convention, 345.
- Thornton, G. E., day director in navy causes unwarranted removal of Carpenter, postmaster at New Bedford, Mass., 175, 176.
- Thockmorton, D. I., candidate for postmaster of La Fayette, Ind., 71, 84.
- Throop, J. P., appointment of, condemned, 51; political worker, appointed collector internal revenue, 59; political worker, 362, 380.
- Thurber, F. B., recommends "Paddy" Divver for police justice, 184.
- Thurston, J. M., president league of republican clubs, speaks in favor of civil service reform, 219.
- Tice, F., appointed postmaster at Mt. Morris, Ill., see Hitt, 109.
- Tichner, postmaster of Princeton, Ind., political worker, 316, 378.
- Tilden, Governor of New York, exposes Chemung canal robbery, see Hill, 306; civil service reform a democratic principle under, 397.
- Tilton, R. L., postmaster in Wapello Co., Iowa, a political worker, 260.
- "Tin Horns," low republican politicians, see Indianapolis, corrupt politics, etc., at.
- Tindolph, postmaster of Vincennes, Ind., at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- Tippecanoe Club, of Baltimore, resolutions of, denounce civil service reform and the commission, 49.
- Tissue Ballot System, in the South, 29.
- Tittman, Prof., of U. S. coast survey, in "sugar frauds" investigation, 203.
- Todd, J. S., removed on suspicion of being disloyal to Harrison, 300.
- Toland, G. R., postmaster at Asbury Park, N. Y., under Cleveland, 386.
- Toledo, Ill., Editor Conner appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Toledo Blade (rep.), spoilsman must go 92.
- Tolona, Ill., Editor Chapin appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Tomblin, Al., opposes appointment of Williams as postmaster at Stanberry, Mo., 121.
- Tomlinson, D. W., recommended by Owen for postmaster of Logansport, Ind., 88; postmaster of Logansport, Ind., a political worker, 153, 158, 260, 377.
- Tompkins, case of, 94.
- Toomey, M., ward politician, see Indianapolis, 196.
- Tousey, W. E., ward politician, not on eligible list, re-instated in Indianapolis post-office after absence of years, 26, 27; dismissed by civil service commission, 34.
- Tousey, same, alderman of Indianapolis, spoilsman and low politician, 207.
- Towner, R. B., and Flower, 287.
- Townsend, congressman, nomination secured by bribery, 151.
- Tracy, congressman, and civil service law, 122; on civil service failures of Harrison, favors civil service law, 125.
- Tracy, U. S. marshal, active politician, 113.
- Tracy, sec. of navy, and offices in Brooklyn navy-yard, 55; and repairs at Norfolk navy-yard, 56; recommends Captain Folger to succeed Com. Sicard, 100; favors W. G. Taylor, 135; course of in Brooklyn navy-yard, 142; opposes Nathan, ward politician, 143; gives navy-yards up as spoils, see Kittery, 145; and spoils system in navy-yard at Portsmouth, N. H. (Kittery), 145; conduct of in Brooklyn, Kittery, Norfolk and Charleston navy-yards, 153, 170; introduces reform methods in navy-yards, commends civil service law, 219, 221, 222, 274, 276, 298, 306, 321, 372, 376; holds Feaster responsible for bad work by henchmen at Mare Island navy-yard, 226; introduces merit system in navy-yards, 230, 236, 238, 251; should institute examinations under civil service commission for promotions in navy department, 254, 257; commended, 287, 290; and removals for political reasons in navy yards, 34; on improvements in navy yard management, 326; supports Rhinehart, 332; removes supporters of Platt, 334; political worker for Harrison in New York, 336, 339, 347; "placates" Platt, 353; removes Page, chief of ordnance dept. in Brooklyn navy yard, 355; introduces Boston labor system in navy yards, 357; and Nathan, 371.
- Traiteur, treasurer inspector, pays political assessments, 279.
- Treadwell, W. S., sec'y Kings Co., N. Y., central republican committee, worker for Nathan, 198, 301.
- Treasury department, offices in, 24; removals of laborers in, 29; examinations for, see De Land, 152; employes under supervising architect of, selected by civil service examinations, though not required by law, 224.
- Trevelyan, Sir G. O., on competitive tests in English civil and military service, 118.
- Treynor, I. M., postmaster at Council Bluffs, Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Tripp, editor, son of appointed postmaster at Carrollton, O., 301.
- Tripp, T. H., supporter of Platt in N. Y. convention, 335.
- Tripp, O. H., works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 343, 379.
- Trollope, A., opposed to merit system of England, 227.
- Trollington, J. H., postmaster at Palo Pinto, Mo., buys office, 55.
- Troy, Ind., Gardiner, postmaster of, political worker, 380.
- Troy, N. Y., post-office at, investigated by civil serv. com., spoils system in, 29.
- True, T. W., postmaster at Eureka Springs, Ark., denounced by republicans, 55.
- Trusler, P. C., and Indianapolis fire department, 13; a ward boss, councilman of Indianapolis, obtains removal of Fire Chief Webster, 36; spoilsman, see Indianapolis, 69, 380; candidate, 162; tries to turn fire service at over to spoils, 207, 208.
- Trust, G., low politician and murderer, gets office through Gorman, 237.
- Truxton, Commodore, commandant navy yard at Norfolk, Va., 147.
- Tucker, postmaster at Annapolis, in Maryland convention, 335.
- Tugwell, A. P., ex-collector, a political worker, 159.
- Turner, postmaster at Newtonville, Mass., indorsed for re-appointment, 100.
- Turner, Congressman, favors civ. service reform 100.
- Turpie, Senator, 393, 401; patronage of, 405, 410, 413, 418, 419, 420, 421, 422.
- Tuscaloosa, Ala., Miller, postmaster of, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Tweed, "Boss," 28, 190, 211, 212; allied with Hill, 306.
- Tyner, "Jim," ass't att'y-gen'l for P. O. dep't, construes civil service law in favor of Baltimore federal employes, politically active, 357, 358.
- Tyrrell, W. A., editor, appointed postmaster at Waverly, Iowa, 142.
- Underwood, W., appointed postmaster at Washington, Penn., 100.
- Union, Ind., Fearis, postmaster of, political worker, 316, 378.
- Union City, Mich., Journalist Easton, postmaster at, 149.
- Union League Club, and Platt, 333.
- Uniontown, Pa., Patterson appointed postmaster at through influence of Frick, 99.
- U. S. Snpreme Bench, considered as spoils, 24.
- Upper Sandusky, O., Editor Cuneo postmaster at, 301.
- Upton, J. D., defeated candidate, sale of offices by in Missouri, 55, 99.
- Urwitz, M., sec'y central republican exec. committee, Texas, denounces Cuneo, 180.
- Utah, relative of Pres. Harrison given position in, 30, 369; sentiment favoring civil service reform in, 111; political activity of office-holders in, 339, 345, 347; vote of for Harrison at Minneapolis, 347.
- Utica, O., Journalist Harris postmaster at, 149.
- Utica, N. Y., Miller, postmaster of, a political worker, 266.
- Utter, A. W., journalist, appointed postmaster at Emmetsburg, Iowa, 142.
- Uxbridge, Mass., Postmaster Farnum of, removed on secret charges, Scott appointed, 175.
- Vail, D., editor, appointed postmaster at New Sharon, Iowa, 142.
- Vail, J. M., journalist, postmaster at New Milford, Pa., 149.
- Valley Center, Journalist Beach postmaster at, 149.
- Valley Virginian [repub.], opposed to Mahone, 53.
- Valparaiso, Ind., Postmaster De Motte of, a political worker, 153, 377, 378; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 316, 343; at Minneapolis convention, 379.
- Van Alstyne, J. L., physician, pension examiner, removed through Postmaster Dunn, 304.
- Van Anda, Rev. A. C., address of on "Purity in Politics," 137.
- Van Buren, M., Pres., spoils system attributed to, 262.
- Van Buren, W. A., recommended for appointment to local service board at Indianapolis, spoilsman, 34, 78; attends dinner to Roosevelt (see), 227, 229.
- Van Cliff, M. E., commissioner (U. S.) circuit court in New York, a political worker, 266.
- Van Cott, appointed postmaster at New York, for party services, 13, 20; and civil service commission, 42; appointed at dictation of Platt, 22, 44; appoints his son cashier of post-office, 108; assists at dinner to Clarkson, 245; calls on Fassett, collector at, 258; gives offices to supporters of Gibbs, political worker, 265, 269; political worker, 279, 287; defended by Wanamaker, 289; and political workers, 311; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, wants Heudricks to lead in New York, 337, 344, 347, 396.
- Van Duzer, ex-assemblyman of New York, opposes Platt and Fassett, 259; postmaster at Horseheads, N. Y., a political worker, 265; and removal of Flood, 304; attempted removal of by Fassett, 331.
- Van Horn, R. T., controlling patronage of Missouri, 24.
- Van Houten, editor, appointed postmaster at Lenox, Iowa, 142.
- Van Riper, J., postmaster at Rutherford, N. J., removed on secret charges, 175.
- Van Schaick, Congressman, and Postmaster Paul of Milwaukee, 44, 47; his "prerogative," 55.
- Van Slyke, J., editor, appointed postmaster at McHenry, Ill., 141.
- Van Voorhis, J. R., Tammany man, career of 318.
- Vance, Senator, on civil service reform, 117; and Eaves, 159.
- Vandermost, J., editor, appointed postmaster at Monroe, Ia., 142.
- Vandervoort, P., chief clerk R. R. service, 1883, incapable, discharged, and reappointed at suggestion of Nebraska congressmen, 17; and Harrison administration, 25; benchman, 21, 31, 35, 54; supt. of mails at Omaha, Neb., disreputable politician and spoilsman, 211; career of, 215, 216, 220, 357.
- Vandevere, C. E., appointed by Cleveland, Indian agent, efficient, but removed, 181.
- Vesey, postmaster at Baltimore, spoilsman, removals under, 53; and Sears, P. O. employe at, 277.
- Vest, Senator, a spoilsman, 5, 43, 45; Arthur's administration, 24; secures appointment for son, totally unfit, under Cleveland, 212; on the issue, 375.
- Vest, G., son of Senator Vest, appointed to diplomatic service under Cleveland, totally unfit, 242.
- Vevay, Postmaster Shaw and Deputy Long, of Vevay, Ind., political workers, 379.
- Vicksburgh, Mich., Journalist Baldwin postmaster at, 149.
- Vicksburg, Miss., Hill, negro, postmaster of, worker at Minneapolis, 343, 348.
- Vigneaux, J., U. S. marshal, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Vilas, W. F., senator and ex-P. M. Gen'l., spoilsman, 20, 21; removals under, 96; compelled to let Faulkner stay in office by Voorhees, 222; under Cleveland, spoilsman, 255; and civil service reform, 274; under Cleveland, spoilsman, 361.
- Vincennes, Indiana, letter from correspondent at, 16; post-office at, 37; Tindolph, postmaster of, at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- Vineland, N. J., postmaster at, removed on false charge, really for political reasons, 39.
- Virginia, patronage of given by Pres. Harrison to Mahone, 27, 28, 31, 38, 41, 51, 52, 56, 67, 68, 70, 111, 282, 332, 376; political assessments in, made by republicans, 226; political activity of federal office-holders in, supports Blaine, 348, 345, 370.
- Vogel, "Gus," federal office-holder at St. Louis, worker for Filley machine, 150.
- Voght, F., molder, appointed in office of Gold, township trustee, at Indianapolis, 256.
- Voght, W. F., editor, appointed postmaster at Covington, Ind., 126, 377.
- Von Bergman, A., editor, given office through Congressman Belden, 132.
- Von Landberg, A., editor, internal revenue collector, removals by, 150.
- Voorhees, Senator, a spoilsman, 5, 43, 45, 177, 244, 381, 404; opposed to civil service reform, 80; political turn-coat, 171; secures place for Faulkner, illiterate politician, 222; and Cleveland, 235; favors Gorman for president, 236; supports Hanlon for internal revenue collector at New Albany, Ind., 393; allowed by Brookshire to name postmaster at Terre Haute, Ind., 406; patronage of, 409, 410, 413, 418, 419, 420, 421, 422.
- Wade, F., journalist, postmaster at Sanguatuck, Mich., 149.
- Wade, of Missouri, and office-seekers, 6, 15.
- Waddick, ballot-box stuffer, sec Hudson Co., N. Y.

- Wadsworth, J. W., congressman-elect, calls for political assessments, 279, 354.
- Wagner, chairman Kings Co. (N. Y.) republican committee, levies political assessments, 287.
- Wakeman, W. F., sec'y American Protective Tariff League, at Minneapolis convention, 344; circular letter of, to postmasters, 382.
- Walker, congressman, secures appointment of Scott as postmaster at Uxbridge, Mass., 175.
- Walker, internal revenue collector, assists at dinner to Clarkson, 245.
- Walker, B. W., U. S. marshal in Alabama, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Walker, F. A., and censuses of 1870 and 1880, 291; on selection of census enumerators, 294; on censuses of 1870, 1880, 1890, 295.
- Walker, O. D., physician, employed in Indian service, asked for political contribution, 385.
- Walker, W. B., defeated applicant indorsed generally for postmaster at Hamilton, Mo., 150.
- Wallace, helped by Quay, 135.
- Wallace, deputy postmaster at Indianapolis, a political worker, 141.
- Wallace, D., P. O. employe at Indianapolis, works for Harrison, 302, 337, 343, 377, 378, 379.
- Wallace, Gen. L., obtains postmastership at Indianapolis for brother, for services to Harrison at Chicago convention, 26.
- Wallace, S., inspector in N. Y. custom-house, a political worker, 108.
- Wallace, postmaster at Indianapolis directed by civil service commission to remove Moore, gambler, 27, 28; views of civil s. ref., 2, 9, 18; law violated by, 25; appointed at request of General L. Wallace, cares little for success of civil service reform, 26; re-instates R. B. Mundelle, discharged by Jones, postmaster, 27; and Hamlin, bad character, keeps him in office, 34; and local board, 43, 48, 73; secretly a political worker, 144; death of, a loss to the public service, 219.
- Wallace, W. C., Congressman, obtains appointment of 200 henchmen in Brooklyn navy yard, 55, 72; aided by ward politician, Nathan, 121, 150; and "Dan" Lake, 132; opposed by Benedict and Sec'y Tracy, 135; controls patronage in New York, 142; secures appointment of M. Malone, 143; secures nomination of postmaster Kirkpatrick, 157; candidate for congress, re-nominated, see Nathan, 178, 374; trading in behalf of, by Nathan, federal employe, 179, 180; Boyle, navy employe, political worker for, 183.
- Walser, Z. V., federal employe, Harrison delegate from N. Carolina, 334.
- Walter, P. L., accuses Delamater of bribery, 134.
- Walters, J., political worker under Postmaster Johnson in Maryland, 335.
- Walters, N., politician, candidate for postmaster at Rochelle, Ill., 109.
- Walton, T., beaten by ballot frauds, see Martin, low politician.
- Wanamaker, P. M. Gen'l., endorses Martin, low politician, for collector internal revenue, see 239; and W. W. Dudley, 2; rules for employes, concerning applicants, 14, 16; and the postmastership of Philadelphia, 15, 22; at dictation of Senator Quay, 27; removes postmaster at New Bedford (Mass.), despite protests, and without cause or hearing, 29; in conflict with Senator Quay over Philadelphia spoils, 30; and civ. service commission, 36; favors Gorman, 38; removes postmaster at Vineland, N. J., for political reasons on false charges, 39; spoilsman, 43, 174, 290; and Van Cott, postmaster at N. Y. City, 44; and Postmaster Paul, of Milwaukee, 44; accepts nominations of Brower, congressman, 47; to be blamed for patronage scandal, 55; and postmaster at Cheraw, S. C., 55; protest against Clarkson sent to, 55; on necessity of reform in railway mail service, 69; career of in politics, and removals of postmasters by, 70; and Sen. Wade Hampton, concerning post-office at Columbia, S. C., 74; and postmaster at Laurenceville, Va., 74; circular letter of Marshall Cushing, private sec'y to, 80; gives disposal of postmastership at Baltimore to Stockbridge, 84; sec Russellville, Ind., 89; gives post-office at Pittsburgh to Sen. Quay, 90; and re-appointment of Montgomery as postmaster at Bristol, Conn., 91, 92; removals under, 96; and English, postmaster at New Haven, Conn., 96; and Frick, 99; and removal of Hartley, 101; course of in Shidy case, 103, 104; and post-office at Rochelle, Ill., 110; tool of Quay, 112, 133, 138, 161, 173; letter to from Cooper regarding postmasters at Freedom and Brooklyn, Ind., 112; condemned, 125; testifies to worth of Postmaster Hendrix of Brooklyn, N. Y., 131; removals under McKean, postmaster at Pittsburgh, 133; approves Pres. Cleveland's circular warning federal employes against undue political activity, 135; and use of post-offices for political purposes, 135; and Quay, 161; refuses access to records of removals, etc., 163; report of for 1889, past of, 163, 164; suggests assessments on corporations, 171; and Fonlke, 173; on secret charges, 175; hostile to civil service reform, 177; charges of against civil service commission, 185; letter of to Postmaster Marsh alleging congressional influence for removal, letters of to others, removed, 187; letter of to McCanley regarding removal, 187; refuses to re-appoint democratic postmaster Harrington, 188; and Baltimore post-office, 189; evasive course of, 190, 191; charges of inefficiency against civil service commission met, 193; and railway mail service, 203; Mail Superintendent Vandervoort, disreputable politician and spoilsman, safe with, 211; and Delphi (Ind.) Journal, 213; defended by Gorman against Roosevelt, 214; Leeds, corrupt politician, 216; a "pious fraud," see Vandervoort, 220; objects to civil service reform, gives prize to Oler for efficiency in mail service, 224; rule of to re-appoint only republicans violated, 224; backs Quay, 228; defended for spoils methods by Gorman, 228; gets office as political reward, 237; obligations of Harrison to, 240; collects campaign funds, gambles in stocks with Lucas, countenances fraudulent issues of stock, 245, 246; and appointment of Low, 249; and small office-seekers, 251; should institute examinations under civil service commission for promotions in his department, 254; appointment of harts civil service reform, 255, 256; establishes board of promotion by competitive examination in P. O. department, 256, 257; injures civil service reform, see Lambert, 261; uses postmasters as political agents, 262; and civil service reform, 274; letter to Sears, giving inefficiency as cause of removal, 277; objects to political assessments in P. O. department, 280; and violations of law in Omaha post-office, 281; defends Van Cott, postmaster at New York, 289; refuses to tell Flood alleged reasons for removal, promotion scheme of, 297, 298, 303, 304; introduced promotion by competition in P. O. department, 321; and Baltimore investigation, 329, 330, 372, 373, 396; political worker for Harrison, 299; and attempted removal of Postmaster Van Duzer, 331, 339, 340, 349; and political activity of federal employes at Baltimore, 335, 350, 357, 358; refuses list of employes for assessment purposes, 363, 364; appointed in return for raising campaign fund, 368, 374, 376; and political activity of postmasters, 375, 389; and removal for political reasons of Dner, postmaster at Princess Anne, Md., 408; gives prize to Swift, efficient R. R. postal clerk, 415.
- Wanmaker, G. W., low politician in New York, 311; and cartage contract at N. Y. custom-house, 358.
- Ward, postmaster at Salem, Ind., political worker, 380.
- Ward, carrier at Indianapolis post-office, removed, 9.
- Ward, C., and attempted bribery by Sen. Higgins and Postmaster Smith, in Delaware, 402.
- Ward, J. A., editor, candidate for postmaster at Lockport, N. Y., 216.
- Ward, W. J., affidavit of on sale of offices by J. Love, 99.
- Warmcastle, S. D., revenue collector, begs Blaine to speak, 180; political worker for Quay, 270; 280; supporter of Quay, removed by Harrison, 299.
- Warmouth, H. C., ex-Gov., appointed collector at New Orleans, 44, 52; rnfianly politician, 105; aids lottery, 143, 191; secures appointment of Weber as postmaster at Donaldson, La., 241; worker for Harrison in Louisiana, 304; supports Harrison at Minneapolis, 345, 346; worker for Harrison, 348, 357, 362, 371; pays political assessments, 383.
- Warner, C. D., address of on spoils system at Indianapolis, 415.
- Warner, C. W., editor, appointed postmaster at Hoopeston, Ill., 141, 165.
- Warner, J. M., spoken of as postmaster for Albany, N. Y., 46; postmaster at Albany, N. Y., favors civil service reform, 51; enforces civil service law, 136; delegate to N. Y. convention, 335.
- Warsaw, Ind., Bennett, postmaster of, political worker for Harrison, 316, 378, 380.
- Warsaw, Mo., post-office at sold by Upton, 55.
- Warwick, Congressman, institutes competitive examination for candidates for West Point, does not accept result, 254, 262.
- Washington, Senator, patronage a source of weakness, 25; indorses E. G. Hay, 84; supporter of Blaine, 341, 345.
- Washington (state), political activity of federal office-holders in, 357.
- Washington, D. C., Sherwood promoted to be postmaster at, 153; proportion of applicants to offices in, under Harrison and Cleveland, 185; Harrison removes U. S. district attorney at, 211; merit system in departments at, 224; competitive examinations under civil service commission order for promotions in departments at, 254; Harrison makes rules for promotion in departments at, 261; department offices and the examinations, 273; political contributions asked in P. O. department by Watres, 280; merit system for laborers in navy yard at, instituted at and commended, 331; political assessments in departments at, 390, 392; examinations for departments at, 1891-92, 396; political assessments levied by Old Dominion republican club in departments at, 412.
- Washington Post, civil service reform a snare and a sham, 49.
- Washington Star (repub.), advocates civil service reform, 92.
- Washington, George, 116; on political dnty, see headline to CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE for June, 1890, 129; Harrison compared with, 159; on evils of strict adherence to party, 236, 274; on evils of parties, 323, 394.
- Washington, Ind., Ellis appointed postmaster at, despite sale of office to Sefrits, 121.
- Washington, Kan., Journalist Robinson postmaster at, 119.
- Washington, Pa., Underwood appointed postmaster at, 100.
- Washington Co., Ind., removals and appointments in, 91.
- Waters, state senator of Pa., 133.
- Watertown, N. Y., Gates, postmaster of, furnishes political information, 392.
- Waterville, Me., Millican, postmaster of, and non-delivery of papers advocating Burleigh, congressional candidate opposing Manley, 364.
- Waterville, Wash., Journalist Kellogg, postmaster at, 155.
- Watkins, politician, and appointments in Brooklyn navy yard, 45.
- Watkins, N. Y., P. Conroy appointed postmaster at, 150.
- Watres, L. A., republican political worker for Quay, asks political contributions in P. O. department at Washington, D. C., 280.
- Watrons, J. W., editor, appointed customs collector at Milwaukee, through influence of Wisconsin congressmen, 71, 126.
- Watson, "Billy," ward politician, see also Kings Co., N. Y., 182, 183, 302.
- Watson, C. W., chairman committee of N. Y. civ. service reform association, on civil service examinations, 239, 319, 320; on committee, National League, to investigate political assessments, 338.
- Watts, F., appointed postmaster at Freedom, Ind., vice Sniffall, removed for political reasons, 377.
- Waugh, congressman, patronage of, 419.
- Waverly, Iowa, Editor Tyrrell, appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Waverly, O., Journalist Snyder, postmaster at, 149, 301.
- Wayne Co. (N. Y.) republicans, resolutions, of denouncing patronage system of republican party, 156.
- Weather bureau, merit system in, 253; service classified by Pres. Harrison, 403.
- Weatherby, Rev. S. S., on civ. service reform, 83.
- Weaver, postmaster at —, a political worker, 179.
- Weaver, J. M., congressman, obtains appointment of Low, political worker, as postmaster of Westport, N. Y., 249, 354.
- Weaver, V., editor, appointed postmaster at Loda, Ill., 141.
- Webb, constructor at Kittery (Me.), navy yard, examination of, 147.
- Webb, W. E., census supervisor, pledges of to spoilsmen, 131.
- Weber, federal officer, appoints anti-Platt men, 334.
- Weber, E. M., appointed postmaster at Donaldson, La., upon request of Collector Warmouth, 241.
- Webster, federal employes compelled to vote for, 162.
- Webster, Daniel, address to Massachusetts whigs in 1832, public press and spoils, 17; on bribery of press, 81, 141, 154, 155, 369, 376; spoils system under Jackson, 270, 324; sec'y of state under W. H. Harrison, circular of against political assessments and political activity of federal office-holders, 320.
- Webster, E. A., negro, coll. int. rev., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348, 382.
- Webster, Col. G. P., patronage of in N. Y. legislature, guilty of nepotism, 215.
- Webster, J. A., journalist, postmaster at Johnson, Kan., 149.
- Webster, J. H., chief of Indianapolis fire department, 13, 69; removed for political reasons, 36; influence of removal on city elections, 59; against spoils system, 203; effort to force him to turn fire service over to spoils; removal and re-appointment of, 207, 208.
- Webster, W. B., editor, appointed postmaster at Cresco, Iowa, 142.
- Wedgefield, S. C., Negro Richardson, postmaster of, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Weed, S., Tammany "boss," and prison patronage, 331.
- Weeks, thief, ordered to be employed in Kittery navy yard, see Robeson and Broadhead, 147.
- Weeping Water, Neb., removal of Postmaster Ratnour of on secret charges, Butler appointed, 175.
- Weigel, E. F., political worker for "Boss" Filley, given office by Sec'y Noble, 226.
- Weinsteil, L., editor, appointed collector fourth Ia. district, 56.
- Welling, stamp clerk at Indianapolis, 9.
- Wellington, G. L., U. S. sub-treasurer, in Maryland convention, 335.
- Wells, A. J., veteran, discharged and reinstated by Jones, postmaster at Ind'pls, 9.
- Welsh H., at Baltimore conference, 1889, 2; re-appointment of Oberly, 9; controversy with Senator Ingalls over Indian commissioner, 22; little progress in bettering condition of Indians due to spoils system, 39; circular letter of to clergy asking for clerical advocacy of civil service reform, see, also, Church, 40; letter on treatment of Indians by administration of Pres. Harrison, 42, 79; letter of to Boston Transcript on Indian service, 47; and clerical advocacy of civ. service reform, 65, 73; letter of to CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE on Indian service, 98; denies charges against Indian Agent McChesney, 130; letter of to R. Lincoln, 161; and causes of Indian rising

- at Pine Ridge, 192, 202, 217; on removals in Indian service, 219; in Scribner's Magazine for April, 1891, on evils of spoils system in Indian service, 224; before civil service reform association of Penn., on Indian service, 239; on "Degradation of Politics in Pennsylvania," in Forum, Nov., 1891, 282, 324; on committee of National League, to investigate political interference of office holders, 338; on committee of publication of Good Government, 357; on publicity as cure for political corruption, 366.
- Wemple, controller, receives political contributions, 180.
- Wenneker, internal revenue collector at St. Louis, and negro spoilsman, 146; political worker, removal of requested by Secy. Noble, 336.
- West Grove, Chester Co., Pa., applicants as postmaster of, 55.
- West Hoboken, N. J., postmaster Middleton of removed, no cause assigned, Klumpp appointed, 176.
- West Point, Congressman Warwick institutes competitive examinations for candidates for, does not accept result, see McKinley, 251, 262.
- West Virginia, A. B. White, newspaper proprietor, appointed collector internal revenue, 30; asst. district attorney of, sued for embezzlement, 39; U. S. deputy marshal in, indicted for bribery, 39; republicans of believe in spoils, 62; conflict over patronage of, 71; census service in run after spoils system, 293; political activity of federal office-holders in, 348; political assessments levied on federal office holders from, activity of federal employes in, 390.
- Westchester, Pa., removal of Postmaster Pyle at, for political reasons, 101.
- Westcliffe, Colo., S. Lacey, wife of editor, appointed postmaster at, 148.
- Westport, N. Y., political worker Low appointed postmaster at, 249.
- Wetherill, J. R., political worker under Postmaster Johnson, in Maryland, 335.
- Wheat, J. C., not on eligible list, re-instated in Indianapolis post-office after absence of years, 26, 27.
- Wheeler, inspector in mail service, recommended by Hiscock and Platt, for inspector in charge of mails, vice Rathbone resigned, 241.
- Wheeler, custom-house employe at N. Y. City, at Minneapolis convention, 343.
- Wheeler, editor, to be postmaster at Crow Point, Ind., 302.
- Wheeler, E. P., plan of, for agitation of civil service reform before Nat. League, 1889, 66, 172; civil service reformer in New York, 239; address of, before annual meeting of National League, noticed, 269.
- Wheeler, E. W., journalist, postmaster at Sherman, Mich., 149.
- Wheeler, J. J., editor, appointed postmaster at Crown Point, Ind., 377.
- Wheeler, W. E., journalist, postmaster at Eagle Park, Idaho, 155.
- White, ex-Congressman, opposes Harrison, 317.
- White, collector internal revenue in Texas, a political worker, 159.
- White, A. B., editor, appointed collector internal revenue for W. Virginia, 30, 37.
- White, A. D., candidate for governor of New York, supported by Platt and Nathan, 265; works for Fassett, 280; appointed U. S. minister to Russia, 382.
- White, E., ward politician, appointed deputy postmaster at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., vice Smith removed, 386.
- White, E. A., internal rev. coll. delegate to Minneapolis convention, 334, 348.
- White, G., republican, removed from fire service at Indianapolis, see equally divided politically, 235.
- White, H., editor, political worker, 351.
- White H. G., politician opposing Hiscock in Onadaga Co., N. Y., 264.
- White, Prof. H. S., praises CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 110.
- White, Prof. T. C., brother of U. S. marshal, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- White Clay, Indian chief, and rising at Pine Ridge, S. Dak., 218.
- Whitehead, special treasury agent, at Brooklyn, 336.
- Whiteman, W. H., appointed to supreme bench of N. Mexico, 24.
- Whitefield, asst. to Wanamaker, and appointment of Weber, 241; and appointment of Low, 249.
- Whithorne, congressional investigating committee on Kittery navy yard, 147.
- Whitman, Mass., Harlow, postmaster at recommended for re-appointment, 100.
- Whitney, F. M., editor, appointed deputy internal revenue collector, 81, 126.
- Whitney, J. A., political worker under Postmaster Johnson in Maryland, 335.
- Whitney, Sec'y, 82; gives navy yards up as spoil, 145, 147, 148, 222.
- Widney, J. A., soldier, postmaster at Woodhull, Ill., removed through influence of Cong. Henderson, 17.
- Wigg, S., discharged from navy yarn at Norfolk, Va., by Sec'y Whitney, 147.
- Wilber, Mrs., appointed postmaster at Clay City, Ind., inefficient, 89.
- Wilby, C. B., letter to CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 92; on proposed charter for Cincinnati, O., 235; address of, on G. W. Curtis, 394.
- Wilcox, appointed collector at Springfield, Ill., through influence of Cannon, 31.
- Wilcox, C. A., editor, appointed postmaster at Quincy, Ill., 141, 148.
- Wilcox, I. S., revenue collector, a political worker, 160.
- Wilcox, Dr. J. A., Harrison delegate from N. Carolina, 331.
- Wildman, J. F., editor and Harrison "boomer," applicant for postmastership of Muncie, Ind., 217.
- Wiley, E., wife of Journalist Wiley, postmaster at Elizabeth, Pa., 119.
- Williams, G. F., opposed to civil service reform, according to Grosvenor, 204; as congressman on minister as citizen, 239.
- Williams, J. M., journalist, postmaster at Phoenix, N. Y., 155.
- Williams, O., steward at Marion Co. (Ind.) poor-house, neglects duty, see also Indianapolis, corrupt politics, etc., at, 207.
- Williams, R., editor, works for Harrison, tries for office, disappointed, 95.
- Williams, S., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.
- Williams, V. T., editor, appointed postmaster at Stanberry, Mo., appointment recalled on political opposition, 121.
- Williamsville, N. Y., Journalist Rinewalt postmaster at, 155.
- Willis, Rev. J. S., republican candidate for congress, offers bribes, 102.
- Willis, L. W., receiver of political assessments in Alabama, 391.
- Willis, T. B., appointed naval officer at New York, as reward for party services, scandalous partisan, 55, 106, 121, 132, 182, 183, 191, 198, 304, 350, 355; appoints Politician Barrow his deputy, 108; and Brooklyn, N. Y., post-office, 135; political activity of his employes, 265; opposes Nathan, 332; in New York convention, 334, 335; worker for re-nomination of Harrison, against Nathan, worker for Platt, 336; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 337, 343, 344, 345; secures N. Y. delegation for Harrison, 348; and Nathan, 352, 354, 371.
- Wilmer, and corrupting influence of Tammany, 289, 290.
- Wilmington Morning News [repub.], attributes defeat of 1889 to Mahonism, 75.
- Wilmington, O., federal office-holder political worker for Harrison, 302.
- Wilmington, O. M., dismissed by Jones, postmaster at Indianapolis, reinstated by Postmaster Wallace, 34.
- Wilmington, Del., Stewart, postmaster of, political worker, 334.
- Wilmington, N. C., Young nominated collector of, ward politician, 183.
- Wilmot, O., Journalist Spidle postmaster at, 149.
- Wilson, councilman of Indianapolis, spoilsman and low politician, 207.
- Wilson, representative in Indiana legislature, spoilsman, 406; opposes gerrymander of 1893, 414.
- Wilson, "Doc," negro, political worker in Indianapolis, 378, 379.
- Wilson, E., brother of editor, given office by Governor Foraker, 301.
- Wilson, E. M., editor, appointed postmaster at Adin, Cal., 141.
- Wilson, G. W., mayor of Ft. Wayne, Ind., opposes Harrison, 302.
- Wilson, J. E., negro, postmaster at Florence, S. C., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Wilson, Mrs. K., wife of political worker, candidate for postmaster at Muncie, Ind., 217.
- Wilson, N. Y., Le Van appointed postmaster at, 39, 15.
- Wilson, W., postmaster at Chadron, Neb., removed on secret charges, 175.
- Wilson, Rev. W. M., on Civ. Service Reform, 83.
- Wimberly, internal revenue collector in Louisiana, political worker, 304.
- Wimberley, A. F., removed federal employe, worker at Indianapolis, 343, 348.
- Wimbush, C. C., negro, federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Winchester (Ind.) Herald [repub.], republicans must stand for civ. service reform, 83.
- Wisdom, Secretary, and office-seekers, 16, 37, 159; and Sturgeon, 22; and Wild, head of assay office at Boise City, Idaho, accepts resignation of, 30; at request of Roosevelt, stops Coulter's proceedings, 34; appoints political worker to office, 51; removes P. C. MacCourt, of N. Y. custom-house, 54; on the civ. service, 81; and Saltonstall, 94; and Platt, 264; praises merit system, see annual report, 1889, 276.
- Wiuamac, Ind., applicants for postmaster of, bargaining for position, 88.
- Winona, Miss., Matthews, deputy postmaster of, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344, 348.
- Winters, Cal., Moody, postmaster of, resigns, his successor removed for cause, Mrs. McKinley appointed, removed for political reasons, 90.
- Winters, W. H., given place in Indiana legislature, 406.
- Wirt, J. S., Senator, civil service reformer, address of before alumni of St. John's College, Maryland, 137.
- Wolcott, Senator, and Harrison, 337; supporter of Blaine, 344, 345, 346, 363.
- Wolcott, E. O., letter of on removal of Flood, postmaster at Elmira, N. Y., on secret charges, 312.
- Wolcott, R., president of young men's republican club of Massachusetts, civil service reformer, 192, 219; opposed to Quay, 241.
- Wood, Consul, political worker in New Hampshire, 371.
- Wood, purchases postmastership at Mitchell, Ind., appointed, 89.
- Wood, appointed census supervisor through influence of Sherman, 301.
- Wood, A. L., editor, appointed postmaster at St. Charles, Iowa, 142.
- Wood, H. C., federal officer, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Wood, J., defeated candidate for congress, secures appointment of Pentreath, 150.
- Wood, R. F., civil service reformer, 172; on appointment of postmasters before annual meeting National League, 1892, 329.
- Woodard, postmaster of Harrodsburgh, Ind., political worker, 380.
- Woodard, S., federal office-holder, political worker for Harrison, 302, 378; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 337, 343, 379.
- Woodford, S. L., candidate of Nathan for governor of New York, 265.
- Woodhull, Ill., soldier and postmaster at, removed and civilian appointed, through influence of Henderson, G. A. R. post denounces Henderson, 47.
- Woodmansee, M. G., journalist, postmaster at Holyrood, Kan., 149.
- Woodruff, F., chairman Kings county republican committee controls patronage, 106, 132; political worker, 121, 182, 183; enters factional fights in Brooklyn and New York, 197, 198.
- Woodruff, J., testified against R. Smalls, 39.
- Woodruff, T. L., political worker for Boody, cong. candidate, 183.
- Woods, M. C., given place in Indianapolis post-office, as spoils, 18, 27, 34; political worker, 302, 378.
- Woollen, W. W., controller of Indianapolis, commended, 269.
- Woolren, N., postmaster of Kingstou, N. Y., political worker in New York, 336.
- Worcester Spy [repub.], civ. service reform a certainty, 92.
- Workers, political, paid enough without additional remuneration in form of office, 30.
- Workman, J. B., clerk in Indiana senate, 408.
- Works, "Charlie," worker for congressman Hitt, 110.
- Wooster, L., postmaster at Fostoria, O., compelled to appoint partisans, 91.
- Wooten, J. T., attempted bribery of, by Sen. Higgins and Postmaster Smith, 401, 402.
- Wouser, C. J., editor, appointed postmaster at Tama, Iowa, 142.
- Wray, state senator of Indiana and spoils methods, 408.
- Wright, C. D., and civil service reform in census service, 291.
- Wright, F., refusal of Trustee Gold to remove, 111; removed, 116, 256.
- Wright, P., broker, at custom-house at N. Orleans, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Wyman, Jr., M., at Baltimore conference 1889, 2; sec'y Cambridge Civil Service Reform Association, 205.
- Wymore, Neb., Journalist Thomas postmaster at, 119.
- Wynn, I. C., journalist, postmaster at Lander, Wyo., 155.
- Wyoming, Ill., postmaster at removed for having been appointed, through "intrigue," Hammond appointed, 176.
- Xenia, Ind., Editor Lawshe appointed postmaster at, 71, 126, 377; political worker, 379.
- Yakim, Ore., excellent appointments reversed at bidding of Senator Mitchell, 32.
- Yakima Co., Wash., leading postmaster in, and other federal employes political workers, 362.
- Yale, office-holder, a politician, 162.
- Yankton, Dak., Indian agency at, and Sen. Moody, 86.
- Yeager, J., applicant for postmastership at Larnark, Carroll Co., Ill., 109.
- Yonkers, N. Y., Postmaster Keyes succeeded by politician Pentreath, 150.
- Young, Captain, testimony of regarding Kittery navy yard, 147.
- Young, A., treasury agent, active politically, 113.
- Young, D., federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348; collects political assessments, 384.
- Young, J. C., testimony of before Judge Lippincott as to election frauds, see also Hudson Co., N. Y., 200.
- Young, J. H., negro, ward politician, appointed collector at Wilmington N. C., 183; federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 334, 348.
- Zadek, A., postmaster of Corsicana, Tex., politician, 187.
- Zanesville, O., Editor Richards postmaster at, 301.
- Ziegenheim, collector at St. Louis, supports Filley machine, 150.
- Zimmerman, postmaster of Canuelto, Ind., optical worker, 380.
- Zollinger, C. A., applicant for office under Cleveland (2d term), 392; pension agent under Cleveland, levies political assessments, 414.
- Zumstein postmaster at Cincinnati, O., carries out spirit of civil service law, 257.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE

LUCIUS B. SWIFT, EDITOR.

Volume I,

HARRISON'S ADMINISTRATION, MARCH, 1889, TO MARCH, 1893.

INDEX

BY CHARLES ALLEN LEWIS.

- Abbott, P. S., civil service reformer of Cambridge, Mass., 204.
Abbott, R. T. F., clerk in Indiana senate, 408.
Ables, postmaster of St. Joe Station, Indiana political worker, 379, 380.
Acceptance, letter of President Harrison of, strongly favoring civil service reform, 27.
Active Club [republican]. See Baltimore investigation, 267.
Adams and Vincennes post-office. See Chambers, 37.
Adams, —, candidate for alderman. See Buffalo, N. Y., 197.
Adams. See Tammany, 318.
Adams, Pres. C. K., favors clerical recognition of civil service reform, 48.
Adams [congressman] and Chicago post-office, 22.
Adams, E. P., federal employe, levies political assessments. See Kentucky.
Adams, H., uses influence for appointment of Throop, 59.
Adams, J., on party spirit, 394.
Adams, J. Q., president, 325.
Adams, N. S., journalist, postmaster at Scott, Kan., 149.
Adams, T. M., reports to Mayor Grant on street cleaning in New York: advises merit system, 220, 221.
Adams, W. W., appointed postmaster at Quincy, Mass., through Congressman Morse; vice Speare, removed, 100; a political worker, 162.
Addison, Ia., Postmaster Cruikshank of, a political worker, 260.
Addison, Joseph, inspector for men of merit in public life, 235.
Addison, N. Y., Roberts, postmaster of, a political worker, 266.
Address, of G. W. Curtis (1892), distributed in Indiana, 338; inaugural of President W. H. Harrison, the public press and spoils, 17; inaugural of President B. Harrison, reform pledges in, 367; of mayor of Baltimore, Md., to Gorman, 236; to the citizens of Pennsylvania, against "Quayism," 249, 251, 252; issued by Pennsylvania republicans against Quay, extract from, 270.
Addresses, on civil service reform, merit system, spoils system, etc., etc. See Church and Civil Service Reform; also (names) J. E. Campbell; S. S. Parr; H. Briggs; R. H. Dabney; C. Schurz; Donell; Lowell, J. R.; Roosevelt; R. H. Dana; G. W. Julian; C. B. Wilby; T. F. Bayard; Welsh; G. F. Williams; Johnson, J. H.; Swift, L. B.; Curtis, G. W.; Everett, W.; Bonaparte, C. J.; H. C. Lodge; Rogers, S. S.; Warner, C. D.; Sprague, H.; Sherman (senator); Civil Service Record; Foulke; Lambert, Rev. H.; Storey, M.; F. A. Walker; C. C. Allen; Collin; L. H. Gibson; D. C. Brown; C. T. Lane; Thurston; Niblack; Wort; McKain, A. A.
Adel, Iowa, Journalist Hotchkiss appointed postmaster at, 141.
Ader, representative in Indiana legislature, and spoils methods in, 407.
Adin, Cal., Editor Wilson appointed postmaster at, 141.
Adkins, S. D., journalist, appointed postmaster at Freeport, Ill., 126.
Administrative reform. See Andrews.
Adreon, Cal., and appointment of Sears in post-office at Baltimore, 277.
Agar, W. F., postmaster at Mahopac Falls, N. Y., a political worker, 162.
Agnew, S., on English census service, 292.
Agnus, F., editor and politician, 363.
Ahearn, D., removed on suspicion of being disloyal to Harrison, 300.
Aiken, J. M., clerk in Indiana senate, 408.
Aikin, W. A., praises CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 110.
Airey, United States marshal at Baltimore, political worker. See Baltimore investigation, 267, 328, 357, 372.
Alta, Buena Vista county, Ia., Pickering, postmaster of, a political worker, 260.
Abbot, Rev. L. and Indian, appointments; favors clerical recognition of civil service reform, 48.
Akron, Col., Journalist Irwin appointed postmaster at, 126.
Akron, Ind., Editor Noyes appointed postmaster at, 126, 377.
Akron, O., postmaster of, appointed through influence of Sherman, 340.
Alabama. See Clay, removal of; R. A. Mosely, Jr., politician, appointed collector of internal revenue for district of, 56; federal office-holders in, active politicians, 113, 348, 355; delegation to Minneapolis convention, fights in, 346; political assessments levied on federal office-holders in, 391.
Alaska, O. T. Porter appointed United States Marshal for, 39; vote of for Harrison at Minneapolis; political activity of federal officers, 347.
Albany, N. Y., O'Leary, postmaster at, 136; per cent. of removals in classified and unclassified service in post-office at, 185; Tammany steals in, 317; Warner spoken of as postmaster of, 46; Warner, postmaster of, enforces civil service law, 51, 136; Warner, postmaster of, in New York convention, 335.
Albany Journal [republican] against civil service reform, 49.
Albert Lea, Minn., Harkness, postmaster at, removed for cause by Cleveland, Stacy appointed; efficient. Removed and Harkness reappointed by Harrison. See also Duunell, 39.
Albion, Ill., Editor Colyer appointed postmaster at, 141.
Albion, Ind., Editor Prickett appointed postmaster at, 126, 377.
Albright, A., low politician. See Philadelphia.
Alderman, E. R., editor, postmaster at Marietta, O., 301.
Alderson, J. D., congressman, on house committee, on civil service, 86; on census service in West Virginia, 293.
Aldrich, C. H., favors civil service reform, 229.
Aldrich, senator, at Minneapolis convention, 344.
Alexander, state senator of Pennsylvania, 133.
Alexander, Mrs. C. M., appointed stenographer in Indiana legislature, 406.
Alexander, D. S., United States district attorney in New York, political worker at Minneapolis, 342, 343.
Alexandria, La., Barrett, postmaster of, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
Alger, General, more popular than Harrison, 240. Spoken of for presidency, 299, 348.
Allan, S. W., federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
Allard, C. A. See Baltimore investigation, 320, 326, 327.
Allegheny Co., N. Y., postmasters' association, levies political assessments, 334.
Allegheny, Pa., patronage in, 47; Gilliland, postmaster of, worker for Bayne, 135; supporter of Quay, suspected by Harrison, 299.
Allen, ex-congressman, levies political assessments, 322, 332.
Allen, "The," low politician of New York City, history of. See also New York City, 249.
Allen, C. C., at Baltimore conference, 1889, 2. In report of, to civil service reform association of Missouri on civil service commission, 136. Prefers bureaucracy to spoils system, 308.
Allen county, Ind., only office-holders in, for Harrison, 240.
Allen, Ethan, protests against removal of Milholand, as federal interference, 333.
Allen, Edgar, federal court officer, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
Allen, F. B., negro journalist, opposes Harrison, wants offices for negroes, 244.
Allen, J. B., congressman, secures appointment of Marse as postmaster at Colfax, Wash., 166.
Allen, S. B., deputy collector internal revenue, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
Alley, F., political worker against Chase, 353.
Allison, A., editor, supported by Congressman Cooper for postmaster of Nashville, Ind., 398.
Allison, senator, and D. B. Eaton, 111; secures appointment of Osborn, 334.
Almy, candidate of Platt, at Ithaca, N. Y., 264.
Almy, F., secretary Buffalo civil service reform association, 200, 387.
Altgeld, governor of Illinois, flees from office-seekers, 115.
Alton, Pa., Postmaster Beaumont of, worker for Delamater, 134.
Altoona, Kan., Journalist Rhea, postmaster at, 148.
American Horse, Indian chief and rising at Pine Ridge, S. D., 218.
American Protective League, requests lists of voters from postmasters, 330; seeks to assess postmasters, 332.
Americus Club. See Quay and Clarkson.
Ames, J. B., civil service reformer of Cambridge, Mass., 204.
Anderson, A. T., appointed postmaster at Cleveland, O., 216.
Anderson, C. W., federal employe in New York convention, 335.
Anderson, Ind., spoils system in town government at, 331.
Anderson, J. A., deputy sheriff, inefficient, 315.
Anderson, W. G., Sr., police examiner at Brooklyn, N. Y., 222.
Andrews, C. C., address on administrative reform, 23.
Andrews, E. L. See Seneca county, N. Y., 260.
Andrews, G. W., postmaster at Murphysboro, Ill., forced to resign, 165.
Andrews, Ind., Coutts, postmaster of, father of Editor Coutts, 316.
Andrew, J. F., opposed to civil service reform, according to Grosvenor, 201; chairman house civil service committee, extensions proposed by, 305, 306; bill of, introducing merit system in labor service, commended, 321; and appointments under civil service rules, 350; and political activity of federal office-holders in Alabama, 355; chairman of house civil service committee, 86, 358; bill of, for reform in labor service, commended by workingmen, 331; bill of, to regulate appointments of fourth class postmasters; and to introduce Boston labor service system, 359, 388, 397; Secretary C. Foster, 330; opposed to congressional patrolage system, 405.
Andrews, W. H., chairman state republican committee of Pennsylvania, corrupt politician, 133, 134; political agent of Senator Quay, 38, 260.
Angler, E. A., assistant United States district attorney, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
Annapolis, Md., appointment to naval academy at. See Turner, 100; Tucker, postmaster of, in Maryland convention, 335.
Anti-Cobden club, of Philadelphia, resolutions of, demanding repeal of civil service law, 49.
Appeal, to President, against civil service commission, threatened. See Indianapolis, investigation of post office of, 28.
Appointees, unworthy, at various places, 39.
Appointing power, resides in executive officers alone, 263.
Appointments, from eligible lists, year 1889-90, 185. Internal revenue; squabble between Senators May and Sherman, 17.
Applegarth, Rev. H. C., advocates civil service reform, 83.
Apple River, to Daviess county, Ill., applicants for postmastership at, 109.
Applicants, for office under spoils and merit systems, 185.

- Arcola, Ind., Rockhill, postmaster of, removed through influence of Postmaster Higgins; McGoogle appointed, 362.
- Arkalon, Kan., Journalist Stouffer appointed postmaster at, 148.
- Arkansas, patronage of, controlled by Clayton, 188. Political activity of federal officers in, 347, 348.
- Armour, H. O., political worker for Platt, 333. At Minneapolis convention, 341.
- Armstrong. See Baltimore investigation, 326.
- Armstrong, consul-general Rio Janeiro, removed by Harrison for political reasons, 54.
- Armstrong, G. C., journalist, postmaster at Moline, Kan., 149.
- Arthur, C. A., tool of "Tom" Murphy, controls New York custom house, 191.
- Arthur, President, and Pendleton act, 10; and Postmaster Pearson, 12; and office-seekers, 24; Senator Harrison demands patronage in Indiana from, 31; removes Naval Officer Burt to make room for politician. See Burt, 52; Pardons E. S. Ransdall, 80; nominates M. Garrigus, corrupt politician, 88; appoints Langsdale postmaster at Greencastle, Ind., 89, 159; classifies departmental service, 185, 215; controls patronage, but fails of renomination, 262; appoints D. B. Eaton chairman civil service commission, 271, 272; denounces spoils system, 275; signs Pendleton bill, makes classification, etc., 276; appoints Isabella De La Hunt postmistress at Cannelton, Ind., 368, 374.
- Asay, "Jim," disreputable politician, appointed through Congressman Hitt, 160.
- Asbury Park, N. Y., E. G. Harrison appointed postmaster of, 356.
- Ashton, J. H., post office employe. See Baltimore investigation, 267, 296.
- Aspiuwall, J., New York state senator, political worker for Nathan, 264, 371.
- Assessments, political. See Baltimore investigation; see Indiana, Washington (city), South Carolina, West Virginia, Ohio, New York, Alabama, Maryland, Virginia, Ohio, Pennsylvania; see Indianapolis News; committee of national league (see) to investigate 1892; see Tammany Hall; see Old Dominion Republican League, 70; see Giun, 72; in New York; see Roosevelt, Burt, Magone, Beattie, 97; see Quay, 134; see Curry, 160; see Grosvenor, Roosevelt, 161; in State and federal offices in Indiana, those levied on corporations, 171; under Harrison, 173; under Harrison and Cleveland, 255; advocated, see Stratton and Grosvenor, 178, 179; federal employes from Ohio Subjected to, 179; see Dudley, 180; levied on federal employes from Indiana, 181; in federal and other offices in Connecticut, 183; in Virginia, made by republicans, 226; made by Iowa republican central committee, 240; denounced by President Hayes, 265; in Ohio, by state republican executive committee, 272, 280; in New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio; see Pendleton, Acton, 279, 280; under Harrison, see Mahone blackmailers, see Mahone, 281; in state offices at Albany, N. Y., 180; see Mahone, 305; in New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, 282; condemned in Ohio, Pennsylvania, 286; see Wagner, 287; correspondence of Pennsylvania civil service reform association, regarding, 289; by Postmaster Higgins of Ft. Wayne, Ind., 302; bill of Conkling preventing, in New York, 318, 321; see Morton, O. T., and Allen, 322, 332; see Kentucky, 330; money got by, used by Platt against Harrison, 347; warning against, by civil service commission, 358; levied in North Carolina, 362; in Indiana and New York, 363; see W. H. Harrison, 370, 373, 375, 382, 385; of Indiana office-holders in Washington, 377; in post office at Indianapolis, 403, 411, 412; in Ohio, and in Washington departments, by Old Dominion Republican Club, 412; see Zollinger, 414.
- Associations; see also civil service reform associations; business men's republican and spoils, 234; Indian Rights, 9, 42; twenty-first district republican, of New York City, invited to investigate custom house service in, 236; Ohio republican and printing office, 234.
- Astor, W. W., and politics in New York, 173, 285.
- Atchison, editor and Winamac, Ind., post-office, 88.
- Atkins, postmaster at Freeport, Ill., active politician, 143.
- Atkins, Indian commissioner under President Cleveland, 217.
- Atkins, S., local politician opposed to Congressman Hitt, 169.
- Atkinson, G. W., levies political assessments, 390.
- Atlanta, Ga., census of 1890 well conducted in, 292.
- Atlantic Monthly, for February, 1891, "An Object Lesson in Civil Service Reform," by Roosevelt, 192.
- Atwood, Kan., Greason, journalist, appointed postmaster at, 148.
- Auburn, Ind., Garden, postmaster of, political worker, 379, 380.
- Auburn, N. Y., Knapp, postmaster of, worker for Platt, 143.
- Auditor, removals in office of sixth, 55.
- Augusta, Ga., census service in, inefficient, 295.
- Augusta, Me., postmaster at, removed; place given to "Joe" Manley, 38; Manley, postmaster of, a political worker, 135, 150; Manley, postmaster of, congressional candidate opposing Burleigh, and non-delivery in Augusta of papers advocating Burleigh, 364; Stinson, nephew of Mrs. Blaine, appointed postmaster at, 371.
- Augustine, Kan., Journalist Fenstermaker, appointed postmaster at, 148.
- Aurelia, Ia., Marsh postmaster of, a political worker, 260.
- Aurora, Ill., Journalist Hudder appointed postmaster at, 126.
- Austen, Cal. See Tammany, 318.
- Austin, C. H., editor, appointed postmaster at Lineville, Iowa, 142.
- Austin, H. C., New York police officer given federal offices, 216.
- Austin, Tex., DeGress, chairman Texas republican state committee, appointed postmaster at, 71.
- Australia, civil service reform in, 111.
- Australian ballot system, opposed by Boutelle; Reed, T. B.; Blaine, Gorman, 228.
- Avery, supported by Congressman Hitt for assistant treasurer, 110.
- Ayton, L. H., and political assessments. See Kentucky.
- Ayers, I., special treasury agent, pays political assessments, 279.
- Bachelder, G. E., post-office inspector on removal of Postmaster Bundy, 176.
- Bachman, postmaster of Carruna, Ind., 379; political worker, 380.
- Backus, county treasurer at Indianapolis, 408; persuades Dunn, post-office employe at, to solicit political contributions, 411, 412.
- Bacon, Rev. B. W., sermon on evils of spoils system, 102.
- Bacon, D., journalist, postmaster at Nampa, Idaho, 155.
- Bacon, F., mayor of Oregon, Ill., politician, 109.
- Bacon, T., address annual meeting National League, noticed, 269.
- Bad Axe, Mich., Journalist Maywood postmaster at, 149.
- Bagby, low negro politician, appointed to railway mail service; unfit, 10, 21, 25, 27, 34, 35, 54, 94, 96, 112, 173.
- Bagby, B., political worker for Harrison, 302.
- Bailey, J. J., protests against Martin as internal revenue collector in Pennsylvania, 232, 374.
- Bailey, J. M., candidate of Barnes faction for surveyorship of Albany district, 46; collector at Albany, political worker, 390.
- Bailey, L. O., ward politician, city attorney for Indianapolis, opposes bill for new charter of, 212; deputy attorney-general of Indiana, 315.
- Bailey, M. H., and political assessments, 384.
- Bailey, T., applicant for postmaster of Portland, Ind., 88.
- Bailey, W. A., Harrison delegate from North Carolina, 334.
- Bain, congressman, on house committee of civil service, 86.
- Bain Faction, in St. Louis, 304.
- Bain. See Senator Harrison, 81.
- Baird, postmaster at Ogdensburg, N. Y., removed, 126.
- Baird, Colonel, politician, offered Brooklyn, N. Y., postmastership, 131.
- Bairdstown, O., Journalist Grimes postmaster at, 149.
- Baker Ballot Reform Bill, ruined by Quay and Martin, federal office, 228, 229, 232, or 254.
- Baker, D., postmaster at Mobile, Ala., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Baker, I. V. See Tammany, 319.
- Baker, Judge, at Minneapolis convention, 343.
- Baker, W. H., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.
- Baldwin, post-office employe of Austin, Ind., at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- Baldwin, editor, appointed to position in government printing office, 126.
- Baldwin. See Woodruff, 106.
- Baldwin, C., editor, given office by Governor Foraker, 301.
- Baldwin, C. A., journalist, postmaster at Vicksburg, Mich., 149.
- Baldwin, D. A., political worker, 182, 183; see also Kings county, New York, 371.
- Bales, E. L., Journalist, postmaster at Bloomington, S. Dak., 155.
- Balk, W. A., post-office employe, see Indianapolis investigation, 411.
- Ball, Col., controls part of patronage in North Dakota, 216.
- Ball, G. H., clerk in Indiana senate, 408.
- Ballot, secret, good results of in Indiana, 389.
- Ballantine, J., opposes political activity of federal office holders in New York, 336.
- Ballantyne, R. C., appointed postmaster at Bracketsville, Tex., vice Gildea, removed for political reasons, 186.
- Balmaceda, Pres., usurper in Chile, 261, 281, 364, 387; course of United States government with, 282.
- Baltimore, Md., federal office holders interfere in primaries at, 219, 225, 226; investigation by Roosevelt, Rose and Bonaparte of federal officers in elections at, 261, 267, 268; also federal interference in primaries, 277, 278; also of political activity of federal employes in primaries at, 287; also of political activity of federal officers in primaries at, 295, 296, 312, 320, 326, 329, 330; also of violations of law by federal employes at, 321, 322; also of political activity of federal office-holders in, 396; Roosevelt's report of investigation, 254, 255; political activity of federal office-holders at, 372, 373, 376; investigation, etc., 412; Wanamaker shields post-office employes for interference in elections, 350; conference, resolutions for publicity of examination papers, 10; resolutions of Tippecanoe Club, 49; custom house at, removals in, 53; evil effects of patronage on schools of, 211; public meeting of, condemns Gorman, 214; mayor of and Gorman testimonial, 236; Raisin, low politician, appointed naval officer at, through influence of Gorman, 237; Raisin, "boss" in, 251; violations of civil service law at, 366; federal officers at under Cleveland, 376; political assessments permitted by internal revenue collector, see Mudd and Coffin, 162; personnel of examiners at, 186; and state of politics, 283; customs district of, classified 1883, 276; Brown and Veazy postmasters of, and Sears, post-office employe at, 277; civil service in post-office at, 95; effect of secret eligible lists in post-office at, 53; conflict over control of post-office at, 84; Postmaster Veazy of, removals under, 53; Postmaster Brown of, spoilsman, 53; Johnson, postmaster at, conducts factional fight at, 121; removes employes without cause, 137; makes clean sweep, 189; makes clean sweep, testimony of before Roosevelt, 254, 255; in Maryland convention, 335; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 337, 347; political assessment circular of civil service commission, 363; as a campaign fund raiser, 370.
- Baltimore American [Repub.] advocates civil service reform, 65.
- Banbury, J. W., journalist, postmaster at Britton, S. Dak., 155.
- Bancroft, postmaster at Concord, Mass., to be re-appointed, 91.
- Bancroft, see Hillism, 309.
- Bangor, Me., census of 1890; well conducted in, 292.
- Bangor, S. Dak., Journalist Griffers, postmaster at, 155.
- Banks, a negro, opposes Harrison; wants offices for negroes, 244.
- Banks, congressman advocates appointment of J. J. McCarthy in payment of political debts, 31; fails to obtain office for political worker, 39; aids spoils methods of Pension Commissioner Raum, 130.
- Bannon, A., patronage of, 134.
- Barbadoes, consul at, 56.
- Bardsley, tool of Quay, 250.
- Bardsley; see Quay, 305; embezzler, 352.
- Bargue, P., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.
- Barlo, efficient post-office inspector, removal for political reasons, 298.
- Barker, Wharton, protests against Quay 95; letter to Harrison protesting against giving patronage to Quay, 104.
- Barker, "Billy," low politician, 311.
- Barnard, Judge, and Dutchess county, N. Y., frauds, 366.
- Barnes, appointed consul at Chemnitz vice Merritt, removed for political reasons, 371.
- Barnes, justice of peace, a political worker, 162.
- Barnes, representative in Indiana legislature, spoilsman, 407.
- Barnes, C. B., negro, federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Barnes, J. M., postmaster, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Barnes, W., factional leader in Albany, N. Y., consults with Harrison over patronage, 46.
- Barnett, I. O. G. federal employe, and political assessments. See Kentucky.
- Barnett, J., door-keeper in Indiana senate, 408.
- Barnett, J. S., federal employe, and political assessments. See Kentucky.
- Barneveld, Wis., Journalist Jones postmaster at, 155.
- Barnstable (Mass.), collector of, appointed. See Goss, 46.
- Barnum, collector, resignation asked, 22.
- Barnum, J. S., editor, appointed postmaster at Princeville, Ill., 141.
- Barrett, E. J., postmaster at Alexandria, La., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Barrett, W. E., signs petition for larger appropriation for civil service commission, 102.
- Barrow, C. A., secretary Kings county republican committee, 121; secretary general committee, political worker for Woodruff, 197.
- Barrow, H. A., politician appointed deputy naval officer at New York.
- Barry, P. M., term expires as postmaster at Oswego, N. Y., 126.
- Bartholdt, R., office-seeker, 14.
- Bartlett, E. B., 311; delegate at Minneapolis convention, 345.
- Batavia, N. Y., candidate for postmaster at. See Sawyer, 47.
- Batchelder, General, federal officer, works for renomination of Harrison, 348.
- Batcheller, assistant secretary of the treasury, 371.
- Bates, W. R., requests poll of voters from Postmaster Daniels, 383.
- Baxter, assessor, a political worker, 162.
- Baxter, A. E., 259; U. S. marshal in New York, a political worker for Fassett, 265, 266, 269, 279, 280, 287.
- Baxter, D., mayor of Rochell, Ill., politician, 109.
- Baxter, F. K., political worker, to be appointed New York state railroad commissioner vice Spencer, removed, 356.
- Bayard, T. F., secretary, favors civil service reform, 82; ex-secretary, and spoils system, 145.
- Bayard, ex-secretary, extract from address be-

- fore alumni students of Ann Arbor Law School, on spoils system, 257.
- Bayard, secretary, Jewett claim, 290; and Elkins's claim against Brazil, 369.
- Bayfield, Wis., Journalist Bell postmaster at, 155.
- Baylis, Ill., Journalist Donley appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Bayne, T. M., congressman, advocates application of civil service reform to certain postmasters, 100; patronage of, 133; post-offices in his district used for his nomination, 135; and postmaster Gilleland, 299.
- Beach, D., journalist, postmaster at Valley Center, 149.
- Beal, U. S. minister to Persia, resigns to do political work, 382.
- Beallsville, O., Editor Keepers appointed postmaster of, 301.
- Beallsville, Pa., Journalist Robison postmaster at, 149.
- Beard, A. W., supported by Massachusetts senators for Boston collectorship, 22; appointed collector at Boston, vice Saltonstall removed, 129; signs petition for larger appropriation for civil service commission, 102; gives office to Journalist John L. Swift, 108; political worker, 162, 179, 269, 288, 334; removes democrats in custom house, 245; removals under, 322.
- Beardsley, railroad commissioner in New York, 356.
- Bearss, post-office inspector at Peru, Ind., at Minneapolis convention, 379.
- Bearss, A. C., worker for Harrison, appointed chief clerk in railroad mail service, 377.
- Beaty, J. W., worker for Harrison, 355.
- Beattie, surveyor, political assessments under, 197.
- Beattie, W. J., political worker. See Kings Co., New York.
- Beaumont, postmaster at Alton, Pa., worker for Delamater, 134.
- Beck, state senator of Indiana, son of, appointed page, 408.
- Beebe, E. R., journalist, postmaster at Princeton, Wis., 155.
- Beers, T. H., appointed supervisor of census, 301.
- Belden, congressman, and Syracuse, N. Y., postmastership, 46, 71; secures appointment of Editor Von Bergman, 132; opposed by Postmaster C. E. Smith, and Collector F. Hendricks, 386.
- Belknap; see Rochester, N. Y., 305.
- Bell, appointed by President Harrison, 27; second assistant postmaster-general, reinstates incompetent clerk in Massachusetts; removes competent clerk in Illinois, 30; candidate for governor of Texas, 159.
- Bell, C. G., journalist, postmaster at Bayfield, Wis., 155.
- Bell, J., a political worker, 160.
- Bell, J. A., post-office employee; see Baltimore investigation, 312, 320, 326, 328.
- Bell, J. L., superintendent of railway mail service, tool of Clarkson, 21; superintendent railway mail service, refuses access to records of removals, etc., 163.
- Bell, T., politician appointed to look after office-seekers, 46.
- Bellamy, W. H., political worker, 287; secretary republican county committee, at Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Benedict, G. G., editor, appointed collector of district of Burlington, Vt., 126.
- Benedict, R. D., defeated by ward politician Nathan, 121; candidate for congress, aided by Secretary Tracy, 135; defeated candidate controls patronage in New York, 142; congressional candidate opposes Nathan, 143.
- Benedict, Kansas, Journalist McMullin postmaster at, 148.
- Benjamin, Capt., federal employe, pays political assessments, 279.
- Benjamin, J., politician in Brooklyn, denounces Nathan, 304; ward politician in New York, 304; federal employe in New York convention, 335; political worker, 371.
- Bennett, S., political worker, appointed postmaster at Evansville, Ind., see Posey, 46, 153, 158, 377.
- Bennett, postmaster at Hartford, Conn. removal of Barrio, efficient post office inspector, 298.
- Bennett, postmaster at Warsaw, Ind., 316; political worker, 378, 380.
- Bennett, F., journalist, postmaster at Fulton, N. Y., 155.
- Bennett, J., postmaster at Kent, N. Y., a political worker, 162.
- Benson, Ill., F. E. Larned, son of editor, appointed postmaster at, editor, deputy postmaster, 148.
- Benton county, Mo., applicants for post-offices in, by, see Upton, 55.
- Berg, Dr., on Indiana State Board of Health, inefficient, 316.
- Berks County, Pa., control of patronage in, 47.
- Bernard, disreputable democratic politician in Cincinnati, 352.
- Bernard, C. M., Harrison delegate from North Carolina, 334.
- Berne, Ind., J. N. Sullivan appointed postmaster at and removed; political-worker Wagoner appointed, 88.
- Bernhamer, corrupt politician of Indianapolis, convicted of tally-sheet forgery, see Indianapolis.
- Berri, E. D., ward politician. See Kings Co., N. Y.
- Berry, schemes for postmastership at Colfax, Wash., 165.
- Berryman, W., deputy collector at New York city, a political worker, 265.
- Bertram, S., given place in Indiana legislature, 406.
- Besancon, H. O., journalist, postmaster at Harold, South Dakota, 155.
- Beshore, S. S., politician, census supervisor 6th Indiana district, 104.
- Best, E. T., journalist, postmaster at Nillgh, Neb., 149.
- Beverly, Mass., Postmaster Odell of, a political worker, 162.
- Beyerle, L. H., editor, appointed postmaster at Gosheu, Ind., 30, 126, 316, 377, 378.
- Bickford, political worker, 134.
- Bickham, editor, relatives of, hold federal offices, 301.
- Bicknell, postmaster of Garrett, Ind., political worker, 379, 380.
- Biddleman, deputy United States marshal, collects political assessments, 372.
- Bidwell J. E., recommends O'Donnell, 59.
- Bigelow, W. H., appointed division superintendent of railroad mail service, 22, 156.
- Biggs, congressman, opposes civil service reform, 125.
- Biglin, B., employs democrats, 311, 312; baggage contractor at Castle Garden, a political worker, 265; cartage bid of for New York custom-house, to be accepted for political reasons, 216; gets position for his brother in New York custom-house, 258; political worker in New York convention, 335; cartage contractor, 358.
- Biglin, J. C., brother of "Barney" Biglin, gets office through him; promised Appraiser Cooper's place in New York custom-house, 258.
- Bingham, J. H., federal officer, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Binghamton Republican [republican]. Roosevelt must not appear in earnest, 49; Dunn, postmaster of, a political worker, 266; Dunn, postmaster of, secures removal of pension examiner Van Alstyne, 304.
- Binkley, W., political worker for Foraker, charges federal interference as cause of his defeat, 301.
- Birch, J., applicant for postmaster at Greencastle, Ind., 89.
- Birkett, chairman republican general committee, and appointments in Brooklyn Navy Yard, 45; distributor of patronage in Brooklyn Navy Yard, 55; state senator of New York, supports Congressman Wallace, 142; opposed by Nathan, 265; treasurer Kings county, N. Y., central republican committee, 198; ward politician in New York, 304; politician of Brooklyn, 106.
- Birmingham, Ala., Houston, postmaster of, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Birmingham, Eng., city government of, 284.
- Bishop, mayor of Buffalo, N. Y., extends operation of civil service law in city offices, 260.
- Bishop, sheriff of Ogle county, Illinois, politician, 109.
- Blismark, builds up German empire, 244.
- Blackford, E. G., fish commissioner of New York, removed; Hackney, politician worker, appointed by Hill, 310.
- Blackford, L. M., on "Morals of Civil Service Reform," 130, 136.
- Blackford, W. T., federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Black, pension commissioner, attempts to remove Miss Sweet, 107.
- Black, J., and Petroff, 152.
- Black, R. A., republican "boss," see Greenfield, Ind., 89.
- "Blacklisting." See Stratton and Grosvenor.
- Blackwell, J., ward politician of Indianapolis. See Parnell Hall.
- Blaine, E., works for Blaine at Minneapolis, 345.
- Blaine J. G., secretary, and recommendations from General Brown, of office-seekers, 7; views on civil service reform in "Twenty Years of Congress," 9; defeat of, attributed to Pearson, postmaster at New York, 13; and "Joe" Manley, 33; and consulship at Barbadoes, 56; uses influence to secure family appointments, 71; and postmastership at Washington, Pa., 100; candidates of superseded by those of Quay, 112; on tariff, 169; subject to Quay, 173; begged to speak, 180; applicants for consulships under, 185; opposes Australian ballot system, 228; and Harrison, 240; and Harrison, 241; promises "fealty" to Harrison, 250; alienates reform element in 1884, 255; "knifed" by Nathan in 1884, 264; and Elkins, 290; Quay's candidate for presidency, 299; nomination of, favored by Quay, 300; workers for in Indiana, 302, 303; and Nathan, 304; supporters in 1876 in Maryland convention, 335, 337; a candidate at Indianapolis, 339, 340, 341, 342; at Minneapolis convention, 343; and Minneapolis convention, 344, 345, 346, 347, 348; and Elkins's claim against Brazil, 369; in 1884, 376.
- Blaine, Jr., J. G., son of Secretary Blaine, given office, 108; given office through Congressman Hitt, 110.
- Blaine, R. G., brother of Secretary Blaine, given office, 108.
- Blair, representative in Indiana legislature and spoils methods in, 406, 407.
- Blair, United States marshal and Monroeville post-office, 88.
- Blair, A. C., postmaster in Jackson county, Iowa, a political worker, 260.
- Blair, T., Indian agent, 217.
- Blair, J. C., editor, postmaster at Newell, Iowa, a political worker, 260.
- Blair, senator, civil service reform a humbug; opposed to it, 45, 49, 50, 65; and Eaves, 159.
- Bland, delegate to Minneapolis convention; opposing Harrison, 346.
- Blankenburg, R., letter to Quay, 157.
- Bliss, C. N., and request of postmasters for list of voters, 330; political worker for Harrison, see New York, 333; treasurer national republican committee, 363.
- Bliss, J. W., journalist, postmaster at Greenleaf, Kansas, 149.
- Bloomfield, Ia., Postmaster Evans of, removed on secret charges, 175.
- Bloomington, Ind., branch of Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, meeting of, addressed by T. Roosevelt, 1890, 108; branch of Indiana Civil Reform Association, officers of, 182; census service, turned over to spoils, enumerators make lists of voters, 293; McPheeters, postmaster of, at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- Bloomington, S. Dak., Journalist Bales, postmaster at, 155.
- Blount, A. R., federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Blunt, ex-postmaster appointed customs surveyor, 150.
- Board, local examining at Indianapolis, efficiency of, 18, 42, 120; local examining at Indianapolis, 25, 26, 94; local civil service at Indianapolis, appointments to, 34.
- Boards, examining for civil service should be independent, 17; examining; see, also, examiners, 186; pension examining, appointed through influence of Senator Cullom, 30.
- Boatner, congressman on house committee on civil service, 86; upholds civil service commission, 204; Secretary C. Foster, 350.
- Bode, Ia., Postmaster Rassing of, a political worker, 260.
- Bogardus, E., whose son holds federal office, political worker for Hiscock, 265.
- Bogemann, Rev. E. C., favors civil service reform, 229.
- Boise City, Idaho, assay office, Wild, removed without cause by President Harrison. Place given to spoilsmen, 30.
- Bolton, J. A., soldier, a political worker, 159.
- Bonaparte, C. J., at Baltimore conference 1889, 2; address of, upon civil service reform, 25; duty of the President, 26; on spoils, heading to July number, 1889, CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 32; address of, before National League, 1889, on civil service reform as a moral question, 59, 60, 61; annual address of, before reform associations of Maryland, 1889, 62; spoils system immoral, 69; to examine management of civil service, 77; address of, before Catholic Club of Baltimore, on Catholics and citizenship, 97; to address Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, 108; to address annual meeting, 1890, of Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, 111; committeeman, report on congressional patronage, 113, 114, 115; address of, before Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, 1890, on "Scope and Difficulties of Civil Service Reform," 119, 126, 127, 128; on committee investigating patent office, report of, 139, 140, 141; on relations of civil service reform to other reforms, 153; on Gorman, 161; on Committee of National League, investigating presidential post-offices, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166; address before annual meeting National League, 1890, 169, 170; on committee of National League reporting on removals on secret charges, 175, 176, 177; on committee of National League, reports on political changes in presidential post-offices, 188; assists in investigation of interference of federal officers in elections, at Baltimore, 261, 266, 267, 291, 295; address of, before annual meeting National League, noticed, 269; on special committee of National League investigating census service, 291, 295; on political corruption in Maryland, 317, 324; on committee of publication of Good Government, 357; on Judge Bradley and Assistant Attorney-General Tynor, 357, 358.
- Bond, see Baltimore investigation, 328.
- Bone, postmaster at Shelbyville, Indiana, removed on secret charges, 177.
- Bonge, appointed postmaster at Cumberland, Indiana, 89.
- Boody, congressional candidate, 183.
- Boody, D. A., democratic candidate for mayor of Brooklyn, New York, 287.
- Boone, Cal., superintendent work-house at Indianapolis, 205, 206.
- Boonville, Ind., editor appointed postmaster at, 37; Postmaster Hammond of, political worker, 380, Pate, postmaster of, political worker, 380.
- Booth, A. R., employe in navy yard, in New York convention, 335.
- Booth, W. C., promised place in Brooklyn. See Wallace, 72.
- Borden, supported by Massachusetts congressmen for Boston collectorship, 22.
- Borin, C., journalist, postmaster at Oberlin, Kan., 149.
- Bosler, J. W., 291.
- Boston Advertiser (republican), on CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 235.
- Boston Journal (republican), on civil service reform, 65, 66.

- Boston Post (democrat), opposed to spoils system, 85; accounts of spoils fights in treasury department and Indian service, 216, 217; on feudalism revived, in New York City and Brooklyn, 263.
- Boston Transcript (republican), on civil service reform, 65; attributes republican defeat of 1889 to patronage system, 76.
- Boston, Mass., municipal service in; a field for reform, 235; civil service system in, 68; competitive tests in police force of, 104; fire service in, 120; merit system in city offices of, 172; civil service methods used at, for laborers, 181; merit system in labor service of, 204; civil service reform in city offices of, 212; merit system in use in city departments of, 220, 221; merit methods of employing laborers commended; applied to navy yards, see Tracy, 221, 222; examination in use for police force of, 223, 224; merit system for laborers, 228; labor employment system of advocated for Indianapolis, 243; physical examinations for fire and police services of Boston, Mass., 243, 246, 247, 248, 249; civil service methods employed in city departments of, 273; city government of, 284; labor service system of, 317; labor system of commended, 349; labor service of, 357; no appointive officer at, allowed to work politically, 358; labor system advocated for federal service by Andrews, 359; labor service system of, bill of Andrews to introduce into federal service, 388; civil service reform association of; resolutions of on Postmaster Pearson, 23; civil service reform in custom house of, under Saltonstall, 71; removals without cause in custom house at, for relative of Secretary Blaine, 71; address before civil service reform association, by J. R. Lowell, 77; civil service reformers of, 93; employes in custom house at, political workers, 179; removal of Corse, postmaster of, for political reasons, 213, 215, 237; Collector Beard at, removes democrats in custom house, 245; ex-postmaster Corse of, entertained by Massachusetts Reform Club, Hart, new incumbent, commended by Corse, 251; Beard, collector of, a political worker, 269; customs, district of, classified, 1883, 276; Corse postmaster of, Saltonstall collector at removed, 282; Beard, collector at, a political worker, 288; removals under Beard, collector at, 322; Hart, postmaster at, Beard collector, and other federal officers, political workers, 334; Corse, postmaster of, removed for political reasons, 367; removal for political reasons of Corse postmaster of, 376; civil service reform association of, 415.
- Bosworth, T., applicant for postmaster at Portland, Ind., 88.
- Botty, H. C., political worker for ex-Alderman Rathwell, New York City, 199.
- Boulder, J. W. See Baltimore investigation, 278.
- Bonrke, B., ward politician in New York City, 263.
- Boutelle, congressman, interview on patronage in Maine, 157; opposes Australian ballot system, 228.
- Bowden, congressman, controls spoil in Norfolk navy yard, 153; a political worker, 162.
- Bowles, F. T., naval officer, on board to examine applicants for positions in navy yard at Brooklyn, N. Y., 222.
- Boyd, state senator, and Noblesville, Ind., post-office, 89.
- Boyd, H., post-office employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Boyd, S. H., office-seeker, 14.
- Boyer, C. R., favors civil service reform, 229.
- Boyer, H. K., supported by Senator Quay for state treasurer of Pennsylvania, 38.
- Boyle, A., political worker, foreman in navy yard at Brooklyn, 142; political worker for Congressman Wallace, 183.
- Boyles, G. F., negro delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344, 348.
- Boynton, General, and scramble for offices, 24.
- Boynton, H. V., on Cincinnati Tammany, 301, 302.
- Brackett, governor of Massachusetts, signs petition for larger appropriation for civil service commission, 102.
- Brackettsville, Tex., Postmaster Gildea removed for political reasons, Ballantyne appointed, 186.
- Brackston, uses influence for appointment of Throop, 59.
- Bradbury, W. F., civil service reformer of Cambridge, Mass., 204.
- Bradford, Pa., postmaster at, see Flenniken, 99.
- Bradley, ward politician, see Buffalo, N. Y., 196.
- Bradley, Cal., and Blaine "boom," 344.
- Bradley, Justice, and Mahone "blackmailers," 305; charge of to jury in Mahone "blackmailers" case, condemned, 321; and Mahone "blackmailers," 357, 358.
- Brady, and Elkins, 374.
- Brady, opponent of Mahone, 52.
- Brady, A., postmaster at Charlotte, N. C., Harrison delegate to Minneapolis, 334, 348.
- Brady, J. D., appointed collector at Norfolk, Va., 52; collector internal revenue, political worker, 370.
- Braine, Admiral, warns Boyle, 142.
- Brandt, postmaster of Des Moines, political worker at Minneapolis convention, 346.
- Brant, police captain in Elizabeth, N. J., given federal office, 216.
- Brattleboro, Vt., Postmaster Childs endorsed for re-appointment, 100; caucus on question of re-appointment of Postmaster Childs of, 108.
- Bray, Representative, opposed to Congressman Hitt, 109.
- Bray, L. T., defeated candidate, opposes Hitt, 136.
- Brayton, see Collier.
- Brayton, E. M., politician in South Carolina, opposing Harrison, 382.
- Breckenridge, Judge, civil service reformer of Missonri, 239.
- Breen, J. M., editor, appointed postmaster at Flanagan, Ill., 141.
- Brenner, J., political worker, see Kings county, N. Y., also, 371.
- Breslau, Journalist Dunlap appointed consul to, 126.
- Bretz, congressman, patronage of, 411, 419, 421, 422.
- Brewer, congressman, asks resignation of Cowan, postmaster at Ovid, Mich., 165.
- Brewer, postmaster at Vineland, N. J., removal of for political reasons, see Vineland, 39.
- Brewster, attorney-general, and Postmaster Pearson, b 12.
- Bribery of voters, see Kercheval, 83; in offices and money, see Collier, 162; in Pennsylvania, 151; in elections advised to aid Republicans in Indiana, 190, 191; in republican caucuses in Cortland county, N. Y., by Hiscock, also Jefferson county, 264; for Harrison delegates in Indiana, 378.
- Brice, C. S., senator, and Gorman, 307.
- Bridgeport, Conn., removal of postmaster at, to give place to spoilsman, 29.
- Briggs, cartage contractor at New York custom-house, spoilsman, 332; cartage contractor, and Collector Erhardt, 358; cartage contractor at New York custom-house, 371.
- Briggs, H., part of address of at annual meeting of Indiana civil service reform association 1889, 8.
- Briggs, H. G., appointed postmaster at Portland, Me., through influence of Speaker Reed, 150.
- Briggs, T. A., cartage bid of for New York custom-house, not accepted for political reasons, 216.
- Brimberry, B. F., negro, postmaster, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Brinsmade, A. T., federal office-holder, political worker, 280.
- Bristol, Postmaster Montgomery of. See Simond, 91.
- Bristow, Henry, politician appointed to look after office-seekers, 46.
- Britton, M., treasury inspector, removed for political reasons, 332.
- Britton, S. Dak., Journalist Banbury postmaster at, 155.
- Broadhead, comptroller, secures reinstatement of thief Weeks, in Kittery navy yard, 147.
- Brock, S. G., president Missouri state republican association, 383.
- Brocket, chief clerk, spoilsman, 24.
- Brockmeier, H., ward politician, see New York City.
- Brodsky, J. E., corrupt politician, 234; political worker, 268.
- Brogan, captain of police in New York City, 319.
- Bronson, B. H., signal officer, secret charges against, 312.
- Bronson, O. H., journalist, appointed postmaster at New Richland, Kan., 126.
- Brooke, General, and Indian rising at Pine Ridge, S. Dak., 218.
- Brookfield, N. Y., Journalist Spooner postmaster at, 155.
- Brookfield, W., supports Lee for place in New York custom house, 259; chairman republican state committee of New York, 279; at Minneapolis, 344; chairman New York state republican committee, 363; chairman, etc. 371.
- Brookline, Massachusetts Civil Service Reform Association of, and Commissioner Roosevelt, sentiment in favor of, civil service reform, 36.
- Brooklyn, Ind., retention of Gamble postmaster at asked, see Cooper, 112.
- Brooklyn (N. Y.) Times (republican), patronage a source of weakness, 65.
- Brooklyn, N. Y., places in navy yard at, at disposal of "The" Allen, see; spoils "committee" at, 24; appointments in navy yard at, how made, 45; navy yard at, control of patronage in, 55; appointments in custom-house at, 72; removal sought of Postmaster Hendricks of, 72; political workers of, get office through Congressman Wallace, 72; examination in fire department of, 93; fire service in, 120; Postmaster Hendrix removed, place offered to politician, 131; Collins spoken of for postmaster of, see Willis, 135; spoils system in navy yard at, 142; navy yard at, spoils system in, 148; abuses and spoils system in navy yard at, under Secretary Whitney, 148; examination questions used in police service at, 152; navy yard at, given up as spoil by Tracy, 153; removals in navy yard at under Cleveland and Harrison, 155; republican factional fights for control of machine in, 197, 198; merit system in use in city offices at, 220; examinations for positions in, 221; examination in use for police force of, 222, 223; examinations instituted by Secretary Tracy in navy yard at, statement of examining board, 236; civil service commission of commended, 239; feudalism revived in, 263; factional fights in among republicans, at primaries, 264; armory frands at, see Tammany, 318, 319; Collins, postmaster of, political worker for Harrison, 336; Nathan and anti-Nathan factions in, 352; Page, chief of ordnance department at navy yard at removed, 355; prize fighter appointed at policeman in, 355; Collins, postmaster of, spoilsman, 360.
- Brooks, J. M., civil service reformer of Cambridge, Mass., 204.
- Brooks, W. H., appointed internal revenue collector at Philadelphia vice Martin resigned. See Quay and Harmer, 241; collector internal revenue, suspected by Harrison as supporter of Quay, 300.
- Brookshire, congressman, patronage of, 393, 410, 413, 419; allows Voorhees to name postmaster of Terre Haute Ind., 405.
- Brophy, J. C., doorkeeper in Indiana senate, 408.
- Brosius, congressman and post-offices in his district, 72.
- Brovard, J., doorkeeper in Indiana senate, 408.
- Brower, congressman, fights successfully for control of patronage in North Carolina, 47.
- Browne, General, and office-seekers, 6, 7, 14; and Hyat, officer in house of representatives, 84.
- Browne, postmaster at Clay City, Ind., removed, 89.
- Brown, politician, 134.
- Brown, state senator of New York, and Tammany bridge scandal, 317.
- Brown, political worker, 334.
- Brown, postmaster of Franklin, Ind., asked to resign, 377.
- Brown, representative in Indiana legislature, opposes spoils methods in 407.
- Brown, A. H., removed from office and political worker appointed, 79.
- Brown, A. H., physician, physical examiner for police and fire services of New York and Boston, 246.
- Brown, C. G., worker for Hiscock, 386.
- Brown, D. C., address of on school and civil service reform, 23, 24.
- Brown, E., see Hillism, 309.
- Brown, F., postmaster at Baltimore and Sears P. O., employe at, 277; postmaster at Baltimore, 189; postmaster at Baltimore, spoilsman, 53.
- Brown, F. W., editor, postmaster at Dysart, Iowa, 142.
- Brown, Capt. G. L. R., Indian agent at Pine Ridge, S. Dak., exposes political assessment scheme, 384.
- Brown, G. N., politician of N. Carolina, 109.
- Brown, H. U., officer Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, 108.
- Brown, H. U., of Indianapolis News, favors civil service reform, 227, 229.
- Browne, T., congressman, opposes civil service reform, an advocate of congressional patronage, 35, 49, 112; opposes appointment of Cravens, 84; secures appointment of Marsh as postmaster at Portland, Ind., 89; controls post-office of Knightstown, Ind., 118; given patronage by Harrison, 240; patronage of, 410, 411, 419, 420, 421, 422; and postmastership of Madison, Ind., 393.
- Brown, J. B., editor opposed to Congressman Hitt, 110.
- Brown, J. D., postmaster in Harrison county, Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Brown, L. H., journalist, postmaster at Hammondsport, N. Y., 155.
- Brown, L. W., United States consul to Glasgow, political worker, 390.
- Browne, W., postmaster at Russellville, Ind., removed, 89.
- Brown, R. B., editor, given office by Governor Foraker, 301.
- Brown, T. H., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.
- Brown, V. H., Cunard agent in New York City, surety for Collector Fassett, 258.
- Brown, W., warden of Sing Sing prison, worker for Hill, 309.
- Brown, W. L., state senator (N. Y.), recommends "Paddy" Diver for police justice, 184.
- Brown, W. L., and Fassett, collector at New York City, 258.
- Brown, W. W., railroad mail employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Brown, Z., praises CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 110.
- Brownsville, Texas, Customs Collector Rentfrow at, a political worker, 150; custom house at not classified, number of employes in, 277.
- Bruce, B. K., negro, register of deeds in District of Columbia, works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 337, 344, 345; political worker, 362, 382, 389.
- Bruder, C. F., at Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Brugman, Dr. A. F., 355.
- Brules, Indians, rising at Pine Ridge, S. Dak., 218.
- Brnner, E., sells city offices in San Francisco, 215.
- Brntt, J. R., postmaster at Osage Mission, Kan., removed after four years' service, second commission unexpired; Park appointed, 187, 188.
- Brush, W. T., advises bribery to aid republicans in Indiana, 190, 191, 213.
- Bryant, M. B., at Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Bryant, W. C., political worker, see Kings county, N. Y.
- Brydia, C. S., editor, appointed postmaster at Saukemin, Ill., 141.
- Brynildsen, J., journalist, postmaster at Graceville, Minn., 149.
- Bryson, Commodore, testimony of regarding Kittery navy yard, 147.
- Buchanan, United States marshal, active politician, 143.
- Buchanan, C. N., solicits political assessments, see Kentucky.
- Buchanan, G., navy yard employe, in New York convention, 335.
- Buchanan, G. A., special treasury agent, political worker in New York, 336.

- Buchanan, G. N., deputy collector internal revenue in Mississippi, delegate for Harrison at Minneapolis, 344, 348.
- Buchanan, J., President, civil service under, 124; spoils system under, 405.
- Bucher, G. F., postmaster at Carroll, Ill., works for Hitt, 136.
- Buck, applicant for, postmaster of Portland, Ind., 88.
- Buck, A. E., United States marshal, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Bucyrus, O., Journalist Hufley postmaster at, through Senator Sherman, 149, 301.
- Budd, J. B., federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Bueman, pension examiner in Indiana, political worker, 380.
- Buffalo, N. Y., addresses by Loomis and Shephard before Central Labor Union of, 44; common council of disregards New York civil service law, 161; account of censuses in, 196, 197; nineteenth of city offices outside of educational department covered by New York civil service act, 200; civil service reform in city offices in, 212; merit system in use in city offices at, 220; labor organizations of support civil service reform, 228; Morgan, customs collector at, a political worker, 265; civil service reform victories in city service of, 273; custom house at not classified, number of employes in, 277; civil service reform established in, 286; civil service law in city departments of upheld, 281; census of 1890 not well conducted at, 293; postmaster and post-office employes of pay political assessments, 391; memorial of G. W. Curtis adopted by civil service reform association of, 394; civil service reform association of gives aid to CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, eighth annual meeting, 32; civil service reform association of, annual meeting 1890, 137, active, 161; address of Rogers, president, list of officers of, 189, 200; annual meeting, 1891, thanks Secretary Tracy and Congressman Lodge, city government of applies merit system, 238; Express objects to patronage and spoils system, 66; Sunday Truth (labor) favors civil service reform, 84; Commercial (republican), civil service reform a humbug, 92.
- Bull, Siting, see Indian service, 182.
- Bunce, F. M., naval officer, on board to examine applicants for positions in navy yard at Brooklyn, N. Y., 222.
- Bundy, H. E., postmaster at Oncouta, N. Y., removed on secret charges, 176.
- Burchell, United States marshal, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Burchett, D. J., United States marshal, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Burchinal, W. D., surveyor of port of Baltimore, in Maryland convention, 335.
- Burden, H., fish commissioner of New York, resigns, 310.
- Burdett, J. O., chairman Massachusetts republican state committee, signs petition for larger appropriation for civil service commission, 102.
- Burdick, S., and political assessments, 384.
- Burgess, A., office-seeker, 15.
- Burgess, C. A., candidate for postmaster at Newtonville, Mass., 100.
- Burgess, H., political worker, 280.
- Burit, J., federal employe, at Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Burkall, coinor of New Orleans mint, refuses to allow political assessments to be made in his department, 383, 384.
- Burke, C. J., editor, appointed postmaster at Olin, Iowa, 142.
- Burke, D. F., assistant appraiser at New York, assisted at dinner to Clarkson, 245; federal official, political worker, 287; internal revenue collector, in New York convention, 335; assistant appraiser at New York City, at Minneapolis convention, 343.
- Burke, state senator of Indiana, votes against bill for non-partisan control of state charitable institutions, see Magee, 201; low politician and spoilsman, see, also, Magee, 212; candidate for U. S. district attorney of Indiana, spoilsman, unfit, 414.
- Burke, J., page in Indiana legislature, 406.
- Burke, J. F., candidate for alderman, see Buffalo, N. Y., 197.
- Burke, Penn., postmaster at, see Brosius, 72.
- Burleigh, governor, of Maine, congressional candidate, opposing Manley, 364.
- Burleigh, H. J., congressman, 351.
- Burlington Hawkeye, advocates repeal of civil service law, 49.
- Burlington, Kansas, Lockwood, postmaster at, removed, Lane appointed, see Kelly, 188.
- Burlington, Vt., customs district of, classified 1883, 276.
- Burnette, W. S. R., postmaster in Jackson county, Iowa, a political worker, 260.
- Burns, councilman of Indianapolis, supports Fire-Chief Webster, 208.
- Burns, C. S., employe in naval office, see Baltimore investigation, 328.
- Burns, W., postmaster at Plymouth, Massachusetts, to be removed for political reasons, 187.
- Burr, A., spoils system attributed to, 262.
- Burr, C. A., deputy collector at New York City, pays political assessments, 279; political worker, 287.
- Burrell, O. B., clerk in Indiana senate, 408.
- Burris, S. P., protectionist democrat, appointed postmaster at Talladega, Alabama, vice —, removed for political reasons, 186.
- Burroughs, G., journalist, postmaster at Hope, Kansas, 149.
- Burroughs, J. C., congressman, 279, 362.
- Burrows, L. G., editor, applicant for postmastership of Lanark, Carroll county, Illinois, 109.
- Burt, naval officer at New York, favors merit system, removed by Arthur, re appointed by Cleveland, removed by Harrison, 52; removal of, 68, 94, 106, 107, 173, 237, 282; cessation of political assessments under, 97; naval officer at New York removed for political reasons through influence of Platt, 368.
- Burtin, J. S., United States marshal, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344, 348.
- Burton, J., journalist, postmaster at Jamestown, Kan., 149.
- Buser, E. W., journalist, postmaster at Dawson, Neb., 149.
- Bush, C. C., heavily endorsed political worker, appointed postmaster at Reading, Cal., 186, 187.
- Bush, speaker, corrupt politician of New York, 318.
- Bushnell, A. S., political worker in Ohio, 280.
- Bushnell, Rev. H., opposes spoils system, 77.
- Bushong, deputy city clerk at Indianapolis, 207.
- Buskirk, low police justice at Indianapolis, 314.
- Buskirk, given place of page in Indiana legislature, 406.
- Bussey, C., assistant secretary of interior, a political worker, 279, 370.
- Butler, comptroller, confidence of, and W. P. Montagne, 56.
- Butler, politician, see Brooklyn navy yard, 45.
- Butler, appointed postmaster at Weeping Water, Neb., vice Ratnour removed, 175.
- Butler, unfit consul-general to Egypt under Grant, 191.
- Butler, Dr. C. S., civil service reformer of Buffalo, N. Y., 200.
- Butler, Ind., Jones, postmaster of, political worker, 379, 380.
- Butler, J. M., and Plattism, 281.
- Butler, N. C., member local examining board at Indianapolis, 18, 42, 120, 129, 186; officer Indiana civil service reform association, 108, clerk United States court at Indianapolis, favors civil service reform, speech of at Roosevelt dinner, 227, 229, 230.
- Butler, R. R., recommended for commissioner of Indian affairs, unfit, 14.
- Butler, S., boud of office of, secured by convicted briber Kemble, 152.
- Butler, senator, favors civil service reform, 120.
- Butler, T., editor, appointed postmaster at Huntington, Ind., resigns, 126, 377.
- Butterfield, A. H., editor, given federal office, 126.
- Butterworth, congressman, spoilsman, 15, 24; member house committee on civil service, 86; favors civil service reform, 119, 120, 124, 204, 211; on tariff, 169.
- Buttling, W. J., political worker, 182, 183.
- Buttrick, postmaster at Concord, Mass., recommended for re-appointment, 100.
- Byerly, see Warmouth, 105.
- Bynum, W. D., congressman spoilsman, 108; spoilsman, able and unscrupulous, 171; patronage of, 392, 405, 410, 418, 419, 420, 421, 422.
- Byrnes, police inspector in New York City, 249; police inspector in New York City recognizes thieves among census enumerators, 294.
- Caberton, W. B., naval officer, on board to examine applicants for positions in navy yard at Brooklyn, N. Y., 222.
- Cabinet, and office-seekers, 6; President Harrison, composed entirely of spoilsmen, 27.
- Cable, postmaster of Hartford City, Ind., political worker, 379.
- Cable, postmaster at Oswego, N. Y., removed, 71.
- Caddy, C. B., editor, appointed postmaster at Pendleton, Ind., 126, 377.
- Cadmus, W. H. N., political worker for Nathan; see Kings county, N. Y.; political worker, 183, 304.
- Cadwallader, R. H., journalist, postmaster at Louisville, Kan., 149.
- Cady, J. R., judge, in New York convention, 335.
- Cain, P., postmaster at Fort Dodge, Iowa, asked to resign, 165.
- Caldwell, congressman, spoilsman, 15, 24.
- Calhoun, see Illinois Senators Farwell and Cul- lom, 31.
- California, republican platform, 1884, demands civil service reform, 50.
- Calkins, W. H., Gresham supporter, appointed United States judge in Washington territory, 240, 377.
- Call, senator, on examinations for civil service, 118.
- Callan, N., prize-fighter, appointed on police force in Brooklyn, 355.
- Calloway, Neb., Journalist Mair postmaster at, 149.
- Cambria Co., Pa., purchase of, by republicans, 183.
- Cambridge, Mass., Civil Service Reform Association; resolutions of, on removal of Postmaster Pearson, 23; address before civil service reform association of, by J. R. Lowell, 77; civil service reform association and President Harrison, on Indian and other service, 202, 204, 205; civil service reform association of, report of executive committee of, on circulation of Civil Service Record, 1891, 239; civil service reform association urges extension of merit system to Indian service, 273; merit system in city offices of, 172; no appointive officer at, allowed to work politically, 358.
- Cambridge, Ohio, brother of Editor Taylor, postmaster at, 301.
- Cameron, senator, influence of destroyed by Senator Quay, 30; controls patronage in Pennsylvania, superseded by Senator Quay, 34; and patronage in Pennsylvania, 47, 72, 133, 162, 329; and Quay, 105, 215, 252, 305; confers with International Revenue Collector Martin, 183; endorses Martin, low politician, for collector internal revenue in Pennsylvania, 233; supporter of Blaine, 344; spoilsman, 413; spoilsman controlled patronage of Pennsylvania, 34.
- Campaign of 1884, objection to scholars in politics in, see address of Parr, Prof. S. S., 8; residential, effect of on civil service reform in Indianapolis fire department, 13.
- Campbell, correspondence with Congressman Banks, 31.
- Campbell, and collectorship of customs at Chicago, 47; candidate of Senator Farwell for Chicago collectorship, 95.
- Campbell, B. F., political worker for Harrison, 260.
- Campbell, F., New York state controller, spoilsman, 356.
- Campbell, J. E., ex-governor of Ohio, and Stevenson, 375; ex-governor of Ohio favors a clean sweep, 396, 408.
- Campbell, W. H., receiver of political assessments, 391.
- Campbell, W. J., chairman republican national committee and Harrison, 354.
- Campbell, W. P., promotion of, 136.
- Canaday, sergeant-at-arms, opposes Quay's wishes, removes Mann, a page, 160.
- Canandaigua, N. Y., Journalist Milliken, postmaster at, 155.
- Candler, congressman and post-office at South Farmington, Mass., 99; ex-congressman works for re-appointment of democrat Morgan, postmaster at Newton, Mass., 224.
- Cannellou, Ind., post-office, 25; editor appointed postmaster at, 37; post-office at, see Clarkson, 54; Isabella De La Hunt appointed postmaster of by Arthur, removed by Cleveland, office given to editor; President Harrison refuses to re-appoint, 368; Zimmerman, postmaster of, political worker, 380.
- Cannon, congressman, and the second auditorship, 6; contest of with Illinois senators over appointment of Wilcox, 31; opposed to civil service reform, 30, 35, 49, 202, 204, 211; obtains reduction of salaries of democratic clerks opposed to him, 39; controls delegates for reomination, 160; forces of Catherwood, postmaster at Hoopston, Ill., 165; a machine candidate, 179.
- Cannon, J. A., candidate for postmaster at Kingston, Mo., 132.
- Canton, Conn., postmaster at, to be reappointed, 91.
- Canton, Kan., Journalist Davis appointed, 148.
- Cape Vincent, N. Y., Morse customs collector of, a political worker, see, also, Jefferson county, N. Y., 266; number employes in custom house at, not classified, 277.
- Capen, S. B., defends Cleveland's management of Indian service, 219.
- Cappeler, W. S., editor, given office by Governor Foraker, 301.
- Carbondale, Kan., Journalist Playford postmaster at, 148.
- Cardozo, Judge, see Hill, 306.
- Cardwill, G. B., favors civil service reform, 229.
- Carl, F. M., journalist, postmaster at Navarre, O., 149.
- Carmer, William, see Cannon, 39.
- Carmonche, L. B., federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Caruahan, Gen. J. R., misrepresents civil service examinations, 79.
- Carpenter, postmaster, removed for political reasons, 22.
- Carpenter, postmaster at Flushing, L. I., removed for refusing to become a spoilsman, 91.
- Carpenter, A. H. W., postmaster at New Bedford, Mass., removed without investigation of secret charges, 175, 176.
- Carpenter, C. C., postmaster at Fort Dodge, Iowa, a political worker, 260.
- Carpenter, M., and Petraff, 152.
- Carr, Archie, special agent for interior department, worker for Filly machine, 150.
- Carr, B., worker for Harrison, 240; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 343, 379.
- Carr, C. E., minister to Denmark, calls on Chairman Carter, 361; United States minister to Denmark, political worker, 382.
- Carr, J. P., editor, appointed postmaster at Oxford, Ind., 126, 377.
- Carriers, questions used in examination for, at Indianapolis, August 6, 1889, 56, 57, 58.
- Carroll, Co., Ind., see Fawcett, letter of, 98.
- Carroll, F. J., ward politician, see New York City.
- Carroll, Ill., Postmaster Bucher of, works for Hitt, 136.
- Carroll, Iowa, Journalist Huugerford appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Carroll, J., low politician, see Hudson county, New York.
- Carroll, L., candidate for postmaster of Concord, Ind., supported by State Senator Chandler, opposed by State Senator Cornlmg, 72.
- Carrollton, Ill., Postmaster Smith of, removed through influence of Senator Culloom, 188.

- Carrollton, Ohio, son of Editor Tripp, postmaster at, 301.
- Carruna, Ind., Bachman postmaster of, political worker, 379, 380.
- Carson, J. M., on Martin, low politician, see.
- Carson, P., ward politician of Indianapolis, see Parnell Hall.
- Carson, P. S., 89.
- Carter J. S., Michener's candidate, 144, 377; land commissioner, works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 337, 339, 342, 344; worker for Harrison, 354; chairman republican national committee, confers with Platt, 359, 360, 361; gets lists of federal employes for assessment purposes, 363; chairman republican national committee, and political assessments, 382; chairman, etc., confers with Quay, 390, 406.
- Carthage, Ind., Editor Charles appointed postmaster at, 126, 377.
- Cartwright, C. M., journalist, postmaster at Hunter, N. Y., 155.
- Carver, opponent of Mahone, 52.
- Cary, E., address of before annual meeting national league, noticed, 269; on committee of national league to investigate interference of office-holders, 319, 320, 338; on committee of publication of Good Government, 357.
- Case, F. P., political worker for Dazell, 299.
- Casebee, J., journalist, postmaster at Casper, Wyo., 155.
- Casey, brother-in-law of President Grant, a federal officer at New Orleans, 191.
- Casey, Iowa, Martha Cowman, wife of Editor Cowman, appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Casper, Wyo., Journalist Casebee postmaster at, 155.
- Cass, representative in Indiana legislature, opposes spoils methods in, 407.
- Catherwood, J. S., postmaster at Hoopeston, Ill., forced to resign, 165.
- Catholics and citizenship, see also church, 97.
- Catterson, R., on committee of public safety at Indianapolis, see equally divided politically, 212, 220.
- Cavanaugh, employe in post-office at Pittsburgh, dismissed without cause, 133.
- Cavanaugh, deputy sergeant-at arms in house of representatives, removed for political reasons, 250.
- Cavanaugh, J. P., recommends O'Donnell, 59.
- Cavour, builds up Italy, 244.
- Cedar Rapids, Ia., Daniels, postmaster at, 262; Lincoln, postmaster of, political worker, 370.
- Cedar Rapids, Ia., Gazette, civil service reform honesty in politics, 92; on using postmasters as political agents, 262.
- Census of 1890, not trustworthy, 173; act providing for requires selection of supervisors with reference to fitness and not to party affiliations, 292; civil service reform in, 19; no examination necessary, 49; disposal of offices in, see Porter, 72; made common spoil, 94; filled by republicans, 112; appointments to in Indianapolis made by Moores, 129; places in given as spoil, 131; spoils methods allowed by Superintendent Porter in, 157; in England, absence of spoils methods in, 157; appointments defended, 182; appointments to, discord over, 183; examinations for clerkships in, alleged to be held, 190; investigation of feared by Superintendent Porter, 233, 234; corruption and spoils system in, 260; turned over to spoil, 288; investigation of reform in, by official committee of national league, 291, 293; enumerators used to get lists of voters, 293; refuses request for recount of New York city, 294; civil service reform in under Harrison, 372.
- Central Labor Union of Buffalo, N. Y., addresses before, see Loomis and Shepard, 44.
- Central Park, N. Y., "race course" bill, 320.
- "Century of dishonor, a," in Indian service, 182.
- Certificates of good character abolished, 34.
- Chadron, Neb., removal on secret charges of Wilson, postmaster at, 175.
- Chadwick, Rev. J. W., advocates civil service reform, 48, 82.
- Chadwick, F. E., naval officer on board to examine applicants for positions in navy yard at Brooklyn, New York, 222.
- Challis, F. H., editor, disappointed candidate for deputy collectorship, 84.
- Chambers, L. C., journalist, postmaster at Liberty, Texas, 155.
- Chambers, Smiley N., reasons for appointing as United States district attorney, 7; appointed United States district attorney for Indiana, 14; and post office at Vincennes, Ind., 37; uses influence for appointment of Throop, 59; and W. W. Dudley, 78, 374; case of, 94; speech of, regarding bribery, 154; a political worker; extracts from speech of, on democratic corruption, 158, 219; an active politician, 162; worker for Harrison, 316, 317, 334; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 337, 343; political worker, 353, 362; 370, 377, 378, 380, 381, 389.
- Champaign, Ill., Spaulding appointed postmaster at, 38.
- Chance, M., United States inspector of immigration, at convention republican league, 259.
- Chandler, C., reports to Mayor Grant on street cleaning in New York, advises merit system, 220, 221.
- Chandler, state senator, and Concord, Ind., postmastership, 72.
- Chandler, state senator of Indiana, spoilsman, 407, 408.
- Chandler, congressman, civil service reform a fraud, 73.
- Chandler, and re-appointment of Turner as postmaster at Newtonville, Mass., 100.
- Chandler, senator, works for J. B. Smith, 143.
- Chandler, senator, controls patronage of navy yard at Kittery, Maine, 148; spoilsman, 160 supports Blaine, 1892, 340; controls patronage of New Hampshire, 340.
- Chandler, W., candidate for constable; see Buffalo, N. Y., 197.
- Chapin, mayor of Brooklyn, and civil service reform, 82.
- Chapin, A. C., and Hill, 356.
- Chapin, E. B., editor, appointed postmaster at Tolona, Ill., 141.
- Chapin, L. P., applicant for postmaster at Greencastle, Ind., 89.
- Chapin, ex-mayor of Brooklyn, N. Y., opposes McLaughlin, 318, 319.
- Chapman, B. S., postmaster at Derby, Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Chardon, O., Editor Converse appointed postmaster at, 301.
- Charity Organization of Indianapolis, 111.
- Charles, E., editor, appointed postmaster at Carthage, Ind., 126, 377.
- Charlestown, navy yard at, patronage of, controlled by Congressman Lodge, 69; clean sweep in navy yard at by President Cleveland, 69; navy yard at, conduct of Tracy in, 153; state legislature urges legislation to secure merit system to navy yard at and elsewhere, 274.
- Charleston, S. C., Crum, negro, nominated as postmaster at for vote at Minneapolis, not confirmed, 363.
- Charlotte, N. C., Brady postmaster at, Harrison delegate, 334; Brady, postmaster of delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Charlton, T. J., 399.
- Charter, of Indianapolis, requires application of merit system to all city departments except fire and police, 243, 246, 247.
- Chase, secretary, opinion of civil service reform, 39.
- Chase, appointment of condemned, 51.
- Chase, D. C., federal officer in Hamilton county, Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Chase, J. J., see Russellville, Ind., 89.
- Chase, I., favored by Harrison for governor of Indiana, 343, 347.
- Chase, governor, candidate for re-election, of Indiana, and Ransdell, 352, 353; a candidate for governor of Indiana, and administration, 320, 379; opposed by United States District Attorney Chambers and his assistant Cockrum, 381.
- Chase, Kan., Journalist Loman postmaster at, 148.
- Chase, R. H., journalist, postmaster at Ludell, Kan., 149.
- Chase, S. H., ex-judge, a political worker for Harrison, 260.
- Chatham, J. J., journalist, postmaster at Nogales, Ariz., 155.
- Cheadle, congressman and candidates for postmaster at Noblesville, Ind., appoints Royer, 47, 89; spoilsman, 55, 85, 92, 145; applicants for postmaster at Lafayette, Ind., 71, 84; endeavors to repeal civil service law, 77, 112; recommends MacDonald, 84; secures appointment of D. W. Fleming, 84; opposes appointment of Cravens, 84; supports Garrigus, corrupt politician, 88; opposes civil service commission, 119; against civil service reform 122; defeat of for renomination, 129; and post-office at New Hall, Ind., 119; opposed to civil service law, 153; snubbed by Harrison when asks for patronage, 240; opposes Harrison, 317; denied patronage in Indiana, 377.
- Cheatham, congressman, secures nomination to office for Young, ward politician, 183.
- Cheatham, H. P., negro, worker for Harrison in N. Carolina, 334.
- Cheek, J. A., Harrison delegate from N. Carolina, 334.
- Chelsea, Mass., Gazette, denounces civil service reform as claptrap, 364.
- Chemung Co., N. Y., republican convention of to nominate delegates, fights against Fassett and Platt, 259; factional fights in, 304; canal robbery, see Hill, 306; factional republican quarrels in, Collector Fassett and, 374.
- Cheney, ex-governor of New Hampshire, 143.
- Cheney, pension agent, active politician, 143.
- Chester, A., candidate of Draper faction at Albany, N. Y., see Draper, 46.
- Cheney, 291.
- Cheney, J. C., political worker, 354; president Indiana republican club at Washington, composed of federal employes, 382.
- Cheney, N. M., journalist, postmaster at La Porte, Pa., 149.
- Cheney, O. A., journalist, postmaster at Pitrodie, S. Dak., 155.
- Cheraw, S. C., disreputable character appointed postmaster at, 55.
- Chester county, Pa., applicants for post-offices in subservient to their congressman, 55; defeat of Delamater in, 134.
- Chestnut Level, Pa., post-office at, see Brosius, 72.
- Chicago, Ill., collectorship of customs at, see Nixon, 47; civil service in post-office at, 95; per cent. removals in classified and unclassified service in post-office at, 185; customs district of, classified 1883, 276; convention, 356.
- Chicago Standard, advocates civil service reform, evils of patronage system, 30.
- Chicago Tribune [republican], advises Harrison to pay no attention to office-seekers, 65.
- Chicago News, on corrupt politics and politicians of Indianapolis, see also Indianapolis, 206.
- Child, S. M., postmaster in Harrison post-office, Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Child, T. A., prominent Ohio republican, and dismissals from government printing office, 234.
- Childs, postmaster at Brattleboro, Vt., endorsed for reappointment, 100; caucus on question of reappointment, 108.
- Chile, see Balmaceda, 282.
- Chittenden, opposed to spoils system, 251.
- Chivington, Col., Journalist Liggett appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Choate, R., and Webster, 324.
- Chrisman, aided by Senator Farwell for collectorship of Chicago, 14.
- Christian Leader, and Pearson, postmaster at New York, advocates civil service reform, 30.
- Christian Union, on Postmaster Pearson of New York, 43; objects to "Quayism" and Clarkson, 257.
- Chubb, H. S., federal officer, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Church, Dr. S., police examiner at Brooklyn, N. Y., 222.
- Churchill, F., delegate to Minneapolis convention, brother of postmaster, 348.
- Church, and politics, see, also, Crosby, 155, 156, 257; and civil service reform, see Lambert; see names of clergymen; appeal to clergy to preach on, see Welsh, 40; and civil service reform, 48, 56, 65, 73, 74, 102, 190, 193; see Learned, Kaufman, Hickok, Richmond, Weatherby, McKnight, McDuffy and Applegarth, 81; see Nelson, Smyth, Dix, Collyer, Chadwick, Huntington, Tuttle, Nickols, Rhodes, Holland, Snyder, Noble, Wilson, Prudden, Hall, Rev. H., 81; see Roosevelt, dinner to, at Indianapolis, 227, 229; see minister as citizen, 239.
- Church, Catholic, opposed to appointment of Indian Commissioner Morgan, 79; and civil service reform, 137.
- Cincinnati, Ohio, municipal patronage of, control by Governor Foraker, 71; meeting at, of league of republican clubs; election of Clarkson as president, 219; spoils system must be kept out of new charter for, 235; Smith, customs collector at, political worker for Sherman, 249; merit system in post-office at, 257, 355; Zumstein, postmaster of, carries out spirit of civil service law, 257; custom house at not classified, number of employes in, 277; Tammany against Sherman, 297; Tammany, 301, 302; postmaster and collector at, political workers for Sherman, 302; reformers in, opposed by united republican and democratic machines, 352.
- Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette [republican], rejoices in rate of removals, 49; attributes defeat to patronage, 65.
- Cincinnati Times-Star [republican], on civil service reform, 92.
- Circleville, Ohio, editor, appointed postmaster at, 301.
- Civil service, congress, and, 86; federal report on, in Indiana, 1886, 37; statistics given by Moore, M. C. regarding, 123.
- Civil service commission of Brooklyn, report of for 1889, 152; examination questions commended, 239; of Massachusetts, examinations of, 74; examines applicants for clerkships in census service, 190; report of, 92; sixth annual report of, 152; seventh report of, showing progress of reform in Massachusetts, 204; eighth report, 317; of New York City, 225; not very commendable, 239; of New York State, see Sickles, 34; report of, 92; seventh annual report of, 152; annual report of 1890; statement regarding extensions to state hospitals, 200; not very commendable, 239; Riley, chief examiner of, removed by Tammany; commission powerless to act, 414.
- Civil Service Commission, United States, 10; at Indianapolis, 25; investigates at Indianapolis, 25; investigates post-office at Indianapolis, 27; investigates custom house at New York City, and Troy (N. Y.) post-office, 29; Roosevelt and Sixth Auditor Coulter, 34; orders Tousey dismissed from Indianapolis post-office, 34; keeps secret names of signers' certificates, 34; secretary of investigates and makes unfavorable report on post-office at Milwaukee, July, 1888; refuses request for special examination of Collector Geer, of Port Huron, 36; should have authority to call and swear witnesses, 36; and New York custom house, Troy, N. Y., post-office, railroad mail service at Grand Rapids, Mich., 36; and Postmaster Van Cott, of New York, 42; and N. C. Butler and W. P. Fishback to local board at Indianapolis, 42; and Census Bureau, see Harrison, President, 42; permit publication of examinations questions, 51, 56, 57, 58; of, appointed by Harrison, especially good, 59; admirable, 65; endorsed, 66; and political assessments, 70; examinations under for year ending June 30, 1888, 74; a humbug, 77; report of, 77; see Harrison, President, 81; and the civil service, 86; and Mahone, 86; and eligible list, 93; petition for appropriation for, 93; petition for larger appropriation for started by Massachusetts Civil Service Reform Association, 102; investigation of by congress, 103; report of on conduct of Milwaukee post-office by postmaster Paul, 103; undemocratic, see Cummings and Vance, 116; debate over appropriation for in house of representatives, 119; investigation by congressional committee, 119; praised, see resolutions of Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, 120; Harrison requests aid for, 122; commended, see Missouri, civil service reform association of, 136; charges against, see Grosvenor, Houk, and Roosevelt, 145, 146; investigates post-office at Philadelphia, 144; 7th annual report of, 184, 185, 186; charges of Wanamaker against, 185; examinations held in year 1889-90 by, appointments, 185; inefficient methods of alleged, see Wanamaker, 193; opposition to and charges against, see Cannon, Plumb, Grosvenor, 202, 203, 204; treasury supervising architect not obliged to accept subordinates provided through, but does, 224; politics of applicants for office passing examinations of, unknown to, 224; exposes methods of Raum, Jr., 228; threatened by congress, 229; attacked by Clarkson, 230, 231; and prosecution of Raum, 238; attacked and defeated, 250, 251; examinations of ordered for promotions in Washington offices, 251, 261; charges of favoritism of denied by Roosevelt, publicity of all documents and books of promised, 266, 267; under Presidents Arthur, Cleveland and Harrison, see also Grant and Hayes, 271, 272, 273, 274, 275; first report 1881, extent of classified service, 276; and violations of law in Omaha, Neb., post-office, 281; necessity of more money for, 282, 287, 288; eighth report of, 289; asks Harrison to order competitive examinations for census service, 292; requires physical examination in railway mail service, 305; praised by National League, 321; gives information regarding political assessments to United States District Attorney Jolly, 330; warning of, against political assessments, 358; under Harrison, proposes extensions, 372; of House of Representatives and Baltimore investigation, 373; discovers political assessments, 375, 383, 385; praised, 376; report of for 1891-92, 396, 397.

Civil service examinations, see examinations; defects in system of local boards, 1; publicity of examination papers and records urged, 1; examinations of little value, 69; for Brooklyn and New York City police force, worthless, 355, 356.

Civil service commissioners, see Roosevelt Lyman, Thompson, Johnson, etc.

Civil service law of States; of New York, Massachusetts and Pennsylvania, decisions and opinions of courts on, 41, 281; of New York disregarded by common council of Buffalo, N. Y., 161; of New York held valid by New York courts, 200; of Massachusetts, some features of, 204; evasion of in New York City service, 319, 320; of United States, see also Pendleton act; plan to evade, see Grosvenor, violations of, see violations, 25; violations of in Milwaukee post-office, see Paul, postmaster, 36; and census bureau, see Harrison, President, 42; opinions of courts, 44; see Ewart, 17; objection to by Congressman Hall, 47; opinions on, see Chandler, Reagan, Payson, Cutchina, Dolph, Hitt, Simmonds, 73; see Pendleton and Eaton, 79; Senator Gorman opposed to, 79; broken at Milwaukee by postmaster under Cleveland, 103; opposed by Browne, 112; upheld, see Lodge, favored by Cleveland, 122; upheld, see Henderson, 122; opposed, see Cheadle and Grosvenor, 153; supported by Lodge and McKinley, M. C., 168, 169; rigidly observed in post-office at Indianapolis, 186; Raum attempts to override, 203; commended by Secretary Tracy, 221; Wanamaker's evasion of defended by Gorman, 228; G. B. Raum, Jr., sells privilege of selection under, 238; to be relaxed, to allow federal officers to work for Harrison, 240; and National League, 271; and the courts, 281; violated in Alabama, 355; construed favorably to Baltimore office-holders, politically active, 357, 358; as construed by Judge Bradley, and Assistant Attorney-General Tyner, 357, 358; Harrison claims vigorous enforcement of, 366; should be extended, 5; not extended in application by Harrison, despite platform pledges, 189; extension of, urged upon President Harrison by Massachusetts republicans, see Lodge, Roosevelt, Rogers, Wolcott, 192; order of President Harrison, extending it to part of Indian service, 221; President Harrison should put navy yards under, 222; extended by Cleveland to railway mail service, 224; extended by Harrison to Indian service, 230; somewhat extended by Harrison, 237; application of, only to federal offices having 50 employees, condemned, 238; extension of to all free delivery cities, requested by national convention of letter carriers, 253; should be extended to post-office and navy departments, 257; extended to fish commission by Harrison, 332; extensions under Harrison, 371, 372; extensions of, under Cleveland and Harrison, 376; proposal to extend under Harrison, 387; extended to all free delivery post-offices, and weather bureau service, 403; should be extended wherever applicable, 413.

Civil service law, repeal of, demanded, 49; attempt at, see Cheadle, 77; proposed by Senator Farwell and opposed, see Columbus Republican, 83; unwise, see South Bend Times, 83; bill of Senator Paddock to withdraw railroad mail service from operation of, 92; desired, see Richardson, 96; repeal of sought after, see Cheadle, congressman, 112; bills of republicans for, 358; bills for under Harrison, 388; bill of De Armond to suspend for first year of every president's term, 404.

Civil service reform, and the public school, see Curtis, C. T. Lane, D. C. Brown, duty of teachers to enter politics, see address of Parr, Prof. S. S.; relation of to other reforms, address by C. J. Bonaparte before annual meeting National League 1890; of prime importance, see St. Louis Republic; favored by Massachusetts legislature, see Boston and Cambridge; all other reforms should be subordinated to, see Swift; morals of, see Blackford; advocated, see DeLand; see Wirt, Senator, addresses of; newspapers devoted to, see good government, Civil Service Record, CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, Civil Service Reformer; see also patronage; see convention and platform; see press; and church, see church; see also address; in Indiana under Cleveland's first administration, 1; pledges of republican party of, see Foulke, W. D., 4; how it can be accomplished (see address of Dabney, R. H.), 7; reasons for (see address of McKain, A. A.), 8; attitude of democratic party in Indiana to, see address of H. Briggs, 8; movement for, if successful must be within party lines (see address of Lane, C. R.), 8; and teachers, 11; in Indianapolis fire department, 13; advocated by a professor, 16; advocated by a clergyman, 16; and Postmaster General Dickinson, 18; opinions of, 18; and the post-offices, 18; and census bureau, 19; and Senator Ingalls, 22; and the schools, by Brown, D. C., 23; movement for, stronger than ever, 27; status of, 28; progress in extending in federal service, number of places covered, examinations, persons examined, successful competitor, 32; under State laws, in New York, in Massachusetts, 32; Congressman Perkins opposed to, 35; opposed by Browne, Perkins, Cannon, Taylor, Houk, 35; objections to by Congressman Browne, 35; objections to considered, 35; Congressman Cannon opposed to, 35; sentiment in favor of at Brookline, Mass., 36; necessary to improve condition of Indians, see Welsh, 39; opinion of, held by ex-Secretary Chase, 39; see Hoar, 43; controversy over, between Loomis and Buffalo Evening News, 44; objections to by Hall, Ewart, Taylor, Blair, Ingalls, Houk, Shearman, Evans, Cannon, Browne, Perkins, 49; general opposition to, resolution and newspaper condemnation of, 49; objections to by S. R. Stratton and federation of republican clubs of 3d Maryland District, 49; favored by President Hayes, 50; pledges that President Harrison and cabinet to reform, 52; see Houk, Darlington, Evans, Shearman, Plumb, Harrison, Cleveland, 55; as a moral question, see Bonaparte, 59; address on by Lucius B. Swift, 137; advocated by St. Louis Republic, 138; disregarded by administration of Harrison, see Pennsylvania, 156; action of Harrison's administration in regard to condemned, 156; result of 1890 elections in Massachusetts and Pennsylvania strengthen cause of, 173; antagonism to, responsible for republican defeat of 1890, 173; election of 1890 in New York, disastrous to, 173; advocated by Everett, 174; growth of sentiment for, sketched, 174; circular letter of Cushing on, 174; hostility to of Clarkson and Wanamaker, 177; opposed by Houk, advocated by Senator Sherman, 177, 178; opposed, see Grosvenor, 178; see Cleveland, 181; opposed by Clarkson and Wanamaker, 188; opposed by Raum, commissioner of pensions, 190; opposed by editor of Delphi Journal, a postmaster, 191; disregarded by President Grant, 191; an object lesson in, see Roosevelt, 192; President Harrison deserves some credit for, 59; a necessity and a prime importance, 59; as a moral question, see Bonaparte, 60, 61; considered a humbug by Ohio republicans, 62; denounced by republicans of West Virginia, 62; Harrison not bound to enforce spirit of according to New York republicans, 62; denounced by Iowa republicans, 62; Neither party cares about it, see Indiana, 62; denounced in New Hampshire by republicans, 62; denounced as a sham by Pennsylvania republicans, 62; Maryland republican clubs denounce, 63; denounced by republican central committees in New York, 63; in Massachusetts and Maryland under Cleveland, 63; disregarded by Harrison's administration, 64; in Homiletic Review for October, 1889, 65; advocated, 65; opinions on by republican papers, 65; opinions on, republican party pledged to, 66; plan for agitation of before National League, annual meeting, 1889, 66; opinion of Foraker on, 68; violation of Harrison's promises of leads to republican defeat of 1889, 68; in Boston city service, 68; see Lodge, 69; in fire department at Indianapolis, 69; and fight against Gorman, in Maryland, State of, 70; not responsible for republican defeat of 1889, but patronage system, see Boston Transcript, 76; advocated by newspapers, 76; lecture on before students of Hanover College, Indiana, see Donell, 77; supported by Pendleton, Willis, Cleveland, Bayard, Endicott, Whitney, Grace, Hewitt, Grant, Chapin, O'Brien, 82; advocated, see Marlon Chronicle, 83; advocated, see Logansport Journal, 83;

favored by Indiana State republican press, 83; favored by Buffalo Sunday Truth, Labor, 84; "some popular objections to," see Morton, 85; sham bills for, see Rosecrans, 85; favored, see Sperry, 91; and republican press, 92; session of house committee on, 96; methods used in Eastern Dispensary, New York City, 101; advocated, see Crocker, 102; advocated, see Bacon and Stroug, 102; attitude of reformers to, see letter of G. W. Curtis, 103; sentiment favoring at Indiana State University and Franklin (Ind.) College, 108; sentiment favoring in Utah, 111; some popular objections to, see Morton, 111, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119; growth of sentiment favoring, 119; advocated, see Butler, 120; opposed, see Perkins, Cheadle, Spinola, Grosvenor, 122, 123; advocated, see President Hayes, Moore, Greenhalge, Hill, 123; opposed by Houk, Coleman, Dunnell, Biggs, 124, 125; advocated by Cutchin, Tracey, Butterworth, McKinley, McComas, 124, 125; victory for in house of representatives, see Curtis, 125; "the scope and difficulties of," see Bonaparte, 126, 127, 128; "morals of," see Blackford, 130; its later aspects, by W. D. Foulke, Economic Tract No. XXXI, 200; great progress of in cities of Massachusetts, 201; under Harrison and Cleveland compared, diverse opinions of Harper's Weekly and CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, further funds for commission refused, 211; favored by Dawes, Butterworth and others, opposed by Cannon, 211; in Massachusetts and New York cities, 212; all other reforms should be subordinate to, 213, 214; Thurston, president league of republican clubs speaks in favor of, 219; recognized as the leading issue by Massachusetts republicans, 219; silence regarding, see Cleveland and Harrison, 220; methods, use of advised in street cleaning department of New York and Indianapolis, see equally divided politically, 220, 221; Secretary of Navy Whitney secretly opposes, 222; in Washington, D. C., in letters in Civil Service Record for April, 1891, 224; opposed by Wanamaker, 221; popular in Indiana, federal, state officers, and citizens favoring, 227, 229; supported by labor organizations of Buffalo, New York, 228; all other reforms should be subordinated to, 228; favored, see Wilby, 235; pupils in Indiana schools know nothing about, 236; attitudes of Cleveland and Harrison towards, compared, 237; the main issue, 244; favored by Chittenden, 251; favored by Harrington, appointed chief of weather bureau, 253; favored by national convention of fire superintendents, 253; advocated by Lowell, Jones, 254; present status of, by Rev. H. Lambert, criticized, 255; advocated by M. Storey, ex-Secretary Bayard, 257; D. B. Eaton, on, 257; pledges of republican party "not good after election," 260; see address of Lambert, 261; as an issue, 261; address of Foulke on, before social science congress at Saratoga, 1891, 262, 263; practicability of conceded by highest public officers, 271; in Buffalo, N. Y. city offices, 273; advocated in republican national platforms 1884, 1888, 275; praised by Cleveland, message 1886, by Windom, annual report 1889, 276; status of, 282; under Harrison and Cleveland, 282, 283; in census service, see report of National League act, 291, 295; opposed by Census Superintendent Porter, 292; favored by Public Service, 306; prize for essay on offered by W. G. Law, 308; bureaucracy objection to compared to spoils system, 308; opposed by Beard, collector at Boston, 322; favored by laborers, see Andrews, 331; in republican national platform, 1892, 337; Cleveland and Harrison compared, in regard to, 338; in national democratic platform 1888, 1892, in Indiana state democratic and republican platforms, 1892, 349; pledges of by Harrison, silence regarding in 1892, 357; under Cleveland and Harrison, strength of popular dislike for, 364; the real issue, 365; address on by G. W. Julian, 365, 367, 370, 376; see Welsh, 366; under Cleveland and Harrison, 367, 370; in letter of acceptance of Cleveland 1892, 375; under Harrison and Cleveland, 376; prospects for under democratic administration, 388; under Harrison and President-elect Cleveland, 389; O. T. Morton on, 396; in 1892, annual message of Harrison, 397; change of popular feeling regarding, 403.

Civil service reform associations, see national league of, Cambridge, Boston, Indiana, Maryland, New Haven, Massachusetts, New York, Buffalo, Brooklyn, Missouri, Newton, Pennsylvania, Bloomington, Philadelphia, Brookline, Milwaukee, civil service reform association of; see also Malden, Geneva, N. Y. Lawrence, Kan.

CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, opinions of by Indiana newspapers, 13; non partisan, intends to advocate only civil service reform, 42; opinions of, 110; sent to college libraries, 192; policy of, 235.

Civil Service Record, Boston, March, 1889, 2; for April, 1889, plan for treatment of fourth-class postmasters, 18; articles in on civil service reform in Boston police force, 104; D. B. Eaton in, on removal of Saltonstall, 105; and growth of sentiment favoring merit system, 119; and Brooklyn, N. Y., navy yard under Secretary Whitney, 148; illustrates civil service labor examinations, 152; for October, 1890, contains speeches before National League meeting, 1890, 162; exposes methods of Porter, superintendent of census, 190; on reform bill introduced in Pennsylvania legislature, 204; on

- Flower's condemnation of congressional patronage, 204; condemns removal of Corse, postmaster at Boston, 215; prints examination papers of national census bureau and of Massachusetts census department for employees, April, 1891, 219, 220; for April, 1891, contains letters on merit system in Washington, D. C., 224; on examination questions used in navy yard at Brooklyn, N. Y., under Tracy, 236; commended, completes tenth year, E. B. Greene makes index for, 237; circulation of, 1891, 239; on "bosses," 251; on spoils system, 261; merges with Civil Service Reformer into Good Government, 357.
- Civil Service Reformer, Baltimore, March 1889, 2; article in advocating clerical advocacy of civil service reform, 30; on political assessments at Baltimore, 162; prints specimen applications for office of those failing to pass examinations, on abuse of census service, 204; on evil effects of patronage on schools of Baltimore, 211; for March, 1891, exposes Gorman, 214; for March, 1891, on corruption in politics, 214, 215; on Gorman, 219; on common cause among spoilsmen, 228; commended, 237; merges with Civil Service Record into Good Government, 357.
- Clallin, W., ex-Governor of Massachusetts, signs petition for larger appropriation for civil service committee, 102.
- Clapp, A. M., and political assessments, 287.
- Clarion, Iowa, Editor Harwood appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Clarion, Pa., Journalist Patrick, postmaster at, 149.
- Clark, Alderman, of Indianapolis, supports Fire-Chief Webster, 208.
- Clark, collector at Chicago, 95.
- Clark, ex-collector of customs at El Paso, Tex., 266.
- Clark, Dr., New York assemblyman, introduces bill for municipal reform in Oswego, N. Y., 415.
- Clark, A. B., officer Indiana civil service reform association, 108.
- Clark, A. B., editor, disappointed office-seeker, opposes Sherman, 301.
- Clark, E. P., on Jacksonian "rotation" scheme, in August, 1891, Forum, 257.
- Clark, G. W., politician, and post-office at Rochelle, Ill., 109.
- Clark, H., ward politician, see Buffalo, N. Y.; see Hill, 307.
- Clark, J., candidate as second auditor, 6.
- Clark, J. H., political worker, 160.
- Clark, M. H., in New York convention, 335.
- Clarkson, C., private secretary to J. S. Clarkson, 175.
- Clarkson, J. S., editor, appointed first assistant postmaster-general, 14; number, etc., of removals and "resignations" under, 22, 27, 35, 39, 41, 49, 62, 75, 76, 77, 91, 94, 130, 131, 149, 164, 173, 188, 253, 261, 376; see also removals; and office seekers, 14; and railroad mail service, 21; and office-seekers, 24; and Isabella De La Hunt, postmaster at Cannerton, Ind., 26; "the unspeakable," 27; tries to help Love, accused of selling offices, despite contrary evidence declares him innocent, 32; and post-offices, 37; appoints L. D. Levan, a disreputable character, postmaster at Wilson, N. Y., 39; spoilsman, 43; appointments in Iowa under, 46; and Syracuse post-office, 46; negotiates with Mahone, 52; and post-office at Cannerton, Ind., and at Long Island City, 54; appoints postmasters, 55; removes postmaster at Strawberry Point, Iowa, appoints political worker, resolutions by residents denounce this action, 55; condemned by Milwaukee Sentinel [republican], 66; largely responsible for republican defeat in Iowa in 1889, 67; and postmaster at Lawrenceville, Va., 74; spoilsman, 92; appoints J. H. Flenniken postmaster at Bradford, Penn., 99; investigates case of Love, 99; postmaster-general, 103; and post-office at Rochelle, Ill., 110; letter to from Cooper regarding postmaster at Freedom, Owen county, Ind., 112; banquetted at Boston, 119; and Harrison, 121; condemned, 125; thinks national sentiment against civil service reform, 128; and civil service reformers, 130; speech of at Boston before Norfolk club, 130, 131; gives patronage in Missonri to Filley, 132; condemned, see C. T. Russell, Jr., 136; correspondence of with R. H. Dana, 144; gives office to his cousin, 150; retires, laudation of, 154; and Dana, 154; and Postmaster McKenna of Long Island City, N. Y., 175; letter regarding removal of Evans, on secret charges, 175; and Greenhow, postmaster at Hornellsville, N. Y., 176; hostile to civil service reform, 177; removes postmasters "upon expiration of four years' service, and second commission not yet expired," 189; opponent of civil service reform, 188; spoilsman, 191; denounced, 193, 194; attacks civil service commission, 230, 231; advice of to young republicans on plan of campaign, 235, 236; dinner to, 245; appointment of, hurts civil service reform, 255, 256; takes place of Quay on National Republican Committee, condemned, 257; and Platt, 260; injures civil service reform, see Lambert, 261, 269; on mugwump, 269; spoilsman, 272; and civil service reform, 274; on "bosses," 278, 281, 282, 314, 317; and young republicans, 329; and post-office in saloon building, 331; deserts Harrison, 332; deserts Harrison, 337, 341, 342, 345, 346, 347, 350; enlists Quay and Dudley, 356; placated, 353, 354; works for Harrison, 359; on national republican committee, 363; general, 373; on post-offices as a factor in politics, 364, 369; member national committee, etc., confers with Quay, 390.
- Clarkson, N. C., cousin of assistant postmaster-general appointed postmaster at Hamilton, Mo., 150.
- Classification, once ordered can not be postponed, postponement not necessary, act of bad faith, 10.
- Classified service, ought the to be increased, address, see Rogers; extensions of Cleveland and Harrison, 275; extent of in 1884, 276; extension of under Harrison, 366; civil service commission recommends extensions of, 397.
- Clay, H., opposes spoils system, 274.
- Clay, Rev. J. H., negro, opposes Harrison, wants offices for negroes, 244.
- Clay, Mary L., postmaster at Huntsville (Ala.) removed by President Harrison on report of special agent, without cause, 29.
- Clay City, Ind., objections to appointment of Mrs. Wilber as postmistress at, 59.
- Clayton, B. S., appointed postmaster at Columbia, S. C., vice Gibbs, removed, 71.
- Clayton county, Iowa, resolutions of veterans of, denouncing Clarkson, 55.
- Clayton, Powell, obtains appointment of True as postmaster at Eureka Springs, Ark., dispenser of patronage, 55; controls patronage in Arkansas, 188.
- Clear Lake, Ia., fight over post-office at, 121.
- Clearwater, A. T., judge, a political worker for Platt, 265.
- Clements, congressman and civil service law, 123.
- Clements, E. M., introduces bill in Virginia legislature for non-partisan police and fire service, 87.
- Clements, I., politician, appointed pension agent at Chicago, 107.
- Clements, J. W., office-seeker, 24.
- Clerks, questions used in examination for, at Indianapolis, August 6, 1889, 56, 57, 58.
- Cleveland, E., removed from post-office at Quincy, Ill., for political reasons, 148.
- Cleveland, Grover, as governor, civil service law of New York due largely to, appoints good commission, 271.
- Cleveland, President, extensions of civil service law under, see also civil service law; order of that railway mail service be classified, 10, 21, 22, 29, 81, 224, 372, 403; retains republican postmaster at Norwich, Conn., beyond four years, see Norwich, Conn.; and the Indianapolis post-office, 3; and the spoilsmen, 5; and civil service reform, 10; and Postmaster Pearson, 12, 20; number of appointments, April, 1889, 16; and Missonri offices, 24; and Thomas, and Dowling, 25; and Higgins, 25; removes Isabella De La Hunt, postmaster at Cannerton, Ind., for "offensive partisanship," 26; and Troy, N. Y., post-office, 29; allows republican postmaster at Bridgeport, Conn., to serve out term, 29; retained postmaster at Jersey City until end of term, 29; retains republican postmaster at Norwich, Conn., over his term, 29; at suggestion of Congressman Matson appoints, H. G. Douglas, editor, postmaster at Plainfield, Ind., 30; removes Hankness, postmaster at Albert Lea, Minn., for cause, appoints Stacy, 39; promises of and their fulfillment in Indiana, 41; civil service reform, promises of, 43; abuse of civil service law by administration of, 49; re-instates Naval Officer Burt, see Burt, 52; and Kansas post-offices, 55; civil service reform under, see Eliot, 60; and civil service reform in Massachusetts, and Maryland, 63; patronage largely responsible for his defeat, 65; see Lea, 68; makes clean sweep in Charleston navy yard, 69; see Lodge, 69; gives patronage of Maryland to Senator Gorman, 70; appoints editor postmaster at Syracuse, N. Y., 71; removes four-year office-holders in Maine, 73; attitude of toward civil service reform, 82; weakened by patronage, 83; and Indian Rights Association appoints Oberly Indian commissioner, 86; appoints Spear postmaster at Quincy, Massachusetts, 86; removes Luke, postmaster at Jeffersonville, Indiana, 88; allows office-holders to be political workers, 88; secret charges under, 96; on civil service reform, 98; appoints Turner postmaster at Newtonville, Massachusetts, and Childs postmaster at Brattleboro, Vermont, 100; appoints Pyle postmaster at West Chester, Pennsylvania, 101; abuse of Indian service under, 102; appoints Mrs. Mulligan to succeed Miss Sweet, 107; gives patronage of Maryland to Gorman, 111; criticized by Senator Harrison regarding civil service, 119; favors civil service law, 122; and fourth class post-offices, 124; talk with Biggs, see Biggs, 128; circular of, warning employees in government offices against political working, 135; appoints Montgomery patent commissioner, appoints politician assistant commissioner, removes Montgomery, appoints B. J. Hall, 139, 140; accused of bribing the press, 144; abuses in Norfolk (Va.) navy yard under, 147; bribery of press under, see Harrison, senator, 149; brother-in-law of, an office-holder, 150; appoints Ross postmaster at Washington, D. C., 153; removes employees in Brooklyn navy yard, 155; antagonized by party machine, because of civil service views, 171; object of tariff message of, 172; civil service reform and, 173; removes Fortune postmaster at Bloomfield, Ia., 175; and secret charges, 177; gives office to Higgins, disreputable politician, see Gorman, 181; appoints Vandever Indian agent, 181; on necessity of civil service reform, 181; and departmental service, 185; number applicants for office in Washington under, 185; removals under, 185; makes clean sweep of postmasters, 189; spoils system responsible for defeat of, 210; civil service commission under criticized, 211; removals in Indian service under, 217; makes almost clean sweep in Indian service, 219; silent regarding civil service reform, 220; appoints Morgan postmaster at Newton, Mass., 224; gives patronage to Quay and Voorhees, 235; loses by comparison with Harrison in respect to civil service reform, 237; Indian service under, given over to spoils, 239; appoints son of Senator Vest, to diplomatic service, totally unfit, 242; disaffection of Maryland under, gives patronage of to Gorman, 254; controls patronage but fails of re-election, 262; administration of, 266; honestly supports civil service commission, 272; message on civil service reform, 1886, 276; violations of law in post-office at Omaha under, 281; and Harrison, 282, 283; president appoints capable woman postmistress at Olneyville, R. I., 288; promotes Stearns, secretary, 288; and removals on secret charges, 297; clean sweep of Indian agents under, made, 308, on federal patronage, 316; and reform, 325, 326; present political assessments under, in Baltimore federal officers, 328; compared to Harrison, as to civil service reform, 338; ex-federal officers under work for at Chicago convention, post-office at Philadelphia under a scandal, 350; opposed at Chicago convention because favored by "mugwumps," 351; and regular democratic organizations in New York, 355; Kings county, N. Y. democratic leaders promise support to, 356; and spoils system, 358, 359; and Harrison, comparison regarding civil service reform, 364; and civil service reform, 367, 369; Cleveland, civil service reform under, 372, 374; civil service reform in letter of acceptance, 1892, 375; in 1884, 1888, 376; civil service reform under, 376; during the war, 381, 385, 386; President-elect, victory not a license to revel in spoils, 387; and extension of civil service law, 388; and civil service reform, 389; war record of, 389; applicants for office in Indiana during second term, 392, 394; refused while candidate to promise spoil to Sheehan, 395; address of, on issues, 395, 396; civil service commission under, first term, should reappoint Roosevelt, 397; endorsed for denunciation of spoils system, 398; obligations of, 404; opposes election of Murphy as senator from New York, 404; and congressional patronage, 405; applicants for office in Indiana, for second term, 409, 411; since election, 413; applicants for office in Indiana, under [second term], 415, 422.
- Cleveland, Ohio, Anderson appointed postmaster at, 216; custom-house at not classified, number of employees in, 277.
- Cleveland Leader [republican], civil service reform advocated, 92.
- Cleveland, Rev. Dr., favors civil service reform, 73; favors civil service reform, 227, 229.
- Cleveland, W. J., philanthropist, on Indian troubles at Pine Ridge, S. Dakota, 211, 217, 218.
- Clinton, Iowa, Editor Mahin appointed postmaster at, 126.
- Clinton, J., low politician of Indianapolis, 207.
- Club, Young Men's Republican, of Des Moines, Iowa, Clarkson advice to, on plan of campaign, 235, 236.
- Clingage, J. P., editor, applicant for postmastership at Sullivan, Indiana, 88; appointed postmaster at Sullivan, Indiana, 377.
- Cockran, B., Tammany politician, levies assessments for personal use, 184; opposes nomination of Cleveland because favored by "mugwumps," 351.
- Cockrell, and patronage in census bureau, 234.
- Cockrum, J. B., assistant United States district attorney for Indiana, 14; declares charges against Dudley not founded on fact, 41; a political worker, 158, 162, 219, 260, 353, 354, 370, 377, 378, 379, 380, 381, 389; worker for Harrison, 316, 317; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 343, 379.
- Coffey, acting mayor of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Nathan, 352.
- Coffey, T. J., letter to from Kemble, 270.
- Coffin, senator, levies political assessments on federal office-holders in Baltimore, Md., 162.
- Coffin, C. B., republican politician, works for reappointment of Morgan, democrat, postmaster at Newton, Mass., 224.
- Cogswell, general, desires removal of Stearns in favor of Dodge, 250.
- Cogswell, W., congressman, letter of to Johnson, postmaster of Manchester, Mass., 187; secures removal of Stearns for political reasons, and appointment of Dodge, 288.
- Colbert, captain Indianapolis police, arrests Moore, gambler and post-office employe, is asked to call arrest a put-up job, see Moore; and office seekers, see equally divided politically, 213.
- Cole, H., negro, Harrison delegate from N. Carolina, 334.
- Cole, T., on eligible list of N. Y. police force, induced to try to buy immediate position, is fleeced, see Tammany, 224, 225.

- Coleman, congressman, controls patronage of Louisiana, 71; opposes civil service reform, 124.
- Coleman, C. E., negro, R. R. mail employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Colfax, Wash., Postmaster-La Rue of, forced to resign, 165.
- Collectors of internal revenue, editors appointed, 30.
- College graduates, young and civil service examinations, 26.
- Colleges, and duties of citizenship, 101.
- Collier, Dr., federal officer, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Collier, surveyor of port, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Collier, W. H., republican committee chairman, attempted bribery of, 162.
- Collin, professor in Cornell University, defends Hill, 305; defended for defense of Hill, 313.
- Collins, representative in Indiana legislature, spoilsman, 107.
- Collins, C., clerk in Indiana senate, 408.
- Collins, C. C., relative of Mrs. R. Croker, appointed police captain, 356.
- Collins, Edith, in charge of examination for police matron at New York, see Maloney.
- Collins, F. W., U. S. Marshal, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344, 348.
- Collins, G. J., spoken of for Brooklyn, N. Y., post-office, 155; postmaster at Brooklyn, N. Y., political worker for Harrison, 336; spoilsman, 360.
- Collins, J., deputy collector in N. Y. custom house, a political worker, 265, 279; low politician, desires clean sweep of democrats, 311; in New York convention, 334; at Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Collins, P. A., signs petition for larger appropriation for civil service commission, 102.
- Collyer, Rev. R., advocates civil service reform, 82.
- Columbia Club, republican organization at Indianapolis, 332; and spoils system, 338.
- Columbia, District of, D. M. Ransdall, politician, appointed marshal of, 34; central republican committee of favors spoils system, 63; Ransdall appointed marshal for, 68; clerk of committee of removed by Senator Ingalls, who appoints his own son, 245; Ransdall, U. S. marshal for, gets offices for relatives, 241; civil service commission recommends extension of classified service to all employes in, 397.
- Columbia, Pa., post-office at, see Brosius, 72.
- Columbia, S. C., B. S. Clayton appointed postmaster of, vice Gibbs, removed, 71.
- Columbus, Ind., dissatisfaction among applicants for postmaster of, 89; Hartman, postmaster of, at Minneapolis convention, 379; Finney supported for postmaster of by Congressman Cooper, 398.
- Columbus, Neb., Postmaster Heusley, of, forced to resign, 166.
- Columbus, Ohio, applicants for post-office of and Senator Sherman, 67; spoils system in asylum at, 304.
- Columbus Republican opposes repeal of civil service law, 83.
- Colville, W. W., federal office-holder, supporter of Quay, suspected by Harrison, 299.
- Colyer, W., editor, appointed postmaster at Albion, Ill., 111.
- Commercial Club, of Boston, address before on iniquity of spoils system by Roosevelt, 194.
- Commission, civil service, see civil service commission.
- Commission, Indian, controversy about, 22.
- Committee, national republican, offended by Harrison, 240; eulogizes Quay and Dudley, 257.
- Conaty, J. B., dishonest juror and bondsman for Sullivan, corrupt politician, see Indianapolis.
- Concord, Ind., fight over postmastership at, 72.
- Concord, Mass., reappointment of postmaster at, see Bancroft, 91; Buttrick recommended for reappointment at, 100.
- Concord, N. Hampshire, Postmaster Robinson of, active politician, 143.
- Condit, E. M., politician, favored by administration, 180.
- Conference, civil service reformers at Baltimore, 1889, 2.
- Conger, U. S. minister to Brazil, political worker, 382.
- Conger, Col., speech of against Harrison, 240.
- Conger, A. L., patronage of, works for Blaine, 310, 341, 345; political worker, 389.
- Conger, S., appointed census supervisor 3d Indiana district, gives patronage to M. Moores at Indianapolis; politician, 104, 132; lets politicians appoint enumerators, 182, 190; turns service over to spoil, 293.
- Congregationalist, on Collector Erhardt, and decent politics, 257.
- Congress, members of harassed by office-seekers, 6.
- Congressional Patronage, see Patronage, Congressional.
- Congressmen, and internal revenue collectorships, 14; 110 recommend Butler, R. R. as commissioner of Indian affairs, 14; of Penn. control patronage of, after Senators Cameron and Quay, 72.
- Conklin, supt. Central Park menageries, 320.
- Conkling, A. R., bill of, preventing political assessments in New York, 318.
- Conkling, R., Senator, and President Garfield, 14, 361; spoilsman, 113.
- Conn, Congressman-elect, 392; patronage of, 110; patronage of, 420, 422.
- Connecticut, republican platform 1872 and 1874, advocates civil service reform, 50; political assessments of federal and other offices in, 183; requisition of forger from, refused by Gov. Hill of New York for political reasons, 214; schemes of Hill in, 309; postmasters in and elsewhere, compelled to give list of voters, 330.
- Connell, Congressman, and Lincoln, Neb., post-office, 72, 108.
- Conner, J. T., editor, appointed postmaster at Toledo, Ill., 111.
- Connersville, Ind., Fearis, postmaster of, at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- Connett, Alderman, and Indianapolis fire department, 13; obtains removal of Fire Chief Webster, 36; spoilsman and low politician, 207; Blaine supporter, bribed by Harrison with office, 362; politician at Indianapolis, given office as bribe, 366.
- Counolly, postmaster, Scranton, Penn., 101.
- Conroy, F., Indian machinist, refused employment to give place to white man, 218.
- Conroy, P., appointed postmaster at Watkins, N. Y., see Hiscock and Flood, 150.
- Conroy, W., murderer, low politician, pardoned by Gov. Hill, 320.
- Consul, Swiss, and charges of corruption, 21.
- Consulships, great number of applications, 16; applicants for, 24; Editor A. Reed appointed to, at Dublin, 30; R. Spooner appointed to Prague through influence of Senator Spooner, 30; applications for, 75; number of applicants for under Harrison, 185.
- Convention, see also platform; national democratic, 1892, at Chicago, see Chicago; national republican at Minneapolis, 1892, see Minneapolis; republican national, 1888, D. McLean, delegate to rewarded, 30; republican national convention at Chicago, 1888, 121; Indiana democratic, July, 1890, denounces abandonment of civil service reform, 180; Ohio republican, June, 1891, condemns spoils methods of democratic governor, 257; state democratic of Maryland, July, 1891, condemns spoils methods of Harrison administration, 257; of republican league at Syracuse, August, 1891, federal office-holders at, 259; republican, Seneca county, N. Y., factional fights in, August, 1891, 259, 260; Iowa state, 1891, federal officers at, 260; republican state of Alabama, 1892, charges political activity of federal office-holders in, 355.
- Converse, J. O., editor, appointed postmaster at Chardon, O., 301.
- Conway, E., deputy U. S. marshal in Indiana, ward politician, 108; worker for Harrison, 302, 317, 379; political worker in Indiana, 144, 353, 377, 378.
- Cook, Mrs., letter of to Indian Commissioner Morgan, showing abuses of Indian service in S. Dakota, 202.
- Cook, C. A., U. S. dist. att'y, Harrison delegate from N. Carolina to Minneapolis convention, 334, 348.
- Cook, J. W., letter to H. Welsh on Indian service, 79.
- Cook, Major, federal officer, a political worker, 162.
- Cooley, W. B., chief clerk P. O. department, letter of Postmaster Smith, 188.
- Coolidge, T. J., appointed minister to France for political reasons, 382.
- Coombs, W. J., candidate for congress, 178; opposing Wallace, 374.
- Cooper, state senator of Penn., 133.
- Cooper, ward politician of Indianapolis, supports Fire Chief Webster, 208.
- Cooper, E. H., negro editor, opposes Harrison, wants offices for negroes, 243, 244.
- Cooper, G. W., favors keeping reform promises, is prevented from active work in Ohio campaign in 1889, 68; asks for retention of postmasters at Freedom and Brooklyn, Ind., 112, 174; and investigation of Pension Commissioner Raum, 190, 238, 373; patronage of, 398, 399, 409, 411, 416, 422.
- Cooper, H. J., editor, appointed postmaster at Tampa, Fla., 144.
- Cooper, H. M., internal revenue collector, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Cooper, M. W., appraiser at New York Custom House, and Platt, 258.
- Cooper, T. V., editor and political worker, appointed through influence of Sen. Quay, see Quay, 39; Collector at Philadelphia, spoilsman, 85; works for Senator Cameron, 162; defends Quay, 219; a political worker with Quay, 260, 270, 280; political worker for Harrison, 299, 300; confers with Quay, Reid and Carter, 361, 362, 390; and political assessment circular to raise campaign funds in Pennsylvania, 363.
- Corbaley, chief deputy sheriff at Indianapolis, 315.
- Corboy, P. J., recommends O'Donnell, 60.
- Cornell, ex-governor of New York, 314, 319.
- Cornell University library, 350.
- Cornan, C., postmaster at Ovid, Mich., forced to resign, 165.
- Cornlng, state senator, applicant for postmastership at Concord, Ind., 72.
- Corning, J. W., deputy surveyor at N. Y. city, pays political assessments, 279.
- Corpus Christi, Tex., custom-house at not classified; number of employees in, 277.
- Corsa, W. H., federal employe in New York convention, 334.
- Corse, Gen'l, postmaster at Boston, removed for political reasons, 203, 215, 237; entertained by Massachusetts reform club, 251; removed for political reasons, 282, 367, 376.
- Corsicana, Tex., Politician Zadek, appointed postmaster at, 187.
- Corydon, Ind., Hudson, postmaster of, political worker, 379, 382.
- Cotton, E. S., candidate for postmaster at Newtonville, Mass., 100.
- Coulter, J. M., president Indiana state university, favors civil service reform, 227, 229.
- Conter, T. B., sixth auditor, interpretation of republican promises, his proceeding stopped by Roosevelt, 34; removes subordinates for political reasons, 39; removes Smith, 45; spoilsman, 47; intends clean sweep, 55; member of Ohio Republican Association, 234.
- Council Bluffs, Ia., Treynor, postmaster, political worker, 266.
- Coutts, J. A., journalist, father of federal office-holder, worker for Harrison, 316.
- Covill, L. W., federal employe, asked to pay political assessments, 391, 392.
- Covington, Ind., Editor Vogt appointed postmaster at, 126, 377.
- Covington (Ind.) Friend, condemns opposition to Magee bill, see also Magee, 209.
- Covode, investigation, 124.
- Cowen, J. K., writes history of Gorman regime, 237.
- Cowie, J. A., ward politician and Gibbs faction, see also New York City, 241, 242, 265.
- Cowing, Judge, convicts Conroy, murderer pardoned by Governor Hill for political reasons, 320.
- Cowman, Martha, wife of Editor Cowman, appointed postmaster at Casey, Iowa, 142.
- Cox, Secretary, and Maxwell land grant, 369.
- Cox, G. B., low politician in Cincinnati, worker for Foraker, 302; allied with Foraker, 336; disreputable republican politician in Cincinnati, 352.
- Coy, "Sim," corrupt politician of Indianapolis, career of, see Indianapolis, forges tally-sheets, sent to penitentiary, pardoned by Harrison; and Stuart, R. S., 17; effect of pardon of, on city election, 59; disreputable politician of Indianapolis, 203; opposes passage of bill for new charter of Indianapolis, 212; adherent of elected president city council at Indianapolis, 221, 228; low politician, aids republicans in Indianapolis, 269; Elkins compared to, 289; like Hill, 306, 307; and tally-sheet frauds, 313.
- Craft, G. T., postmaster of Maplewood, N. H., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Craft, R., federal office-holder, political worker for Harrison, 302.
- Craft, W. H., career as R. R. mail substitute clerk, 12.
- Craft, supt of carriers at Indianapolis, political worker, 378.
- Cramer, brother-in-law of Pres. Graut, given office, 191.
- Crane, postmaster of Sedan, Ind., political worker, 379, 380.
- Crane, W. J., candidate for alderman, see Buffalo, N. Y., 137.
- Cratsenberg, A. J., postmaster in Winneshiek Co., Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Cravens, representative in Indiana legislature, opposes spoils methods in, 406, 407.
- Cravens, J. O., appointed collector of internal revenue, spoilsman, 35, 38, 41; removals by, 51, 53; opposed by congressmen of Indiana, 84; internal revenue collector in Indiana, political worker for Harrison, 302, 303, 316; gives office to anti-Harrison man, 347; collector and deputies in Indiana, political workers, 378, 379.
- Crawford, A., low politician, see Philadelphia, 233.
- Crawford, D., see Hillism, 399.
- Crawford, Mrs. R. A., charges of favoritism regarding appointment of denied by Roosevelt, 266, 267.
- Crawley, chief clerk of Indiana house of representatives and office-seekers, 406, 407.
- Creighton, W., negro, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Creigmyer, —, indorsed for postmaster at La Fayette, Ind., by Cheadle, 84.
- Crescent Club, low democratic organization in Baltimore, Md., 308.
- Cresco, Iowa, Editor Webster appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Creswell, ex-postmaster-general, office-seeker, 24.
- Crisp, Speaker, election of, 289.
- Crockett, postmaster of South Bend, Indiana, a political worker, 153, 178; political worker for Harrison, 316, 377, 378.
- Croker, R., Tammany boss, and McLaughlin, 245; defends Tammany, 305, 322; Tammany leader, 298; supporter of disreputable politicians, 309, 317, 411; his patronage, 319, 323.
- Croker, Mrs. R., relative of appointed police captain in New York, 356.
- Cronin, Father, supports civil service reform, 137.
- Cronkite, Major, federal official, pays political assessments, 279.
- Crocker, Rev. T. H., on evils of spoils system, 102.

- Croper, H. M., political worker, appointed collector of internal revenue for Arkansas, 39.
- Crosby, A. D., deputy collector internal revenue, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Cross, H. G., journalist, postmaster at Petersburg, Neb., 149.
- Crounze, Assistant-Secretary, spoilsman, tries to get office for his son, 253, 254; to resign to enter political work, 370.
- Crouse, state senator of Penn., political worker for Quay, 280.
- Cronse, G. N., supported for congress by Collector Hendricks and Postmaster C. E. Smith, 386.
- Cronssore, J. W., appointment and removal of as postmaster at Oakford, Ind., 96.
- Crowley, R., ex-congressman, opposes Hiscock, 259.
- Crown Point, Ind., Editor Wheeler postmaster at, 302, 377.
- Cruger, S. V. R., political worker for Harrison in New York, 332.
- Cruikshank, G. L., postmaster at Addison, Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Crum, W. D., negro, nomination of for postmaster at Charleston as political reward, withdrawn, 363.
- Crutcher, G., and political assessments, see Kentucky.
- Cuba, N. Y., Journalist Glenn, postmaster at, 155; in N. Y. convention, 335.
- Cullman, Ala., Parker, postmaster of, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Cullom, Senator, and Cook Co. (Ill.) offices, 6; spoilsman, 21, 25; obtains appointment fourth-class postmasters, and examining pension boards, 30; and appointments in Ill., 31; and Farwell demand that commission of Wilcox be withheld because they were not consulted, 31; and office-seekers, 37; spoilsman, 79, 95, 107; and post-office at Lanark, Carroll Co., Ill., 109; obtains removal of Smith, postmaster at Carrollton, Ill., and appointment of successor, 188; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 342; supporter of Blaine, 344.
- Cullom, H., employed in N. Y. City government, assessed for political purposes, pays twice, refuses third time, removed, commits suicide, 45.
- Cullop, spoilsman in Indiana legislature, 406, 407.
- Cummings, A. J., congressman, civil service commission is undemocratic, 116; speech on spoils system in navy yards, 145; and navy yard at Kittery, Me., 146.
- Cummings, councilman of Indianapolis, receives street railway bribing check, 207.
- Cunee, P., editor, postmaster at Upper Sandusky, O., 301.
- Cuney, N. W., negro, and collector of customs at Galveston, Texas, political worker, 150, 158, 159; given patronage of Texas, 173; disreputable politician, 180, 266; and Minneapolis convention, 346, 348.
- Cunningham, appointed head of assay office at Boise City, Idaho, upon removal of former incumbent, makes clean sweep, 30.
- Cunningham, chief of division, removed for political reasons, see Coulter, 55.
- Cunningham, G. I., U. S. marshal, offers bribes, 162; delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Cunningham, Kan., Journalist Smith, postmaster at, 149.
- Cunningham, W. S., and CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 308.
- Curran, M. P., removed without cause from Boston custom-house, place given to L. A. Dodge, relative of Secretary Blaine, 71.
- Curran, W. R., postmaster at Hoboken, N. J., removed for political reasons, 51.
- Currier, F. D., naval officer at Boston, a political worker, 143; an active politician, 160, 179.
- Curry, W. W., makes political assessments for Indiana, 153, 377; circular letter of making political assessments, 160; spoilsman, 181; political worker, 389.
- Curtin, Gov., and Quay, 105.
- Curtis case, 281.
- Curtis, Dr., disgraceful physician, in Central Insane Hospital of Indiana, 211.
- Curtis, G. W., address before N. Y. Civil Serv. Ref. Ass'n, 23; an "imposter," 49; address of before annual meeting of National League 1889, 59, 61; rep. journals favor civil service principles of, 76, 86; letter on attitude of civil serv. reformers on reform, 103; on absurdity of spoils system, 120; and civil service law, 125; on victory in house of representatives for civil service reform, 125; speech at laying corner-stone of Washington Arch 1890, 129; accuses Cleveland of subsidizing the press, 141; president National Civil Service Reform League, 153; before annual meeting National Civil Service Reform League, 161, 166, 167, 168, 169, 172; address before annual meeting National League 1890, 166, 167, 168, 169, 172; to address public schools of Philadelphia on public school and civil service reform, 205; address of before department of superintendence of national educational association on "The Public School and Civil Service Reform," 211; address of before annual meeting National League of Civil Service Reform Associations 1891, 261; address of before annual meeting National League 1891, 269, 275; writes civil service clause in republican national platform 1888, 281; correspondence of with Secretary Foster and Wanamaker over political activity of Van Cott and Hendricks, 289; address of before National League annual meeting 1892, on party and patronage, 321, 326, 329; on committee of publication of Good Government, 357; career of, 366, 367; memorial, adopted by Buffalo Civil Service Reform Association, 384.
- Curtis, J., speaker of Indiana house of representatives, patronage of, 406, 407.
- Curtis, J. E., physician at Indiana Central Insane Hospital, extorts fee for death certificate, 311.
- Curtis, N. W., congressman, 354.
- Cushing, M., circular letter of on civil service reform, 174; agent for Wanamaker, letter to civil service reformers, 188.
- Cushing, W. E., praises CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 110.
- Cushman, postmaster at Newburg, Ind., political worker, 380.
- Custer, Gen'l. see Indian service, 182.
- Customs, 22; deputy collectorship of at Port Townsend given to relative of Pres. Harrison, 30; collectors of, applicants for position as under Harrison, 185; house at N. Y., applications for, position in, 75; house N. Y., employes in become political workers, 108; at St. Louis, Mo., employes in workers for Filley machine, 150; house at Lockport, N. Y., patronage of controlled by Hiscock, 259; houses, and extension of merit system, 275; houses, should be classified, 403; service, examinations for, 1891-92, 396.
- Cutchen, congressman, and civil service law, 73.
- Cutcheon, Congressman, stands by civil service law, 124.
- Dabney, Prof. R. H., part of address at annual meeting of Indiana Civ. Serv. Ref. Assoc., 1889, 7.
- Dabozz, D. B., office-seeker, 15.
- Dady, Mike J., spoilsman; see also Kings Co., N. York, 24; promised federal office in N. Y.; see Wallace, 72; corrupt politician of Brooklyn, N. Y.; career of, 106, 336; Worker for Nathan, 354.
- Daggett, "Al," corrupt politician of Brooklyn, N. Y., career of; see also Brooklyn, N. Y., 106.
- Dailey's ranch, cowboys kill Indian boy at, and precipitate trouble, 218.
- Daily, representative in Indiana legislature, opposes spoils methods, 406.
- Dakota, Delegate Mathews of, dictates appointments in, 30.
- Dallam, journalist, appointed deputy U. S. revenue collector, 148.
- Dalton, O., Journalist Scott postmaster at, 149.
- Dalton, W. J., deputy street-cleaning commissioner in N. Y. City, ward politician, 291.
- Daly, M. J., political worker, 371.
- Dalzell, gives way to Senator Quay, 30; controversy with Sen. Quay over Pittsburgh, Pa., post-office, 87, 90, 112; opposed to Quay, 133, 280; and Quay, 299.
- Dana, police commissioner of N. Y. City, a Croker tool, helps in boosting Collins by beating Civ. Serv. law, 356.
- Dana, Ill., Editor Pritchett appointed postmaster at, 111.
- Dana, R. H., at Balt. conference, 1889, 2; address of, before National League, 1889, on taking 4th class post-offices out of politics, 67, 68, 74; to examine management of civ. service, 77; committeeman report on congressional patronage, 113, 114, 115; on committee investigating patent office, report of, 139, 140, 141; correspondence of, with Clarkson, assistant postmaster-general, 141; and Clarkson, 154; on committee of National League, investigating presidential post-offices, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 172; on committee of Nat. League reporting on removals on secret charges, 175, 176, 177; on committee of National League, reports on political changes in presidential post-offices, 188; on special committee of National League investigating census service, 291, 295; on committee of publication of "Good Government," 357.
- Dancy, J. C., negro, customs coll. at Wilmington, N. C., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Danforth, state treasurer (N. Y.), receives political contributions, 180.
- Daniel, L. M., federal officer, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Daniels, postmaster at Cedar Rapids, Ia., 262.
- Daniels, G. B., postmaster of Withey, Mich., asked for poll of voters, 383.
- Danville, Ill., Editor Jewell appointed postmaster at, 141; Postmaster Jewell of, a political worker, 160.
- Danville, Ind., Editor Kiug supported by Congressman Cooper for postmaster of, 398, 399.
- Dany, J. C., negro, collector of customs at Wilmington, N. C., delegate for Harrison, 334.
- Darby, W., P. O. employe, see Indianapolis investigation, 411.
- Dargan, on house committee on civil service, 86.
- Darling, E., postmaster in Crawford county, Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Darlington, S., congressman, opposed to civil service reform, 37, 51.
- Darvall, S. A., federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Darnell, councilman, and Indianapolis fire department, 13; controls patronage in city offices, 104; and street railway bribery, 207.
- Daugherty, chairman Allen county (Ind.) republican committee, opposes Harrison, 303.
- Daus, R. L., worker for McLaughlin, see Tammany, 318, 319.
- Davenport, I., candidate for governor of New York, 1885, 351.
- Davenport, "Johnny," chief supervisor of elections at New York, 21; makes tool of "The" Allen, see also, 249; letter of questioning rights of voters, 387.
- Davidson, A. J., deputy pension commissioner, a political worker, 279.
- Davis, ballot-box stuffer, see Hudson county, N. Y.
- Davis, senator, spoilsman, 21; opposes E. G. Hay, 81.
- Davis, fireman in Indianapolis fire service, 36.
- Davis, "Bill," councilman and low politician of Indianapolis, 207.
- Davis, "Bill," P. O. employe at Indianapolis, political worker for Harrison, 302.
- Davis, C., political worker for Platt and Hiscock, 265.
- Davis, C. F., offer of Enbanks to sell office to, 99.
- Davis, D. P., father of Journalist Davis, postmaster at Harrison, Neb., 149.
- Davis, I., appointed postmaster at Greenfield, Ind., 89.
- Davis, Ill., Editor Potter appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Davis, "Jim," see also Indianapolis, 207.
- Davis, Rev. J. A., negro, opposes Harrison; wants offices for negroes, 244.
- Davis, J. B., applicant for postmastership of Monroeville, Ind., given office in Indian Service, 88.
- Davis, M., postmaster, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Davis, S. P., applicant for postmaster at Cumberland, Ind., 89.
- Davis, W., postmaster at Kane, Pa., worker for Delamater, 134.
- Davis, W. R., journalist, postmaster at Canton, Kan., 148.
- Davison, J. T., see Hiscock, 259.
- Dawes, Sen., letter to, from Congressman Banks, advocating appointment of J. J. McCarthy, 31; and Boston custom-house, 71; and Collector Saltonstall, 94, 105; controls census patronage in Mass., 104; favorable to civil service reform, 211; requests retention of Corse, postmaster at Boston, 367.
- Dawson, Neb., journalist Buser, postmaster at, 149.
- Dawson, T., soldier, given place in Indiana senate, 108.
- Dawson, Wm., chairman W. Virginia republican state committee, levies political assessments, 390.
- Day, deputy sheriff, a political worker, 162.
- Dayton Journal, (rep.), spoils system a necessity, 49.
- Dea, and Brattlebro, Mass., postmastership, 100.
- Deane, G. B., custom-house contractor, in New York convention, 334; and cartage contract at N. Y. custom-house, 358.
- Deane, W. G., given place by Collector Erhardt, for political services, 150.
- De Armond, congressman, bill of, to suspend civil service law, during first year of every president's term, 404.
- Deas, E. H., deputy coll. int. rev., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Decatur, Ind., editor appointed postmaster at, 37; Quinn, postmaster of, political worker, 379.
- Decker, O. H., appointed consul-general Rio de Janeiro through influence of his relative, Judge Settle, 47.
- Deen, H. W., journalist, postmaster at Jackson Court House, W. Va., 155.
- Deery, E. H., given place in Indiana legislature, 406.
- De Freest, clerk of N. Y. house of representatives and patronage, 215.
- De Grass, J. C., appointed postmaster at Austin, Texas; local politician, 71.
- Degress, politician of Texas, 159.
- De Haven, J. D., congressman, indorses Bush, political worker, 187.
- De Kalb Co., Ind., postmasters in, political workers, 380.
- De La Hunt, Isabella, appointed postmistress at Cannelton, Ind., by Arthur, on recommendation of Sen. Harrison, removed for political reasons by Cleveland, Harrison refuses to reappoint, 25, 177, 368.
- Delamater, state senator of Pa., charged with bribery, career of, 133, 134, 135, 138, 299, 353; candidate for governor of Pennsylvania, 143; opposition to in Pennsylvania, 161; defeated candidate for governor of Pa., financial ruin of, 183, 233; forced on Quay, 249; tool of Quay, 250.
- De Land, J. L., federal examiner, on merit system, 83; on examinations in treasury department, 152; friend of civil service reform, report of on workings of merit system, 200; devises rules for promotion in treasury department, 298.
- Delaney, J., postmaster at Orlando, Fla., removed on secret charges, Fletcher appointed, 176.
- Delano, congressman, and post-offices in N. Y., makes changes in, 47.
- Delaware, repub. platform 1882 advocates civil service reform, 50; political activity of federal office holders in, 334; vote of for Harrison and others at Minneapolis, 347; political activity of federal officers in, attempted bribery by, 347, 348, 389, 401, 402.

- Delaware, Ohio, Gazette, son of editor of, federal office holder, 301.
- DeLemas, B., sec'y republican committee of Alabama, levies political assessments, 391.
- Della Plain, Tex., Journalist McLain postmaster at, 155.
- Delmar, Ala., ignorant negro appointed postmaster at, 47.
- Delphi, Ind., Journal [repub.], editor of given office through, 85, 97; advocated republican bribery in elections as only means to win, opposes civil service reform, 191; condemns civil service examination system, because democrats get offices, 213; charges favoritism on part of civil service commission, 266, 267.
- Democrats, list of, voting in Indiana senate on Magee bill for non-partisan control of state charitable institutions, majority against, 201.
- Democratic platforms, see platforms.
- DeMotte, postmaster at Valparaiso, Ind., a political worker, 153, 377, 378; worker for Harrison, 316; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 343, 379.
- Dennis, Rev. H. D., applicant for postmastership at Lanark, Carroll Co., Ill., 109; defeated applicant for postmastership of Lanark, Ill., 136.
- Denny, C., mayor of Indianapolis, charges against, 207; ex-mayor of Indianapolis, on the mugwump, 269.
- Denton, J. S., see Chemung Co., N. Y., 259.
- Denver, Colo., percent. of removals in classified and unclassified service in post-office at, 185.
- Denver, Ind., Fite postmaster of, political worker, 379.
- Departmental service, classified by Pres. Arthur, 185.
- Departments, heads of, and congressional patronage, 47; proposal of Congressman Andrews to extend civil service law to heads of divisions in, 306.
- DePauw, family uses influence for appointment of Throop, 59.
- DePauw, N. T., worker for Harrison, 316.
- Depew, C. M., interview on spoils system, 38; on evils of patronage, 75; address at Pittsburgh on promotion among railway employees, 189; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 341, 342, 343, 344; and Collector Hendricks at head of republican party in New York, 348; worker for Harrison at Minneapolis convention, 379.
- Derby, Ia., Postmaster Chapman of, a political worker, 260.
- Derby, Dr. R. H., resigns from N. Y. City health dept. because it becomes a political machine, 356.
- DeRuiter, street commissioner of Indianapolis, see Indianapolis.
- Des Moines, Ia., advice of Clarkson to young men's republican club of, on plan of campaign, 235, 236; Brandt, postmaster of, political worker at Minneapolis convention, 346.
- Despo, candidate for alderman at Indianapolis, 208.
- Detroit, Mich., customs district of, classified 1883, 276.
- Deveraux, J., able ass't superintendent city delivery at St. Louis, 131.
- Devreux, J. H., negro, federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Dewey, J. F., journalist, given office in Chicago custom house, 126.
- Dice, —, post-office inspector, a political worker, 179.
- Dick, G. N., federal employe, in New York convention, 335.
- Dick, W. F., chairman Ohio republican state committee, levies political assessments, 390, 391.
- Dickey, J. M., anti-Platt political worker, 260.
- Dickinson, postmaster general under Cleveland, averse to civil service reform, 18, 20; gives spoils in Michigan to democrats, 45; and contributions to party funds, 100; and civil service reform, 274.
- Dimmick, D. A., appointed consul at Barbadoes through influence of Secretary Blaine, 56.
- Dimond, General W. H., chairman republican state committee of California, endorses Bush, political worker, 187.
- Dingley, congressman, supports civil service commission, 205.
- Dissron, F., negro, post-office employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Disston, H., political worker for Quay, 280.
- Ditney, Ind., Ketcham, postmaster of, solicited for political contributions, 387, 392.
- Diver, P., low politician, appointed police justice by Mayor Grant, well recommended, 181; appointed to judgeship by Governor Hill of New York, 212; see Tammany, 317.
- Dix, Rev. M., D. D., favors clerical recognition of civil service reform, 48; advocates civil service reform, 82.
- Dobbins, P. B., receiver of political assessments, 390.
- Doble, A. K., and pardon of Petroff and Kemble, 152.
- Dobson, H. A., federal employe, asked to pay political assessments, 391, 392.
- Dockery, congressman, upholds civil service commission, 204.
- Dodd, assistant postmaster at Indianapolis, and those eligible for appointment, 9.
- Dodd, faction, see New York City.
- Dodge, F. L., editor, appointed postmaster at Hanford, Cal., 126.
- Dodge, L. A., relative of Secretary Blaine appointed an appraiser in Boston custom house, 71; succeeds Stearns, appraiser in Boston custom house removed for political reasons, 250, 288; appraiser at Boston, political worker, 334.
- Dodson, C., deputy revenue collector, in Maryland convention, 335.
- Doerbaum, J. F., employe in post-office at St. Louis, Mo., worker for Filly machine, 150.
- Dolliver, J. P., congressman, requests resignation of Postmaster Cain, see Cain, 165.
- Dolph, Congressman, and civil service law, 73.
- Donaldson, La., Weber appointed postmaster of, on request of Collector Warmouth, 241.
- Donato, J. G., federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Donavan, C., unsuccessful candidate for congress, ward politician, see New York City, 199.
- Donavan, E. J., signs petition for larger appropriation for Civil Serv. Com., 102.
- Donley, D. E., journalist, appointed postmaster at Baylis, Ill., 141.
- Donnell, J. T., address of at Hanover College, Ind., upon civil service reform, 77.
- Donnelly, J. B., U. S. marshal, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Doran, T. T., see Cannon, 39.
- Dorchester, commissioner of Indian schools, creates office for benefit of his wife, 38; removals under in Indian service, 79.
- Doremus, recommended for census service, 121.
- Dorsey, S. W., and star route scandals, 291; and Elkins, 281, 369.
- Doty, E. A., at Baltimore conference, 1889, 2.
- Dougall, A. H., candidate for postmaster at Ft. Wayne, Ind., 45.
- Dougherty, chief of division, removed by Coulter for political reasons, 55.
- Dougherty, fire chief at Indianapolis to succeed Webster, removed for political reasons, removed and Webster reappointed, 120, 207, 208.
- Douglass, F., ex-U. S. minister, works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 345, 346.
- Douglas, G., applicant for Wauamac, Ind., postmastership, 88.
- Douglas, H. G., editor appointed under Cleveland postmaster at Plainfield, Ind., 30.
- Douglass, S. J., census supervisor, asks political work of subordinates, 293.
- Dow, F. N., for collector of customs at Portland, Me., 22.
- Dowling, low politician, and Cleveland administration, 28, 35, 94.
- Dowling, labor commissioner of New York, spoilsman, removals under, civil service rules suspended for, 414.
- Downing, J. H., discharged from navy yard at Norfolk, Va., by Sec'y Whitney, 147.
- Downing, J., confesses to bribery, 151.
- Doyle, sec'y civil service commission, investigates political assessment cases, 392.
- Doyle, H., page in Indiana legislature, 406.
- Doyle, M. J., postmaster, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Draper, leader republican faction at Albany, N. Y., supports A. Chester for surveyorship of Albany district, 45.
- Drapo, J. F., indorsed by Sen. Quay, 100.
- Draper, pension examiner in Indiana, political worker, 379.
- Drummond, S. A., journalist, appointed postmaster at Lancaster, Cal., 141.
- Dryden, postmaster of Martinsville, Ind., political worker, 380.
- Dublin, Editor A. Reed, appointed consul at, 30.
- Du Bois, delegate from Idaho Terr., spoilsman, uses influence; see Wild, 30; senator, supporter of Blaine, 344.
- Ducey, Rev. Father, and attempt to purify politics in N. Y. City, 180.
- Ducey, W. A., succeeded by Deane, appointed by Collector Erhardt at New York, 150.
- Dudley, W. W., obtaining offices for adherents, 2, 7; and offices, 189, 192, 214, 227, 256, 281, 282, 305, 373, 414, 24, 92, 154, 160; letter of, called "Blocks of Five" letter, 41, 78; negotiates with Mahone, 52; uses influence for appointment of Throop, 59; case of, see Edmunds, Sen., 87; and Harrison, 121; levies political assessments, 180; condemned by young men's republican club of Massachusetts, 219; desires indorsement of his "political activity," 244; eulogized by National Republican Committee, 257; Elkins compared to, 289; eulogy of by Clarkson, 359; and republican leaders, 354; and "blocks of five," 368; and Michener, 377; and S. N. Chambers, 380; warrant for not issued by U. S. Dist. Att'y Chambers, 380.
- Duer, E. F., postmaster of Princess Anne, Md., removed for political reasons, Lankford appointed, 408.
- Dufalo, F. F., consul at Havre, Harrison petitioned to retain, by N. Y. cotton exchange, 54.
- Duffy, T. L., laborer, given office by Gold, township trustee at Indianapolis, 256.
- Dugan, I., treasury inspector, removed for political reasons, 332.
- Duhurst, F. G., 335; receiver of political assessments for Maryland, 391.
- Dunbar, J. G., congressional candidate, and Raum, 373.
- Duncan, H. C., letter to from Cooper (M. C.) asking retention of postmasters at Freedom and Brooklyn, Ind., 112.
- Duncan, J., applicant for postmastership of Martinsville, Ind., 399.
- Dunham, federal employe, political worker at Boston, 334.
- Dunlap, H. J., journalist, appointed consul to Breslau, 84, 126.
- Dunlap, W. L., U. S. marshal for Indiana and civil serv. reform, 10, 14, 96, 108; asks Postmaster Browne of Franklin, Ind., to resign, 37, 377; a political worker, 144; worker for Harrison, 316, 320, 337, 343, 353; and republican clubs in Indianapolis, 362; worker for Harrison, 377, 378, 379, 380, 381; appoints "floaters" as deputies, 387, 389.
- Dunn, councilman of Indianapolis, spoilsman and low politician, 207.
- Dunn, postmaster at Stanberry, Mo., 121.
- Dunn, C. J., P. O. employe at Indianapolis, at instance of democratic committeeman Backus, solicits political contributions, removed, 403, 411, 412.
- Dunn, G. W., postmaster at Binghamton, N. Y., a political worker, 266; secures removal of pension examiner Van Alstyne, 304.
- Dunn, I., deputy coroner at Indianapolis, shaves witness fees, 314, 315.
- Dunnell, obtains removal of Stacy, postmaster at Albert Lea, Minn., and reappointment of Harkness, political worker, previously removed for cause, 39; opposes civil service examinations, 124.
- Dunning, F. H., journalist, postmaster at Sanbright, Tenn., 155.
- Dunton, A. G., appointed postmaster at Ifuntertown, Ind., vice Latham removed through influence of Postmaster Higgins, 362.
- Dunvell, C. J., political worker for Nathan, 264.
- Durbin, W., see Cannon, 39.
- Durbin, W. T., and office-seekers, 37; uses influence for appointment of Throop, 59; politician, secures some appointments, 71, 84.
- Durham, Judge, removed from comptrollership, 21.
- Duryee, S. W., chief clerk in patent office under Pres. Arthur, removed; re-appointed, 140.
- Dutchess county, N. Y., election frauds in, committed by Hill, 306.
- Dwight, J. W., uses influence for appointment of Robinson, postmaster at Ithaca, N. Y., 264; N. Y. delegate to Minneapolis convention, and supports Blaine, 344, 345.
- Dysart, Iowa, Editor Brown appointed, 142.
- Eagle, Edward, editor, worker for Delamater, etc., 134.
- Eagle Park, Idaho, Journalist Wheeler postmaster at, 155.
- Eagle Pass, Tex., custom house at not classified; number of employes in, 277.
- Eastern Dispensary of New York City, civil service methods in, 101.
- Eastman, A., journalist, given office in internal revenue service, 126.
- Eastman, R. B., supervising architect of Brooklyn, N. Y., to be removed for mal-administration, 234.
- Easton, D. J., journalist, postmaster at Union City, Mich., 149.
- Easton, Md., Mulliken, postmaster of, in state convention, 335.
- Eaton, postmaster at New Orleans, pays political assessments, 383.
- Eaton, D. B., memorial on Postmaster Pearson before N. Y. Civil Service Reform Association, 23; draws bill for present civil service law, 75, 79; advocates civil service reform, 82; on removal of Saltonstall, 105; praises CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 110; letters to Senator Allison; letters replying to Senator Hoar, 111; and civil service law, 125; on civil service reform, in June, 1891, North American Review, 257; studies English civil service, at invitation of Hayes; appointed chairman civil service commission under Arthur, 271; on Tammany, 317.
- Eaves, J. B., nomination of rejected by senate, 150; disappointed office-seeker, a political worker, 159; in N. Carolina, 334; stamp clerk at Statesville, N. C., resigns; levies political assessments; sons of given office, 362.
- Eden, "Billy," easy-going place-holder, 315.
- Editor — appointed consul at Palermo, Italy, 240.
- Editors, rewarding of for political services, see Press, 30.
- Edmunds, evils of patronage, 25; and investigation of case of W. W. Dudley, 87.
- Edsall, I. W., removal of by Flower, 319.
- Edwards, A. J., ass't postmaster at Pittsburgh, Pa., supporter of Quay, suspected by Harrison, 299.
- Edwards, Miss., negro Perkins, postmaster of, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Edwards, R., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.
- Edson, C. H., see Harlow, postmaster, 100.
- Edson, Dr. C., appointed sanitary supt. at N. Y. City vice Ewing, removed by Tammany, 356.
- Egan, P., appointed minister to Chile as political reward, 282; U. S. minister to Chile, political worker, 382, 389.
- Egger, C., ward politician, see Indianapolis, 196.
- Ehlert, H., low politician, flees from creditors, 226.
- Eidman, F., internal revenue collector in New York, a political worker, 265, 287; at Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Eiter, ex-postmaster, political worker, 370.

Elbert, Dr. S. A., negro, opposes Harrison, wants offices for negroes, 243.

Eligibles, list of civil service commission orders posting of, at Indianapolis, 25; at Indianapolis post-office, June, 1889, 29; in Indianapolis post-office, list of, 48; publicity of lists of, opposed by ex-Commissioner Oberly, 53; list of, and civil service commission, 93; made public, gives satisfaction, 186.

Eliot, C. W. (Pres. Harvard Univer.), address of before Bay State Club comparing administration of civil service under Cleveland and Harrison, 60; Pres. Harvard University, civil service reformer, 204.

Elizabeth, N. J., federal patronage in, see Keau, 216.

Elizabeth, Pa., wife of Journalist Wiley postmaster at, 149.

Elkham, W. Va., Journalist Greenawalt postmaster at, 155.

Elkies, "Steve," and Kerens, "Dick," 22; wants larger share of patronage in West Virginia, 71; and Platt, scheme to defraud the government, 258; appointed sec'y of war, corrupt politician, career of, 289, 290, 291; appointment of as sec'y of war, unjustifiable, 298; political worker for Harrison, 336; and Minneapolis convention, 338, 339; confers with New, 340; sec'y of war, career of, 354, 368, 369, 371; appointed to alienate from Blaine, 376; confers with J. C. New, 379; sec'y, etc., political worker, 387, 390.

Ellart, S., inspector in N. Y. custom house, a political worker, 103.

Ellettsville, Ind., Sharp, postmaster of, political worker, 380.

Elliott, councilman of Indianapolis, spoilsman and low politician, 207.

Elliott, Congressman, 162.

Elliott, B. K., judge Indiana supreme court, favors civil service reform, 227, 229; mentioned as candidate for governor of Indiana, 353, 381.

Elliott, D. W., clerk in post-office at Ind'p'l's, 25.

Elliott, G. F., political worker, see Kings Co., N. Y.

Elliott, G. L., appointed postmaster at Reelsville, Ind., removed, 89.

Ellis, chief of division, removed for political reasons, see Coulter, 55.

Ellis, F., mayor, appointed postmaster at Muncie, Ind., 217; political worker for Harrison, 316, 362, 370, 378.

Ellis, W. P., appointed postmaster at Washington, Ind., despite sale of office to Seifrits, 121.

Ellison, state senator of Indiana, spoilsman, 408.

Elmira, N. Y., postmaster at named by Congressman Flood, 53; Flood, postmaster of, a political worker, opposes Platt and Fassett, factional fights at, 259; a political worker, 265, 266; removed for political reasons, 297, 303, 304; Rathbun appointed, removed, 303, 304, 305; removed on secret charges, Rathbun appointed, 312; removal of through influence of Fassett, 331.

Elmwood, Neb., Journalist Mayfield postmaster at, 149.

El Paso, Tex., forty-nine applicants for collectorship of customs at, 45; Flanagan, political worker, appointed customs collector at, 266, 286; custom house at not classified, number of employees in, 277.

Emans, corrupt political worker for Hill, 306.

Emerson, L. W., ward politician, tired of factionalism, see Kings Co., N. Y.

Emery, L., ex-state senator, charges Delamater with bribery, 134, 135.

Emmert, P. W., journalist, postmaster at Erwin, Tenn., 155.

Emmetsburg, Iowa, Editor Utter appointed postmaster at, 142.

Employes, federal, in Massachusetts active politically, 179; at Washington, number of compelled to go home to vote, 179.

Emporium, Pa., Journalist Gould postmaster at, 149.

Encinitas, Cal., Editor Smith appointed postmaster at, 141.

Endicott, Sec., favors civ. service reform, 82.

England, competitive tests in civil and military service of, 118.

England, methods used in census service of, 291, 292.

England, G., a Nathan henchman, 301.

English, postmaster at New Haven, removed, 96.

English, A. M., journalist, postmaster at Fontana, Kan., 149.

English, J., low politician, see Hudson Co., N. Y.

English, W., low politician, see Hudson Co., N. Y.

Engraving and Printing, conduct under E. O. Graves, 45.

Enochs, Congressman, on federal interference in election of Sherman, 301.

Ensley, N., appointment as pension agt. at Indianapolis opposed, 89, 96; pension agent in Indiana, appoints his son chief clerk in pension office, vice J. L. Riley, 108; worker for Harrison, 303, 316; at Minneapolis, 337, 343, 379; and political assessments, 363; political worker, 378.

Ensley, O. R., given office by his father, pension agent, 108.

Ensor, J. F., deputy coll. int. rev., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.

Ensor, J. F., U. S. dist. att'y, and political activity of federal office-holders in Maryland, 335; delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.

Enyart, M. L., editor, appointed postmaster at Macy, Ind., 126, 377.

Ephrata, Penn., democratic postmaster of removed; republican appointed, 72.

Episcopal Church, pastoral letter of House of Bishops of, favoring clerical advocacy of civil service reform, see Church, 73.

"Equally Divided Politically," proviso in charter that offices in city service of Indianapolis be, 212, 213, 220, 222, 228, 235.

Erhardt, J. B., collector at New York, and office-seekers, 38; deputies of, active politicians, 108; spoilsman, see Deane, 150; discontent of office-seekers with, 174; removals under, 183; and fraudulent cartage bids, 216; "resigns," Fassett appointed, 255; resignation of, 257; and Platt, 258; "frozen out" by Platt, 260; and office-seekers recommended by Platt and Gibbs, 261, 265; and Platt, 350; forced to resign for adherence to civil service reform methods, 358; and cartage bids, 371; forced to resign for resisting spoilsman, 373.

Ernst, J. A., editor, appointed postmaster at St. Genevieve, Mo., 126.

Erwin, representative in Indiana legislature, and spoils methods in, 407.

Erwin, Tenn., journalist Emmert, postmaster at, 155.

Eskridge, Kan., journalist Melrose, postmaster at, 149.

Estee, M. M., indorses Bush, political worker, 187, 291.

Estey, and Brattleboro, Mass., postmastership, 100.

Eubanks, A. C., candidate, letter of, 23; and sale of offices, 99.

Eugharth, E. E., postmaster at Rodney, Miss., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344.

Eureka Springs, Ark., appointment of True as postmaster of, denounced by republicans of, 55.

Eustace, A. C., N. Y. civil service commissioner, worker for Hill, 309.

Eustis, delegate to Minneapolis convention, supports Blaine, 314.

Evans, G. O., fiscal agent for Penn., corrupt politician, 270.

Evans, H. C., postmaster at Bloomfield, Iowa, removed on secret charges, 175.

Evans, H. C., congressman, opposed to civil service reform, 49; opposed to civil service law, 55; secures appointment of politician Park, as census enumerator, 293.

Evansville, Ind., Postmaster Bennett of, politician, see also Posey, 46; Postmaster Bennett of, a political worker, 153, 158, 377; republicans favor Gresham, 240.

Evansville, Ind., Courier, condemns opposition to Magee bill, see also, Magee, 210.

Evansville, Ind., Journal [republican], 49; opposes Harrison, 378.

Evansville, Minn., Journalist Lawrence postmaster at, 149.

Evarts, W. M., Fassett deserts at suggestion of Platt, 259; Jewett claim, 290, 353.

Everett, W., civil service reformer, 174.

Ewart, H. G., congressman, opposed to civil service law, 47; objects to civil service reform, 49; supports politician Pritchard, 159, 161; levies political assessments in South Carolina, 390.

Ewing, W., endorsed by his relative, Secretary Blaine, for collector at Pittsburg, 100.

Ewing, Dr. W. A., removed from New York City health department for political reasons, 356.

Examinations, civil service, general.

Examinations, specimen papers of those failing in, see Civil Service Record; of civil service commission, assaults against and defense of, see Roosevelt; examination questions, 3; for appointment should be made public, 10; for civil service, objections to, considered, 11; special ordered for post-office at Indianapolis, 18; age of competitors in, at Bloomington, Ill., 26; civil service, a farce at Troy (N. Y.) post-office and New York custom house, 29; number of employees in New York and Indianapolis post-offices exempt from, 42; for civil service, said to be not pertinent questions asked in, 49; papers should be opened to public inspection, 53; questions used in for clerks and carriers at Indianapolis, August 6, 1889, 51, 56, 57, 58, see Call, 118; for positions in patent office, 141; in treasury department, see De Land, 152; paper used at Baltimore, 157; by civil service commission, number of persons examined, year 1889-90, appointments, 185; during 1889-90 for various branches of civil service, unsuccessful and successful applicants, see report civil service com., 1889-90, 185; central board of suggestions as, see civ. service com. annual report, 1889-90, 185, 186; papers marked in, for civil service, made public, 186; census Superintendent Porter alleges, for clerkships, 190; "pass" discredited, 192; for various departments of service need improvement, see Wanamaker, 193; and eligibles for position as clerks and carriers at Indianapolis, 218; used in national and Massachusetts state census service, 219, 220; to be required for promotion from unclassified to classified service, 221; civil service, instituted for positions in navy yards by Sec'y Tracy, 221, 222; employees under treasury supervising architect, selected by, although not required by law, 224; of civil service commission, 230, 231; questions used in,

at Brooklyn, N. Y., navy yard, 236; civil service, evasion of under G. B. Raum, jr., 238; C. W. Watson, chairman, committee on, of N. Y. civil service reform association, 239; for Indianapolis post-office to be held August, 1891, 243; for clerks and carriers for Indianapolis post-office, number of applicants, 253; competitive under civil service commission, ordered for promotions in Washington offices, 254; competitive for candidates for West Point, instituted by Congressman Warwick, does not accept result, see McKinley, 254, 262; competitive, Wanamaker establishes promotion by, in P. O. department, 256, 257; civil service, prejudice against hard to dispel, 257; system and civil service commission, prejudice against in the south, 273; promotion by competitive, 286; competitive for census service of England, Ireland and Scotland, and U. S. A., 292; competitive for promotion, introduced by Wanamaker in department offices, and post-offices, 297, 298; physical required for employees in R. R. mail service, 305; of August, 1892, in Indianapolis post-office, results of, 306; under civil service commission, 1891-92, in various departments, 306, 307.

Examinations, civil service, municipal; questions used in for Buffalo police service, 44; No. of held, Mass. civil service commission, 74; questions used in, fire dept. at Brooklyn, N. Y., 93; questions used in, for Brooklyn police service, 152; for labor service see Civil Service Record, 152; for positions in police service at Indianapolis, Boston, and Brooklyn compared, see equally divided politically, 222, 223, 224; competitive and civil service methods should be instituted in city service at Indianapolis, see equally divided politically, 228; physical, for fire and police services of Boston, Mass., 243, 246, 247, 248, 249; in Indianapolis, for physicians in city hospital, 322; under N. Y. City civil service board for police matron, a complete failure, Mrs. Maloney, beggar, appointed, 404.

Examiner (chief), investigates violations of civil service law in post-office at Milwaukee, Wis., Sept., 1888, 36.

Examiners, local boards of, suggestions as to, see civil service com. annual report 1889-90, 185, 186; local board of, personnel of at Baltimore and Indianapolis, 186.

Fahsel, on local examining board at Milwaukee, 103.

Failing, A. H., applicant for postmastership at Oswego, N. Y., 126.

Fairbanks, C. W., republican politician in Indiana, on business methods in politics, 137.

Fairbanks, Crawford, Terre Haute distiller, 346, 419.

Fairchild, ex-secretary of treasury, 169; on tariff message of Pres. Cleveland, 172; appoints Maynard ass't sec'y of treasury, 310.

Fairfax, commander of Kittery navy yard, testifies as to abuses, 147.

Fairmount Club, see Baltimore investigation, 295.

Farlow, representative in Indiana legislature, opposes spoils methods in, 407.

Farmer, S. C., postmaster in Wright Co., Ia., a political worker, 260.

Farmington, Me., Pratt, postmaster at, removed on secret charges, 175.

Farnum, H. S., postmaster at Uxbridge, Mass., removed on secret charges; C. T. Scott appointed, 175.

Farragut, Iowa, Journalist Notson appointed postmaster at, 142.

Farrell, commissioner, spoilsman, 315.

Farrington, J. M., ward politician, see Kings Co., N. Y.; opposing Nathan, 304.

Farwell, senator, and Cook co. (Ill.) offices, 6; and applicants for Chicago offices, 14; spoilsman, 17, 21, 25, 79, 92; and Sexton, postmaster at Chicago, 22; and Senator Cullom, 31; and office-seekers, 37; recommends O'Donnell, 59; proposes to repeal civil service law, 83; and Farwell Club of Indianapolis, 85, 92, 269; on control of Illinois patronage, and Clark, customs collector at Chicago, 95; indorses Hartong for postmaster at Rochelle, Ill., 109; indorses application of Scanlan, political worker, 132.

Farwell Club, of Indianapolis, 79, 83, 86, 112, 119; end of, 85.

"Fassett" report, on effect of civil service law in New York City and elsewhere, 219.

Fassett, A. D., editor, given office by Governor Foraker, 301.

Fassett, J. S., undertakes to name postmaster for Elmira, N. Y., 53; appointed collector at N. Y. City to make clean sweep, vice Erhardt, "resigned," 255; methods of, political worker for Harrison, 258, 259; political worker, 265-6, 269; appointment of condemned, 272, 373, 374; candidate for governor of New York, aided by custom house employees in N. Y. City, 278; campaign of, 279, 280, 287, 288; and removal of Flood, postmaster at Elmira, N. Y., 297, 303, 304, 331; attempts removal of Postmaster Van Duzen, 331; and Harrison, 345, 346, 352, 353, 337, 342, 344.

Faulkner, C. R., member Indiana legislature, illiterate politician, gets federal office through congressmen and Senator Voorhees, 222.

Fawcett, letter of to CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE on Delphi Journal and Owen, 97.

Fay, H. H., appointed postmaster at Newport, R. I., see Rhode Island, senators of, 150.

- Fearis, postmaster of Union, Ind., worker for Harrison, 316, 378.
- Fearis, J. H., postmaster of Connersville, Ind., at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- Federal office-holders, political activity of, see states, cities, Minneapolis convention.
- Feland, J., internal revenue collector in Kentucky, political assessments under, 330; delegate to Minneapolis convention, 341, 348.
- Fellows, J. R., low politician, see Hillism, 199, 309.
- Felton, Senator, supporter of Blaine, 344, 359.
- Fensley, W., federal office-holder, see Baltimore investigation, 328.
- Fenstemaker, W., journalist, postmaster at Angustine, Kan., 148.
- Ferguson, C. E., and Orlando, Fla., post-office, 176.
- Ferris, G. C., whose son holds federal office, a political worker for Hiscock, 265.
- Fessenden, S., 354, 359.
- Fendalism revived, account of in N. Y. City and Brooklyn, by Boston Post, 263.
- Field, John, as postmaster of Philadelphia, 15, 300; suggested by Senator Quay for postmaster at Philadelphia, 22; withdraws resignation, 310.
- Fielding, R. W., candidate for U. S. marshal, defeated, 132.
- Filer, C. W., federal office-holder and political worker, 179.
- Filley, C. I., office-seeker, 14, 24, 131; spoilsman, defeated applicant for St. Louis postmastership, controls 1th class post-offices in Missouri, see also Spirely, 132, 150; to work for Harrison, 226; opposed to Harrison in Missouri, 336; delegate at Minneapolis convention, for Blaine or Harrison, 345, 386.
- Finch, councilman and Indianapolis fire department, 13; spoilsman, 207.
- Findling, —, removed from fire service at Indianapolis, see Equally divided politically, 235.
- Finkenhauer, G., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 333.
- Finney, G. E., supported by Congressman Cooper for postmaster of Columbus, Ind., 398.
- Fippen, F., page in Indiana legislature, 106, 408.
- Fippen, J. M., representative in Indiana legislature, spoilsman, son of appointed page, 408.
- Fire service in N. Y. City and Indianapolis, 36.
- Fire superintendents, national convention of, condemn spoils system in fire services, 253.
- Firethunder, E., Indiana blacksmith, defrauded, 218.
- Fischer, C. B., on inefficient census service in N. Y. City, 294.
- Fischer, I. F., political worker, see also Kings Co., N. Y.; politician aiding Woodruff, 106; navy yard patronage at New York, 182, 183; worker for Nathan and Platt, 304, 336; may "deal in legislative privileges" at Albany, 311.
- Fischer, J. H., federal employe, in N. Y. convention, 335.
- Fish commission, U. S., placed under civil service law, 332; of New York, Hill makes machine of, 310.
- Fish, H., Jr., and Gibbs, 288; corrupt politician in N. Y. legislature, and Hill, 307.
- Fishback, W. P., 18; added to local examining board at Indianapolis, 25; hitch in appointment of on local civil service board of Indianapolis, 31; member local examining board at Indianapolis, 42, 120, 129, 186; U. S. master in chancery, favors civil service reform, speech of at Roosevelt dinner, 227, 229, 232.
- Fisher, G. P., corrupt politician appointed first auditor of the treasury, 32, 38, 374.
- Fisher, R. J., promoted to be assistant patent commissioner, efficient, 140.
- Fitch, A. B., see Chemung Co., N. Y., 259.
- Fitch, C. E., editor, appointed collector of internal revenue at Buffalo, N. Y., 108; at convention republican league, 259; a political worker, 265; in N. Y. convention, 335.
- Fitch, C. P., census officer, a political worker, 160.
- Fite, postmaster at Denver, Ind., political worker, 379.
- Fitler, mayor of Philadelphia, 30, 143.
- Fitzgerald, J. E., signs petition for larger appropriation for civil service commission, 102.
- Fitzpatrick, delegate to Minneapolis convention, opposing Harrison, 346.
- Fitzwilliams, E., customs inspector at Boston, a political worker, 179.
- Flagler, B., political worker for law collector at Suspension Bridge, N. Y., 259.
- Fianagan, custom house employe, active politician, 179.
- Flanagan, Ill., Editor Breen appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Fianagan, W., political worker in Texas, 159; spoilsman, 245; appointed customs collector at El Paso, Texas, vice Clark, worker for Harrison, 266, 282, 286, supports Harrison at Minneapolis, 345, 346, 374, 396.
- Fleming, D. W., recommended for office by Cheadle, 84.
- Flenniken, J. H., appointed postmaster at Bradford, Pa., on recommendation of Ray, removed on protest of H. C. Frick, 99.
- Fletcher, P. O. employe at Frankfort, Ind., political worker, 380.
- Fletcher, E. B., postmaster at Morris, Ill., political worker and editor, 126, 186.
- Fletcher, I., appointed postmaster at Orlando, Fla., vice Delaney, removed on secret charges, 176.
- Fletcher, J., candidate for supervisor, see Buffalo, N. Y.
- Flickinger, S. J., editor, secures federal office for his brother, 301.
- Flynn, E. H., journalist, postmaster at Spencer, W. Va., 155.
- Flitten, A., political worker under Postmaster Johnson, in Maryland, 335.
- Floater, numbers of in Indiana, 78, 171.
- Flood, H., postmaster at Elmira, N. Y., 4, 53; political worker, opposes Platt and Fassett, 259; a political worker, 265, 266; removed for political reasons, denied permission to hear real charges, 297, 303, 304; removed, Rathbun appointed, 303, 304, 305; secret charges against, Rathbun appointed, 312; removed through influence of Fassett, 331.
- Flood, T. S., congressman, quarrels with Corporal Tanner over spoils, 54; names his brother postmaster at Elmira, N. Y., 51; obtains appointment of Conroy as postmaster at Watkins, N. Y., 150; opposes Fassett, 259, 303.
- Flora, Ill., Editor Reed appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Florence, Ind., Langsdale, postmaster of, political worker, 379.
- Florence, S. C., negro Wilson postmaster of, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Florida, chairman republican state committee of, rewarded, 30; political activity of federal officers in, 347, 348.
- Flow, E. S., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.
- Flower, R. P., as congressman, condemns congressional patronage, 204; candidate of Croker, Tammany "boss," for governor of New York, 245; governor of New York, worker for Hill, appoints Maynard judge, 309, 310; and Tammany, 319; removes Leacycraft, 332; votes for, as governor of New York, 352; and fish protection in New York, 356; suspends civil service rules in New York, 414.
- Floyd, low politician of Indianapolis, 207.
- Finishing, L. I., Carpenter, postmaster at, removed for political reasons, 91.
- Flynn, M. B., see Hill, 307.
- Foley, state senator of Indiana, votes against bill for non-partisan control of state charitable institutions, 201; spoilsman, opposes new charter for Indianapolis, see also Magee, 212.
- Folger, Commodore, praises merit system in Washington, D. C., navy yard, 331.
- Follett, J. E., address on civil serv. ref., 23; praises CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 110.
- Fontana, Kan., journalist, English postmaster at, 149.
- Fontanelle, Iowa, Editor Rany appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Foraker, Governor, and Ohio offices, 24, 336; civil service reform "all rot," 68; controls patronage in Cincinnati, 71; defeated, 75; and Senator Sherman, 249; opponent of Sherman, 297; charges federal interference in election of Sherman, 301, 302; and Ohio delegation at Minneapolis, 343.
- Forbes, C. S., journalist, appointed deputy internal revenue collector, 84, 126.
- Ford, candidate for postmaster of Pittsburgh, 91.
- Ford, T., see Hillism, 309.
- Fordham, C. H., negro, deputy coll. int. rev., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 318.
- Foreign service, see also consuls, 30.
- Forrester, G. B., politician, see Brooklyn, N. Y., 197.
- Fort Dodge, Ia., Postmaster Cain of forced to resign, 165; Carpenter, postmaster at, a political worker, 260.
- Fortune, A. H., postmaster at Bloomfield, Ia., removed, 175.
- Fort Wayne (Indiana), civil service reform sentiment at, 16; candidates for postmaster of, 15; should have civ. service law applied to local federal offices, 35; Postmaster Kaough of, under Cleveland, political worker, 88.
- Higgins, postmaster of, a political worker, 88, 153, 158, 362, 377, 378; and his deputy, political workers, 162; ordered to levy political assessments, 302; political worker for Harrison, 316; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 342, 379; has poll of taken by P. O. employes, 380.
- Gazette, opposes Harrison, 378.
- Poster, political worker, aided by Sen. Moody, 78.
- Foster, C., ex-gov., and Fostoria, O., post-office, 61, secretary of treasury, so-called resignations under of Macgregor, 216; ex-congressmen apply for office in treasury department under, patronage to be given only to republicans, 217; member Ohio Republican Association, 234; given patronage to turn Ohio from Blaine to Harrison, 240; and spoilsman, 250, 253, 251, 290; and Platt, 258; favors Platt, 261; advises Ohio office-holders to do "their duty," 280; defends Hendricks, collector, at N. Y. City, 289; establishes rules for promotion in treasury department, 298; suspends employes suspected of disloyalty to Harrison, 300; said to be interested in Toledo Commercial, 301; asked to remove democrats, 311, 312; and political assessments by federal office-holders in Kentucky and Baltimore, 330; and removal of Milholland and Murray, supporters of Platt, 332, 334; political worker for Harrison in Ohio; permits political activity of federal employes in Maryland convention, 335; and
- delegate from Utah; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 337, 338, 339, 345; political worker, 351; political worker for Harrison, 359, 360; and Baltimore investigation, 372.
- Foster, E., journalist, postmaster at Gladwin, Mich., 149.
- Foster, J. Ellen, husband of, rewarded with office, 56.
- Foulke, W. D., at Baltimore conference, 1889; address of on reform promises of republican party, 2, 4; declaration of impartiality of, 16; to examine management of federal civ. service, 77; address before Commonwealth Club, Dec. 16, 1889, 80; chairman investigating committee appointed by National League, 85; on Wanamaker's course in Shidy case, 103, 104; officer Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, 108; chairman's report on congressional patronage, 113, 114, 115; on committee investigating patent office, report of, 139, 140, 141; chairman committee of National League, on presidential post-offices, 162, 163, 161, 165, 166, 186, 188; work of, for good government, 173; chairman committee of National League reporting on removals on secret charges, 175, 176, 177; exposes evasive methods of Wanamaker, 190; address of, on civil service reform, "Its Later Aspects," 200; becomes president of Swarthmore College, 201; elected president Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, 239; address of, on civil service reform before Social Science Congress at Saratoga, 1891, 262, 263; on secret executive sessions of the senate, 264, 269; address of before annual meeting National League, 1891, 269; chairman special committee of National League investigating census service, 291, 295; before Boston Reform Club on broken republican pledges, 365, 371, 374; in 1884, 376, 385.
- Fountain, G. W., editor, appointed postmaster at New Carlisle, Ind., 126, 377.
- Four year term, bill of Martin, to limit all federal employes to, 404.
- Fowler, E. C., acting 1st asst. p. m. genl., letter of conditionally denying information regarding postmasters, 277, 297.
- Fox, E. P., efficient superintendent postal station at St. Louis, 131.
- Fox, R. L., chief clerk republican state committee of New York, 279.
- Frank, N., congressman, aiding office-seekers, 15; and Niedringhaus, correspondence over spoils, 22; says Harrison has ignored real workers and disorganized his party, 68.
- Frankfort, Ind., P. O. employes Irvin and Fletcher of, political workers, 380.
- Frankfort, S. Dak., Journalist Tapley postmaster at, 155.
- Frank Leslie's [repub.] advocates civ. service reform, 65.
- Franklin, Ind., Postmaster Browne asked to resign, 37, 377; opposition to postmaster appointed at, 88; Harris supported for postmaster of by Congressman Cooper, 398.
- Franklin (Ind.) College, sentiment favoring civil service reform at, 108.
- Franklyn Falls, N. H., Moore, republican congressman, recommends reappointment of democratic postmaster, 100.
- Frazee, W. D., ass't U. S. dist. att'y, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344, 348.
- Freeburg, Ia., Journalist Magee postmaster at, 149.
- Freedom, Ind., Suffall postmaster at removed for political reasons, Watts appointed, see also Cooper and Michener, 112, 377.
- Freeman, of Indianapolis, on secret charges system, 177.
- Freeport, Ill., Journalist Atkins appointed postmaster at, 126; active politician, 113.
- Frelinghuysen, sec'y, and Jewett claim, 290.
- French, collector internal revenue in New Hampshire, political worker, 143, 371.
- French, state senator of Indiana, relative of appointed page, 408.
- French, S. B., ward politician, see N. Y. City, 198, 199; ex-police commissioner, in N. Y. City, "The" Allen works for, 249.
- Frick, H. C., secures appointment of Patterson as postmaster at Uniontown, Pa., 99.
- Friedman, asst. secretary Indiana senate, 108.
- Friedsam, D., at Minneapolis convention, 314.
- Friel, P. H., political worker, 131.
- Frost, aided by patronage at navy yard at Kittery, Me, 147.
- Frothingham, E. C., customs examiner, active politician, 179.
- Fry, senator, keeps more employes in Portland, Me., custom house than necessary, 212.
- Frybarger, J., not to be postmaster at Noblesville, Ind., 47.
- Fulk, state senator of Indiana, spoilsman, 107.
- Fuller, J. C., appointed in Brooklyn custom house, 72; political worker for Nathan, see Kings Co., N. Y.
- Fuller, J. M., political worker for Harrison, 304.
- Fullerton, and postmastership at Colfax, Wash., 165.
- Fulmer, L., ward politician of Indianapolis, 205, 207.
- Fulton, J. M., inefficient census enumerator in N. Y. City, 294.
- Fulton, M. K., candidate for postmaster at Bucyrus, O., 149.
- Fulton, N. Y., Journalist Bennett postmaster at 155.

- Furlong, postmaster at Rochelle, Ill., 109.
 Furst, low political worker in Cincinnati, O., 352.
 Gabriel, "Bill," federal office-holder, political worker, 280.
 Gallagher, —, disreputable politician, 181.
 Gallagher, brutal policeman, see Tammany, 318.
 Gallagher, C. H., given federal office through influence of Higgins, 334.
 Gallagher, Major, an Indian rising at Pine Ridge, S. Dak., 218.
 Gallinger, senator, supporter of Blaine, 344.
 Gallup, police commissioner of N. Y. city, a Croker tool, 356.
 Galveston, Texas, Delegate Reutro, appointed collector of customs at, 46; Cuney, customs collector at, a political worker, 159; Cuney, customs collector at, 266; custom-house at, not classified, number of employes in, 277.
 Gamble, L. H., postmaster at Brooklyn, Ind., re-tention of asked, see Cooper, 112.
 Gandy, J. P., journalist, postmaster at Gandy, Neb., 149.
 Gandy, Neb., Journalist Gandy postmaster at, 149.
 Gano, deputy collector at N. Y. city, pays political assessments, 279.
 Gans, W. A., opponent to police justice Smith; see New York City, 198, 199.
 Gant, J. A., postmaster of Marion, Ind., at Minneapolis convention, 380.
 Gapen, P., treasurer insane hospital board at Indianapolis, corrupt politician, 206.
 Gardiner, postmaster at Troy, Ind., political worker, 380.
 Gardner, R. H., republican politician, works for re-appointment of democrat Morgan, postmaster at Newton, Mass., 224.
 Gardner, postmaster at Rochelle, Ill., succeeded by Furlong, 109.
 Gardner, W. E., journalist, given office, 84.
 Garfield, president, and Senator Conkling, 14, 88, 369; address of, before president at Williams College on congressional patronage, and article on spoils system in Atlantic Monthly, July, 1877, 114; murdered by disappointed office-seeker, 129; spoils system responsible for death of, 204; against patronage system in census service, 291; and Senator Conkling, 361; appoints Pearson postmaster at N. Y. city, vice James, appointed p. m. general, 367.
 Garland, attorney-general, 177.
 Garrett, Ind., Bicknell, postmaster of, political worker, 379, 380.
 Garret, J. J., negro, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344.
 Garrigus, M., corrupt politician, works for Pres. Harrison, but gets no office despite Cheadle, 88.
 Gaskin, appointed postmaster at Reelsville, Ind., 89.
 Gasper, "Joe," councilman and low politician of Indianapolis, see also Indianapolis, 207.
 Gasper, J. P., postmaster at Kingsley, Ia., forced to resign, 165.
 Gates, E. M., postmaster at Watertown, N. Y., furnishes political information, 392.
 Gates, M. E., president Amherst College, chairman Indian commissioners, urges reform methods, 205, 273.
 Gauss, C., ward politician of Indianapolis, see Parnell Hall, 191, 195.
 Gavisk, Father, favors civil service reform, 73.
 Gaylord, Kan., Journalist Headly postmaster at, 149.
 Gee, editor, opposes Harrison in Alabama, 346.
 Geer, collector of Port Huron, Mich., spoilsman, asks for special examination, refused, 36.
 Geneva, N. Y., civil service reform association of, 239.
 Genoa, Ill., Editor Hartman appointed postmaster at, 141.
 Georgia, federal officers in, candidates for congress, 162; political activity of federal officers in, 348.
 Gerard and Meyer, attempt to vote under false names of, see New York City.
 Gere, C. H., editor, applicant for postmastership at Lincoln, Neb., 72; appointed postmaster at Lincoln, Neb., 108; delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
 Gerrard, J., political worker, candidate for postmastership of Muncie, Ind., 217.
 Gest, obtains appointment of unworthy applicant as postmaster at Plymouth, Ill., 47.
 Gibbes, W. H., removed from postmastership at Columbia, S. C., 71.
 Gibbs, F. S., ward politician, see New York City, 199; notorious politician, and republican primaries, 241, 242; political worker opposed by Platt, places given to friends in of N. Y. federal offices, 265; notorious politician, Platt supports him by use of federal patronage, 287.
 Gibbs, W. B., postmaster of Jackson, Miss., active politician, 47, 348; delegate for Harrison at Minneapolis, 344.
 Gibson, L. H., address of, on "Relation of civil service to comfortable living in cities," 366.
 "Gift of offices," address on, by L. B. Swift, 145.
 Gilbert, C. H., commends CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 364.
 Gilbert, J. M., defeated candidate of Senator Hisecock, 132.
 Gildea, C. A., postmaster at Brackettsville, Tex., removed for political reasons; Ballantyne appointed, 186.
 Gilkeson, B. F., Senator Quay speaks for, 17; Quay's henchman appointed second controller of the treasury, 30; removes W. P. Montague for political reasons, 56; appointment of, 241; political worker for Quay, 270, 280.
 Gill, representative in Indiana legislature, opposes spoils methods in, 407.
 Gillette, A. B., candidate for postmaster of Hartford, Conn., favored by politicians, 84.
 Gilliland, J. A., postmaster at Allegheny, worker for Congressman Bayne, 135; supporter of Quay, suspected by Harrison, 299.
 Gillycuddy, Dr., and Indian rising at Pine Ridge, S. Dak., 218.
 Gilpin, L. L., applicant for postmaster at Portland, Ind., 88.
 Glinn, S. P., refuses office rather than agree to pay political assessments or be subject to Mahone, 72.
 Gladfelter, L. E., P. O. employe, see Baltimore investigation, 278, 312.
 Gladstone, W. E., and Irish home-rule, 228, 230, 244.
 Gladwin, Mich., Journalist Foster, postmaster at, 149.
 Glasgow, Scotland, city government of, 283, 284.
 Glass, H., P. O. employe, see Baltimore investigation, 268, 277, 295.
 Glazebrook, doorkeeper of Indiana house of representatives, and subordinates, 406, 407.
 Gleason, political worker, see Pine Ridge Indian agency, 218.
 Gleason, H., at Minneapolis convention, 344.
 Glen Hall, Ind., Mustard appointed postmaster at, vice Stepp, "resigned," 149.
 Glenn, postmaster at Cuba, N. Y., in N. Y. convention, 335.
 Glenn, J. C., U. S. marshal, a political worker, 160.
 Glenn, J., appointed U. S. marshal through influence of Judge Settle, his relative, 47.
 Glenn, W. J., journalist, postmaster at Cuba, N. Y., 155.
 Gloucester, Mass., Mansfield, postmaster of, 362.
 Godfrey, appointed postmaster at New Albany, Ind., makes a clean sweep, 45; works for Michener, 144; political worker for Harrison, 316; at Minneapolis convention, 377, 378, 380.
 Godkin, E. L., editor, at Baltimore conference, 1889, 2; arrested through Tammany, 314.
 Goelsing, H. H., candidate, makes spoils promises, 260.
 Goff, ex-representative, controls much patronage in West Virginia, 71.
 Gold, S. N., township trustee at Indianapolis, should refuse to remove F. Wright, 111; removes valuable officers, 146; defends his spoils methods; criticism of, 256.
 Golson, W. L., journalist, postmaster at Llano, Tex., 155.
 Gooch, aided by patronage of navy yard at Kittery, Maine, 147.
 Good Government, formed by merging Civil Service Record and Civil Service Reformer, 357.
 Goodale, Miss, friend of the Indians, 217, 218.
 Goode, —, city marshal, ward politician, see New York City.
 Goode, M., requests patronage, 311, 312; at Minneapolis convention, 344.
 Goodland, Ind., editor appointed postmaster at, 37.
 Goodland, Kan., Journalist Tait postmaster at, 149.
 Goodman, C., disreputable political worker for Gorman, career of, 307, 308.
 Goodrich, J. C., efficient postmaster at Short Hills, N. Jersey, removed; Grocer Kessler appointed, 386.
 Goodrich, W. W., political worker, see Kings Co., N. Y.; low political worker for Nathan, 288, 304.
 chairman Kings Co., N. Y., republican committee, 371.
 Gordon, postmaster of Auburn, Ind., political worker, 379, 380.
 Gore, of Boston, qualifications of office-holders according to, 45.
 Gorman, senator, and Maryland reformers, 2, 3, 5, 21, 28, 35, 43, 45, 68, 80; spoilsman, 92, 119, 170, 171, 175; "system" of in Maryland, 15, 161; secures appointment of democrat as postmaster at Laurel, Md., although a republican had been named, Wanamaker allowing Gorman's claim to control the place, 38; compared with Mahone, 67; would have lost control of Maryland but for Cleveland, 70; opposed to civil service law, 79; and ballot reform in Maryland, 87; controls patronage in Maryland, 93, 111; "boss" in Maryland, 172; secures office for Higgins, disreputable character, 181; spoilsman, and disreputable politician, 413, 281, 289, 298, 329, 213, 214, 245, 256; "appreciation" of in Maryland, 219; dreads office-holding aristocracy, 227; defends spoils system of Wanamaker; opposes Australian ballot system, 228; and patronage in census bureau; conspires with Mahone, 234; and Cleveland; as presidential candidate, 235; presidential candidate; gets office for low political workers, 236, 237; attacks civil service commission, 250, 251; and Ralsin, 251; controls federal and state patronage of Maryland, 254; boss in Maryland, 278; and his political worker, Goodman, 307, 308.
 Goshen, Ind., Editor Beyerle appointed postmaster at, 30, 126; Beyerle, postmaster of, political worker for Harrison, 316; Beyerle, postmaster at, 377; political worker, 378.
 Goss, editor, appointed collector of Barustable, 46.
 Gostonia, N. C., Jenkins postmaster of, Harrison delegate, 334.
 Gould, C. B., journalist, postmaster at Emporium, Pa., 119.
 Gould, Jay, gives bribes, 171.
 Gowdy, J. K., political worker for Harrison in Indiana, 302, 303; chairman Indiana republican state committee, and Halford, 360, 362; campaign fund circular of, 382; confers with U. S. Treasurer Nebeker, 370.
 Goyles, G. W., negro, Harrison delegate at Minneapolis, 344.
 Grace, mayor of New York City, and civil service reform, 82; obtains removal of Squire, see Hill, 307.
 Graceville, Minn., Journalist Brynildsen postmaster at, 149.
 Graham, political worker for Quay, 300.
 Graham, W., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.
 Grand Army Post at Woodhull, Ill., denunciation of Congressman Henderson.
 Grand Rapids, Mich., civil service commission at, 36.
 Grand View, Ind., Editor Knight appointed postmaster at, 126, 377.
 Grant, mayor, see New York City, and civil service reform, 82; tool of B. Cockran, 184; supported by Gorman, 214; of N. York on street cleaning, 220, 273; and Wilmer, 290; and Staats Zeitung, 317, 318.
 Grant, C. W., employe in Indian service, asked for political contributions, 385.
 Grant, President, indorsed for selection of commissioners under civil service act, 50; and Indian service, 182; accused of nepotism, uses offices as as bribes, 191; as general, 231; and charges against officials, 238; executive order of, instituting reform methods, 271, 274; and Fisher, 374, yields to spoilsman, 186, 308, 414.
 Graves, E. O., civil service reform under in bureau of printing and engraving, 32, 45; removed by Pres. Harrison, 52, 91, 173, 237, 282, 368, 376.
 Gravesend, N. Y., ruled by "Boss" McKane, 352.
 Gray, F., journalist, postmaster at Ivanhoe, Kan., 149.
 Gray, I. P., ex-governor of Indiana, 206; spoilsman, mentioned for presidency, 235, 244; as applicant for various offices, 396.
 Grayson, Ky., Journalist Littlejohn, postmaster at, 149.
 Greacen, R. A., supports Lee for place in N. Y. custom-house, 259; requests patronage, 311, 312.
 Greason, J. D., journalist, postmaster at Atwood, Kan., 148.
 Greaves, M. A., on selection of census enumerators in N. Y. City, 294.
 Green, F. V., reports to Mayor Grant on street-cleaning in New York; advises merit system, 220, 221.
 Green, G., supervisor of Brooklyn, N. Y., rendered insane by office-seekers, 45.
 Greenawalt, J. R., journalist, postmaster at Elkhorn, W. Va., 155.
 Greencastle, Ind., applicants for postmaster of, squabble among, Hays appointed, 7, 89.
 Greene, E. B., makes index for Civil Service Record, 237.
 Greene, J. M., tries to collect political assessments of employes in Indian service, 384.
 Greenfield, Ind., I. Davis, appointed postmaster at, vice Howard, removed, 89.
 Greenfield, Iowa, Editor Hunt appointed postmaster at, 142.
 Greenhalge, on house committee on civil service, 86; recommends re-appointment of Bancroft, postmaster at Concord, Mass., 91; favors civil service reform, see also Buttrick, 100, 123; upholds civil service commission, 204.
 Greenhow, W. H., postmaster at Hornellsville, N. Y., removed on secret charges, 176.
 Greenleaf, Kan., Journalist Bliss, postmaster at, 149.
 Greensburg, Ind., Hendricks, postmaster of, worker for Harrison, 316, 378.
 Greenwood, S. Dak., physician at Indian agency • at, leaves duty to engage in political work at times of sickness, 202.
 Greiner, postmaster at Terre Haute, a political worker, 153, 158; political worker for Harrison, 316, 377, 378; at Minneapolis, 342, 343, 346, 379; political worker, 379.
 Gresham, Neb., journalist Rhodes, postmaster at, 149.
 Gresham, O., son of W. Q., favors civil service reform, 227, 229; defeated as republican delegate, 302.
 Gresham, W. Q., supported at Chicago convention by Illinois, 7; letter of to Postmaster Pearson, referring to secret charges, 12; p. m. general under Arthnr, removes Vandervoort, 215, 216, 220; more popular than Harrison with republicans, 240, 302; and Harrison, 370; popularity of, in Indiana, 376, 377.
 Griffen, F. D., journalist, postmaster at Bangor, S. Dak., 155.
 Griffin, C. F., and political assessments in Indiana, 363; political worker for Harrison in Indianapolis, 379.
 Griffin, T., and janitors in Indiana legislature, 406.
 Griffith, president Indiana senate, spoilsman, 408.
 Griggs, S. I., federal officer, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
 Grimes, G. G., journalist, postmaster at Bairdstown, Ohio, 149.

Groesbeck, L., U. S. bank examiner, a political worker, 266.

Grogan, S., able superintendent of city delivery at St. Louis, 131.

Groner, V. D., federal officer, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.

Grosvenor, congressman, spoilsman, 68, 161; against civil service reform, 123, 178, 253; charges of, against civil service commission, 145, 146, 202, 203, 204; opposed to civil service law, 153, 178; and Roosevelt, 162.

Grosvenor, C. H., editor, given federal office, 301.

Grosvenor, D., makes political assessments, 161; federal office-holder and spoilsman, 178, 179; spoilsman, rewarded by Harrison, 237.

Gunby, E. R., collector at Tampa, Florida, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.

Gundlock, P., henchman of Filly, postmaster at Station A, St. Louis, 150.

Gunkle, F. W., deputy U. S. marshal in Iowa, a political worker, 260.

Gunner, J. H., active politician, appointed deputy of Collector Erhardt, 108; deputy collector in N. Y. custom house, a political worker, 268, 311; in New York convention, 335; at Minneapolis convention, 344.

Gwin, superintendent, and Craft, W. H., 12.

Habberton, J., address on "The Ideal Citizen," 98.

Habercorn, L. W., newspaper correspondent, appointed fifth auditor of the treas., 30.

Habernel, J. F., postmaster of Indiana House of Representatives, 406.

Hack, postal clerk, political worker, 144.

Hack, P. O. employe, political worker, 377.

Hackett, C. W., worker for Platt, chairman N. Y. state republican executive committee, 360, 361, 371, 388; requests lists of republicans from postmasters, 370; and political assessments, 382.

Hackney, D. G., worker for Hill, appointed fish commissioner of New York, vice Blackford removed, 310.

Hackney, W. P., disgust of with Kansas congressmen and senators, 15.

Haddam, Kan., Journalist Tarsel, postmaster at, 149.

Hagerstown (Md.), Herald [repub.], civil service reform advocated, 92.

Hahn, M., see Tammany, 318.

Hahn, W. M., chairman republican state executive committee, Ohio, asks political contributions, 280.

Haines, G. B., and stock fraudulently issued to Wanamaker, 246.

Haines, Wm., relative of Pres. Harrison, given office, 30.

Hale, Annie, wife of Journalist Hale, postmaster at Spring Valley, O., 149.

Hale, senator, controls patronage in Maine; keeps more employes in Portland (Me.), custom house than necessary, 242.

Halford, E. W., journalist, private secretary to Pres. Harrison, and applications for office, 6, 11, 163, 175, 282; and office-seekers, 37; secures appointment of brother-in-law and others, 38; goes home to vote, 180; and printing office, 234; brother of editor of Youngstown, O., Telegraph, supporting Sherman, 301; at Indianapolis, 360; political worker, 339, 340, 343, 377, 379, 382, 389; appointed paymaster in army, 414.

Halifax, N. C., Hannan, negro, postmaster of, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.

Hall (M. C.) denounces civil service law, 47, 49.

Hall, B. J., appointed patent commissioner, efficient, 140.

Hall, D. S., federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.

Hall, M. F., journalist, postmaster at Phillippi, W. Va., 155, 180.

Hall, T. A., subscribes for CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE for Y. M. C. A. of Illinois, 350.

Hallett, C. W., and Long Island City post-office, 100.

Halstead, M., nominated minister to Germany, editor of Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette, 14; on force bill, 169.

Hamilton, Gail, obtains appointment of E. A. Dimmick, consul to Barbadoes, 56.

Hamilton, Mo., Clarkson, N. C., appointed postmaster at, 150.

Hamlin, carrier, see Indianapolis post-office, investigation of, 28, 34.

Hammell, M. A., journalist, postmaster at Mullen, Neb., 149.

Hammond, postmaster of Booneville, Ind., political worker, 380.

Hammond, A. G., appointed postmaster at Wyoming, Ill., vice—, removed for political reasons, 176.

Hammond, F., see Baltimore investigation, 267, 296.

Hammond, Ind., postmaster at, inefficient, 90.

Hammond, T., congressman, patronage of, 410, 416, 117, 422.

Hammondsport, N. Y., Journalist Brown, postmaster at, 155.

Hampton, W., governor, pardons Smalls, convicted of bribery, 39, 104; senator, letter to Wanamaker on removal of Gibbes, postmaster at Columbia, S. C., 74, 190.

Hancock Co., Ind., appointments from, 71.

Hancock, T. R., editor, appointed postmaster at Neoga, Ill., 141.

Hanford, Cal., postmaster at removed, Editor Dodge appointed, 126.

Hanlon, M. A., treasury inspector, political worker, 287.

Hanna, federal officer, political worker for Harrison, 297.

Hannon, J. H., negro, postmaster at Halifax, N. C., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.

Hansbrough, patronage pledges of to secure election as senator from N. Dakota, 216; senator, supporter of Blaine, 314, 345.

Hanscom, I., and navy yard at Kittery, Me., 117.

Hardson, chief of division, removed for political reasons, 55.

Hare, Bishop and Rosebud, agency, Dak., 48; denies charges against Indian Agent McChesney, 130; alleges Indian abuses, 202.

Harig, "Bill," ward politician of Baltimore, 308.

Harlem, N. Y., Tammany street railroad scandal in, 317.

Harley, C., politician, census supervisor 5th Indiana district, 101.

Harlow, postmaster at Whitman, Mass., recommended for reappointment, 100.

Harlow, H., applicant for postmastership at Plymouth, Mass., 189.

Harlow, J. B., appointed postmaster of St. Louis, 88, 131; institutes reform methods, 136; conspiracy to remove, 226; ordered to give office to political worker for Harrison, 304.

Harmer, congressman and Quay, 241.

Harmon, G. W., promised place in Brooklyn custom house, see Wallace.

Harmony, acting secretary of navy, and Portsmouth, N. H., navy yard, 117.

Harn, G. V., editor, appointed sugar inspector, 301.

Harald, S. Dak., Journalist Besancon, postmaster at, 155.

Harper, G. W., editor, appointed postmaster at Robinson, Ill., 141.

Harper's Weekly, civil service commission under Harrison and Cleveland compared, 241; comparison of Cleveland and Harrison in regard to civil service reform, 338; on what to expect of Cleveland, 358, 359.

Harrigan, appraiser, resignation asked, 22.

Harrigan, sergeant-at-arms in N. Y. legislature; his patronage, 215.

Harrington, G. W., democrat, postmaster at Monson, Mass., recommended for reappointment, 188.

Harrington, Prof. M. W., appointed head of weather bureau, 215; favors civil service reform, 253.

Harris, A. W., customs inspector, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.

Harris, H. E., journalist, postmaster at Utica, O., 149.

Harris, Rev. J. A., at Baltimore conference, 1889, 2; favors clerical recognition of civil service reform, 48.

Harris, O. T., federal officer, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.

Harris, R. H., see Baltimore investigation, 267, 268.

Harris, S., supported by Congressman Cooper for postmaster of Franklin, Ind., 398.

Harrisburg Telegraph [rep.], civ. service reform a sham, 49.

Harrison, Pres., removes postmaster at Norwich (Conn.), without cause and appoints spoilsman, see Norwich, Conn.; nominates Wallace, spoilsman, to be postmaster at Indianapolis, 2, 3; and civil serv. rel. in letter of acceptance, 1, 4, 9, 69; and civ. serv. rel., has not made promises, 5, 10; appoints S. N. Chambers U. S. dist. att'y in Indiana, 7; as senator, remarks on evils of patronage, 9; inaugural address and civil serv. ref., 9; order of, postponing classification of R. R. mail service, 10; and Postmaster Pearson, 13, 41; disputes with senators over patronage, 14; number of appointments to April, 1889, 16; overrun with office-seekers, 16; congressmen dictate appointments, 17, 93; civil serv. commission appointed by, 17; "public duties" of, dispensing patronage, 18; census bureau under and civil serv. law, 19; and spoils system, 20; and Pearson, postmaster at New York, 20; and nepotism, 21, 30, 84; and R. R. mail service, 21, 22; cabinet of formed according to Senator May's demands, 22; gives patronage of Missouri to Kerens, 22; applicants to be treated with consideration, 24; and Vandervoort and Bagby, 25, 34, 211; not keeping promises in Indianapolis post-office, 26; gives patronage of N. York to T. Platt, 27; hastily removes Pennsylvania to Senator Quay, 27, 47, 135, 138; inability to satisfy spoilsman, 27; removes Indian commissioner Oberly, 27; cabinet of composed entirely of spoilsman, 27; removes Strauss, minister to Turkey; appoints "Sol" Illrsch, 29; removes postmaster at Jersey City without cause, 29; removes Postmaster Clark, of Jacksonville, Florida, for political reasons, 29; removes postmaster at Bridgeport before term expired, 29; removes Postmistress Clay, at Huntsville, Ala., without cause, 29; appoints Editor J. B. Stone collector internal revenue first Michigan district, 30; removes without cause head of assay office at Boise City, Idaho; appoints spoilsman, 30; rewards political workers; declares he will not cease appointments until offices are exhausted, 30; and Senator Cullom, 31; appoints G. P. Fisher, disreputable politician, first auditor of the treasury, 32; appoints D. M. Ransdall marshal District of Columbia, 34, 80; "discriminating test" of, 35, 36, 100; appoints White, editor and spoilsman, internal revenue collector, 37; appoints Robert Smalls, a convicted criminal, in face of well-known record and strong protest, 39; makes spoil of offices, 41; refusal of to have anything to do with Dudley, 41; searching examination of management of civil service by, promised, 41; refuses request of civil service commission to place census bureau under civil service law, 42, 88, 134; treatment of Indians by administration of, 12; civil service reform promises of, 43, 52, 61, 62, 63, 65, 292; rules of for appointment, 44; removals of postmasters under, 45; and collector-ship of customs at Chicago, 47; and Congressman Brower, 47; and postmasters, 49; removes Naval Officer Burt, 52; gives patronage of Virginia to Mahone, 27, 52, 70; rewards Tanner for services, and later removes him, 53; uses offices to affect elections in Louisiana, 54; appealed to by MacCourt, 54; removes Postmaster Curran of Hoboken, N. J., for political reasons, 51; gives office to T. B. Willis as a political reward, 55; appoints E. Nathan, low politician, collector int. rev. for Brooklyn (N. Y.) district, appoints Lyon surveyor of port, 55; not enough credit given to, for administration of civil service law, 59; appoints Throop, political worker, collector of Terre Haute (Ind.) district, 59; congratulated on appointments by Mass. republican convention, 63; administration tramples civil serv. rel. under foot, 64; denounced for violation of pledges, by national league, 1889, 66; appoints J. N. Huston U. S. treasurer, objects to giving him Indiana patronage, gives it to Michener, 67; denounced for abuse of civ. service, by H. C. Lea, 68, 111; can stop political assessments, 70; gives patronage of Louisiana to Congressman Coleman, 71; removes postmaster at Syracuse, N. Y., for political reason, 71; and postmaster at La Fayette, Ind., 71; and appointment of postmasters, 74; responsibility of, 75; as senator and spoils in Indiana, 75; attributes defeat in 1889 to disappointed office-seekers, 75; and distribution of patronage in New York, 75; letter to General Malson, 77; extract from message on civil service commission: postpones execution of order classifying R. R. mail service, 80, 81; as Sen., criticises Pres. Cleveland for bribing the press, 81; weakened by patronage, 83; must stand by the platform (see Winchester Herald), 83; appoints E. G. Hay, a friend, U. S. district attorney, 81; rewards A. D. Shaw, 84; unsatisfactory to republicans so far as patronage is concerned, 81; and civ. service law, 86; his test for office; postmasters at Springfield and Quincy, Mass., 86; and W. W. Dudley, 87; and Winamac, Ind., postmastership, 88; promotes J. B. Harlow to be postmaster at St. Louis, 88; as Sen. and Pres., and Garrigus, 88; and Mitchell, Ind. postmastership, 89; and Greencastle, Ind., postmastership, 89; criticised at Noblesville, Ind., 89; discontent with, 89; and post-office at Hammond, Ind., 90; and Baltimore postmastership, 90; and Massachusetts civ. service reform association, 92; memorial to from civ. service reform ass'n of Philadelphia, 92; civ. service reform in first year of, 94; and Collector Saltonstall, 94; and R. Williams, 95; appoints Clark collector at Chicago, 95; secret charges under, 96, 175; appoints Kinney postmaster at Hartford, Conn., 99; reappoints Lyman civil serv. commissioner, 103; letter to from W. Barker, protesting against Quay, 104; appoints Warmouth, ruffianly politician, collector at New Orleans, 105; nomination of, see Quay, 106; appoints Clements, political worker, pension agent at Chicago vice Mrs. Mulligan, 107; and appointment of examiners for pension office, 108; appoints Editor Fitch collector of internal revenue at Buffalo, N. Y., 108; conference with Congressman Hitt over post-office at Rochelle, Ill., 110; as senator, criticises Cleveland's course with regard to civil service, 119; and congressmen, 120; and patronage system, 76, 120, 173; spoils pledges of, 121; and postmastership of Stanberry, Mo., 121; requests aid for civil service commission, 122; and Garfield, 129, 130; removes Hendrix, postmaster at Brooklyn, N. Y.; offers place to political worker, 131; appoints Editor Von Bergman, 132; claims on, 132; condemned by Maryland Civil Serv. Ref. Assoc. for giving patronage to Quay, 136; appoints Mitchell patent commissioner, 140; abuses in Brooklyn navy yard under administration of, 142; complaints to of Warmouth, 143, 144; nominates Eaves; gives patronage of N. Carolina, 150; censured, 153; promotes Sherwood to be postmaster at Washington to succeed Ross, transferred, 153; and U. S. Attorney Chambers, 154; removes employes in Brooklyn navy yard, 155; praised; civil service methods advocated, see Indiana republican platform, 1890, 156; condemned for disregard of civil service law, see Pennsylvania, Indiana and New Hampshire platforms, 1880, 156; nominates democrat, Kirkpatrick, postmaster at North Hadley Falls, Mass., 157; nominates Eaves, a corrupt politician, 159; removals under; spoils system under, 159, 188, 269; gives patronage of Texas to Collector Cuney, 159; correspondence of with Foulke, W. D., over presidential post-offices, see also post offices, presidential, 163; good appointments of, 169;

- gives offices as rewards for party service, 171; a greater spoilsman than any predecessor, 174; as senator, speech in senate on iniquity of secret charges system: see Shelbyville, Freeman, De La Hunt, 176, 177; gives patronage to Sewell, 180; and McFarland, disreputable politician, 181; gives patronage of navy yard at New York to Fischer, 182; uses offices to gain remuneration, 183; and customs offices: Washington offices, 185; advised to appoint Avery postmaster at Plymouth, Mass., 187; removals under for cause, according to Clarkson, 188; secures control of Indiana republican state committee, 189; striving for renomination, 192; course of in Indian affairs: letter to Cambridge Civil Service Reform Association regarding, 86, 98, 102, 182, 202, 204, 205, 217, 219, 239; removes U. S. district attorney at Washington, D. C., 211; and Delphi (Ind.) Journal, 213; nominates W. R. Leeds, disreputable politician, as U. S. marshal in Penn., 216; appoints Mayor Ellis postmaster at Muncie, Ind., 217; silent regarding civil service reform, 220; order of putting part of Indian service under civil service law: forbids promotion without examination from unclassified to classified service, 221, 230, 231; should put navy yards under civil service law, 222; reappoints democrat, Sberlin, postmaster at Sandwich, Mass.; democrat, Morgan, at Newton, Mass., 224; federal office-holders interfere in primaries at Baltimore in behalf of, 225, 226; "Boss" Filley, of Missouri, works for, 226; and G. B. Raum, Jr., 228; Martin, appointed collector internal revenue, aids Quay to ruin ballot bill in Penn., 228, 229, 232, 233; and Roosevelt, civil service commissioner, 232; makes terms with Quay, 235; promotes Thompson, assistant postmaster at Indianapolis, to be postmaster; consequent promotions, 235; renomination of, reasons for and against; course regarding civil service reform, 237, 240, 238, 287; republican opposition to, workers for, 240; appoints W. H. Brooks collector internal revenue in Pa., vice Martin, resigned, 241; negroes do not get patronage under, 243, 244; gives patronage of New York to Platt, 245; workers for, 249; removes Stearns for political reasons, 250; reasons of for removal of Corse, postmaster at Boston, 251; patronage as used by, and party platform, 1888, 253; orders promotions in Washington offices made on competitive examinations under civil service commission, gives patronage of Maryland to republican machine, 254; accepts "resignation" of Erhardt, collector at N. Y. City, appoints Fassett to make clean sweep, 255; betrays civil service reform, 260, 282, 349; extensions of civil service reform under, compared to Dictator Balmaceda, 261; controls patronage, but it is a source of weakness, 262; appoints Flanagan, political worker, collector of customs at El Paso, 266; civil service commission is good under, 271, 272; precise scope of extension of civil service law in Indian service, under, 273; and R. R. mail service, extends civil service law to certain employees in Indian service, 275; and violations of law in Omaha post-office, 281; rewards Flanagan, 286; uses patronage in Indiana for renomination, 297, 316, 317; uses federal patronage in Pennsylvania and elsewhere to secure renomination, removes supporters of Quay, 298, 299, 301; and removal of Flood, postmaster at Elmira, N. Y., 303, 305; and Mahone "blackmailers," 305; compelled to give patronage, 311, 312; and independents, 313; commended and censured by National League, 321; political activity of federal office-holders under, 38, 350; and appointment of Martin, 351; gives patronage to Boss McKane, 352; and candidacy of Chase for governor of Indiana, 353, 354, 355; "ceaseless activity of," 357; not opposed to political assessments, 181, 358, 359, 360, 361, 362; seeks to reward Delegate Crum, negro, with postmastership of Charleston, S. C., 363; Senator Sawyer, chairman senate committee on post-offices, aids nomination of, 364; Julian on abuse of civil service under, 365; enforces civil service law "with vigor and impartiality," 366; appoints Leaycraft, political worker, 371; civil service reform under, 80, 371, 372, 373, 374; and Minneapolis convention, 375, 376; civil service reform under: should be defeated, 376, 389; and political activity of federal office-holders in Indiana, 376, 381, 383, 385, 386; buys renomination with offices, 387, 408; and extensions of civil service law, 388, 390; opposes appointment of Hanlon, 393, 395; civil service reform in annual message 1892 of, 397; extension of classified service under welcomed, 398, 402; classifies all free-delivery post-offices, and weather bureau service, 403; merit system under, 404; extension of civil service reform under, not urged by republicans, 405; administration of ruined by spoils system, 413, 411; appoints Private Sec'y Halford paymaster in army, 414; accused of bribing the press, 444.
- Harrison, Carter, appointed U. S. marshal by Pres. Harrison, his brother, 21, 30, 369.
- Harrison, E. G., appointed postmaster at Asbury Park, N. Y., vice Toland, 386.
- Harrison, Rev. H., Thanksgiving sermon of denouncing Clarkson, 193, 194.
- Harrison, H., commends CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 361.
- Harrison, J. C., father of Journalist H. Harrison, postmaster at Smithfield, O., 149.
- Harrison, J. P., postmaster at Lu Verne, Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Harrison, J. S., brother of Pres. Harrison, works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 339.
- Harrison, Neb., father of Journalist Davis, postmaster at, 149.
- Harrison, Russell, son of Pres. Harrison, influence of used for office-seekers, 38; political worker for his father, 189, 359, 378; solicits campaign funds for Pres. Harrison, 240; assists at dinner to Clarkson, 245; and Elkins, 290.
- Harrison, Dr. T. H., president of state benevolent boards of Indiana, a spoilsman, 206.
- Harrison, President W. H., the public press and spoils (in inaugural address), 17.
- Harrison, W. H., Pres., forbids political assessments and political activity of federal office-holders, 370.
- Harrison, W. H., Pres., on bribery of press, 376.
- Harry and Phila. post-office, 53.
- Harrodsburgh, Ind., Woodard, postmaster of, political worker, 380.
- Hart, H., alderman of New York City, see sale of offices under Tammany, 224, 225.
- Hart, M. L., journalist, postmaster at Ravenna, Kan., 149.
- Hart, T. N., mayor, Boston, signs petition for larger appropriation for civil serv. com., 102; ex-mayor, Boston, appointed postmaster at Boston, vice Corse, removed, 215; commended by Corse, his predecessor, 251.
- Hart, W. D., appointed postmaster at Meriden, Neb., vice McGinness, forced to resign, 166.
- Hart, W. H., third auditor, uses influence for appointment of Throop, 59; federal employe and printing office, 234; goes home "for rest," 362; political worker, 382; spoilsman, 112; and removal of Sufall, 377.
- Hartford, Conn., Kinney and Gillette, applicants for postmastership of, 84, 99; Bennett, postmaster of, and removal of Bario, efficient P. O. inspector, 298.
- Hartford City, Ind., Cable, postmaster of, political worker, 379.
- Hartley, A. H., appointed in post-office at Scranton, Pa., removed for political reasons, appointed to place in R. R. mail service, removed by Harrison, 101.
- Hartman, A., applicant for postmaster of Columbus, Ind., 89; postmaster of Columbus, Ind., at Minneapolis convention, 379.
- Hartman, D. W., editor, appointed postmaster at Genoa, Ill., 141.
- Hartong, A. W., druggist, candidate for postmaster at Rochelle, Ill., 109; postmaster at Rochelle, Ill., works for Hitt, 136.
- Hartshorn, S. N., political worker for Major McKinley, rewarded, 52.
- Hartwig, defeated congressional candidate, demands patronage, 99.
- Harvey, G., political worker for Harrison, deputy coll. int. rev. in Indiana, 302, 303, 316, 378.
- Harvey, J. W., appointed postmaster at Russellville, Ind., 89.
- Harwood, J. C., editor, appointed postmaster at Clarion, Iowa, 141.
- Hassler, Aug. E., journalist, postmaster at Pawnee City, Neb., 149.
- Hastings, General, opposes Delamater, 134, 143; candidate for governor of Pa., 249; political worker for Quay, 280.
- Hathaway, postmaster of house of representatives, makes removals at suggestion of congressmen, methods of, 242.
- Hatton, F., editor of Washington Post, and scramble for offices, 5, 76, 79, 92, 96, 161; spoilsman abuses Commissioner Roosevelt, 52; charges of against Commissioner Roosevelt, 101; and investigation of civil serv. com., 103.
- Havre, consul at, see Dnfals, 54.
- Hawes, J. W., and factional fights in N. Y., see New York, 241, 242.
- Hawkins, U. S. marshal for Indiana district, oppression by, 9.
- Hawley, Sen., supports Kinney as postmaster of Hartford, Conn., 84, 99.
- Hawley, Pa., Langham, postmaster at, removed on secret charges, 176.
- Hawthorne, Nat'l, removed from office, 46.
- Hay, E. G., friend of Harrison, recommended by Sen. Washburn, appointed U. S. dist. att'y for Minnesota, 84.
- Hayes, Pres., declaration in favor of civ. service reform, 50; letter of acceptance of, in favor of civ. service reform, 50; and loyalty, 75; pardons brother of D. Ransdell, 244; on evils of political assessment and political activity of federal officers, 265, 316; friendly to civil service reform; executive order of, instituting, 123, 271.
- Hayes, W. J., congressman, refused knowledge of reasons for removal of Evans, postmaster at Bloomfield, Ia., 175.
- Hayes, W. M., postmaster at Kingston, N. Y., political worker, 280.
- Haynes, —, attempts fraudulent voting in primaries, see New York City.
- Haynes, R. A., relative Pres. Harrison, given office, 38.
- Hays, J. M., appointed postmaster at Greencastle, Ind., 89.
- Headington, N., applicant for postmaster at Portland, Ind., 88.
- Headley, L. C., journalist, postmaster at Gaylord, Kan., 149.
- Healy, M. J., requests patronage, 311, 312.
- Heath, Rev. J. W., candidate for postmastership of Muncie, Ind., 217.
- Hebbard, C. A., editor, appointed postmaster at Roseville, Ill., 141.
- Hebring, H., customs collector at Geneseo, N. Y., at convention republican league, 259.
- Hecksler, removed on suspicion of being disloyal to Harrison, 300.
- Hedden, collector at New York, removals under, 183.
- Hedges, C., appointed chief of postal division of sixth auditor's office, Associated Press agt., 47.
- Heerman, C. A., and Mahone, 52.
- Heintz, L. J., street commissioner in N. Y. City, 234.
- Hellen, Mrs., appointed stamp clerk at Winston, N. C., through influence of Judge Settle, her relative, 47.
- Hemingford, Neb., Journalist Paradis, postmaster at, 149.
- Hench, representative in Indiana legislature, and spoils system in, 407.
- Henderson, congressman, upholds civil service law, 122, 125.
- Henderson, J. J., congressman, and postmaster of Woodhull, Ill., 47.
- Henderson, W., leader in tally sheet (see) prosecution at Indianapolis, favors civil service reform, 227, 229.
- Henderson, W., a leader in factional fight at Baltimore, 121; faction of, see Baltimore investigation, 268, 267, 277, 295; and Stone faction at Baltimore, 372.
- Henderson, W. E., political worker for Eaves, 159.
- Henderson, W. T., disappointed office-seeker, 144.
- Hendricks, delegate to Minneapolis convention from Alabama, opposing Harrison, 346.
- Hendricks, postmaster at Greensburgh, Ind., worker for Harrison, 316, 378.
- Hendricks, A. H., P. O. employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Hendricks, republican politician and spoilsman, and Gov. Hill of New York, 211; supporter of Senator Hiscock, 216; political worker for Hiscock and Platt; appointed collector at N. Y. City, 264, 266, 269; collector at N. Y. City; political worker, 279, 287, 354, 357; defended by Sec'y Foster (assessment case), 289; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 359, 360, 337, 343, 344; to lead campaign in New York, 347, 348; management of custom house by, 358; opposes Congressman Belden, 386.
- Hendricks, T. A., ex-vice-president, his place in politics, 244.
- Hendrix, efficient postmaster at Brooklyn, removed. Baird, politician, refuses appointment, 72, 131.
- Henkel, W., at Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Henry, J. A., journalist, postmaster at Jonesville, Minn., 149.
- Henry, J. J., republican, condemns removal for political reasons of Corse, postmaster at Boston, see also Civil Service Record, 213.
- Hensley, W. N., postmaster at Columbus, Neb., forced to resign, 166.
- Hepburn, solicitor of treasury, calls on Chairman Carter, 361.
- Hepburn, A. B., appointed controller of the currency, 371.
- Hepburn, W. P., federal office holder in Washington Co., Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Herbert, congressman, and political activity of federal office-holders in Alabama, 355.
- Herndon, Kan., Journalist Rathbone, postmaster at, 149.
- Herod, W. W., candidate for mayor of Indianapolis; declares himself one of the "boys," 269.
- Hess, J. W., worker for Harrison, 316; promises offices if elected, 378.
- Hewitt, mayor of New York City, and civil service reform, 82.
- Hicklin, councilman, and appointments to fire service of Indianapolis, 120; ward politician and spoilsman, 203; supports Fire Chief Webster, 207, 208.
- Hickok, Rev. Dr., on civil service reform, 83.
- Hicks, J., editor, office holder, 14.
- Higbee, representative in Indiana legislature, opposes spoils methods in, 407; and spoils methods in, 406.
- Higgins, A., Sen., appoints Hinchman postmaster at Bridgeville, Del., 38; obtains appointment of Fisher as first auditor of treasury, of Knowles as consul to Bordeaux, 38; political manipulator, 160; at Minneapolis convention, 344; aided by Cooper, collector at Philadelphia, 363; attempts bribery, 397, 401, 402.
- Higgins, E., and Cleveland administration, 25; appointment of condemned, 51; ex-office holder, benchman of Gorman, disreputable character, 181, 237, 314, 364.
- Higgins, E. R., candidate for postmaster at Ft. Wayne, Ind., 45; postmaster at Ft. Wayne, Ind., a political worker, 153, 158; ordered to levy political assessments, 302; political worker for Harrison, 316; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 342, 379; political worker, 372, 377, 378; orders P. O. employes to take poll of Ft. W., 380.
- Higginson, J. W., signs petition for larger appropriation for civil serv. com., 102.

- High, dictation of in Berks county, Penn., 47.
- Hildebrand, J. M., appointed surveyor of customs at Indianapolis, 38; a political worker, 144; denounced for political inactivity, 303; worker at Minneapolis convention, 379.
- Hill, representative in Indiana legislature, and spoils methods in, 406.
- Hill, congressman, favors civil service reform, 123.
- Hill, D. B., governor of New York, see Feudalism Revived; opposed to civil service reform, 82, 239, 261, 289; tools of, 196, 211; appoints "Paddy" Divver to a judgeship, 212; refuses requisition of Connecticut forger for political reasons, 214, 215; makes spoils bargains with Senator Hiscock, 216; workers for, oppose Fassett, by corrupt methods, 259; supporters of "knife" Cleveland, 282; Tammany leader, 298; career of, and Hillism, 305, 307, 309, 310, 311, 351, 396; defense of by Professor Collin, steals N. Y. legislature, 313; and Tammany, 317, 320; senator, gives Brooklyn bridge patronage to McLaughlin, 350; and fish protection at Lake Keuka, appoints saloon keeper Sheridan keeper at, 356; Kings co., N. Y., democrats, 356; imitators of in Indiana, 414; Sheehan, worker for, 415.
- Hill, F. B., negro, deputy collector internal revenue, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344, 348.
- Hill, J., negro, postmaster at Vicksburg, Miss., worker at Minneapolis, 343, 348.
- Hill, J. C., federal officer, resigns to do political work, 362.
- Hilliard, G., calls on Fassett, collector at N. Y. city, 258; at Minneapolis convention, 344; and cartage contract at N. Y. custom house, 358.
- Hills, W. C., journalist, appointed postmaster at Smithland, Iowa, 142.
- Hines, G. A., candidate for postmaster at Brattleboro, Mass., 100.
- Hirsch, L., editor, given office by Governor Foraker, 301.
- Hirsch, "Sol," the "Tom Platt" of Oregon, appointed minister to Turkey, 29.
- Hiscock, C., appointed through influence of Senator Hiscock, his brother, to office, vice L. D. Monery, 150; political worker for him, 264.
- Hiscock, F., Sen., spoilsman, 43, 353, 354, 360, 386; and postmaster at Syracuse, 16; obtains appointment of Smith, editor, as postmaster at Syracuse, N. Y., 71; notoriously corrupt, 71; and appointment of Von Bergman, 132; opposes appointment of Conroy, postmaster at Watkins, N. Y., 150; controls patronage in N. Y., gets office for his brother, C. Hiscock, 150; on performance of party pledges, 168; supports Merritt for postmaster of Lockport, N. Y., bargains for spoils with Hill, 216; recommends appointment of Wheeler, 241; patronage of, and factional fights against, 259; patronage of, secures office for brother, gives bribes, 264, 265, 266; indorses Payn, 312; supporter of Blaine, 341.
- Hitch, C. P., Harrison worker at Chicago convention, appointed U. S. marshal southern district of Ill., 30; political worker, 179.
- Hitt, congressman on civ. service law, 73; and his struggles in distributing patronage, see also Rochelle (Ill.), post-office at, 109; renomination of, 136; nominated, 137, 143; secures appointment of Asay, disreputable politician, 160.
- Hoar, Judge, recommends Bancroft postmaster at Concord, Mass., for reappointment, 91; indorses Postmaster Buttrick, 100.
- Hoar, Sen., letter to from Congressman Banks, asking aid for J. J. McCarthy, 31; letter of to Civil Service Record, declaring American people to be not yet aware of worth of civ. serv. ref., 43, 60; and Boston custom house, 71; and Collector Saltonstall, 94; controls census patronage in Mass., 104; thinks customs collectors should be in political harmony with president, 104; and removal of Saltonstall, 105; and Eaton, D. B., 111; on collectorship at Boston, 129; transmits letter of Cambridge Civil Service Reform Association to President Harrison, 205; and Corse, postmaster at Boston, 213, 357; requests retention of Corse, postmaster at Boston, 367.
- Hoar, S., opposed to civil service reform, according to Grosvenor, 203.
- Hobart, supporters of and Blunt, 150.
- Hobart, A., at Balt. conference, 1889, 2; and resolutions of Mass. Civil Service Reform Association, 1892, 398.
- Hobart, G. A., politician, surety for Fassett, collector at New York City, 258.
- Hobbs, purchases postmastership at Mitchell, Ind., see also sale of offices, 89.
- Hobbs, pension examiner in Indiana, political worker, 380.
- Hobbs, E. H., political worker, see Kings Co., N. Y.
- Hoboken, N. J., Postmaster Curran at, removed for political reasons, 54.
- Hodson, J. H., disappointed office-seeker, 144.
- Hoffman, F. N., given place in Indiana legislature, 406.
- Hogan, D., gains office through influence of Congressman Smith, 38; collector of internal revenue, a boss, 143.
- Hogan, M. C., U. S. supervisor of elections in New York, 390.
- Hohlt, W. H., politician, see Indianapolis, see also Parnell Hall, 195.
- Holcomb, state senator of Indiana, spoilsman, 408.
- Holderman, superintendent of fire telegraph at Indianapolis, refuses to teach intended supplanter, 235, 243.
- Hollowell, Me., removal of postmaster at, on secret charges, 39.
- Holman, congressman, renomination of, 37; congressman, patronage of, 393, 400, 411, 417, 419, 421, 422.
- Holman, bank examiner in Indiana, at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- Holmes, A. J., sergeant-at-arms of house of representatives, removes his deputy, Cavanaugh, for political reasons, 250.
- Holmes, L., republican member New Bedford (Mass.) city committee, seeks retention of democratic postmaster; correspondence with Wanamaker, 29, 176.
- Holt, S. R., politician of Indianapolis, opposes bill for new charter of; officer of new city government, see equally divided politically, 212, 213; on positions in city service being "equally divided politically," 220; examinations for police force under, 222; and city service, 228; appoints under "equally divided politically" rule, 235.
- Holton, I., supported by Congressman Cooper for postmaster at Plainfield, 399.
- Holyrood, Kan., Journalist Woodmansee, postmaster at, 149.
- Homilectic Review, October, 1889, and civil service reform, 65.
- Hooker, G. W., spoilsman, and Brattleboro, Mass., postmastership, 100.
- Hoopeston, Ill., Editor Warner, appointed postmaster at, 141; Postmaster Catherwood of, forced to resign, 165.
- Hope, Kan., Journalist Burroughs, postmaster at, 149.
- Hopkins (M. C.) on house committee on civil service, 86; indorses Hartong for postmaster at Rochelle, Ill., 109.
- Hopley, J., journalist, postmaster at Bucyrus, O., 149, 301.
- Hopper, F., nominee for council, see Indianapolis, see Parnell Hall.
- Hord, F., representative in Indiana legislature, opposes gerrymander of 1893, 414.
- Horn, C. W., Journalist, postmaster at Plain City, O., 149.
- Hornellsville, N. Y., removal of Greenbow, postmaster at, on secret charges, 176.
- Horr, J. F., collector at Key West, Fla., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Horseheads, N. Y., factional struggles against Platt and Fassett at, see Chemung Co.; Van Duzer, postmaster of, a political worker, 265; Postmaster Van Duzer of, and removal of Flood, 304; Chemung county democratic convention at, run by Hill workers, 309.
- Hotchkiss, A. C., Journalist, appointed postmaster at Adel, Iowa, 141.
- Honk, L. F., congressman, of Tennessee, opposed to civ. service reform, 35, 49, 54, 161; spoilsman, secures office for his son, 84; opposes civil service commission and reform, 124; charges of against civil service commission, 145, 146; opposed to civil service reform; sees evils of spoils system, 177, 178.
- Houk, J. C., appointed through influence of his father, 84.
- House of Representatives, Hathaway, postmaster of, spoilsman, removals under, 242.
- Honston, R. L., postmaster of Birmingham, Ala., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Hovey, A., governor, of Indiana, 17; of Indiana, appoints farmer as mine inspector, 192; on investigating insane hospital scandals at Indianapolis, 206.
- Hovey, C. J., son of Gov. Hovey, appointed postmaster at Mt. Vernon, Ind., 71; postmaster, etc., at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- Howard, Gen., on Indian abuses, 182.
- Howard, J., ward politician, see Indianapolis, 196.
- Howard, N. P., postmaster at Greenfield, Ind., removed, 89.
- Howard, R., signs petition for larger appropriation for civil service commission, 102.
- Howard City, Mich., Journalist Lowrey postmaster at, 149.
- Howarth, —, journalist, appointed census enumerator, 142.
- Howe, H. H., federal employe, pays political assessments, 279.
- Howell, chief of division, removed for political reasons, 55.
- Howell, J. C., commandant navy-yard at Kittery, Me., 147.
- Howel, W. A., nominated to be postmaster at Milwaukee, vice Paul, resigned, 47.
- Howell, W. C., relative of President Harrison given office, 90.
- Howells, J. J., editor, appointed postmaster at Jefferson, Ohio, 301.
- Howland, W., candidate, charges political activity of federal employes, 179.
- Hoysradt, state senator of New York, corrupt politician, see Hill, 307.
- Hoyt, governor of Pennsylvania subject to Quay, 151.
- Hoyt, W. E., brother-in-law of President Cleveland holds office, 150.
- Hubbell, J., congressional campaign, 1882, 272; campaign and Curtis, 386; and political assessments, 373, 390.
- Huber, Pa., postmaster at, see Brosius, 72.
- Hudder, J. H., journalist, appointed postmaster at Aurora, Ill., 126.
- Hudson, state senator of Indiana, votes against bill for non-partisan control of state charitable institutions, 201; low politician and spoilsman, opposes new charter of Indianapolis, see, also, Magee, 211.
- Hudson, postmaster of Corydon, Ind., political worker, 379, 382.
- Hudson, J. S., delegate to republican national convention, secures removal of Dner, postmaster at Princess Anne, Md., and appointment of Lankford, 408.
- Hudson Co., N. Y., factional democratic fights in police aid Davis faction, 199, 200.
- Huey, lawyer, and stock fraudulently issued to Wanamaker, 246.
- Huffer, S. W., candidate for postmastership at Muncie, Ind., 217.
- Hughes, asst. postmaster of Philadelphia, political worker for Quay, 270, 280.
- Hughes, A. M., leads Tennessee delegation for Harrison, 341.
- Hughes, E. N., applicant for Winamac, Ind., postmastership, 88.
- Hughson, J., given office through influence of Priv. Sec. Halford, 38.
- Huginir, appointed postmaster at Newport, Minnesota, 21.
- Hugo, V., on America, 210.
- Hulett, W. L., doorkeeper in Indiana senate, 408.
- Humphrey, mayor of Concord, N. H., 143.
- Hungerford, J. B., journalist, appointed postmaster at Carroll, Iowa, 141; a political worker, 260.
- Hunt, and office-seekers, 38.
- Hunt, police judge of Manchester, active politician, 143.
- Hunt, C. B., editor, appointed postmaster at Greenfield, Iowa, 142.
- Hunt, W. L., editor, appointed postmaster at St. Clairsville, O., 301.
- Hunter, commissioner, spoilsman, 315.
- Hunter, J. T., asks for financial "suggestions," 383.
- Hunter, N. Y., Journalist Casteright postmaster of, 155.
- Hunter, R. H., internal revenue collector in New York, a political worker, 265.
- Huntertown, Ind., Latham, postmaster at, removed through influence of Postmaster Higgins, Dunton appointed, 362.
- Huntington, Bishop, advocates civ. service reform, 40, 82.
- Huntington, Ind., Editor Bntler, appointed postmaster at, 126, 377; Rogers, postmaster of, at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- Huntsville, Ala., Clay, Mary, postmaster at, removed without cause.
- Hurst, S. H., editor, given office by Governor Foraker, 301.
- Husted, speaker, secures nomination of Pentreath for postmaster of Yonkers, N. Y., 150; chairman republican executive committee of New York, 279; corrupt politician, see Hill, 307.
- Hustou, G. N., 7, 78, 85, 96; treas. of U. S., 14; chairman Indiana republican state committee; controls patronage of Indiana, 67, 112, 121, 154; obtains office for Scanlon, for political services, 132; of national republican committee, 359; worker for Harrison, and distributor of patronage, 377; and political assessments, 382, 383.
- Iyat, J., efficient officer in house of representatives, removed for political reasons through influence of McPherson, 84.
- Iches, editor, appointed postmaster at Newark, O., 301.
- Idaho., governor of officially compliments management of assay office at Boise City, whose chief removed without cause by Harrison, 30; Boise City, head of assay office at removed without cause, 30.
- Idding, pension examiner in Indiana, political worker, 380.
- Ide, C. E., defeated candidate, 132; politician, 386.
- Illig, police commissioner at Buffalo, works for Trautmann; uses intimidation, see Buffalo, N. Y., 197.
- Illinois, see also convention, platform.
- Illinois, congressmen of and offices, 6; senators of and President Harrison, 6; delegation and the offices, 7; congressmen and offices, 15; delegation from, favoring appointment of Asa Matthews as first comptroller, 21; congressmen of and Chicago post-office, 22; removals in, 22; Bloomington, examination at, 26; postmasters in democratic congressional districts appointed through influence of Sen. Cullom, 30; Harrison worker appointed U. S. marshal for southern district of, 30; Congressman Cannon of, spoilsman, 30; Senators Cullom and Farwell and Wilcox matter, 31; congressmen and senators of refused control of patronage by Harrison, 240; political activity of federal office holders in, 335, 336, 344; CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE to be sent to Y. M. C. A. of, 350; Governor Altgeld of flees from office-seekers, 415.
- Impeachment, President liable to, for abuse of civil service, 17.
- Independent, on resignation of Quay as chairman National Republican Committee, 257.
- Indian commissioner, Butler, low politician, recommended by congressmen for, 14; Oberly removed by Pres. Harrison, 27; Morgan, 38; Morgan favorable to civil service reform, asks re-

- tention of his predecessor, 44; Morgan upholds Harrison's Indian policy, 202.
- Indian commissioners declare Indian service in better condition than ever before, 205.
- Indian Rights Association, 42; and abuse of Indian service, 86; seventh annual report of on Indian service, 102; refused knowledge of cause of removal of Vandever, 181; efforts of, 182; conference 1891 favors application of civil service reform methods to Indian service, 288; report of commissioners condemning spoils system in Indian service, 308.
- Indian schools, Dorchester, commissioner of, 38.
- Indian service, extension of civil service law to, advocated, 10; Junkin, W. W., appointed inspector in, 14; congressional patronage and, 36; rules of Commissioner Morgan concerning tenure of office in, 44; letter of Welsh favoring civil service reform in, 47; evils in, 86; spoils system in, 94, 173, 192, 308; "home rule system of Pres. Harrison, 102; disgrace of, Pres. Grant and, see A Century of Dishonor, 182; gross abuses in, correspondence regarding, see Morgan, Harrison, Cook, Cambridge Civil Service Reform Association, 202, 204, 205; in better condition than ever before, see Indian commissioners, proposal to extend civil service law to agency clerks and employes in, 205; removals in under Cleveland and Harrison, 217; places in given as spoil, see Pine Ridge, 218; H. Welsh on removals in, Capen on removals in under Cleveland, 219; partially put under civil service law by Pres. Harrison, 221, 273, 372; evils of spoils system in, H. Welsh on, in Scribner's magazine for April, 1891, 224; used as spoils by Sec. Noble, 226; merit system introduced in, 230, 251, 289, 321; debauched by Harrison, 237, 376; spoils system in, H. Welsh on, 239; extension of merit system to commended, 286; thorough application of reform to demanded, 288; political assessments levied on employes in, 375, 384, 385, 383; examiners for 1891-92, 397.
- Indiana, see also Convention, Platform.
- Indiana, civil service reform in under Cleveland's first administration, 1; democratic party in, civil service reform, 8; number of postmasters appointed in, from March 4 till July 20, inclusive, 1889, 34; rotation in office in, 45; moral republican organ of thinks neither party cares about civil service reform, 62; fourth class post-offices used to strengthen republican machine in, 67; Huston chairman republican state committee, 1888, 67; federal offices in, used to make a machine, 68; reform sentiment in, 93; state university of, civil service reform sentiment at, 108; distribution of spoil in causes republican defeat, 111; republican congressmen of, and spoils, 112; status of merit system in, 119; state civil service in, devoted to spoils, 137; 20,000 floaters in, 171; patronage of given to Michener, 173; republican club, for spoils, see Curry, 181; republican factions fight over chairmanship of state committee, 189; bribery by republicans advised in, 190, 191; farmer appointed mine inspector of, by Governor Hovey, 192; state federation of trade and labor unions of, demand non-partisan control of state institutions, see Magee, 201; foundation of state board of charities of, opposed by State Senator Burke for not being partisan, 201; Magee bill for non-partisan control of state charitable institutions, defeated, 201, 202, 208, 209, 210; Dr. Harrison, president of state benevolent boards of, a spoilsman, 206; text of Magee bill authorizing board of state charities to regulate employment of officers of benevolent institutions of, according to merit system, 208, 209; illegal and spoils appointments made in state senate, spoils system and scandals in hospitals of, 211; 212; Magee bill for non-partisan control of state charitable institutions discussed, 214, 215; "boss" ridden, 219; civil service reform popular in, federal, state officers and citizens, favoring, 227; school children of, never speak on questions of public policy, 236; opposition to Harrison in, 240; federal officers in, political workers for Harrison, 260; under Cleveland given over to spoils, 282; federal patronage in, 297; federal patronage used in, for re-nomination of Harrison, 302, 303; central and southern hospitals for insane, evils of spoils system in, 315; Harrison uses federal patronage in, for re-nomination, 316, 317; spoils system in, civil service reform the proper issue, 322; political activity of federal office-holders in, 334, 337, 340, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 352, 353, 354, 362, 370, 374, 375, 382, 387, 389, 390; Chase, favored by Harrison for governor of, 343; Hill men of, defeated at Chicago convention, 350; state republican committee assesses candidates for office, also pension office at Indianapolis, 363; democratic politicians of, spoilsman, 365, 366; report to committee of National League, on political activity of federal office-holders in, 375, 381; republican state committee of, levies political assessments, 387, 392; democrats aspiring to office, 387, 392, 395; good results of secret ballot in, 389; applicants for office in, under Cleveland [2d term], 392, 394, 399, 401; spoils system in, legislature of 1893 under, 405, 408, 414; applicants for office in, under Cleveland [2d term], 409, 411; applicants for office in, under Cleveland [2d term], 415, 422.
- Indiana, civil service reform association of, 67, 88; membership of, 4, 9, 17, 25, 41; annual addresses at, 7; membership of, 41; announcement of annual meeting 1890, 85; annual meeting of 1890, list of officers, 108; notice of annual meeting, 111; annual meeting 1890, address of Bonaparte, C. J., 119, 120, 126, 127, 128; and Clarkson, 131; work of, 173; Bloomington branch of, 182; exposes scandals of partisan management of state charitable institutions, 214; annual meeting 1891; W. D. Foulke elected president of, 227, 239.
- Indiana School Journal and CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 13.
- Indiana Co., Penn., political fights in, 133.
- Indianapolis, municipal service in, 2; post-office at, 2, 9, 18, 34; post-office at under Cleveland, 5; civil service reform in fire department of, 13; Wallace, postmaster of, violates civil service law, 28, 73; post-office at, spoils system in, 26; post-office, investigation of by civil service commission, 27; list of eligibles at post-office at, 29; Fire Chief Webster of removed for political reasons, 36, 69; Hildebrand appointed collector of customs at, 38, 68; composition of local examining board at, examination at, 42; employees in post-office at exempt from examination, 42; Postmaster Wallace at and local board, 43, 48; post-office at under Postmaster Jones, 45, 51, 53, 80; Commissioner Roosevelt at, 46; agent of associated press at given office, 47; list of eligibles for post-office of, 48; questions used in examination at, August 6, 1889, 51, 56, 58; city election influenced by removal of Fire Chief Webster, 59; civil service commission and post-office of, 59; non-partisan appointments in post-office at, 87; post-office at, no removals in except for cause, fairness of examination in, 94; examinations for physicians in city hospitals, 107; deputies in custom house as political workers, 108; civil service reform in township trustee's office at, 111; charity organization of, 111; excellence of examining board at, 120; vacancies in fire department of, civil service methods advocated for, 120; appointments to census service in made through M. Moores, 129; in efficient census enumeration at, 132; control of offices in fire service at, 137; Postmaster Wallace of, secretly a political worker, 144; Township Trustee Gold removes efficient officers, 146; examinations for postal service in, passed by negro, 146; federal office-holders at, state convention at, 153, 158; spoils system in, township embracing, 171; spoils system in, for city laborers, 181; per cent. of removals in, classified and unclassified service in, post-office at, 185; personnel of examiners at, civil service law observed rigidly in post-office at, 186; commercial club of, and proposed charter of, Indianapolis, 104, 189, 190; methods used in, "primaries" in, 192; patronage of state insane hospitals at, controlled by Markey, ward politician of Indianapolis, 195; Social Turn-Verein of indorses Magee bill for non-partisan control of state charitable institutions, 201, 209; efforts against spoils system in city departments, 202, 203; local politics and career of corrupt politicians in, tally-sheet forgeries in, 205; 206, 207, 208; bribery by street railway company of, 206, 207; fire service at, efforts to turn over to spoils, 207, 208, 235; wholesale removals of employes in fire and police service of, see equally divided politically, 212, 213; new charter for government of, its passage, provisions and faults, new officers under, see equally divided politically, 212, 213; examinations for clerks and carriers in post-office at, 218; death of Postmaster Wallace of, a loss to the public service, 219; trouble arising from positions in city service being "equally divided politically," street cleaning service of, 220, 221; city assumption of various important functions condemned while spoils system exists, see equally divided politically, 220; system of appointment to police force of, compared with those of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Boston, Mass., see equally divided politically, 222, 223, 224; Thompson acting postmaster at, favors civil service reform, 227, 229; need of examinations and civil service reform in city service at, see equally divided politically, 228; adherent of Coy. disreputable politician elected president of council of, 228; post-office under merit system, 230; promotion of Thompson ass't postmaster at to be postmaster, and consequent promotions, 235; spoils system in city government of, merit system required for all city departments except police and fire, see charter, 243; examination for places in post office at, to be held August, 1891, 243; number of applicants at examinations held August, 1891, for carriers and clerks in post-office at, 253; Gold, township trustee at, defends himself for spoils methods, criticism of, 256; election of Sullivan as mayor of, over Herod, by independent votes, board of public works and controller of, commended, 269; city services in turned over to spoils, 289; Phipps, efficient employe in city service of, removed for political reasons, 297; Postmaster Thompson of, and other federal officers at, political workers, 302, 316, 317, 320, 378, 382; tally sheet frauds in, 313; spoils in city and county offices at, 314, 315; board of public safety of, 317; examinations for physicians for city hospital, 322; Thompson, postmaster of, subordinates work for Harrison at Minneapolis, 337, 343, 379; need of Boston labor service in, 357; Moores, republican politician, attempts to coerce Thompson, postmaster at, 366; Dunn, P. O. employe at, removed for soliciting political contributions of other employes at instance of Democratic Committeeman Backus, 403, 411, 412; Congressman Bynum allows Turpie to name postmaster of, 405.
- Indianapolis, Catholic Record advocates civil service reform, 76.
- Indianapolis Journal (rep.) on Indianapolis post-office, 9; declares civil service reform not a moral question, 56; strongly advocates civil service reform, 65; interview on political ingratitude, 181, 182; defends census appointments, 182; and bribery by republicans in Indiana, 191; on corrupt politics and politicians of Indianapolis, see also Indianapolis, 205, 206, 207; accounts of spoils fights in various places, 217; on Roosevelt dinner, see at Indianapolis, 232; on independents, 313; on use of patronage to secure re-election of a President, 348; on use of patronage by Harrison to secure renomination; by Cleveland, 250.
- Indianapolis News (independent), and civil service reform, 11; and CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 13; attributes republican defeat of 1889 largely to patronage system, 76; on Clarkson and Maryland republican clubs, 154; on political assessments, 183; account of nominating caucus, see Parnell Hall, 194, 195; on corrupt politics and politicians of Indianapolis, 205, 206, 207, 208; on rush for office under new city government of Indianapolis, see equally divided politically, 213; an independent journal, opposes spoils system, 331; on the "mugwump," 351.
- Indianapolis Sentinel (dem.) and CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 13; complaints against violations of civil service law in Indianapolis post-office, 27; supports Magee bill for non-partisan control of state charitable institutions, 201, 202, 209, 210; on corrupt politics and politicians of Indianapolis, 207, 208; condemns democratic antagonism to Magee bill for non-partisan control of state charitable institutions, 215; accounts of spoils fights in various places, 217; on Roosevelt dinner at Indianapolis, 232; commended, 269; favors civil service methods in Indiana state institutions, 350; on what to expect of Cleveland, 358.
- Indianapolis Taglicher Telegraph, condemns opposition to Magee bill, see also Magee, 209.
- Ingalls, Senator, spoilsman, 5, 17, 27, 43, 65, 85, 161, 192, 211; Kansas and office seekers, 6; senator and President Harrison confer over offices, 22; correspondence with H. Welsh over Indian commissioner, 22; opposed to civil service reform, 49; and civil service law, 51; on purity in politics, 119, 130, 145; retracts statements on purity in politics, 190; guilty of nepotism in District of Columbia offices, 215.
- Ingraham, Judge, and Dutchess co., N. Y., election frauds, 306.
- Inspectors, post-office, requirements of, 193.
- Interior Dept., and request for census recount in N. Y. City, 294.
- Iowa, number of appointments in by Clarkson, 45; Editor Weinstell appointed collector of fourth district of, 56; republicans of denounce civil service law and demand its repeal, 62; spoils system in given full swing with disastrous results, 67; reform in, 111; political assessments made by republican state central committee of, 240; federal officers at state republican convention 1891, 260; becoming democratic, 281; political activity of federal office-holders in, 346, 382.
- Iowa State Register and Junkin, W. W., 14; Clarkson's paper and examinations, 49.
- Irvin, P. O. employe at Frankfort, Ind., political worker, 380.
- Irvin, judge, and "tally-sheet" forgeries at Indianapolis, see Indianapolis.
- Irwin, uses influence for appointment of Throop, 59.
- Irwin, D. W., journalist, appointed postmaster at Akron, Cal., 126.
- Issues, permanence of, other reforms should be subordinate to civil service reform, 214, 220.
- Ithaca, N. Y., Robinson postmaster of, political worker for Platt, 264.
- Ivanhoe, Kan., Journalist Gray postmaster at, 149.
- Ives, H. S., see Hillism, 309.
- Ivins, W. M., exposes methods of Hill, 307.
- "J. S.," advertisement of, offering to buy office, 22.
- Jackson, President, and bribery of press, 17; spoilsman, 20, 43, 105; and postmasters, 49; cabinet of, 63; offices under, a perquisite of the Executive, 115; and the civil service, 125; spoils system attributed to, 262; Webster condemns spoils system under, 270, 271.
- Jackson, J., ass't U. S. att'y, delegate to Minneapolis, 348.
- Jackson, Miss. Gibbs postmaster at, 47; Gibbs postmaster of, Harrison delegate to Minneapolis, 344, 348.
- Jackson, O. L., votes for, bought away, 151.
- Jackson Court House, W. Va., Journalist Deen postmaster at, 155.
- Jacksonian rotation, see Clark, 257.

- Jacksonville, Florida, Postmaster Clark of, removed by Pres. Harrison, 29.
- Jacobi, Dr. A., withdraws from N. Y. City health dept., because it becomes political machine, 356.
- Jacobs, J. L., federal employe, political worker in New York, 336.
- Jacobs, L., and cartage contract of N. Y. custom house, 358.
- Jacobus, J. W., U. S. marshal, assists at dinner to Clarkson, 245; a political worker, 265; in New York convention, 334, 370; appoints "floaters" as deputies, 387.
- James, postmaster at New York, 32; ex-postmaster-general testifies to worth of Postmaster Hendrix at Brooklyn, N. Y., 131; postmaster at New York appointed P. M. gen'l by Garfield, 367.
- James, C. G., employe in N. Y. post-office, a political worker, 265.
- James, J., applicant for Winamac, Ind., postmastership, 88.
- Jamestown, Kan., Journalist Barton postmaster at, 149.
- Janeway, Dr., resigns from N. Y. City health department because it becomes political machine, 356.
- Jasper, Minn., Journalist King postmaster at, 149.
- Jefferson Co., N. Y., factional fights in republican primaries of, political activity of federal office-holders, 264; postmasters and other federal employes in, political assessments levied on, 391, 392.
- Jefferson Co., Pa., bribery in, by republicans, 133.
- Jefferson, O., Editor Howells appointed postmaster at, 301.
- Jefferson, T., "four-year" law on, 45, 46; on nepotism, 46; and the civil service, 125.
- Jeffersonville, Ind., the civil service in, see New Albany Tribune, 83; Postmaster Luke of, 88; anti-Harrison worker appointed internal revenue collector for, 302.
- Jeffersonville (Ind.) News, on Magee bill for non-partisan control of state charitable institutions, 215.
- Jenckes, of Rhode Island, see Eaton, 105.
- Jenckes, Rev. Dr., favors civil service reform, 73, 227, 229; a partisan, 137, 138.
- Jenkins, L. L., postmaster at Gastonia, N. Carolina, delegate for Harrison, 334.
- Jenkinson, I., editor, appointed postmaster at Richmond, Ind., 126, 377; works for Harrison, 249.
- Jenks, corporation counsel at Brooklyn, N. Y., exposes methods of McLaughlin, 318.
- Jenks, J. W., Prof., civil service reformer, 182.
- Jennings, C. E. M., editor, disappointed office seeker, opposes Sherman, 301.
- Jersey City, N. J., postmaster at removed without cause, 29; per cent. of removals in classified and unclassified service in post-office at, 185.
- Jessup, M. K., reports to Mayor Grant on street cleaning in New York, advises merit system, 220, 221.
- Jewell, W. R., editor, appointed postmaster at Danville, Ill., 141; political worker, 160.
- Jewett, appointed postmaster at Oregon, Ill., see Hitt, 109.
- Jewett claim, and Elkins, 290.
- Jewett, C. W., employe in Indian service, asked for political contributions, 385.
- Johnson, chief of division, removed for political reasons by Conlter, 55.
- Johnson, postmaster at San Antonio, a political worker, 159.
- Johnson, Congressman, patronage of, 419.
- Johnson, representative in Indiana legislature, opposes spoils methods in, 407.
- Johnson, Pres. Andrew, and scramble for offices, 24; appoints Elkins U. S. dist. att'y in N. Mexico, 368; spoils since, 413, 414.
- Johnson, C. F., editor, appointed consul-gen'l to Frankfort-on-the-Main, 301.
- Johnson, C. H., see Baltimore investigation, 267, 268.
- Johnson, E. A., negro, Harrison delegate from N. Carolina, 334.
- Johnson, F. W., sale of office to by Porter, D. E., 154.
- Johnson, G. W., P. O. employe, see Baltimore investigation, 296.
- Johnson, H. C., letter advocating civil service reform to Postmaster Richensteen at L. I. City, 100.
- Johnson, H. U., congressman elect, distributes patronage, 217.
- Johnson, U. S. district attorney at N. York, takes part in political squabbles, 106, 198, 352, 371.
- Johnson, J., U. S. district attorney, works for retention of Boyle, 142; U. S. dist. att'y at Brooklyn, N. Y., a political worker, 265; U. S. dist. att'y in New York convention, 335.
- Johnson, J. B., on local examining board at Milwaukee, 103.
- Johnson, J. H., on "The Merit System of Appointing City Officials," 162.
- Johnson, J. H., conditionally refused access to records of removals in postal service, 163.
- Johnson, J. H., distributes Curtis address of 1892, 329, 338.
- Johnson, J. L., passes civil service examinations for incapable applicant, 238.
- Johnson, Kan., Journalist Webster postmaster at, 149.
- Johnson, M., revenue collector, bets on Harrison, 344.
- Johnson, R. M., efficient postal employe at St. Louis, 131.
- Johnson, T. B., collector at Charleston, S. C., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Johnson, W. J., postmaster at Manchester, Mass., removed after four years service, second commission unexpired, 187.
- Johnson, W. W., politician, appointed postmaster at Baltimore, Md., 90; conducts factional fights, 121; removals under without cause, charges against filed, 137; political worker, 144, 357, 372, 373; works for Harrison in primaries at Baltimore, Md., 225, 226; makes clean sweep, testimony of before Roosevelt, 189, 254, 255; see Baltimore investigation, 267, 268, 277, 278, 296; Johnson faction at Baltimore, see Baltimore investigation, 295; in Maryland convention, 335; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 337, 347; and political assessment circular of civil service commission, 363; as a campaign fund raiser, 370.
- Johnston, councilman of Indianapolis, supports Fire Chief Webster, 208.
- Johnston, G. D., civil service commissioner, and political assessments, 358.
- Johnston, G. D., civil service commissioner, and duties of federal employes, 384; does not favor rapid extension of classified service, 397.
- Johnston, N. Y., Postmaster Murray of, fighting for good service in, 72.
- Jones, Senator, supporter of Blaine, 344.
- Jones, postmaster of Butler, Ind., political worker, 379, 380.
- Jones, postmaster at Scranton, Pa., through influence of Congressman Scranton, 101.
- Jones, A., postmaster at Indianapolis, 1; interview on giving up office, 5; removal deserved, 9; and special exam. at Indpls. spoilsman, 18; removals under, and Moore, gambler, 28; opposed to civ. service reform, 80; appointment of, condemned, 51.
- Jones, G., proprietor N. Y. Times, enemy of spoils system, 234.
- Jones, I. A., see Chemung Co., N. Y., 259.
- Jones, J. W., journalist, postmaster at Barneveld, Wis., 155.
- Jones, J. W., low politician; his "reforms," 183; journalist, postmaster at Oelrichs, S. Dak., 155.
- Jones, "Long," works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 342.
- Jonesville, Minn., Journalist Henry postmaster at, 149.
- Jolley, G. W., U. S. dist. att'y in Kentucky, prosecutes federal office-holders for levying political assessments, 330.
- Judson, postmaster of Prattsville, N. Y., insane through fear of loss of office, 415.
- Julian, G. W., address of on civil service reform, 365, 367, 370, 375, 376; opposing Harrison, 386.
- Justice, H., civil service reformer, closes his subscription to CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 350.
- Kane, Pa., Postmaster Davis of, worker for Delamater, 134.
- Kannett Square, Chester Co., Pa., applicants for postmaster of, 55.
- Kansas, office-seekers in, 6; discontent over spoils, 15; Congressman Perkins of opposed to civil service reform, 35; changes in post-offices in, under Harrison and Cleveland, 55; political activity of federal officers in, 348, 382; political assessments in Indian service in, 384, 385.
- Kansas City, Mo., postmaster of appoints relative Pres. Harrison his deputy, 84; per cent. of removals in classified and unclassified service in post-office at, 185.
- Kaontz, postmaster at Lafayette Corners, Pa., worker for Delamater, 134.
- Kaough, postmaster at Ft. Wayne, Ind., under Cleveland, political worker, 88.
- Kaufman, Rev. W. H., on civil service reform, 83; on sentiment favoring civil service reform in Utah, 111, 317.
- Kawanna, Ind., Editor Newton appointed postmaster at, 126.
- Keagh, T. B., Harrison delegate from N. Carolina, 334.
- Kean, ex-Congressman, gets federal offices for police officers, 216.
- Keating, J. P., disreputable politician, gets office through R. Croker, 309.
- Keegan, G., fraudulent voting name, see New York City.
- Keeller H., customs inspector, pays political assessments, 279.
- Keenan, J., see Hill, 307.
- Keepers, G. A., editor, postmaster at Beallsville, O., 301.
- Kehoe, M., treasury agent, Harrison delegate to Minneapolis, 344.
- Keisburg, J., appointed to office by Township Trustee Gold at Indianapolis, 146, 256.
- Keith, P., postmaster at Strawberry Point, Iowa, veteran soldier, removed see Clarkson, 55.
- Keller, J., custom-house employe at Philadelphia, political worker for Harrison, 301.
- Kelley, councilman of Indianapolis, supports fire-chief Webster, 208.
- Kelley, C., emigrant inspector, political worker for Harrison, 302.
- Kelley, Pat., ward politician of Indianapolis, see Parnell Hall.
- Keller, R., ward politician, see Indianapolis, 195.
- Kellogg, L. E., journalist, postmaster at Waterville, Wash., 155.
- Kellog, W. P., Coleman supersedes him in control of patronage in Louisiana, 71, 304; opposes Harrison at Minneapolis, 344, 346; and War-mouth in Louisiana, 374.
- Kelly, Miss, daughter of Congressman Kelly, given office in Burlington, Kan., post-office, 188.
- Kelly, H., Congressman, secures removal of Lockwood, postmaster at Burlington, Kan., and appointment of successor, Lane, 188.
- Kemble, W. H., corrupt politician, see Quay, 106, 152; ally of Quay, and convicted, 270.
- Kendallville, Ind., Standard (repub.), favors civil service reform, 83.
- Kenealy, M. E., journalist, postmaster, at Sitka, Alaska, 155.
- Kennedy, Congressman, condemns Quay, 156, 157.
- Kennedy, C., railway mail clerk in Iowa, a political worker, 260.
- Kennedy, E. K., ward politician, see Kings Co., N. Y.
- Kennett, Pa., Advance (repub.), the way to get office, 55.
- Kenny, —, and census enumeration of New York City, 294.
- Kent, N. Y., Postmaster Bennett of, a political worker, 162.
- Kentucky, office-holders in, allowed to serve out terms, 73; Jolley, U. S. Dist. Att'y in, prosecutes federal office-holders, for levying political assessments, 330.
- Kenyon, J. S., sec'y republican state committee of New York, 279; at Minneapolis, 344.
- Keata, Iowa, Editor Smock, appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Kercheval, S. A., corrupt politician rewarded with office, 83; worker for Harrison, 240.
- Kerens, and Russell Harrison, 359; member of national republican committee, 363.
- Kerens, R. C., and offices in Missouri, his influence, 22; and clients, 24; political workers for Harrison, 304.
- Kern, J., state senator of Indiana, and spoils methods, 408.
- Kerns, postmaster at Smethport, Pa., worker for Delamater, 134.
- Kerr, state att'y, of Maryland, and political frauds in, 335.
- Kerwin, M., editor, appointed collector internal revenue 2d New York district, 126; assisted at dinner to Clarkson, 245; collector in New York, a political worker, 265, 279; Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Kessler, grocer, appointed postmaster at Short Hills, N. J., vice Goodrich, removed for political reasons, 386.
- Kessler, J. B., journalist, postmaster at Ottawa, Kan., 149.
- Ketcham, C. K., postmaster at Ditney, Ind., solicited for political contributions, 387, 392.
- Kewanna, Ind., Editor Newton appointed postmaster at, 377.
- Key West, Fla., custom-house at not classified; number of employes in, 277.
- Keyes, Miss L. C., postmaster at Yonkers, N. Y., succeeded by politician, 150.
- Keyes, W. R., journalist, postmaster at Mountain City, Tenn., 155.
- Kidd, J. H., postmaster, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Kinzie, C. H., statistics collector, a political worker, 160.
- Kiernan, J., inefficient census enumerator in N. Y. City, 294.
- Killsheimer, J. B., employed in N. Y. custom-house, political worker, 108.
- Kimball, see Baltimore investigation, 327, 328.
- Kimmell, Louis, editor, appointed deputy U. S. marshal, 126.
- King, sheriff, inefficient, at Indianapolis, 315.
- King, A. E., and post-office at Baltimore, Maryland, 84.
- King, D. H., reports to Mayor Grant on street-cleaning in New York; advises merit system, 220, 221.
- King, S., efficient employe in township trustee's office at Indianapolis removed, 145, 256.
- King, S. S., journalist, postmaster at Jasper, Minn., 149.
- King, W., editor, supported by Congressman Cooper for postmaster of Danville, Ind., 398.
- Kings Co., N. Y., republican general committee, account of fights over, 197, 198, 304; factional fight in among republicans at primaries, 264; political assessments made by chairman of republican committee of, 287; Nathan republican boss of, 352; and Harrison, Nathan controls, 354.
- Kingsley, Ia., Postmaster Gasper of forced to resign, 165.
- Kingston, Mo., Editor Spirely appointed postmaster at, 132.
- Kingston, N. Y., Hayes postmaster at, a political worker, 280; Woolren, postmaster of, political worker in New York, 336.
- Kinley, E., ward politician, see New York City.
- Kinmundy, Ill., Editor Lawson appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Kinney, J. C., appointed postmaster at Hartford, Conn., through influence of Senator Hawley, 84, 99.
- Kinsey, W. M., congressman aiding office-seekers, 15.
- Kirkpatrick, J., democrat, nominated for postmaster at South Hadley Falls, Mass., through Congressman Wallace, 157.
- Kirkus, Rev. W., favors clerical advocacy of civil service reform, 30, 48.

- Kirwin, J., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.
- Kissel, J., navy yard employe, in New York convention, 335.
- Kittery, Me., spoils system in navy yard at, 145, 148; navy yard at, see Tracy and Reed, 153; work on war ships in navy yard at, for political reasons, 217.
- Klemme, W. H., postmaster in Winneshiek Co., Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Knapp, J. N., postmaster at Auburn, N. Y., worker for Platt, 143; chairman New York State Republican Committee, on Platt, 258; in N. Y. convention, 335.
- Knight, ex-Senator G. A., endorses Bush, political worker, 187.
- Knight, W. E., editor appointed postmaster at Grand View, Ind, 126, 377.
- Knightstown, Ind., Postmaster Sample resigns, see Congressman Browne, 118.
- Kniseley, worker for Harrison, appointed internal revenue collector, 377.
- Knowles, political worker, rewarded, see Higgins, Sen., 38.
- Kramer, C., appointed postmaster at Columbus, Neb., vice Hensley, forced to resign, 166.
- Kramer, W., candidate for sheriff, 179, 180.
- Kuhn, A., ward politician, see Indianapolis, 195.
- Kunzemann, J., disreputable politician, alderman New York City, 184.
- Labor, organizations of Buffalo, N. Y., support civil service reform, 228.
- Labor, and civil service reform, see Andrew, 331.
- Labor, and trades-unions of Indiana, demand non-partisan control of state charitable institutions, 201.
- Labor Signal favors non-partisan control of state charitable institutions, see Magee, 209, 215.
- Lacey, E. P., applicant for postmaster at Sullivan, Ind., 88.
- Lacey, S., wife of Editor Lacey appointed postmaster at Westcliffe, Colo., 148.
- La Cyge, Kan., Journalist Lane postmaster at, 149.
- Lafayette, Ind., Candidate Throckmorton for postmaster of, and Congressman Cheadle, 71; applicants for postmaster of, 84; Postmaster Smith of aids Michener and La Follette, 144; Postmaster Smith of a political worker, 153, 158, 377, 378; republican delegation of, and Harrison, favors Gresham, 240; worker for Harrison, 316; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 342, 379; P. O. employes of distribute campaign documents, 389.
- La Fayette, Ind., Courier (rep.) condemns spoils system, 76; opposed to congressional patronage, 83.
- Lafayette Corners, Pa., Postmaster Koontz at, worker for Delamater, 184.
- La Follette, candidate for congressman, defeated, 129; controls census service patronage, 293; candidate for congress, supported by Michener, 144, 377.
- La Grange, Ind., Editor Rerick appointed postmaster at, 126, 377.
- La Grange, Ind., Standard (repub.), patronage an evil, 83.
- Laird, A. J., postmaster, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Lake, David, corrupt politician, working for Congressman Wallace, nominated for U. S. Marshal, 132.
- Lamb, Ind., Simpson, postmaster of, political worker, 379.
- Lamb, W. H., old employe, appointed supt. of mails in St. Louis, 136.
- Lambert, Rev. H., pres. civil service reform association of Newton, Mass., 136; views of on present status of civil service reform criticised, 255; address of on influence of Clarkson and Wanamaker on civil service reform, 261.
- Lamont, candidate for postmaster at Apple River, Jo Daviess Co., Ill., 109.
- Lanark, Ill., candidates for postmaster of, Root given place, 109, 136.
- Laucaster, Cal., Journalist Drummond appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Lancaster, Pa., post-office at, see Brosius, 72.
- Lancaster Co., Pa., Sen. Cameron "accorded" collectorship of internal revenue in, 47.
- Lander, Wyoming, Journalist Wynn, postmaster at, 155.
- Lane, C. R., part of address of at annual meeting of Indiana Civil S. Ref. Assoc., 1889, 8; sec. Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, 108; on census enumeration in Indianapolis, 293.
- Lane, C. T., address of on school and civil service reform, 23.
- Lane, D. H., political worker for Quay, 299.
- Lane, E. C., journalist, postmaster at La Cyge, Kan., 149.
- Lane, J. A., signs petition for larger appropriation for civil serv. com., 102.
- Lane, J. L., federal employe, and political assessments, see Kentucky.
- Lane, S. M., appointed postmaster at Burlington, Kan., through influence of Congressman Kelly, vice Lockwood, removed, 188.
- Langdon, Gen., see Chemung Co., N. Y., 259.
- Langdon, C. J., letter to by Walcott on removal of Postmaster Flood, 312.
- Langham, chairman Indiana Co., Pa., republican committee, 133.
- Langham, P. J., postmaster at Hawley, Pa., removed on secret charges, 176.
- Langsdale, appointed postmaster at Greencastle, Ind., by President Arthur, 89.
- Langsdale, postmaster at Florence, Ind., political worker, 379.
- Langston, ex-congressman, reconciliation of with Mahone, in interest of Harrison, 240, 241.
- Langstou, see Bowden, 162.
- Laugston, ex-minister, supports Blaine, 340, 345.
- Langston, J. M., and Mahone, 52.
- Lanier, C., barber at White House, goes home to vote, 180.
- Lankford, W. F., appointed postmaster at Princess Anne, Md., vice Duer, removed for political reasons, 408.
- Lansdon, B. C., editor, appointed postmaster at Nebo, Ill., 141.
- Lansing, A. W., journalist, postmaster at Plattsburgh, N. Y., 155.
- La Porte, Pa., Journalist Cheney, postmaster at, 149.
- Larke, F. D., journalist, postmaster at Rogers City, Mich., 149.
- Larkin, T., see New York, factional fights in, 241.
- La Rue, postmaster at Colfax, Wash., forced to resign, 165.
- Latham, R., postmaster at Hunterstown, Ind., removed through influence of Postmaster Higgins; Dunton appointed, 362.
- Latz, chemist for Indianapolis board of health, 314.
- Laurel, Del., Smith, postmaster of, attempts bribery, 397, 401, 402.
- Laurel, Md., postmaster at, see Gorman, 38.
- Laurence, A. C., journalist, postmaster at Evansville, Minn., 149.
- Law, civil serv., and its friends exemplified in Indianapolis post-office, 26.
- Lawler, fellows in district of, made application for O'Donnell, 60.
- Lawler, T., local politician, opposed to Congressman Hitt, 109.
- Lawler, T. G., postmaster at Rockford, Ill., works for Hitt, 143.
- Lawrence Co. (Indiana), applicants from, 16.
- Lawrence, Kan., civil service reform association of, 239.
- Lawrenceburg, Ind., Lucas, postmaster of, political worker, 379.
- Lawrenceburg, Tenn., Journalist Schrader postmaster at, 155.
- Lawrenceville, Va., postmaster at removed through influence of Mahone, despite promise to contrary, 74.
- Lawshe, A. L., editor appointed postmaster at Xenia, Ind., 71, 126, 377; political worker, 379.
- Lawson, J. D., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Lawson, R. F., editor, appointed postmaster at Kinmundy, Ill., 141.
- Lea, H. C., on patronage, 387; advocates civil service reform, denounces President Harrison's course with the civil service, 68; on pledges of reform of republican party, 92; opposed to Senator Quay, 95; open letter to President Harrison protesting against patronage of Quay, 111, 112; appeal of to voters against Quay and Delamater, 138.
- Leach, chief of division, removed for political reasons, see Coulter, 55.
- Leach, F. W., receiver of campaign levies, 134; republican politician in Pennsylvania, 361.
- League, National, of civil service reform associations, see National League.
- League, republican, convention at Syracuse, August, 1891, federal office holders at, 259.
- Learned, F. E., son of editor, appointed postmaster at Benson, Ill., 148.
- Leaycraft, W. H., political worker Candidate Benedict, 142; port warden at New York, political worker for Woodruff, 198; calls on Fassett, collector at N. Y. City, 258; political worker, 304; political "boss," 311; office-seeker, 332; "boss," given office by Harrison, 355, 371.
- Lebanon, N. H., brother of Churchill postmaster of, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Lee, E. C., "pull" of in N. Y. custom house, supported by Platt, appointed janitor, 258, 259; at Minneapolis convention, 343.
- Lee, J. E., negro, collector at Jacksonville, Fla., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Lee, L. W., postmaster at Neodesha, Kan., removed after four years' service, second commission unexpired, 187.
- Lee, M. C., inspector in N. Y. custom-house, political worker, 108.
- Leech, D., employed in N. Y. custom-house, political worker, 108.
- Leech, E. O., director of mint, works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 344.
- Leeds, J. W., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.
- Leeds, W. R., disreputable politician, nominated by Harrison for U. S. marshal in Pa., 216, 374; political worker for Quay, 270, 280; political worker for Harrison, 299, 300.
- Leet, "boss" in N. Y. custom-house, 191.
- Leffson, F., and Fassett, 265.
- Lehigh Co., Pa., control of patronage in, 47.
- Lehigh, Pa., J. P. Smith postmaster at, removed for political reasons, 39.
- Lehlbach, Congressman, on house committee of civil service, 86; politician favored by administration, 180.
- Leibhardt, P., superintendent dead letter office, political worker, 382.
- Leland, C. Jr., federal officer, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Lemcke, state treasurer of Indiana and Sullivan, corrupt county clerk of Marion Co. (Indianapolis), 206.
- Lemon, G. E., pension claim agent and Raum, 130.
- Lena, Ill., Journalist Lewis appointed postmaster at, 126.
- Lenox, Iowa, Editor Van Houten appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Leonard, Editor, political worker for Blaine, 302.
- Leonard, A. H., republican in Louisiana and War-mouth, 362.
- Leonard, J. R., 96; appointment as deputy, see Ransdall, 80; relative of Ransdell gets office under, 244; federal employe, worker for Harrison, 362, 382.
- Leonard, W., federal office-holder, political worker for Harrison, 302, 378.
- Letter carriers, national convention of at Detroit, requests extension of civil service law to all free delivery cities, 253.
- Leupp, F. E., editor Good Government, 357.
- Levan, L. D., appointed postmaster at Wilsou, N. Y., 39; removal of, 45.
- Leverett, G. V., civil service reformer of Cambridge, Mass., 204.
- Levy, Indian agent at Yankton, removed, 98.
- Levy, B. A., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.
- Lewis, assemblyman 21st district in New York City, 75.
- Lewis, C. A., distributes Curtis address (1892) in Indiana, 338.
- Lewis, C. S., officer Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, 108.
- Lewis, E. B., journalist, postmaster at New Holland, O., 149.
- Lewis, F. A., asst. supt. of Society for Prevention of Crime in N. Y. City, see Tammany, 317.
- Lewis, J., customs inspector, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Lewis, J. A., applicant for postmastership at Martinsville, Ind., 399.
- Lewis, M. M., journalist, appointed postmaster at Lena, Ill., 126.
- Liberty, Tex., Journalist Chambers, postmaster at, 155.
- Lieber, Albert, ward politician, see Indianapolis, 195.
- Liggett, C. F., journalist, appointed postmaster at Chivington, Col., 141.
- Lincoln, Abraham, Pres., on evils of spoils system, 25; gives Cameron secretaryship of war in return for political aid; dismisses him, 34, 64; and civ. service reform, 76; see Welsh, 161; opposed to removals to make place for friends (1846), 211; promises of to the soldiers, 220, 274; on dangers of the spoils system, 56, 329, 367.
- Lincoln, G., postmaster at Cedar Rapids, Ia., political worker, 370.
- Lincoln Independent Republican committee of Pennsylvania condemns Quay and Delamater, 156, 161.
- Lincoln, Neb., Gere, editor, appointed postmaster at, 108; Gere, postmaster of, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Lincoln, R. T., 15; and anti-Quay republicans, see Welsh, 161; not a candidate in 1892, 340; U. S. minister to England, political worker, 382, 389.
- Lind, congressman, on house committee on civ. service, 86.
- Lindemuth, representative in Indiana legislature, opposes spoils methods, 407.
- Lindley, pension examiner in Indiana, at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- Lindsey, T., political worker for Harrison, 299.
- Lindsley, J. G., ex-congressman, political worker for Platt, 265.
- Lingenfelter, H., see Baltimore investigation, 326, 327, 328.
- Lineville, Iowa, Editor Austin appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Linton (Ind.) Call condemns opposition to Magee bill, see also Magee, 209.
- Lippincott, Judge, trying fraudulent election officers, see also Hudson Co., N. Y., 200.
- Lipscomb, P., son of journalist, postmaster at St. George, W. Va., 155.
- List of eligibles, see Eligibles, 48.
- Litchman, C. H., political worker, rewarded, 39; treasury agent, a political worker, 179.
- Lititz, Pa., post-office at, see Brosius, 72.
- Little Bat, Indian chief, and rising at Pine Ridge S. Dak., 218.
- Little Wound, Indian chief, and Indian rising at Pine Ridge, S. Dak., 218.
- Littlejohn, G. W., journalist, postmaster at Grayson, Ky., 149.
- Llano, Tex., Journalist Galson, postmaster at, 155.
- Loane, see Baltimore investigation, 278.
- Lock, R. D., postmaster, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Lockport, N. Y., twenty federal offices in Niagara Co. filled with republicans, 30; Mayor Oliver of, spoilsman, and N. Y. civil service commission, 34; rival candidates for postmaster of; Ward, editor, and Politician Merritt, supported by Senator Hiscock, 216; federal offices of controlled by Hiscock, 259.
- Lockwood, E. M., postmaster at Burlington, Kan., removed through influence of Congressman, Kelly, 188.

- Loda, Ill., Editor Weaver appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Lodge, H. C., congressman, spoilsman, 30; obtains office for political worker, 39; evils of patronage system, un-American, speech at Lowell, July 4, 1879, 39; evil of patronage; heading to CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, Aug., 1889, 41; letter of to, Civ. Service Record on civ. service reform, 69; controls patronage of Charleston navy yard, 69; and Boston custom house, 71; bill of regulating appointments of fourth-class postmasters, 115; votes aid to civil service commission, 119; bill of to regulate appointment of fourth-class postmasters, 120; and spoils in navy yard at Charleston, 153; supports civil service law, 122, 168, 169; urges extension of civil service reform, 192; upholds civil service commission; exposes Grosvenor, 203, 204; bill of for selection of fourth-class postmasters on basis of merit, 238; bill of providing for non-partisan appointment of fourth-class postmasters, commended, 321; on civil-service reform under Harrison and Cleveland, 376.
- Logan, Senator, spoilsman, 413.
- Logan, O., Journalist Pursell postmaster at, 149, 301.
- Logan, R. W., Harrison delegate from N. Carolina, 334.
- Logansport, Ind., D. W. Tomlinson recommended as postmaster of, 88; Postmaster Tomlinson of, a political worker, 153, 158, 260, 377; federal officers work for Harrison at, 316.
- Logansport, Ind., Journal favors civ. service reform, 83; Journal bought by supporters of Harrison, including Postmaster Tomlinson, 260.
- Logansport (Ind.) Pharos, condemns opposition to Magee bill, see also Magee, 209.
- Loman, G. W., journalist, postmaster at Chase, Kan., 148.
- Long, deputy postmaster of Vevay, Ind., political worker, 379.
- Long, member national republican committee, and political assessments, 382, 383.
- Loesch, John, political worker, see Karr, 160.
- Long, G. I., journalist, appointed postmaster at Manson, Iowa, 142.
- Long, J. D., ex-gov. Mass., signs petition for larger appropriation for civil serv. com., 102.
- Long, W., councilman of Indianapolis, low politician, 206.
- Long Island City, N. Y., Postmaster McKenna of, removed for political reasons, 45; removal of McKenna, postmaster of, Richtenstien appointed, 54; Postmaster Richtenstien of, 100; Postmaster McKenna of, removed on secret charges, 175.
- Loomis, F. M., address of Central Labor Union, of Buffalo, N. Y., controversy with Buffalo Evening News on civil service reform, 44; weakening influence of office holding, 75.
- Lorenz, P. O., employe at Indianapolis, see Indianapolis investigation, 411.
- Lorimer, "Billy," recommends O'Donnell, 59.
- Louisburg, Kan., Journalist Cadwallader postmaster at, 149.
- Louisiana, see Warmouth, patronage of, conflict over, see Kellogg, 71; patronage of given to Warmouth, collector at New Orleans, 241; federal patronage in used for re-nomination of Harrison, 304; political activity of federal officers in, 315, 346, 348, 357, 383, 384; political assessments in, 383.
- Louisville Commercial (repub.), civ. service reform beneficial to party discipline, 65.
- Lourie, postmaster at Portland, Ind., removed, 46.
- Loutham, C. M., deputy int. rev. coll., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Love, J., candidate, views of on patronage; office-brokerage, 23; defeated candidate and sale of offices, see "Sale of Offices," 32, 99.
- Love, J. W., employed in N. Y. custom-house, a political worker, 108.
- Loveland, state senator of Indiana, opposes spoils methods, 408.
- Loving, J. T., postmaster at Richmond, Va., removed for political reasons, 21.
- Low, ex-gov., indorses Bush, political worker, 187.
- Low, E. B., political worker, appointed postmaster at Westport, N. Y., through influence of Congressman Weaver, 249.
- Low, J., collector at Suspension Bridge, N. Y., through influence of Hiscock, 259; customs collector at Suspension Bridge, N. Y., a political worker, 265.
- Low, W. G., offers prize for essay on civil service reform, 308.
- Lowe, representative in Indiana legislature, and spoils methods in, 407.
- Lowe, C., P. O. employe, political worker, 302, 378.
- Lowell, J. R., on evils of spoils system, in address of Cambridge and Boston Civil Service Reform Associations, 77; civil service reformer, 201; opposed to spoils system, 254.
- Lowell, Mrs. J. S., in charge of examination for police matron at N. York, see Maloney.
- Lowell (Mass.) Courier (repub.) declares Sen. Blair, of New Hampshire, not a good republican for denouncing civil service reform, 65.
- Lowery, Judge, levies political assessments, 287.
- Lowe, J. E., political worker in Ohio, 280.
- Lowrey, B. J., journalist, postmaster at Howard City, Mich., 149.
- Lowrey, J. E., asks political contributions from Ohio employes in Washington departments, 280.
- Lowry, postmaster at Portland, Ind., removed; Marsh appointed through influence of Browne, 88.
- Lowry, congressman, nomination of, 37.
- Lowry, federal employe, and printing office, 231.
- Lozler, chaplain, political worker, 389.
- Lucas, Rev., thinks civ. service reform a humbug, 73.
- Lucas, postmaster of Lawrenceburg, Ind., political worker, 379.
- Lucas, bank president, gambles in stocks with Wanamaker, 246.
- Ludell, Kan., Journalist Chase postmaster at, 149.
- Lnke, A. M., postmaster at Jeffersonville, Ind., removed by Cleveland, reappointed by Harrison, 88.
- Lush, R., ward politician, see New York City.
- Lnsh, R. M., at Minneapolis convention, 314.
- Lnsk, V. S., political worker for Harrison in North Carolina, 334.
- Lu Verne, Ia., Postmaster Harrison of a political worker, 260.
- Lyford, book commissioner for New Hampshire, 143.
- Lyman, civil service commissioner and special examiner at Indianapolis, 18, 49, 81, 372; and R. R. mail service, 21; unfit, allows postmaster at Milwaukee to ignore civil service law, 103; and political assessments, 358; and duties of employes, 384; report of, 397.
- Lynch, A. F., see Quay, 106.
- Lynch, J. R., negro, 4th auditor of treasury, political worker, 47; 4th auditor of the treasury, delegate for Harrison at Minneapolis, 337, 339, 343, 344, 345.
- Lynch, T. M., worker for Flower, appointed port warden, career of, 319.
- Lyon, C. D., editor, appointed postmaster at Milo, Iowa, 142.
- Lyon, G. W., appointed by Pres. Harrison surveyor of Port of Brooklyn, N. Y., 55; supports Platt faction, 183; and Fassett, collector at, 258; in New York convention, 334; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 343.
- Lyon, W., U. S. attorney, active politician, works for Delamater, 143; supporter of Quay, suspected by Harrison, 299.
- Lyon, W. C., editor, formerly postmaster at Newark, O., 301.
- MacCourt, P. C., removed by Sec'y Windom, appeals to Pres. Harrison, 54.
- MacDonald, W. A., recommended by Congressman Cheadle, 84.
- MacDuffy, Rev. M. V., on civil service reform, 83.
- MacGovern, supports Gillette for postmaster at Hartford, Conn., 84.
- MacGovern, "Pat," and Hartford, Conn., postmaster-ship, 99.
- MacGowan, Capt. A. B., denies charges against Indian Agent McChesney, 130.
- MacGregor, Capt. J. G., so-called resignation of, 216.
- MacKnight, Rev. Dr. W. J., on civil service reform, 83.
- MacNeal, street car company and ordinance, bribery used against, 207.
- MacVeagh, W., ex-attorney general, on Mahone in Virginia, 31; to examine management of civil service, 77; on committee of National League to investigate congressional patronage, 115; on committee of National League to investigate patent office, 139, 140, 141; on committee of National League, investigating presidential post-offices, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166; on committee of National League, reporting on removals on secret charges, 175, 176, 177; on committee of National League, reports on political changes in presidential post-offices, 188; and Quay, 245; and defalcation made by Quay, 252; on official committee of National League investigating census service, 291, 295.
- Macaulay, "Dan" treasury employe, political worker, 362.
- Macanley, T., Lord, 228.
- Macdonough, A. R., on committee investigating N. Y. City civil service, 319, 320.
- Mace, J. A., editor, appointed postmaster at Saybrook, Ill., 141.
- Mack, chairman Iowa State Republican Committee, makes political assessments, 240.
- Macy, Ind., Editor Enyart appointed postmaster at, 126, 377.
- Madison, James, on abuse of civil-service by Presidents, 17, 29; letter to, from Thomas Jefferson opposing spoils system, 45, 46; advises impeachment of any President making removals for political reasons, 62; on removals, 115.
- Madison, Ind., spoils system in town government of, 331.
- Madison Co., Ind., appointments from, 71.
- Madison, Wis., census of 1890 not well conducted in, postmaster of controls census patronage, 293.
- Magee, C. L., opposed to Quay, 280, 353; allies with Quay, 299; and Quay reconciled, 361, 363.
- Magee, J. H., and CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 110, 356.
- Magee, R., favors civ. service reform, 80; state senator of Indiana, bill of, for non-partisan control of state charitable institutions, opposition to and support of, defeated, 201, 202, 208, 209, 210, 214, 215; speech of, at dinner to Roosevelt, 227, 229; and spoils methods, 408.
- Magone, collector and office-seekers, 38; political assessments under, 97; secures appointment of Dncy as head of custom civ. service at New York, 150; removals under, 183.
- Mahan, John, editor, appointed postmaster at Mns catine, 46.
- Mahany, R. B., U. S. minister to Ecuador, political worker, 382.
- Mahin, F., editor, appointed postmaster at Clinton, Iowa, 126.
- Mahone, W., a spoilsman, 5, 35, 43, 45, 171, 211, 227, 289, 350, 369, 376, 387, 413; patronage of Virginia given to by Pres. Harrison, 27, 28, 41, 52, 56, 67, 72, 94, 111, 138, 172, 173, 174; history of political career of, 31; secures appointment of J. G. Watts as U. S. marshal, 38; assisted by republican national committee, gets control of Virginia patronage, 38; exercised patronage of Virginia with disastrous effects, 67, 68; and election in Virginia, 70; and postmastership at Lawrenceville, Va., 74; methods of condemned, 75; and civil service commission, 86; controls Petersburg, Va., 1882, 87, 111, 138; blackmailing system of, 228; conspires with Gorman, 234; Pres. Harrison responsible for failure to prosecute, 237; reconciliation of with ex-Congressman Langston, in interest of Harrison, 240, 241; course of prosecution against agents of, for political assessments, 281, 282; "blackmailers," trial and acquittal of, 305, 376; deserts Harrison, 332; "blackmailers," and Judge Bradley, 357, 358; and election of Harrison, 370, 413.
- Mahoney, Tom, ward politician of Indianapolis, see Parnell Hall.
- Mahopac Falls, N. Y., Postmaster Agar of, a political worker, 162.
- Mail service, railway, see railway mail service.
- Maine, senators fight over spoils, 22; democrats holding four-year offices being retained, 73; patronage of, see Boutelle, 157; political activity of federal office-holders in, 364.
- Mair, G. B., journalist, postmaster at Calloway, Neb., 149.
- Malden, Mass., civil service reform association of, 239.
- Malone speech of Pres. Harrison, 357.
- Malone, M., worker for ex-Judge Rooney and Congressman Wallace, given office, 143.
- Maloney, J., employe in Indianapolis insane hospital, low character, 314.
- Mamer, collector, political worker in Illinois, 335.
- Manchester, Mass., Postmaster Johnson of, removed after four years' service; second commission unexpired, 187.
- Manchester, N. H., Postmaster Piper of, active politician, 143.
- Manchester (N. H.), Republican, civil service reform a humbug, 50.
- Manchester, Vt., Journalist Simonds postmaster at, 155.
- Manderson, Senator, and applicants from Nebraska, 6; and Lincoln, Neb., post-office, 72; secures appointment of Gere, editor, as postmaster at Lincoln, Neb., 108.
- Maneely, W., fraudulent voter, see Martin.
- Manker, Coroner, at Indianapolis, 314, 315.
- Manley, J., appointed postmaster at Augusta, Me., 38; chairman state republican committee, 150; congressional candidate opposing Burleigh, and non-delivery of papers advocating Burleigh, 364; resigns, 371; confers with Quay, 390.
- Mann, —, census supervisor in West Virginia, spoilsman, 293.
- Mann, G. H., appointed through Quay, removed, 160.
- Mannfield, Fla., Editor Miles appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Mannheim, Pa., politician appointed postmaster at, 12, 72.
- Manning, ward politician, see Buffalo, N. Y.
- Manning, D., Sec'y, promotes MacGregor, removed by Sec'y Foster, 216; and Maynard, 310; recommends appointment of Graves as chief of bureau of printing and engraving, 368.
- Mansfield, postmaster at Gloucester, Mass., 362.
- Manson, Iowa, Journalist Long, appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Manson, M. D., efficient internal revenue collector in Indiana, removed for political reasons, 59; letter of President Harrison to, 77; removal of, 94.
- Maplewood, N. H., Craft, postmaster of, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Marche, T., acting supt. free delivery service, letter to, from Murray postmaster at Johnston, N. Y., 72.
- Marcy, Governor, and the civil service, 125; "spoils," 270, 274.
- Mare Island, Cal., navy yard at, patronage of given to ward bosses, 226.
- Marietta, O., Editor Alderman postmaster of, 301.
- Marietta, Pa., post office at, see Brosius, 72.
- Marine, S. A., editor, appointed pension agent, 126.
- Marine, W. M., collector at Baltimore, see Baltimore investigation, 326, 327, 328; political worker, 354, 389.
- Marion, Ind., Gant, postmaster of, at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- Marion, Ind., Chronicle [repub.], favors civil service reform, 83.
- Marion, Ohio, Independent, son of editor of gets federal office, 301.
- Marion Club [repub.], of Indianapolis, 362.
- Marion Co., Ind., local politics and career of corrupt politicians in, see Indianapolis; office-seekers in rewarded, 88; 50 applicants for jan-

- torship of court-house of, 185; medical society condemns appointment of Dr. Elbert as pension examiner vice Stone removed, 192; medical society of endorses Magee bill for non-partisan control of state charitable institutions, see Magee, 201, 210.
- Markey, T., councilman of Indianapolis, low politician, methods of, 53, 195, 196, 206, 316; supports Fire Chief Webster, 208.
- Marlatt, W. P., P. O. employe, see Indianapolis investigation, 411.
- Marriott, J. H., see Baltimore investigation, 278.
- Marsh, P. O. employe, of New Albany, Ind., at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- Marsh, bank president, and stock fraudulently issued to Wanamaker, 246.
- Marsh, C. T., postmaster at Oregon, Ill., removed after four years' service, second commission unexpired, 187.
- Marsh, E. J., editor, appointed postmaster at Portland, Ind., 46, 88, 126; political worker, 377, 380.
- Marsh, W. C., postmaster at Aurelia, Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Marshall, T., government contractor, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Martin, editor, postmaster at Port Clinton, O., 301.
- Martin, Congressman, favors selection of postmasters by vote, 399; bill of to limit term of federal employes to four years, 404; patronage of, 411, 419, 420.
- Martin, C., political worker against Chase, 353.
- Martin, D., low politician, Sen. Quay obtains appointment of, as collector internal revenue, 30, 351; agt. of Sen. Quay, resolutions, 49; confers with Quay, 183; aids Quay to ruin ballot reform bill in Pa. legislature, 228, 229; political freebooter, 232, 233, 239, 364, 370, 388; resigns internal revenue collectorship at Philadelphia, 241; political worker for Quay, 280, 299, 300, 361, 374; member for Pennsylvania of republican national committee, 347.
- Martin, D. W., postmaster at Oakford, Ind., succeeded by Cronsore, latter removed. Martin reappointed, 96.
- Martin, H., post-office employe in Baltimore investigation, 268, 277, 295, 296.
- Martin, J., politician, see Tammany, 318, 319.
- Martinsville, Ind., Dryden postmaster of, political worker, 380; J. A. Lewis and J. Duncan applicants for postmastership of, 399.
- Marvin, U. S. commissioner, testifies to worth of Barrio, removed P. O. inspector, 298.
- Maryland, see also Platforms, Conventions; Senator Quay in, 28; civ. service in under Cleveland, 15, 63; federation of republican clubs in 3d district of, and reform pledges of republican platform, 63; effort to loosen Sen. Gorman's hold on, meets with some success, 70; statistics of election of '89 in, 70; ballot reform in, see Gorman, 87; patronage of, given to Gorman, 93, 111, 236, 237; Roosevelt before civil service reform association of, 132; republican clubs and Clarkson, 154; republican factions in, 189; boss-ridden, 219; state and federal patronage of controlled by Gorman under Cleveland, by republican machine under Harrison, 254; 1890 census well conducted in part of, 292; under Cleveland given over to spoils, 282; spoil given to Higgins in, 314; Bonaparte on political corruption in, 317, 324; political activity of, federal officers in, 335, 337, 347, 348, 363, 370; political assessments levied on federal office-holders from, 391.
- Maryland, civil service reform association of, letter to by G. W. Curtis, 103; resolutions of condemning congressional patronage, 136; requested to investigate political activity of federal officers, 219.
- Mason, ex-mayor of Vineland, N. J., refutes charges against Brewster, removed postmaster at Vineland, 39.
- Mason, Congressman, and Chicago post-office, 22.
- Mason, A. B., on committee investigating N. Y. City civil service, 319, 320.
- Mason, G. H., P. O. employe in N. Y. convention, 335.
- Mason, J. W., commissioner of internal revenue, and the offices, 21; active politician, 159, 180.
- Maspeth, L. I., postmaster at, removed to make room for politician, see Mooney, 39.
- Mass, J., federal employe, in N. Y. convention, 335.
- Massachusetts, civil service commission of, see Civil service commission of; see also Platforms, Conventions; civ. service law of, see Civ. service law; merit system in, 45, 52; civil service reform in, under Cleveland, 63; congressmen of, and congressional patronage, 93; petition circulated in for larger appropriation for civil service commission, 93; legislature of favors civil service reform in navy yards, 93, 274; result of elections of 1890, to strengthen civil service reform cause, 173; civil service reform in use in state and city offices in, 212; young men's republican club of recognize civil service reform as leading issue, 219; reform club of H. Welsh speaks before, on Indian service removals, 219; examination papers used in state census service of, 219, 220; reform club of gives dinner to Corse, 251; methods used by state of, in collecting statistics, 291; 1890 census well conducted in, 292; labor service system recommended by Congressman Andrew 306; labor service in, 321; political activity of federal office-holders in, 334, 362; congressmen of request retention of Corse postmaster at Boston, 367.
- Massachusetts Civ. Service Reform Ass'n and Pres. Harrison, 92; starts petition for larger appropriation for civil serv. commission, 102; condemns removal of Corse, postmaster at Boston, see also Civil Service Record, 213; resolutions of, 1892, 398.
- Massey, G. V., federal officer, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Mastin, J., editor, appointed postmaster at Shannon, Ill., 141.
- Mathers, deputy U. S. marshal in Indiana, political worker, 380.
- Mathews, delegate from Dakota dictates appointments in his territory, 30.
- Mathias, J., P. O. employe, see Indianapolis investigation, 411.
- Matson, congressman, secures appointment of postmaster at Plainfield, Ind., 30; in document No. 2 of Ind. Civil Service Reform Association, 30; henchmen work for renomination, 37.
- Matthews, A., praises CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 110.
- Matthews, Asa, appointed first comptrollership of the treasury, 21; and printing office, 284; political worker in Illinois, 335.
- Matthews, A. L., P. O. employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Matthews, C., governor-elect of Indiana, and office-seekers, 403.
- Matthews, "Johnny," gambler, friend of police justice Divver, 184.
- Matthews, S. S., deputy postmaster at Winona, Miss., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344, 348.
- Matthews, T. B., deputy coll. int. rev., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Matthews, W. H., negro, deputy collector internal revenue in Georgia, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Matthews, W. S., sec'y state republican executive committee, Ohio, and political assessments, 280.
- Maxwell land grant, and Elkins, 290, 369.
- May, Colonel, politician, and post-office at Rochelle, Ill., 109.
- May, Pa., postmaster at, see Brosius, 72.
- May, Rev. J., spoils system, immoral, 85; on Quayism, 162.
- Mayers, J. T., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.
- Mayfield, A. W., journalist, postmaster at Elmwood, Neb., 149.
- Maynard, J. H., deputy att'y-gen. of New York, and Dutchess Co., N. Y., election frauds, 306; corrupt worker for Hill, appointed appellate judge by Flower; career of, 309, 310.
- Mayo, Commodore, commandant navy yard at Norfolk, Va., 147.
- Mayors of cities of N. Y., and N. Y. civil service commission, 34.
- Mayse, W., authorized to receive political subscriptions, 179.
- Maywood, J., journalist, postmaster at Bad Axe, Mich., 149.
- McAdam, Judge, buys nomination of Tammany, 184.
- McAlister, R., political worker and briber, 134.
- McAlpin, E. A., appointed postmaster at Sing Sing, N. York, in reward of party services, 108; at convention republican league, 259; president of N. Y. state league of republican clubs, at Minneapolis convention, 344.
- McCain, G. W., efficient officer, removed from police service at Indianapolis, see Equally divided politically, 220, 228.
- McCarren, P. H., ward politician of Brooklyn, N. Y., 263; East River Bridge, bill of scandal of, 317.
- McCarthy, J. J., customs inspector, active politician, 179.
- McCarthy, J., nominee of Congressman Banks, superseded by nominee of Congressman Lodge, 39.
- McCauley, J. C., postmaster at Searcy, Ark., removed after four years' service, second commission unexpired, Rogers appointed, 187.
- McCaull, P. H., int. rev. coll., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- McChesney, Dr. C. E., Indian agent, false charges against, 130, 218.
- McClellan, Congressman, patronage of, 422.
- McClellan, L., office-seeker in Indiana Senate, 407.
- McClelland, councilman of Indianapolis, spoilsman and low politician, 207.
- McClung, D. W., relative of Pres. Harrison, appointed collector internal revenue First Ohio district, 30.
- McClure, C. M., appointment of, charges of favoritism regarding, refuted by Roosevelt, 266, 267.
- McClure, D., recommends "Paddy" Divver for police justice, 184.
- McComas, Congressman, upholds civil service law, 125; upholds civil service commission, 203.
- McComas, member of national republican committee, 363.
- McConnellsville (O.) Herald, editor of appointed to federal office, 301.
- McCoy, S. M., political worker for Cuney, 159.
- McCreery, C., given office by Gold, township trustee at Indianapolis, 256.
- McCulloch, Rev. O. C., an independent, 313.
- McDaniel, Lock, political worker for Cuney, 159.
- McDonald, fish commissioner, gets civil service law extended to fish commission, 332.
- McDonald, Ex-Senator, on permanence of political issues, 214; his place in politics, 241.
- McDonald, Kan., Journalist Sedgwick postmaster at, 149.
- McDonald, R. T., opposed to Harrison, 303; appeals to Clarkson against political activity of federal officers, 317, 362; on political activity of federal office-holders in Indiana, 379.
- McDonough, C., ward politician, see Buffalo, N. Y., 196.
- McDougal, C., ex-U. S. marshal in N. Y., calls on Fassett, collector at N. Y. City, 258.
- McDowell, congressional candidate bribes, 151.
- McElvaue, W. J., editor, given office by Governor Foraker, 301.
- McFarlane, low politician, 54, 94, 96, 112.
- McFarland, H., appointed in government printing-office, totally unfit, 34; henchman, 35; disreputable politician, 138, 173, 181; federal office-holder, a political worker, 269, 378, 382.
- McGill, J., worker at Minneapolis convention, 343.
- McGinness, W. T., postmaster at Minden, Neb., forced to resign, 166.
- McGoogle, Dr., appointed postmaster at Arcola, Ind., vice Rockhill, removed through influence of Postmaster Higgins, 362.
- McGrew, federal employe and printing office, 234.
- McGroarty, J., port warden of Brooklyn, N. Y., career of, 319.
- McGroarty, N., anti-Harrison man "placated," 347.
- McHenry, Ill., Editor Van Slyke appointed postmaster at, 141.
- McHugh, State Senator of Indiana, spoilsman, 408.
- McIntosh, J., letter to regarding Kingsley, Ia., post-office, see Gasper, 165.
- McIntyre, representative in Indiana legislature, opposes spoils methods, 407.
- McKain, A. A., part of address at annual meeting of Indiana Civil S. Ref. Assoc., 1889, 8.
- McKane, J. Y., corrupt politician working for Congressman Wallace, 132; low politician in New York, given patronage, 352.
- McKay, N., presents "San Domingo" cutlass to Fassett, collector at N. Y. City, "to be used in beheading democrats," 258.
- McKean, appointed postmaster at Pittsburg, Pa., through influence of Quay, 90; spoilsman, 133.
- McKee, F., relative of Pres. Harrison appointed deputy collector of customs at Port Townsend, 30.
- McKelvey, state senator of Indiana, spoilsman, 407, 408.
- McKenna, Congressman J., secures removal of Mrs. McKinley, 90.
- McKenna, J. A., postmaster at Long Island City, removed despite protests and petitions, 45, 54; removed on secret charges, 175.
- McKenzie, A., controls patronage in N. Dakota, 216.
- McKinley, Mrs. L. W., postmistress at Winters, Cal., removed through influence of McKenna, 90.
- McKinley, W., political workers of rewarded, 52; platform of, 105; favors civil service commission, 119; thanked by Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, 120; supports civil service law, 124, 168, 169; fulfillment of party pledges, 168; holds competitive examinations for candidates for West Point, 254, 262; candidate for governor of Ohio, 280; political assessments for, 287; vote for in Minneapolis convention, 340, 343; tariff bill of in Louisiana, 345.
- McKnight bill, passage of, see Tammany, 317.
- McLain, J. R., journalist, postmaster at Della Plain, Tex., 155.
- McLaughlin, applicant for postmastership at Franklin, Ind., 88.
- McLaughlin, inspector in police department, examiner of police at Brooklyn, N. Y., 222.
- McLaughlin, political boss, 132, 318, 319, 414; patronage of in N. Y. state offices, 215; boss of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Croker, 245; and Hill, 309, 356; Hill gives Brooklyn bridge patronage to, 350; deals with Nathan, 352.
- McLean, A., given office by Tammany; career of, 355.
- McLean, D., politician, delegate to republican national convention, appointed general appraiser port of N. Y., 30; becomes political worker, 108.
- McMackin, J., custom-house employe in N. Y. City, a political worker, 279.
- "McMains" charges against Elkins, 291.
- McManes, J., 30; and appointment of Martin, disreputable politician, as collector of internal revenue in Penn., 232, 233, 241, 351, 374.
- McMillan, Senator, controls federal office-holders in Michigan, 335; supporter of Blaine, 344, 346.
- McMillin, Congressman, and civil service law, 124.
- McMullen, representative in Indiana legislature, and spoils methods in, 407.
- McMullin, C. A., journalist, postmaster at Benedict, Kan., 148.
- McNagney, Congressman, patronage of, 410, 422.
- McNew, J., clerk in Indiana Senate, 408.
- McNulta, Gen'l, attributes republican demoralization in Illinois to Harrison's use of patronage, 240.
- McNutt, A., P. O. employe, see Indianapolis investigation, 411.
- McPheeters, postmaster of Bloomington, Ind., at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- McPherson, controls patronage in Penn., 84.
- McQuinn, B., postmaster in Benton Co., Ia., a political worker, 260.
- McVickar, Rev. W. M., favors clerical recognition of civ. service reform, 40.
- McWhinney, T. A., political worker in New York, 264.
- Meacham, F. L., journalist, appointed postmaster at Plainview, Miss., 126.

- Meade, C. W., police justice, in New York convention, 334.
- Melrose, W. H., journalist, postmaster at Eskridge, Kan., 149.
- Memphis, Tenn., census of 1890 well conducted in, 292; Patterson, postmaster of, celebrates re-nomination of Harrison, 347.
- Merit system, in fighting trim, 25; and individual mauhood, 256.
- Merrill, Col., endorsed by Harrison's regiment, 89.
- Merritt, H. F., consul, removed for political reasons, 371.
- Merritt, J. A., politician, supported by Senator, Hiscock for postmaster at Lockport, N. Y., 216.
- Merser, G. A., on committee of National League to investigate political assessments, 338.
- Meschert, removed on suspicion of being disloyal to Harrison, 300.
- Messerne, C. F., officer in Indian service, asked for political contribution, 385.
- Metcalfe, Dr., of Indiana State Board of Health, inefficient, 315, 316.
- Metcalfe, appraiser at port of St. Louis, active politician, 143.
- Metzger, R., republican politician, on political activity of federal office-holders in Indianapolis, 378.
- Meyer, H. A., Nathan's candidate for mayor of Brooklyn, 287.
- Micheuer, L. T., chairman Indiana Republican State Committee, uses 4th class post-offices to make republican machine, 67; obtains removal of Suffall, postmaster at Freedom, Ind., and appointment of Watts, 112; and Harrison, 121, 354; attorney-general of Indiana, controls federal patronage of, 141, 173, 377, 378; politician, partner of Dudley, 189; worker for Harrison at Minneapolis, 337, 340, 342, 345.
- Michigan, Editor J. B. Stone appointed collector internal revenue 1st district of, 30; distribution of spoils in, by the democrats, results in defeat, 45; political activity of federal office-holders in, 335, 348, 390.
- Middlefield, O., Journalist Mordock postmaster at, 149.
- Middleton, A. R., negro, Harrison delegate from N. Carolina, 334.
- Middleton, D. C., chairman Jefferson Co., N. Y., republican committee levies political assessments, 392.
- Middleton, J. H., postmaster at West Hoboken, N. J., removed and no reasons given, Klumpp appointed, 176.
- Miles, Genl., on Indian abuses, 182; and Indian rising at Pine Ridge, S. Dak., 218.
- Miles, G. E., editor, appointed postmaster at Mannfield, Fla., 141.
- Milholland, J. E., chief inspector of immigration at New York, assists at dinner to Clarkson, 245; at convention of Republican League, 259; political worker, 265; federal employe, removed for political activity, 332, 334.
- Miller, A. J., office-holder, a political worker, 162.
- Miller, J., postmaster at Utica, N. Y., a political worker, 266.
- Miller, S. D., son of att'y-general, gets office, 242; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 339, 346.
- Miller, T., congressional candidate, offers bribes, 162.
- Miller, T. A., postmaster at Tuscaloosa, Ala., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Miller, T. C., physician, son of and competitive examinations for West Point, see Warwick.
- Miller, Warner, heads political faction, 75, 264, 353, 354; faction of, opposed to Platt, 259, 260; and Harrison, 337, 347; "placation" of, 360, 361.
- Miller, Attorney-Gen., appointees must be good men and republicans, 25, 35; and office-seekers, 37; rules of for appointment, 44; innuendo of Delphi Journal, 85; goes home to vote, 180; an independent in 1872; denounces Pres. Grant, 191, 192; and fraudulent cartage bids at N. Y. custom house, 216; and G. B. Ramm, Jr., 228; and printing office, 234; and Ramm investigation, 238; solicits campaign funds for Harrison, 240; invites criticism, 310; and Baltimore investigation, 329, 330; estimates Minneapolis convention, 345, 338; and Baltimore investigation, 372; and removal of Justice Sandford, 374; and political assessments, 387, 391, 392; political worker, 291, 389.
- Millersburg, O., editor appointed postmaster at, 301.
- Milligan, Congressman, civ. service reform, state of civ. service in his district, 73.
- Millikan, F. M., sec'y Indiana republican state committee, asks for political contributions, 387.
- Milliken, W. F., supported by T. Reed (Me.) for customs collector, 22; and J. Manley in Maine, 364.
- Milliken, N. J., journalist, postmaster at Canandaigua, N. Y., 155.
- Milo, Iowa, Editor Lyon appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Milwaukee, Wis., investigation of post-office at by civ. service commission adverse to postmaster, 36, 53; Paul, postmaster of resigns, 44, 47, 103, 104; Editor Watrous appointed collector at, former incumbent removed without cause, 71; civ. service reform in post-office at, 95; Postmaster Paul of removes Shidy, witness against him, 101, 103; per cent. of removals in classified and unclassified service in post-office at, 185.
- Milwaukee Sentinel [repub.], condemns Clarkson, 66.
- Minden, Neb., Postmaster McGinness of, forced to resign, 166.
- Miuisters, see also church.
- Miuister as citizen, from address of Congressman G. F. Williams, 239.
- Ministers, duty of to advocate civ. service reform, 71.
- Ministers, foreign, haste in removing, by Pres. Harrison, 27.
- Minneapolis, republican national convention at 1892; federal office-holders of delegates to, 337, 348, 357; nominations of, indorsed by Indiana federal office-holders at Washington, 354; Indiana delegates to refuse to pay assessments, 363; political activity of federal office-holders at, 349, 350, 364, 365, 370, 375, 379, 382; selection of delegates for, and political activity in, of federal office-holders in Indiana, 378, 380.
- Minneapolis Journal (rep.), denounces Harrison's surrender to spoils system, 177.
- Minnesota, senators of, at war over spoils, 30; political activity of federal office-holders in, 344, 348.
- Mississippi, appointees to Indian service from, under Cleveland, 219; political activity of federal officers in, 348, 339, 345, 341, 343, 337, 382.
- Missouri, removals in, 22; patronage in, 24, 52; spoils system in, 51; control of patronage in Sixth district of, 55; republicans of, think Clarkson too slow, 62; sale of offices in, 93; patronage in, given to Filley, 226; political activity of federal office-holders in, 336, 345, 346; Kerens for Harrison, chosen committeeman of delegation of, to Minneapolis convention; 346; political assessment of federal employes from, 383.
- Missonri, civil service reform association of, annual meeting of, 38; and removals in postal service, 92; report to on the civil service, 136; annual meeting, 1891; proceedings, 239.
- Mitchell, Sen., controls patronage in Oregon, 32; and Indians, 42.
- Mitchell, U. S. district att'y, and proposed prosecution of Van Cott and Hendricks, 287.
- Mitchell, B., federal employe, political worker in Indiana, 353.
- Mitchell, C. H., appointed patent commissioner by Harrison; efficient, 140.
- Mitchell, Ind., sale of postmastership at, see Wood and Hobbs, 89.
- Mitchell, W. A., P. O. employe, see Baltimore investigation, 268, 277, 296.
- Mizell, J. R., U. S. marshal, letter to C. C. Kirk, 90.
- Mizer, J. R., chairman Florida republican state committee, appointed U. S. marshal, 30.
- Moberly, Missouri, postmaster at, uses census enumerators as political workers, 131.
- Mobile, Ala., Baker, postmaster of, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Mohler, O. E., editor, "no Harrison republicans outside of office-holding ring," 240; on supporters of Harrison, 378.
- Moline, Kan., Journalist Armstrong postmaster at, 149.
- Molloy, J. R., sec'y Ohio republican state committee, levies political assessments, 390, 391.
- Moloney, Mrs. L., beggar, placed at top of eligible list for police matron of N. Y. City through political influence, 404.
- Monaghan, W., chairman Ohio republican state committee, given office, 46.
- Monahan, State Senator J., uses influence for O'Donnell, 59.
- Moncrief, Prof., 11; letter on ministers and civil service reform, 15.
- Money, J., chairman Tennessee delegation to republican national convention, 1888, appointed U. S. minister, 39.
- Monroe, Ia., Editor Vandermaast appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Monson, Mass., reappointment of democrat Harrington postmaster at, recommended by Congressman Rockwell, 188.
- Montagne, removal of for political reasons, 56.
- Montana, political activity of federal office-holders in, 337, 339, 342, 344.
- Montgomery, patent commissioner, spoilsman, 139, 140.
- Montgomery, postmaster at Bristol, Conn., recommended for re-appointment by Congressman Simonds, 91.
- Montgomery, Editor, see Greenfield, Ind., 89.
- Montgomery, J. A., appointed superintendent in Chicago post-office, 14.
- Moody, Sen., and Indian service, opposes Morgan, Indian commissioner, 79; appoints his son to office, 84; and Yankton Indian agency, 86; controls patronage in Indian service, 218.
- Moutoux, representative in Indiana legislature, opposes spoils methods in, 407.
- Moony, Miss., postmaster at Maspeth, L. I., removed on secret charges, place given to politician, 39.
- Moore, congressman and postmaster at Nashua, N. H., 73; favors civil service reform, 100, 123.
- Moore, E. H., gambler, discharged by Postmaster Jones, re-appointed by Postmaster Wallace, at Indianapolis, 18, 25; defended by Wallace and Asst. Postmaster Thompson, 28.
- Moore, A., deputy U. S. marshal and political worker in Indiana, 302, 353, 370, 375, 379.
- Moore, G. E., editor, appointed postmaster at Nara Springs, Iowa, 142.
- Moore, M., low political worker, controls patronage under Census Supervisor Conger, 129, 182; controls patronage in census service at Indianapolis, gets lists of voters of enumerators, 293; believes in political assessments, 332; chairman Republican County Committee at Indianapolis, attempts to bully Postmaster Thompson, 366. "Morals of Civil Service Reform," by L. M. Blackford, 136.
- Morey, Congressman, spoilsman, 15, 24.
- Morgan, state senator of Indiana, and spoils methods, 408.
- Morgan, editor and office-seeker, 16.
- Morgan, Indian commissioner, appoints his wife his private sec'y, 38; rules governing tenure of office in Indian service, 44; opposition to appointment of, 78; removals under in Indian service, 78, 79; and congressional barons, 86; not responsible for home rule policy, 98; upholds Harrison's Indian policy, 202; does not control appointments, 217.
- Morgan, G. H., democrat, re-appointed postmaster at Newton, Mass., 224.
- Morgan, W. B., customs collector at Buffalo, N. Y., a political worker, 265, 390.
- Morley, John, on slavery, 116.
- Morning Star (Baptist), advocates civil service reform, 30.
- Morris, alderman, political worker for Harrison in New York, 332.
- Morris, Ill., Journalist Fletcher appointed postmaster at, political worker, 126, 186.
- Morris, S. V., brother-in-law of Pres. Harrison, given office, 108.
- Morrison, D., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.
- Morse, E. A., opposed to retention of Spear, postmaster at Springfield, Mass., 86; and Postmaster Harlow at Whitman, 100; secures appointment of Adams, postmaster at Quincy, Mass., 100; gets office for his nephew, 108; correspondence of regarding postmastership of Plymouth, Mass., 187.
- Morse, F. C., appointed postmaster at Colfax, Wash., vice La Rue, forced to resign, 165.
- Morse, H. E., customs collector at Cape Vincent, N. Y., a political worker, see also Jefferson Co., N. Y., 266.
- Morse, S. B., negro federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Morss, S. E., of Indianapolis Sentinel, favors civil service reform, 227, 229; supporter of Cleveland at Chicago convention, 350.
- Morton, C. B., politician in Brooklyn, opposing Nathan, 304, 371.
- Morton, Vice-President, opposes appointment of Ritchie, postmaster at Saratoga, N. Y., 126; surety for Fassett, collector at N. Y. City, 258; Fassett favors at suggestion of Platt, 259; confers with Quay, 390.
- Morton, O. T., on popular objections to civil service reform, 85, 111, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119; attends dinner at Indianapolis to Roosevelt, speech of, 227, 229, 231; and levying of political assessments by Allen, 322, 331; on civil service reform, 396.
- Mosley, R. A., politician, appointed collector internal revenue in Alabama, 56; faction of, works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 346; in Alabama, leader of Harrison faction, 348.
- Mott, J. J., opposes Eaves, 150, 159.
- Moulton, W. P., editor, appointed postmaster at Stuart, Iowa, 142.
- Mt. Morris, Ill., F. Tice appointed postmaster at, see Hitt, 109.
- Mt. Vernon, Ind., editor, son of Governor Hovey, appointed postmaster at, 37, 71; postmaster at and Sen. Harrison, 96; Hovey, postmaster of, at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- Mountain City, Tenn., Journalist Keyes postmaster at, 155.
- Monnts, H., depnty collector at Indianapolis, worker against Chase, 352, 353, 379.
- Mowry, L. D., removed by Von Landberg, Hiscock appointed, 150.
- Moyer, H. B., journalist, postmaster at Freeburgh, Pa., 149.
- Mudd, S. E., congressman, political worker, 144; candidate, and political assessments, 162; ex-congressman, demands removal of Roosevelt, 226, 254.
- Mngwmp, defense of in Indianapolis News, 351; abuse of by republicans, 405.
- Mullen, Neb., Journalist Hammell postmaster at, 149.
- Mulligan, Mrs., appointed pension agent at Chicago, to succeed Miss Sweet, 107.
- Mulligan letters, 365.
- Mulliken, postmaster at Easton, Ind., in state convention, 335.
- Multnomah Co., Oregon, census service in, inefficient, 295.
- Muncie, Ind., political situation in, discontent of office-seekers, 88; applicants for postmastership of, Ellis appointed, 217; Ellis postmaster of, political worker for Harrison, 316, 362, 370, 378.
- Mundelle, R. B., discharged by Jones, postmaster at Indianapolis, reinstated by Wallace, postmaster at Indianapolis, 27, 34.
- Munroe, Ind., Stewart appointed postmaster of, resigns; G. Webster appointed; applicant Davis given another position, 86.
- Muuson, A., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.

- Murchison letter, 92.
- Murdock, C. B., journalist, postmaster at Middlefield, O., 119.
- Murphysborough, Ill., Postmaster Andrews of forced to resign, 165.
- Murphy E., mayor of Troy, Tammany chief, patronage of in N. Y. state offices, 215; corrupt politician, 307, 396; given office, 319; and prison patronage, 330; opposes mngwumps, 351; and nomination of Cleveland, 355; Cleveland refuses, while candidate, to pledge spoils to, 395; Cleveland opposes election of, as senator from New York, 404; obtains suspension of civil service rules in New York for benefit of worker Sternberg, 414; Sheehan worker for, 415.
- Murphy, M. C., appointed warden port by Gov. Flower, 319.
- Murphy, "Tom," controls N. Y. custom-house, 191.
- Murray, postmaster at Johnston, N. Y., and post-office department at Washington, 72.
- Murray, C. F., requests patronage, 311, 312.
- Murray, C. H., spoils circular of, for places in census service, 157; spoilsman, appointed census supervisor in N. Y. City, 294; supporter of Platt, removed, 333, 334; political worker in New York convention, 334; federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Murray, J., supt. custom-house at N. Y. City, resigns, 258.
- Muscatine, John Mahon, editor, appointed postmaster at, 46.
- Mustard, J., appointed postmaster at Glen Hall, Ind., vice Stepp, "resigned," 149.
- Muzzy, L. R., journalist, postmaster at Pulaski, N. Y., 155.
- Nampa, Idaho, Journalist Bacon, postmaster at, 155.
- Nashua, New Hamp., postmaster at, 73.
- Nashville, Ind., Allison, supported by Congressman Cooper for postmaster of, 398.
- Nathan, E., political worker, appointed collector internal revenue of Brooklyn (N. Y.) district, by Harrison, 55, 170, 191; wins fight in 23d ward in New York City, 121; political worker, for Congressman Wallace, 142, 150; backed by Platt, 143; uses power of office to intimidate voters, 178; trades votes for Wallace, 179, 180; engages in factional fights in Brooklyn and New York, 197, 198; corrupt political worker and boss, 264, 265, 304, 311, 332, 350, 371; political worker for Fassett, 287; in N. Y. convention, 335; worker for Platt, against against Willis, worker for Harrison, 336; boss in Kings Co., N. Y.; deals with McLaughlin, 352; controls machine in Kings Co., N. Y.; worker for Platt, 354, 355; uses office as political weapon, 374.
- National Baptist, on political status, as regards civil service reform, 257.
- National League of Civil Service Reform Associations, speeches before annual meeting of, 1890, see Civil Service Record; annual meeting at Philadelphia, Oct. 1-2, 51; annual meeting, 1889; resolutions of on agitating civil service reform, 66; appoints committee to investigate management of federal civil service, 77; investigating committee of, 85; special committee of, investigates patent office, 139, 140, 141; annual meeting of 1890; proceedings; report on presidential post-offices, 115, 153, 161, 172; investigation by special committee of, upon removals upon secret charges, 175, 176, 177; report of special committee of, on political changes in presidential post-offices, 186, 187, 188; resolutions of requesting Maryland Civ. Serv. Ref. Assoc. to investigate political activity of federal officers, 219; circular of executive committee of on status of civil service reform, 282; resolutions of at annual meeting, 1891, 286, 287; investigation of census service by special committee of, 291, 295; address before annual meeting on "Party and Patronage," by Curtis; also resolutions of, 321, 326, 329; committees appointed to investigate political assessments and political interference of federal office-holders, 338; report to committee of, investigating political activity of federal employes in Indiana, 375, 381.
- Nattinger, E. A., journalist, appointed postmaster at Ottawa, Ill., 126.
- Navarre, O., Journalist Carl, postmaster at, 149.
- Navy yard, at Brooklyn, N. Y., see Brooklyn, 45; at Brooklyn, N. Y., clean sweep in, see Dady, 106; at Kittery, Me., spoils system at under Sec'y Tracy, 145; at Brooklyn, N. Y., examinations under Sec'y Tracy at, statement of examining board, 236; at Norfolk, Va., and Portsmouth, N. H., merit system introduced in by Tracy, 251; introduction of merit system into requested by Mass. legislature, see Tracy, 274, 276; application merit system to commended, 286; Sec'y Tracy institutes merit system in, 221, 222, 230, 298, 306, 321, 326; at Brooklyn, N. Y., employes in ordered to work for renomination of Harrison, 336; at Brooklyn, Page, chief of ordnance dept., removed, 355; Sec'y Tracy introduces Boston labor system in, 331, 357, 376.
- Neal, U. S. attorney, active politician, 143.
- Nebeker, U. S. treasurer, spoilsman, tries to get office for his son, 253, 254; political worker, 370, 382.
- Nebo, Ill., Editor Lansdon appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Nebraska, office-seekers in, 6; political activity of federal officers in, 318, 370; political assessments in Indian service in, 384, 385.
- Neely, C. F. W., editor, applicant for postmaster-ship of Muncie, Ind., 217.
- Neff, J. I., recommended by Illinois senators and congressmen for assistant treasurer, 110.
- Negroes, desire "representation," 243, 244.
- Nelson, I. D. G., condemns democrats for defeating Magee bill for non-partisan control of Indiana state charitable institutions, 215.
- Neodesha, Kan., Postmaster Lee of, removed after four years' service, second commission unexpired, 187.
- Neoga, Ill., Editor Hancock appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Nepotism, see also Thomas Jefferson on, Cleveland.
- Nepotism, under Harrison, 21, 30, 253, 282, 369.
- Nettleton, acting secretary of treasury, and so-called resignation of Macgregor, 216.
- New, J. C., Editor, distributor of patronage in Indiana, 7, 85; appointed consul-general to London, 14; and Harrison, 121; works for re-nomination of Harrison, 334, 337, 340, 342, 344, 345, 357, 377, 379.
- New Albany, Ind., postmaster Godfrey at, spoilsman, 45, 393; works for Michener, 144; political worker for Harrison, 316; at Minneapolis convention, 377, 378, 380; Marsh, P. O. employe at, political worker, 380.
- New Albany Evening Tribune (rep.) and CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 13; advocates civil service reform, 83.
- New Bedford, Mass., carpenter, postmaster at, removed on secret charges without investigation, 29, 175, 176.
- New Carlisle, Ind., Editor Fountain appointed postmaster at, 126, 377.
- New Castle, Ind., W. F. Shelley, dentist, appointed postmaster at, 132.
- New Castle, Ind., Courier (rep.), advocates civil service reform, 76.
- New Hampshire, administration organ denounces civil service reform, 62; patronage of given to Chandler, 340; political activity of federal officers in, 348, 371.
- New Haven, Conn., Sperry, postmaster at, favors civil service reform, 91; removal of English, postmaster at, 96; per cent. of removals in classified and unclassified service in post-office at, 185; Sperry, postmaster of, testifies to worth of Bario, P. O. inspector removed, 298; civil service reform association of and post-office at, 96.
- New Holland, O., Journalist Lewis postmaster at, 149.
- New Holland, Pa., postmaster at removed through influence Brosius, 72.
- New Jersey, political activity of federal office holders in, 347.
- New Mexico, vote of for Harrison at Minneapolis, 347.
- New Milford, Pa., Journalist Vail, postmaster at, 149.
- New Orleans collector at, Ex-Gov. Warmouth appointed, 41; Collector Warmouth of, obtains appointment of Wehr as postmaster at Donaldson, La., 241; customs district of, classified 1883, 276; and state politics, 283; relative of Harrison appointed naval officer at, 369; Eaton, postmaster of, pays political assessments, 383.
- New Richland, Kan., Journalist Bronson appointed postmaster at, 126.
- New Sharon, Iowa, Editor Vail appointed postmaster at, 142.
- New York City, see Pearson, postmaster at, and Van Cott, postmaster at, places of federal offices in, at disposal of "The" Allen, see post-office at, 12, 45; given over to spoilsman, 28; custom-house at, civil serv. com. investigates, 29; post-office at, saving by merit system in, 35; Fire Chief Shay, retired on pension, 36; custom-house at, civ. service commission investigates, 36; Russell Harrison secures appointment for friend as postal stampst. at, 38; reform club of, work of, against tariff, 42; sixth assembly district of, resolutions of against civ. service reform, 49.
- New York Custom-house at, removals in, 54; applications for position in custom-house at, 75; effect of patronage in twenty-first assembly district of, 75; custom-house employes at, aid politicians and go on committees, 108; fire service in, 120; attempt to purify politics in, 130; per cent. of removals in, classified and unclassified service in post-office at, 185; Willis, naval officer at, a spoilsman, 191; custom-house at, controlled by "Tom" Murphy, C. A. Arthur, Leet, and Stocking, 191; account of factional fights for control of party machine in, 198, 199, 241, 242; custom-house at, cartage frauds practiced at, 216; street-cleaning department should be under merit system, 220, 221; custom-house at, Roosevelt invites 21st district republican association of New York City to investigate custom-house service at, 236; removal of Burt, naval officer at, for political reasons, 63, 237; civil service commission, not very commendable, 239; employes in custom-house of, appointed through influence of Platt; Collector Erhardt "resigns," Fassett appointed, 255, 258, 259, 260, 261; Feudalism revived in, 263; Erhardt, collector of, and office-seekers recommended by Platt, 264; Hendricks, political worker for Hiscock and Platt, succeeds Fassett as collector of, 264, 266, 269; James, P. O. employe at, and others, federal employes, political workers, 265; customs district of, classified 1883, 276; customs house employes in political workers for Fassett, 278; government of, 284, 285; Tammany methods in, 291; census service in inefficient, 294; thefts of Hill in, 306, 307; "sugar frauds" in custom house at, see Hillism, 310; state of politics in Brooklyn and, 350; Tammany makes political machine of health department of, 356; Boston labor system used for street work at, 357; employes in sub-treasury at ordered to vote republican ticket, 390; civil service board of (Tammany) and fraudulent appointment of Mrs. Maloney, 404.
- New York Herald, on "Paddy" Divver, 184.
- New York Evening Post, attributes republican defeat of 1889, chiefly to spoils system, 76; on civil service law, 92; on progress in civil service methods, 224; exposes corrupting influences of Tammany, 289, 290.
- New York Press (rep.), declares republican party favors extension of civil service law, 65.
- New York Sun, for spoils, 93.
- New York Times, account of caucus in Buffalo, N. Y., 196; accounts of spoils fights in several states, 215, 216, 217; on Kanm and Harrison, 238.
- New York Tribune, on Postmaster Pearson, 12; supports Mahone, 53; advocates civ. service reform, 65; on "Paddy" Divver, 184; defends Platt against Erhardt, 255; silent regarding civil service pledges of Harrison in 1892, 357; subsidized by Harrison, 369.
- New York World, charges of against Senator Quay, 112; on "Paddy" Divver, 184.
- New York State, see civil service commission of, platform, convention; delegation from and its demands, 21; patronage of given to T. Platt by President Harrison, 27, 52, 56, 68, 173, 245, 258, 259, 261, 282, 332, 368, 376; delegate to Republican National Convention appointed general appraiser at port of, 30; Niagara Co., removals in federal offices of, 30; congressional patronage in (see Quackenbush), 32; post-offices in (see Delano), 47; competitive system in, 52; republicans in think President Harrison not bound to keep reform pledges, 62; republican committees of denounce civil service reform, 63; weakening influence of office-holding in, 75; clergymen of, oppose impure political methods, 155; disregard of civil service law of, 161; state courts of, uphold N. Y. civil service law, 161, 200, 281, 286; elections of 1890 in, disastrous to civil service reform, 173; postmasters in, appointed by Congressman Sherman, 180; quarrels over patronage in legislature of, 215; evasion of civil service law in cities in, reform associations of New York and Brooklyn are to blame, 219; R. P. Flower, candidate of Croker, Tammany "boss" for governor of, 245, 261; corruption in, 281; political assessments in, 180, 282, 286, 287, 391, 392; Hillism in, 309; legislature of stolen by Hill and Tammany, 306, 313, 314; political corruption long-seated in, appointing council of, 325; political activity of federal office-holders in, 272, 332, 334, 335, 336, 337, 342, 348, 359, 360, 361, 371, 384, 385, 387, 390, 391; republican discord in, 351, 352; nomination of Cleveland and democratic regular organizations in, 355; republican association requests lists for assessment purposes, 363; Riley, chief examiner of civil service commission of, removed by Tammany, 414.
- N. Y. Civil Service Reform Association, annual election, 23; annual meeting 1891, report of executive committee on efficiency of N. Y. state and various city civil service commissions, 239; correspondence with treasury and P. O. departments over political activity of Van Cott and Hendricks, 289; committee of, investigates civil service examination in N. Y. City service, 319, 320; and prison appointments, 331.
- Newark, N. J., per cent. of removals in classified and unclassified service in post-office at, 185.
- Newark, O., Iches, editor, postmaster at, 301.
- Newaygo, Mich., Journalist Shaw postmaster at, 149.
- Newberry, General, confirmed as postmaster at Chicago, 6.
- Newburgh, Ind., Cushman, postmaster of, political worker, 380.
- Newburg, N. Y., Taggart, postmaster of, political worker for Platt, 260; census of 1890 well conducted in, 292; primaries at, run by workers for Hill, 309.
- Newcomb, J., postmaster, a political worker, 159.
- Newell, Ia., Editor Blair, postmaster at, a political worker.
- Newins, politician in Brooklyn, N. Y., opposing Nathan, 304.
- Newport, R. I., Fay appointed postmaster at, 150.
- Newton, C. E., editor, appointed postmaster at Kawanna, Ind., 126, 377.
- Newton, Mass., Democrat Morgan appointed postmaster at, 224; civil service reform association of, address before, on influence of Clarkson and Wanamaker, by Rev. H. Lambert, 136, 261.
- Newtonville, Mass., Turner indorsed for reappointmen, 100.
- Nihlack, Judge, votes against Pendleton act; address of on civil service reform, 138, 139; ex-judge Indiana supreme court, favors civil service reform, 227, 229.
- Nichols, trades votes in behalf of Congressman Wallace, 179.

- Nicholls, E. T., commandant of navy yard at Kittery, Me., 147.
- Nichols, J., treasury chief of division, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 331, 348.
- Nicholls, J. A., quarantine commissioner, supports Congressman Wallace, 142; corrupt politician, 311.
- Nicholson, M., of Indianapolis News, favors civil service reform, 227, 229.
- Nicoll, dist. attorney, and Rev. Dr. Parkhurst, 319.
- Niedringhaus, F. G., and Harrison, 14; aiding office-seekers, 15; and federal appointments in Missouri, 22.
- Niligh, Neb., Journalist Best postmaster at, 149.
- Nipher, Prof. F. E., supposed telegram to by Secretary Rusk and reply, 241, 245, 253.
- Nithey, Mich., poll of voters asked of Daniels, postmaster of, 383.
- Nixon, editor and collectorship of customs at Chicago, 47.
- Nixon, deputy controller of currency, political worker, 389.
- Noble, Rev. Dr., on parties and government, 82.
- Noble, Secretary, on putting census bureau under civil service law, 19; accedes to wishes of Senator Mitchell regarding patronage of Oregon, 32; and Indian agents Rosebud agency, Dakota, 48; refuses to state causes of removal of Vandever, 181; spoilsman, 70, 191, 291; to blame for Harrison's Indian policy, 202; spoilsman and Indian service, 98, 221, 226; on Raum scandals, 237; establishes rules for promotion in interior department, 298; and federal patronage in St. Louis, 304; requests removal of Collector Wencker, of Missouri, 336; and political assessments in Indian service, 375.
- Noblesville, Ind., postmaster at appointed, 47; Cheadle recommends Frybarger, afterwards Royer, for postmaster at, 89; Royer, postmaster of, political worker, 380.
- Nogales, Arizona, Journalist Chatham postmaster at, 155.
- Nolau, E., federal employe, political worker, 302, 375.
- Nora Springs, Iowa, Editor Moore appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Norfolk Republican Club of Boston and Clarkson, 119, 131.
- Norfolk, Va., Brady appointed collector at, 52; navy yard at, repairs in, for Mahone's benefit, 59; navy yard at, spoils system in, 147, 153; merit system introduced in navy yard at by Tracy, 251.
- Norris, C. O., P. O. employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- N. Carolina, patronage of given away by Harrison, 150; negroes of demand spoils, 159; political situation and fights in, 159; secret charges in, 312; political activity of federal office-holders in, 334, 362, 373; political assessments levied in by Eaves, 362.
- N. Dakota, patronage of, given to A. McKenzie, also to Ball, 216; political activity of federal officers in, 348.
- Northrup, editor Syracuse Courier, postmaster at, see Syracuse, 46.
- Norton, C. E., pres. Cambridge Civil Service Reform Association, and Harrison, 204, 205.
- Norton, M., letter to from Davenport questioning right to vote, 387.
- Norwich, Conn., post-office at under Cleveland, removal of postmaster of by Harrison, 29; census of 1890 not well conducted at, 293.
- Notson, J. T., journalist, appointed postmaster at Farragut, Iowa, 142.
- Nowland, custom-house deputy at Indianapolis, political worker, 108.
- Nowlin, E., republican politician, census supervisor 2d Indiana district, 100.
- Noyes, L. M., editor, appointed postmaster at Akron, Ind., 126, 377.
- Nugent, J. R., food contractor in barge office at New York, requests patronage, 311, 312; food contractor in barge office, in New York convention, 334; at Minneapolis convention, 344.
- O'Brien, 330, 331.
- O'Brien, E. C., federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 345, 348.
- O'Brien, H., mayor of Boston, and civ. service reform, 82.
- O'Brien, J., corrupt politician, and Hill, 307.
- O'Brien, J. J., spoilsman and bribe-taker, 170, 171.
- O'Connell, police surgeon, and examiner at Brooklyn, N. Y., 222.
- O'Connor, councilman of Indianapolis, supports Fire Chief Webster, 208.
- O'Day, D., supports Delamater on behalf of Standard Oil Company, 131.
- O'Donnell, groom of G. B. Raum, Jr., employed in pension office, 190.
- O'Donuell, J., jury-briber, given office through influence of Senator Farwell and others, 59.
- O'Donohue, J. J., recommends "Paddy" Divver for police justice, 184.
- O'Dwyer, Dr. J., resigns from N. Y. City Health Dept., because it becomes political machine, 356.
- O'Mara, J., violates health laws, given office by board of health at Indianapolis, 316.
- O'Neill, ex-Congressman, and his political assessment, 150.
- O'Neill, C., naval officer on board to examine applicants for positions in navy yard at Brooklyn, N. Y., 221.
- O'Rourke, J., appointed foreman in Brooklyn navy yard, efficient, 142; appointed master boiler-maker in Brooklyn navy yard under Cleveland, removed under Harrison, gets back on examination, 236.
- Oakford, Ind., postmaster at, see Martin and Croushore, 96.
- Oberlin, Kan., Journalist Barin postmaster at, 149.
- Oberly, Indian commissioner, 9, 48, 86; and Senator Ingalls, 22; removed by President Harrison, 27, 44; ex-commissioner opposes publicity of eligible lists, 53.
- Odell, postmaster at Beverly, Mass., a political worker, 162.
- Odell, B. B., Jr., political worker for Platt, 260.
- Oeh, P. O. employe, see Baltimore investigation, 295, 326, 327.
- Oelrichs, S. Dak., Journalist Jones, postmaster at, 150.
- "Offensive Partisanship," removals for, see report special committee Nat. League, 1889-90, 188.
- Office, scramble for, 3, 6.
- Office-brokerage, see Eubanks; also sale of offices, 23.
- Office-holders, republican, leave Washington to vote, 162.
- Ogden, Ind., postmaster of, distributes campaign documents, 390.
- Ogdensburg, N. Y., Postmaster Baird removed, Editor Smith appointed, 126; custom-house at, not classified, number of employes in, 277.
- Ohio, and spoils, 15; Darke Co. postmaster in, removed, 23; republicans of and Gov. Foraker, 21; republicans of, think civ. service reform a humbug, 62; campaign of 1889 in, run by Congressman Grosvenor, spoilsman, 68; status of merit system in, hopeful, 119; political assessments of federal employes from, 179; republican association of, and printing-office, 231; patronage of given to Sherman, 240; defeat of Foraker for governor of, owing to use of patronage, 240; political assessments in, 272, 280, 282, 287, 390, 412; federal patronage used by Harrison in, for re-election of Sherman, 297, 300, 301, 302; political activity of federal office-holders in, 335, 336, 346; vote of at Minneapolis divided between Blaine, Harrison and McKinley, 340, 343; patronage of given to Sherman, 340; relative of Harrison appointed collector of internal revenue in, 369.
- Olathe, Kan., Journalist Perkins appointed postmaster at, 126.
- Old Dominion Republican League, attempts to aid Mahone by political assessments, frustrated by civil service commission, 70; political assessments by, in Washington departments, 412.
- Oler, C. H., efficient railway mail clerk, 221.
- Olin, Iowa, Editor Burke appointed postmaster at, 112.
- Oliver, mayor of Lockport, N. Y., and Sickles, N. Y. civil service commissioner, 31.
- Olneyville, R. I., postmistress of, removed for political reasons, 288.
- Olsen, ward politician of Indianapolis, supports Fire Chief Webster, 208.
- Omaha, Neb., Vandervoort, disreputable politician, appointed mail superintendent at, 210, 216; violations of law by postmaster of, 281.
- Omaha Republican (rep.), on curse of office-seeking, 65.
- Oneonta, N. Y., Postmaster Bundy of, removed on secret charges, 176.
- Onondaga Co., N. Y., factional fights at, republican caucuses in, political activity of federal office-holders, 264, 265.
- Orcutt, F. E., collector internal revenue, a political worker, 160, 162, 179.
- Oregon, "Sol" Hirsch, the "Tom Platt" of, 29; patronage of Sen. Mitchell in, 32.
- Oregon, Ill., Jewett appointed postmaster at, see Hitt, 109; Postmaster Marsh of, removed after four years' service, second commission unexpired, 187.
- Orlando, Fla., Delaney, postmaster at, removed on secret charges, I. Fletcher appointed, 176.
- Osage Mission, Kan., Postmaster Brunt of, removed, after four years' service, second commission unexpired, Park appointed, 187, 188.
- Osborn, S. C., federal employe, worker for Allison, 334.
- Osborne, United States Minister, in Brazil and Jewett claims, 290.
- Osborne, Judge, grants writ of mandamus against Nathan, for corrupt practices, 265.
- Osborne, Congressman, obtains office for his son, 81.
- Osborne, J. B., given office through influence of Congressman Osborne, 84.
- Oskaloosa, Kan., Journalist Roberts postmaster at, 149.
- Osseo, Wis., Journalist Thomas, postmaster at, 153.
- Ostendorf, J. H., deputy collector, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Oswego, N. Y., Editor Place, spoilsman, appointed postmaster at, 126; custom house at not classified, number of employes in, 277; Clark, N. Y. assembly man introduces bill for municipal reform in, 115.
- Otis, E. L., applicant for postmastership at Rochelle, Ill., 109.
- Otis, W. F., federal employe, congratulates Pres. Harrison, 347.
- Ottawa, Ill., Journalist Nottinger appointed postmaster at, 126.
- Ottawa, Kau., Journalist Kessler postmaster at, 149.
- Overin, G. D., federal employe, political worker for Harrison, 334.
- Overstreet, H. G., and political assessments, see Kentucky.
- Ovid, Mich., Postmaster Cowan of, forced to resign, 165.
- Owen, Congressman, and office-seekers, 14; spoilsman, 21, 30, 85, 90; suggests postmasters, 53; opposes appointment of Cravens, 84; recommends appointment of Tomlinson as postmaster at Logansport, Ind., 88; and Winamac, Ind., postmastership, 88; secures appointment of inefficient postmaster at Hammond, Ind., 90; and editor of Delphi Journal, 97; given patronage by Harrison, 240.
- Owen, W. D., superintendent immigration, 39; political worker, 382, 390.
- Owings, W., low politician and murderer, gets office through Gorman, 237.
- Oxford Co., Pa., applicants for postmaster of, 55.
- Oxford, Ind., Editor Carr appointed postmaster at, 126, 377.
- Pacific Unitarian Conference, resolution of, that ministers should officially advocate civil service reform, 65.
- Paddock, Sen., and Lincoln, Neb., post-office, 72; attempt of to withdraw railway mail service from civil service law, 92; secures appointment of Editor Gere as postmaster at Lincoln, Neb., 108.
- Page, E. F., chief of ordnance dept. in Brooklyn navy yard, removed, 355.
- Painesville, O., editor of Telegraph appointed postmaster at, 301.
- Palermo, Italy, editor appointed consul at, 240.
- Palmer, as presidential possibility, 235.
- Palmer, public printer and applications for office, 37.
- Palmer, F. W., and pardon of Petroff and Kemble, 152.
- Palo Pinto, Mo., Postmaster Trollington buys influence of Upton and gets office, 55.
- Paoli, Ind., editor appointed postmaster at, 37.
- Paradis, J. F., journalist, postmaster at Hemingford, Neb., 149.
- Park, politician, appointed census enumerator through Congressman Evans, 294.
- Park, E. B., appointed postmaster at Osage Mission, Kan., vice Blunt, removed after four years' service, second commission unexpired, 187, 188.
- Parker, Lieutenant, relative of Pres. Harrison, given office, 30.
- Parker, A. X., U. S. deputy atty., a political worker, 279.
- Parker, J., politician, and post-office at Rochelle, Ill., 109.
- Parker, M. F., postmaster at Cullman, Ala., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Parkhurst, Rev. C. H., on purity in politics, 119; exposes immoralities of Tammany rule, 319.
- Parkinson, councilman of Indianapolis, supports Fire Chief Webster, 208.
- Parks, W. R., editor, appointed postmaster at Petersburg, Ill., 111.
- Parnell Hall, nominating caucus for city officers of Indianapolis, account of, 194, 195.
- Parr, Prof. S. S., part of address of at annual meeting of Indiana Civil Service Ref. Ass'n, 1889, 8.
- Parsons, U. S. marshal, works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 345.
- Parsons, G. H., ex-mayor of Elmira, N. Y., dismissed from U. S. Express Company for political reasons, 239.
- Parton James, on civil service reform, 18.
- Party, evils of strict adherence to, 236.
- Party and patronage, address, see Curtis.
- "Party Boss," political advice of, 191.
- Passage, representative in Indiana legislature, spoilsman, 407.
- Pate, postmaster of Boonville, Ind., political worker, 380.
- Patent office, investigation of civil service in by committee of National League, 139, 140, 141; examinations and classified positions in, 141.
- Patrick, J. B., journalist, postmaster at Clarion, Pa., 149.
- Patronage a source of weakness, see Foulke, Brooklyn Ferries, 63, 68; party and, addresses, see Curtis; troubling republican party, 6; evils of, 25, 30, 41; evils of distribution of public, Senator Harrison on, 46; Depew on, 75; Wilmington Morning News (rep.) on, 75; La Grange Standard on, 83; evils of, see Platt, Boston Transcript, Indianapolis News, St. Louis Globe-Democrat, Philadelphia North American, N. Y. Evening Post, Philadelphia American, 76; source of weakness to Cleveland and Harrison, 83; system denounced by republicans of Wayne Co., N. Y., 156; evil effects of on schools of Baltimore, 211; condemned in state charitable institutions as barbarous by Indianapolis Sentinel, 202; evils of, in England, 270; system condemned, 271; system, in census service, bill of Garfield against, 291; system not according to organic law, 306; abuse of by Harrison, see National League, resolutions 1892, 321; and the constitution, 323; use of by a president to secure a re-election impossible, see Indianapolis Journal, 348.
- Patronage, federal, see also patronage, congress

- sional; see Towner; see Sewell; of patent office, 139, 140; of treasury department used by Foster to turn Ohio from Blaine to Harrison, 240; mcager distribution of to negroes, 243, 244; given to negro Langston, 340; used by Harrison to secure renomination, 298; of Indiana used by various people, 38, 84, 144, 173, 297, 316, 317, 376; of Maine, navy yard at Kittery, Me., used for Gooch and Frost, 147; of Missouri, see also Filley, 52; New York, given to Platt, 27, 52, 56, 68, 94, 121, 142, 173, 211, 255, 259, 263-266, 281, 282, 288, 376, see also W. Barnes; see Birkett, 55, Woodruff, 106, Lake and McKane, 132; of New York custom-house, disposal of, 216; of navy yard at Mare Island given to ward bosses, 226; of N. Carolina, 47, 150; of Ohio used by Sec'y Foster, 91; of Pennsylvania, that of Collector Cooper in, see Cooper; of Pennsylvania, used by Harrison to secure renomination, 299, 301; of Texas, given to Cuuey, 173; Virginia, given to Mahone, 27, 31, 38, 41, 52, 56, 67, 68, 70, 74, 94, 376.
- Patronage, state and local; in offices at Indianapolis, see Markey; in fire service, 137; to be controlled by mayor, 190; municipal at Cincinnati controlled by Gov. Foraker, 71; quarrels over in legislature of New York, see Shcchan, De Freest, Webster, Murphy and McLaughlin, 215; in New York state affairs, use of, 216; of Brooklyn, New York, bridge, quarrel over, see Croker, 245; in New York and Tammany, 318.
- Patronage, congressional, R. R. mail service open to, 27; see Cin. Commercial Gazette, 65; evil of, 66; as practiced in U. S. Senate, 72; see report of committee of National League on, see also Garfield, 113, 114, 115, 188; is doomed, 120; condemned by resolutions of Maryland Civil Service Reform Association, 136; see letter of Wanamaker to Postmaster Marsh, 187; see Indian service, 36, 42, 192, 219; in postal service, 193; in census service, see also Porter, 234, 292; Allison, 334; Andrew, 405; Banks, 31, 39; Bayne, 133, 135, 299; Belden, 46, 71, 132; Bowden, 153; Bretz, 409-411, 419, 421, 422; Brookshire, 393, 405, 409-411, 413, 419; Brosius, 72; in N. Carolina, Brower, 47; Brown, 240, 393, 409-411, 419-422; advocated by Congressman Brown, 35, 84, 89, 118; Bynum, 392, 405, 409-411, 418-422; Sen. D. Cameron, 72, 133, 162, 329; Candler, 99, 224; in Cannelton, Ind., post-office, 26; Cannon, 30, 31, 34, 35, 39, 160, 179; Chandler, 100, 148, 340; Cheadle, 47, 55, 71, 77, 84, 85, 88, 89, 129, 149, 240, 377; Cheatham; in Chester Co., Pa., 55; Clarkson, 331; Cockrell, 234; Cogswell, 187, 288; Coleman, 71; Conn. 409-411, 420, 422; Connelley, 72, 108; Cooper, 112, 398-400, 405, 409-411, 416, 422; Sen. Cullom, 30, 31, 37, 95, 109, 188; Dalzell, 30, 87, 90, 112, 133, 299; Darlington, 54, 55; Sen. Davis, 84; Sen. Dawes, 71, 104; De Haven, 187; Delano, 47; Du Bois, delegate from Idaho, 30; Dunnell, 39; Eubanks, 99; Evans, 55, 294; of N. Carolina, see Ewart, 47, 159; Farwell, 31, 37, 60, 83, 95, 109; Flood, 54, 150, 259; condemned, see Flower, 201; Fry, 242; Gest, 47; of W. Va., see Goff, 71; Gorman, 3, 5, 15, 38, 70, 93, 181, 234, 235, 237; Greenhalge, 100; Grosvenor, 204, 205; Sen. Hale, 242; Hammond, 409, 411, 416, 417, 422; Sen. Hampton, 74; Hansbrough, 216; Harmer, 241; Harrison and Massachusetts offices, 93; Hartwig, 99; Hathaway, 242; Sen. Hawley, 84, 99; Sen. Higgins, 38, 334; Sen. Hiscock, 46, 71, 132, 150, 216, 241, 259, 312; Hitt, 136, 143, 160; Sen. Hoar, 71, 104; Holman, 39, 393, 399, 400, 409, 411, 417, 419, 421, 422; Hopkins, 109; Houk, 35, 54, 55, 84; Illinois congressman, 240; Ingalls, 22, 154; Johnson, 419; Kean, 216; Kellogg, 71, Kelly, 188; Lafayette Courier, 83; Lafolette, 293; Lodge, 30, 39, 41, 69, 71; Love, 99; Lowry, 39; Sen. Manderson, 72, 108; Martin, 399, 400, 409, 411, 419, 420; in Massachusetts, 93; see Mathews, delegate from Dakota, 30; Matson, 30, 31; McClellan, 422; McKenna, McNagney, 409, 411, 422; McPherson, 84; Miller, T., Minnesota, senators of, 30; in Missouri, 51; Monaghan, 59; Moody, 84, 86, 218; Moore, 100; Morse, 86, 100, 108, 187; Norfolk, Va., 251; Osborne, 84; Owen, 14, 21, 30, 55, 84, 85, 88, 90, 98, 240; Sen. Paddock, 72, 108; Payson, 73, 188; Perkins, 35; Pettigrew, 131, 218; Sen. Plumb, 55; Pope, 52; Posey, 46, 59; Postgate, 99; Quackenbush, 32, 54, 242; Quay, 6, 15, 17, 22, 27, 28, 30, 33, 39, 47, 52, 56, 68, 72, 87, 90, 91, 95, 100, 104, 111, 112, 118, 133, 135, 151, 160, 173, 216, 235, 241, 249, 263, 270, 280, 282, 299-301, 329, 332, 374, 376; Raines; Randall, 29, 224; Ray, 99, 100, 118, 133; Reed, T. B., 91, 150, 153, 242; in Rhode Island, 150, Rockwell, 188; Roosevelt, 39, 191; Sanders, 160; Sanford, 126; Sawyer, 57; Scranton, 101; Shearman, 54, 55; Sherman, 67, 149, 240, 249, 301, 310; Shively, 421; Simmonds, 73; Smith, 38; Smith G. W.; Spooner, 30; Steele, 240; Stockbridge, 84; Stroupe; Sweeney, 121; Taylor, 35, 75, 419, 421; Thompson, 55; Turner, 100; Turple, 405, 409-411, 413, 418-422; Upton, 55, 99; Van Schaick, 44, 47, 55; Vandervoort, 215; Vest, 242; Voorhees, 222, 235, 393, 405, 409-411, 413, 418-422; Walker; Wallace, 55, 72, 132, 142, 143; Sen. Washburn, 84; Watrous, 71; Waugh, 419; Wever, 249; Wood, 150.
- Patterson, postmaster of Memphis, Tenn., celebrates nomination of Harrison, 347.
- Patterson, A. M., political worker for Miller, 259, 260.
- Patterson, J. B., federal office-holder in Boone Co., Iowa, political worker, 260.
- Patterson, J. M., ward politician, see New York City; requests patronage, 311, 312; office-seeker, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344, 348; political worker for Harrison, 359, 360.
- Patterson, W., appointed superintendent of Indpls post-office, unfit, 19, 21, 27, 34; political worker for Harrison, 302, 337-343, 353, 370, 375, 379, 389.
- Pattison, candidate for governor opposing Delamater in Pennsylvania, 135, 161; of Pennsylvania, and Quay, 280.
- Pattison, governor of Nebraska, and Vandervoort, disreputable politician, 216.
- Patton, president of Princeton College, and politics, 396, 404.
- Patton, C. O., Harrison elector, and postmastership at Stanberry, Mo., 121.
- Paul, postmaster at Milwaukee, spoilsman, civil service commission reports adversely to, 36, 104; and Wanamaker, 44; resigns, 47; spoilsman, removes Shidy who testifies against him, 161, 103.
- Paul, H. S., and appointment of McKean postmaster of Pittsburgh, 91.
- Paul, R. H., ballot stuffer, appointed U. S. marshal in Arizona, 374.
- Pawnee City, Neb., Journalist Hassler postmaster at, 149.
- Paxton, Ill., Editor Stevens appointed postmaster at, 126.
- Payn, L. F., 312; supporter of Blaine, opposed to Harrison, 347; worker for Platt, 360.
- Payson, Congressman, spoilsman, 22, 73; demands removal of Reno, postmaster of Pontiac, Ill., for "offensive partisanship," 188; chairman of house during debate over civil service commission, 204, 205.
- Pcairs, H. B., employe in Indian service, asked for political contributions, 385.
- Pearson, H. G., postmaster at New York and the post-office, 12, 17, 20, 32, 38, 43, 168, 169, memorial on, 23; removed by Pres. Harrison for political reasons, 27, 30, 52, 63, 64, 68, 94, 173, 237, 282, 367, 376; the civil service in post-office of, under, 12.
- Peddle, A., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.
- Peele, S. J., worker for Harrison, appointed judge of court of claims, 378, 379.
- Peetrey, chief of division, removed for political reasons, 55.
- Pendleton, G. H., civ. service law due to him and D. B. Eaton, 79, 82, 125.
- Pendleton, Ind., Editor Caddy appointed postmaster at, 126, 377.
- Pendleton act (civil service law), 75, 118, 119, 128, 271, 276; provides penalties for public employes soliciting political contributions, 279.
- Pennsylvania, senators of, and spoils, 15, 313, 314, 329; patronage of, given by Pres. Harrison to Senator Quay, 27, 28, 38, 52, 56, 68, 72, 87, 90, 94, 95, 111, 112, 135, 173, 376; Senator Quay displaces Sen. Cameron as spoils distributor, 30; Sen. Cameron controlled patronage in, 34; distractions in, resulting from distribution of spoils, influence of Senators Quay and Cameron, 47; republican ass'n of, see Stratton, 49; republicans of denounce civ. service reform as a sham, 62; status of affairs before election, 138; condemnation of Quay and Delamater by Lincoln republican committee of Pennsylvania, 156; republican convention 1890 commends course of Quay, 156; political situation in, revolt against Quay, see, also, Quay, 161, 162; defeat of Quay in elections of 1890, 173; ballot reform bill in legislature of ruined by Quay, aided by Martin, federal officer, 228, 229; "Quayism" in, 245, 246, 249, 250, 251, 252; address to the citizens of, against "Quayism," 249, 251, 252; federal officers enulogize Quay, 260; Quay wins in, 281; political assessments in, 282, 286; patronage given to Quay; "degradation of politics in," see Welsh, 282; removals from office in of supporters of Quay, 299, 300, 301; delegation to national convention controlled by Quay; Bardsley frauds, 310; political corruption in, 323, 324; patronage of given to Quay, deserts Harrison, 332; vote of at Minneapolis, 340; D. Martin of, made member of republican national committee for, 347; political activity of federal office-holders in, 361, 363, 390; Cooper, collector at Philadelphia, to raise campaign funds in, 363; citizens of protest against appointment of Martin, 374; re-election of Quay in, 404.
- Pennsylvania Civil Service Reform Association of, introduces reform bill in legislature, faulty provisions of, 204; correspondence of regarding political assessments, 289; of annual meeting, 1891, address of H. Welsh before on Indian service, 238, 239.
- Pennsylvania R. R. Co., employs merit system, 285.
- Pension Commissioner, Tanner, 27, 38, 51; Browne and clerks in the service, 71; Raum and Harrison, 237.
- Pension boards, removed by Tanner, 27.
- Pension office at Indianapolis, attempt to collect money of employes in contrary to law, 36; examining boards, 30.
- Pension Examiner Stone removed, negro Dr. Elbert appointed, 192.
- Pension bureau, removals in, 55; bill providing for appointment of new examiners for, 107; removals in under Commissioner Tanner, 54.
- Peoria, Ill., census of 1890 well conducted in, 292.
- Percival, J. A., federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Perkius, congressman, opposed to civil service reform, 35, 49, 122; letter of to Brunt, postmaster, regarding removal, 188.
- Perkins, E. E., negro, postmaster at Edwards, Miss., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Perkins, H. A., journalist, appointed postmaster at Olathe, Kan., 126.
- Pern, Ind., Stevens, postmaster of, political worker, 379.
- Petersburgh, Ill., Editor Parks appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Petersburgh, Neb., Journalist Cross postmaster at, 149.
- Petersburg, Virginia, political history of, 87.
- Peterson, O. B., editor, appointed postmaster at Story City, Iowa, 142.
- Petroff, E., worker for Quay, 106; convicted of bribery, shielded by Quay, 151, 152.
- Pettigrew, Senator, and Indian service, 130; Senator Pettigrew opposes Indian Agent McChester, 131; controls patronage in Indian service, 218; and Harrison, 337; opposed to Harrison, 342.
- Petty, W., Blaine supporter, bribed by Harrison with office, 362.
- Pew, collector at Gloucester, Mass., and subordinates, political workers, 362.
- Philadelphia, Pa., post-office at, 14, 15; conflict over spoils in, 30; Collector Cooper of and Quay, 39; and spoilsman, 85; and office-seekers, 37; defends Quay, 249, 260; works for Quay, 280; patronage in, 47; removals in post office at, 53; civ. service reform in post-office at, 95; recordership of and Quay, 106; investigation of post-office at, 174; per cent. of removals in classified and unclassified service in post office at, 185; citizens' municipal league, appointment of Martin, disreputable politician, as internal revenue collector, low politicians of, 232; Thompson, controller at, makes removals for political reasons, 239; young republican club of, speech before by Cooper, collector at, defends Quay, 241; Asst. Postmaster Hughes of, political worker for Quay, 270, 280; customs district of, classified 1883, 276; Field, postmaster at, 300; Witherow's resignation, 310; post-office at, a scandal under Cleveland, 350; combination of low politicians of both parties against reformers at, 352.
- Philadelphia, Civil Service Reform Ass'n of, memorial of, on railway mail service, 92.
- Philadelphia American [repub.], attributes republican defeat of 1889 to spoils system, 76.
- Philadelphia Bulletin [repub.], favors civil service reform, 76; condemns Platt, 260.
- Philadelphia North American [repub.], on Quay, 270.
- Philadelphia Press [repub.], removals of Clarkson obeying a "wholesome policy of reform," 49; republican party thoroughly committed to civ. service reform, 65; favors civ. service reform, 92.
- Philadelphia Public Ledger [repub.], on Quay, 270.
- Philadelphia Record (rep.), on civil service reform, 92.
- Phillippi, W. Va., Journalist Hall, postmaster at, 155.
- Phipps, W. C., efficient employe in Indianapolis city service removed for political reasons, 297.
- Phoenix, N. Y., Journalist Williams postmaster at, 155.
- Pickering, J. E., postmaster at Alta, Iowa, a political worker, 260.
- Pierce, Captain, appointed Indian agent at Pine Ridge vice Roger removed, 192.
- Pierce, A. G., negro, deputy collector internal revenue, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344, 348.
- Pierce, President, spoils system under, 405.
- Pierce, Neb., Journalist Sharab postmaster at, 149.
- Pierre, S. Dak., physician of Indian agency at Greenwood, S. Dak., engages in political work at, shirking duty, 202.
- Pilgrim, —, federal office-holder, political worker, 162.
- Pilot, on Quay, Dudley, Wanamaker, and decent politics, 257.
- Pine Ridge, S. Dak., Roger, a political worker appointed Indian agent at, 192; causes of Indian trouble at, 217, 218.
- Piper, postmaster at Manchester, N. H., active politician, 143.
- Piper, F. T., editor, appointed postmaster at Sheldon, Iowa, 142.
- Pitkin, U. S., minister to Argentina, political worker, 382.
- Pitrodie, S. Dak., Journalist Cheny, postmaster of, 155.
- Pittsburg, Pa., post-office at, controversy between Congressman Dalzell and Sen. Quay over, 87, 112; McKean appointed postmaster at through influence of Sen. Quay, 96; surveyorship of customs at, candidate of Quay appointed, 112; Postmaster McKean of, spoilsman, 133; per cent. of removals in classified and unclassified service in post office at, 185; (Ass't) Postmaster Edwards of, supporter of Quay, suspected by Harrison, 299.
- Pittsburg Dispatch (repub.), patronage an evil, 75; on "Chinese civ. service," 92.
- Place, J. A., editor, spoilsman, appointed postmaster at Oswego, N. Y., 126.
- Plain City, O., Journalist Horn postmaster at, 149.
- Plainfield, Ind., postmaster at, appointed through influence of Congressman Matson, 30; Hatton

- supported by Congressman Cooper for postmaster of, 399.
- Plainfield, N. Y., Postmaster Pope of favors reform methods, but appoints his son ass't postmaster, 157.
- Plainview, Miss., Meacham, journalist, appointed postmaster at, 126.
- Plainview, Neb., Journalist Stevens, postmaster at, 149.
- Platforms, national, see also Conventions; of different parties support civil service reform, 229.
- Platforms, republican; national, 1872, 1876, 1880, 1884, 1888, 1892, favor civ. serv. Ref., 9, 27, 50, 73, 275, 291, 337.
- Platform, democratic; national, 1888, 1892, on civil serv. ref., 349, 365.
- Platforms, state, see also Conventions; republican; 1884, 1887, favor civil serv. ref., 122; California, 1884, demands civ. service reform, 50; Connecticut, 1872, 1874, advocates civil serv. reform, 50; Delaware, 1882, advocates civil serv. reform, 50; Georgia, 1871, advocates civ. service reform, 50; Illinois, 1872, 1882, 1890, advocate civ. serv. reform, 50, 156; Indiana, 1876, 1886, 1890, favors civ. service ref., 50, 51, 156; Iowa, 1874, 1884, advocates civ. serv. ref., 50, 51; Maryland, 1871, advocates civ. serv. ref., 50; Massachusetts, 1877, 1885, 1890, advocates civ. serv. ref., 50, 51, 180; Minnesota, 1872, 1884, advocates civ. serv. ref., 50; Missouri, 1872, advocates civ. serv. ref., 50; New Hampshire, 1872, advocates civil serv. ref., 50; New Jersey, 1871, 1872, advocates civ. serv. reform, 50; New York, 1872, 1877, 1885, 1887, 1891, advocate civ. serv. ref., 50, 51, 288; Ohio, 1871, 1877, 1886, on civil serv. ref., 50, 51; Pennsylvania, 1882, 1883, 1884, 1885, 1887, 1888, advocate civ. serv. ref., 51; West Virginia, 1872, advocates civ. serv. ref., 50.
- Platform, democratic, Delaware, 1890, silent regarding civ. serv. ref., 145; Indiana, 1890, 1892, denounces Harrison's administration of the civil service, 156, 319; Massachusetts, 1890, 1891, on civ. serv. reform and Harrison's abuse of it, 180, 288; Michigan, 1890, on abandonment of civ. serv. ref. by republicans, 180; New Hampshire, 1890, denounces Harrison's administration of the civil service, 156; Ohio, 1891, silent on subject of civil serv. ref., 288; Pennsylvania, 1890, 1891, denounces Quay and republican party for abuse of the civ. service, 156, 288; Wisconsin, 1890, denounces Harrison's administration of the civ. service, 156.
- Platt, deputy collector in Indiana, at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- Platt, senator, compels postmasters in Connecticut to give list of voters, 330.
- Platt, F., gets office through his father, 255; and Fassett, 258; and proposed prosecution of Van Cott, and Heudricks, 287.
- Platt, J. I., editor and postmaster at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., in N. Y. convention, 335; inefficient, removes Deputy S. Smith, 386.
- Platt, T. C., ex-senator in New York on civil serv. ref., 18; politicians like, 22; patronage of New York given to by Pres. Harrison, 27, 52, 56, 68, 94, 142, 173, 263, 264, 265, 266, 282, 376; spoilsman, 35, 43, 45, 65, 77, 112, 172, 269, 289, 298, 311, 329, 355, 369, 373, 374, 387, 388, 405; names postmaster for Elmira, N. Y., 53; and postmastership at Oswego, N. Y., 71; and Hiscock, Sen., and Syracuse post-office, 71; attributes defeat of 1889 partly to disappointment of office-seekers, 76, 77; arranges for census appointments in New York, 121; and Harrison, 121; candidate for U. S. senator, 143; faction of, and its opposition, 183; and Police Justice Smith, see New York City, 198, 199; recommends appointment of Wheeler, 241; gives dinner to Clarkson, 245; controls patronage of custom house in New York city, gets office for his son, 255, 256; "freezes out" Erhardt, collector at New York city, 258, 259, 260, 350; inspires issuing of call for political contributions, 279; defended, 281; and Fassett campaign, 287, 288; and removal of Flood, postmaster at Elmira, N. Y., 297, 303; endorses Payne, 312; deserts Harrison, 332; supporters of removed, 332, 334; and re-nomination of Harrison, 334, 335, 366; given patronage, criticises Harrison, 337, 339, 341, 344, 346, 347; "placated," 353, 354, 357, 359, 360, 361, 362; secures removal of Burt, naval officer at New York, 368; and confers with Reid and Harrison, 371.
- Plattsburgh, N. Y., Journalist Lansing postmaster at, 155.
- Plattsburg, Vt., custom-house at not classified, number of employes in, 277.
- Playford, R. S., journalist, postmaster at Carbondale, Kan., 148.
- Pledger, W. A., negro, railway mail employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 318.
- Plumb, Sen., and changes in post offices in Kan., 55; on tariff, 169; spoilsman, and census bureau, 203; allied with Gorman, 214, 228; attacks civil service commission, 250, 251; custom employe, see investigation, 327.
- Plunkitt, state senator of New York, bill of for race course in Central Park, 320.
- Plymouth, Ind., Editor Siders appointed postmaster at, 126, 377.
- Plymouth, Mass., Postmaster Burns of, to be removed for political reasons, applicants for position favored by E. A. Morse, 187.
- Political activity of federal office-holders, see Harrison, W. H., also names of states, 336, 370.
- Political assessments, see Curry, also names of states, 153.
- Political corruption in Maryland, Bonaparte on, 317, 324.
- "Political ingratitude," see Indianapolis Journal, 181, 182.
- Politics, divorce of municipal business from, by M. Storey, 261, 283, 286.
- Polk, Pres., for revenue tariff, 211, 241.
- Pontiac, Ill., removal of Reno, postmaster of, demanded by Congressman Payson, for "offensive partisanship," 188.
- Poorman, C. L., editor, given federal office, 301.
- Pope, actor, recites Sheridan's Ride at Chicago convention, appointed consul to Toronto, 56.
- Pope, E. R., postmaster at Plainfield, N. Y., favors reform methods, but appoints his son assistant postmaster, 157.
- Pope, Gen. J., advocates congressional appointment of federal office holders, 52.
- Port Clinton, O., Editor Martin postmaster at, 301.
- Port Huron, Mich., Collector, Geer of, spoilsman, asks for special examination, denied, 36; customs district of classified, 1883, 276.
- Port Townsend, relative of Pres. Harrison appointed deputy collector of customs at, 30, 369; custom-house at not classified, number of employes in, 277.
- Porter, A. G., spoken for mission to Rome, 7, 14, 85; worker for Harrison, 377; U. S. minister to Rome resigns to do political work, 382.
- Porter, D. E., sells offices, 104.
- Porter, O. T., editor, given office, 39.
- Porter, R. P., editor, census supt., and Roosevelt, see Civil Service Reformer; appointed, 14; civil serv. law, 19; gives patronage to Senators Quay and Cameron, 72; gives Shady office at request of Roosevelt, 101, 103; spoilsman, 104; and census service in New York, 121; overrun with office-seekers, 88, 131; Congressman Dalzell, 133; permits spoils methods in census service, 157; and Foulke, 173; defends appointments, 182; claims held examinations for clerks, 190; examination papers used in census services by, 219, 220; office under given to Weigel, worker for Bos-Filley, 226; fears investigation of census bureau, 233, 334; at convention republican league, 259; opposition of to civil service reform, 292, 294.
- Porter Co., Ind., Vidette [repub.], on "Farwell Club," 83.
- Portland, Ind., Lowry, postmaster at, removed, Editor Marsh appointed through influence of Browne, 88, 116, 126; political worker, 377, 380.
- Portland, Me., changes in offices in, 22; Briggs, politician, appointed postmaster at, 150; employes in exceed requirements, see Reed, 242; customs district of classified in 1883, employes in, 276, 277.
- Portland, Oregon, custom-house at not classified, number of employes in, 277.
- Portsmouth, N. H., navy yard at, see also Kittery, Me.; work on war ships, in navy yard at, for political reasons, 217; merit system introduced in navy yard at by Tracy, 251.
- Posey, Congressman, and office-seekers, 14; secures appointment of henchman in place of Isabella De La Hunt, 26; obtains appointment of worker as postmaster at Evansville, Ind., 46; uses influence for appointment of Throop, collector at Terre Haute, Ind., 59.
- Postal divisions, superintendents of, proposal of Congressman Andrew to extend civil service law to, 306.
- Postmaster, editors and publishers appointed; cases and lists of, 30, 37, 46, 71, 108, 126, 132, 141, 142, 148, 149, 155, 186, 260, 301, 302, 316, 377; scrambles for places of, 47, 72, 84, 88, 89, 109, 121, 216; recommended for re-appointment, 88, 91, 100; wanton removals, cases and lists of, 29, 39, 45, 47, 51, 55, 71, 90, 91, 101, 112, 118, 149, 165, 176, 186, 187, 282, 288, 362, 377, 386, 408; removals on secret charges, cases and lists of, 39, 175, 176, 177; eudalistic appointments, 108, 134, 135, 136, 143, 141, 150, 153, 155, 159, 160, 162, 186, 187, 211, 219, 340; henchman, service of, cases and lists of cases of, 134, 135, 136, 143, 144, 159, 160, 162, 186, 249, 259, 260, 262, 264, 265, 266, 280, 287, 302, 316, 334, 335, 336, 342, 343, 344, 346, 347, 348, 360, 362, 370, 377, 378, 379, 380, 382, 386; bad appointments, cases and lists of, 32, 39, 47, 54, 55, 90; special cases at Syracuse, N. Y.; Elmira, N. Y.; Terre Haute, Ind.; Valparaiso, Ind.; South Bend, Ind.; Muncie, Ind.; New Albany, Ind.; Indianapolis, New York, Baltimore, St. Louis, Boston, Philadelphia, Milwaukee, Ft. Wayne, Ind.; Pittsburgh, Augusta, Me.; La Fayette, Ind.; see same; removed and appointed by Brosius at May, Huber, Burke, Chestnut Level, New Holland, Lancaster, Columbia, Mannheim, Marietta, Strasburg, Litz, Ephrata, Mt. Joy, 72; Judson, of Prattsville, N. Y., insane through fear of loss of office, 415; at Mt. Vernon, Ind., and Sen. Harrison, 96; Childs, of Brattleboro, Vt., caucus on question of reappointment of, 108; Harrington, at Monson, Mass., reappointment of recommended, refused by Wanamaker, 188; at Newton, Mass., democrat Morgan reappointed, 221; at Sandwich (Mass.), democrat Shevlin reappointed, 221; at Washington, D. C., Sherwood promoted to be, 153; Warner, Albany, N. Y., favors civ. serv. reform, 51, enforces law, 136; Sperry, at New Haven, Conn., favors civ. service reform, 91; Ketcham, of Ditney, Ind., solicited for political contributions, 387, 392; of Ogden, Ind., distributes campaign documents, 390; Terry, of Terryville, N. Y., removed for refusing to pay political assessments, 391; and P. O. employes in Buffalo, N. Y., pay political assessments, 391; Gates, of Waterton, N. Y., furnishes political information, 392; Smith, of Laurel, Del., attempts bribery, 397, 401, 402; Daniels, of Withey, Mich., poll of voters asked of, 383; Eaton, of New Orleans, pays political assessments, 383; at Omaha, Neb., under Cleveland and Harrison, violates law, 281; at Moberly, Mo., uses census enumerators as political workers, 131; Crum, negro, nominated for, at Charleston, S. C., for vote at Minneapolis, not confirmed, 363; Milliken, of Waterville, Me., and non delivery of papers advocating Burleigh, congressional candidate opposing Manley, 364; Isabella De La Hunt, at Cannelton, Ind.; appointed upon recommendation of Sen. Harrison, by Pres. Arthur, removed by Cleveland, Pres. Harrison refuses to reappoint, 368; of Madison, Wis., controls places in census service, 293; Bennett, of Hartford, Conn., removal of Bario, efficient P. O. inspector, 298; Sperry, of New Haven, testifies to worth of Bario, removed P. O. inspector, 298; Gilleland, of Allegheny, Pa., supporter of Quay, suspected by Harrison, 299; at Bradford, Pa., Flennicken appointed, but removed on protest of H. C. Frick, 99; Hendrix, of Brooklyn, N. Y., removed and place offered to politician, 131; Pope, at Plainfield, N. Y., favors reform methods, but appoints his son ass't postmaster, 157; Zumstein, of Cincinnati, O., carries out spirit of civil service law, 257; Richensteen at L. I. City, letter to, advocating reform methods, 100; Wooster, of Fostoria, O., compelled by Washington authorities to turn over office to spoils, 91; at Richmond, Ind., the "party," 183; at Mt. Vernon, Ind., son of Gov. Hovey appointed, 71; at Austin, Texas, chairman republican state committee appointed, 71; at Hamilton, Mo., N. C. Clarkson appointed, 150; at Kansas City appoints relative of Pres. Harrison his deputy, 84; Rice, of Springfield, Mass., case of, 87; at South Hadley Falls, Mass., democrat Kirkpatrick nominated, see Wallace and Harrison, 157; Van Duzer, of Horseheads, N. Y., attempted removal of by Fassett, 331; Van Duzer, of Horseheads, N. Y., and removal of Flood, 304; Dunn, of Binghamton, N. Y., and removal of pension examiner Dr. Van Alstyne, 304; at Wyoming, Ill., removed because appointed through "political intrigue," Hammond appointed, 176; Reno, of Pontiac, Ill., removal of demanded by Congressman Payson, for "offensive partisanship," 188; Smith, of Carrollton, Ill., removed through influence of Senator Cullom, 188; at Laurel, Md., democrat appointed to please Gorman, 38; at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Editor Platt appointed, inefficient, removes deputy S. Smith, 386; Hathaway, of house of representatives, spoilsman, methods of, 242; Seifrits buys appointment as, at Washington, Ind., 121; at Mitchell, Ind., Wood purchases position is appointed, 89; at Winamac, Ind., applicants for position of, bargaining for, 88; at Palo Pinto, Mo., buys office, see also Trollington and Upton, 55.
- Postmaster-general, see Wanamaker.
- Postmaster-general, first assistant, see Clarkson.
- Postmasters, arbitrary removals of, see resolutions of National League, 1890; regulation of, appointment of advocated, 100; many democratic ordered out, 16; presidential, many removals and appointments of, 27, 29; fourth-class, appointed through influence of Sen. Cullom, 30; number of appointed in Indiana from March 4th to July 20 inclusive, 1889, 34; editors appointed, 37; removals of fourth-class, 39, 62; comparison of changes of for first five months of Pres. Harrison and Cleveland's terms, 45; 15,000 removed by Postmaster Gen'l Clarkson up to Sept., 1889, 49; removals of, for political reasons, 54, 186; appointed through influence of Congressman Owen and Sen. Plumb, 55; fourth-class in Indiana, see Michener, 67; meeting of in Washington, 69; removal of 30,000 fourth-class without cause, 70; fourth-class, objections to removal of, see Simond, 91; removals of fourth-class in Washington Co., Ind., 91; forced resignations of, 111; bill of H. C. Lodge, M. C., regarding appointments of fourth-class, 115, 238; removals up to May, 1890, 120; of fourth class and Cleveland, 124; fourth-class in Missouri, control of given to Filley, 132; become political workers, 160; removals of upon secret charges investigations of by committee of National League, 175, 176, 177; presidential, number of who are political workers, 186; Cleveland makes clean sweep, 187; forth class, bill of Lodge for selection of on basis of merit, 238 fourth-class, allowed to work politically for Harrison, 240; in Indiana, workers for Harrison, 260; fourth-class, removal of under Clarkson, 261; sons of, political workers for Hiscock, 265; fourth-class, bill to regulate appointment of, opposed by Wanamaker, 298; in Indiana, work for Harrison, 302; paper on appointment of, by Wood, before annual meeting, National League, 1892, 329; asked for list of voters by American Protective League, 330; in New York, asked for lists of republicans, 370; in Michigan, asked for lists of voters, 375; in DeKalb Co., Ind., political workers, 380; assessment of by American Protective

- Tariff League, 382; Allegheny Co., association of, levies political assessments, 381; fourth-class, bill of Congressman Andrew to regulate appointments of, recommended by civil service commission, 359, 388, 397; in Jefferson Co., N. Y., political assessments levied against, 391; applicants for positions as, supported by Congressman Cooper, 398, 399.
- Post-office at Indianapolis, Baltimore, St. Louis, Milwaukee, N. Y. City, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Syracuse, N. Y.; at Norwich, Conn., removal of, place given to spoilsmen, see Norwich (Conn.); at Troy, N. Y., and Indianapolis, investigate by civ. service commission, 36; at Vincennes, Ind. (see Chambers), 37; at Cannelton, Ind., see Clarkson, and 51; at Warsaw, Mo., sold by Upton, see Upton, 55; at Columbus, O., applicants for and Sen. Sherman, 67; at Lincoln, Neb., controlled by Connell, applicants for postmastership, 72; per cent. of removals in classified and unclassified service in, at New Haven, Conn., 185; at Jersey City, N. J., 185; at Kansas City, Mo., 185; at Denver, Colo., 185; at Chicago, 185; at Albany, N. Y., 185; at Cincinnati, merit system in, 257; at Lockport, N. Y., controlled by Hiseock, 259; at Cincinnati, O., merit system in, 358; at St. Joseph, Mo., political assessments in, 383; at Lafayette, Ind., employees in distribute campaign documents, 389.
- Post-office department, Wanamaker establishes board of promotion by competitive examination in, 256, 257.
- Post-offices, fourth-class changes in, see Delano, 47; applicants for in Chester Co., Pa., see Chester Co., 55; changes in, by Pres. Harrison in Kan., 55; taking the fourth-class out of politics, plan of R. H. Dana for, 68, 74; presidential, report on, by committee of National League, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166; presidential, turned over to spoils, 211; given to editors by Harrison, 240; see also press; having less than 50 employees, 277; information regarding, refused to Rogers by P. O. department, 297; of 25 employees, proposal to classify by Andrew, 305; all free delivery classified by Harrison, heads of divisions in should be classified, 103; Roosevelt on benefits of classification of free delivery, 415.
- Post-office department, number of classified employees in total service of, 193; relative of Harrison appointed law clerk in, 369; examinations for applicants for position in service of, 396.
- Post-office employee does detective work for Harrison at Minneapolis convention, 346.
- Potter, worker for Internal Revenue Collector Hill in Maryland convention, 335.
- Potter, Bishop, and civ. serv. ref., 28, 30; and attempt to purify politics in New York City, 130; address of on political dangers, 1890, 145.
- Potter, J., editor, appointed postmaster at Davis, Ill., 141.
- Potts, W., at Baltimore conference, 1889, 2, 42, 44; refused access to records of removals in postal service, 163; on committee of publication of Good Government, 357.
- Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Editor Platt postmaster of, in New York convention, 335; inefficient, removes Deputy S. Smith, 386.
- Pousland, federal employe, political worker at Boston, 334.
- Powers, H. C., collector internal revenue, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344, 348; levies political assessments, 381.
- Powers, J., naval officer at Philadelphia, worker for Harrison, 300.
- Pratt, D. W., postmaster at Farmington, Me., removed on secret charges, 175.
- Pratt, E. W., asst. appraiser at N. Y. City, pays political assessments, 279.
- Prattsville, N. Y., Judson postmaster of, insane through fear of loss of office, 115.
- Prentice, Counselor, removed from N. Y. City health dept., 356.
- Present Status of Civil Service Reform, by Rev. H. Lambert, criticised, 255.
- Presidency, Hill sells, 307.
- President, appointing power of, 6; duties of, in regard to the civil service, under the constitution, 271.
- Press, and civ. service reform, 83; [repub] on civ. service reform, 92.
- Press, bribery of, Pres. W. H. Harrison on, 17; see King, A. Allison, Habercorn, Beyerle, Reed, Stone, White, Douglass, Rice, Hicks, New, Roberts, Junkin, Halstead, Clarkson, Porter R. P.; under Cleveland, see Plainfield, Ind., 30, 81, 149, 366, 368, 369; by Quay in Pennsylvania, 151; in Indiana, 240, 378; under President Harrison, 30, 31, 36, 39, 46, 17, 56, 67, 80, 85, 88, 90, 94, 97, 100, 121, 126, 132, 141, 142, 148, 149, 150, 151, 153, 154, 155, 186, 187, 240, 249, 260, 266, 299, 301, 302, 316, 368, 369, 377, 386; Editor Porter given office, 39; see Rahway, N. Jersey, Smyth, Watrous, Lawshe, Smith, 71; see speech of Harrison, Sen., 81; condemned by Daniel Webster, 81; see Dunlap, Gardner, Forbes, Whitney, Challis, Kinney, 84.
- Prickett, J. P., editor, appointed postmaster at Albion, Ind., 126, 377.
- Pride, chief clerk under Cunningham in assay office at Boise City, Idaho, politician, 30.
- Princess Anne, Md., Duer, postmaster, of, removed for political reasons, Lankford appointed, 408.
- Princeton, Ind., Tichner, postmaster of political worker, 316, 378.
- Princeton, N. J., Theo. Seminary professors in, and civil service reform, 40.
- Princeton, Wis., Journalist Bebee postmaster at, 155.
- Princeville, Ill., Editor Barnum appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Printing and engraving, bureau of, status of reform in, 32; employees in, political workers, 179; dismissals in for lack of appropriation, 234; Gorman secures place in for low politician, 237; bureau of, under Cleveland and Harrison, 368.
- Pritchard, J. C., 159; Harrison delegate from N. Carolina, 331.
- Pritchett, R. M., editor, appointed postmaster at Dana, Ill., 141.
- Proctor, N., discharged by See'y Whitney from navy yard at Norfolk, Va., 147.
- Proctor, R., See'y, 242; Senator, 362.
- Professions, the, and civil service reform, see Roosevelt, dinner to at Indianapolis, 227, 229.
- Promises, of democratic party, 397, 398.
- Promotion, of Thompson, asst. postmaster at Indianapolis, to be postmaster, and consequent promotions, 235; by voluntary competition, introduced in departments at Washington by Harrison, 274; without examination, stopped by Harrison, 275; by competitive examinations, 286; in departments at Washington, rules governing, 289; on merit, under Wanamaker, by examination, 297, 298; on merit system, introduction of, in Washington departments, 321; should fill places below presidential offices, 413.
- Proner, postmaster of Spencerville, Ind., political worker, 379, 380.
- Protestant Episcopal Church and civil service reform, see Church.
- Prudden, Dr. T. M., withdraws from N. Y. City Health Dept. because it becomes political machine, 356.
- Pryor, federal office holder, political worker, 287.
- Public school, and civil service reform, see Curtis, 205.
- Public Service, journal, 306.
- Publicity of eligibles, ordered by civil serv. commission at Indianapolis, 25.
- Pulaski, N. Y., Journalist Muzzy postmaster at, 155.
- "Purity in Politics," see Van Anda, 137.
- Purity in Politics, see Ingalls, 190.
- Purroy, Fire Commissioner of N. Y. City, 234.
- Pursell, F. S., journalist, postmaster at Logan, O., 149, 301.
- Pursell, J., policeman of New York tries to defraud by pretending to sell office, 224, 225.
- Putnam (Indiana), Democrat, and CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 13; advocates civil service reform, 76.
- Putnam, Judge A. A., letter of to Wanamaker regarding removal of Faruun, unanswered, 175.
- Putnam, R. P., federal employe, henchmen for Grosvenor, 204, 205.
- Quackebush, congressman, obtains appointment of G. H. Stevens, disreputable character, as postmaster at Shushan, N. Y., 32, 51; urges appointment of O'Brien in postal service of house representatives, 212; elect, political worker, 279.
- Quay, senator, spoilsman, 5, 35, 43, 45, 93, 119, 174, 175, 192, 211, 227, 256, 261, 263, 281, 350, 361, 375, 387, 388, 390, 404, 405, 412, 415, 422; and the offices, 6; and post-office at Philadelphia, 15; and spoils, 17; and Postmaster-General Wanamaker, 22; and Pennsylvania legislature, 22; and office-seekers, 24; dictates appointment of Postmaster-General Wanamaker, 27; conflict with Wanamaker over Philadelphia spoils, 30; supersedes Don Cameron in control of patronage in Pa., 31; secures the appointment of Cooper as collector of customs at Philadelphia, 39; patronage of Pa. given to by Pres. Harrison, 28, 38, 47, 56, 68, 70, 72, 77, 85, 94, 95, 137, 138, 282, 329, 332, 337, 341, 376; agent of organizes machine, urges adoption of resolution demanding repeal of civil service law, 49; negotiates with Mahone, 52; controversy of with Dalzell over Pittsburgh post-office, secures appointment of postmaster, 87; secures appointment of McKean as postmaster at Pittsburgh, 90; endorses Sturgis for postmaster at Uniontown, Pa., 99; endorses Draper for collectorship at Pittsburgh, 100, 104; political history of, 105; obligations of Pres. Harrison to, 111; protest of Lea against patronage of, 112; and appointments, 118; and Harrison, 121, 353; methods of, 130, 131; career of, 133, 134, 135, 151, 152; condemned by Maryland Civil Service Reform Association, 136; and U. S. Attorney Lyon, 143; opposition to in Pennsylvania, 153; condemned by Lincoln Independent-Republican committee, 156; opposes Canaday, 160; revolt against rule of, 161, 162, 170, 171; "boss" in Pennsylvania, 172; and election in 1890 in Pa., 173; confers with Internal Revenue Collector Martin, 183; supports Leeds, disreputable politician, 216; condemned by Young Men's Republican Club of Massachusetts, 219; ruins ballot reform bill of Pennsylvania, aided by Federal Officer Martin, 228, 229; Pres. Harrison makes terms with, 235; Harrison combines with, 237; and appointment of Martin, disreputable politician, internal revenue collector in Pa., 232, 233; defended by Cooper, collector at Philadelphia, Pa., reconciled with Harrison, 241; in Pennsylvania and elsewhere, 245, 246, 249, 250, 251, 252, 256; eulogy of by nat. rep. committee, 257; enulogized by federal officers in Pennsylvania, 260; and Americus Club, 269; revolt against in Pennsylvania, 270; supported by federal office-holders in convention at Scranton, Pa., and elsewhere, 280; denounced by Pennsylvania democrats, 288, 289; republican leader in Pennsylvania, 298; supporters of, removed from office by Harrison, 299, 301; wins libel suits against, 305; controls Pennsylvania delegation, 310; in Pennsylvania, 313, 314; supporter of Blaine, 344, 345; at Minneapolis convention, 347; eulogy of by Clarkson, 351; "placated," 357, 361, 362; asks for appointment of Wanamaker as reward for raising campaign fund, 368; secures appointment of Martin, 374; imitators of in Indiana, 114; deserts Harrison, 337, 341.
- Quay, R. R., 361.
- Quimby, H. B., relative of federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Quincy, Ill., C. A. Wilcox, editor, appointed postmaster at, removals at for political reasons, 141, 148.
- Quincy, Josiah, 69; sec'y. Massachusetts state democratic committee, signs petition for larger appropriation for civil service commission, 102; on spoils system, 308.
- Quincy, Mass., removal of Speare, postmaster of, desired by Morse, 86; Adams appointed postmaster at, vice Speare, removed, 100; a political worker, 162.
- Quinn, postmaster at Decatur, Ind., political worker, 379.
- Rahway, N. J., editor, appointed postmaster at, 71.
- Rail, J., ward politician of Indianapolis, see Parnell Hall, 194, 195; supports fire-chief Webster, 208.
- Railway Mail Service, condition of, 53, 68; removals in, 66, 94; necessity for reform in, 69; removal of hundreds of clerks in, under Wanamaker, 70; brought under civ. service law by Cleveland, 81; bill of Sen. Paddock to withdraw from civ. service law, 92; eligible lists in, 111; applicant for position before put under civil service law, see Lodge, 122; superintendent of condemned, 125; employees in getting "in line," 162; examinations for, should be more difficult, suggestions of Wanamaker, 193; Pres. Cleveland extends civil service law to, 224; in Iowa, political assessments levied in, 240; civil service law extended to, under Cleveland, action under his orders postponed at request of commission, by Harrison, 275, 403; employees in must pass physical examination, 305, 372; turned over to spoils under Harrison, 376; examinations for 1891-92, 396; prize offered for best clerk in, by Wanamaker, won by H. P. Swift, 415.
- Raines, J., Congressman, uses census patronage for his own benefit, letter of, requesting list of voters, 293.
- Raisin, I. F., low politician, appointed naval officer at Baltimore, through influence of Gorman, 237, 245; career of, 251.
- Raudall, C. S., Congressman, recommends unwarranted removal of Carpenter, postmaster at New Bedford, Mass., 29, 175, 176; secures re-appointment of Shevlin as postmaster at Sandwich, 224.
- Ransdell, D., 7; appointed marshal District of Columbia, political worker, 34, 68, 77, 84, 85, 96, 112, 126, 173, 181; and office-seekers, 37; uses influence for appointment of Throop, 59; makes unfit appointments, 80; and printing office, 234; gets offices for relatives, 244; works for Harrison at Minneapolis and elsewhere, 297, 302, 337, 342, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 378, 379; and Chase, candidate for Governor of Indiana, 352.
- Ransdell, E. S., convicted of theft, gets office through influence of Marshal Ransdell, 80, 244.
- Ransom, Senator and Eaves, 159.
- Rany, M. A., editor, appointed postmaster at Fontanelle, Iowa, 142.
- Rarick, J. H., editor, appointed postmaster, at La Grange, Ind., 377.
- Rathbone, E. G., resigns as mail inspector, appointed 4th Asst. P. M. General, 241; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 337, 344, 345, 346; confers with New, 340, 379; refuses to give reasons for removal of Terry, 391.
- Rathbone, E. H., journalist, postmaster at Herndon, Kan., 149.
- Rathbun, L. G., appointed postmaster at Elmira, N. Y., vice Flood, removed on secret charges, 303, 304, 312.
- Ratnour, E., postmaster at Weeping Water, Neb., removed on secret charges, Butler appointed, 175.
- Raum, G. B., pension commissioner and clerks in pension service, 71; spoilsman, 108, 129, 130; believed to be dishonest, 173, 190; attempts to override civil service law, 203; and Harrison, career of, 237, 238; uses office for political purposes, 373; political worker, 370, 382, 389.
- Raum, Jr., G. B., appointed by his father, pension commissioner, to office in pension bureau, 130, 227, 254; before congressional committee, 190; sells offices, etc., 237, 238; removed from pension service for dishonesty, 228.
- Ravenna, Kan., Journalist Hart postmaster at, 149.
- Ray, Congressman, recommends Flenniken for postmaster at Bradford, Pa., 99; secures appointment of Underwood as postmaster at

- Washington, Pa., 100; on Senator Quay, 118; patronage of, 133.
- Ray, federal appointee, admits attempt to bribe member of legislature, 39.
- Ray, C. H., federal office-holder, political worker, see also Baltimore investigation, 320, 326, 327.
- Raymond, F., politician, aided by custom-house employes, 108; political boss, and appointments to census service, 121; deputy collector at N. Y. City, political worker, 279; controlled selection of census enumerators in N. Y. City, 294; in New York convention, 335; Minneapolis convention, 343, 344.
- Reading, Cal., Bush, political worker, appointed postmaster at, 186, 187.
- Reagan, Congressman, not much good to come of civ. service law, 73.
- Rector, J. W., politician of Texas, 159; internal revenue collector, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Reed, Judge, and congressman, opposed to patronage system, 91.
- Reed, A., editor, appointed consul at Dublin, 30.
- Reed, A. H., appointed postmaster at Flora, Ill., 141.
- Reed, J., employe in Baltimore custom-house, testimony of on interference of federal officers in primaries at, 254.
- Reed, T., and spoils, 22, 226; as speaker, house committee on civ. service, appointed by, 86; bribery of voters for, 145; secures appointment of Briggs as postmaster at Portland, Me., 150; desires spoil of Kittery, Me., navy yard, 148, 153; hampered by refusal of spoil, 157; on fulfillment of party pledges, 168; "boom" of, 178; opposes Anstralian ballot system, 228; keeps more employes in Portland (Me.) custom house than necessary, 242.
- Reeder, F., Genl., political worker for Quay, 280, 361.
- Reeds, W. H., member of Cowie faction, see New York, 241.
- Reelsville, Ind., Elliott, postmaster at removed, Gaskin appointed, 89.
- Reform Club at N. Y., see N. Y., 42.
- Reid, W., editor New York Tribune, appointed minister to France, 14, 369, 371, 381, 382, 389; republican candidate for vice-president, 1892, 354; and Platt, 360, 361.
- Reiley, W. H., postmaster in Washington Co., Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Reiley, J., employed in N. Y. custom-house, political worker, 108, 331.
- Resinger, editor, sell out to Andrews, W. H., 134.
- "Relation of the civil service to comfortable living in cities," see Gibson, 366.
- Removals, general, unwarranted, James Madison on, see Madison; in various departments, for year from July 1, 1889, see civil service com., 7th annual report; of postmasters upon secret charges, see secret charges; arbitrary, of postmasters, see Nat. League resolutions of 1890; of presidential postmasters, numerous, 27; of members of pension boards, by Tanner, 27; of foreign ministers by Pres. Harrison, 27; rate of under Asst. Postmaster-General Clarkson, 27; at Indianapolis post-office under Postmaster Jones, easily made, see Moore, 28; in treasury department, 29; of 16 R. R. mail clerks for political reasons, 276 removals in the 10th division, 29; to week ending June 6, 1889, of presidential post offices, 29; in federal offices in Niagara Co., N. Y., 30; of subordinates in treas. dept., see Coulter, 39; under Tanner, commissioner of pensions, 51, 51; under Cravens, collector, 51; in custom house at Baltimore, in post-office at Philadelphia, 53; of postmasters for political reasons, 54, 120; in pension and sixth auditor's offices, see also Roosevelt, 55; in Brooklyn navy yard, 55, 155; by Clarkson, 39, 11, 62, 75, 76, 154, 173, 261; unjustifiable, 63; in R. R. mail service and post-offices, 66; of employes in Charlestown navy yard by Pres. Cleveland, 69; in fire dept. at Indianapolis, 69; in postal service under Wauamaker, 70; in Boston custom house under Saltonstall for good cause, 71; in district of Rockport, Ill., 73; under Cleveland, of office-holders in Maine, 73; in Indian service, 79; of fourth-class postmasters objected to, see Simond, 91; of fourth-class postmasters in Washington Co., Ind., 91; in postal service, Pres. Harrison asked to check, 92; under Cleveland and Harrison, 96; and "resignations" under Clarkson, 131; for political reasons under Postmaster McKean at Pittsburgh, 133; under Postmaster Johnson at Baltimore, for political reasons, 137; by Vou Sandberg, 150; under Harrison, 45, 159, 266; secret charges, 173; under collectors Erhardt, Hedden and Magone, at New York, 183; causes of should be made public, see civil service com. annual report, 1889-90, 185; in classified service in various post-offices, 185; of presidential postmasters for political reasons, 164, 186; under Clarkson of postmasters "upon expiration of four years' service," and second commission not yet expired, 187; "offensive partisanship," 188; under Harrison, for cause only, 188; to make place for friends opposed by Lincoln, 211; wholesale, of employes in fire and police service at Indianapolis, see Equally divided politically, 212, 213; for political reasons, made by Controller Thompson at Philadelphia, 239; under Beard, collector at Boston, 245, 322; more than 100,000 under Harrison, 253; in classified and unclassified service under Johnson, postmaster at Baltimore, his testimony before Roosevelt, 254, 255; for cause only under Zumstein, postmaster at Cincinnati, O., 257; in departments at Washington, D. C., almost wholly for cause, 273; of efficient officials condemned, 286; of supporters of Quay in Pennsylvania by Harrison, 299-301; under Maynard at N. Y. custom-house, on false charges, 310; in navy yards, see Tracy, 311; in postal service for political reasons condemned, bills of Hoar (S.) and Lodge regulating, 321.
- Removal of Burt, Saltonstall, Pearson, Graves, Corse, see Burt, etc.; of De La Hunt, postmaster at Cannellton, Indiana, by Pres. Cleveland, for "offensive partisanship," 25; of Indian Commissioner Oberly and others, 27; on secret charges, cases and lists of, 45, 51, 175, 176, 177, 312; for political reasons, cases and lists of, 29, 30, 39, 45, 46, 47, 51, 51, 55, 56, 59, 71, 72, 74, 81, 87, 88, 89, 91, 94, 96, 100, 136, 142, 146, 147, 186, 187, 230, 256, 288, 297, 298, 303, 304, 319, 362, 368, 371, 374, 377, 386, 408; without cause, cases and lists of, 29, 39, 45, 176, 181, 228, 371, 374, 386; to make places for henchmen, cases and lists of, 29, 72, 90, 98, 101, 112, 126, 131, 140, 148, 188, 310, 331, 371; after four years' service, second commission, unexpired, 187, 188; of Royer, political worker and Indian agent at Pine Ridge, 192; of Dr. Stone pension examiner, and appointment of Dr. Elbert, condemned, 192; of Dougherty, fire chief at Indianapolis, Webster re-appointed, 207, 208; of U. S. district attorney at Washington, D. C., 211; of Royer, worthless Indian agent at Pine Ridge, S. Dak., 211, 217, 218; by Senator Ingalls of clerk of committee of District of Columbia, he appoints his own son, 215; of Vandervoort from R. R. mail service by P. M. Gen'l Gresham, 215, 216; of Roosevelt, civil service commissioner, possible, for watching interference of federal office-holders in primaries at Baltimore, Md., 225, 226, 250, 311, 312; plots for, of Harlow, postmaster at St. Louis, Mo., 226; of Ryder, criminal, appointed to Indian service, 226; of Eastman, supervising architect of Brooklyn, N. Y., for maladministration, 234; under Hathaway, postmaster in house of representatives, 242; and re-instatement of Sears, P. O. employe at Baltimore, 277; in violation of law, under Cleveland and Harrison, in Omaha, Neb., post office, 281; of Pension Examiner Dr. Van Alstyne, through Postmaster Dunn, 304; of Squires, corrupt public officer, see Hill, 307; of Leaycraft by Gov. Flower, 332; of Milholland, federal employe, for political activity, 332, 334; of Wimberly, internal revenue collector in Mississippi for lottery connections, 343, 348; of Erhardt, collector at N. Y. City, 350; of N. Y. R. R. Commissioner Spencer, 355; of Ewing, Prentice, from N. Y. health dept., by Tammany, 356; of P. C. MacCourt by Sec. Windon, 54; of Sharp, postmaster at Leadhill, Ark., and Stevens, postmaster at Shushan, N. Y., 54; of Reutler, Downing and Wigg, by Sec. Whitney, 147; of Tauner, commissioner of pensions, 53; of Nat'l Hawthorne, 16; of Flenniker, postmaster at Bradford, Pa., on protest of H. C. Frick, 99; of Terry, postmaster of Terryville, N. Y., for refusing to pay political assessments, 391; by Postmaster Thompson of Indianapolis, of Carrier Dunn, for soliciting political contributions, 403; of postmaster at Wyoming, Ill., for having been appointed through political intrigue, Hammond appointed, 176.
- Reno, M. A., postmaster at Pontiac, Ill., removal demanded by Congressman Payson for "offensive partisanship," 188.
- Rentfro, R. B., Harrison delegate to republican nat'l convention, appointed collector of customs at Brownsville, Texas, 46, 159.
- Report to Pres. Harrison by Roosevelt on interference of federal office holders in primaries at Baltimore, 254, 255.
- Republicans in Indiana legislature oppose bill for non partisan control of state institutions, 201, 202, 414.
- Republican clubs, league of, meeting at Cincinnati, election of Clarkson as president, 219.
- Rerick, J. H., editor, appointed postmaster at La Grange, Ind., 126.
- Resignations, forced in postal service, see National League, report of on presidential post-offices; under Clarkson, 149; in postal service, 164; cases and lists of, 165, 166, 216; of Erhardt, collector at N. Y. City, Fassett appointed to make clean sweep, 255.
- Resolutions of republicans of 6th assembly district, N. Y. City against civil service reform, 19; passed at annual meeting, 1890, Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, 120; of National League at annual meeting, 1890, 172; of annual meeting, 1892, of National League on status of civil service reform, 321.
- Reutfie, A. B., collector at port of Brownsville, Tex., a political worker, 159.
- Reutler, C. P., discharged by Sec'y Whitney from navy yard at Norfolk, Va., 147.
- Rebyburn, Congressman, and Quay, 280.
- Reynolds, U. S. dist. att'y, political worker, and delegate to Minneapolis convention, 143, 346.
- Reynolds, Gen'l, postmaster of Rochester, N. Y., a political worker, 266.
- Rhea, M. A., journalist, postmaster at Altoona, Kan., 148.
- Rhinehart, sheriff, 107; and Briggs' cartage contract, 332.
- Rhode Island, senators and representatives of, secure appointment of Fay as postmaster at Newport, 150.
- Rhodes, S. R., journalist, postmaster at Gresham, Neb., 149.
- Rice, A. T., editor, office-holder, 14.
- Rice, F., sec'y of state for New York, worker for Hill, 309; enumeration of 1892, 317.
- Rice, G. A., post-office inspector, political worker, 160.
- Rice, J. L., postmaster at Springfield, Mass., thoroughly efficient, removal desired, 87.
- Richards, D. J., editor, postmaster at Zanesville O., 301.
- Richards, S. T., postmaster in Clayton Co., Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Richardson, member of Maryland legislature, moves for repeal of civil service law, 96.
- Richardson, E. S., negro, R. R. mail employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Richardson, R. H., negro, postmaster at Wedgefield, S. C., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Richensteen, W., appointed postmaster at Long Island City, N. Y., 54; letter to, from H. C. Johnson favoring civil service reform, 100.
- Richie, R. M., postmaster at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., a political worker, 266.
- Richmond, H. A., civil service reformer at Balt. conference, 1889, 2; address before Y. M. A. of Buffalo, March 24, 1889, 16, 32, 67, 83, 172, 200; on Curtis, 391.
- Richmond, Ind., should have civ. service law applied to local offices; Editor Jenkinson appointed postmaster at, 126, 377; postmaster of is the local "party," 183; works for Harrison, 249.
- Richmond, Ind., Sunday Register (Rep.) opposes political methods of Frank Hatton, 76.
- Richmond, Va., embezzler Russell appointed postmaster at, 374.
- Ricker, C., and political assessments, 384.
- Rickets, C. H., see Cannon, 39.
- Ricketts, V. L., editor, advocates repeal of civ. service law, is given office, 85, 86, 90, 213.
- Ridland, postmaster at Scottsburg, Ind., political worker, 141, 377.
- Riley, J., appointed to fire service at Indianapolis vice White, and Findling removed under "equally divided politically" rule, 235, 243.
- Riley, J. B., chief examiner N. Y. civil service commission, removed by Tammany, 414.
- Riley, J. L., succeeded by O. P. Ensley as chief clerk in pension office (Indiana), 108.
- Rinewalt, A. L., journalist, postmaster at Williamsville, N. Y., 155.
- Rio Janeiro, Consul-General Armstrong at, removed for political reasons, 54.
- Ritchie, D. F., editor, appointed postmaster at Saratoga, N. Y., 126.
- Roark, N. S., and political assessments, see Kentucky.
- Roberts, A., postmaster of Addison, N. Y., a political worker, 266.
- Roberts, E. H., asst. treasurer, political worker, 354.
- Roberts, F. H., journalist, postmaster at Oskaloosa, Kan., 149.
- Roberts, G. M., political worker for Harrison, relative of Collector Cravens, of Indiana, 379.
- Roberts, W. T., receiver of political assessments for Maryland, 391.
- Robertson, Utah commissioner, political worker at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- Robertson, Col., political worker for Harrison, 302.
- Robertson, T. W., employed in custom-house (N. Y.), political worker, 108.
- Robertson, sec'y. of navy, orders re-instatement of thief Weeks, at request of Broadhead, at Kittery navy yard, 147.
- Robinson, postmaster at Concord, N. H., active politician, 143.
- Robinson, E. E., postmaster at Ithaca, N. Y., a political worker for Platt, 264.
- Robinson, H. C., inspector in N. Y. custom-house, a political worker, 108.
- Robinson, H. C., journalist, postmaster at Washington, Kan., 149.
- Robinson, Ill., Editor Harper appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Robinson, Congressman-elect, supported by Quay, 280; supported by Collector Cooper to succeed Quay, 299.
- Robison, W. E., journalist, postmaster at Bealsville, Pa., 149.
- Rochelle, Ill., Postmaster Gardner of succeeded by Hartong, 109; Postmaster Hartong of works for Hill, 136.
- Rochelle, Ill., Herald, letter to regarding Congressman Hitt's course in the distribution of spoil, 110.
- Rochester, N. Y., Reynolds, postmaster of a political worker, 266; Tarbox, postmaster of a political worker, 280; state civil service law enforced in city service, Belknap case, 305; Hilliam at, 309.
- Rockford, Ill., applicants for positions in census service in district of, 101; Postmaster Lawlor of, political worker for Congressman Hitt, 143.

- Rockhill, W., postmaster at Arcola, Ind., removed through influence of Postmaster Higgins, McGoogle appointed, 362.
- Rockport, Ill., removals in district of, 73.
- Rockport, Ill., Register (repub.), on civil service reform, 92.
- Rockwell, Congressman, recommends re-appointment of democrat Harrington, postmaster at Monson, 188.
- Rodebaugh, representative in Indiana legislature, spoilsman, 406.
- Rodney, Miss., Postmaster Engharth of, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Rogers, postmaster of Huntington, Ind., at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- Rogers, R. J., political worker, appointed postmaster, at Searcy, Ark., 186.
- Rogers, S. S., civil service reformer, 68, 172, 405; to examine management civil service, 77; report on congressional patronage to National League, 113, 114, 115; on committee investigating patent office, report of, 139, 140, 141; upholds civil service law of New York, 161; on committee of National League, investigating presidential post-offices, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 188; on committee of Nat. League, reporting on removals on secret charges, 175, 176, 177; president Buffalo Civil Service Reform Association, address of, to citizens of Buffalo, 189, 200; urges extension of civil service law, 192; address of, before annual meeting National League, 1891, on extension of classified service, 261, 275, 277; on special committee of National League, investigating census service, 291, 295; request of, for information refused by P. O. department, 297; on G. W. Curtis, 391.
- Rogers City, Mich., Journalist Larke, postmaster at, 149.
- Roggen, E. P., candidate for postmaster at Lincoln, Neb., 72, 108.
- Rokestraw, disreputable character, postmaster at Cheraw, S. Carolina, 55.
- Rollins, collector, and Eaves, 362.
- Rome, Ga., postmaster of, candidate for congress, 162.
- Ronner, J. H. V., deputy commissioner of street improvements, on Tammany methods, 234.
- Roosevelt, T., and Census Supt. Porter, see Civil Service Reformer; at Baltimore conference, 1889, 2; appointed civil service commissioner by Harrison, 17, 86, 95, 96, 103, 168, 174, 275, 405; investigates Indianapolis post-office and censures its management, 28; applies to Sec. of the Treas. and stops Coulter's proceedings, 34; and civil service reform association of Brookline, Mass., 36; on congressional patronage, 39; silences ridiculous arguments against civil service reform, 46; performances of all republicans with disgust, 49; abuse of, 52; charges of against heads of pension and 6th auditor's offices for removals for political reasons, 55; appointment of especially good, 59; address of before Boston and Cambridge civil service reform associations, 77; reasons for removal should be public; examination questions under, 79; investigates office of Collector Cooper, of Philadelphia, 85; charges of Hatton against, Shidy case, 101; and Shidy case, 104; addresses Bloomington branch Indiana Civil Service Reform Association, 1890, 108; before congressional committee, 119; reports favorably on Indianapolis post-office, 120; commended, 125, 136; address of before civil service reform association of Maryland, 1890, on spoils in post-offices, 132; and Postmaster Johnson, of Baltimore, 137; and Grosvenor, 146, 204, 205, statement of before congressional committee; see also Grosvenor, 162; statement of as to scope of civil service reform, 172; address in Indiana, 182; before select committee of house of representatives, 188; and Wanamaker, 190, 298; urges extension of civil service reform. see also "An Object Lesson in Civil Service Reform," in Atlantic Monthly, Feb., 1891, 192; extract from address of before Commercial Club in Boston, 1890, on spoils "iniquity," 194; Gorman defends Wanamaker against, 214; investigates interference of federal office-holders in primaries at Baltimore, Md., his removal possible, 225, 226, 254, 255, 261, 267, 268, 277, 278, 321, 322, 329, 330, 350, 366, 372, 373; speech of at dinner to at Indianapolis, list of assistants, and regrets, 227, 229, 230, 231; invites 21st district republican association, of N. Y. City to investigate civil service reform as applied in N. Y. custom-house, 236; answers attacks of Gorman, Plumb and Stewart, 250, 251; praised by Mr. Storey, 257; denies charges of favoritism on part of civil service commission, 266, 267; on work of the civil service commission, 273; thanked, 287; removal of, desired by politicians, 311, 312; informed of political activity of federal employes, 334; against Wanamaker and Clarkson, 349; and Johnson, postmaster at Baltimore, 363, 372; and political assessments, 70, 97, 161, 358, 375, 383, 385, 390, 392; and duties of federal employes, 383, 384; report of, 397; resignation of, would be a loss to reform, 398; on extensions of classified service, 415.
- Root, G. A., Major, appointed postmaster at Lanark, Ill., through influence of Congressman Hitt, 109, 136.
- Rose, federal office-holder, political worker, 287.
- Rose, J. C., civil service reformer, at Baltimore conference, 1889, 2; on local examining board at Baltimore, 137, 186; investigates interference of federal office-holders at Baltimore, 225, 226, 261; on committee of National League to investigate interference of office-holders and political assessments, 338.
- Rosecrans, Gen'l, proposes that congressmen have absolute control of offices, 85.
- Roseville, Ill., Editor Hebbard appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Ross, postmaster at Washington, D. C., transferred, 153.
- Ross, M., editor of Indianapolis News, favors civil service reform, speech of at Roosevelt dinner, 227, 229, 231, 232.
- Rossing, L. A., postmaster at Bode, Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Rotation, in office in Indiana, 45; Jacksonian, 257.
- Rothwell, T., ex-alderman New York City, low politician, 199.
- Royer, political worker, appointed Indian agent at Pine Ridge, 192, 202; removed, seeks re-appointment, 211, 217, 218.
- Royer, N., appointed postmaster at Noblesville, Ind., through influence of Cheadle, 47, 89; political worker, 380.
- Rubens, fireman at Indianapolis, political worker for Trusler, 208.
- Runnell, ward politician, seeking collectorship customs at Wilmington, N. C., 183.
- Rusk, Sec., gives R. G. Blaine an office, 108; and Quay, 118; telegram of to Prof. Nipher and reply, 244, 245; supposed telegram of to Prof. Nipher never sent, 253, 290, 354.
- Russell, Jr., C. T., condemns Clarkson, 186.
- Russell, O. H., embezzler, appointed postmaster at Richmond, Va., 374.
- Rutherford, N. J., removal of Van Riper, postmaster of, on secret charges, 175.
- Ryan, efficient employe in R. R. mail service, promoted, 136.
- Ryan, U. S. minister to Mexico, political worker, 382.
- Ryan, J. J., political worker, appointed police justice by Mayor Grant, 184.
- Ryan, T., federal office-holder, returns home to vote, 162; removed for cause by Cleveland, re-appointed by Harrison, 79.
- Ryan, W. S., vice-president Kings Co., N. Y., central republican committee, 198, 304.
- Ryder, W. D., convicted criminal, appointed to Indian service, but removed, 226.
- Sage, S. L., journalist, postmaster at St. Lawrence, S. Dak., 155.
- Sahn, A., ward politician at Indianapolis, 315; applicant for postmastership of Indianapolis, see Indianapolis investigation, 411, 412.
- Sale of offices, by defeated candidate Love of Missouri, testimony of sale, 32, 55, 93, 99; elsewhere, 104, 121; in police service of San Francisco, 215; under Tammany, 224, 225; in pension bureau, by G. B. Raum, Jr., 238.
- Salem, Ind., Ward, postmaster of, political worker, 380.
- Saltonstall, collector at Boston applies civil service methods successfully, 71; correspondence with Windom and Harrison, removal of, 94; signs petition for larger appropriation for civil serv. com., 102; removal of through influence of Hoar and Dawes, senators, Beard appointed, 105, 129, 168, 173, 179, 245, 282, 367, 376.
- Samoan commission, relative of Harrison appointed naval attache to, 369.
- San Antonio, Tex., Johnson, postmaster of, political worker, 159.
- San Carlos, Indian agency at, and Commissioner Oberly, 48.
- San Francisco, Cal., the "blind white devil of," 28; police positions sold in by Bruner, 215; customs district of, classified 1883, 276.
- Sanders, Senator, patronage of, 160.
- Sandford, E., appointed by Cleveland chief justice of Utah supreme court, removed for political reasons, 374.
- Sandwich (Mass.) democrat Shevlin reappointed postmaster at, 224.
- Sanford, congressman, helps Editor Ritchie to be postmaster at Saratoga, N. Y., 126; on house committee of civ. service, 86.
- Sangatuck, Mich., Journalist Wade, postmaster at, 149.
- Saratoga, N. Y., Editor Ritchie appointed postmaster at, although opposed by Vice-Pres. Morton, 126; Ritchie, postmaster of, a political worker, 266.
- Saulcy, E., political worker, career of, 138; deputy collector at Indianapolis, 144; political worker in Indiana, 302, 353, 375, 377, 379.
- Saunemin, Ill., Editor Brydia appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Sawyer, offered bribes for influence in behalf of candidate for Batavia, N. Y., postmastership, 47.
- Sawyer, Senator, favorably disposed to office-seekers, 6; chairman senate committee on post-offices aids nomination of Harrison, 364.
- Saxton, N. Y. state senator, calls on Fassett, collector at N. Y. City, 258.
- Saybrook, Ill., Editor Mace appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Sayre, W. G., Indian land commissioner, federal office-holder, political worker for Harrison, 189, 297, 316, 353, 378, 379, 389.
- Scanlan, J. F., political worker, given office through influence of Huston, 132.
- Scheusser, J. J., federal employe, in New York convention, 335.
- Schmester, R., employe in post-office at St. Louis, worker for Tilly machine, 150.
- Schmidt, F., custom-house deputy at Indianapolis political worker, 108, 144, 377.
- Scholar in Politics, see Roosevelt, dinner at Indianapolis, 227, 229.
- Schultz, F., census supervisor 6th Indiana district, politician, 104.
- School and civil service reform, see Civ. S. Ref.
- Schrader, Jr., J., journalist, postmaster at Lawrenceburg, Tenn., 155.
- Schreckengast, A. F., journalist, appointed census enumerator, 142.
- Schrieber, postmaster of Tell City, Ind., political worker, 380.
- Schuarze contest, 226.
- Schurz, Carl, an "imposter," 49; Sec. of Interior under Arther, obtains reappointment of Miss Sweet, 107, 321; address of, favoring reform methods, 396.
- Scott, C. T., appointed postmaster at Axbridge, Mass., vice Farnum removed on secret charges, 175.
- Scott, J. N., brother-in law of Harrison, given office, 21, 30, 369.
- Scott, Kan., Journalist Adams postmaster at, 149.
- Scott, N. B., member national republican committee, levies political assessments, 390.
- Scott, W. C., journalist, postmaster at Dalton O., 149.
- Scottsborough, Ind., Postmaster Ridland of, compelled to aid Michener, 144; Ridland, postmaster of, political worker, 377.
- Scranton, Congressman, postmaster of Scranton, Pa., 101.
- Scranton, Pa., Hartley, P. O. employe at, under Postmasters Sloeum and Connelly, 101; federal officer-holders political workers for Quay in convention at, 230.
- Scruggs, J. P., deputy collector Int. rev., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Scenlock, G. C., negro, Harrison delegate from N. Carolina, 334.
- Seaman, L. L., protests against removal of Milholand, as federal interference, 333.
- Searcy, Ark., Postmaster McCauley of, removed after four years' service, second commission unexpired, Rogers appointed, 186, 187.
- Sears, G. W., P. O. employe, see Baltimore investigation, removal of, 277, 296.
- Secret charges, removal on, of McKenna, postmaster of Long Island City, N. Y., 175; removal of Wilson, postmaster at Chadron, Neb., on, 175; removal of Ratnour, postmaster at Weeping Water, Neb., on, Butler appointed, 175; removals upon, investigation into by committee of National League 1890, 175, 176, 177; rules of postal department on, as interpreted by Clarkson, 176; should not be allowed, 415.
- Sedan, Ind., Crane, postmaster of, political worker, 379, 380.
- Sedgwick, "Bob," political worker for Woodruff, see Kings Co., N. Y.
- Sedgwick, J. R., journalist, postmaster at McDonald, Kan., 149.
- Sefrits, L. D., buys post-office at Washington, Daviess Co., Ind., 121.
- Senate, secret executive sessions of, see Foulke.
- Senate, patronage evil in, 72.
- Seneca, Co., N. Y., republican convention of Aug., 1891, factional fights in, 259, 260.
- Service, diplomatic, necessity for reform in, 3; civil, federal, number of offices in, 10.
- Serviss, candidate for postmaster at Apple River, Jo Daviess Co., Ill., 109.
- Settle, widow of Judge, set aside through influence of Congressman Brower, 47.
- Settle, Judge, relations of in office, 47.
- Sewell, Gen'l, patronage of, 180, 386.
- Sexton, Colonel, aided by Senator Farwell for postmastership of Chicago, 14; postmaster at Chicago, spoilsman, 22.
- Seymour (Ind.) Democrat, condemns opposition to Magee bill, see also Magee, 209.
- Shackleford, Gen'l, appointment of as judge in Indian Territory, 240.
- Shaffer, J., pres. street railway company, is accused of bribing and intimidating voters, 207.
- Shangreau, L., and Indian rising at Pine Ridge, S. Dak., 218.
- Shannon, postmaster, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Shannon, Ill., Editor Mastin appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Sharob, J. B., journalist, postmaster at Pierce, Neb., 149.
- Sharp, postmaster of Ellettsville, Ind., political worker, 380.
- Sharp, H. E., convicted criminal, appointed postmaster at Leadhill, Arkansas, 39; removed, 54.
- Sharp, B. C., given office through influence of Judge Settle, his relative, 47.
- Sharpe, G. H., political worker for Platt and Hiscok, given federal office, 265; anti-Platt worker, 280; father of federal employe S. B. Sharpe, political worker for Harrison in New York, 336; federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Shaw, postmaster at Vevay, Ind., political worker, 379.

- Shaw, A. D., appointed deputy third-auditor of treasury for political services, 71, 81; a political worker, 162, 269, 352, 353, 354, 363, 378, 379, 382.
- Shaw, E. O., journalist postmaster at Newaygo, Mich., 189.
- Shay, fire-chief at N. Y. City retired on pension, 36.
- Shea, D., active politician appointed depnty of Collector Erhardt, 108; a political worker, 265, 331, 343, 344.
- Shearman, congressman, opposed to civ. service reform, 49, 54, 180.
- Shearman, J. G., and refusal of Cleveland while candidate to pledge spoil to Sheehan, 395.
- Sheehan, T. C., 317, 318.
- Sheehan, W. F., low politician of Buffalo, N. Y., 196, 197; speaker of N. Y. assembly and patronage, 215; lieutenant-governor of New York, corrupt politician, 310; and school patronage in New York, 318, 319; Cleveland refusee, while candidate, to pledge spoil to, 395; obtains suspension of civil service rules in, for benefit of workers, 414; and bill for municipal reform in Oswego, N. Y., 415.
- Shelbyville, Ind., Bone, postmaster at, removed on secret charges, 177.
- Shelbyville (Ind.) Republican (rep.), advocates civ. service reform, 76; on Magee bill for non-partisan control of state charitable institutions, 215.
- Sheldon, Iowa, Editor Piper appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Shelley, J. J., foreman on park board at New York City, defrauds Cole on pretense of selling office, 224, 225.
- Shelley, W. F., dentist, appointed postmaster at New Castle, Ind., 132.
- Shepard, E. M., on examinations in character, 153.
- Shepard, W. J., address by, before Central Labor Union of Buffalo, on civ. service reform, 44; civil service reformer of Buffalo, N. Y., 200.
- Shepardson, S. W., employe in railway mail service promoted, 136.
- Sheppard, J. T., federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Sherer, Dr., in appraiser's office at New York, removed on false charges, see "sugar frauds," 203.
- Sheridan, Gen. G. A., patronage defeated republicans in Ohio, 75.
- Sheridan, J., saloon-keeper and fish protection at Lake Kenka, N. Y., 356.
- Sherman, Senator, spoilsman, 15, 17; on evils of patronage, 25, 67, 177; at war with Quay, 56; secures appointment of Hopley postmaster at Bucyrus, O., 149; controls patronage of Ohio, 240, 340; and election controversy of 1877 in Louisiana, accused of bribery, 241; obtains office for Smith, political worker, 249; re-election due to federal patronage, 297, 301, 302.
- Sherman, Mich., Journalist Wheeler postmaster at, 149.
- Sherwood, H., promoted to be postmaster at Washington, 153.
- Shevlin, J., democrat, reappointed postmaster at Sandwich, Mass., 224.
- Shidy, P. O. employe at Milwaukee, compelled by Postmaster Paul to manipulate records, testifies against Paul, removed by him, given another place by Roosevelt, 101, 103.
- Sibel, R. R., works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 343, 379; candidate for office, aided by federal office-holders, 370.
- Shipman, Judge, and removal of Bario, efficient P. O. inspector, 298.
- Shipsey, "Jake," gambler, friend of police justice Divver, 184.
- Shivelev, Congressman, patronage of, 421.
- Shook, S., supports Lee for place in N. Y. custom-house, 259.
- Short Hills, N. J., Kessler, grocer, appointed postmaster of, vice Goodrich removed for political reasons, 386.
- Shore, tax-clerk, a political worker, 162.
- Shrayer, A. R., a political worker for Harrison, 260.
- Shryack, C. V., editor, given office by Governor Forker, 301.
- Shushan, N. Y., Stevens, disreputable character, appointed postmaster at, through influence of Congressman Quackenbush, 32.
- Sickles, General, of N. Y. civil service commission, a friend to civil service reform, 34.
- Seiders, J. W., editor, appointed postmaster at Plymouth, Ind., 126, 377.
- Sidney, Ohio, editor appointed postmaster at, 301.
- Sill, U. S. attorney, testifies to worth of Bario, P. O. inspector removed, 298.
- Sills, A. K., worker for Harrison, appointed swamp land agent, 50, 377.
- Simmonds, extension of civil service law advocated by, 73.
- Simmons, J. E., bank president, recommends "Paddy" Divver for police justice, 184.
- Simms, C., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.
- Simond, Congressman, civil service reformer, 91.
- Simonds, D. K., journalist, postmaster at Manchester, Vt., 155.
- Simpson, postmaster at Lamb, Ind., political worker, 379.
- Simpson, J., and Fassett, 258; requests patronage, 311, 312; federal employe, in New York convention, 334.
- Sing Sing, N. Y., E. A. McAlpin appointed postmaster at as reward for party services, 108; at convention of republican leagues, 259.
- Sinks, G. W., treas. state republican executive committee, Ohio, and political assessments, 280.
- Sissel, Rev. G. A., opposes Harrison, wants offices for negroes, 244.
- Sitka, Alaska, Journalist Kenealy postmaster at, 155.
- Sitting Bull, "kidnapping" of, 192.
- Skerritt, Commodore, opposes abnses in Kittery navy yard, 148.
- Slee, J. D. F., 259; accuses Fassett of corrupt political methods, see also Chemung, N. Y., 266.
- Sleicher, J. A., N. Y. civil service commissioner, at Minneapolis convention, 346, 354.
- "Slick Six," in Indianapolis, 230.
- Sloan, S. C., on inefficient census enumeration in N. Y. City, 294.
- Small, J. K., federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Smalls, Robert, convicted criminal appointed by Harrison, 39.
- Smethport, Pa., Postmaster Kerns of, worker for Delamater, 134.
- Smith, buys office in pension bureau from G. B. Raum, Jr., secures promotion by fraud, 238.
- Smith, politician, succeeding Miss Moody, 39.
- Smith, representative in Indiana legislature, opposes spoils methods in, 407.
- Smith, postmaster at Laurel, Del., attempts bribery, 397, 401, 402.
- Smith, Alderman, of Indianapolis, spoilsman and low politician, 207.
- Smith, A., ex-mayor of Cincinnati, office-seeker, 24; customs collector at Cincinnati, through influence of Sherman, works for, 249; political worker in Ohio, 336.
- Smith, A. A., editor and politician, appointed postmaster at Ogdensburg, N. Y., vice Baird, removed, 126.
- Smith, A. G., attorney-gen'l of Indiana, spoilsman, 315, 355.
- Smith, B. W., uses influence for appointment of Throop, 59; applicant for postmastership at Lafayette, Ind., 84; postmaster at La Fayette, Ind., aids Michener and La Follette, 141; a political worker, 153, 158, 316, 339, 342, 377, 379.
- Smith, C., son of federal officer, favorite of Platt at convention republican league, 259.
- Smith, C. E., candidate of Sen. Hiscock for postmaster at Syracuse, 46; editor, appointed postmaster at Syracuse, N. Y., vice editor removed, moved, 81; a political worker, 266, 335, 347, 386.
- Smith, C. E., editor, appointed minister to Russia, 100, 133; worker at Minneapolis convention, 382.
- Smith, D., naval officer, on board applicants for positions in navy yard at Brooklyn, N. Y., 222.
- Smith, E., postmaster at Carrollton, Ill., removed through influence of Senator Cullom, 188.
- Smith, E. M., and political assessments in Alabama, 391.
- Smith, F. C., editor, appointed deputy collector at St. Albans, 126.
- Smith, G. A., political boss in Brooklyn, N. Y., accepts bribes, 106.
- Smith, G. W., congressman, forces resignation of Andrews, postmaster at Murphysboro, Ill., 165.
- Smith, H. C., successful competitor, given office, 1884, removed by Auditor Conlter, 45.
- Smith, J. C. H., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.
- Smith, J. E., naval office employe in N. Y. convention, 335.
- Smith, J. E., U. S. asst. dist. atty. in New York, a political worker, 265.
- Smith, J. G., journalist, postmaster at Cunningham, Kan., 149.
- Smith, S. B., anti-Platt republican, police justice and ward politician, see N. Y. City, 198, 199.
- Smith, S. E., negro, P. O. clerk delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Smith, S. F., editor, appointed postmaster at Encinitas, Cal., 141.
- Smith, T. G., civil service reformer of Buffalo, N. Y., 200; ou Curtis, 394.
- Smith, W. H., federal officer, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Smith, Dr. W. M., health officer of port of New York, favorite of Platt, 259.
- Smithfield, O., father of Journalist H. Harrison postmaster at, 149.
- Smithland, Iowa, Journalist Hills appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Smock, F. M., journalist, appointed postmaster at Keota, Iowa, 142.
- Smyth, Recorder, recommends "Paddy" Divver for police justice, 184.
- Smyth, A. W., supt. New Orleans mint, pays political assessments, 383.
- Smyth, W., editor, appointed postmaster at Oswego, N. Y., 71.
- Smyth, supt. of New Orleans mint, political worker, 304.
- Snyder, H. R., journalist, postmaster at Waverly, O., 149.
- Soale, W., politician, census supervisor, 4th Indiana district, spoilsman, 104, 131, 182.
- "Solid South," vote of for Harrison and others at Minneapolis, 347.
- Sortwell, federal officer, political worker, 379.
- South Bend, Ind., Postmaster Crockett of, a political worker, 153, 158, 316, 377, 378.
- South Bend, Ind., Times (rep.), against repeal of civil service law, 83.
- S. Carolina, political activity of federal officers in, 347, 348, 382, 390.
- South Dakota, political assessments in Indian service in, 384, 385.
- South Hadley Falls, Mass., democrat Kirkpatrick nominated, see Wallace and Harrison, 157.
- Spalding appointed postmaster at Champaign, Ill., through influence of Priv. Sec. Halford, 38.
- Sparta, Ill., Editor Taylor appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Spatz, Louis, inspector in N. Y. custom-house, political worker, 108.
- Speare, appointed postmaster at Quincy, Mass., by Cleveland, removal of sought by Morse, 86; removed, 100.
- Speed, H., U. S. dis. atty., works for Harrison at Minneapolis convention, 346.
- Spencer, T. W., N. Y. state R. R. inspector, asked to resign, 355, 356.
- Spencer, W. Va., Journalist Flinn postmaster at, 155.
- Spencerville, Ind., Proner postmaster of, political worker, 379, 380.
- Sperry, postmaster at New Haven, Conn., civ. service reformer, 91, 255; testifies to worth of Bario, removed P. O. inspector, 298.
- Spidle, J., journalist, postmaster at Wilmot, O., 149.
- Spinola, congressman, against civil service reform, 122, 125.
- Spirely, L. M., editor, appointed postmaster at Kingston, Mo., through influence of Filley, 132.
- Spoils system for paying the workers in this country and England, 19; evils of, see Lincoln; evils of, Pres. W. H. Harrison on, 36; opposed by Thomas Jefferson, 46; evils of, see Strong, Rev. S., 102; evils of, see Senator Sherman, also Houk, 177.
- Spooner, senator of Wisconsin, obtains appointment of Bro. R. Spooner as consl at Prague, 30, 354.
- Spooner, H. L., journalist, postmaster at Brookfield, N. Y., 155.
- Spooner, R., appointed consul at Prague through influence of Sen. Spooner, 30.
- Sprague, E. C., address of before annual meeting of National League noticed, 269.
- Sprague, H. H., at Balt. Conference, 1889, 2; signs petition for larger appropriation for civil serv. com., 102, 172; speech of on Roosevelt, 415.
- Sprague, H. L., ward politician, see also New York City, 241, 242.
- Spring Valley, O., wife of Journalist Hale postmaster at, 149.
- Springer, Congressman, and star route scandals, 291.
- Springfield, Mass., case of Postmaster Rice, 87.
- Squire, R. M., corrupt commissioner of public works, N. Y. City, see Hill, 306, 307.
- St. Charles, Iowa, Editor Wood appointed postmaster at, 142.
- St. Clairsville, O., Editor Hunt appointed postmaster at, 301.
- St. Genevieve, Mo., Editor Ernst appointed postmaster at, 126.
- St. George, W. Va., Lipscomb, son of journalist, postmaster at, 155.
- St. Joe Station, Ind., Postmaster Ables of, political worker, 379, 380.
- St. Joseph, Mo., political assessments of P. O. employes at, 383.
- St. Lawrence, S. Dak., Journalist Sage postmaster at, 155.
- St. Louis, disposal of patronage at, see Kerens; applicants for postmastership of, 24; J. B. Harlow appointed postmaster of, 88, 131; introduces reform methods 136; plots to remove, 226; negro politicians of demand spoil, 146; post-office employes at supporters of Filley machine, 150; custom-house at not classified, number of employes in, 277; census service in, inefficient, 295; Postmaster Harlow of ordered to give office to political worker Rundstadler, federal patronage is used for Harrison's renomination, 304.
- St. Louis Globe Democrat (rep.), patronage brings weakness, 76; on repeal civ. service law, 92.
- St. Louis Republic (dem.) favors good administration, 51; considers civil service reform as of prime importance, 59; on lesson of Garfield's assassination, 129; advocates civil service reform, 138; on Filley machine, 150.
- St. Paul Pioneer-Press (repub.), civ. service reform not abandoned, 65; favors civil service reform, accountability of Harrison, 75.
- Stacy, postmaster at Albert Lea, Minn., removed for political reasons, 39.
- Stamp, A. H., federal employe, asked to pay political assessments, 391, 392.
- Stanberry, Mo., fight over postmastership at, 121.
- "Star Route" ring, 28; scandals and Elkins, 290, 369, 374.
- Starr, collector, political worker in Illinois, 335.
- Staubach, J. B., on merit system in post-office at Cincinnati, O., 257.
- Stearns, appraiser in Boston custom-house removed through Congressman Cogswell, Dodge appointed, 250, 288.

- Stearns, J. T., custom-house auctioneer, in New York convention, 335.
- Steele, Congressman, given control of patronage by Harrison, 210.
- Steele, G., at Minneapolis convention, 316.
- Steele, Richard, in the Tattler, on absurdities of English spoils system, see Curtis, 120.
- Steele, W. T., governor of Oklahoma, political worker for Harrison, 189, 378.
- Stemen, pension examiner in Indiana, political worker, 380.
- Stepp, J. M., postmaster at Glen Hall, Ind., "resigns," 149.
- Sternberg, worker for Murphy, gets office through suspension of civil service rules in New York, 411.
- Steuben, Ind., Republican [repub.], advocates civ. service reform, 76.
- Stevens, postmaster of Peru, Ind., political worker, 379.
- Stevens, postmaster at Shushan, N. Y., removed, 54.
- Stevens, E. N., editor, appointed postmaster at Paxton, Ill., 126.
- Stevens, J. L., journalist, postmaster at Plainview, Neb., 149.
- Stevens, W. H., employe in custom-house at St. Louis, Mo., worker for Filley machine, 150.
- Stevens, W. J., opposes Harrison in Alabama, 346; republican politician in Alabama, charges political activity of federal office-holders in, 355.
- Stevenson, Congressman, on house committee, on civil service, 86.
- Stevenson, A. E., as presidential possibility, 235; asst. P. M. gen'l under Cleveland, spoilsman, 255, 350, 375, 376, 386, 408; democratic candidate for vice-president, 1892, 349; and Knights of the Golden Circle, 381, 389; vice-president elect, 388.
- Stevenson, R. B., endeavors to levy political assessments in Indian service in Kansas, 385.
- Stewart, senator of New York, and Fassett, collector at N. Y. City, 258.
- Stewart, Senator, attacks civil service commission, 250, 251.
- Stewart, D. F., postmaster at Wilmington, Del., political worker, 334.
- Stewart, H., resignation of as postmaster at Munroeville, Ind., given office in Washington, 88.
- Stieb, P., employed in New York custom-house, a political worker, 108.
- Stimson, Dr. D. M., resigns from N. Y. City health dept., because it becomes political machine, 356.
- Stinson, W. D., nephew of Mrs. Blaine, appointed postmaster at Augusta, Me., 321.
- Stockbridge, Congressman, controls post-office at Baltimore, Md., 84.
- Stockbridge, Senator, in Michigan convention, 335; supporter of Blaine, 344, 345.
- Stocking, S. W., promoted in patent office, efficient, 110.
- Stockton, A. R., republican politician and postmastership at Stanberry, Mo., 121.
- Stoddard, inspector in postal service, and removal of Farnum on secret charges, 175.
- Stokely, mayor, and Martin, disreputable politician of Philadelphia, 233.
- Stokely, S., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 331.
- Stone, congressman, on house committee on civ. service, 86.
- Stone, collector and appointment of O'Donnell, 60.
- Stone, supporters of, bought by Delamater, 134.
- Stone, C. W., and pardon of Petroff and Kemble, 152.
- Stone, F. C., internal rev. collector in Michigan, political worker, 390.
- Stone, Editor J. B., appointed collector internal revenue first Michigan district, 30.
- Stone, Dr. R. F., pension examiner, removed, Dr. Elbert, negro, appointed, 192.
- Storer, ex-representative, opposed to Congressman Hitt, 109.
- Storey, M., praises CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 110; on responsibility, 219; on Roosevelt civil service reform, 257; on divorce of municipal business from politics, 261, 283, 286; on committee of National League to investigate political interference of office-holders, 338; chairman committee Nat. League investigating political activity of federal office-holders under Harrison, report to by L. B. Swift, 375-381.
- Story City, Iowa, Editor Peterson appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Stouffer, A. K., journalist, postmaster at Arkalon, Kan., 148.
- Stover, representative in Indiana legislature, and spoils methods in, 407.
- Stratton, S. R., pres. Pa. republican ass'n, advocates clean sweep, 19; and office-seekers, 88; advocates political assessments and intimidation, 178, 179.
- Strawbery Point, Ia., Postmaster Keith of, removed, see Clarkson, 55.
- Strong, M., negro, unable to read or write, appointed postmaster at Delmar, Ala., 47.
- Strong, Rev. Sidney, on evils of spoils system, 102.
- Strouser, I. R., compares Cleveland and Harrison, 364.
- Stronther, P. W., deputy int. rev. coll., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Struble, I. S., congressman, forces resignation of Jasper, postmaster at Kingsley, Ia., 165.
- Stuart, P. O. inspector, at Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Stuart, Iowa, Editor Moulton appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Stuart, R. S., inspector, dismissed of, 17.
- Studebaker, E. H., requested by R. Harrison to persuade Blaine delegate to vote for Harrison, 337.
- Sturgis, O. T., editor, endorsed by Sen. Quay for postmaster at Uniontown, Pa., 99.
- Statesman, auditing att'y at Peru, Ind., at Minneapolis convention, 379.
- Suffall, veteran, efficient postmaster at Freedom, Ind., removed for political reasons, Watts appointed through influence of Michener, 112, 377.
- "Sugar frauds," at New York, false charges against Dr. Sherer, in appraiser's office at, 203.
- Sullivan, Ind., applicants for postmastership at, 88; Editor Clugage appointed postmaster at, 108, 126, 377.
- Sullivan, J. E., county clerk of Marion Co., Ind., embezzles county funds, see Indianapolis.
- Sullivan, J. N., appointed postmaster at Berne, Ind., removed, 88.
- Sullivan, T., mayor of Indianapolis, should institute civil service reform methods in city offices, as in Boston, Buffalo and Brooklyn, see equally divided politically, 220; should introduce merit system in city service, 235; can at will apply merit system to every city department, 213; elected twice by independent votes, 269.
- Sulzer, M. L., special Indian agent, worker for Harrison, 316; opposed to Harrison, bribed with office, 377; political worker, 389.
- Sulzer, deputy U. S. marshal, collects political assessments, 372.
- Sunbright, Tenn., Journalist Dunning postmaster at, 155.
- Sunner, J. H., deputy collector at N. Y. City, at Minneapolis convention, 343.
- Suspension Bridge, N. Y., Low, customs collector at, a political worker, 265; custom-house at not classified, number of employes in, 277.
- Sutton, John, politician, appointed to look after office seekers, 46.
- Sylvanus, P. O. employe, political worker, in Delaware, 334.
- Syracuse, N. Y., candidates for postmastership at, incumbent favored by Belden, 46; editor appointed postmaster at by Pres. Cleveland, 71; per cent of removals in classified and unclassified service in post-office at, 185; Editor Smith, postmaster of, a political worker, 266, 335, 347, 386.
- Syracuse, N. Y., Standard (repub.), on civil service reform, 92.
- Swain, councilman of Indianapolis, spoilsman and low politician, 207.
- Swalm, A. W., editor, postmaster in Mahaska Co., Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Swartout, ex-collector of port of New York, spoilsman, 272.
- Swayzee, G. S., employe in custom house at New Orleans, works for lottery, 143.
- Sweeney, Congressman, and post-office at Clear Lake, Ia., 121.
- Sweeney, State Senator of Indiana, votes against bill for non-partisan control of state charitable institutions, 201, 212; spoilsman, 408.
- Sweet, Miss, pension agent at Chicago, re-appointed, Commissioner Black attempts to remove, serves full term, Mrs. Mulligan succeeds, 107.
- Sweet, E. R., removal of, 88.
- Sweet, W. L., political worker for Platt, 259, 260.
- Sweetland, H., negro, councilman and low politician of Indianapolis, 207.
- Swift, H. P., wins prize offered by Wanamaker in R. R. service, 415.
- Swift, J. L., journalist, given office by Collector Beard, 108; a political worker, 179.
- Swift, L. B., at Baltimore conference, 1889, 2; letter of Nov. 28, 1888, to editor Civil S. Record, necessity for reform associations to be alert, 5; address of, before annual meeting Indiana Civil Service Reform Assoc., 108; address of, on civil service reform, 137; address of, on "gift of offices," 115; on all other reforms should be subordinated to civil service reform, 153; address before annual meeting National League 1890, 170, 171, 172; letter to, from Roosevelt, refuting charges of favoritism on part of civil service commission, 266, 267; address of, before annual meeting National League, noticed, 269; on committee of Nat. League investigating political assessments, and political interference of federal office-holders, 338; on committee of Nat. League, to investigate political activity of federal office-holders under Harrison, report of, 375-381.
- Tackett, M. D., appointed special land agent in reward for political services, 234, 377.
- Taft, editor, worker for Sherman, brother of U. S. solicitor-general, 301.
- Taggart, T., ward politician at Indianapolis, 315; chairman Indiana state democratic committee, on Gray, 396; patronage of, 400, 401; chairman Indiana state democratic committee, 407.
- Taggart, W. G., postmaster of Newburg, N. Y., political worker for Platt, 260.
- Tait, J. H., journalist, postmaster at Goodland, Kan., 119.
- Talladega, Ala., postmaster of removed for political reasons, protectionist democrat appointed, 186.
- Tallentire, fire-foreman at Indianapolis, a political worker, 208.
- "Tally-sheet" frauds at Indianapolis, see Indianapolis.
- Tama, Iowa, Editor Wouser appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Tammany Hall, see Feudalism revived; opposed to civil service reform, 128; rule of in New York City, 130, 230, 262, 274, 298, 311, 313, 311; controls patronage of Brooklyn navy yard, under Sec'y Whitney, 148; political assessments levied by, estimates of, 183, 184; uses "pass" examinations, 192; primaries of and republican primaries, 198, 199; supported by Gorman, 214; continued exposure of evils of, will defeat, 219; methods of, 224, 225, 234; R. Croker "boss" of, and McLaughlin, 245, 309; rules New York, 283, 284; and Platt, 288; corrupting influences of, 289, 290; of Cincinnati, O., opposes Sherman, 297; defended by R. Croker, 305, 323; evils of rule of, 317, 320, 333, 356, 385, 390; and nomination of Stevenson, 349; and N. Y. republican machine, 352; and N. Y. City, streets, 357; allied with Platt, 376; fears of under Cleveland, 388; and appointment of Mrs. Maloney as police matron, 404; need of civil service reform paper to oppose, 414.
- Tampa, Fla., Editor Cooper appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Tanner, "Corporal," appointed by Pres. Harrison as superintendent of pensions, 27; appoints his daughter his private sec., 38; spoilsman, 51; removals by, for political reasons, 53, 54.
- Tanner, J., U. S. sub-treasurer, political worker in Illinois, 335.
- Tanner, J., asst. treasurer, at Minneapolis convention, 344.
- Tansel, A., journalist, postmaster at Haddam, Kan., 149.
- Tafley, Wm. B., journalist, postmaster at Frankfort, S. Dak., 155.
- Taffer, police commissioner of N. Y. City, Tammany tool, 356.
- Tarbox, postmaster at Rochester, N. Y., a political worker, 280.
- Tarleton, T. P., dep. col. int. rev., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Tarrow, chief of division, removed for political reasons by Coulter, 55.
- Tate, confesses to accepting bribes, 151.
- Taylor, river commissioner, at Minneapolis convention, 379, 380.
- Taylor, Judge, political worker for Harrison, 302, 343.
- Taylor, (Illinois) Congressman, and Chicago post-office, 22.
- Taylor (Ohio), congressman of Ohio, opposed to civil service reform system, 35, 49; congressman and office-seeker in Ohio, 75.
- Taylor (Indiana), congressman, patronage of, 419, 421.
- Taylor, Col., special treasury agent, active political worker, 108.
- Taylor, D. D., editor, brother of postmaster at Cambridge, O., 301.
- Taylor, H. A., editor and politician, appointed commissioner of railroads, 39, 108.
- Taylor, S. J., editor, appointed postmaster at Sparta, Ill., 141.
- Tell City, Ind., Schrieber postmaster of, political worker, 380.
- Teller, Senator, supporter of Blaine, 344, 346.
- Tennessee, appointees to Indian service from, under Cleveland, 219; political activity of federal office-holders in, 337, 339, 346, 347.
- Tenure law for four years, condemned by National League, 321.
- Terre Haute, Ind., Manson, efficient collector at, removed by Harrison, Throop appointed, 59; should have civil service law applied to local offices, 85; Greiner postmaster of, political worker, 153, 158, 316, 342, 343, 346, 377, 378, 379; Congressman Brookshire allows Voorhees to name postmaster of, 405.
- Terre Haute Mail [repub.], opposed to spoils system, 83.
- Terrell, asst. U. S. attorney in Texas, a political worker, 159.
- Terrell, E. H., minister to Belgium, 14.
- Terry, P. E., postmaster at Terryville N. Y., removed for refusing to pay political assessments, 391.
- Terry, S. S., on committee investigating N. Y. City civil service, 319, 320.
- Terryville, N. Y., Terry, postmaster of, removed for refusing to pay political assessments, 391.
- Tests, competitive, objections to, 26.
- Texas, republicans of, headed by Customs Collector Cuney, 150; patronage of given to Collector Cuney, factions of, 158, 159, 173; political activity of federal officers in, 345, 346, 347, 348; political assessments in, 383.
- Thalman, low politician, councilman, and Indpls. fire department, 13; spoilsman, 69, 207.
- Theopolis, R., federal office holder and political worker, 179.
- Thieme, A. B., census enumerator on inefficiency of the service, 291.
- Thomas, U. S. marshal, a political worker, bargains with Karr, 460.

- Thomas, state senator of Penn., political worker for Quay, 280.
- Thomas, and Cleveland administration, 25, 51.
- Thomas, A. C., librarian of Haverford College, letter of, 412, 422.
- Thomas, B. F., journalist, postmaster at Wymore, Neb., 149.
- Thomas, T. F., P. O. employe at Baltimore, political worker, 267, 296, 335.
- Thomas, M. A., low politician, appointed Indian agent through influence of Gorman, 237.
- Thomas, S., levies political assessments in New York, 391, 392.
- Thomas, W. C., journalist, postmaster at Osseo, Wis., 155.
- Thompson, controller at Philadelphia, makes removals for political reasons, 239.
- Thompson, secy. of state for New Hampshire, 143.
- Thompson, threatens office-holders, 55.
- Thompson, Dr., state senator, advocate of spoils system in state charitable institutions of Indiana, opposes new charter for Indianapolis, see, also, Magee, 201, 212.
- Thompson, E. P., asst. postmaster at Indpls., reinstated, 9; and Moore, 25; tries to secure special examination, 26; and fraudulent appointments of Wheat and Tousey, 28; recommends Van Buren, spoilsman, for local civil service board, asks for special examination, 34; acting postmaster at Indianapolis, favors civil service reform, 227, 229; promoted to be postmaster, consequent promotions, 235; political worker; and subordinates, work for Harrison at Minneapolis, 337, 343; attempt to coerce by Merrill Moores, small republican boss, 366; political worker, 302, 316, 320, 378, 379, 382; removes carrier Dunn for soliciting political contributions, 403.
- Thompson, H. S., civil service commissioner appointed by President Harrison, 17; and political assessments, 70; and Shidy case, 101; before congressional committee, 119; commended, 125; resigns, 322; and Attorney-General Miller, 330, 372.
- Thompson, O., postmaster in Winneshiek Co., Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Thornton, B., negro detective, used for Harrison at Minneapolis convention, 345.
- Thornton, G. E., day director in navy causes unwarranted removal of Carpenter, postmaster at New Bedford, Mass., 175, 176.
- Thockmorton, D. I., candidate for postmaster of La Fayette, Ind., 71, 84.
- Throop, J. P., appointment of, condemned, 51; political worker, appointed collector internal revenue, 59; political worker, 362, 380.
- Thurber, F. B., recommends "Paddy" Divver for police justice, 184.
- Thurston, J. M., president league of republican clubs, speaks in favor of civil service reform, 219.
- Tice, F., appointed postmaster at Mt. Morris, Ill., see Hitt, 109.
- Tichner, postmaster of Princeton, Ind., political worker, 316, 378.
- Tilden, Governor of New York, exposes Chemung canal robbery, see Hill, 306; civil service reform a democratic principle under, 397.
- Tilton, R. L., postmaster in Wapello Co., Iowa, a political worker, 260.
- "Tin Horns," low republican politicians, see Indianapolis, corrupt politics, etc., at.
- Tindolph, postmaster of Vincennes, Ind., at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- Tippecanoe Club, of Baltimore, resolutions of, denounce civil service reform and the commission, 49.
- Tissue Ballot System, in the South, 29.
- Tittman, Prof., of U. S. coast survey, in "sugar frauds" investigation, 203.
- Todd, J. S., removed on suspicion of being disloyal to Harrison, 300.
- Toland, G. R., postmaster at Asbury Park, N. Y., under Cleveland, 386.
- Toledo, Ill., Editor Conner appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Toledo Blade (rep.), spoilsman must go 92.
- Tolona, Ill., Editor Chapin appointed postmaster at, 141.
- Tomblin, Al., opposes appointment of Williams as postmaster at Stanberry, Mo., 121.
- Tomlinson, D. W., recommended by Owen for postmaster of Logansport, Ind., 88; postmaster of Logansport, Ind., a political worker, 153, 158, 260, 377.
- Tompkins, case of, 94.
- Toomey, M., ward politician, see Indianapolis, 196.
- Tousey, W. E., ward politician, not on eligible list, re-instated in Indianapolis post-office after absence of years, 26, 27; dismissed by civil service commission, 34.
- Tousey, same, alderman of Indianapolis, spoilsman and low politician, 207.
- Towner, R. B., and Flower, 287.
- Townsend, congressman, nomination secured by bribery, 151.
- Tracy, congressman, and civil service law, 122; on civil service failures of Harrison, favors civil service law, 125.
- Tracy, U. S. marshal, active politician, 113.
- Tracy, sec. of navy, and offices in Brooklyn navy-yard, 55; and repairs at Norfolk navy-yard, 56; recommends Captain Folger to succeed Com. Sicard, 100; favors W. G. Taylor, 135; course of in Brooklyn navy-yard, 142; opposes Nathan, ward politician, 143; gives navy-yards up as spoils, see Kittery, 145; and spoils system in navy-yard at Portsmouth, N. H. (Kittery), 148; conduct of in Brooklyn, Kittery, Norfolk and Charleston navy-yards, 153, 170; introduces reform methods in navy-yards, commends civil service law, 219, 221, 222, 274, 276, 298, 306, 321, 372, 376; holds Feaster responsible for bad work by henchmen at Mare Island navy-yard, 226; introduces merit system in navy-yards, 230, 236, 238, 251; should institute examinations under civil service commission for promotions in navy department, 254, 257; commended, 287, 290; and removals for political reasons in navy yards, 34; on improvements in navy yard management, 326; supports Rhinehart, 332; removes supporters of Platt, 334; political worker for Harrison in New York, 336, 339, 347; "placates" Platt, 353; removes Page, chief of ordnance dept. in Brooklyn navy yard, 355; introduces Boston labor system in navy yards, 357; and Nathan, 371.
- Traitteur, treasurer inspector, pays political assessments, 279.
- Treadwell, W. S., sec'y Kings Co., N. Y., central republican committee, worker for Nathan, 198, 304.
- Treasury department, offices in, 24; removals of laborers in, 29; examinations for, see De Land, 152; employes under supervising architect of, selected by civil service examinations, though not required by law, 224.
- Trevelyan, Sir G. O., on competitive tests in English civil and military service, 118.
- Treynor, I. M., postmaster at Council Bluffs, Ia., a political worker, 260.
- Tripp, editor, son of appointed postmaster at Carrollton, O., 301.
- Tripp, T. H., supporter of Platt in N. Y. convention, 335.
- Tripp, O. H., works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 343, 379.
- Trollope, A., opposed to merit system of England, 227.
- Trollington, J. H., postmaster at Palo Pinto, Mo., buys office, 55.
- Troy, Ind., Gardiner, postmaster of, political worker, 380.
- Troy, N. Y., post-office at, investigated by civil serv. com., spoils system in, 29.
- True, T. W., postmaster at Eureka Springs, Ark., denounced by republicans, 55.
- Trusler, P. C., and Indianapolis fire department, 13; a ward boss, councilman of Indianapolis, obtains removal of Fire Chief Webster, 36; spoilsman, see Indianapolis, 69, 380; candidate, 162; tries to turn fire service at over to spoils, 207, 208.
- Trust, G., low politician and murderer, gets office through Gorman, 237.
- Truxton, Commodore, commandant navy yard at Norfolk, Va., 147.
- Tucker, postmaster at Annapolis, in Maryland convention, 335.
- Tngwell, A. P., ex-collector, a political worker, 159.
- Turner, postmaster at Newtonville, Mass., indorsed for re-appointment, 100.
- Turner, Congressman, favors civ. service reform 100.
- Turpie, Senator, 393, 404; patronage of, 405, 410, 413, 418, 419, 420, 421, 422.
- Tuscaloosa, Ala., Miller, postmaster of, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Tweed, "Boss," 28, 190, 211, 212; allied with Hill, 306.
- Tyner, "Jim," ass't att'y-gen'l for P. O. dept., construes civil service law in favor of Baltimore federal employes, politically active, 357, 358.
- Tyrrell, W. A., editor, appointed postmaster at Waverly, Iowa, 142.
- Underwood, W., appointed postmaster at Washington, Penn., 100.
- Union, Ind., Fearis, postmaster of, political worker, 316, 378.
- Union City, Mich., Journalist Easton, postmaster at, 149.
- Union League Club, and Platt, 333.
- Uniontown, Pa., Patterson appointed postmaster at through influence of Frick, 99.
- U. S. Supreme Bench, considered as spoils, 24.
- Upper Saususky, O., Editor Cunco postmaster at, 301.
- Upton, J. D., defeated candidate, sale of offices by in Missonri, 55, 99.
- Urwitz, M., sec'y central republican exec. committee, Texas, denounces Cuney, 180.
- Utah, relative of Pres. Harrison given position in, 30, 369; sentiment favoring civil service reform in, 111; political activity of office-holders in, 339, 345, 347; vote of for Harrison at Minneapolis, 347.
- Utica, O., Journalist Harris postmaster at, 149.
- Utica, N. Y., Miller, postmaster of, a political worker, 266.
- Utter, A. W., journalist, appointed postmaster at Emmetsburg, Iowa, 142.
- Uxbridge, Mass., Postmaster Farnum of, removed on secret charges, Scott appointed, 175.
- Vail, D., editor, appointed postmaster at New Sharon, Iowa, 142.
- Vail, J. M., journalist, postmaster at New Milford, Pa., 149.
- Valley Center, Journalist Beach postmaster at, 149.
- Valley Virginian [repub.], opposed to Mahone, 53.
- Valparaiso, Ind., Postmaster De Motte of, a political worker, 153, 377, 378; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 316, 343; at Minneapolis convention, 379.
- Van Alstyne, J. L., physician, pension examiner, removed through Postmaster Dunn, 304.
- Van Anda, Rev. A. C., address of on "Purity in Politics," 137.
- Van Buren, M., Pres., spoils system attributed to, 262.
- Van Buren, W. A., recommended for appointment to local service board at Indianapolis, spoilsman, 34, 78; attends dinner to Roosevelt (see), 227, 229.
- Van Cliff, M. E., commissioner (U. S.) circuit court in New York, a political worker, 266.
- Van Cott, appointed postmaster at New York, for party services, 13, 20; and civil service commission, 42; appointed at dictation of Platt, 22, 41; appoints his son cashier of post-office, 108; assists at dinner to Clarkson, 245; calls on Fassett, collector at, 258; gives offices to supporters of Gibbs, political worker, 265, 269; political worker, 279, 287; defended by Wanamaker, 289; and political workers, 311; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, wants Hendricks to lead in New York, 337, 344, 347, 396.
- Vau Duzer, ex-assemblyman of New York, opposes Platt and Fassett, 259; postmaster at Horseheads, N. Y., a political worker, 265; and removal of Flood, 304; attempted removal of by Fassett, 331.
- Van Horn, R. T., controlling patronage of Missouri, 24.
- Van Houten, editor, appointed postmaster at Lenox, Iowa, 142.
- Van Riper, J., postmaster at Rutherford, N. J., removed on secret charges, 175.
- Van Schaick, Congressman, and Postmaster Paul of Milwaukee, 44, 47; his "prerogative," 55.
- Van Slyke, J., editor, appointed postmaster at McHenry, Ill., 141.
- Van Voorhis, J. R., Tammany man, career of 318.
- Vance, Senator, on civil service reform, 117; and Eaves, 159.
- Vandermost, J., editor, appointed postmaster at Monroe, Ia., 142.
- Vandervoort, P., chief clerk R. R. service, 1883, incapable, discharged, and reappointed at suggestion of Nebraska congressmen, 17; and Harrison administration, 25; heuchman, 21, 31, 35, 54; supt. of mails at Omaha, Neb., disreputable politician and spoilsman, 211; career of, 215, 216, 220, 357.
- Vandevere, C. E., appointed by Cleveland, Indian agent, efficient, but removed, 181.
- Vesey, postmaster at Baltimore, spoilsman, removals under, 53; and Sears, P. O. employe at, 277.
- Vest, Senator, a spoilsman, 5, 43, 45; Arthur's administration, 24; secures appointment for son, totally unfit, under Cleveland, 242; on the issue, 375.
- Vest, G., son of Senator Vest, appointed to diplomatic service under Cleveland, totally unfit, 242.
- Vevay, Postmaster Shaw and Deputy Long, of Vevay, Ind., political workers, 379.
- Vicksburgh, Mich., Journalist Baldwin postmaster at, 149.
- Vicksburg, Miss., Hill, negro, postmaster of, worker at Minneapolis, 343, 348.
- Vigneaux, J., U. S. marshal, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Vilas, W. F., senator and ex-P. M. Genl., spoilsman, 20, 21; removals under, 96; compelled to let Faulkner stay in office by Voorhees, 222; under Cleveland, spoilsman, 255; and civil service reform, 274; under Cleveland, spoilsman, 364.
- Vincennes, Indiana, letter from correspondent at, 16; post-office at, 37; Tindolph, postmaster of, at Minneapolis convention, 380.
- Vineland, N. J., postmaster at, removed on false charge, really for political reasons, 39.
- Virginia, patronage of given by Pres. Harrison to Mahone, 27, 28, 31, 38, 41, 51, 52, 56, 67, 68, 70, 111, 282, 332, 376; political assessments in, made by republicans, 226; political activity of federal office-holders in, supports Blaine, 348, 345, 370.
- Vogel, "Gus," federal office-holder at St. Louis, worker for Filley machine, 150.
- Voght, F., molder, appointed in office of Gold, township trustee, at Indianapolis, 256.
- Voght, W. F., editor, appointed postmaster at Covington, Ind., 126, 377.
- Von Bergman, A., editor, given office through Congressman Belden, 132.
- Von Landberg, A., editor, internal revenue collector, removals by, 150.
- Voorhees, Senator, a spoilsman, 5, 43, 45, 177, 244, 351, 404; opposed to civil service reform, 80; political turu-coat, 171; secures place for Faulkner, illiterate politician, 222; and Cleveland, 235; favors Gorman for president, 236; supports Hanlon for internal revenue collector at New Albany, Ind., 393; allowed by Brookshire to name postmaster at Terre Haute, Ind., 405; patronage of, 109, 410, 413, 418, 419, 420, 421, 422.
- Wade, F., journalist, postmaster at Sanguatuck, Mich., 149.
- Wade, of Missonri, and office-seekers, 6, 15.
- Waddick, ballot-box stuffer, see Hudson Co., N. Y.

- Wadsworth, J. W., congressman-elect, calls for political assessments, 279, 354.
- Wagner, chairman Kings Co. (N. Y.) republican committee, levies political assessments, 287.
- Wakeman, W. F., sec'y American Protective Tariff League, at Minneapolis convention, 314; circular letter of, to postmasters, 382.
- Walker, congressman, secures appointment of Scott as postmaster at Uxbridge, Mass., 175.
- Walker, internal revenue collector, assists at dinner to Clarkson, 245.
- Walker, B. W., U. S. marshal in Alabama, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Walker, F. A., and censuses of 1870 and 1880, 291; on selection of census enumerators, 294; on census of 1870, 1880, 1890, 295.
- Walker, O. D., physician, employed in Indian service, asked for political contribution, 385.
- Walker, W. B., defeated applicant endorsed generally for postmaster at Hamilton, Mo., 150.
- Wallace, helped by Quay, 135.
- Wallace, deputy postmaster at Indianapolis, a political worker, 144.
- Wallace, D., P. O. employe at Indianapolis, works for Harrison, 302, 337, 343, 377, 378, 379.
- Wallace, Gen. L., obtains postmastership at Indianapolis for brother, for services to Harrison at Chicago convention, 26.
- Wallace, S., inspector in N. Y. custom-house, a political worker, 108.
- Wallace, postmaster at Indianapolis directed by civil service commission to remove Moore, gambler, 27, 28; views of civil s. ref., 2, 9, 18; law violated by, 25; appointed at request of General L. Wallace, cares little for success of civil service reform, 26; re-instates R. B. Muudeile, discharged by Jones, postmaster, 27; and Hamlin, bad character, keeps him in office, 34; and local board, 43, 48, 73; secretly a political worker, 144; death of, a loss to the public service, 219.
- Wallace, W. C., Congressman, obtains appointment of 200 henchmen in Brooklyn navy yard, 55, 72; aided by ward politician Nathan, 121, 150; and "Dan" Lake, 132; opposed by Benedict and Sec'y Tracy, 135; controls patronage in New York, 142; secures appointment of M. Malone, 143; secures nomination of postmaster Kirkpatrick, 157; candidate for congress, re-nominated, see Nathan, 178, 374; trading in behalf of, by Nathan, federal employe, 179, 180; Boyle, navy employe, political worker for, 183.
- Walser, Z. V., federal employe, Harrison delegate from N. Carolina, 334.
- Walter, P. L., accuses Delamater of bribery, 131.
- Walters, J., political worker under Postmaster Johnson in Maryland, 335.
- Walters, N., politician, candidate for postmaster at Rochelle, Ill., 109.
- Walton, T., beaten by ballot frauds, see Martin, low politician.
- Wanamaker, P. M. Gen'l., endorses Martin, low politician, for collector internal revenue, see 239; and W. W. Dudley, 2; rules for employes, concerning applicants, 14, 16; and the postmastership of Philadelphia, 15, 22; at dictation of Senator Quay, 27; removes postmaster at New Bedford (Mass.), despite protests, and without cause or hearing, 29; in conflict with Senator Quay over Philadelphia spoils, 30; and civ. service commission, 36; favors Gorman, 38; removes postmaster at Vineland, N. J., for political reasons on false charges, 39; spoilsman, 43, 174, 290; and Van Cott, postmaster at N. Y. City, 44; and Postmaster Paul, of Milwaukee, 44; accepts nominations of Brower, congressman, 47; to be blamed for patronage scandal, 55; and postmaster at Cheraw, S. C., 55; protest against Clarkson sent to, 55; on necessity of reform in railway mail service, 69; career of in politics, and removals of postmasters by, 70; and Sen. Wade Hampton, concerning post-office at Columbia, S. C., 74; and postmaster at Laurenceville, Va., 74; circular letter of Marshall Cushing, private sec'y to, 80; gives disposal of postmastership at Baltimore to Stockbridge, 81; see Russellville, Ind., 89; gives post-office at Pittsburgh to Sen. Quay, 90; and re-appointment of Montgomery as postmaster at Bristol, Conn., 91, 92; removals under, 96; and English, postmaster at New Haven, Conn., 96; and Frick, 99; and removal of Hartley, 101; course of in Shidy case, 103, 104; and post office at Rochelle, Ill., 110; tool of Quay, 112, 133, 138, 161, 173; letter to from Cooper regarding postmasters at Freedom and Brooklyn, Ind., 112; condemned, 125; testifies to worth of Postmaster Hendrix of Brooklyn, N. Y., 131; removals under McKean, postmaster at Pittsburgh, 133; approves Pres. Cleveland's circular warning federal employes against undue political activity, 135; and use of post-offices for political purposes, 135; and Quay, 161; refuses access to records of removals, etc., 163; report of for 1889, past of, 163, 164; suggests assessments on corporations, 171; and Fouike, 173; on secret charges, 175; hostile to civil service reform, 177; charges of against civil service commission, 185; letter of to Postmaster Marsh alleging congressional influence for removal, letters of to others, removed, 187; letter of to McCauley regarding removal, 187; refuses to re-appoint democratic postmaster Harrington, 188; and Baltimore post-office, 189; evasive course of, 190, 191; charges of inefficiency against civil service commission met, 193; and railway mail service, 203; Mail Superintendent Vandervoort, disreputable politician and spoilsman, safe with, 211; and Delphi (Ind.) Journal, 213; defended by Gorman against Roosevelt, 211; Leeds, corrupt politician, 216; a "pious fraud," see Vandervoort, 220; objects to civil service reform, gives prize to Oler for efficiency in mail service, 224; rule of to re-appoint only republicans violated, 224; backs Quay, 228; defended for spoils methods by Gorman, 228; gets office as political reward, 237; obligations of Harrison to, 240; collects campaign funds, gambles in stocks with Lucas, countenances fraudulent issues of stock, 245, 246; and appointment of Low, 249; and small office-seekers, 251; should institute examinations under civil service commission for promotions in his department, 254; appointment of hurs civil service reform, 255, 256; establishes board of promotion by competitive examination in P. O. department, 256, 257; injures civil service reform, see Lambert, 261; uses postmasters as political agents, 262; and civil service reform, 274; letter to Sears, giving inefficiency as cause of removal, 277; objects to political assessments in P. O. department, 280; and violations of law in Omaha post-office, 281; defends Van Cott, postmaster at New York, 289; refuses to tell Flood alleged reasons for removal, promotion scheme of, 297, 298, 303, 304; introduced promotion by competition in P. O. department, 321; and Baltimore investigation, 329, 330, 372, 373, 396; political worker for Harrison, 299; and attempted removal of Postmaster Van Duzer, 331, 339, 340, 349; and political activity of federal employes at Baltimore, 335, 350, 357, 358; refuses list of employes for assessment purposes, 363, 364; appointed in return for raising campaign fund, 368, 374, 376; and political activity of postmasters, 375, 389; and removal for political reasons of Duer, postmaster at Princess Anne, Md., 408; gives prize to Swift, efficient R. R. postal clerk, 415.
- Wanamaker, G. W., low politician in New York, 311; and cartage contract at N. Y. custom-house, 358.
- Ward, postmaster at Salem, Ind., political worker, 380.
- Ward, carrier at Indianapolis post office, removed, 9.
- Ward, C., and attempted bribery by Sen. Higgins and Postmaster Smith, in Delaware, 402.
- Ward, J. A., editor, candidate for postmaster at Lockport, N. Y., 216.
- Ward, W. J., affidavit of on sale of offices by J. Love, 99.
- Warmcastle, S. D., revenue collector, begs Blaine to speak, 180; political worker for Quay, 270; 280; supporter of Quay, removed by Harrison, 299.
- Warmouth, H. C., ex-Gov., appointed collector at New Orleans, 44, 52; ruffianly politician, 105; aids lottery, 113, 191; secures appointment of Weber as postmaster at Donaldson, La., 241; worker for Harrison in Louisiana, 304; supports Harrison at Minneapolis, 345, 346; worker for Harrison, 348, 357, 362, 374; pays political assessments, 383.
- Warner, C. D., address of on spoils system at Indianapolis, 415.
- Warner, C. W., editor, appointed postmaster at Hoopeston, Ill., 141, 165.
- Warner, J. M., spoken of as postmaster for Albany, N. Y., 16; postmaster at Albany, N. Y., favors civil service reform, 51; enforces civil service law, 136; delegate to N. Y. convention, 335.
- Warsaw, Ind., Bennett, postmaster of, political worker for Harrison, 316, 378, 380.
- Warsaw, Mo., post-office at sold by Upton, 55.
- Warwick, Congressman, institutes competitive examination for candidates for West Point, does not accept result, 254, 262.
- Washburn, Senator, patronage a source of weakness, 25; indorses E. G. Hay, 81; supporter of Blaine, 344, 345.
- Washington (state), political activity of federal office-holders in, 357.
- Washington, D. C., Sherwood promoted to be postmaster at 133; proportion of applicants to offices in, under Harrison and Cleveland, 185; Harrison removes U. S. district attorney at, 211; merit system in departments at, 224; competitive examinations under civil service commission order for promotions in departments at, 254; Harrison makes rules for promotion in departments at, 261; department offices and the examinations, 273; political contributions asked in P. O. department by Watres, 280; merit system for laborers in navy yard at, instituted at and commended, 331; political assessments in departments at, 390, 392; examinations for departments at, 1891-92, 396; political assessments levied by Old Dominion republican club in departments at, 412.
- Washington Post, civil service reform a snare and a sham, 49.
- Washington Star (repub.), advocates civil service reform, 92.
- Washington, George, 116; on political duty, see headline to CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE for June, 1890, 129; Harrison compared with, 159; on evils of strict adherence to party, 236, 274; on evils of parties, 323, 394.
- Washington, Ind., Ellis appointed postmaster at, despite sale of office to Sefrits, 121.
- Washington, Kan., Journalist Robinson postmaster at, 149.
- Washington, Pa., Underwood appointed postmaster at, 100.
- Washington Co., Ind., removals and appointments in, 91.
- Waters, state senator of Pa., 133.
- Watertown, N. Y., Gates, postmaster of, furnishes political information, 392.
- Waterville, Me., Millican, postmaster of, and undelivery of papers advocating Burleigh, congressional candidate opposing Manley, 364.
- Waterville, Wash., Journalist Kellogg, postmaster at, 155.
- Watkins, politician, and appointments in Brooklyn navy yard, 45.
- Watkins, N. Y., P. Conroy appointed postmaster at, 150.
- Watres, L. A., republican political worker for Quay, asks political contributions in P. O. department at Washington, D. C., 280.
- Watrous, J. W., editor, appointed customs collector at Milwaukee, through influence of Wisconsin congressman, 71, 126.
- Watson, "Billy," ward politician, see also Kings Co., N. Y., 182, 183, 302.
- Watson, C. W., chairman committee of N. Y. civ. service reform association, on civil service examinations, 239, 319, 320; on committee National League, to investigate political assessments, 338.
- Watts, F., appointed postmaster at Freedom, Ind., vice Suffall, removed for political reasons, 377.
- Waugh, congressman, patronage of, 419.
- Waverly, Iowa, Editor Tyrrell, appointed postmaster at, 142.
- Waverly, O., Journalist Snyder, postmaster at, 149, 301.
- Wayne Co. (N. Y.) republicans, resolutions, of denouncing patronage system of republican party, 156.
- Weather bureau, merit system in, 253; service classified by Pres. Harrison, 403.
- Weatherby, Rev. S. S., on civ. service reform, 83.
- Weaver, postmaster at —, a political worker, 179.
- Weaver, J. M., congressman, obtains appointment of Low, political worker, as postmaster of Westport, N. Y., 249, 351.
- Weaver, V., editor, appointed postmaster at Loda, Ill., 141.
- Webb, constructor at Kittery (Me.), navy yard, examination of, 147.
- Webb, W. E., census supervisor, pledges of to spoilsman, 131.
- Weber, federal officer, appoints anti-Platt men, 334.
- Weber, E. M., appointed postmaster at Donaldson, La., upon request of Collector Warmouth, 241.
- Webster, federal employes compelled to vote for, 162.
- Webster, Daniel, address to Massachusetts whigs in 1832, public press and spoils, 17; on bribery of press, 81, 141, 154, 155, 369, 376; spoils system under Jackson, 270, 324; sec'y of state under W. H. Harrison, circular of against political assessments and political activity of federal office-holders, 320.
- Webster, E. A., negro, coll. int. rev., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348, 382.
- Webster, Col. G. P., patronage of in N. Y. legislature, guilty of nepotism, 215.
- Webster, J. A., journalist, postmaster at Johnson, Kan., 149.
- Webster, J. H., chief of Indianapolis fire department, 13, 69; removed for political reasons, 36; influence of removal on city elections, 59; against spoils system, 203; effort to force him to turn fire service over to spoils; removal and re-appointment of, 207, 208.
- Webster, W. B., editor, appointed postmaster at Cresco, Iowa, 142.
- Wedgefield, S. C., Negro Richardson, postmaster of, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Weed, S., Tammany "boss," and prison patronage, 331.
- Weeks, thief, ordered to be employed in Kittery navy yard, see Robeson and Broadhead, 147.
- Weeping Water, Neb., removal of Postmaster Ratnour of on secret charges, Butler appointed, 175.
- Weigel, E. F., political worker for "Boss" Filley, given office by Sec'y Noble, 226.
- Weinstein, L., editor, appointed collector fourth Ia. district, 56.
- Welling, stamp clerk at Indianapolis, 9.
- Wellington, G. L., U. S. sub-treasurer, in Maryland convention, 335.
- Wells, A. J., veteran, discharged and reinstated by Jones, postmaster at Ind'pls, 9.
- Welsh H., at Baltimore conference, 1889, 2; re-appointment of Oberly, 9; controversy with Senator Ingalls over Indian commissioner, 22; little progress in bettering condition of Indians due to spoils system, 39; circular letter of to clergy asking for clerical advocacy of civil service reform, see, also, Church, 40; letter on treatment of Indians by administration of Pres. Harrison, 42, 79; letter of to Boston Transcript on Indian service, 47; and clerical advocacy of civ. service reform, 65, 73; letter of to CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE on Indian service, 98; denies charges against Indian Agent McChesney, 130; letter of to R. Lincoln, 161; and causes of Indian rising

- at Pine Ridge, 192, 202, 217; on removals in Indian service, 219; in Scribner's Magazine for April, 1891, on evils of spoils system in Indian service, 224; before civil service reform association of Penn., on Indian service, 239; on "Degradation of Politics in Pennsylvania," in Forum, Nov., 1891, 282, 324; on committee of National League, to investigate political interference of office holders, 338, on committee of publication of Good Government, 357; on publicity as cure for political corruption, 366.
- Wemple, controller, receives political contributions, 180.
- Wenneker, internal revenue collector at St. Louis, and negro spoilsman, 146; political worker, removal of requested by Secy. Noble, 336.
- West Grove, Chester Co., Pa., applicants as postmaster of, 55.
- West Hoboken, N. J., postmaster Middleton of removed, no cause assigned, Klumpp appointed, 176.
- West Point, Congressman Warwick institutes competitive examinations for candidates for, does not accept result, see McKinley, 254, 262.
- West Virginia, A. B. White, newspaper proprietor, appointed collector internal revenue, 30; asst. district attorney of, sued for embezzlement, 39; U. S. deputy marshal in, indicted for bribery, 39; republicans of believe in spoils, 62; conflict over patronage of, 71; census service in run after spoils system, 293; political activity of federal office-holders in, 348; political assessments levied on federal office holders from, activity of federal employes in, 390.
- Westchester, Pa., removal of Postmaster Pye at, for political reasons, 101.
- Westcliffe, Colo., S. Lacey, wife of editor, appointed postmaster at, 148.
- Westport, N. Y., political worker Low appointed postmaster at, 249.
- Wetherill, J. R., political worker under Postmaster Johnson, in Maryland, 335.
- Wheat, J. C., not on eligible list, re-instated in Indianapolis post-office after absence of years, 26, 27.
- Wheeler, inspector in mail service, recommended by Hiscock and Platt, for inspector in charge of mails, vice Rathbone resigned, 241.
- Wheeler, custom-house employe at N. Y. City, at Minneapolis convention, 343.
- Wheeler, editor, to be postmaster at Crown Point, Ind., 302.
- Wheeler, E. P., plan of, for agitation of civil service reform before Nat. League, 1889, 66, 172; civil service reformer in New York, 239; address of, before annual meeting of National League, noticed, 269.
- Wheeler, E. W., journalist, postmaster at Sherman, Mich., 119.
- Wheeler, J. J., editor, appointed postmaster at Crown Point, Ind., 377.
- Wheeler, W. E., journalist, postmaster at Eagle Park, Idaho, 155.
- White, ex Congressman, opposes Harrison, 317.
- White, collector internal revenue in Texas, a political worker, 159.
- White, A. B., editor, appointed collector internal revenue for W. Virginia, 30, 37.
- White, A. D., candidate for governor of New York, supported by Platt and Nathan, 265; works for Fassett, 280; appointed U. S. minister to Russia, 382.
- White, E., ward politician, appointed deputy postmaster at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., vice Smith removed, 386.
- White, E. A., internal rev. coll. delegate to Minneapolis convention, 334, 348.
- White, G., republican, removed from fire service at Indianapolis, see equally divided politically, 235.
- White, H., editor, political worker, 351.
- White H. G., politician opposing Hiscock in Onondaga Co., N. Y., 264.
- White, Prof. H. S., praises CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 110.
- White, Prof. T. C., brother of U. S. marshal, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- White Clay, Indian chief, and rising at Pine Ridge, S. Dak., 218.
- Whithead, special treasury agent, at Brooklyn, 336.
- Whiteman, W. H., appointed to supreme bench of N. Mexico, 24.
- Whitefield, asst. to Wanamaker, and appointment of Weber, 211; and appointment of Low, 249.
- Whithorne, congressional investigating committee on Kittery navy yard, 147.
- Whitman, Mass., Harlow, postmaster at recommended for re-appointment, 100.
- Whitney, F. M., editor, appointed deputy internal revenue collector, 84, 126.
- Whitney, J. A., political worker under Postmaster Johnson in Maryland, 335.
- Whitney, Sec'y, 82; gives navy yards up as spoil, 145, 147, 148, 222.
- Widney, J. A., soldier, postmaster at Woodhull, Ill., removed through influence of Cong. Henderson, 47.
- Wigg, S., discharged from navy yarn at Norfolk, Va., by Sec'y Whitney, 147.
- Wilber, Mrs., appointed postmaster at Clay City, Ind., inefficient, 89.
- Wilby, C. B., letter to CIVIL SERVICE CHRONICLE, 92; on proposed charter for Cincinnati, O., 235; address of, on G. W. Curtis, 391.
- Wilcox, appointed collector at Springfield, Ill., through influence of Cannou, 31.
- Wilcox, C. A., editor, appointed postmaster at Quincy, Ill., 141, 148.
- Wilcox, I. S., revenue collector, a political worker, 160.
- Wilcox, Dr. J. A., Harrison delegate from N. Carolina, 331.
- Wildman, J. F., editor and Harrison "boomer," applicant for postmastership of Muncie, Ind., 217.
- Wiley, E., wife of Journalist Wiley, postmaster at Elizabeth, Pa., 119.
- Williams, G. F., opposed to civil service reform, according to Grosvenor, 204; as congressman on minister as citizen, 239.
- Williams, J. M., journalist, postmaster at Phoenix, N. Y., 155.
- Williams, O., steward at Marion Co. (Ind.) poor-house, neglects duty, see also Indianapolis, corrupt politics, etc., at, 207.
- Williams, R., editor, works for Harrison, tries for office, disappointed, 95.
- Williams, S., federal employe, worker for Harrison, 334.
- Williams, V. T., editor, appointed postmaster at Stanberry, Mo., appointment recalled on political opposition, 121.
- Williamsville, N. Y., Journalist Rinewalt postmaster at, 155.
- Willis, Rev. J. S., republican candidate for congress, offers bribes, 102.
- Willis, L. W., receiver of political assessments in Alabama, 391.
- Willis, T. B., appointed naval officer at New York, as reward for party services, scandalous partisan, 55, 106, 121, 132, 182, 183, 191, 198, 304, 350, 355; appoints Politician Barrow his deputy, 108; and Brooklyn, N. Y., post-office, 135; political activity of his employes, 265; opposes Nathan, 332; in New York convention, 334, 335; worker for renomination of Harrison, against Nathan, worker for Platt, 336; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 337, 343, 344, 345; secures N. Y. delegation for Harrison, 348; and Nathan, 352, 354, 371.
- Wilmer, and corrupting influence of Tammany, 289, 290.
- Wilmington Morning News [repub.], attributes defeat of 1889 to Mahonism, 75.
- Wilmington, O., federal office-holder political worker for Harrison, 302.
- Wilmington, O. M., dismissed by Jones, postmaster at Indianapolis, reinstated by Postmaster Wallace, 34.
- Wilmington, Del., Stewart, postmaster of, political worker, 334.
- Wilmington, N. C., Young nominated collector of, ward politician, 183.
- Wilmot, O., Journalist Spidle postmaster at, 119.
- Wilson, councilman of Indianapolis, spoilsman and low politician, 207.
- Wilson, representative in Indiana legislature, spoilsman, 406; opposes gerrymander of 1893, 414.
- Wilson, "Doc," negro, political worker in Indianapolis, 378, 379.
- Wilson, E., brother of editor, given office by Governor Foraker, 301.
- Wilson, E. M., editor, appointed postmaster at Adin, Cal., 141.
- Wilson, G. W., mayor of Ft. Wayne, Ind., opposes Harrison, 302.
- Wilson, J. E., negro, postmaster at Florence, S. C., delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Wilson, Mrs. K., wife of political worker, candidate for postmaster at Muncie, Ind., 217.
- Wilson, N. Y., Le Van appointed postmaster at, 39, 45.
- Wilson, W., postmaster at Chadron, Neb., removed on secret charges, 175.
- Wilson, Rev. W. M., on Civ. Service Reform, 83.
- Wimberly, internal revenue collector in Louisiana, political worker, 304.
- Wimberley, A. F., removed federal employe, worker at Indianapolis, 343, 348.
- Wimbush, C. C., negro, federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Winchester (Ind.) Herald [repub.], republicans must stand for civ. service reform, 83.
- Windom, Secretary, and office-seekers, 16, 37, 159; and Sturgeon, 22; and Wild, head of assay office at Boise City, Idaho, accepts resignation of, 30; at request of Roosevelt, stops Coulter's proceedings, 34; appoints political worker to office, 51; removes P. C. MacCourt, of N. Y. custom-house, 51; on the civ. service, 81; and Saltonstall, 94; and Platt, 204; praises merit system, see annual report, 1889, 276.
- Winamac, Ind., applicants for postmaster of, bargaining for position, 88.
- Winoua, Miss., Matthews, deputy postmaster of, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 344, 348.
- Winters, Cal., Moody, postmaster of, resigns, his successor removed for cause, Mrs. McKinley appointed, removed for political reasons, 90.
- Winters, W. H., given place in Indiana legislature, 406.
- Wirt, J. S., Senator, civil service reformer, address of before alumni of St. John's College, Maryland, 137.
- Wolcott, Senator, and Harrison, 337; supporter of Blaine, 344, 345, 346, 363.
- Wolcott, E. O., letter of on removal of Flood, postmaster at Elmira, N. Y., on secret charges, 312.
- Wolcott, R., president of young men's republican club of Massachusetts, civil service reformer, 192, 219; opposed to Quay, 211.
- Wood, Consul, political worker in New Hampshire, 371.
- Wood, purchases postmastership at Mitchell, Ind., appointed, 89.
- Wood, appointed census supervisor through influence of Sherman, 301.
- Wood, A. L., editor, appointed postmaster at St. Charles, Iowa, 142.
- Wood, H. C., federal officer, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 318.
- Wood, J., defeated candidate for congress, secures appointment of Pentreath, 150.
- Wood, R. F., civil service reformer, 172; on appointment of postmasters before annual meeting National League, 1892, 329.
- Woodard, postmaster of Harrodsburgh, Ind., political worker, 380.
- Woodard, S., federal office-holder, political worker for Harrison, 302, 378; works for Harrison at Minneapolis, 337, 343, 379.
- Woodford, S. L., candidate of Nathan for governor of New York, 265.
- Woodhull, Ill., soldier and postmaster at, removed and civilian appointed, through influence of Henderson, G. A. R. post denounces Henderson, 47.
- Woodmansee, M. G., journalist, postmaster at Holyrood, Kan., 149.
- Woodruff, F., chairman Kings county republican committee controls patronage, 106, 132; political worker, 121, 182, 183; enters factional fights in Brooklyn and New York, 197, 198.
- Woodruff, J., testified against R. Smalls, 39.
- Woodruff, T. L., political worker for Boody, cong. candidate, 183.
- Woods, M. C., given place in Indianapolis post-office, as spoils, 18, 27, 34; political worker, 302, 378.
- Woollen, W. W., controller of Indianapolis, commended, 269.
- Woolren, N., postmaster of Kingston, N. Y., political worker in New York, 336.
- Worcester Spy [repub.], civ. service reform a certainty, 92.
- Workers, political, paid enough without additional remuneration in form of office, 30.
- Workman, J. B., clerk in Indiana senate, 408.
- Works, "Charlie," worker for congressman Hitt, 110.
- Wooster, L., postmaster at Fostoria, O., compelled to appoint partisans, 91.
- Wooten, J. T., attempted bribery of, by Sen. Higgins and Postmaster Smith, 101, 402.
- Wouser, C. J., editor, appointed postmaster at Tama, Iowa, 142.
- Wray, state senator of Indiana and spoils methods, 408.
- Wright, C. D., and civil service reform in census service, 291.
- Wright, F., refusal of Trustee Gold to remove, 111; removed, 146, 256.
- Wright, P., broker, at custom-house at N. Orleans, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348.
- Wyman, Jr., M., at Baltimore conference 1889, 2; sec'y Cambridge Civil Service Reform Association, 205.
- Wymore, Neb., Journalist Thomas postmaster at, 119.
- Wynn, I. C., journalist, postmaster at Lander, Wyo., 155.
- Wyoming, Ill., postmaster at removed for having been appointed, through "intrigue," Hammond appointed, 176.
- Xenia, Ind., Editor Lawshe appointed postmaster at, 71, 126, 377; political worker, 379.
- Yakim, Ore., excellent appointments reversed at bidding of Senator Mitchell, 32.
- Yakima Co., Wash., leading postmaster in, and other federal employes political workers, 362.
- Yale, office-holder, a politician, 162.
- Yankton, Dak., Indian agency at, and Sen. Moody, 86.
- Yeager, J., applicant for postmastership at Lankark, Carroll Co., Ill., 109.
- Yonkers, N. Y., Postmaster Keyes succeeded by politician Pentreath, 150.
- Young, Captain, testimony of regarding Kittery navy yard, 147.
- Young, A., treasury agent, active politically, 113.
- Young, D., federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 348; collects political assessments, 384.
- Young, J. C., testimony of before Judge Lippincott as to election frauds, see also Hudson Co., N. Y., 200.
- Young, J. H., negro, ward politician, appointed collector at Wilmington N. C., 183; federal employe, delegate to Minneapolis convention, 334, 348.
- Zadok, A., postmaster of Corsicana, Tex., politician, 187.
- Zanesville, O., Editor Richards postmaster at, 301.
- Ziegenheim, collector at St. Louis, supports Filley machine, 150.
- Zimmerman, postmaster of Cannelton, Ind., political worker, 380.
- Zollinger, C. A., applicant for office under Cleveland (2d term), 392; pension agent under Cleveland, levies political assessments, 111.
- Zumsteln postmaster at Cincinnati, O., carries out spirit of civil service law, 257.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

0 028 001 771 1